30 cost of life. All lives belong to us as leaves to a book; but we are 31 unchanged, the Witness, the Soul, upon whom the impression is 32 made, as when the impression of a circle is made upon the eyes 33 when a firebrand is rapidly whirled round and round. The Soul is 34 the unity of all personalities, and because It is at rest, eternal, 35 unchangeable. It is God, Atman. It is not life, but It is coined into 36 life. It is not pleasure, but It is manufactured into pleasure. . . .

37 Today God is being abandoned by the world because He does 38 not seem to be doing enough for the world. So they say, "Of what 39 good is He?" Shall we look upon God as a mere municipal 40 authority?

41 All we can do is put down all desires, hates, differences; put 42 down the lower self, commit mental suicide, as it were; keep the 43 body and mind pure and healthy, but only as instruments to help us 44 to God; that is their only true use. Seek truth for truth's sake alone, 45 look not for bliss. It may come, but do not let that be your incentive.
46 Have no motive except God. Dare to come to Truth even through 47 hell.

Friday, June 28. (The entire party went on a picnic for the day, and although the Swami taught constantly, as he did wherever he was, no notes were taken and no record, therefore, of what he said remains. As he began his breakfast before setting out, however, he remarked:)

Be thankful for all food, it is Brahman. His universal energy is transmuted into our individual energy and helps us in all that we do.

Saturday, June 29. (The Swami came this morning with a Gita in his hand.)

Krishna, the "Lord of souls", talks to Arjuna or Gudakesha, "lord of sleep" (he who has conquered sleep). The "field of virtue" (the battle-field) is this world; the five brothers (representing righteousness) fight the hundred other brothers (all that we love and have to contend against); the most heroic brother, Arjuna (the awakened soul), is the general. We have to fight all sense-delights, the things to which we are most attached, to kill them. We have to stand alone; we are Brahman, all other ideas must be merged in this one.

Krishna did everything but without any attachment; he was in the world, but not of it. "Do all work but without attachment; work for work's sake, never for yourself."

Freedom can never be true of name and form; it is the clay out of which we (the pots) are made; then it is limited and not free, so that freedom can never be true of the related. One pot can never say "I am free" as a pot; only as it loses all ideas of form does it become free. The whole universe is only the Self with variations, the one tune made bearable by variation; sometimes there are discords, but they only make the subsequent harmony more perfect. In the universal melody three ideas stand out--freedom, strength, and sameness.

If your freedom hurts others, you are not free there. You must not hurt others.

"To be weak is to be miserable", says Milton. Doing and suffering are inseparably joined. (Often, too, the man who laughs most is the one who suffers most.) "To work you have the right, not to the fruits thereof."

Evil thoughts, looked at materially, are the disease bacilli.

Each thought is a little hammer blow on the lump of iron which our bodies are, manufacturing out of it what we want it to be.

We are heirs to all the good thoughts of the universe, if we open ourselves to them.

The book is all in us. Fool, hearest not thou? In thine own heart day and night is singing that Eternal Music--Sachchidananda, soham, soham--Existence-Knowledge-Bliss Absolute, I am He, I am He.

1 The fountain of all knowledge is in every one of us, in the ant
2 as in the highest angel. Real religion is one, but we quarrel with the 3 forms, the symbols, the illustrations. The millennium exists already 4 for those who find it; we have lost ourselves and then think the 5 world is lost.

6 Perfect strength will have no activity in this world; it only is, 7 it does not act.

8 While real perfection is only one, relative perfections must 9 be many.

11 Sunday, June 30.

12 To try to think without a phantasm is to try to make the 13 impossible possible. We cannot think "mammalia" without a 14 concrete example. So with the idea of God.

15 The great abstraction of ideas in the world is what we call 16 God.

17 Each thought has two parts--the thinking and the word; and 18 we must have both. Neither idealists nor materialists are right; we 19 must take both idea and expression.

20 All knowledge is of the reflected, as we can only see our face 21 in a mirror. No one will ever know his own Self or God; but we are 22 that own Self, we are God.

23 In Nirvana you are when you are not. Buddha said, "You are 24 best, you are real, when you are not"--when the little self is gone.

25 The Light Divine within is obscured in most people. It is like 26 a lamp in a cask of iron, no gleam of light can shine through.
27 Gradually, by purity and unselfishness we can make the obscuring 28 medium less and less dense, until at last it becomes as transparent 29 as glass. Shri Ramakrishna was like the iron cask transformed into 30 a glass cask through which can be seen the inner light as it is. We 31 are all on the way to become the cask of glass and even higher and 32 higher reflections. As long as there is a "cask" at all, we must think 33 through material means. No impatient one can ever succeed.

34 Great saints are the object-lessons of the Principle. But the 35 disciples make the saint the Principle, and then they forget the 36 Principle in the person.

37 The result of Buddha's constant inveighing against a 38 personal God was the introduction of idols into India. In the Vedas 39 they knew them not, because they saw God everywhere, but the 40 reaction against the loss of God as Creator and Friend was to make 41 idols, and Buddha became an idol--so too with Jesus. The range of 42 idols is from wood and stone to Jesus and Buddha, but we must 43 have idols.

44 Violent attempts at reform always end by retarding reform.
45 Do not say, "You are bad"; say only, "You are good, but be better."

46 Priests are an evil in every country, because they denounce 47 and criticise, pulling at one string to mend it until two or three

1 others are out of place. Love never denounces, only ambition does 2 that. There is no such thing as "righteous" anger or justifiable 3 killing.

4 If you do not allow one to become a lion, he will become a 5 fox. Women are a power, only now it is more for evil because man 6 oppresses woman; she is the fox, but when she is no longer 7 oppressed, she will become the lion.

8 Ordinarily speaking, spiritual aspiration ought to be balanced 9 through the intellect; otherwise it may degenerate into mere 10 sentimentality. . . .

11 All theists agree that behind the changeable there is an 12 Unchangeable, though they vary in their conception of the Ultimate.
13 Buddha denied this in toto. "There is no Brahman, no Atman, no 14 soul," he said.

15 As a character Buddha was the greatest the world has ever 16 seen; next to him Christ. But the teachings of Krishna as taught by 17 the Gita are the grandest the world has ever known. He who wrote 18 that wonderful poem was one of those rare souls whose lives sent a 19 wave of regeneration through the world. The human race will never 20 again see such a brain as his who wrote the Gita.

21 There is only one Power, whether manifesting as evil or 22 good. God and the devil are the same river with the water flowing 23 in opposite directions.

25 Monday, July 1. (Shri Ramakrishna Deva)

26 Shri Ramakrishna was the son of a very orthodox Brahmin, 27 who would refuse even a gift from any but a special caste of 28 Brahmins; neither might he work, nor even be a priest in a temple, 29 nor sell books, nor serve anyone. He could only have "what fell from 30 the skies" (alms), and even then it must not come through a "fallen" 31 Brahmin. Temples have no hold on the Hindu religion; if they were 32 all destroyed, religion would not be affected a grain. A man must 33 only build a house for "God and guests", to build for himself would 34 be selfish; therefore he erects temples as dwelling places for God.

35 Owing to the extreme poverty of his family, Sri Ramakrishna 36 was obliged to become in his boyhood a priest in a temple
37 dedicated to the Divine Mother, also called Prakriti, or Kali, 38 represented by a female figure standing with feet on a male figure, 39 indicating that until Maya lifts, we can know nothing. Brahman is 40 neuter, unknown and unknowable, but to be objectified He covers 41 Himself with a veil of Maya, becomes the Mother of the Universe, 42 and so brings forth the creation. The prostrate figure (Shiva or God) 43 has become Shava (dead or lifeless) by being covered by Maya. The 44 Jnani says, "I will uncover God by force" (Advaitism); but the dualist 45 says, "I will uncover God by praying to Mother, begging Her to open 46 the door to which She alone has the key."

47 The daily service of the Mother Kali gradually awakened 48 such intense devotion in the heart of the young priest that he could 49 no longer carry on the regular temple worship. So he abandoned

1 his duties and retired to a small woodland in the temple compound, 2 where he gave himself up entirely to meditation. These woods were 3 on the bank of the river Ganga; and one day the swift current bore 4 to his very feet just the necessary materials to build him a little 5 enclosure. In this enclosure he stayed and wept and prayed, taking 6 no thought for the care of his body or for aught except his Divine 7 Mother. A relative fed him once a day and watched over him. Later 8 came a Sannyasini or lady ascetic, to help him find his "Mother".
9 Whatever teachers he needed came to him unsought; from every 10 sect some holy saint would come and offer to teach him and to each 11 he listened eagerly. But he worshipped only Mother; all to him was 12 Mother.

13 Shri Ramakrishna never spoke a harsh word against anyone.
14 So beautifully tolerant was he that every sect thought that he 15 belonged to them. He loved everyone. To him all religions were 16 true. He found a place for each one. He was free, but free in love, 17 not in "thunder". The mild type creates, the thundering type 18 spreads. Paul was the thundering type to spread the light.¹⁵³

19 The age of St. Paul, however, is gone; we are to be the new 20 lights for this day. A self-adjusting organisation is the great need of 21 our time. When we can get one, that will be the last religion of the 22 world. The wheel must turn, and we should help it, not hinder. The 23 waves of religious thought rise and fall, and on the topmost one 24 stands the "prophet of the period". Ramakrishna came to teach the 25 religion of today, constructive, not destructive. He had to go afresh 26 to Nature to ask for facts, and he got scientific religion which never 27 says "believe", but "see"; "I see, and you too can see." Use the same 28 means and you will reach the same vision. God will come to 29 everyone, harmony is within the reach of all. Shri Ramakrishna's 30 teachings are "the gist of Hinduism"; they were not peculiar to him.
31 Nor did he claim that they were: he cared naught for name or fame.

32 He began to preach when he was about forty; but he never 33 went out to do it. He waited for those who wanted his teachings to 34 come to him. In accordance with Hindu custom, he was married by 35 his parents in early youth to a little girl of five, who remained at 36 home with her family in a distant village, unconscious of the great 37 struggle through which her young husband was passing. When she 38 reached maturity, he was already deeply absorbed in religious 39 devotion. She travelled on foot from her home to the temple at 40 Dakshineswar where he was then living; and as soon as she saw 41 him, she recognised what he was, for she herself was a great soul, 42 pure and holy, who only desired to help his work, never to drag him 43 down to the level of the Grihastha (householder).

44 Shri Ramakrishna is worshipped in India as one of the great 45 Incarnations, and his birthday is celebrated there as a religious 46 festival. . . .

47 A curious round stone is the emblem of Vishnu, the 48 omnipresent. Each morning a priest comes in, offers sacrifice to the

1 ¹⁵³ ?And it has been said by many that Swami Vivekananda himself was a kind 2 of St. Paul to Shri Ramakrishna.

1 idol, waves incense before it, then puts it to bed and apologises to 2 God for worshipping Him in that way, because he can only conceive 3 of Him through an image or by means of some material object. He 4 bathes the idol, clothes it, and puts his divine self into the idol "to 5 make it alive".

6 There is a sect which says, "It is weakness to worship only 7 the good and beautiful, we ought also to love and worship the 8 hideous and the evil." This sect prevails all over Tibet, and they 9 have no marriage. In India proper they cannot exist openly, but 10 organise secret societies. No decent men will belong to them except 11 sub rosa. Thrice communism was tried in Tibet, and thrice it failed.
12 They use Tapas and with immense success as far as power is 13 concerned.

14 Tapas means literally "to burn". It is a kind of penance to 15 "heat" the higher nature. It is sometimes in the form of a sunrise to 16 sunset vow, such as repeating Om all day incessantly. These actions 17 will produce a certain power that you can convert into any form you 18 wish, spiritual or material. This idea of Tapas penetrates the whole 19 of Hindu religion. The Hindus even say that God made Tapas to 20 create the world. It is a mental instrument with which to do 21 everything. "Everything in the three worlds can be caught by 22 Tapas." . . .

23 People who report about sects with which they are not in 24 sympathy are both conscious and unconscious liars. A believer in 25 one sect can rarely see truth in others.

26 A great Bhakta (Hanuman) once said when asked what day 27 of the month it was, "God is my eternal date, no other date I care 28 for."

29
30 Tuesday, July 2. (The Divine Mother.)

31 Shaktas worship the Universal Energy as Mother, the 32 sweetest name they know; for the mother is the highest ideal of 33 womanhood in India. When God is worshipped as "Mother", as 34 Love, the Hindus call it the "right-handed" way, and it leads to 35 spirituality but never to material prosperity. When God is 36 worshipped on His terrible side, that is, in the "left-handed" way, it 37 leads usually to great material prosperity, but rarely to spirituality; 38 and eventually it leads to degeneration and the obliteration of the 39 race that practises it.

40 Mother is the first manifestation of power and is considered 41 a higher idea than father. With the name of Mother comes the idea 42 of Shakti, Divine Energy and Omnipotence, just as the baby 43 believes its mother to be all-powerful, able to do anything. The 44 Divine Mother is the Kundalini ("coiled up" power) sleeping in us; 45 without worshipping Her we can never know ourselves. All-46 merciful, all-powerful, omnipresent are attributes of Divine Mother.
47 She is the sum total of the energy in the universe. Every 48 manifestation of power in the universe is "Mother". She is life, She 49 is intelligence, She is Love.

1 She is in the universe yet separate from it. She is a person
2 and can be seen and known (as Shri Ramakrishna saw and knew 3 Her). Established in the idea of Mother, we can do anything. She 4 quickly answers prayer.

5 She can show Herself to us in any form at any moment.
6 Divine Mother can have form (Rupa) and name (Nama) or name 7 without form; and as we worship Her in these various aspects we 8 can rise to pure Being, having neither form nor name.

9 The sum total of all the cells in an organism is one person; so 10 each soul is like one cell and the sum of them is God, and beyond 11 that is the Absolute. The sea calm is the Absolute; the same sea in 12 waves is Divine Mother. She is time, space, and causation. God is 13 Mother and has two natures, the conditioned and the 14 unconditioned. As the former, She is God, nature, and soul (man).
15 As the latter, She is unknown and unknowable. Out of the 16 Unconditioned came the trinity--God, nature, and soul, the triangle 17 of existence. This is the Vishishtadvaitist idea.

18 A bit of Mother, a drop, was Krishna, another was Buddha, 19 another was Christ. The worship of even one spark of Mother in our 20 earthly mother leads to greatness. Worship Her if you want love 21 and wisdom.

23 Wednesday, July 3.

24 Generally speaking, human religion begins with fear. "The 25 fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." But later comes the 26 higher idea. "Perfect love casteth out fear." Traces of fear will 27 remain with us until we get knowledge, know what God is. Christ, 28 being man, had to see impurity and denounced it; but God, infinitely 29 higher, does not see iniquity and cannot be angry. Denunciation is 30 never the highest. David's hands were smeared with blood; he 31 could not build the temple.¹⁵⁴

32 The more we grow in love and virtue and holiness, the more 33 we see love and virtue and holiness outside. All condemnation of 34 others really condemns ourselves. Adjust the microcosm (which is 35 in your power to do) and the macrocosm will adjust itself for you. It 36 is like the hydrostatic paradox, one drop of water can balance the 37 universe. We cannot see outside what we are not inside. The 38 universe is to us what the huge engine is to the miniature engine; 39 and indication of any error in the tiny engine leads us to imagine 40 trouble in the huge one.

41 Every step that has been really gained in the world has been 42 gained by love; criticising can never do any good, it has been tried 43 for thousands of years. Condemnation accomplishes nothing.

44 A real Vedantist must sympathise with all. Monism, or 45 absolute oneness is the very soul of Vedanta. Dualists naturally tend 46 to become intolerant, to think theirs as the only way. The 47 Vaishnavas in India, who are dualists, are a most intolerant sect.

1 ¹⁵⁴ ?Bible, Samuel, Chap. XVII--end.

1 Among the Shaivas, another dualistic sect, the story is told of a 2 devotee by the name of Ghantakarna or the Bell-eared, who was so 3 devout a worshipper of Shiva that he did not wish even to hear the 4 name of any other deity; so he wore two bells tied to his ears in 5 order to drown the sound of any voice uttering other Divine names.
6 On account of his intense devotion to Shiva, the latter wanted to 7 teach him that there was no difference between Shiva and Vishnu, 8 so He appeared before him as half Vishnu and half Shiva. At that 9 moment the devotee was waving incense before Him, but so great 10 was the bigotry of Ghantakarna that when he saw the fragrance of 11 the incense entering the nostril of Vishnu, he thrust his finger into it 12 to prevent the god from enjoying the sweet smell. . . .

13 The meat-eating animal, like the lion, gives one blow and 14 subsides, but the patient bullock goes on all day, eating and 15 sleeping as it walks. The "live Yankee" cannot compete with the 16 rice-eating Chinese coolie. While military power dominates, meat-17 eating will prevail; but with the advance of science, fighting will 18 grow less, and then the vegetarians will come in.

19 We divide ourselves into two to love God, myself loving my 20 Self. God has created me and I have created God. We create God in 21 our image; it is we who create Him to be our master, it is not God 22 who makes us His servants. When we know that we are one with 23 God, that we and He are friends, then come equality and freedom.
24 So long as you hold yourself separated by a hair's breadth from this 25 Eternal One, fear cannot go.

26 Never ask that foolish question, what good will it do to the 27 world? Let the world go. Love and ask nothing; love and look for 28 nothing further. Love and forget all the "isms". Drink the cup of love 29 and become mad. Say "Thine, O Thine for ever, O Lord!" and plunge 30 in, forgetting all else. The very idea of God is love. Seeing a cat 31 loving her kittens stand and pray. God has become manifest there; 32 literally believe this. Repeat "I am Thine, I am Thine", for we can 33 see God everywhere. Do not seek for Him, just see Him.

34 "May the Lord ever keep you alive, Light of the world, Soul of 35 the universe!" . . .

36 The Absolute cannot be worshipped, so we must worship a 37 manifestation, such a one as has our nature. Jesus had our nature; 38 he became the Christ; so can we, and so must we. Christ and 39 Buddha were the names of a state to be attained; Jesus and 40 Gautama were the persons to manifest it. "Mother" is the first and 41 highest manifestation, next the Christs and Buddhas. We make our 42 own environment, and we strike the fetters off. The Atman is the 43 fearless. When we pray to a God outside, it is good, only we do not 44 know what we do. When we know the Self, we understand. The 45 highest expression of love is unification.

46 "There was a time when I was a woman and he was a man.

47 Still love grew until there was neither he nor I;

48 Only I remember faintly there was a time when there were 49 two.

1 But love came between and made them one."

3 Persian Sufi Poem

4 Knowledge exists eternally and is co-existent with God. The 5 man who discovers a spiritual law is inspired, and what he brings is 6 revelation; but revelation too is eternal, not to be crystallised as 7 final and then blindly followed. The Hindus have been criticised so 8 many years by their conquerors that they (the Hindus) dare to 9 criticise their religion themselves, and this makes them free. Their 10 foreign rulers struck off their fetters without knowing it. The most 11 religious people of earth, the Hindus have actually no sense of 12 blasphemy; to speak of holy things in any way is to them in itself a 13 sanctification. Nor have they any artificial respect for prophets or 14 books, or for hypocritical piety.

15 The Church tries to fit Christ into it, not the Church into 16 Christ; so only those writings were preserved that suited the 17 purpose in hand. Thus the books are not to be depended upon and 18 book-worship is the worst kind of idolatry to bind our feet. All has to 19 conform to the book--science, religion, philosophy; it is the most 20 horrible tyranny, this tyranny of the Protestant Bible. Every man in 21 Christian countries has a huge cathedral on his head and on top of 22 that a book, and yet man lives and grows! Does not this prove that 23 man is God?

24 Man is the highest being that exists, and this is the greatest 25 world. We can have no conception of God higher than man, so our 26 God is man, and man is God. When we rise and go beyond and find 27 something higher, we have to jump out of the mind, out of body and 28 the imagination and leave this world; when we rise to be the 29 Absolute, we are no longer in this world. Man is the apex of the only 30 world we can ever know. All we know of animals is only by analogy, 31 we judge them by what we do and feel ourselves.

32 The sum total of knowledge is ever the same, only sometimes 33 it is more manifested and sometimes less. The only source of it is 34 within, and there only is it found.

35 All poetry, painting, and music is feeling expressed through 36 words, through colour, through sound. . . .

37 Blessed are those upon whom their sins are quickly visited, 38 their account is the sooner balanced! Woe to those whose 39 punishment is deferred, it is the greater!

40 Those who have attained sameness are said to be living in 41 God. All hatred is killing the "Self by the self", therefore love is the 42 law of life. To rise to this is to be perfect; but the more perfect we 43 are, the less work (so-called) can we do. The Sattvika see and know 44 that all is mere child's play and do not trouble themselves about 45 anything.

46 It is easy to strike a blow, but tremendously hard to stay the 47 hand, stand still, and say, "In Thee, O Lord, I take refuge", and then 48 wait for Him to act.

1 Friday, July 5.

2 Until you are ready to change any minute, you can never see 3 the truth; but you must hold fast and be steady in the search for 4 truth. . . .

5 Charvakas, a very ancient sect in India, were rank 6 materialists. They have died out now, and most of their books are 7 lost. They claimed that the soul, being the product of the body and 8 its forces, died with it; that there was no proof of its further 9 existence. They denied inferential knowledge accepting only 10 perception by the senses.

11 Samadhi is when the Divine and human are in one, or it is 12 "bringing sameness". . . .

13 Materialism says, the voice of freedom is a delusion. Idealism
14 says, the voice that tells of bondage is delusion. Vedanta says, you 15 are free and not free at the same time--never free on the earthly 16 plane, but ever free on the spiritual.

17 Be beyond both freedom and bondage.

18 We are Shiva, we are immortal knowledge beyond the 19 senses.

20 Infinite power is back of everyone; pray to Mother, and it will 21 come to you.

22 "O Mother, giver of Vak (eloquence), Thou self-existent, come 23 as the Vak upon my lips," (Hindu invocation).

24 "That Mother whose voice is in the thunder, come Thou in 25 me! Kali, Thou time eternal, Thou force irresistible, Shakti, Power!"

27 Saturday, July 6. (Today we had Shankaracharya's 28 commentary of Vyasa's Vedanta Sutras.)

29 Om tat sat! According to Shankara, there are two phases of 30 the universe, one is I and the other thou; and they are as contrary 31 as light and darkness, so it goes without saying that neither can be 32 derived from the other. On the subject, the object has been 33 superimposed; the subject is the only reality, the other a mere 34 appearance. The opposite view is untenable. Matter and the 35 external world are but the soul in a certain state; in reality there is 36 only one.

37 All our world comes from truth and untruth coupled together.
38 Samsara (life) is the result of the contradictory forces acting upon 39 us, like the diagonal motion of a ball in a parallelogram of forces.
40 The world is God and is real, but that is not the world we see; just 41 as we see silver in the mother-of-pearl where it is not. This is what 42 is known as Adhyasa or superimposition, that is, a relative existence 43 dependent upon a real one, as when we recall a scene we have 44 seen; for the time it exists for us, but that existence is not real. Or 45 some say, it is as when we imagine heat in water, which does not 46 belong to it; so really it is something which has been put where it 47 does not belong, "taking the thing for what it is not". We see reality, 48 but distorted by the medium through which we see it.

1 You can never know yourself except as objectified. When we 2 mistake one thing for another, we always take the thing before us 3 as the real, never the unseen; thus we mistake the object for the 4 subject. The Atman never becomes the object. Mind is the internal 5 sense, the outer senses are its instruments. In the subject is a trifle 6 of the objectifying power that enables him to know "I am"; but the 7 subject is the object of its own Self, never of the mind or the senses.
8 You can, however, superimpose one idea on another idea, as when 9 we say, "The sky is blue", the sky itself being only an idea. Science 10 and nescience there are, but the Self is never affected by any 11 nescience. Relative knowledge is good, because it leads to absolute 12 knowledge; but neither the knowledge of the senses, nor of the 13 mind, nor even of the Vedas is true, since they are all within the 14 realm of relative knowledge. First get rid of the delusion, "I am the 15 body", then only can we want real knowledge. Man's knowledge is 16 only a higher degree of brute knowledge.

17 One part of the Vedas deals with Karma--form and 18 ceremonies. The other part deals with the knowledge of Brahman 19 and discusses religion. The Vedas in this part teach of the Self; and 20 because they do, their knowledge is approaching real knowledge.
21 Knowledge of the Absolute depends upon no book, nor upon 22 anything; it is absolute in itself. No amount of study will give this 23 knowledge; it is not theory, it is realisation. Cleanse the dust from 24 the mirror, purify your own mind, and in a flash you know that you 25 are Brahman.

26 God exists, not birth nor death, not pain nor misery, nor 27 murder, nor change, nor good nor evil; all is Brahman. We take the 28 "rope for the serpent", the error is ours. . . . We can only do good 29 when we love God and He reflects our love. The murderer is God, 30 and the "clothing of murderer" is only superimposed upon him. Take 31 him by the hand and tell him the truth.

32 Soul has no caste, and to think it has is a delusion; so are life 33 and death, or any motion or quality. The Atman never changes, 34 never goes nor comes. It is the eternal Witness of all Its own 35 manifestations, but we take It for the manifestation; an eternal 36 illusion, without beginning or end, ever going on. The Vedas, 37 however, have to come down to our level, for if they told us the 38 highest truth in the highest way, we could not understand it.

39 Heaven is a mere superstition arising from desire, and desire 40 is ever a yoke, a degeneration. Never approach anything except as 41 God; for if we do, we see evil, because we throw a veil of delusion 42 over what we look at, and then we see evil. Get free from these 43 illusions; be blessed. Freedom is to lose all illusions.

44 In one sense Brahman is known to every human being; he 45 knows, "I am"; but man does not know himself as he is. We all know 46 we are, but not how we are. All lower explanations are partial 47 truths; but the flower, the essence of the Vedas, is that the Self in 48 each of us is Brahman. Every phenomenon is included in birth, 49 growth, and death--appearance, continuance, and disappearance.
50 Our own realisation is beyond the Vedas, because even they depend 51 upon that. The highest Vedanta is the philosophy of the Beyond.

1 To say that creation has any beginning is to lay the axe at the 2 root of all philosophy.

3 Maya is the energy of the universe, potential and kinetic.
4 Until Mother releases us, we cannot get free.

5 The universe is ours to enjoy. But want nothing. To want is 6 weakness. Want makes us beggars, and we are sons of the king, not 7 beggars.

8

9 Sunday Morning, July 7.

10 Infinite manifestation dividing itself in portion still remains 11 infinite, and each portion is infinite.¹⁵⁵

12 Brahman is the same in two forms--changeable and 13 unchangeable, expressed and unexpressed. Know that the Knower 14 and the known are one. The Trinity--the Knower, the known, and 15 knowing--is manifesting as this universe. That God the Yogi sees in 16 meditation, he sees through the power of his own Self.

17 What we call nature, fate, is simply God's will.

18 So long as enjoyment is sought, bondage remains. Only 19 imperfection can enjoy, because enjoyment is the fulfilling of desire.
20 The human soul enjoys nature. The underlying reality of nature, 21 soul, and God is Brahman; but It (Brahman) is unseen, until we 22 bring It out. It may be brought out by Pramantha or friction, just as 23 we can produce fire by friction. The body is the lower piece of 24 wood, Om is the pointed piece and Dhyana (meditation) is the 25 friction. When this is used, that light which is the knowledge of 26 Brahman will burst forth in the soul.

27 Seek it through Tapas. Holding the body upright, sacrifice 28 the organs of sense in the mind. The sense-centres are within, and 29 their organs without; drive them into the mind and through 30 Dharana (concentration) fix the mind in Dhyana. Brahman is 31 omnipresent in the universe as is butter in milk, but friction makes 32 It manifest in one place. As churning brings out the butter in the 33 milk, so Dhyana brings the realisation of Brahman in the soul.

34 All Hindu philosophy declares that there is a sixth sense, the 35 superconscious, and through it comes inspiration.

36 The universe is motion, and friction will eventually bring 37 everything to an end; then comes a rest; and after that all begins
38 again. . . .

39 So long as the "skin sky" surrounds man, that is, so long as 40 he identifies himself with his body, he cannot see God.

42 Sunday afternoon

1 ¹⁵⁵ ?Infinity is one, without a second, ever indivisible, and unmanifested. By 2 "infinite manifestation" the Swami means the universe, both visible and invisible.
3 Although it is made up of countless forms which are limited by their very nature, 4 still as a whole it is always infinite; nay, even a portion of it is infinite, as each 5 such portion is inseparably united with it.
6

1 There are six schools of philosophy in India that are regarded 2 as orthodox, because they believe in the Vedas.

3 Vyasa's philosophy is par excellence that of the Upanishads.
4 He wrote in Sutra form, that is, in brief algebraical symbols without 5 nominative or verb. This caused so much ambiguity that out of the 6 Sutras came dualism, mono-dualism, and monism or "roaring 7 Vedanta"; and all the great commentators in these different schools 8 were at times "conscious liars" in order to make the texts suit their 9 philosophy.

10 The Upanishads contain very little history of the doings of 11 any man, but nearly all other scriptures are largely personal 12 histories. The Vedas deal almost entirely with philosophy. Religion 13 without philosophy runs into superstition; philosophy without 14 religion becomes dry atheism.

15 Vishishta-advaita is qualified Advaita (monism). Its 16 expounder was Ramanuja. He says, "Out of the ocean of milk of the 17 Vedas, Vyasa has churned this butter of philosophy, the better to 18 help mankind." He says again, "All virtues and all qualities belong 19 to Brahman, Lord of the universe. He is the greatest Purusha.
20 Madhva is a through-going dualist or Dvaitist. He claims that even 21 women might study the Vedas. He quotes chiefly from the Puranas.
22 He says that Brahman means Vishnu, not Shiva at all, because 23 there is no salvation except through Vishnu.

25 Monday, July 8.

26 There is no place for reasoning in Madhva's explanation, it is 27 all taken from the revelation in the Vedas.

28 Ramanuja says, the Vedas are the holiest study. Let the sons 29 of the three upper castes get the Sutra¹⁵⁶ and at eight, ten, or 30 eleven years of age begin the study, which means going to a Guru 31 and learning the Vedas word for word, with perfect intonation and 32 pronunciation.

33 Japa is repeating the Holy Name; through this the devotee 34 rises to the Infinite. This boat of sacrifice and ceremonies is very 35 frail, we need more than that to know Brahman, which alone is 36 freedom. Liberty is nothing more than destruction of ignorance, and 37 that can only go when we know Brahman. It is not necessary to go 38 through all these ceremonials to reach the meaning of the Vedanta.
39 Repeating Om is enough.

40 Seeing difference is the cause of all misery, and ignorance is 41 the cause of seeing difference. That is why ceremonials are not 42 needed, because they increase the idea of inequality; you practise 43 them to get rid of something or to obtain something.

44 Brahman is without action, Atman is Brahman, and we are 45 Atman; knowledge like this takes off all error. It must be heard, 46 apprehended intellectually, and lastly realised. Cogitating is 47 applying reason and establishing this knowledge in ourselves by 1 ¹⁵⁶ The holy thread.

1 reason. Realising is making it a part of our lives by constant 2 thinking of it. This constant thought or Dhyana is as oil that pours in 3 one unbroken line from vessel to vessel; Dhyana rolls the mind in 4 this thought day and night and so helps us to attain to liberation.
5 Think always "Soham, Soham"; this is almost as good as liberation.
6 Say it day and night; realisation will come as the result of this 7 continuous cogitation. This absolute and continuous remembrance
8 of the Lord is what is meant by Bhakti.

9 This Bhakti is indirectly helped by all good works. Good 10 thought and good works create less differentiation than bad ones; 11 so indirectly they lead to freedom. Work, but give up the results to 12 the Lord. Knowledge alone can make us perfect. He who follows the 13 God of Truth with devotion, to him the God of Truth reveals 14 Himself. . . . We are lamps, and our burning is what we call "life".
15 When the supply of oxygen gives out, then the lamp must go out. All 16 we can do is to keep the lamp clean. Life is a product, a compound, 17 and as such must resolve itself into its elements.

19 Tuesday, July 9.

20 Man as Atman is really free; as man he is bound, changed by 21 every physical condition. As man, he is a machine with an idea of 22 freedom; but this human body is the best and the human mind the 23 highest mind there is. When a man attains to the Atman state, he 24 can take a body, making it to suit himself; he is above law. This is a 25 statement and must be proved. Each one must prove it for himself; 26 we may satisfy ourselves, but we cannot satisfy another. Raja-Yoga 27 is the only science of religion that can be demonstrated; and only 28 what I myself have proved by experience, do I teach. The full 29 ripeness of reason is intuition, but intuition cannot antagonise 30 reason.

31 Work purifies the heart and so leads to Vidya (wisdom). The 32 Buddhists said, doing good to men and to animals were the only 33 works; the Brahmins said that worship and all ceremonials were 34 equally "work" and purified the mind. Shankara declares that "all 35 works, good and bad, are against knowledge". Actions tending to 36 ignorance are sins, not directly, but as causes, because they 44 hman is the essence, the reality of all 45 knowledge, and that all manifestations as knower, knowing, and 46 known are mere imaginings in Brahman. Ramanuja attributes 47 consciousness to God; the real monists attribute nothing, not even 48 existence in any meaning that we can attach to it. Ramanuja 49 declares that God is the essence of conscious knowledge.

50 Undifferentiated consciousness, when differentiated, becomes the 51 world. . . .

1 Buddhism, one of the most philosophical religions in the 2 world, spread all through the populace, the common people of 3 India. What a wonderful culture there must have been among the 4 Aryans twenty-five hundred years ago, to be able to grasp ideas!

5 Buddha was the only great Indian philosopher who would not 6 recognise caste, and not one of his followers remains in India. All 7 the other philosophers pandered more or less to social prejudices; 8 no matter how high they soared, still a bit of the vulture remained 9 in them. As my Master used to say, "The vulture soars high out of 10 sight in the sky, but his eye is ever on a bit of carrion on the earth."

11 The ancient Hindus were wonderful scholars, veritable living 12 encyclopaedias. They said, "Knowledge in books and money in other 13 people's hands is like no knowledge and no money at all."

14 Shankara was regarded by many as an incarnation of Shiva.

16 Wednesday, July 10.

17 There are sixty-five million Mohammedans in India, some of 18 them Sufis.¹⁵⁷ Sufis identify man with God, and through them this 19 idea came into Europe. They say, "I am that Truth"; but they have 20 an esoteric as well as an exoteric doctrine, although Mohammed 21 himself did not hold it.

22 "Hashshashin" ¹⁵⁸ has become our word "assassin", because 23 an old sect of Mohammedanism killed non-believers as a part of its 24 creed.

25 A pitcher of water has to be present in the Mohammedan
26 worship as a symbol of God filling the universe.

27 The Hindus believe that there will be ten Divine 28 Incarnations. Nine have been and the tenth is still to come.

29 Shankara sometimes resorts to sophistry in order to prove 30 that the ideas in the books go to uphold his philosophy. Buddha was 31 more brave and sincere than any teacher. He said: "Believe no 32 book; the Vedas are all humbug. If they agree with me, so much the 33 better for the books. I am the greatest book; sacrifice and prayer 34 are useless." Buddha was the first human being to give to the world 35 a complete system of morality. He was good for good's sake, he 36 loved for love's sake.

37 Shankara says: God is to be reasoned on, because the Vedas 38 say so. Reason helps inspiration; books and realised reason--or 39 individualised perception--both are proofs of God. The Vedas are, 40 according to him, a sort of incarnation of universal knowledge. The 1 ¹⁵⁷ ?The influence of Hinduism upon Mohammedanism in India gave rise to the 2 sect known as Sufis.

3
4 ¹⁵⁸ ?The name of a military and religious order existing in Syria in the 11th 5 century and notorious for the number of secret murders committed by its 6 members in obedience to the will of their chief. The literal meaning of the word is 7 "Hashish-eater" and was applied to the order because of their habitual use of this 8 special drug to fortify the murderers for their task.
9

1 proof of God is that He brought forth the Vedas, and the proof of 2 the Vedas is that such wonderful books could only have been given 3 out by Brahman. They are the mine of all knowledge, and they have 4 come out of Him as a man breathes out air; therefore we know that 5 He is infinite in power and knowledge. He may or may not have 6 created the world, that is a trifle; to have produced the Vedas is 7 more important! The world has come to know God through the 8 Vedas; no other way there is.

9 And so universal is this belief, held by Shankara, in the all-10 inclusiveness of the Vedas that there is even a Hindu proverb that if 11 a man loses his cow, he goes to look for her in the Vedas!

12 Shankara further affirms that obedience to ceremonies is not 13 knowledge. Knowledge of God is independent of moral duties, or 14 sacrifice or ceremonies, or what we think or do not think, just as 15 the stump is not affected when one man takes it for a ghost and 16 another sees it as it is.

17 Vedanta is necessary because neither reasoning nor books
18 can show us God. He is only to be realised by superconscious 19 perception, and Vedanta teaches how to attain that. You must get 20 beyond personal God (Ishvara) and reach the Absolute Brahman.
21 God is the perception of every being: He is all there is to be 22 perceived. That which says "I" is Brahman, but although we, day 23 and night, perceive Him, we do not know that we are perceiving 24 Him. As soon as we become aware of this truth, all misery goes; so 25 we must get knowledge of the truth. Reach unity; no more duality 26 will come. But knowledge does not come by sacrifice, but by 27 seeking, worshipping, knowing the Atman.

28 Brahma-vidya is the highest knowledge, knowing the 29 Brahman; lower knowledge is science. This is the teaching of the 30 Mundakopanishad or the Upanishad for Sannyasins. There are two 31 sorts of knowledge--principle and secondary. The unessential is that 32 part of the Vedas dealing with worship and ceremonies, also all 33 secular knowledge. The essential is that by which we reach the 34 Absolute. It (the Absolute) creates all from Its own nature; there is 35 nothing to cause, nothing outside. It is all energy, It is all there is.
36 He who makes all sacrifices to himself, the Atman, he alone knows 37 Brahman. Fools think outside worship the highest; fools think works 38 can give us God. Only those who go through the Sushumna (the 39 "path" of the Yogis) reach the Atman. They must go to a Guru to 40 learn. Each part has the same nature as the whole; all springs from 41 the Atman. Meditation is the arrow, the whole soul going out to God 42 is the bow, which speeds the arrow to its mark, the Atman. As finite, 43 we can never express the Infinite, but we are the Infinite. Knowing 44 this we argue with no one.

45 Divine wisdom is to be got by devotion, meditation, and 46 chastity. "Truth alone triumphs, and not untruth. Through truth 47 alone the way is spread to Brahman"--where alone love and truth 48 are.

50 Thursday, July 11.

1 Without mother-love no creation could continue. Nothing is 2 entirely physical, nor yet entirely metaphysical; one presupposes
3 the other and explains the other. All Theists agree that there is a 4 background to this visible universe, they differ as to the nature or 5 character of that background. Materialists say there is no 6 background.

7 In all religions the superconscious state is identical. Hindus, 8 Christians, Mohammedans, Buddhists, and even those of no creed, 9 all have the very same experience when they transcend the 10 body. . . .

11 The purest Christians in the world were established in India 12 by the Apostle Thomas about twenty-five years after the death of 13 Jesus. This was while the Anglo-Saxons were still savages, painting 14 their bodies and living in caves. The Christians in India once 15 numbered about three millions, but now there are about one 16 million.

17 Christianity is always propagated by the sword. How 18 wonderful that the disciples of such a gentle soul should kill so 19 much! The three missionary religions are the Buddhist, 20 Mohammedan, and Christian. The three older ones, Hinduism, 21 Judaism and Zoroastrianism, never sought to make converts.
22 Buddhists never killed, but converted three-quarters of the world at 23 one time by pure gentleness.

24 The Buddhists were the most logical agnostics. You can 25 really stop nowhere between nihilism and absolutism. The 26 Buddhists were intellectually all-destroyers, carrying their theory to 27 its ultimate logical issue. The Advaitists also worked out their 28 theory to its logical conclusion and reached the Absolute--one 29 identified Unit Substance out of which all phenomena are being 30 manifested. Both Buddhists and Advaitists have a feeling of identity 31 and non-identity at the same time; one of these feelings must be 32 false, and the other true. The nihilist puts the reality in non-identity, 33 the realist puts the reality in identity; and this is the fight which 34 occupies the whole world. The is the "tug-of-war".

35 The realist asks, "How does the nihilist get any idea of 36 identity?" How does the revolving light appear a circle? A point of 37 rest alone explains motion. The nihilist can never explain the 38 genesis of the delusion that there is a background; neither can the 39 idealist explain how the One becomes the many. The only 40 explanation must come from beyond the sense-plane; we must rise 41 to the superconscious, to a state entirely beyond sense-perception.
42 That metaphysical power is the further instrument that the idealist
43 alone can use. He can experience the Absolute; the man 44 Vivekananda can resolve himself into the Absolute and then come 45 back to the man again. For him, then, the problem is solved and 46 secondarily for others, for he can show the way to others. Thus 47 religion begins where philosophy ends. The "good of the world" will 48 be that what is now superconscious for us will in ages to come be 49 the conscious for all. Religion is therefore the highest work the 50 world has; and because man has unconsciously felt this, he has 51 clung through all the ages to the idea of religion.

1 Religion, the great milch cow, has given many kicks, but 2 never mind, it gives a great deal of milk. The milkman does not 3 mind the kick of the cow which gives much milk. Religion is the 4 greatest child to be born, the great "moon of realisation"; let us 5 feed it and help it grow, and it will become a giant. King Desire and 6 King Knowledge fought, and just as the latter was about to be 7 defeated, he was reconciled to Queen Upanishad and a child was 8 born to him, Realisation, who saved the victory to him.¹⁵⁹

9 Love concentrates all the power of the will without effort, as 10 when a man falls in love with a woman.

11 The path of devotion is natural and pleasant. Philosophy is 12 taking the mountain stream back to its source by force. It is a 13 quicker method but very hard. Philosophy says, "Check everything." 14 Devotion says, "Give up all to the stream, have eternal self-15 surrender." It is a longer way, but easier and happier.

16 "Thine am I for ever; henceforth whatever I do, it is Thou 17 doing it. No more is there any me or mine."

18 "Having no money to give, no brains to learn, no time to 19 practise Yoga, to Thee, O sweet One, I give myself, to Thee my body 20 and mind."

21 No amount of ignorance or wrong ideas can put a barrier 22 between the soul and God. Even if there be no God, still hold fast to 23 love. It is better to die seeking a God than as a dog seeking only 24 carrion. Choose the highest ideal, and give your life up to that.
25 "Death being so certain, it is the highest thing to give up life for a 26 great purpose."

27 Love will painlessly attain to philosophy; then after 28 knowledge comes Parabhakti (supreme devotion).

29 Knowledge is critical and makes a great fuss over 30 everything; but Love says, "God will show His real nature to me" 31 and accepts all.

33 RABBIA

34 Rabbia, sick upon her bed,
35 By two saints was visited--
36 Holy Malik, Hassan wise--
37 Men of mark in Moslem eyes.

38

39 Hassan said, "Whose prayer is pure
40 Will God's chastisements endure."
41 Malik, from a deeper sense
42 Uttered his experience:
43 "He who loves his master's choice 44 Will in chastisement rejoice ."

45

46 Rabbia saw some selfish will 47 In their maxims lingering still,

¹⁵⁹ ?From the Prabodha-chandrodaya, a Vedantic Sanskrit masque.

1 And replied: "O men of grace,
2 He who sees his Master's face,
3 Will not in his prayers recall
4 That he is chastised at all!"
5 --Persian Poem

6
7 Friday, July 12. (Shankara's Commentary.)

8 Fourth Vyasa Sutra. "Atman (is) the aim of all."

9 Ishvara is to be known from the Vedanta; all Vedas point to 10 Him (who is the Cause; the Creator, Preserver and Destroyer).
11 Ishvara is the unification of the Trinity, known as Brahma, Vishnu, 12 and Shiva, which stand at the head of the Hindu Pantheon. "Thou 13 art our Father who takest us to the other shore of the dark ocean" 14 (Disciple's words to the Master).

15 The Vedas cannot show you Brahman, you are That already; 16 they can only help to take away the veil that hides the truth from 17 our eyes. The first veil to vanish is ignorance; and when that is 18 gone, sin goes; next desire ceases, selfishness ends, and all misery 19 disappears. This cessation of ignorance can only come when I know 20 that God and I are one; in other words, identify yourself with 21 Atman, not with human limitations. Dis-identify yourself with the 22 body, and all pain will cease. This is the secret of healing. The 23 universe is a case of hypnotisation; de-hypnotise yourself and cease 24 to suffer.

25 In order to be free we have to pass through vice to virtue, 26 and then get rid of both. Tamas is to be conquered by Rajas, both 27 are to be submerged in Sattva; then go beyond the three qualities.
28 Reach a state where your very breathing is a prayer.

29 Whenever you learn (gain anything) from another man's 30 words, know that you had the experience in a previous existence, 31 because experience is the only teacher.

32 With all powers comes further misery, so kill desire. Getting 33 any desire is like putting a stick into a nest of hornets. Vairagya is 34 finding out that desires are but gilded balls of poison.

35 "Mind is not God" (Shankara). "Tat tvam asi", "Aham 36 Brahmasmi" ("That thou art", "I am Brahman"). When a man 37 realises this, "all the knots of his heart are cut asunder, all his 38 doubts vanish". Fearlessness is not possible as long as we have 39 even God over us; we must be God. What is disjoined will be for 40 ever disjoined; if you are separate from God, then you can never be 41 one with Him, and vice versa. If by virtue you are joined to God, 42 when that ceases, disjunction will come. The junction is eternal, and 43 virtue only helps to remove the veil. We are azad (free), we must 44 realise it. "Whom the Self chooses" means we are the Self and 45 choose ourselves.

46 Does seeing depend upon our own efforts or does it depend 47 upon something outside? It depends upon ourselves; our efforts 48 take off the dust, the mirror does not change. There is neither 49 knower, knowing, nor known. "He who knows that he does not

1 know, knows It. He who has a theory knows nothing.

2 The idea that we are bound is only an illusion.

3 Religion is not of this world; it is "heart-cleansing", and its 4 effect on this world is secondary. Freedom is inseparable from the 5 nature of the Atman. This is ever pure, ever perfect, ever 6 unchangeable. This Atman you can never know. We can say nothing 7 about the Atman but "not this, not this".

8 "Brahman is that which we can never drive out by any power 9 of mind or imagination." (Shankara).

10 The universe is thought, and the Vedas are the words of this 11 thought. We can create and uncreate this whole universe.
12 Repeating the words, the unseen thought is aroused, and as a result 13 a seen effect is produced. This is the claim of a certain sect of 14 Karmis. They think that each one of us is a creator. Pronounce the 15 words, the thought which corresponds will arise, and the result will 16 become visible. "Thought is the power of the word, the word is the 17 expression of the thought," say Mimamsakas, a Hindu philosophical 18 sect.

19

20 Saturday, July 13th

21 Everything we know is a compound, and all sense-knowledge 22 comes through analysis. To think that mind is a simple, single, or 23 independent is dualism. Philosophy is not got by studying books; 24 the more you read books, the more muddled becomes the mind. The 25 idea of unthinking philosophers was that the mind was a simple, 26 and this led them to believe in free will. Psychology, the analysis of 27 the mind, shows the mind to be a compound, and every compound 28 must be held together by some outside force; so the will is bound by 29 the combination of outside forces. Man cannot even will to eat 30 unless he is hungry. Will is subject to desire. But we are free; 31 everyone feels it.

32 The agnostic says this idea is a delusion. Then, how do you 33 prove the world? Its only proof is that we all see it and feel it; so 34 just as much we all feel freedom. If universal consensus affirms this 35 world, then it must be accepted as affirming freedom; but freedom 36 is not of the will as it is. The constitutional belief of man in freedom 37 is the basis of all reasoning. Freedom is of the will as it was before 38 it became bound. The very idea of free-will shows every moment 39 man's struggle against bondage. The free can be only one, the 40 Unconditioned, the Infinite, the Unlimited. Freedom in man is now a 41 memory, an attempt towards freedom.

42 Everything in the universe is struggling to complete a circle, 43 to return to its source, to return to its only real Source, Atman. The 44 search for happiness is a struggle to find the balance, to restore the 45 equilibrium. Morality is the struggle of the bound will to get free 46 and is the proof that we have come from perfection. . . .

47 The idea of duty is the midday sun of misery scorching the 48 very soul. "O king, drink this one drop of nectar and be happy." ("I 49 am not the doer", this is the nectar.)

1 Let there be action without reaction; action is pleasant, all 2 misery is reaction. The child puts its hand in the flame, that is 3 pleasure; but when its system reacts, then comes the pain of 4 burning. When we can stop that reaction, then we have nothing to 5 fear. Control the brain and do not let it read the record; be the 6 witness and do not react, only thus can you be happy. The happiest 7 moments we ever know are when we entirely forget ourselves.
8 Work of your own free will, not from duty. We have no duty. This 9 world is just a gymnasium in which we play; our life is an eternal 10 holiday.

11 The whole secret of existence is to have no fear. Never fear 12 what will become of you, depend on no one. Only the moment you 13 reject all help are you free. The full sponge can absorb no more.

14 Even fighting in self-defence is wrong, though it is higher 15 than fighting in aggression. There is no "righteous" indignation, 16 because indignation comes from not recognising sameness in all 17 things.

19 Sunday, July 14.

20 Philosophy in India means that through which we see God, 21 the rationale of religion; so no Hindu would ever ask for a link 22 between religion and philosophy.

23 Concrete, generalised, abstract are the three stages in the 24 process of philosophy. The highest abstraction in which all things 25 agree is the One. In religion we have first, symbols and forms; next, 26 mythology; and last, philosophy. The first two are for the time 27 being; philosophy is the underlying basis of all, and the others are 28 only stepping stones in the struggle to reach the Ultimate.

29 In Western religion the idea is that without the New 30 Testament and Christ there could be no religion. A similar belief 31 exists in Judaism with regard to Moses and the Prophets, because 32 these religions are dependent upon mythology only. Real religion, 33 the highest, rises above mythology; it can never rest upon that.
34 Modern science has really made the foundations of religion strong.
35 That the whole universe is one, is scientifically demonstrable. What 36 the metaphysicians call "being", the physicist calls "matter", but 37 there is no real fight between the two, for both are one. Though an 38 atom is invisible, unthinkable, yet in it are the whole power and 39 potency of the universe. That is exactly what the Vedantist says of 40 Atman. All sects are really saying the same thing in different words.

41 Vedanta and modern science both posit a self-evolving 42 Cause. In Itself are all the causes. Take for example the potter 43 shaping a pot. The potter is the primal cause, the clay the material 44 cause, and the wheel the instrumental cause; but the Atman is all 45 three. Atman is cause and manifestation too. The Vedantist says the 46 universe is not real, it is only apparent. Nature is God seen through 47 nescience. The Pantheists say, God has become nature or this 48 world; the Advaitists affirm that God is appearing as this world, but 49 He is not this world.

1 We can only know experience as a mental process, a fact in 2 the mind as well as a mark in the brain. We cannot push the brain 3 back or forward, but we can the mind; it can stretch over all time-- 4 past, present, and future; and so facts in the mind are eternally 5 preserved. All facts are already generalised in mind, which is 6 omnipresent.¹⁶⁰

7 Kant's great achievement was the discovery that "time, 8 space, and causation are modes of thought," but Vedanta taught 9 this ages ago and called it "Maya." Schopenhauer stands on reason 10 only and rationalises the Vedas. . . . Shankara maintained the 11 orthodoxy of the Vedas.

12 "Treeness" or the idea of "tree", found out among trees is 13 knowledge, and the highest knowledge is One. . . .

14 Personal God is the last generalisation of the universe, only 15 hazy, not clear-cut and philosophic. . . .

16 Unity is self-evolving, out of which everything comes. . . .

17 Physical science is to find out facts, metaphysics is the 18 thread to bind the flowers into a bouquet. Every abstraction is 19 metaphysical; even putting manure at the root of a tree involves a 20 process of abstraction. . . .

21 Religion includes the concrete, the more generalised and the 22 ultimate unity. Do not stick to particularisations. Get to the 23 principle, to the One. . . .

24 Devils are machines of darkness, angels are machines of 25 light; but both are machines. Man alone is alive. Break the machine, 26 strike the balance,¹⁶¹ and then man can become free. This is the 27 only world where man can work out his salvation.

28 "Whom the Self chooses" is true. Election is true, but put it 29 within. As an external and fatalistic doctrine, it is horrible.

31 Monday, July 15.

32 Where there is polyandry, as in Tibet, women are physically
33 stronger than the men. When the English go there, these women 34 carry large men up the mountains.

35 In Malabar, although of course polyandry does not obtain 36 there, the women lead in everything. Exceptional cleanliness is 37 apparent everywhere and there is the greatest impetus to learning.
38 When I myself was in that country, I met many women who spoke 39 good Sanskrit, while in the rest of India not one woman in a million 40 can speak it. Mastery elevates, and servitude debases. Malabar has 41 never been conquered either by the Portuguese or by the

1 ¹⁶⁰ ?As the entire creation existing in space, time, and causation can never exist 2 beyond mind or memory, manifesting itself as thinking, feeling, and willing, the 3 whole of space, time, and causation must have to be in it. Hence mind is 4 omnipresent. Individual mind is a portion of the omnipresent or universal mind.
5

6 ¹⁶¹ ?Find out that the relationship between yourself and the machine is as 7 between a worker and his instrument. Never identify yourself with it.

1 Mussulmans.

2 The Dravidians were a non-Aryan race of Central Asia who 3 preceded the Aryans, and those of Southern India were the most 4 civilised. Women with them stood higher than men. They 5 subsequently divided, some going to Egypt, others to Babylonia, 6 and the rest remaining in India.

8 Tuesday, July 16. (Shankara)

9 The "unseen cause"¹⁶² leads us to sacrifice and worship, 10 which in turn produce seen results; but to attain liberation we must 11 first hear, then think or reason, and then meditate upon Brahman.

12 The result of works and the result of knowledge are two 13 different things. "Do" and "Do not do" are the background of all 14 morality, but they really belong only to the body and the mind. All 15 happiness and misery are inextricably connected with the senses, 16 and body is necessary to experience them. The higher the body, the 17 higher the standard of virtue, even up to Brahma; but all have 18 bodies. As long as there is a body, there must be pleasure and pain; 19 only when one has got rid of the body can one escape them. The 20 Atman is bodiless, says Shankara.

21 No law can make you free, you are free. Nothing can give 22 you freedom, if you have it not already. The Atman is self-illuminated.
23 Cause and effect do not reach there, and this disembodiedness is 24 freedom. Beyond what was, or is, or is to be, is Brahman. As an 25 effect, freedom would have no value; it would be a compound, and 26 as such would contain the seeds of bondage. It is the one real 27 factor, not to be attained, but the real nature of the soul.

28 Work and worship, however, are necessary to take away the 29 veil, to lift off the bondage and illusion. They do not give us 30 freedom; but all the same, without effort on our own part we do not 31 open our eyes and see what we are. Shankara says further that 32 Advaita-Vedanta is the crowning glory of the Vedas; but the lower 33 Vedas are also necessary, because they teach work and worship, 34 and through these many come to the Lord. Others may come 35 without any help but Advaita. Work and worship lead to the same 36 result as Advaita.

37 Books cannot teach God, but they can destroy ignorance;
38 their action is negative. To hold to the books and at the same time 39 open the way to freedom is Shankara's great achievement. But after 40 all, it is a kind of hair-splitting. Give man first the concrete, then 41 raise him to the highest by slow degrees. This is the effort of the 42 various religions and explains their existence and why each is 43 suited to some stage of development. The very books are a part of 44 the ignorance they help to dispel. Their duty is to drive out the 45 ignorance that has come upon knowledge. "Truth shall drive out 46 untruth." You are free and cannot be made so. So long as you have a 47 creed, you have no God. "He who knows he knows, knows nothing."
48 Who can know the Knower? There are two eternal facts in 1 ¹⁶² ?Or mass of subtle impressions.

2

1 existence, God and the universe, the former unchangeable, the 2 latter changeable. The world exists eternally. Where your mind
3 cannot grasp the amount of change, you call it eternally. . . . You see 4 the stone or the bas-relief on it, but not both at once; yet both are 5 one.

6 Can you make yourself at rest even for a second? All Yogis 7 say you can. . . .

8 The greatest sin is to think yourself weak. No one is greater:
9 Realise you are Brahman. Nothing has power except what you give 10 it. We are beyond the sun, the stars, the universe. Teach the 11 Godhood of man. Deny evil, create none. Stand up and say, I am the 12 master, the master of all. We forge the chain, and we alone can 13 break it.

14 No action can give you freedom; only knowledge can make 15 you free, Knowledge is irresistible; the mind cannot take it or reject 16 it. When it comes the mind has to accept it; so it is not a work of the 17 mind; only, its expression comes in the mind.

18 Work or worship is to bring you back to your own nature. It is 19 an entire illusion that the Self is the body; so even while living here 20 in the body, we can be free. The body has nothing in common with 21 the Self. Illusion is taking the real for the unreal--not "nothing at 22 all".

23
24 Wednesday, July 17.

25 Ramanuja divides the universe into Chit, Achit, and Ishvara-- 26 man, nature, and God; conscious, subconscious, and 27 superconscious. Shankara, on the contrary, says that Chit, the soul, 28 is the same as God. God is truth, is knowledge, is infinity; these 29 are not qualities. Any thought of God is a qualification, and all that 30 can be said of Him is "Om tat sat".

31 Shankara further asks, can you see existence separate from 32 everything else? Where is the differentiation between two objects?
33 Not in sense-perception, else all would be one in it. We have to 34 perceive in sequence. In getting knowledge of what a thing is, we 35 get also something which it is not. The differentiae are in the 36 memory and are got by comparison with what is stored there.
37 Difference is not in the nature of a thing, it is in the brain.
38 Homogeneous one is outside, differentiae are inside (in the mind); 39 so the idea of "many" is the creation of the mind.

40 Differentiae become qualities when they are separate but 41 joined in one object. We cannot say positively what differentiation 42 is. All that we see and feel about things is pure and simple 43 existence, "isness". All else is in us. Being is the only positive proof 44 we have of anything. All differentiation is really "secondary reality", 45 as the snake in the rope, because the serpent, too, had a certain 46 reality, in that something was seen although misapprehended.
47 When the knowledge of the rope becomes negative, the knowledge 48 of the snake becomes positive, and vice versa; but the fact that you 49 see only one does not prove that the other is non-existent. The idea

1 of the world is an obstruction covering the idea of God and is to be 2 removed, but it does have an existence.

3 Shankara says again, perception is the last proof of 4 existence. It is self-effulgent and self-conscious, because to go 5 beyond the senses we should still need perception. Perception is 6 independent of the senses, of all instruments, unconditioned. There 7 can be no perception without consciousness; perception has self-8 luminosity, which in a lesser degree is called consciousness. Not 9 one act of perception can be unconscious; in fact, consciousness is 10 the nature of perception. Existence and perception are one thing, 11 not two things joined together. That which needs no cause is 12 infinite; so, as perception is the last proof of itself, it is eternal. It is 13 always subjective; perception itself is its own perceiver. Perception 14 is not in the mind, but perception brings mind. It is absolute, the 15 only knower, so perception is really the Atman. Perception itself 16 perceives, but the Atman cannot be a knower, because a "knower" 17 becomes such by the action of knowledge; but, Shankara says, "This 18 Atman is not I", because the consciousness "I am" (Aham) is not in 19 the Atman. We are but the reflections of that Atman; and Atman and 20 Brahman are one.

21 When you talk and think of the Absolute, you have to do it in 22 the relative; so all these logical arguments apply. In Yoga, 23 perception and realisation are one. Vishishtadvaita, of which 24 Ramanuja is the exponent, is seeing partial unity and is a step 25 toward Advaita. Vishishta means differentiation. Prakriti is the 26 nature of the world, and change comes upon it. Changeful thoughts 27 expressed in changeful words can never prove the Absolute. You 28 reach only something that is minus certain qualities, not Brahman 29 Itself; only a verbal unification, the highest abstraction, but not the 30 non-existence of the relative.

32 Thursday, July 18. (The lesson today was mainly Shankara's 33 argument against the conclusion of the Sankhya philosophy.)

34 The Sankhyas say that consciousness is a compound, and 35 beyond that, the last analysis gives us the Purusha, Witness, but 36 that there are many Purushas--each of us is one. Advaita, on the 37 contrary, affirms that Purushas can be only One, that Purusha 38 cannot be conscious, unconscious, or have any qualification, for 39 either these qualities would bind, or they would eventually cease; 40 so the One must be without any qualities, even knowledge, and It 41 cannot be the cause of the universe or of anything. "In the 42 beginning, existence only, One without a second", says the Vedas.

44 The presence of Sattva with knowledge does not prove that 45 Sattva is the cause of knowledge; on the contrary, Sattva calls out 46 what was already existing in man, as the fire heats an iron ball 47 placed near it by arousing the heat latent in it, not by entering into 48 the ball.

49 Shankara says, knowledge is not a bondage, because it is the 50 nature of God. The world ever is, whether manifested or 1 unmanifested; so an eternal object exists.

2 Jnana-bala-kriya (knowledge, power, activity) is God.

1 Nor does He need form, because the finite only needs form
2 to interpose as an obstruction to catch and hold infinite knowledge; 3 but God really needs no such help. There is no "moving soul", there 4 is only one Atman. Jiva (individual soul) is the conscious ruler of this 5 body, in whom the five life principles come into unity, and yet that 6 very Jiva is the Atman, because all is Atman. What you think about it 7 is your delusion and not in the Jiva. You are God, and whatever else 8 you may think is wrong. You must worship the Self in Krishna, not 9 Krishna as Krishna. Only by worshipping the Self can freedom be 10 won. Even personal God is but the Self objectified. "Intense search 11 after my own reality is Bhakti", says Shankara.

12 All the means we take to reach God are true; it is only like 13 trying to find the pole-star by locating it through the stars that are 14 around it.

15 The Bhagavad Gita is the best authority on Vedanta.

16
17 Friday, July 19.

18 So long as I say "you", I have the right to speak of God
19 protecting us. When I see another, I must take all the consequences 20 and put in the third, the ideal, which stands between us; that is the 21 apex of the triangle. The vapour becomes snow, then water, then 22 Ganga; but when it is vapour, there is no Ganga, and when it is 23 water, we think of no vapour in it. The idea of creation or change is 24 inseparably connected with will. So long as we perceive this world 25 in motion, we have to conceive will behind it. Physics proves the 26 utter delusion of the senses; nothing really is as we see, hear, feel, 27 smell, taste it. Certain vibrations producing certain results affect 28 our senses; we know only relative truth.

29 The Sanskrit word for truth is "isness" (Sat). From our 30 present standpoint, this world appears to us as will and 31 consciousness. Personal God is as much an entity for Himself as we 32 are for ourselves, and no more. God can also be seen as a form, just 33 as we are seen. As men, we must have a God; as God, we need 34 none. This is why Shri Ramakrishna constantly saw the Divine 35 Mother ever present with him, more real than any other thing
36 around him; but in Samadhi all went but the Self. Personal God 37 comes nearer and nearer until He melts away, and there is no more 38 Personal God and no more "I", all is merged in Self.

39 Consciousness is a bondage. The argument from design 40 claims that intelligence precedes form; but if intelligence is the 41 cause of anything, it itself is in its turn an effect. It is Maya. God 42 creates us, and we create God, and this is Maya. The circle is 43 unbroken; mind creates body, and body creates mind; the egg 44 brings the chicken, the chicken the egg; the tree the seed, the seed 45 the tree. The world is neither entirely differentiated nor yet entirely 46 homogeneous. Man is free and must rise above both sides. Both are 47 right in their place; but to reach truth, "isness", we must transcend 48 all that we now know of existence, will, consciousness, doing, 49 going, knowing. There is no real individuality of the Jiva (separate 50 soul); eventually it, as a compound, will go to pieces. Only that

1 which is beyond further analysis is "simple", and that alone is truth, 2 freedom, immortality, bliss. All struggles for the preservation of this 3 illusive individuality are really vices. All struggles to lose this 4 individuality are virtues. Everything in the universe is trying to 5 break down this individuality, either consciously or unconsciously.
6 All morality is based upon the destruction of separateness or false
7 individuality, because that is the cause of all sin. Morality exists 8 first; later, religion codifies it. Customs come first, and then 9 mythology follows to explain them. While things are happening, 10 they come by a higher law than reasoning; that arises later in the 11 attempt to understand them. Reasoning is not the motive power, it 12 is "chewing the cud" afterwards. Reason is the historian of the 13 actions of the human being.

14 Buddha was a great Vedantist (for Buddhism was really only 15 an offshoot of Vedanta), and Shankara is often called a "hidden 16 Buddhist". Buddha made the analysis, Shankara made the synthesis 17 out of it. Buddha never bowed down to anything--neither Veda, nor 18 caste, nor priest, nor custom. He fearlessly reasoned so far as 19 reason could take him. Such a fearless search for truth and such 20 love for every living thing the world has never seen. Buddha was 21 the Washington of the religious world; he conquered a throne only 22 to give it to the world, as Washington did to the American people.
23 He sought nothing for himself.

25 Saturday, July 20.

26 Perception is our only real knowledge or religion. Talking 27 about it for ages will never make us know our soul. There is no 28 difference between theories and atheism. In fact, the atheist is the 29 truer man. Every step I take in the light is mine for ever. When you 30 go to a country and see it, then it is yours. We have each to see for 31 ourselves; teachers can only "bring the food", we must eat it to be 32 nourished. Argument can never prove God save as a logical 33 conclusion.

34 It is impossible to find God outside of ourselves. Our own 35 souls contribute all the divinity that is outside of us. We are the 36 greatest temple. The objectification is only a faint imitation of what 37 we see within ourselves.

38 Concentration of the powers of the mind is our only 39 instrument to help us see God. If you know one soul (your own), you 40 know all souls, past, present, and to come. The will concentrates 41 the mind, certain things excite and control this will, such as reason, 42 love, devotion, breathing. The concentrated mind is a lamp that 43 shows us every corner of the soul.

44 No one method can suit all. These different methods are not 45 steps necessary to be taken one after another. Ceremonials are the 46 lowest form; next God external, and after that God internal. In some 47 cases gradation may be needed, but in many only one way is 48 required. It would be the height of folly to say to everyone, "You 49 must pass through Karma and Bhakti before you can reach Jnana."

50 Stick to your reason until you reach something higher; and 1 you will know it to be higher, because it will not jar with reason.

2 The stage beyond consciousness is inspiration (Samadhi); but never 3 mistake hysterical trances for the real thing. It is a terrible thing to 4 claim this inspiration falsely, to mistake instinct for inspiration.
5 There is no external test for inspiration, we know it ourselves; our 6 guardian against mistake is negative--the voice of reason. All 7 religion is going beyond reason, but reason is the only guide to get 8 there. Instinct is like ice, reason is the water, and inspiration is the 9 subtlest form or vapour; one follows the other. Everywhere is this 10 eternal sequence--unconsciousness, consciousness, intelligence-- 11 matter, body, mind--and to us it seems as if the chain began with the 12 particular link we first lay hold of. Arguments on both sides are of 13 equal weight, and both are true. We must reach beyond both, to 14 where there is neither the one nor the other. These successions are 15 all Maya.

16 Religion is above reason, supernatural. Faith is not belief, it 17 is the grasp on the Ultimate, an illumination. First hear, then reason 18 and find out all that reason can give about the Atman; let the flood 19 of reason flow over It, then take what remains. If nothing remains, 20 thank God you have escaped a superstition. When you have 21 determined that nothing can take away the Atman, that It stands 22 every test, hold fast to this and teach it to all. Truth cannot be 23 partial; it is for the good of all. Finally, in perfect rest and peace 24 meditate upon It, concentrate your mind upon It, make yourself one 25 with It. Then no speech is needed; silence will carry the truth. Do 26 not spend your energy in talking, but meditate in silence; and do 27 not let the rush of the outside world disturb you. When your mind is 28 in the highest state, you are unconscious of it. Accumulate power in 29 silence and become a dynamo of spirituality. What can a beggar 30 give? Only a king can give, and he only when he wants nothing 31 himself.

32 Hold your money merely as custodian for what is God's. Have 33 no attachment for it. Let name and fame and money go; they are a 34 terrible bondage. Feel the wonderful atmosphere of freedom. You 35 are free, free, free! Oh, blessed am I! Freedom am I! I am the 36 Infinite! In my soul I can find no beginning and no end. All is my 37 Self. Say this unceasingly.

39 Sunday, July 21. (Patanjali's Yoga Aphorisms)

40 Yoga is the science of restraining the Chitta (mind) from 41 breaking into Vrittis (modifications). Mind is a mixture of sensation 42 and feelings, or action and reaction; so it cannot be permanent. The 43 mind has a fine body and through this it works on the gross body.
44 Vedanta says that behind the mind is the real Self. It accepts the 45 other two, but posits a third, the Eternal, the Ultimate, the last 46 analysis, the unit, where there is no further compound. Birth is re- 47 composition, death is de-composition, and the final analysis is 48 where Atman is found; there being no further division possible, the 49 perdurable is reached.

50 The whole ocean is present at the back of each wave, and all 51 manifestations are waves, some very big, some small; yet all are the

1 ocean in their essence, the whole ocean; but as waves each is a
2 part. When the waves are stilled, then all is one; "a spectator 3 without a spectacle", says Patanjali. When the mind is active, the 4 Atman is mixed up with it. The repetition of old forms in quick 5 succession is memory.

6 Be unattached. Knowledge is power, and getting one you get 7 the other. By knowledge you can even banish the material world.
8 When you can mentally get rid of one quality after another from any 9 object until all are gone, you can at will make the object itself 10 disappear from your consciousness.

11 Those who are ready, advance very quickly and can become 12 Yogis in six months. The less developed may take several years; and 13 anyone by faithful work and by giving up everything else and 14 devoting himself solely to practice can reach the goal in twelve 15 years. Bhakti will bring you there without any of these mental 16 gymnastics, but it is a slower way.

17 Ishvara is the Atman as seen or grasped by mind. His highest 18 name is Om; so repeat it, meditate on it, and think of all its 19 wonderful nature and attributes. Repeating the Om continually is 20 the only true worship. It is not a word, it is God Himself.

21 Religion gives you nothing new; it only takes off obstacles
22 and lets you see your Self. Sickness is the first great obstacle; a 23 healthy body is the best instrument. Melancholy is an almost 24 insuperable barrier. If you have once known Brahman, never after 25 can you be melancholy. Doubt, want of perseverance, mistaken 26 ideas are other obstacles.

27 Pranas are subtle energies, sources of motion. There are ten 28 in all, five inward and five outward. One great current flows 29 upwards, and the other downwards. Pranayama is controlling the 30 Pranas through breathing. Breath is the fuel, Prana is the steam, 31 and the body is the engine. Pranayama has three parts, Puraka (in-32 breathing), Kumbhaka (holding the breath), Rechaka (out-33 breathing). . . .

34 The Guru is the conveyance in which the spiritual influence is 35 brought to you. Anyone can teach, but the spirit must be passed on 36 by the Guru to the Shishya (disciple), and that will fructify. The 37 relation between Shishyas is that of brotherhood, and this is 38 actually accepted by law in India. The Guru passes the thought 39 power, the Mantra, that he has received from those before him; and 40 nothing can be done without a Guru. In fact, great danger ensues.
41 Usually without a Guru, these Yoga practices lead to lust; but with 42 one, this seldom happens. Each Ishta has a Mantra. The Ishta is the 43 ideal peculiar to the particular worshipper; the Mantra is the 44 external word to express it. Constant repetition of the word helps to 45 fix the ideal firmly in the mind. This method of worship prevails 46 among religious devotees all over India.

48 Tuesday, July 23. (Bhagavad-Gita, Karma-Yoga)

49 To attain liberation through work, join yourself to work but

1 without desire, looking for no result. Such work leads to knowledge, 2 which in turn brings emancipation. To give up work before you
3 know, leads to misery. Work done for the Self gives no bondage.
4 Neither desire pleasure nor fear pain from work. It is the mind and 5 body that work, not I. Tell yourself this unceasingly and realise it.
6 Try not to know that you work.

7 Do all as a sacrifice or offering to the Lord. Be in the world, 8 but not of it, like the lotus leaf whose roots are in the mud but 9 which remains always pure. Let your love go to all, whatever they 10 do to you. A blind man cannot see colour, so how can we see evil 11 unless it is in us? We compare what we see outside with what we 12 find in ourselves and pronounce judgment accordingly. If we are 13 pure, we cannot see impurity. It may exist, but not for us. See only 14 God in every man, woman and child; see it by the antarjyotis, "inner 15 light", and seeing that, we can see naught else. Do not want this 16 world, because what you desire you get. Seek the Lord and the 17 Lord only. The more power there is, the more bondage, the more 18 fear. How much more afraid and miserable are we than the ant! Get 19 out of it all and come to the Lord. Seek the science of the maker 20 and not that of the made.

21 "I am the doer and the deed." "He who can stem the tide of 22 lust and anger is a great Yogi."

23 "Only by practice and non-attachment can we conquer mind."
24 . . .

25 Our Hindu ancestors sat down and thought on God and 26 morality, and so have we brains to use for the same ends; but in the 27 rush of trying to get gain, we are likely to lose them again.

28 The body has in itself a certain power of curing itself and 29 many things can rouse this curative power into action, such as 30 mental conditions, or medicine, or exercise, etc. As long as we are 31 disturbed by physical conditions, so long we need the help of 32 physical agencies. Not until we have got rid of bondage to the 33 nerves, can we disregard them.

34 There is the unconscious mind, but it is below consciousness, 35 which is just one part of the human organism. Philosophy is guess-36 work about the mind. Religion is based upon sense contact, upon 37 seeing, the only basis of knowledge. What comes in contact with the 38 superconscious mind is fact. Aptas are those who have "sensed" 39 religion. The proof is that if you follow their method, you too will 40 see. Each science requires its own particular method and 41 instruments. An astronomer cannot show you the rings of Saturn by 42 the aid of all the pots and pans in the kitchen. He needs a 43 telescope. So, to see the great facts of religion, the methods of 44 those who have already seen must be followed. The greater the 45 science the more varied the means of studying it. Before we came 46 into the world, God provided the means to get out; so all we have to 47 do is to find the means. But do not fight over methods. Look only for 48 realisation and choose the best method you can find to suit you. Eat 49 the mangoes and let the rest quarrel over the basket. See Christ, 50 then you will be a Christian. All else is talk; the less talking the 51 better.

1 The message makes the messenger. The Lord makes the 2 temple; not vice versa.

3 Learn until "the glory of the Lord shines through your face", 4 as it shone through the face of Shvetaketu.

5 Guess against guess makes fight; but talk of what you have 6 been, and no human heart can resist it. Paul was converted against 7 his will by realisation.

8
9 Tuesday afternoon. (After dinner there was a short 10 conversation in the course of which the Swami said:)

11 Delusion creates delusion. Delusion creates itself and 12 destroys itself, such is Maya. All knowledge (so-called), being based 13 on Maya, is a vicious circle, and in time that very knowledge 14 destroys itself. "Let go the rope", delusion cannot touch the Atman.
15 When we lay hold of the rope--identify ourselves with Maya--she has 16 power over us. Let go of it, be the Witness only, then you can 17 admire the picture of the universe undisturbed.

19 Wednesday, July 24.

20 The powers acquired by the practice of Yoga are not 21 obstacles for the Yogi who is perfect, but are apt to be so for the 22 beginner, through the wonder and pleasure excited by their 23 exercise. Siddhis are the powers which mark success in the 24 practice; and they may be produced by various means, such as the 25 repetition of a Mantra, by Yoga practice, meditation, fasting, or 26 even by the use of herbs and drugs. The Yogi, who has conquered 27 all interest in the powers acquired and who renounces all virtue 28 arising from his actions, comes into the "cloud of virtue" (name of 29 one of the states of Samadhi) and radiates holiness as a cloud rains 30 water.

31 Meditation is on a series of objects, concentration is on one 32 object.

33 Mind is cognised by the Atman, but it is not self-illuminated.
34 The Atman cannot be the cause of anything. How can it be? How 35 can the Purusha join itself to Prakriti (nature)? It does not; it is only 36 illusively thought to do so. . . .

37 Learn to help without pitying or feeling that there is any 38 misery. Learn to be the same to enemy and to friend; then when you 39 can do that and no longer have any desire, the goal is attained.

40 Cut down the banyan tree of desire with the axe of non-41 attachment, and it will vanish utterly. It is all illusion. "He from 42 whom blight and delusion have fallen, he who has conquered the 43 evils of association, he alone is azad (free)."

44 To love anyone personally is bondage. Love all alike, then all 45 desires fall off.

46 Time, the "eater of everything", comes, and all has to go.
47 Why try to improve the earth, to paint the butterfly? It all has to go

1 at last. Do not be mere white mice in a treadmill, working always 2 and never accomplishing anything. Every desire is fraught with evil, 3 whether the desire itself be good or evil. It is like a dog jumping for 4 a piece of meat which is ever receding from his reach, and dying a 5 dog's death at last. Do not be like that. Cut off all desire.

6 Paramatman as ruling Maya is Ishvara; Paramatman as 7 under Maya is Jivatman. Maya is the sum total of manifestation and 8 will utterly vanish.

9 Tree-nature is Maya, it is really God-nature which we see 10 under the veil of Maya. The "why" of anything is in Maya. To ask 11 why Maya came is a useless question, because the answer can 12 never be given in Maya, and beyond Maya who will ask it? Evil 13 creates "why", not "why" the evil, and it is evil that asks "why".
14 Illusion destroys illusion. Reason itself, being based upon 15 contradiction, is a circle and has to kill itself. Sense-perception is an 16 inference, and yet all inference comes from perception.

17 Ignorance reflecting the light of God is seen; but by itself it is 18 zero. The cloud would not appear except as the sunlight falls on it.

19 There were four travellers who came to a high wall. The first 20 one climbed with difficulty to the top and without looking back, 21 jumped over. The second clambered up the wall, looked over, and 22 with a shout of delight disappeared. The third in his turn climbed to 23 the top, looked where his companions had gone, laughed with joy, 24 and followed them. But the fourth one came back to tell what had 25 happened to his fellow-travellers. The sign to us that there is 26 something beyond is the laugh that rings back from those great 27 ones who have plunged from Maya's wall.

28 Separating ourselves from the Absolute and attributing 29 certain qualities to It give us Ishvara. It is the Reality of the 30 universe as seen through our mind. Personal devil is the misery of 31 the world seen through the minds of the superstitious.

32
33 Thursday, July 25. (Patanjali's Yoga Aphorisms)

34 "Things may be done, caused to be done, or approved of", 35 and the effect upon us is nearly equal.

36 Complete continence gives great intellectual and spiritual 37 power. The Brahmacharin must be sexually pure in thought, word, 38 and deed. Lose regard for the body; get rid of the consciousness of 39 it so far as possible.

40 Asana (posture) must be steady and pleasant; and constant 41 practice, identifying the mind with the Infinite, will bring this about.

42 Continual attention to one object is contemplation.

43 When a stone is thrown into still water, many circles are 44 made, each distinct but all interacting; so with our minds; only in us 45 the action is unconscious, while with the Yogi it is conscious. We are 46 spiders in a web, and Yoga practice will enable us like the spider to 47 pass along any strand of the web we please. Non-Yogis are bound to 48 the particular spot where they are.

1 To injure another creates bondage and hides the truth.
2 Negative virtues are not enough; we have to conquer Maya, and 3 then she will follow us. We only deserve things when they cease to 4 bind us. When the bondage ceases, really and truly, all things come 5 to us. Only those who want nothing are masters of nature.

6 Take refuge in some soul who has already broken his 7 bondage, and in time he will free you through his mercy. Higher still 8 is to take refuge in the Lord (Ishvara), but it is the most difficult; 9 only once in a century can one be found who has really done it. Feel 10 nothing, know nothing, do nothing, have nothing, give up all to God, 11 and say utterly, "Thy will be done". We only dream this bondage.
12 Wake up and let it go. Take refuge in God, only so can we cross the 13 desert of Maya. "Let go thy hold, Sannyasin bold, say, Om tat sat, 14 Om!"

15 It is our privilege to be allowed to be charitable, for only so 16 can we grow. The poor man suffers that we may be helped; let the 17 giver kneel down and give thanks, let the receiver stand up and 18 permit. See the Lord back of every being and give to Him. When we 19 cease to see evil, the world must end for us, since to rid us of that 20 mistake is its only object. To think there is any imperfection creates 21 it. Thoughts of strength and perfection alone can cure it. Do what 22 good you can, some evil will inhere in it; but do all without regard 23 to personal result, give up all results to the Lord, then neither good 24 nor evil will affect you.

25 Doing work is not religion, but work done rightly leads to 26 freedom. In reality all pity is darkness, because whom to pity? Can 27 you pity God? And is there anything else? Thank God for giving you 28 this world as a moral gymnasium to help your development, but 29 never imagine you can help the world. Be grateful to him who 30 curses you, for he gives you a mirror to show what cursing is, also a 31 chance to practise self-restraint; so bless him and be glad. Without 32 exercise, power cannot come out; without the mirror, we cannot see 33 ourselves.

34 Unchaste imagination is as bad as unchaste action.
35 Controlled desire leads to the highest result. Transform the sexual 36 energy into spiritual energy, but do not emasculate, because that is 37 throwing away the power. The stronger this force, the more can be 38 done with it. Only a powerful current of water can do hydraulic 39 mining.

40 What we need today is to know there is a God and that we 41 can see and feel Him here and now. A Chicago professor says, "Take 42 care of this world, God will take care of the next." What nonsense!
43 If we can take care of this world, what need of a gratuitous Lord to 44 take care of the other!

45
46 Friday, July 26. (Brihadaranyakopanishad.)

47 Love all things only through and for the Self. Yajnavalkya 48 said to Maitreyi, his wife, "Through the Atman we know all things."
49 The Atman can never be the object of knowledge, nor can the 50 Knower be known. He who knows he is the Atman, he is law unto

1 himself. He knows he is the universe and its creator. . . .

2 Perpetuating old myths in the form of allegories and giving 3 them undue importance fosters superstition and is really weakness.
4 Truth must have no compromise. Teach truth and make no apology
5 for any superstition; neither drag truth to the level of the listener.

6

7 Saturday, July 27. (Kathopanishad)

8 Learn not the truth of the Self save from one who has 9 realised it; in all others it is mere talk. Realisation is beyond virtue 10 and vice, beyond future and past; beyond all the pairs of opposites.
11 "The stainless one sees the Self, and an eternal calm comes in the 12 Soul." Talking, arguing, and reading books, the highest flights of the 13 intellect, the Vedas themselves, all these cannot give knowledge of 14 the Self.

15 In us are two--The God-soul and the man-soul. The sages 16 know that the latter is but the shadow, that the former is the only 17 real Sun.

18 Unless we join the mind with the senses, we get no report 19 from eyes, nose, ears, etc. The external organs are used by the 20 power of the mind. Do not let the senses go outside, and then you 21 can get rid of body and the external world.

22 This very "x" which we see here as an external world, the 23 departed see as heaven or hell according to their own mental 24 states. Here and hereafter are two dreams, the latter modelled on 25 the former; get rid of both, all is omnipresent, all is now. Nature, 26 body, and mind go to death, not we; we never go nor come. The 27 man Swami Vivekananda is in nature, is born, and dies; but the self 28 which we see as Swami Vivekananda is never born and never dies.
29 It is the eternal and unchangeable Reality.

30 The power of the mind is the same whether we divide it into 31 five senses or whether we see only one. A blind man says, 32 "Everything has a distinct echo, so I clap my hands and get that 33 echo, and then I can tell everything that is around me." So in a fog 34 the blind man can safely lead the seeing man. Fog or darkness 35 makes no difference to him.

36 Control the mind, cut off the senses, then you are a Yogi; 37 after that, all the rest will come. Refuse to hear, to see, to smell, to 38 taste; take away the mental power from the external organs. You 39 continually do it unconsciously as when your mind is absorbed; so 40 you can learn to do it consciously. The mind can put the senses 41 where it pleases. Get rid of the fundamental superstition that we 42 are obliged to act through the body. We are not. Go into your own 43 room and get the Upanishads out of your own Self. You are the 44 greatest book that ever was or ever will be, the infinite depository 45 of all that is. Until the inner teacher opens, all outside teaching is in 46 vain. It must lead to the opening of the book of the heart to have 47 any value.

48 The will is the "still small voice", the real Ruler who says "do" 49 and "do not". It has done all that binds us. The ignorant will leads to 1 bondage, the knowing will can free us. The will can be made strong 2 in thousands of ways; every way is a kind of Yoga, but the 3 systematised Yoga accomplishes the work more quickly. Bhakti, 4 Karma, Raja, and Jnana-Yoga get over the ground more effectively.

5 Put on all powers, philosophy, work, prayer, meditation--crowd all 6 sail, put on all head of steam--reach the goal. The sooner, the better.
7 . . .

8 Baptism is external purification symbolising the internal. It is 9 of Buddhist origin.

10 The Eucharist is a survival of a very ancient custom of savage
11 tribes. They sometimes killed their great chiefs and ate their flesh 12 in order to obtain in themselves the qualities that made their 13 leaders great. They believed that in such a way the characteristics 14 that made the chief brave and wise would become theirs and make 15 the whole tribe brave and wise, instead of only one man. Human 16 sacrifice was also a Jewish idea and one that clung to them despite 17 many chastisements from Jehovah. Jesus was gentle and loving, but 18 to fit him into Jewish beliefs, the idea of human sacrifice, in the 19 form of atonement or as a human scapegoat, had to come in. This 20 cruel idea made Christianity depart from the teachings of Jesus 21 himself and develop a spirit of persecution and bloodshed. . . .

22 Say, "it is my nature", never say, "It is my duty"--to do 23 anything whatever.

24 "Truth alone triumphs, not untruth." Stand upon Truth, and 25 you have got God.

26 From the earliest times in India the Brahmin caste have held 27 themselves beyond all law; they claim to be gods. They are poor, but 28 their weakness is that they seek power. Here are about sixty 29 millions of people who are good and moral and hold no property, 30 and they are what they are because from their birth they are taught 31 that they are above law, above punishment. They feel themselves to 32 be "twice-born", to be sons of God.

33 34 Sunday, July 28. (Avadhuta Gita or "Song of the Purified" by 35 Dattatreya ¹⁶³)

36 "All knowledge depends upon calmness of mind."

37 "He who has filled the universe, He who is Self in self, how 38 shall I salute Him!"

39 To know the Atman as my nature is both knowledge and 40 realisation. "I am He, there is not the least doubt of it."

41 "No thought, no word, no deed, creates a bondage for me. I 42 am beyond the senses, I am knowledge and bliss."

43 There is neither existence nor non-existence, all is Atman.
44 Shake off all ideas of relativity; shake off all superstitions; let caste 45 and birth and Devas and all else vanish. Why talk of being and 1 ¹⁶³ ?Dattatreya, the son of Atri and Anasuya, was an incarnation of Brahma, 2 Vishnu, and Shiva.

3

1 becoming? Give up talking of dualism and Advaitism! When were 2 you two, that you talk of two or one? The universe is this Holy One 3 and He alone. Talk not of Yoga to make you pure; you are pure by 4 your very nature. None can teach you.

5 Men like him who wrote this song are what keep religion
6 alive. They have actually realised; they care for nothing, feel 7 nothing done to the body, care not for heat and cold or danger or 8 anything. They sit still and enjoy the bliss of Atman, while red-hot 9 coals burn their body, and they feel them not.

10 "When the threefold bondage of knower, knowledge, and 11 known ceases, there is the Atman."

12 "Where the delusion of bondage and freedom ceases, there 13 the Atman is."

14 "What if you have controlled the mind, what if you have not?
15 What if you have money, what if you have not? You are the Atman 16 ever pure. Say, 'I am the Atman. No bondage ever came near me. I 17 am the changeless sky; clouds of belief may pass over me, but they 18 do not touch me.'"

19 "Burn virtue, burn vice. Freedom is baby talk. I am that 20 immortal Knowledge. I am that purity."

21 "No one was ever bound, none was ever free. There is none 22 but me. I am the Infinite, the Ever-free. Talk not to me! What can 23 change me, the essence of knowledge! Who can teach, who can be 24 taught?"

25 Throw argument, throw philosophy into the ditch.

26 "Only a slave sees slaves, the deluded delusion, the impure 27 impurity."

28 Place, time causation are all delusions. It is your disease that 29 you think you are bound and will be free.

30 You are the Unchangeable. Talk not. Sit down and let all 31 things melt away, they are but dreams. There is no differentiation, 32 no distinction, it is all superstition; therefore be silent and know 33 what you are.

34 "I am the essence of bliss." Follow no ideal, you are all there 35 is. Fear naught, you are the essence of existence. Be at peace. Do 36 not disturb yourself. You never were in bondage, you never were 37 virtuous or sinful. Get rid of all these delusions and be at peace.
38 Whom to worship? Who worships? All is the Atman. To speak, to 39 think is superstition. Repeat over and over, "I am Atman", "I am 40 Atman". Let everything else go.

42 Monday, July 29.

43 We sometimes indicate a thing by describing its 44 surroundings. When we say "Sachchidananda" (Existence-45 Knowledge-Bliss), we are merely indicating the shores of an 46 indescribable Beyond. Not even can we say "is" about it, for that too 47 is relative. Any imagination, any concept is in vain. Neti, neti ("Not 1 this, not this") is all that can be said, for even to think is to limit and 2 so to lose.

3 The senses cheat you day and night. Vedanta found that out
4 ages ago; modern science is just discovering the same fact. A 5 picture has only length and breadth, and the painter copies nature
6 in her cheating by artificially giving the appearance of depth. No
7 two people see the same world. The highest knowledge will show 8 you that there is no motion, no change in anything; that the very 9 idea of it is all Maya. Study nature as a whole, that is, study motion.
10 Mind and body are not our real self; both belong to nature, but 11 eventually we can know the ding an sich. Then mind and body
12 being transcended, all that they conceive goes. When you cease 13 utterly to know and see the world, then you realise Atman. The 14 superseding of relative knowledge is what we want.

15 There is no infinite mind or infinite knowledge, because both 16 mind and knowledge are limited. We are now seeing through a veil; 17 then we reach the "x", which is the Reality of all our knowing.

18 If we look at a picture through a pin-hole in a cardboard, we 19 get an utterly mistaken notion; yet what we see is really the picture.
20 As we enlarge the hole, we get a clearer and clearer idea. Out of 21 the reality we manufacture the different views in conformity with 22 our mistaken perceptions of name and form. When we throw away 23 the cardboard, we see the same picture, but we see it as it is. We 24 put in all the attributes, all the errors; the picture itself is unaltered 25 thereby. That is because Atman is the reality of all; all we see is 26 Atman, but not as we see it, as name and form; they are all in our 27 veil, in Maya.

28 They are like spots in the object-glass of a telescope, yet it is 29 the light of the sun that shows us the spots; we could not even see 30 the illusion save for the background of reality which is Brahman.
31 Swami Vivekananda is just the speck on the object-glass; I am 32 Atman, real, unchangeable, and that reality alone enables me to see 33 Swami Vivekananda. Atman is the essence of every hallucination;
34 but the sun is never identified with the spots on the glass, it only 35 shows them to us. Our actions, as they are evil or good, increase or 36 decrease the "spots"; but they never affect the God within us.
37 Perfectly cleanse the mind of spots and instantly we see, "I and my 38 father are one".

39 We first perceive, then reason later. We must have this 40 perception as a fact, and it is called religion, realisation. No matter 41 if one never heard of creed or prophet or book. Let him get this 42 realisation, and he needs no more. Cleanse the mind, this is all of 43 religion; and until we ourselves clear off the spots, we cannot see 44 the Reality as it is. The baby sees no sun; he has not yet the 45 measure of it in himself. Get rid of the defects within yourself, and 46 you will not be able to see any without. A baby sees robbery done, 47 and it means nothing to him. Once you find the hidden object in a 48 puzzle picture, you see it ever more; so when once you are free and 49 stainless, you see only freedom and purity in the world around. That 50 moment all the knots of the heart are cut asunder, all crooked 51 places are made straight, and this world vanishes as a dream. And 1 when we awake, we wonder how we ever came to dream such 2 trash!

3 "Getting whom, misery mountain high has no power to move 4 the soul."

5 With the axe of knowledge cut the wheels asunder, and the 6 Atman stands free, even though the old momentum carries on the 7 wheel of mind and body. The wheel can now only go straight, can 8 only do good. If that body does anything bad, know that the man is 9 not Jivanmukta; he lies if he makes that claim. But it is only when 10 the wheels have got a good straight motion (from cleansing the 11 mind) that the axe can be applied. All purifying action deals 12 conscious or unconscious blows on delusion. To call another a 13 sinner is the worst thing you can do. Good action done ignorantly 14 produces the same result and helps to break the bondage.

15 To identify the sun with the spots on the object-glass is the 16 fundamental error. Know the sun, the "I", to be ever unaffected by 17 anything, and devote yourself to cleansing the spots. Man is the 18 greatest being that ever can be. The highest worship there is, is to 19 worship man as Krishna, Buddha, Christ. What you want, you 20 create. Get rid of desire. . . .

21 The angels and the departed are all here, seeing this world 22 as heaven. The same "x" is seen by all according to their mental 23 attitude. The best vision to be had of the "x" is here on this earth.
24 Never want to go to heaven, that is the worst delusion. Even here, 25 too much wealth and grinding poverty are both bondages and hold 26 us back from religion. Three great gifts we have: first, a human 27 body. (The human mind is the nearest reflection of God, we are "His 28 own image".) Second, the desire to be free. Third, the help of a 29 noble soul, who has crossed the ocean of delusion, as a teacher.
30 When you have these three, bless the Lord; you are sure to be free.

31 What you only grasp intellectually may be overthrown by a 32 new argument; but what you realise is yours for ever. Talking, 33 talking religion is but little good. Put God behind everything--man, 34 animal, food, work; make this a habit.

35 Ingersoll once said to me: "I believe in making the most out 36 of this world, in squeezing the orange dry, because this world is all 37 we are sure of." I replied: "I know a better way to squeeze the 38 orange of this world than you do, and I get more out of it. I know I 39 cannot die, so I am not in a hurry; I know there is no fear, so I enjoy 40 the squeezing. I have no duty, no bondage of wife and children and 41 property; I can love all men and women. Everyone is God to me.
42 Think of the joy of loving man as God! Squeeze your orange this 43 way and get ten thousandfold more out of it. Get every single drop."

44 That which seems to be the will is the Atman behind, it is 45 really free.

47 Monday Afternoon.

48 Jesus was imperfect because he did not live up fully to his 49 own ideal, and above all because he did not give woman a place

1 equal to man. Women did everything for him, and yet he was so 2 bound by the Jewish custom that not one was made an apostle. Still 3 he was the greatest character next to Buddha, who in his turn was 4 not fully perfect. Buddha, however, recognised woman's right to an 5 equal place in religion, and his first and one of his greatest disciples
6 was his own wife, who became the head of the whole Buddhistic
7 movement among the women of India. But we ought not to criticise 8 these great ones, we should only look upon them as far above
9 ourselves. Nonetheless we must not pin our faith to any man, 10 however great; we too must become Buddhas and Christs.

11 No man should be judged by his defects. The great virtues a 12 man has are his especially, his errors are the common weaknesses 13 of humanity and should never be counted in estimating his 14 character.

15 Vira, the Sanskrit word for "heroic", is the origin of our word 16 "virtue", because in ancient times the best fighter was regarded as 17 the most virtuous man.

18
19 Tuesday, July 30.

20 Christs and Buddhas are simply occasions upon which to 21 objectify our own inner powers. We really answer our own prayers.

22 It is blasphemy to think that if Jesus had never been born, 23 humanity would not have been saved. It is horrible to forget thus 24 the divinity in human nature, a divinity that must come out. Never 25 forget the glory of human nature. We are the greatest God that ever 26 was or ever will be. Christs and Buddhas are but waves on the 27 boundless ocean which I am. Bow down to nothing but your own 28 higher Self. Until you know that you are that very God of gods, 29 there will never be any freedom for you.

30 All our past actions are really good, because they lead us to 31 what we ultimately become. Of whom to beg? I am the real 32 existence, and all else is a dream save as it is I. I am the whole 33 ocean; do not call the little wave you have made "I"; know it for 34 nothing but a wave. Satyakama (lover of truth) heard the inner 35 voice telling him, "You are the infinite, the universal is in you.
36 Control yourself and listen to the voice of your true Self."

37 The great prophets who do the fighting have to be less 38 perfect than those who live silent lives of holiness, thinking great 39 thoughts and so helping the world. These men, passing out one 40 after another, produce as final outcome the man of power who 41 preaches.

42 Knowledge exists, man only discovers it. The Vedas are the 43 eternal knowledge through which God created the world. They talk 44 high philosophy--the highest--and make this tremendous claim. . . .

45 Tell the truth boldly, whether it hurts or not. Never pander to 46 weakness. If truth is too much for intelligent people and sweeps 47 them away, let them go; the sooner the better. Childish ideas are for 48 babies and savages; and these are not all in the nursery and the 49 forests, some of them have fallen into the pulpits.

1 It is bad to stay in the church after you are grown up
2 spiritually. Come out and die in the open air of freedom.

3 All progression is in the relative world. The human form is 4 the highest and man the greatest being, because here and now we 5 can get rid of the relative world entirely, can actually attain 6 freedom, and this is the goal. Not only we can, but some have 7 reached perfection; so no matter what finer bodies come, they 8 could only be on the relative plane and could do no more than we, 9 for to attain freedom is all that can be done.

10 The angels never do wicked deeds, so they never get 11 punished and never get saved. Blows are what awaken us and help 12 to break the dream. They show us the insufficiency of this world 13 and make us long to escape, to have freedom. . . .

14 A thing dimly perceived we call by one name; the same thing 15 when fully perceived we call by another. The higher the moral 16 nature, the higher the perception and the stronger the will.

17 18 Tuesday Afternoon.

19 The reason of the harmony between thought and matter is 20 that they are two sides of one thing, call it "x", which divides itself 21 into the internal and the external.

22 The English word "paradise" comes from the Sanskrit para-
23 desa, which was taken over into the Persian language and means 24 literally "the land beyond", or the other world. The old Aryans 25 always believed in a soul, never that man was the body. Their 26 heavens and hells were all temporary, because no effect can outlast 27 its cause and no cause is eternal; therefore all effects must come to 28 an end.

29 The whole of the Vedanta Philosophy is in this story: Two 30 birds of golden plumage sat on the same tree. The one above, 31 serene, majestic, immersed in his own glory; the one below restless 32 and eating the fruits of the tree, now sweet, now bitter. Once he ate 33 an exceptionally bitter fruit, then he paused and looked up at the 34 majestic bird above; but he soon forgot about the other bird and 35 went on eating the fruits of the tree as before. Again he ate a bitter 36 fruit, and this time he hopped up a few boughs nearer to the bird at 37 the top. This happened many times until at last the lower bird came 38 to the place of the upper bird and lost himself. He found all at once 39 that there had never been two birds, but that he was all the time 40 that upper bird, serene, majestic, and immersed in his own glory.

42 Wednesday, July 31.

43 Luther drove a nail into religion when he took away
44 renunciation and gave us morality instead. Atheists and materialists 45 can have ethics, but only believers in the Lord can have religion.

46 The wicked pay the price of the great soul's holiness. Think 47 of that when you see a wicked man. Just as the poor man's labour 48 pays for the rich man's luxury, so is it in the spiritual world. The

1 terrible degradation of the masses in India is the price nature pays
2 for the production of great souls like Mirabai, Buddha, etc.¹⁶⁴

3
4 "I am the holiness of the holy" (Gita). I am the root, each 5 uses it in his own way, but all is I. "I do everything, you are but the 6 occasion."

7 Do not talk much, but feel the spirit within you; then you are 8 a Jnani. This is knowledge, all else is ignorance. All that is to be 9 known is Brahman. It is the all. . . .

10 Sattva binds through the search for happiness and 11 knowledge, Rajas binds through desire, Tamas binds through wrong 12 perception and laziness. Conquer the two lower by Sattva, and then 13 give up all to the Lord and be free.

14 The Bhakti-Yogi realises Brahman very soon and goes beyond 15 the three qualities.¹⁶⁵

16 The will, the consciousness, the senses, desire, the passions, 17 all these combined make what we call the "soul".

18 There is first, the apparent self (body); second, the mental 19 self who mistakes the body for himself (the Absolute bound by 20 Maya); third, the Atman, the ever pure, the ever free. Seen 21 partially, It is nature; seen wholly, all nature goes, even the memory 22 of it is lost. There is the changeable (mortal), the eternally 23 changeable (nature), and the Unchangeable (Atman).

24 Be perfectly hopeless, that is the highest state. What is there 25 to hope for? Burst asunder the bonds of hope, stand on your Self, 26 be at rest, never mind what you do, give up all to God, but have no 27 hypocrisy about it.

28 Svastha, the Sanskrit word for "standing on your own Self", 29 is used colloquially in India to inquire, "Are you well, are you 30 happy?" And when Hindus would express, "I saw a thing", they say, 31 "I saw a word-meaning (Padartha)." Even this universe is a "word-32 meaning".

33 A perfect man's body mechanically does right; it can do only 34 good because it is fully purified. The past momentum that carries on 35 the wheel of body is all good. All evil tendencies are burnt out.

36 "That day is indeed a bad day when we do not speak of the 37 Lord, not a stormy day."

38 Only love for the Supreme Lord is true Bhakti. Love for any 39 other being, however great, is not Bhakti. The "Supreme Lord" here 40 means Ishvara, the concept of which transcends what you in the 41 West mean by the personal God. "He from whom this universe

1 ¹⁶⁴ ?Just as in storming a fort ninety out of a hundred soldiers may die, so that 2 the remaining ten may win. It is only in a society with very lofty ideals that such 3 great souls are born, but the masses, failing to live up to those ideals, are 4 degraded.

5
7

1 proceeds, in whom it rests, and to whom it returns, He is Ishvara, 2 the Eternal, the Pure, the All-Merciful, the Almighty, the Ever-Free, 3 the All-Knowing, the Teacher of all teachers, the Lord who of His 4 own nature is inexpressible Love."

5 Man does not manufacture God out of his own brain; but he 6 can only see God in the light of his own capacity, and he attributes
7 to Him the best of all he knows. Each attribute is the whole of God, 8 and this signifying the whole by one quality is the metaphysical 9 explanation of the personal God. Ishvara is without form yet has all 10 forms, is without qualities yet has all qualities. As human beings, 11 we have to see the trinity of existence--God, man, nature; and we 12 cannot do otherwise.

13 But to the Bhakta all these philosophical distinctions are 14 mere idle talk. He cares nothing for argument, he does not reason, 15 he "senses", he perceives. He wants to love himself in pure love of 16 God, and there have been Bhaktas who maintain that this is more to 17 be desired than liberation, who say, "I do not want to be sugar. I 18 want to taste sugar; I want to love and enjoy the Beloved."

19 In Bhakti-Yoga the first essential is to want God honestly and 20 intensely. We want everything but God, because our ordinary 21 desires are fulfilled by the external world. So long as our needs are 22 confined within the limits of the physical universe, we do not feel 23 any need for God; it is only when we have had hard blows in our 24 lives and are disappointed with everything here that we feel the 25 need for something higher; then we seek God.

26 Bhakti is not destructive; it teaches that all our faculties may 27 become means to reach salvation. We must turn them all towards 28 God and give to Him that love which is usually wasted on the 29 fleeting objects of sense.

30 Bhakti differs from your Western idea of religion in that 31 Bhakti admits no elements of fear, no Being to be appeased or 32 propitiated. There are even Bhaktas who worship God as their own 33 child, so that there may remain no feeling even of awe or 34 reverence. There can be no fear in true love, and so long as there is 35 the least fear, Bhakti cannot even begin. In Bhakti there is also no 36 place for begging or bargaining with God. The idea of asking God 37 for anything is sacrilege to a Bhakta. He will not pray for health or 38 wealth or even to go to heaven.

39 One who wants to love God, to be a Bhakta, must make a 40 bundle of all these desires and leave them outside the door and 41 then enter. He who wants to enter the realms of light must make a 42 bundle of all "shop-keeping" religion and cast it away before he can 43 pass the gates. It is not that you do not get what you pray for; you 44 get everything, but it is low, vulgar, a beggar's religion. "Fool indeed 45 is he, who, living on the banks of the Ganga, digs a little well for 46 water. Fool indeed is the man who, coming to a mine of diamonds, 47 begins to search for glass beads." These prayers for health and 48 wealth and material prosperity are not Bhakti. They are the lowest 49 form of Karma. Bhakti is a higher thing. We are striving to come 50 into the presence of the King of kings. We cannot get there in a 51 beggar's dress. If we wanted to enter the presence of an emperor,

1 would we be admitted in a beggar's rags? Certainly not. The lackey
2 would drive us out of the gates. This is the Emperor of emperors
3 and never can we come before Him in a beggar's garb. Shop-
4 keepers never have admission there, buying and selling will not do 5 there at all. You read in the Bible that Jesus drove the buyers and 6 sellers out of the temple.

7 So it goes without saying that the first task in becoming a 8 Bhakta is to give up all desires of heaven and so on. Such a heaven
9 would be like this place, this earth, only a little better. The Christian 10 idea of heaven is a place of intensified enjoyment. How can that be 11 God? All this desire to go to heaven is a desire for enjoyment. This 12 has to be given up. The love of the Bhakta must be absolutely pure 13 and unselfish, seeking nothing for itself either here or hereafter.

14 "Giving up the desire of pleasure and pain, gain or loss, 15 worship God day and night; not a moment is to be lost in vain."

16 "Giving up all other thoughts, the whole mind day and night 17 worships God. Thus being worshipped day and night, He reveals 18 Himself and makes His worshippers feel Him."

20 Thursday, August 1.

21 The real Guru is the one through whom we have our spiritual 22 descent. He is the channel through which the spiritual current flows 23 to us, the link which joins us to the whole spiritual world. Too much 24 faith in personality has a tendency to produce weakness and 25 idolatry, but intense love for the Guru makes rapid growth possible, 26 he connects us with the internal Guru. Adore your Guru if there be 27 real truth in him; that Guru-bhakti (devotion to the teacher) will 28 quickly lead you to the highest.

29 Sri Ramakrishna's purity was that of a baby. He never 30 touched money in his life, and lust was absolutely annihilated in 31 him. Do not go to great religious teachers to learn physical science, 32 their whole energy has gone to the spiritual. In Sri Ramakrishna 33 Paramahansa the man was all dead and only God remained; he 34 actually could not see sin, he was literally "of purer eyes than to 35 behold iniquity". The purity of these few Paramahansas¹⁶⁶ is all that 36 holds the world together. If they should all die out and leave it, the 37 world would go to pieces. They do good by simply being, and they 38 know it not; they just are. . . .

39 Books suggest the inner light and the method of bringing 40 that out, but we can only understand them when we have earned 41 the knowledge ourselves. When the inner light has flashed for you, 42 let the books go, and look only within. You have in you all and a 43 thousand times more than is in all the books. Never lose faith in 44 yourself, you can do anything in this universe. Never weaken, all 45 power is yours.

46 If religion and life depend upon books or upon the existence 47 of any prophet whatsoever, then perish all religion and books!

1 ¹⁶⁶ ?Monks of the highest order.

1 Religion is in us. No books or teachers can do more than help us to 2 find it, and even without them we can get all truth within. You have 3 gratitude for books and teachers without bondage to them; and 4 worship your Guru as God, but do not obey him blindly; love him all 5 you will, but think for yourself. No blind belief can save you, work 6 out your own salvation. Have only one idea of God--that He is an 7 eternal help.

8 Freedom and highest love must go together, then neither can 9 become a bondage. We can give nothing to God; He gives all to us.
10 He is the Guru of Gurus. Then we find that He is the "Soul of our 11 souls", our very Self. No wonder we love Him, He is the Soul of our 12 souls; whom or what else can we love? We want to be the "steady 13 flame, burning without heat and without smoke". To whom can you 14 do good, when you see only God? You cannot do good to God! All 15 doubt goes, all is, "sameness". If you do good at all, you do it to 16 yourself; feel that the receiver is the higher one. You serve the 17 other because you are lower than he, not because he is low and you 18 are high. Give as the rose gives perfume, because it is its own 19 nature, utterly unconscious of giving.

20 The great Hindu reformer, Raja Ram Mohan Roy, was a 21 wonderful example of this unselfish work. He devoted his whole life 22 to helping India. It was he who stopped the burning of widows. It is 23 usually believed that this reform was due entirely to the English; 24 but it was Raja Ram Mohan Roy who started the agitation against 25 the custom and succeeded in obtaining the support of the 26 Government in suppressing it. Until he began the movement, the 27 English had done nothing. He also founded the important religious 28 Society called the Brahmo-Samaj, and subscribed a hundred 29 thousand dollars to found a university. He then stepped out and told 30 them to go ahead without him. He cared nothing for fame or for 31 results to himself.

32
33 Thursday Afternoon.

34 There are endless series of manifestations, like "merry-go-35 round", in which the souls ride, so to speak. The series are eternal; 36 individual souls get out, but the events repeat themselves eternally; 37 and that is how one's past and future can be read, because all is 38 really present. When the soul is in a certain chain, it has to go 39 through the experiences of that chain. From one series souls go to 40 other series; from some series they escape for ever by realising that 41 they are Brahman. By getting hold of one prominent event in a 42 chain and holding on to it, the whole chain can be dragged in and 43 read. This power is easily acquired, but it is of no real value; and to 44 practise it takes just so much from our spiritual forces. Go not after 45 these things, worship God.

47 Friday, August 2.

48 Nishtha (devotion to one ideal) is the beginning of 49 realisation. "Take the honey out of all flowers; sit and be friendly 50 with all, pay reverence to all, say to all, 'Yes, brother, yes, brother',

1 but keep firm in your own way." A higher stage is actually to take 2 the position of the other. If I am all, why can I not really and actively 3 sympathise with my brother and see with his eyes? While I am
4 weak, I must stick to one course (Nishtha), but when I am strong, I 5 can feel with every other and perfectly sympathise with his ideas.

6 The old idea was: "Develop one idea at the expense of all the 7 rest". The modern way is "harmonious development". A third way is 8 to "develop the mind and control it", then put it where you will; the 9 result will come quickly. This is developing yourself in the truest 10 way. Learn concentration and use it in any direction. Thus you lose 11 nothing. He who gets the whole must have the parts too. Dualism is 12 included in Advaitism (monism).

13 "I first saw him and he saw me. There was a flash of eye from 14 me to him and from him to me."

15 This went on until the two souls became so closely united 16 that they actually became one. . . .

17 There are two kinds of Samadhi--I concentrate on myself, 18 then I concentrate and there is a unity of subject and object.

19 You must be able to sympathise fully with each particular, 20 then at once to jump back to the highest monism. After having 21 perfected yourself, you limit yourself voluntarily. Take the whole 22 power into each action. Be able to become a dualist for the time 23 being and forget Advaita, yet be able to take it up again at will.

24 Cause and effect are all Maya, and we shall grow to 25 understand that all we see is as disconnected as the child's fairy 26 tales now seem to us. There is really no such thing as cause and 27 effect and we shall come to know it. Then if you can, lower your 28 intellect to let any allegory pass through your mind without 29 questioning about connection. Develop love of imagery and 30 beautiful poetry and then enjoy all mythologies as poetry. Come not 31 to mythology with ideas of history and reasoning. Let it flow as a 32 current through your mind, let it be whirled as a candle before your 33 eyes, without asking who holds the candle, and you will get the 34 circle; the residuum of truth will remain in your mind.

35 The writers of all mythologies wrote in symbols of what they 36 saw and heard, they painted flowing pictures. Do not try to pick out 37 the themes and so destroy the pictures; take them as they are and 38 let them act on you. Judge them only by the effect and get the good 39 out of them.

40 Your own will is all that answers prayer, only it appears 41 under the guise of different religious conceptions to each mind. We 42 may call it Buddha, Jesus, Krishna, Jehovah, Allah, Agni, but it is 43 only the Self, the "I". . . .

44 Concepts grow, but there is no historical value in the 45 allegories which present them. Moses' visions are more likely to be 46 wrong than ours are, because we have more knowledge and are 47 less likely to be deceived by illusions.

48 Books are useless to us until our own book opens; then all 49 other books are good so far as they confirm our book. It is the 1 strong that understand strength, it is the elephant that understands 2 the lion, not the rat. How can we understand Jesus until we are his 3 equals? It is all in the dream to feed five thousand with two loaves, 4 or to feed two with five loaves; neither is real and neither affects 5 the other. Only grandeur appreciates grandeur, only God realises

6 God. The dream is only the dreamer, it has no other basis. It is not 7 one thing and the dreamer another. The keynote running through 8 the music is --"I am He, I am He", all other notes are but variations 9 and do not affect the real theme. We are the living books and books 10 are but the words we have spoken. Everything is the living God, the 11 living Christ; see it as such. Read man, he is the living poem. We 12 are the light that illumines all the Bibles and Christs and Buddhas 13 that ever were. Without that, these would be dead to us, not living.

14 Stand on your own Self.

15 The dead body resents nothing; let us make our bodies dead 16 and cease to identify ourselves with them.

18 Saturday, August 3.

19 Individuals who are to get freedom in this life have to live 20 thousands of years in one lifetime. They have to be ahead of their 21 times, but the masses can only crawl. Thus we have Christs and 22 Buddhas. . . .

23 There was once a Hindu queen, who so much desired that all 24 her children should attain freedom in this life that she herself took 25 all the care of them; and as she rocked them to sleep, she sang 26 always the one song to them--"Tat tvam asi, Tat tvam asi" ("That 27 thou art, That thou art").

28 Three of them became Sannyasins, but the fourth was taken 29 away to be brought up elsewhere to become a king. As he was 30 leaving home, the mother gave him a piece of paper which he was 31 to read when he grew to manhood. On that piece of paper was 32 written, "God alone is true. All else is false. The soul never kills or is 33 killed. Live alone or in the company of holy ones." When the young 34 prince read this, he too at once renounced the world and became a 35 Sannyasin.

36 Give up, renounce the world. Now we are like dogs strayed 37 into a kitchen and eating a piece of meat, looking round in fear lest 38 at any moment some one may come and drive them out. Instead of 39 that, be a king and know you own the world. This never comes until 40 you give it up and it ceases to bind. Give up mentally, if you do not 41 physically. Give up from the heart of your hearts. Have Vairagya 42 (renunciation). This is the real sacrifice, and without it, it is 43 impossible to attain spirituality. Do not desire, for what you desire 44 you get, and with it comes terrible bondage. It is nothing but 45 bringing "noses on us," as in the case of the man who had three 46 boons to ask.¹⁶⁷ We never get freedom until we are self-contained.

1 ¹⁶⁷ ?A poor man was once able to propitiate a certain god who gave him three 2 boons to ask along with three throws of dice. The happy man communicated this 3 news to his wife who at once told him to cast for wealth first. To this the man 4 said, "We both have very ugly little noses, for which people laugh at us. Let us

1 "Self is the Saviour of self, none else."

2 Learn to feel yourself in other bodies, to know that we are all 3 one. Throw all other nonsense to the winds. Spit out your actions, 4 good or bad, and never think of them again. What is done is done.
5 Throw off superstition. Have no weakness even in the face of death.
6 Do not repent, do not brood over past deeds, and do not remember 7 your good deeds; be azad (free). The weak, the fearful, the 8 ignorant will never reach Atman. You cannot undo, the effect must 9 come, face it, but be careful never to do the same thing again. Give 10 up the burden of all deeds to the Lord; give all, both good and bad.
11 Do not keep the good and give only the bad. God helps those who 12 do not help themselves.

13 "Drinking the cup of desire, the world becomes mad." Day 14 and night never come together, so desire and the Lord can never 15 come together. Give up desire.

16 There is a vast difference between saying "food, food" and 17 eating it, between saying "water, water" and drinking it. So by 18 merely repeating the words "God, God" we cannot hope to attain 19 realisation. We must strive and practise.

20 Only by the wave falling back into the sea can it become 21 unlimited, never as a wave can it be so. Then after it has become 22 the sea, it can become the wave again and as big a one as it 23 pleases. Break the identification of yourself with the current and 24 know that you are free.

25 True philosophy is the systematising of certain perceptions.
26 Intellect ends where religion begins. Inspiration is much higher 27 than reason, but it must not contradict it. Reason is the rough tool 28 to do the hard work; inspiration is the bright light which shows us 29 all truth. The will to do a thing is not necessarily inspiration. . . .

30 Progression in Maya is a circle that brings you back to the 31 starting point; but you start ignorant and come to the end with all 32 knowledge. Worship of God, worship of the holy ones, concentration 33 and meditation, and unselfish work, these are the ways of breaking 34 away from Maya's net; but we must first have the strong desire to 35 get free. The flash of light that will illuminate the darkness for us is 36 in us; it is the knowledge that is our nature--there is no "birthright", 37 we were never born. All that we have to do is to drive away the 38 clouds that cover it.

1 first cast for beautiful aquiline noses." But the wife was for wealth first and so she 2 caught hold of his hand to prevent him from throwing the dice. The man hastily 3 snatched his hand away and at once threw the dice, exclaiming, "Let us both 4 have beautiful noses and nothing but noses." All at once both their bodies were 5 covered over with many beautiful noses, but they proved such a great nuisance to 6 them that both of them agreed to throw for the second time asking for their 7 removal. It was done, but they also lost their own little ones by that! There was 8 only one boon more to ask. Having lost their noses they looked uglier than before.
9 They wanted to have two beautiful noses, but they feared to be questioned about 10 their transformation lest they should be regarded by all to be two big fools who 11 could not mend their circumstances even with the help of three boons. So both of 12 them agreed to get back their ugly little noses and the dice were accordingly 13 cast.

1 Give up all desire for enjoyment in earth or heaven. Control
2 the organs of the senses and control the mind. Bear every misery 3 without even knowing that you are miserable. Think of nothing but 4 liberation. Have faith in Guru, in his teachings, and in the surety
5 that you can get free. Say "Soham, Soham" whatever comes. Tell 6 yourself this even in eating, walking, suffering; tell the mind this 7 incessantly--that what we see never existed, that there is only "I".
8 Flash--the dream will break! Think day and night, this universe is 9 zero, only God is. Have intense desire to get free.

10 All relatives and friends are but "old dry wells"; we fall into 11 them and get dreams of duty and bondage, and there is no end. Do 12 not create illusion by helping anyone. It is like a banyan tree, that 13 spreads on and on. If you are a dualist, you are a fool to try to help 14 God. If you are a monist, you know that you are God; where find 15 duty? You have no duty to husband, child, friend. Take things as 16 they come, lie still, and when your body floats, go; rise with the 17 rising tide, fall with falling tide. Let the body die; this idea of body 18 is but a worn-out fable. "Be still and know that you are God."

19 The present only is existent. There is no past or future even 20 in thought, because to think it, you have to make it the present.
21 Give up everything, and let it float where it will. This world is all a 22 delusion, do not let it fool you again. You have known it for what it 23 is not, now know it for what it is. If the body is dragged anywhere, 24 let it go; do not care where the body is. This tyrannical idea of duty 25 is a terrible poison and is destroying the world.

26 Do not wait to have a harp and rest by degrees; why not take 27 a harp and begin here? Why wait for heaven? Make it here. In 28 heaven there is no marrying or giving in marriage; why not begin at 29 once and have none here? The yellow robe of the Sannyasin is the 30 sign of the free. Give up the beggar's dress of the world; wear the 31 flag of freedom, the ochre robe.

32
33 Sunday, August 4.

34 "Whom the ignorant worship, Him I preach unto thee."

35 This one and only God is the "knownest" of the known. He is 36 the one thing we see everywhere. All know their own Self, all know, 37 "I am", even animals. All we know is the projection of the Self.
38 Teach this to the children, they can grasp it. Every religion has 39 worshipped the Self, even though unconsciously, because there is 40 nothing else.

41 This indecent clinging to life as we know it here, is the 42 source of all evil. It causes all this cheating and stealing. It makes 43 money a god and all vices and fears ensue. Value nothing material 44 and do not cling to it. If you cling to nothing, not even life, then 45 there is no fear. "He goes from death to death who sees many in 46 this world." There can be no physical death for us and no mental 47 death, when we see that all is one. All bodies are mine; so even 48 body is eternal, because the tree, the animal, the sun, the moon, the 49 universe itself is my body; then how can it die? Every mind, every 50 thought is mine, then how can death come? The Self is never born

1 and never dies. When we realise this, all doubts vanish. "I am, I 2 know, I love"--these can never be doubted. There is no hunger, for 3 all that is eaten is eaten by me. If a hair falls out, we do not think 4 we die; so if one body dies, it is but a hair falling. . . .

5 The superconscious is God, is beyond speech beyond
6 thought, beyond consciousness. . . . There are three states,-- 7 brutality (Tamas), humanity (Rajas), and divinity (Sattva). Those 8 attaining the highest state simply are. Duty dies there; they only 9 love and as a magnet draw others to them. This is freedom. No 10 more you do moral acts, but whatever you do is moral. The 11 Brahnavit (knower of God) is higher than all gods. The angels came 12 to worship Jesus when he had conquered delusion and had said, 13 "Get thee behind me, Satan." None can help a Brahnavit, the 14 universe itself bows down before him. His every desire is fulfilled, 15 his spirit purifies others; therefore worship the Brahnavit if you 16 wish to attain the highest. When we have the three great "gifts of 17 God"--a human body, intense desire to be free, and the help of a 18 great soul to show us the way--then liberation is certain for us.
19 Mukti is ours.

20 Death of the body for ever is Nirvana. It is the negative side 21 and says, "I am not this, nor this, nor this." Vedanta takes the 22 further step and asserts the positive side--Mukti or freedom. "I am 23 Existence absolute, Knowledge absolute, Bliss absolute, I am He", 24 this is Vedanta, the cap-stone of the perfect arch.

25 The great majority of the adherents of Northern Buddhism
26 believe in Mukti and are really Vedantists. Only the Ceylonese 27 accept Nirvana as annihilation.

28 No belief or disbelief can kill the "I". That which comes with 29 belief and goes with disbelief is only delusion. Nothing teaches the 30 Atman. "I salute my own Self." "Self-illuminated, I salute myself, I 31 am Brahman." The body is a dark room; when we enter it, it 32 becomes illuminated, it becomes alive. Nothing can ever affect the 33 illumination; it cannot be destroyed. It may be covered, but never 34 destroyed.

35 At the present time God should be worshipped as "Mother", 36 the Infinite Energy. This will lead to purity, and tremendous energy 37 will come here in America. Here no temples weigh us down, no one 38 suffers as they do in poorer countries. Woman has suffered for 39 aeons, and that has given her infinite patience and infinite 40 perseverance. She holds on to an idea. It is this which makes her 41 the support of even superstitious religions and of the priests in 42 every land, and it is this that will free her. We have to become 43 Vedantists and live this grand thought; the masses must get it, and 44 only in free America can this be done. In India these ideas were 45 brought out by individuals like Buddha, Shankara, and others, but 46 the masses did not retain them. The new cycle must see the masses 47 living Vedanta, and this will have to come through women.

48 "Keep the beloved beautiful Mother in the heart of your 49 hearts with all care."

1 "Throw out everything but the tongue, keep that to say,
2 "Mother, Mother!"

3 "Let no evil counsellors enter; let you and me, my heart, 4 alone see Mother."

5 "Thou art beyond all that lives!"

6 "My Moon of life, my Soul of soul!"

7 8 Sunday Afternoon

9 Mind is an instrument in the hand of Atman, just as body is 10 an instrument in the hand of mind. Matter is motion outside, mind 11 is motion inside. All change begins and ends in time. If the Atman is 12 unchangeable, It must be perfect; if perfect, It must be infinite; and 13 if It be infinite, It must be only One; there cannot be two infinities.
14 So the Atman, the Self, can be only One. Though It seems to be 15 various, It is really only One. If a man were to go toward the sun, at 16 every step he would see a different sun, and yet it would be the 17 same sun after all.

18 Asti, "isness", is the basis of all unity; and just as soon as the 19 basis is found, perfection ensues. If all colour could be resolved into 20 one colour, painting would cease. The perfect oneness is rest; we 21 refer all manifestations to one Being. Taoists, Confucianists, 22 Buddhists, Hindus, Jews, Mohammedans, Christians, and 23 Zoroastrians, all preached the golden rule and in almost the same 24 words; but only the Hindus have given the rationale, because they 25 saw the reason: Man must love others because those others are 26 himself. There is but One.

27 Of all the great religious teachers the world has known, only 28 Lao-tze, Buddha, and Jesus transcended the golden rule and said, 29 "Do good to your enemies", "Love them that hate you."

30 Principles exist; we do not create them, we only discover 31 them. . . . Religion consists solely in realisation. Doctrines are 32 methods, not religion. All the different religions are but applications 33 of the one religion adapted to suit the requirements of different 34 nations. Theories only lead to fighting; thus the name of God that 35 ought to bring peace has been the cause of half the bloodshed of 36 the world. Go to the direct source. Ask God what He is. Unless He 37 answers, He is not; but every religion teaches that He does answer.

38 Have something to say for yourself, else how can you have 39 any idea of what others have said? Do not cling to old superstitions; 40 be ever ready for new truths.

41 "Fools are they who would drink brackish water from a well 42 that their forefathers have dug would not drink pure water from a 43 well that others have dug Until we realise God for ourselves, we 44 can know nothing about Him. Each man is perfect by his nature; 45 prophets have manifested this perfection, but it is potential in us.
46 How can we understand that Moses saw God unless we too see 47 Him? If God ever came to anyone, He will come to me. I will go to 48 God direct; let Him talk to me. I cannot take belief as a basis; that is 49 atheism and blasphemy. If God spake to a man in the deserts of 1 Arabia two thousand years ago, He can also speak to me today, else

2 how can I know that He has not died? Come to God any way you
3 can; only come. But in coming do not push anyone down.

4 The knowing ones must have pity on the ignorant. One who 5 knows is willing to give up his body even for an ant, because he 6 knows that the body is nothing.

7 8 Monday, August 5.

9 The question is: Is it necessary to pass through all the lower 10 stages to reach the highest, or can a plunge be taken at once? The 11 modern American boy takes twenty-five years to attain that which 12 his forefathers took hundreds of years to do. The present-day Hindu 13 gets in twenty years to the height reached in eight thousand years 14 by his ancestors. On the physical side, the embryo goes from the 15 amoeba to man in the womb. These are the teachings of modern 16 science. Vedanta goes further and tells us that we not only have to 17 live the life of all past humanity, but also the future life of all 18 humanity. The man who does the first is the educated man, the 19 second is the Jivanmukta, for ever free (even while living).

20 Time is merely the measure of our thoughts, and thought 21 being inconceivably swift, there is no limit to the speed with which 22 we can live the life ahead. So it cannot be stated how long it would 23 take to live all future life. It might be in a second, or it might take 24 fifty lifetimes. It depends on the intensity of the desire. The 25 teaching must therefore be modified according to the needs of the 26 taught. The consuming fire is ready for all, even water and chunks 27 of ice quickly consume. Fire a mass of birdshot, one at least will 28 strike; give a man a whole museum of truths, he will at once take 29 what is suited to him. Past lives have moulded our tendencies; give 30 to the taught in accordance with his tendency. Intellectual, mystical, 31 devotional, practical--make one the basis, but teach the others with 32 it. Intellect must be balanced with love, the mystical nature with 33 reason, while practice must form part of every method. Take every 34 one where he stands and push him forward. Religious teaching 35 must always be constructive, not destructive.

36 Each tendency shows the life-work of the past, the line or 37 radius along which that man must move. All radii lead to the centre.
38 Never even attempt to disturb anyone's tendencies; to do that puts 39 back both teacher and taught. When you teach Jnana, you must 40 become a Jnani and stand mentally exactly where the taught stands.
41 Similarly in every other Yoga. Develop every faculty as if it were the 42 only one possessed, this is the true secret of so-called harmonious 43 development. That is, get extensity with intensity, but not at its 44 expense. We are infinite. There is no limitation in us, we can be as 45 intense as the most devoted Mohammedan and as broad as the 46 most roaring atheist.

47 The way to do this is not to put the mind on any one subject, 48 but to develop and control the mind itself; then you can turn it on 49 any side you choose. Thus you keep the intensity and extensity. Feel 50 Jnana as if it were all there was, then do the same with Bhakti, with

1 Raja (-Yoga), with Karma. Give up the waves and go to the ocean, 2 then you can have the waves as you please.

3 Control the "lake" of your own mind, else you cannot 4 understand the lake of another's mind.

5 The true teacher is one who can throw his whole force into 6 the tendency of the taught. Without real sympathy we can never 7 teach well. Give up the notion that man is a responsible being, only 8 the perfect man is responsible. The ignorant have drunk deep of the 9 cup of delusion and are not sane. You, who know, must have 10 infinite patience with these. Have nothing but love for them and 11 find out the disease that has made them see the world in a wrong 12 light, then help them to cure it and see aright. Remember always 13 that only the free have free will; all the rest are in bondage and are 14 not responsible for what they do. Will as will is bound. The water 15 when melting on the top of the Himalayas is free, but becoming the 16 river, it is bound by the banks; yet the original impetus carries it to 17 the sea, and it regains its freedom. The first is the "fall of man", the 18 second is the "resurrection". Not one atom can rest until it finds its 19 freedom.

20 Some imaginations help to break the bondage of the rest.
21 The whole universe is imagination, but one set of imaginations will 22 cure another set. Those which tell us that there is sin and sorrow 23 and death in the world are terrible; but the other set which says 24 ever, "I am holy, there is God, there is no pain", these are good and 25 help to break the bondage of the others. The highest imagination 26 that can break all the links of the chain is that of Personal God.

27 "Om tat sat" is the only thing beyond Maya, but God exists 28 eternally. As long as the Niagara Falls exist, the rainbow will exist; 29 but the water continually flows away. The falls are the universe, and 30 the rainbow is personal God; and both are eternal. While the 31 universe exists, God must exist. God creates the universe, and the 32 universe creates God; and both are eternal. Maya is neither 33 existence nor non-existence. Both the Niagara Falls and the 34 rainbow are eternally changeable. . . . Brahman seen through Maya.
35 Persians and Christians split Maya into two and call the good half 36 "God" and the bad half the "devil". Vedanta takes Maya as a whole 37 and recognises a unity beyond it--Brahman. . . .

38 Mohammed found that Christianity was straying out from the 39 Semitic fold and his teachings were to show what Christianity ought 40 to be as a Semitic religion, that it should hold to one God. The 41 Aryan idea that "I and my Father are one" disgusted and terrified
42 him. In reality the conception of the Trinity was a great advance 43 over the dualistic idea of Jehovah, who was for ever separate from 44 man. The theory of incarnation is the first link in the chain of ideas 45 leading to the recognition of the oneness of God and man. God 46 appearing first in one human form, then re-appearing at different 47 times in other human forms, is at last recognised as being in every 48 human form, or in all men. Monistic is the highest stage, 49 monotheistic is a lower stage. Imagination will lead you to the 50 highest even more rapidly and easily than reasoning.

51 Let a few stand out and live for God alone and save religion

1 for the world. Do not pretend to be like Janaka when you are only 2 the "progenitor" of delusions. (The name Janaka means 'progenitor' 3 and belonged to a king who, although he still held his kingdom for 4 the sake of his people, had given up everything mentally.) Be honest 5 and say, "I see the ideal but I cannot yet approach it"; but do not 6 pretend to give up when you do not. If you give up, stand fast. If a 7 hundred fall in the fight, seize the flag and carry it on. God is true
8 for all that, no matter who fails. Let him who falls hand on the flag 9 to another to carry on; it can never fall.

10 When I am washed and clean, why shall impurity be added
11 on to me? Seek first the kingdom of Heaven, and let everything else 12 go. Do not want anything "added unto you"; be only glad to get rid 13 of it. Give up and know that success will follow, even if you never 14 see it. Jesus left twelve fishermen, and yet those few blew up the 15 Roman Empire.

16 Sacrifice on God's altar earth's purest and best. He who 17 struggles is better than he who never attempts. Even to look on one 18 who has given up has a purifying effect. Stand up for God; let the 19 world go. Have no compromise. Give up the world, then alone you 20 are loosened from the body. When it dies, you are azad, free. Be 21 free. Death alone can never free us. Freedom must be attained by 22 our own efforts during life; then, when the body falls, there will be 23 no rebirth for the free.

24 Truth is to be judged by truth and by nothing else. Doing 25 good is not the test of truth; the Sun needs no torch by which to see 26 it. Even if truth destroys the whole universe, still it is truth; stand 27 by it.

28 Practising the concrete forms of religion is easy and attracts 29 the masses; but really there is nothing in the external.

30 "As the spider throws her web out of herself and draws it in, 31 even so this universe is thrown out and drawn in by God."

33 Tuesday, August 6.

34 Without the "I" there can be no "you" outside. From this 35 some philosophers came to the conclusion that the external world 36 did not exist save in the subject; that the "you" existed only in the 37 "I". Others have argued that the "I" can only be known through the 38 "you" and with equal logic. These two views are partial truths, each 39 wrong in part and each right in part. Thought is as much material 40 and as much in nature as body is. Both matter and mind exist in a 41 third, a unity which divides itself into the two. This unity is the 42 Atman, the real Self.

43 There is being, "x", which is manifesting itself as both mind
44 and matter. Its movements in the seen are along certain fixed lines 45 called law. As a unity, it is free; as many, it is bound by law. Still, 46 with all this bondage, an idea of freedom is ever present, and this is 47 Nivritti, or the "dragging from attachment". The materialising 48 forces which through desire lead us to take an active part in 49 worldly affairs are called Pravritti.

1 That action is moral which frees us from the bondage of 2 matter and vice versa. This world appears infinite, because 3 everything is in a circle; it returns to whence it came. The circle 4 meets, so there is no rest or peace here in any place. We must get 5 out. Mukti is the one end to be attained. . . .

6 Evil changes in form but remains the same in quality. In 7 ancient times force ruled, today it is cunning. Misery in India is not 8 so bad as in America, because the poor man here sees the greater 9 contrast to his own bad condition.

10 Good and evil are inextricably combined, and one cannot be 11 had without the other. The sum total of energy in this universe is 12 like a lake, every wave inevitably leads to a corresponding 13 depression. The sum total is absolutely the same; so to make one 14 man happy is to make another unhappy. External happiness is 15 material and the supply is fixed; so that not one grain can be had by 16 one person without taking from another. Only bliss beyond the 17 material world can be had without loss to any. Material happiness is 18 but a transformation of material sorrow.

19 Those who are born in the wave and kept in it do not see the 20 depression and what is there. Never think, you can make the world 21 better and happier. The bullock in the oil-mill never reaches the 22 wisp of hay tied in front of him, he only grinds out the oil. So we 23 chase the will-o'-the-wisp of happiness that always eludes us, and 24 we only grind nature's mill, then die, merely to begin again. If we 25 could get rid of evil, we should never catch a glimpse of anything 26 higher; we would be satisfied and never struggle to get free. When 27 man finds that all search for happiness in matter is nonsense, then 28 religion begins. All human knowledge is but a part of religion.

29 In the human body the balance between good and evil is so 30 even that there is a chance for man to wish to free himself from 31 both.

32 The free never became bound; to ask how he did, is an 33 illogical question. Where no bondage is, there is no cause and 34 effect. "I became a fox in a dream and a dog chased me." Now how 35 can I ask why the dog chased me? The fox was a part of the dream, 36 and the dog followed as a matter of course; but both belong to the 37 dream and have no existence outside. Science and religion are both 38 attempts to help us out of the bondage; only religion is the more 39 ancient, and we have the superstition that it is the more holy. In a 40 way it is, because it makes morality a vital point, and science does 41 not.

42 "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." This 43 sentence alone would save mankind if all books and prophets were 44 lost. This purity of heart will bring the vision of God. It is the theme 45 of the whole music of this universe. In purity is no bondage.
46 Remove the veils of ignorance by purity, then we manifest ourselves 47 as we really are and know that we were never in bondage. The 48 seeing of many is the great sin of all the world. See all as Self and 49 love all; let all idea of separateness go. . . .

50 The diabolical man is a part of my body as a wound or a burn

1 is. We have to nurse it and get it better; so continually nurse and 2 help the diabolical man, until he "heals" and is once happy and 3 healthy.

4 While we think on the relative plane, we have the right to 5 believe that as bodies we can be hurt by relative things and equally 6 that we can be helped by them. This idea of help, abstracted, is 7 what we call God. The sum total of all ideas of help is God.

8 God is the abstract compound of all that is merciful and good 9 and helpful; that should be the sole idea. As Atman, we have no 10 body; so to say, "I am God, and poison does not hurt me", is an 11 absurdity. While there is a body and we see it, we have not realised 12 God. Can the little whirlpool remain after the river vanishes? Cry 13 for help, and you will get it; and at last you will find that the one 14 crying for help has vanished, and so has the Helper, and the play is 15 over; only the Self remains.

16 This once done, come back and play as you will. This body 17 can then do no evil, because it is not until the evil forces are all 18 burned out that liberation comes. All dross has been burned out and 19 there remains "flame without heat and without smoke".

20 The past momentum carries on the body, but it can only do 21 good, because the bad was all gone before freedom came. The 22 dying thief on the cross reaped the effects of his past actions. He 23 had been a Yogi and had slipped; then he had to be born again;
24 again he slipped and became a thief; but the past good he had done 25 bore fruit, and he met Jesus in the moment when liberation could 26 come, and one word made him free.

27 Buddha set his greatest enemy free, because he, by hating 28 him (Buddha) so much, kept constantly thinking of him; that 29 thought purified his mind, and he became ready for freedom.
30 Therefore think of God all the time, and that will purify you. . . .

CONVERSATIONS AND DIALOGUES

(From the Diary of a Disciple¹⁶⁸)

I

[Place: Belur, the rented Math premises. Year: 1898.]

Swamiji was staying at the time at the rented garden-house of Nilambar Babu where the Math had been removed from Alambazar. Arrangements had been made for Shri Ramakrishna's Tithipuja (Nativity) on a grand scale. On the morning of the auspicious day, Swamiji personally inspected the preliminaries of the worship. The inspection over, Swamiji asked the disciple, "Well, you have brought the holy threads, I hope?"

Disciple: Yes, sir, I have. Everything is ready, as you desired. But, sir, I can't make out why so many holy threads are in requisition.

Swamiji: Every Dwijati¹⁶⁹ (twice-born) has a right to investiture with the holy thread. The Vedas themselves are authority in this matter. Whoever will come here on this sacred birthday of Shri Ramakrishna, I shall invest him with the holy thread. These people have fallen from their true status, and the scriptures say that after proper expiation, those fallen in the way earn the right to investiture with the holy thread. This is the great day of Shri Ramakrishna's nativity, and men will be purified by taking his name. So the assembled devotees are to be invested with the holy thread today; do you now understand?

Disciple: I have collected, Sir, quite a good number of holy threads according to your instructions, and after the worship I shall with your permission invest the Bhaktas with them.

Swamiji: To the Bhaktas who are not Brahmins, give this Mantra of Gayatri (here Swamiji communicated to the disciple the special Gayatris for them.) By degrees all the people of the land have to be lifted to the position of Brahmins, not to speak of the Bhaktas of Shri Ramakrishna. Each Hindu, I say, is a brother of every other, and it is we who have degraded them by our outcry, "Don't touch, don't touch!" And so the whole country has been plunged to the utmost depths of meanness, cowardice, and ignorance. These men have to be uplifted; words of hope and faith have to be proclaimed to them. We have to tell them, "You are men like us, and you have all the rights that we have." Do you understand?

Disciple: Yes, sir, it should be so.

Swamiji: Now, ask those who will take the holy thread to finish their bath in the Ganga. Than after prostration before Shri Ramakrishna, they will have their investiture.

About forty to fifty Bhaktas then duly received the Gayatri

¹⁶⁸ ?Shri Sharat Chandra Chakravarty, B.A.

¹⁶⁹ ?Brahmins, Kshatriyas, and Vaishyas are the Dwijatis.

1 from the disciple and were invested with the holy thread. When 2 receiving them, Swamiji's face beamed with profound delight. A 3 little after this, Shri Girish Chandra Ghosh arrived at the Math from 4 Calcutta.

5 Now arrangements for music were made at the desire of 6 Swamiji, and Sannyasins of the Math decorated Swamiji as a Yogin.

7 Swamiji now chanted with the sweetest intonation to the 8 accompaniment of the Tanpura, the Sanskrit hymn beginning with 9 {Sanskrit} ("repeating in a low tone the name of Rama" etc.), and 10 when the chanting came to a close, he went on repeating with 11 exquisite charm the holy words "Rama, Rama, Shri Rama, Rama".
12 His eyes were half-closed, and the natural sublimity of his 13 countenance seemed today to have deepened a hundredfold.
14 Everybody remained spelled for over a half an hour.

16 to sing a song of Tulsidas on Shri Ramachandra in the same 17 intoxicated strain of mind. Then other music followed.

18 After this, Swamiji suddenly took to putting off all the 19 decorations he had on his person and began to dress Girish Babu 20 with them. Then he declared, "Paramahansa-deva used to say our 21 brother is the incarnation of Bhairava.¹⁷⁰ There's no distinction 22 between him and us." Girish Babu sat speechless all the time. A 23 piece of gerua cloth was also brought, and he was draped in it and 24 uttered no word of remonstrance. For he had merged his self fully 25 today in the wishes of his brother disciples. Swamiji now said, 26 "Well, G. C., you are to speak to us today about Thakur (Lord). And 27 all of you (turning all round himself) sit quiet and attentive." Even 28 then, Girish Babu sat motionless, voiceless like marble, absolutely 29 lost in joy. And when at last he opened his lips, he did so to say, "Ah, 30 what can this humble self speak of our Lord of unbounded mercy!
31 Verily in this alone I realise his mercy, that to me, this lowly 32 creature, He has extended the privilege of sitting and mixing on the 33 same footing with you Sannyasins, pure from your childhood, who 34 have renounced all lust and lucre." While speaking thus, the words 35 choked in his throat, and he could not speak anything more.

36 After this, some pieces of Hindu music were rendered by 37 Swamiji. The devotees were now called to partake of refreshments.
38 After refreshments, Swamiji came and took his seat in the parlour 39 on the ground-floor, and all the many visitors sat round him.
40 Accosting a householder friend who had his investiture with the 41 holy thread that day, Swamiji said, "Really you all belong to the 42 twice-born castes, only it is long since you lost your status. From 43 this day again you become the twice-born. Repeat the Gayatri at 44 least a hundred times daily, won't you?" The householder expressed 45 his assent.

46 Meanwhile Srijut Mahendranath Gupta (Master Mahashaya 47 [Venerable], or "M") appeared on the scene. Swamiji cordially 48 received him and made him take his seat. "Master Mahashaya," 170 ?Divine companion of Shiva.

1 said Swamiji, "this is the anniversary of Shri Ramakrishna's 2 birthday. So you shall have to relate to us something about him."
3 Master Mahashaya bent his head down smilingly in reply.

4 Just then it was announced that Swami Akhandananda had 5 come from Murshidabad with two Pantuas¹⁷¹ which weighed one
6 maund and a half! All of us hurried out to see these prodigious 7 Pantuas. When they were shown to Swamiji, he said, "Take them up 8 to the chapel for offering."

9 Making Swami Akhandananda the subject of his remarks, 10 Swamiji said to the disciple, "Mark you, what a great hero he is in 11 work! Of fear, death and the like he has no cognisance--doggedly 12 going on doing his own work--'work for the welfare of the many, for 13 the happiness of the many'."

14 Disciple: Sir, that power must have come to him as the result 15 of a good deal of austerities.

16 Swamiji: True, power comes of austerities; but again, 17 working for the sake of others itself constitutes Tapasya (practice of 18 austerity). The karma-yogins regard work itself as part of Tapasya.
19 As on the one hand the practice of Tapasya intensifies altruistic 20 feelings in the devotee and actuates him to unselfish work, so also 21 the pursuit of work for the sake of others carries the worker to the 22 last fruition of Tapasya, namely the purification of the heart, and 23 leads him thus to the realisation of the supreme Atman (Self).

24 Disciple: But, sir, how few of us can work whole-heartedly 25 for the sake of others from the very outset! How difficult it is for 26 such broad-mindedness to come at all as will make men sacrifice 27 the desire for their own happiness and devote their lives for others!

28 Swamiji: And how many have their minds going after 29 Tapasya? With the attraction for lust and lucre working the other 30 way, how many long for the realisation of God? In fact, disinterested 31 work is quite as difficult as Tapasya. So you have no right to say 32 anything against those who go in for work in the cause of others. If 33 you find Tapasya to be to your liking, well, go on with it. Another 34 may find work as congenial to himself, and you have no right to 35 make a prohibition in his case. You seem to have the settled idea in 36 your mind that work is no Tapasya at all!

37 Disciple: Yes, sir, before this I used to mean quite a different 38 thing by Tapasya.

39 Swamiji: As by continuing our religious practices we 40 gradually develop a certain determined tendency for it, so by 41 performing disinterested work over and over again, even 42 unwillingly, we gradually find the will merging itself in it. The 43 inclination to work for others develops in this way, do you see? Just 44 do some such work even though unwillingly, and then see if the 45 actual fruit of Tapasya is realised within or not. As the outcome of 46 work for the sake of others, the angularities of the mind get 47 smoothed down, and men are gradually prepared for sincere self-

1 ¹⁷¹ ?A sweetmeat usually about two inches in length, made mostly of fresh 2 cheese fried in ghee and put in syrup.
3

1 sacrifice for the good of others.

2 Disciple: But, sir, what is the necessity at all for doing good 3 to others?

4 Swamiji: Well, it is necessary for one's own good. We become 5 forgetful of the ego when we think of the body as dedicated to the 6 service of others--the body with which most complacently we 7 identify the ego. And in the long run comes the consciousness of 8 disembodiness. The more intently you think of the well-being of 9 others, the more oblivious of self you become. In this way, as 10 gradually your heart gets purified by work, you will come to feel the 11 truth that your own Self is pervading all beings and all things. Thus 12 it is that doing good to others constitutes a way, a means of 13 revealing one's own Self or Atman. Know this also to be one of the 14 spiritual practices, a discipline for God-realisation. Its aim also is 15 Self-realisation. Exactly as that aim is attained by Jnana 16 (knowledge), Bhakti (devotion) and so on, also by work for the sake 17 of others.

18 Disciple: But, sir, if I am to keep thinking of others day and 19 night, when shall I contemplate on the Atman? If I rest wholly 20 occupied with something particular and relative, how can I realise 21 the Atman which is Absolute?

22 Swamiji: The highest aim of all disciplines, all spiritual paths, 23 is the attainment of the knowledge of Atman. If you, by being 24 devoted to the service of others and by getting your heart purified 25 by such work, attain to the vision of all beings as the Self, what else 26 remains to be attained in the way of Self-realisation? Would you say 27 that Self-realisation is the state of existing as inert matter, as this 28 wall or as this piece of wood, for instance?

29 Disciple: Though that is not the meaning, yet what the 30 scriptures speak of as the withdrawal of the Self into Its real nature 31 consists in the arresting of all mind-functions and all work.

32 Swamiji: Yes, this Samadhi of which the scriptures speak is a 33 state not at all easy to attain. When very rarely it appears in 34 somebody, it does not last for long; so what will he keep himself 35 occupied with? Thus it is that after realising that state described in 36 the scriptures, the saint sees the Self in all beings and in that 37 consciousness devotes himself to service, so that any Karma that 38 was yet left to be worked out through the body may exhaust itself.
39 It is this state which has been described by the authors of the 40 Shastras (scriptures) as Jivanmukti, "Freedom while living".

41 Disciple: So after all it comes about, sir, that unless this state 42 of Jivanmukti is attained, work for the sake of others can never be 43 pursued in the truest sense of the term.

44 Swamiji: Yes, that is what the Shastras say, but they also say 45 that work or service for the good of others leads to this state of 46 Jivanmukti. Otherwise there would be no need on the part of the 47 Shastras to teach a separate path of religious practice, called the 48 Karma-Yoga.

49 The disciple now understood the point and became silent,

1 and Swamiji giving up the point commenced rendering in a voice of 2 superhuman sweetness the song composed by Babu Girish Chandra 3 Ghosh to commemorate Shri Ramakrishna's Nativity, and 4 beginning:

5 "Who art Thou lying on the lap of the poor Brahmin matron."

8 [Place: The rented Math premises at Belur. Year: 1898.]

9 Today Swamiji is to perform a sacrifice and install Shri 10 Ramakrishna on the site of the new Math. The disciple has been 11 staying at the Math since the night before, with a view to 12 witnessing the installation ceremony.

13 In the morning Swamiji had his bath in the Ganga and 14 entered the worship-room. Then he made offerings to the sacred 15 Padukas (slippers) of Shri Ramakrishna and fell to meditation.

16 Meditation and worship over, preparations were now made 17 for going to the new Math premises. Swamiji himself took on his 18 right shoulder the ashes of Shri Ramakrishna's body preserved in a 19 copper casket, and led the van. The disciple in company with other 20 Sannyasins brought up the rear. There was the music of bells and 21 conchs. On his way Swamiji said to the disciple, "Shri Ramakrishna 22 said to me, 'Wherever you will take me on your shoulders, there I 23 will go and stay, be it under a tree or in a hut.' It is therefore that I 24 am myself carrying him on my shoulders to the new Math grounds.
25 Know it for certain that Shri Ramakrishna will keep his seat fixed 26 there, for the welfare of many, for a long time to come."

27 Disciple: When was it that he said this to you?

28 Swamiji: Didn't you hear from them? It was at the Cossipur 29 garden.

30 Disciple: I see. It was on this occasion, I suppose, that the 31 split took place between Shri Ramakrishna's Sannyasin and 32 householder disciples regarding the privilege of serving him?

33 Swamiji: Yes, but not exactly a "split"--it was only a 34 misunderstanding, that's all. Rest assured that among those that 35 are Shri Ramakrishna's devotees, and have truly obtained his 36 grace, there is no sect or schism, there cannot be--be they 37 householders or Sannyasins. As to that kind of slight 38 misunderstanding, do you know what it was due to? Well, each 39 devotee colours Shri Ramakrishna in the light of his own 40 understanding and each forms his own idea of him from his peculiar 41 standpoint. He was, as it were, a great Sun and each one of us is 42 eyeing him, as it were, through a different kind of coloured glass 43 and coming to look upon that one Sun as parti-coloured. Of course, 44 it is quite true that this leads to schism in course of time. But then, 45 such schisms rarely occur in the lifetime of those who are fortunate 46 enough to have come in direct contact with an Avatara. The 47 effulgence of that Personality, who takes pleasure only in his Self, 48 dazzles their eyes and sweeps away pride, egotism, and narrow-49 mindedness from their minds. Consequently they find no

1 opportunity to create sects and party factions. They are content to 2 offer him their heart's worship, each in his own fashion.

3 Disciple: Sir, do the devotees of the Avatara, then, view him
4 differently notwithstanding their knowing him to be God, and does 5 this lead to the succeeding generations of their followers to limit 6 themselves within narrow bounds and form various little sects?

7 Swamiji: Quite so. Hence sects are bound to form in course
8 of time. Look, for instance, how the followers of Chaitanya Deva 9 have been divided into two or three hundred sects; and those of 10 Jesus hold thousands of creeds. But all those sects without 11 exception follow Chaitanya Deva or Jesus, and none else.

12 Disciple: Then, perhaps, Shri Ramakrishna's followers, too, 13 will be divided in course of time into various sects?

14 Swamiji: Well, of course. But then this Math that we are 15 building will harmonise all creeds, all standpoints. Just as Shri 16 Ramakrishna held highly liberal views, this Math too, will be a 17 centre for propagating similar ideas. The blazing light of universal 18 harmony that will emanate from here will flood the whole world.

19 While all this was going on, the party reached the Math
20 premises. Swamiji took the casket down from his shoulder, placed 21 in on the carpet spread on the ground, and bowed before it 22 touching the ground with his forehead. Others too followed suit.

23 Then Swamiji again sat for worship. After going through the 24 Puja (worship), he lighted the sacrificial fire, made oblations to it, 25 and himself cooking Payasa (milk-rice with sugar) with the help of 26 his brother-disciples, offered it to Shri Ramakrishna. Probably also 27 he initiated certain householders on the spot that day. All this 28 ceremony being done, Swamiji cordially addressed the assembled 29 gentlemen and said, "Pray today all of you, heart and soul, to the 30 holy feet of Shri Ramakrishna, that the great Avatara of this cycle 31 that he is, he may "For the welfare of the many, and for the 32 happiness of the many--{Sanskrit}", reside in this holy spot from 33 this day for a great length of time, and ever continue to make it the 34 unique centre of harmony amongst all religions." Everyone prayed 35 like that with folded palms. Swamiji next called the disciple and 36 said, "None of us (Sannyasins) have any longer the right to take 37 back this casket of Shri Ramakrishna, for we have installed him
38 here today. It behoves you, therefore, to take it on your head back 39 (to Nilambar Babu's garden)". Seeing that the disciple hesitated to 40 touch the casket, Swamiji said, "No fear, touch it, you have my 41 order." The disciple gladly obeyed the injunction, lifted the casket 42 on his head, and moved on. He went first, next came Swamiji, and 43 the rest followed. Swamiji said to the disciple on the way, "Shri 44 Ramakrishna has today sat on your head and is blessing you. Take 45 care, never let your mind think of anything transitory, from this day 46 forth." Before crossing a small bridge, Swamiji again said to him, 47 "Beware, now, you must move very cautiously."

48 Thus all safely reached the Math and rejoiced. Swamiji now 49 entered into a conversation with the disciple, in the course of which 50 he said, "Through the will of Shri Ramakrishna, his

1 Dharmakshetra--sanctified spot--has been established today. A 2 twelve years' anxiety is off my head. Do you know what I am
3 thinking of at this moment?--This Math will be a centre of learning
4 and spiritual discipline. Householders of a virtuous turn like 5 yourselves will build houses on the surrounding land and live there, 6 and Sannyasins, men of renunciation, will live in the centre, while 7 on that plot of land on the south of the Math, buildings will be 8 erected for English and American disciples to live in. How do you 9 like this idea?

10 Disciple: Sir, it is indeed a wonderful fancy of yours.

11 Swamiji: A fancy do you call it? Not at all, everything will 12 come about in time. I am but laying the foundation. There will be 13 lots of further developments in future. Some portion of it I shall live 14 to work out. And I shall infuse into you fellows various ideas, which 15 you will work out in future. It will not do merely to listen to great 16 principles. You must apply them in the practical field, turn them into 17 constant practice. What will be the good of cramming the high-18 sounding dicta of the scriptures? You have first to grasp the 19 teachings of the Shastras, and then to work them out in practical 20 life. Do you understand? This is called practical religion.

21 Thus the talk went on, and gradually drifted to the topic of 22 Shankaracharya. The disciple was a great adherent of Shankara, 23 almost to the point of fanaticism. He used to look upon Shankara's 24 Advaita philosophy as the crest of all philosophies and could not 25 bear any criticism of him. Swamiji was aware of this, and, as was 26 his wont, wanted to break this one-sidedness of the disciple.

27 Swamiji: Shankara's intellect was sharp like the razor. He 28 was a good arguer and a scholar, no doubt of that, but he had no 29 great liberality; his heart too seems to have been like that. Besides, 30 he used to take great pride in his Brahmanism--much like a 31 southern Brahmin of the priest class, you may say. How he has 32 defended in his commentary on the Vedanta-Sutras that the non-33 Brahmin castes will not attain to a supreme knowledge of Brahman!
34 And what specious arguments! Referring to Vidura¹⁷² he has said
35 that he became a knower of Brahman by reason of his Brahmin
36 body in the previous incarnation. Well, if nowadays any Shudra 37 attains to a knowledge of Brahman, shall we have to side with your 38 Shankara and maintain that because he had been a Brahmin in his 39 previous birth, therefore he has attained to this knowledge?
40 Goodness! What is the use of dragging in Brahminism with so much 41 ado? The Vedas have entitled any one belonging to the three upper 42 castes to study the Vedas and the realisation of Brahman, haven't 43 they? So Shankara had no need whatsoever of displaying this 44 curious bit of pedantry on this subject, contrary to the Vedas. And 45 such was his heart that he burnt to death lots of Buddhist monks-- 46 by defeating them in argument! And the Buddhists, too, were 47 foolish enough to burn themselves to death, simply because they 48 were worsted in argument! What can you call such an action on 1 ¹⁷² ?Uncle of the Pandava brothers, and a most saintly character, considered to 2 be an incarnation of Dharma.

3

1 Shankara's part except fanaticism? But look at Buddha's heart!
2 Ever ready to give his own life to save the life of even a kid--what to 3 speak of "{Sanskrit}"--For the welfare of the many, for the happiness 4 of the many"! See, what a large-heartedness--what a compassion!

5 Disciple: Can't we call that attitude of the Buddha, too, 6 another kind of fanaticism, sir? He went to the length of sacrificing 7 his own body for the sake of a beast!

8 Swamiji: But consider how much good to the world and its 9 beings came out of that 'fanaticism' of his--how many monasteries 10 and schools and colleges, how many public hospitals and veterinary 11 refuges were established, how developed architecture became-- 12 think of that. What was there in this country before Buddha's 13 advent? Only a number of religious principles recorded on bundles 14 of palm leaves--and those too known only to a few. It was Lord 15 Buddha who brought them down to the practical field and showed 16 how to apply them in the everyday life of the people. In a sense, he 17 was the living embodiment of true Vedanta.

18 Disciple: But, sir, it was he who by breaking down the 19 Varnashrama Dharma (duty according to caste and order of life) 20 brought about a revolution within the fold of Hinduism in India, and 21 there seems to be some truth also in the remark that the religion he 22 preached was for this reason banished in course of time from the 23 soil of India.

24 Swamiji: It was not through his teachings that Buddhism 25 came to such degradation, it was the fault of his followers. By 26 becoming too philosophic they lost much of their breadth of heart.
27 Then gradually the corruption known as Vamachara (unrestrained 28 mixing with women in the name of religion) crept in and ruined 29 Buddhism. Such diabolical rites are not to be met with in any 30 modern Tantra! One of the principal centres of Buddhism was 31 Jagannatha or Puri, and you have simply to go there and look at the 32 abominable figures carved on the temple walls to be convinced of 33 this. Puri has come under the sway of the Vaishnavas since the time 34 of Ramanuja and Shri Chaitanya. Through the influence of great 35 personages like these the place now wears an altogether different 36 aspect.

37 Disciple: Sir, the Shastras tell us of various special influences 38 attaching to places of pilgrimage. How far is this claim true?

39 Swamiji: When the whole world is the Form Universal of the 40 Eternal Atman, the Ishvara (God), what is there to wonder at in 41 special influences attaching to particular places? There are places 42 where He manifests Himself specially, either spontaneously or 43 through the earnest longing of pure souls, and the ordinary man, if 44 he visits those places with eagerness, attains his end quite easily.
45 Therefore it may lead to the development of the Self in time to have 46 recourse to holy places. But know it for certain that there is no 47 greater Tirtha (holy spot) than the body of man. Nowhere else is 48 the Atman so manifest as here. That car of Jagannatha that you see 49 is but a concrete symbol of this corporeal car. You have to behold
50 the Atman in this car of the body. Haven't you read "{Sanskrit}"-- 51 Know the Atman to be seated on the chariot" etc., "{Sanskrit}"--All

1 the gods worship the Vamana (the Supreme Being in a diminutive 2 form) seated in the interior of the body"? The sight of the Atman is 3 the real vision of Jagannatha. And the statement "{Sanskrit}-- 4 Seeing the Vamana on the car, one is no more subject to rebirth", 5 means that if you can visualise the Atman which is within you, and 6 disregarding which you are always identifying yourself with this 7 curious mass of matter, this body of yours--if you can see that, then 8 there is no more rebirth for you. If the sight of the Lord's image on 9 a wooden framework confers liberation on people, then crores of 10 them would be liberated every year--specially with such facility of 11 communication by rail nowadays! But I do not mean to say that the 12 notion which devotees in general entertain towards Shri Jagannatha 13 is either nothing or erroneous. There is a class of people who 14 gradually rise to higher and higher truths with the help of that 15 image. So it is an undoubted fact that in and through that image 16 there is a special manifestation of the Lord.

17 Disciple: Sir, are there different religions then for the 18 ignorant and the wise?

19 Swamiji: Quite so. Otherwise why do your scriptures go to 20 such lengths over the specification of the qualifications of an 21 aspirant? All is truth no doubt, but relative truth, different in 22 degrees. Whatever man knows to be truth is of a like nature: some 23 are lesser truths, others, higher ones in comparison with them, 24 while the Absolute Truth is God alone. This Atman is altogether 25 dormant in matter; in man, designated as a living being, It is 26 partially conscious; while in personages like Shri Krishna, Buddha, 27 and Shankara the same Atman has reached the superconscious 28 stage. There is a state even beyond that, which cannot be 29 expressed in terms of thought or language--{Sanskrit}.

30 Disciple: Sir, there are certain Bhakti sects who hold that we 31 must practise devotion by placing ourselves in a particular attitude 32 or relation with God. They do not understand anything about the 33 glory of the Atman and so forth, and exclusively recommend this 34 constant devotional attitude.

35 Swamiji: What they say is true to their own case. By 36 continued practice along this line, they too shall feel an awakening 37 of Brahman within them. And what we (Sannyasins) are doing is 38 another kind of practice. We have renounced the world. So how will 39 it suit us to practise by putting ourselves in some worldly relation-- 40 such as that of mother, or father, or wife or son, and so forth--with 41 God? To us all these ideals appear to be narrow. Of course it is very 42 difficult to qualify for the worship of God in His absolute, 43 unconditioned aspect. But must we go in for poison because we get 44 no nectar? Always talk and hear and reason about this Atman. By 45 continuing to practise in this way, you will find in time that the Lion 46 (Brahman) will wake up in you too. Go beyond all those relative 47 attitudes--mere sports of the mind. Listen to what Yama says in the 48 Katha Upanisad: {Sanskrit}¹⁷³ Arise! Awake! and stop not until the 49 goal is reached!

1 ¹⁷³ ?Arise, awake, and learn by approaching the elite.
2

1 Here the subject was brought to a close. The bell for taking 2 Prasada (consecrated food) rang, and Swamiji went to partake of it, 3 followed by the disciple.

4 5 III

6 [Place: the rented Math premises at Belur. Time: February, 7 1898.]

8 Swamiji has removed the Math from Alambazar to Nilambar 9 Babu's garden at Belur. He is very glad to have come to these new 10 premises. He said to the disciple when the latter came, "See how 11 the Ganga flows by and what a nice building! I like this place. This 12 is the ideal kind of place for a Math." It was then afternoon.

13 In the evening the disciple found Swamiji alone in the upper 14 storey, and the talk went on, on various topics, in the course of 15 which he wanted to know about Swamiji's boyhood days. Swamiji 16 began to say, "From my very boyhood I was a dare-devil sort of 17 fellow. Otherwise, do you think I could make a tour round the world 18 without a single copper in my pocket?"

19 In boyhood Swamiji had a great predilection for hearing the 20 chanting of the Ramayana by professional singers. Wherever such 21 chanting would take place in the neighbourhood, he would attend 22 it, leaving sport and all. Swamiji related how, while listening to the 23 Ramayana, on some days, he would be so deeply engrossed in it as 24 to forget all about home, and would have no idea that it was late at 25 night, and that he must return home, and so forth. One day during 26 the chant he heard that the monkey-god Hanuman lived in banana 27 orchards. Forthwith he was so much convinced that when the chant 28 was over, he did not go home straight that night, but loitered in a 29 banana orchard close to his house, with the hope of catching sight 30 of Hanuman, till it was very late in the night.

31 In his student life he used to pass the day-time only in 32 playing and gambolling with his mates, and study at night bolting 33 the doors. And none could know when he prepared his lessons.

34 The disciple asked, "Did you see any visions, sir, during your 35 school-days?"

36 Swamiji: While at school, one night I was meditating within 37 closed doors and had a fairly deep concentration of mind. How long 38 I meditated in that way, I cannot say. It was over, and I still kept my 39 seat, when from the southern wall of that room a luminous figure 40 stepped out and stood in front of me. There was a wonderful 41 radiance on its visage, yet there seemed to be no play of emotion on 42 it. It was the figure of a Sannyasin absolutely calm, shaven-headed, 43 and staff and Kamandalu (a Sannyasin's wooden water-bowl) in 44 hand. He gazed at me for some time and seemed as if he would 45 address me. I too gazed at him in speechless wonder. Then a kind of 46 fright seized me, I opened the door, and hurried out of the room.
47 Then it struck me that it was foolish of me to run away like that, 48 that perhaps he might say something to me. But I have never met 49 that figure since. Many a time and often I have thought that if again

1 I saw him, I would no more be afraid but would speak to him. But I 2 met him no more.

3 Disciple: Did you ever think on the matter afterwards?

4 Swamiji: Yes, but I could find no clue to its solution. I now 5 think it was the Lord Buddha whom I saw.

6 After a short pause, Swamiji said, "When the mind is purified, 7 when one is free from the attachment for lust and gold, one sees 8 lots of visions, most wonderful ones! But one should not pay heed to 9 them. The aspirant cannot advance further if he sets his mind
10 constantly on them. Haven't you heard that Shri Ramakrishna used 11 to say, 'Countless jewels lie uncared for in the outer courts of my 12 beloved Lord's sanctum'? We must come face to face with the 13 Atman; what is the use of setting one's mind on vagaries like 14 those?"

15 After saying these words, Swamiji sat silent for a while, lost 16 in thought over something. He then resumed:

17 "Well, while I was in America I had certain wonderful powers 18 developed in me. By looking into people's eyes I could fathom in a 19 trice the contents of their minds. The workings of everybody's mind 20 would be potent to me, like a fruit on the palm of one's hand. To 21 some I used to give out these things, and of those to whom I 22 communicated these, many would become my disciples; whereas 23 those who came to mix with me with some ulterior motive would 24 not, on coming across this power of mine, even venture into my 25 presence any more.

26 "When I began lecturing in Chicago and other cities, I had to 27 deliver every week some twelve or fifteen or even more lectures at 28 times. This excessive strain on the body and mind would exhaust 29 me to a degree. I seemed to run short of subjects for lectures and 30 was anxious where to find new topics for the morrow's lecture. New 31 thoughts seemed altogether scarce. One day, after the lecture, I lay 32 thinking of what means to adopt next. The thought induced a sort of 33 slumber, and in that state I heard as if somebody standing by me 34 was lecturing--many new ideas and new veins of thought, which I 35 had scarcely heard or thought of in my life. On awaking I 36 remembered them and reproduced them in my lecture. I cannot 37 enumerate how often this phenomenon took place. Many, many 38 days did I hear such lectures while lying in bed. Sometimes the 39 lecture would be delivered in such a loud voice that the inmates of 40 adjacent rooms would hear the sound and ask me the next day, 41 "With whom, Swamiji, were you talking so loudly last night?" I used 42 to avoid the question somehow. Ah, it was a wonderful 43 phenomenon."

44 The disciple was wonder-struck at Swamiji's words and after 45 thinking deeply on the matter said, "Sir, then you yourself must 46 have lectured like that in your subtle body, and sometimes it would 47 be echoed by the gross body also."

48 Swamiji listened and replied, "Well, may be."

49 The topic of his American experiences came up. Swamiji

1 said, "In that country the women are more learned than men. They 2 are all well versed in science and philosophy, and that is why they 3 would appreciate and honour me so much. The men are grinding all 4 day at their work and have very little leisure, whereas the women, 5 by studying and teaching in schools and colleges, have become 6 highly learned. Whichever side you turn your eyes in America, you 7 see the power and influence of women."

8 Disciple: Well, sir, did not the bigoted Christians oppose you?

9 Swamiji: Yes, they did. When people began to honour me, 10 then the Padris were after me. They spread many slanders about 11 me by publishing them in the newspapers. Many asked me to 12 contradict these slanders. But I never took the slightest notice of 13 them. It is my firm conviction that no great work is accomplished in 14 this world by low cunning; so without paying any heed to these vile 15 slanders, I used to work steadily at my mission. The upshot I used 16 to find was that often my slanderers, feeling repentant afterwards, 17 would surrender to me and offer apologies, by themselves
18 contradicting the slanders in the papers. Sometimes it so happened 19 that learning that I had been invited to a certain house, somebody 20 would communicate those slanders to my host, who hearing them, 21 would leave home, locking his door. When I went there to attend the 22 invitation, I found it was deserted and nobody was there. Again a 23 few days afterwards, they themselves, learning the truth, would 24 feel sorry for their previous conduct and come to offer themselves 25 as disciples. The fact is, my son, this whole world is full of mean 26 ways of worldliness. But men of real moral courage and 27 discrimination are never deceived by these. Let the world say what 28 it chooses, I shall tread the path of duty--know this to be the line of 29 action for a hero. Otherwise, if one has to attend day and night to 30 what this man says or that man writes, no great work is achieved in 31 this world. Do you know this Sanskrit Shloka: "Let those who are 32 versed in the ethical codes praise or blame, let Lakshmi, the 33 goddess of Fortune, come or go wherever she wisheth, let death 34 overtake him today or after a century, the wise man never swerves 35 from the path of rectitude."¹⁷⁴ Let people praise you or blame you, 36 let fortune smile or frown upon you, let your body fall today or after 37 a Yuga, see that you do not deviate from the path of Truth. How 38 much of tempest and waves one has to weather, before one reaches 39 the haven of Peace! The greater a man has become, the fiercer
40 ordeal he has had to pass through. Their lives have been tested true 41 by the touchstone of practical life, and only then have they been 42 acknowledged great by the world. Those who are faint-hearted and 43 cowardly sink their barks near the shore, frightened by the raging 44 of waves on the sea. He who is a hero never casts a glance at these.
45 Come what may, I must attain my ideal first--this is Purushakara, 46 manly endeavour; without such manly endeavour no amount of 47 Divine help will be of any avail to banish your inertia.

48 Disciple: Is, then, reliance on Divine help a sign of weakness?

49 Swamiji: In the Shastras real self-surrender and reliance on ¹⁷⁴ ?Bhartrihari's Nitishataka.

1 God has been indicated as the culmination of human achievement.
2 But in your country nowadays the way people speak of Daiva or 3 reliance on Divine dispensation is a sign of death, the outcome of 4 great cowardliness; conjuring up some monstrous idea of Godhead
5 and trying to saddle that with all your faults and shortcomings.
6 Haven't you heard Shri Ramakrishna's story about "the sin of killing 7 a cow"?¹⁷⁵ In the end the owner of the garden had to suffer for the 8 sin of killing the cow. Nowadays everybody says: "I am acting as I 9 am being directed by the Lord", and thus throws the burden of both 10 his sins and virtues on the Lord. As if he is himself the lotus-leaf in 11 the water (untouched by it)! If everybody can truly live always in 12 this mood, then he is a Free Soul. But what really happens is that 13 for the "good" I have the credit, but the "bad" Thou, God, art 14 responsible! Praise be to such reliance on God! Without the 15 attainment of the fullness of Knowledge or Divine Love, such a state 16 of absolute reliance on the Lord does not come. He who is truly and 17 sincerely reliant on the Lord goes beyond all idea of the duality of 18 good and bad. The brightest example of the attainment of this state 19 among us at the present time is Nag Mahashaya.¹⁷⁶

20 Then the conversation drifted to the subject of Nag 21 Mahashaya. Swamiji said, "One does not find a second devoted 22 Bhakta like him--Oh, when shall I see him again!"

23 Disciple: He will soon come to Calcutta to meet you, so 24 mother (Nag Mahashaya's wife) has written to me.

25 Swamiji: Shri Ramakrishna used to compare him to King 26 Janaka. A man with such control over all the senses one does not 27 hear of even, much less come across. You must associate with him 28 as much as you can. He is one of Shri Ramakrishna's nearest 29 disciples.

30 Disciple: Many in our part of the country call him a madcap.
31 But I have known him to be a great soul since the very first day of 32 my meeting him. He loves me much, and I have his fervent 33 blessings.

34 Swamiji: Since you have attained the company of such a 35 Mahapurusha (holy soul), what more have you to fear about? As an 36 effect of many lives of Tapasya one is blessed with the company of 37 such a great soul. How does he live at home?

38 Disciple: Sir, he has got no business or anything of the kind.
39 He is always busy in serving the guests who come to his house.
40 Beyond the small sum the Pal Babus give him, he has no other

1 ¹⁷⁵ ?A man had laid out a beautiful garden into which a cow strayed one day
2 and did much injury. The man in rage gave some blows to the cow which killed 3 her. Then to avoid the terrible sin he bethought himself of a trick; knowing that 4 Indra was the presiding deity of the land, he tried to lay the blame on him. Indra 5 perceiving his sophistry appeared on the scene in the guise of a Brahmin and by 6 a number of questions drew from him the answer that each and every item in 7 connection with that garden was the man's own handiwork; whereupon Indra 8 exposed his cunning with the cutting remark, "Well, everything here has been 9 done by you, and Indra alone is responsible for the killing of the cow, eh!"

1 means of subsistence; his expenses, however, are like those in a 2 rich family. But he does not spend a pice for his own enjoyment, all 3 that expense is for the service of others. Service--service of others--
4 this seems to be the great mission of his life. It sometimes strikes 5 me that realising the Atman in all creatures, he is engrossed in 6 serving the whole world as a part and parcel of himself. In the 7 service of others he works incessantly and is not conscious even of 8 his body. I suppose, he always lives on the plane which you, sir, call 9 the superconscious state of the mind.

10 Swamiji: Why should not that be? How greatly was he 11 beloved of Shri Ramakrishna! In your East Bengal, one of Shri 12 Ramakrishna's divine companions has been born in the person of 13 Nag Mahashaya. By his radiance Eastern Bengal has become 14 effulgent.

18 [Place: The rented Math Premises at Belur. Year: 1898,
19 November]

20 It is two or three days since Swamiji has returned from 21 Kashmir. His health is indifferent. When the disciple came to the 22 Math, Swami Brahmananda said, "Since returning from Kashmir, 23 Swamiji does not speak to anybody, he sits in one place rapt in 24 thought; you go to him and by conversation try to draw his mind a 25 little towards worldly objects."

26 The disciple coming to Swamiji's room in the upper storey 27 found him sitting as if immersed in deep mediation. There was no 28 smile on his face, his brilliant eyes had no outward look, as if intent 29 on seeing something within. Seeing the disciple, he only said, "You 30 have come, my son? Please take your seat", and lapsed into silence.
31 The disciple seeing the inside of his left eye reddened asked, "How 32 is it that your eye is red?" "That is nothing", said Swamiji and was 33 again silent. When even after along time Swamiji did not speak, the 34 disciple was a little troubled at heart and touching his feet said, 35 "Won't you relate to me what things you have seen at Amarnath?"
36 By the disciple's touching his feet, the tensy of his mood was 37 broken a little, as if his attention was diverted a little outwards. He 38 said, "Since visiting Amarnath, I feel as if Shiva is sitting on my 39 head for twenty-four hours and would not come down." The disciple 40 heard it with speechless wonder.

41 Swamiji: I underwent great religious austerities at Amarnath 42 and then in the temple of Kshir Bhavani. Go and prepare me some 43 tobacco, I will relate everything to you.

1 The disciple joyfully obeyed the order. Swamiji slowly
2 smoking began to say, "On the way to Amarnath, I made a very 3 steep ascent on the mountain. Pilgrims do not generally travel by 4 that path. But the determination came upon me that I must go by 5 that path, and so I did. The labour of the strenuous ascent has told 6 on my body. The cold there is so biting that you feel it like pin-7 pricks."

8 Disciple: I have heard that it is the custom to visit the image 9 of Amarnath naked; is it so?

10 Swamiji: Yes, I entered the cave with only my Kaupina on and 11 my body smeared with holy ash; I did not then feel any cold or heat.
12 But when I came out of the temple, I was benumbed by the cold.

13 Disciple: Did you see the holy pigeons? I have heard, in that 14 cold no living creatures are found to live, but a flight of pigeons 15 from some unknown place frequents the place occasionally.

16 Swamiji: Yes, I saw three or four white pigeons; whether they 17 live in the cave or the neighbouring hills, I could not ascertain.

18 Disciple: Sir, I have heard people say that the sight of 19 pigeons on coming out of the temple indicates that one has really 20 been blessed with the vision of Shiva.

21 Swamiji: I have heard that the sight of the pigeons brings to 22 fruition whatever desires one may have.

23 Then Swamiji said that on the way back he returned to 24 Srinagar by the common route by which the pilgrims return. A few 25 days after returning to Srinagar, he went to visit Kshir Bhavani Devi 26 and staying there for seven days worshipped the Devi and made 27 Homa to her with offerings of Kshira (condensed milk). Every day 28 he used to worship the Devi with a maund of Kshira as offering.
29 One day, while worshipping, the thought arose in Swamiji's mind: 30 "Mother Bhavani has been manifesting Her Presence here for 31 untold years. The Mohammedans came and destroyed her temple, 32 yet the people of the place did nothing to protect Her. Alas, if I were 33 then living I could never have borne it silently." When, thinking in 34 this strain, his mind was much oppressed with sorrow and anguish, 35 he distinctly heard the voice of the Mother saying, "It was 36 according to My desire that the Mohammedans destroyed this 37 temple. It is My desire that I should live in a dilapidated temple, 38 otherwise, can I not immediately erect a seven-storied temple of 39 gold here if I like? What can you do? Shall I protect you or shall you 40 protect me!" Swamiji said, "Since hearing that divine voice, I 41 cherish no more plans. The idea of building Maths etc. I have given 42 up; as Mother wills, so it will be." The disciple, speechless with 43 wonder, began to think, "Did he not one day tell me that whatever I 44 saw and heard was but the echo of the Atman within me, that there 45 was nothing outside?"--and fearlessly spoke it out also--"Sir, you 46 used to say that Divine Voices are the echo of our inward thoughts 47 and feelings." Swamiji gravely said, "Whether it be internal or 48 external, if you actually hear with your ears such a disembodied 49 voice, as I have done, can you deny it and call it false? Divine Voices 50 are actually heard, just as you and I are talking."

1 The disciple, without controverting accepted Swamiji's 2 words, for his words always carried conviction.

3 He then brought up the subject of departed spirits, and said, 4 "Sir, these ghosts and departed spirits we hear about--which the 5 Shastras also amply corroborate--are all these true or not?

6 Swamiji: Certainly they are true. Whatever you don't see, are 7 they all false for that? Beyond your sight, millions of universes are 8 revolving at great distances. Because you do not see them, are they 9 non-existent for that? But then, do not put your mind on these 10 subjects of ghosts and spirits. Your mental attitude towards them 11 should be one of indifference. Your duty is to realise the Atman 12 within this body. When you realise the Atman, ghosts and spirits will 13 be your slaves.

14 Disciple: But sir, I think that, if one sees them, it strengthens 15 one's belief in the hereafter, and dispels all doubts about it.

16 Swamiji: You are heroes; do you mean to say that even you 17 shall have to strengthen your belief in the hereafter by seeing 18 ghosts and spirits! You have read so many sciences and scriptures-- 19 have mastered so many secrets of this infinite universe--even with 20 such knowledge, you have to acquire the knowledge of the Atman
21 by seeing ghosts and spirits! What a shame!

22 Disciple: Well, sir, have you ever seen ghosts and spirits?

23 Swamiji narrated that a certain deceased relative of his used 24 to come to him as a disembodied spirit. Sometimes it used to bring 25 him information about distant events. But on verification, some of 26 its information was not found to be correct. Afterwards at a certain 27 place of pilgrimage Swamiji prayed for it mentally, wishing it might 28 be released--since then he did not see it again.

29 The disciple then questioned Swamiji if Shraddha or other 30 obsequial ceremonies appeased the departed spirits in any way.
31 Swamiji replied, "That is not impossible." On the disciple's asking 32 for the grounds of that belief Swamiji said, "I will explain the 33 subject to you at length some day. There are irrefutable arguments 34 to prove that the Shraddha ceremony appeases the departed
35 beings. Today I don't feel well. I shall explain it to you another day."
36 But the disciple did not get another opportunity to ask that question 37 to Swamiji.

38 39 V

40 [Place: The rented Math premises at Belur. Year: 1898,
41 November]

42 The Math is still situated in Nilambar Babu's garden house at 43 Belur. It is the month of November. Swamiji is now much engaged 44 in the study and discussion of Sanskrit scriptures. The couplet 45 beginning with "Achandala-pratihatarayah ", he composed about 46 this time. Today Swamiji composed the hymn, "Om Hring Ritam " 47 etc., and handing it over to the disciple said, "See if there is any 48 metrical defect in these stanzas." The disciple made a copy of the 49 poem for this purpose.

1 On this day it seemed as if the goddess of learning had 2 manifested herself on his tongue. With the disciple he fluently
3 talked about two hours at a stretch in exceedingly melodious
4 Sanskrit. After the disciple had copied the hymn, Swamiji said, "You 5 see, as I write immersed in thought, grammatical slips sometimes 6 occur; therefore I ask you all to look over them."

7 Disciple: Sir, these are not slips, but the licence of genius.

8 Swamiji: You may say so; but why will other people assent to 9 that? The other day I wrote an essay on "What is Hinduism", and 10 some amongst you even are complaining that it was written in a 11 very stiff Bengali. I think, language and thought also, like all other 12 things, become lifeless and monotonous in course of time. Such a 13 state seems to have happened now in this country. On the advent of 14 Shri Ramakrishna, however, a new current has set in, in thought 15 and language. Everything has now to be recast in new moulds.
16 Everything has to be propagated with the stamp of new genius.
17 Look, for example, how the old modes of Sannyasins are breaking, 18 yielding place to a new mould by degrees. The Sannyasins of the 19 present day have to go to distant countries for preaching, and if 20 they go in an ash-besmeared, half-nude body like the Sadhus (holy 21 men) of old, in the first place they won't be taken on board the 22 ships, and even if they anyhow reach foreign countries in that 23 dress, they will have to stay in jail. Everything requires to be 24 changed a little according to place, time, and civilisation.
25 Henceforth I am thinking of writing essays in Bengali. Litterateurs 26 will perhaps rail at them. Never mind--I shall try to cast the Bengali 27 language in a new mould. Nowadays, Bengali writers use too many 28 verbs in their writings; this takes away the force of the language. If 29 one can express the ideas of verbs with adjectives, it adds to the 30 force of the language; henceforth try to write in that style. Try to 31 write articles in that style in the Udbodhan. Do you know the 32 meaning of the use of verbs in language? It gives a pause to the 33 thought; hence the use of too many verbs in language is the sign of 34 weakness, like quick breathing, and indicates that there is not much 35 vitality in the language; that is why one cannot lecture well in the 36 Bengali language. He who has control over his language, does not 37 make frequent breaks in his thoughts. As your physique has been 38 rendered languid by living on a dietary of boiled rice and dal, 39 similar is the case with your language. In food, in modes of life, in 40 thought, and in language, energy has to be infused. With the 41 infusion of vitality all round and the circulation of blood in all 42 arteries and veins, one should feel the throbbing of new life in 43 everything--then only will the people of this land be able to survive 44 the present terrible struggle for existence; otherwise the country 45 and the race will vanish in the enveloping shadows of death at no 46 distant date.

47 Disciple: Sir, the constitution of the people of this country
48 has been moulded in a peculiar way through long ages. Is it 49 possible to change that within a short time?

50 Swamiji: If you have known the old ways to be wrong, then 51 why don't you, as I say, learn to live in a better way? By your 52 example ten other people will follow suit, and by theirs another fifty

1 people will learn. By this process in course of time the new idea will 2 awaken in the hearts of the whole race. But even if after 3 understanding, you do not act accordingly, I shall know that you are 4 wise in words only--but practically you are fools.

5 Disciple: Your words, sir, infuse great courage, enthusiasm,
6 energy and strength into the heart.

7 Swamiji: By degrees the heart has to be strengthened. If one 8 man is made, it equals the result of a hundred thousand lectures.
9 Making the mind and lips at one, the ideas have to be practised in 10 life. This is what Shri Ramakrishna meant by "allowing no theft in 11 the chamber of thought". You have to be practical in all spheres of 12 work. The whole country has been ruined by masses of theories. He 13 who is the true son of Shri Ramakrishna will manifest the practical 14 side of religious ideas and will set to work with one-pointed 15 devotion without paying heed to the prattling of men or of society.
16 Haven't you heard of the couplet of Tulsidas: "The elephant walks
17 the market-place and a thousand curs bark at him; so the Sadhus 18 have no ill-feeling if worldly people slander them." You have to walk 19 in this way. No count should be taken of the words of people. If one 20 has to pay heed to their praise or blame, no great work can be 21 accomplished in this life. "{Sanskrit}--The Atman is not to be 22 gained by the weak." If there is no strength in the body and mind, 23 the Atman cannot be realised. First you have to build the body by 24 good nutritious food--then only will the mind be strong. The mind is 25 but the subtle part of the body. You must retain great strength in 26 your mind and words. "I am low, I am low"--repeating these ideas in 27 the mind, man belittles and degrades himself. Therefore, the 28 Shastra (Ashtavakra Samhita, I.11) says: "{Sanskrit}--He who 29 thinks himself free, free he becomes; he who thinks himself bound, 30 bound he remains--this popular saying is true: 'As one thinks, so one 31 becomes'." He alone who is always awake to the idea of freedom, 32 becomes free; he who thinks he is bound, endures life after life in 33 the state of bondage. It is a fact. This truth holds good both in 34 spiritual and temporal matters. Those who are always down-35 hearted and dispirited in this life can do no work; from life to life 36 they come and go wailing and moaning. "The earth is enjoyed by 37 heroes"--this is the unfailing truth. Be a hero. Always say, "I have no 38 fear." Tell this to everybody--"Have no fear". Fear is death, fear is 39 sin, fear is hell, fear is unrighteousness, fear is wrong life. All the 40 negative thoughts and ideas that are in this world have proceeded 41 from this evil spirit of fear. This fear alone has kept the sun, air and 42 death in their respective places and functions, allowing none to 43 escape from their bounds. Therefore the Shruti says (Katha 44 Upanishad, II.iii,3) says: "{Sanskrit}--Through fear of this, fire 45 burns, the sun heats; through fear Indra and Vayu are carrying on 46 their functions, and Death stalks upon this earth." When the gods 47 Indra, Chandra, Vayu, Varuna will attain to fearlessness, then will 48 they be one with Brahman, and all this phantasm of the world will 49 vanish. Therefore I say, "Be fearless, be fearless."

50 Swamiji, in saying these words, appeared in the eyes of the 51 disciple like the very embodiment of "fearlessness", and he thought, 52 "How in his presence even the fear of death leaves one and

1 vanishes into nothingness!"

2 Swamiji continued: In this embodied existence, you will be 3 tossed again and again on the waves of happiness and misery, 4 prosperity and adversity--but know them all to be of momentary
5 duration. Never care for them. "I am birthless, the deathless Atman, 6 whose nature is Intelligence"--implanting this idea firmly in your 7 heart, you should pass the days of your life. "I have no birth, no 8 death, I am the Atman untouched by anything"--lose yourself 9 completely in this idea. If you can once become one with this idea, 10 then in the hour of sorrow and tribulation, it will rise of itself in 11 your mind, and you will not have to strive with difficulty to bring it 12 up. The other day, I was a guest of Babu Priyanath Mukherjee at 13 Baidyanath. There I had such a spell of asthma that I felt like dying.
14 But from within, with every breath arose the deep-toned sound, "I 15 am He, I am He". Resting on the pillow, I was waiting for the vital 16 breath to depart, and observing all the time that from within was 17 being heard the sound of "I am He, I am He!" I could hear all along 18 "{Sanskrit}--The Brahman, the One without a second, alone exists, 19 nothing manifold exists in the world."

20 The disciple, struck with amazement said, "Sir, talking with 21 you and listening to your realisations, I feel no necessity for the 22 study of scriptures."

23 Swamiji: No! Scriptures have to be studied also. For the 24 attainment of Jnana, study of scriptures is essential. I shall soon 25 open classes in the Math for them. The Vedas, Upanishads, the 26 Gita, and Bhagavata should be studied in the classes, and I shall 27 teach the Panini's Ashtadhyayi.

28 Disciple: Have you studied the Ashtadhyayi of Panini?

29 Swamiji: When I was in Jaipur, I met a great grammarian and 30 felt a desire to study Sanskrit grammar with him. Although he was 31 a great scholar in that branch, he had not much aptitude for 32 teaching. He explained to me the commentary on the first aphorism 33 for three days continuously, still I could not grasp a bit of it. On the 34 fourth day the teacher got annoyed and said, "Swamiji, I could not 35 make you understand the meaning of the first aphorism even in 36 three days; I fear, you will not be much benefited by my teaching." 37 Hearing these words, a great self-reproach came over me. Putting 38 food and sleep aside, I set myself to study the commentary on the 39 first aphorism independently. Within three hours the sense of the 40 commentary stood explained before me as clearly as anything; then 41 going to my teacher I gave him the sense of the whole commentary.
42 My teacher, hearing me, said, "How could you gather the sense so 43 excellently within three hours, which I failed to explain to you in 44 three days?" After that, every day I began to read chapter after 45 chapter, with the greatest ease. Through concentration of mind 46 everything can be accomplished--even mountains can be crushed to 47 atoms.

48 Disciple: Sir, everything is wonderful about you.

49 Swamiji: There is nothing wonderful in this universe.
50 Ignorance constitutes the only darkness, which confers all things

1 and makes them look mysterious. When everything is lighted by 2 Knowledge, the sense of mystery vanishes from the face of things.
3 Even such an inscrutable thing as Maya, which brings the most 4 impossible things to pass, disappears. Know Him, think of Him, by 5 knowing whom everything else is known. And when that Atman is 6 realised, the purport of all scriptures will be perceived as clearly as 7 a fruit on the palm of one's hand. The Rishis of old attained
8 realisation, and must we fail? We are also men. What has happened 9 once in the life of one individual must, through proper endeavour, 10 be realised in the life of others. History repeats itself. This Atman is 11 the same in all, there is only a difference of manifestation in 12 different individuals. Try to manifest this Atman, and you will see 13 your intellect penetrating into all subjects. The intellect of one who 14 has not realised the Atman is one-sided, whereas the genius of the 15 knower of Atman is all-embracing. With the manifestation of the 16 Atman you will find that science, philosophy, and everything will be 17 easily mastered. Proclaim the glory of the Atman with the roar of a 18 lion, and impart fearlessness unto all beings by saying, "Arise, 19 awake, and stop not till the goal is reached."

20 21 22 VI

23 [Place: The rented Math premises at Belur. Year: 1898.]

24 The disciple is staying with Swamiji at the garden-house of 25 Nilambar Babu at Belur for the last two days.

26 Today, Swamiji has given permission to the disciple to stay in 27 his room at night. When the disciple was serving Swamiji and 28 massaging his feet, he spoke to him: "What folly! Leaving such a 29 place as this, you want to go back to Calcutta! See what an 30 atmosphere of holiness is here--the pure air of the Ganga--what an 31 assemblage of Sadhus--will you find anywhere a place like this!"

32 Disciple: Sir, as the fruition of great austerities in past lives, I 33 have been blessed with your company. Now bless me that I may not 34 be overcome by ignorance and delusion any more. Now my mind 35 sometimes is seized with a great longing for some direct spiritual 36 realisation.

37 Swamiji: I also felt like that many times. One day in the 38 Cossipore garden, I had expressed my prayer to Shri Ramakrishna 39 with great earnestness. Then in the evening, at the hour of 40 meditation, I lost the consciousness of the body, and felt that it was 41 absolutely non-existent. I felt that the sun, moon, space, time, ether, 42 and all had been reduced to a homogeneous mass and then melted 43 far away into the unknown; the body-consciousness had almost 44 vanished, and I had nearly merged in the Supreme. But I had just a 45 trace of the feeling of Ego, so I could again return to the world of 46 relativity from the Samadhi. In this state of Samadhi all the 47 difference between "I" and the "Brahman" goes away, everything is 48 reduced into unity, like the waters of the Infinite Ocean--water 49 everywhere, nothing else exists--language and thought, all fail 50 there. Then only is the state "beyond mind and speech" realised in

1 its actuality. Otherwise, so long as the religious aspirant thinks or 2 says, "I am the Brahman"--"I" and "the Brahman", these two entities 3 persist--there is the involved semblance of duality. After that 4 experience, even after trying repeatedly, I failed to bring back the 5 state of Samadhi. On informing Shri Ramakrishna about it, he said, 6 "If you remain day and night in that state, the work of the Divine 7 Mother will not be accomplished; therefore you won't be able to 8 induce that state again; when your work is finished, it will come 9 again."

10 Disciple: On the attainment of the absolute and transcendent 11 Nirvikalpa Samadhi can none return to the world of duality through 12 the consciousness of Egoism?

13 Swamiji: Shri Ramakrishna used to say that the Avataras
14 alone can descend to the ordinary plane from that state of Samadhi, 15 for the good of the world. Ordinary Jivas do not; immersed in that 16 state, they remain alive for a period of twenty-one days; after that, 17 their body drops like a sere leaf from the tree of Samsara (world).

18 Disciple: When in Samadhi the mind is merged, and there 19 remain no waves on the surface of consciousness, where then is the 20 possibility of mental activity and returning to the world through the 21 consciousness of Ego? When there is no mind, then who will 22 descend from Samadhi to the relative plane, and by what means?

23 Swamiji: The conclusion of the Vedanta is that when there is 24 absolute samadhi and cessation of all modifications, there is no
25 return from that state; as the Vedanta Aphorism says: "{Sanskrit}-- 26 There is non-return, from scriptural texts." But the Avataras cherish 27 a few desires for the good of the world. By taking hold of that 28 thread, they come down from the superconscious to the conscious 29 state.

30 Disciple: But, sir, if one or two desires remain, how can that 31 state be called the absolute, transcendent Samadhi? For the 32 scriptures say that in that state all the modifications of the mind 33 and all desires are stamped out.

34 Swamiji: How then can there be projection of the universe 35 after Mahapralaya (final dissolution)? At Mahapralaya everything is 36 merged in the Brahman. But even after that, one hears and reads of 37 creation in the scriptures, that projection and contraction (of the 38 universe) go on in wave forms. Like the fresh creation and 39 dissolution of the universe after Mahapralaya, the superconscious 40 and conscious states of Avataras also stand to reason.

41 Disciple: If I argue that at the time of dissolution the seeds of 42 further creation remain almost merged in Brahman, and that it is 43 not absolute dissolution or Nirvikalpa Samadhi?

44 Swamiji: Then I shall ask you to answer how the projection of 45 the universe is possible from Brahman in which there is no shadow 46 of any qualification--which is unaffected and unqualified.

47 Disciple: Why, this is but a seeming projection. The reply to 48 the question is given in the scriptures in this way, that the 49 manifestation of creation from Brahman is only an appearance like

1 the mirage in the desert, but really there has been no creation or 2 anything of the kind. This illusion is produced by Maya, which is the 3 negation of the eternally existing Brahman, and hence unreal.

4 Swamiji: If the creation is false, then you can also regard the 5 Nirvikalpa Samadhi of Jiva and his return therefrom as seeming 6 appearances. Jiva is Brahman by his nature. How can he have any 7 experience of bondage? Your desire to realise the truth that you are 8 Brahman is also a hallucination in that case--for the scripture says, 9 "You are already that." Therefore, "{Sanskrit}--This is verily your 10 bondage that you are practising the attainment of Samadhi."

11 Disciple: This is a great dilemma. If I am Brahman, why don't 12 I always realise it?

13 Swamiji: In order to attain to that realisation in the conscious 14 plane, some instrumentality is required. The mind is that 15 instrument in us. But it is a non-intelligent substance. It only 16 appears to be intelligent through the light of the Atman behind.
17 Therefore the author of the Panchadashi (III.40) says: "{Sanskrit}-- 18 The Shakti appears to be intelligent by the reflection of the 19 intelligence of the Atman." Hence the mind also appears to us like 20 an intelligent substance. Therefore it is certain that you won't be 21 able to know the Atman, the Essence of Intelligence, through the 22 mind. You have to go beyond the mind--for only the Atman exists 23 there--there the object of knowledge becomes the same as the 24 instrument of knowledge. The knower, knowledge, and the 25 instrument of knowledge become one and the same. It is therefore 26 that the Shruti says, "{Sanskrit}--Through what are you to know the 27 Eternal Subject?" The real fact is that there is a state beyond the 28 conscious plane, where there is no duality of the knower, 29 knowledge, and the instrument of knowledge etc. When the mind is 30 merged, that state is perceived. I say it is "perceived," because 31 there is no other word to express that state. Language cannot 32 express that state. Shankaracharya has styled it "Transcendent 33 Perception" (Aparokshanubhuti). Even after that transcendent 34 perception Avatars descend to the relative plane and give glimpses 35 of that--therefore it is said that the Vedas and other scriptures have 36 originated from the perception of Seers. The case of ordinary Jivas 37 is like that of the salt-doll which attempting to sound the depths of 38 the ocean melted into it. Do you see? The sum and substance of it 39 is--you have only got to know that you are Eternal Brahman.

40 You are already that, only the intervention of a non-41 intelligent mind (which is called Maya in the scriptures) is hiding 42 that knowledge. When the mind composed of subtle matter is 43 quelled, the Atman is effulgent by Its own radiance. One proof of 44 the fact that Maya or mind is an illusion is that the mind by itself is 45 non-intelligent and of the nature of darkness; and it is the light of 46 the Atman behind, that makes it appear as intelligent. When you 47 will understand this, the mind will merge in the unbroken Ocean of 48 Intelligence; then you will realise: "{Sanskrit}--This Atman is 49 Brahman."

50 Then Swamiji, addressing the disciple, said, "You feel sleepy, 51 then go to sleep."

1 In the night the disciple had a wonderful dream, as a result
2 of which he earnestly begged Swamiji's permission to worship him.
3 Swamiji had to acquiesce, and after the ceremony was over he said 4 to the disciple, "Well, your worship is finished, but Premananda will 5 be in a rage at your sacrilegious act of worshipping my feet in the 6 flower-tray meant for Shri Ramakrishna's worship." Before his 7 words were finished, Swami Premananda came there, and Swamiji 8 said to him, "See what a sacrilege he has committed! With the 9 requisites of Shri Ramakrishna's worship, he has worshipped me!"
10 Swami Premananda, smiling, said, "Well done! Are you and Shri 11 Ramakrishna different?"--hearing which the disciple felt at ease.

12 The disciple is an orthodox Hindu. Not to speak of prohibited 13 food, he does not even take food touched by another. Therefore 14 Swamiji sometimes used to refer to him as "priest". Swamiji, while 15 he was eating biscuits with his breakfast, said to Swami 16 Sadananda, "Bring the priest in here." When the disciple came to 17 Swamiji, he gave some portion of his food to him to eat. Finding the 18 disciple accepting it without any demur, Swamiji said, "Do you know 19 what you have eaten now? These are made from eggs." In reply, the 20 disciple said, "Whatever may be in it, I have no need to know; 21 taking this sacramental food from you, I have become immortal."

22 Thereupon Swamiji said, "I bless you that from this day all 23 your egoism of caste, colour, high birth, religious merit and 24 demerit, and all, may vanish for ever!". . .

25 VII

26 [Place: The rented Math premises at Belur. Year: 1898]

27 The disciple has come to the Math this morning. As soon as 28 he stood after touching the feet of Swamiji, Swamiji said, "What's 29 the use of your continuing in service any more? Why not go in for 30 some business?" The disciple was then employed as a private tutor 31 in some family. Asked about the profession of teaching, Swamiji 32 said, "If one does the work of teaching boys for a long time, one 33 gets blunt in intellect; one's intelligence is not manifested. If one 34 stays among a crowd of boys day and night, gradually one gets 35 obtuse. So give up the working of teaching boys."

36 Disciple: What shall I do, then?

37 Swamiji: Why, if you want to live the life of a worldly man and 38 have a desire for earning money, then go over to America. I shall 39 give you directions for business. You will find that in five years you 40 will get together a lot of money.

41 Disciple: What business shall I go in for? And where am I to 42 get the money from?

43 Swamiji: What nonsense are you talking? Within you lies 44 indomitable power. Only thinking, "I am nothing, I am nothing", you 45 have become powerless. Why, you alone! The whole race has 46 become so. Go round the world once, and you will find how 47 vigorously the life-current of other nations is flowing. And what are 48 you doing? Even after learning so much, you go about the doors of 49

1 others, crying, "Give me employment". Trampled under others' feet
2 doing slavery for others, are you men any more? You are not worth 3 a pin's head! In this fertile country with abundant water-supply, 4 where nature produces wealth and harvest a thousand times more 5 than in others, you have no food for your stomach, no clothes to 6 cover your body! In this country of abundance, the produce of 7 which has been the cause of the spread of civilisation in other 8 countries, you are reduced to such straits! Your condition is even 9 worse than that of a dog. And you glory in your Vedas and Vedanta!
10 A nation that cannot provide for its simple food and clothing, which 11 always depends on others for its subsistence--what is there for it to 12 vaunt about? Throw your religious observances overboard for the 13 present and be first prepared for the struggle for existence. People 14 of foreign countries are turning out such golden results from the 15 raw materials produced in your country, and you, like asses of 16 burden, are only carrying their load. The people of foreign 17 countries import Indian raw goods, manufacture various 18 commodities by bringing their intelligence to bear upon them, and 19 become great; whereas you have locked up your intelligence, 20 thrown away your inherited wealth to others, and roam about 21 crying piteously for food.

22 Disciple: In what way, sir, can the means of subsistence be 23 procured?

24 Swamiji: Why, the means are in your hands. You blindfold 25 your eyes, and said, "I am blind and can see nothing." Tear off the 26 folds from your eyes and you will see the whole world lighted by the 27 rays of the midday sun. If you cannot procure money, go to foreign 28 countries, working your passage as a Lascar. Take Indian cloth, 29 towels, bamboo-work, and other indigenous products, and peddle in 30 the streets of Europe and America; you will find how greatly Indian 31 products are appreciated in foreign markets even now. In America I 32 found, some Mohammedans of the Hooghly district had grown rich 33 by peddling Indian commodities in this way. Have you even less 34 intelligence than they? Take, for example, such excellent fabric as 35 the Varanasi-made Saris of India, the like of which are not produced 36 anywhere else in the world. Go to America with this cloth. Have 37 gowns made out of this fabric and sell them, and you will see how 38 much you earn.

39 Disciple: Sir, why will they wear gowns made of the Saris of 40 Varanasi? I have heard that clothes designed diversely are not to 41 the taste of the ladies in those countries.

42 Swamiji: Whether they will receive or not, I shall look to that.
43 It is for you to exert yourself and go over there. I have many friends 44 in that country, to whom I shall introduce you. At first I shall 45 request them to take this cloth up among themselves. Then you will 46 find many will follow suit, and at last you won't be able to keep the 47 supply up to the enormous demand.

48 Disciple: Where shall I get the capital for the business?

49 Swamiji: I shall somehow give you a start; for the rest you 50 must depend on your own exertions. "If you die, you get to heaven; 51 and if you win, you enjoy the earth" (Gita). Even if you die in this

1 attempt, well and good, many will take up the work, following your 2 example. And if you succeed, you will live a life of great opulence.

3 Disciple: Yes, sir, so it is. But I cannot muster sufficient 4 courage.

5 Swamiji: That is what I say, my son, you have no Shraddha-- 6 no faith in yourselves. What will you achieve? You will have neither 7 material nor spiritual advancement. Either put forth your energy in 8 the way I have suggested and be successful in life, or give up all 9 and take to the path we have chosen. Serve the people of all 10 countries through spiritual instruction--then only will you get your 11 dole of food like us. If there is no mutual exchange, do you think 12 anybody cares for anybody else? You observe in our case, that 13 because we give the householders some spiritual instructions, they 14 in return give us some morsels of food. If you do nothing, why will 15 they give you food? You observe so much misery in mere service 16 and slavery of others, still you are not waking up; and so your 17 misery also is never at an end. This is certainly the delusive power 18 of Maya! In the West I have found that those who are in the 19 employment of others have their seats fixed in the back rows in the 20 Parliament, while the front seats are reserved for those who have 21 made themselves famous by self-exertion, or education, or 22 intelligence. In Western countries there is no botheration of caste.
23 Those on whom Fortune smiles for their industry and exertion are 24 alone regarded as leaders of the country and the controllers of its 25 destiny. Whereas in your country, you are simply vaunting your 26 superiority in caste, till at last you cannot even get a morsel of food!
27 You have not the capacity to manufacture a needle, and you dare to 28 criticise the English! Fools! Sit at their feet and learn from them the 29 arts, industries, and the practicality necessary for the struggle for 30 existence. You will be esteemed once more when you will become 31 fit. Then they too will pay heed to your words. Without the 32 necessary preparation, what will mere shouting in the Congress 33 avail?

34 Disciple: But, sir, all the educated men of the country have 35 joined it.

36 Swamiji: Well, you consider a man as educated if only he can 37 pass some examinations and deliver good lectures. The education 38 which does not help the common mass of people to equip
39 themselves for the struggle for life, which does not bring out 40 strength of character, a spirit of philanthropy, and the courage of a 41 lion--is it worth the name? Real education is that which enables one 42 to stand on one's own legs. The education that you are receiving 43 now in schools and colleges is only making you a race of dyspeptics.
44 You are working like machines merely, and living a jelly-fish 45 existence.

46 The peasant, the shoemaker, the sweeper, and such other 47 lower classes of India have much greater capacity for work and self-48 reliance than you. They have been silently working through long 49 ages and producing the entire wealth of the land, without a word of 50 complaint. Very soon they will get above you in position. Gradually 51 capital is drifting into their hands, and they are not so much

1 troubled with wants as you are. Modern education has changed 2 your fashion, but new avenues of wealth lie yet undiscovered for 3 want of the inventive genius. You have so long oppressed these 4 forbearing masses; now is the time for their retribution. And you 5 will become extinct in your vain search for employment, making it 6 the be-all and end-all of your life.

7 Disciple: Sir, although our power of originality is less than 8 that of other countries, still the lower classes of India are being 9 guided by our intelligence. So where will they get the power and 10 culture to overcome the higher classes in the struggle for 11 existence?

12 Swamiji: Never mind if they have not read a few books like 13 you--if they have not acquired your tailor-made civilisation. What do 14 these matter? But they are the backbone of the nation in all 15 countries. If these lower classes stop work, from where will you get 16 your food and clothing? If the sweepers of Calcutta stop work for a 17 day, it creates a panic; and if they strike for three days, the whole 18 town will be depopulated by the outbreak of epidemics. If the 19 labourers stop work, your supply of food and clothes also stops. And 20 you regard them as low-class people and vaunt your own culture!

21 Engrossed in the struggle for existence, they had not the 22 opportunity for the awakening of knowledge. They have worked so 23 long uniformly like machines guided by human intelligence, and the 24 clever educated section have taken the substantial part of the fruits 25 of their labour. In every country this has been the case. But times 26 have changed. The lower classes are gradually awakening to this 27 fact and making a united front against this, determined to exact 28 their legitimate dues. The masses of Europe and America have been 29 the first to awaken and have already begun the fight. Signs of this 30 awakening have shown themselves in India, too, as is evident from 31 the number of strikes among the lower classes nowadays. The 32 upper classes will no longer be able to repress the lower, try they 33 ever so much. The well-being of the higher classes now lies in 34 helping the lower to get their legitimate rights.

35 Therefore I say, set yourselves to the task of spreading
36 education among the masses. Tell them and make them understand, 37 "You are our brothers--a part and parcel of our bodies, and we love 38 you and never hate you." If they receive this sympathy from you, 39 their enthusiasm for work will be increased a hundredfold. Kindle 40 their knowledge with the help of modern science. Teach them 41 history, geography, science, literature, and along with these the 42 profound truths of religion. In exchange for that teaching, the 43 poverty of the teachers will also disappear. By mutual exchange 44 both parties will become friendly to each other.

45 Disciple: But, sir, with the spread of learning among them, 46 they too will in course of time have fertile brains but become idle 47 and inactive like us and live on the fruits of the labour of the next 48 lower classes.

49 Swamiji: Why shall it be so? Even with the awakening of 50 knowledge, the potter will remain a potter, the fisherman a 51 fisherman, the peasant a peasant. Why should they leave their

1 hereditary calling? "{Sanskrit} --Don't give up the work to which 2 you were born, even if it be attended with defects." If they are 3 taught in this way, why should they give up their respective 4 callings? Rather they will apply their knowledge to the better
5 performance of the work to which they have been born. A number 6 of geniuses are sure to arise from among them in the course of 7 time. You (the higher classes) will take these into your own fold.
8 The Brahmins acknowledged the valiant king Vishvamitra as a 9 Brahmin, and think how grateful the whole Kshatriya race became 10 to the Brahmins for this act! By such sympathy and co-operation 11 even birds and beasts become one's own--not to speak of men!

12 Disciple: Sir, what you say is true, but there yet seems to be 13 a wide gulf between the higher and lower classes. To bring the 14 higher classes to sympathise with the lower seems to be a difficult 15 affair in India.

16 Swamiji: But without that there is no well-being for your 17 upper classes. You will be destroyed by internecine quarrels and 18 fights--which you have been having so long. When the masses will 19 wake up, they will come to understand your oppression of them, 20 and by a puff of their mouth you will be entirely blown away! It is 21 they who have introduced civilisation amongst you; and it is they 22 who will then pull it down. Think how at the hands of the Gauls the 23 mighty ancient Roman civilisation crumbled into dust! Therefore I 24 say, try to rouse these lower classes from slumber by imparting 25 learning and culture to them. When they will awaken--and awaken 26 one day they must--they also will not forget your good services to 27 them and will remain grateful to you.

28 After such conversation Swamiji, addressing the disciple, 29 said: Let these subjects drop now--come, tell me what you have 30 decided. Do something, whatever it be. Either go in for some 31 business, or like us come to the path of real Sannyasa, "{Sanskrit}-- 32 For one's own liberation and for the good of the world." The latter 33 path is of course the best way there is. What good will it do to be a 34 worthless householder? You have understood that everything in life 35 is transitory: "{Sanskrit}--Life is as unstable as the water on the 36 lotus leaf." Therefore if you have the enthusiasm for acquiring this 37 knowledge of the Atman, do not wait any more but come forward 38 immediately. "{Sanskrit} --The very day that you feel dispassion for 39 the world, that very day renounce and take to Sannyasa" 40 (Jabalopanisad, 4). Sacrifice your life for the good of others and go 41 round to the doors of people carrying this message of fearlessness 42 "{Sanskrit}--Arise, awake, and stop not till the goal is reached."

44 VIII

45 [Place: Calcutta. Year: 1898]

46 Swamiji accompanied by Sister Nivedita, Swami Yogananda, 47 and others has come to visit the Zoological Gardens at Alipur in the 48 afternoon. Rai Rambrahma Sanyal Bahadur, Superintendent of the 49 Gardens, cordially received them and took them round the Gardens.
50 Swamiji, as he went on seeing the various species of animals,

1 casually referred to the Darwinian theory of the gradual evolution 2 of animals. The disciple remembers how, entering the room for 3 snakes, he pointed to a huge python with circular rings on its body, 4 with the remark: "From this the tortoise has evolved in course of 5 time. That very snake, by remaining stationary at one spot for a 6 long time, has gradually turned hard-backed." He further said in 7 fun to the disciple, "You eat tortoises, don't you? Darwin holds that 8 it is this snake that has evolved into the tortoise in the process of 9 time--then you eat snakes too!" The disciple protested, "Sir, when a 10 thing is metamorphosed into another thing through evolution, it has 11 no more its former shape and habits; then how can you say that 12 eating tortoise means eating snakes also?"

13 This answer created laughter among the party. After seeing 14 some other things, Swamiji went to Rambrahma Babu's quarters in 15 the Gardens, where he took tea, and others also did the same.
16 Finding that the disciples hesitated to sit at the same table and 17 partake of the sweets and tea which Sister Nivedita had touched, 18 Swamiji repeatedly urged him to take them, which he was induced 19 to do, and drinking water himself, he gave the rest of it to the 20 disciple to drink. After this there was a short conversation on 21 Darwin's evolution theory.

22 Rambrahma Babu: What is your opinion of the evolution
23 theory of Darwin and the causes he has put forward for it?

24 Swamiji: Taking for granted that Darwin is right, I cannot yet 25 admit that it is the final conclusion about the causes of evolution.

26 Rambrahma Babu: Did the ancient scholars of our country 27 discuss this subject?

28 Swamiji: The subject has been nicely discussed in the 29 Samkhya Philosophy. I am of opinion that the conclusion of the 30 ancient Indian philosophers is the last word on the causes of 31 evolution.

32 Rambrahma Babu: I shall be glad to hear of it, if it can be 33 explained in a few words.

34 Swamiji: You are certainly aware of the laws of struggle for 35 existence, survival of the fittest, natural selection, and so forth, 36 which have been held by the Western scholars to be the causes of 37 elevating a lower species to a higher. But none of these has been 38 advocated as the cause of that in the system of Patanjali. Patanjali 39 holds that the transformation of one species into another is effected 40 by the "in-filling of nature" {Sanskrit}. It is not that this is done by 41 the constant struggle against obstacles. In my opinion, struggle and 42 competition sometimes stand in the way of a being's attaining its 43 perfection. If the evolution of an animal is effected by the 44 destruction of a thousand others, then one must confess that this 45 evolution is doing very little good to the world. Taking it for granted 46 that it conduces to physical well-being, we cannot help admitting 47 that it is a serious obstacle to spiritual development. According to 48 the philosophers of our country, every being is a perfect Soul, and 49 the diversity of evolution and manifestation of nature is simply due 50 to the difference in the degree of manifestation of this Soul. The 1 moment the obstacles to the evolution and manifestation of nature

2 are completely removed, the Soul manifests Itself perfectly.
3 Whatever may happen in the lower strata of nature's evolutions, in 4 the higher strata at any rate, it is not true that it is only by 5 constantly struggling against obstacles that one has to go beyond 6 them. Rather it is observed that there the obstacles give way and a 7 greater manifestation of the Soul takes place through education 8 and culture, through concentration and meditation, and above all 9 through sacrifice. Therefore, to designate the obstacles not as the 10 effects but as the causes of the Soul-manifestation, and describe 11 them as aiding this wonderful diversity of nature, is not consonant 12 with reason. The attempt to remove evil from the world by killing a 13 thousand evil-doers, only adds to the evil in the world. But if the 14 people can be made to desist from evil-doing by means of spiritual 15 instruction, there is no more evil in the world. Now, see how 16 horrible the Western struggle theory becomes!

17 Rambrahma Babu was astonished to hear Swamiji's words
18 and said at length, "India badly needs at the present moment men 19 well versed in the Eastern and Western philosophies like you. Such 20 men alone are able to point out the mistakes of the educated people 21 who see only one side of the shield. I am extremely delighted to 22 hear your original explanation of the evolution theory."

23 Shortly after, Swamiji with the party left for Baghbazar and 24 reached Balaram Bose's house at about 8 p.m. After a short rest, he 25 came to the drawing-room, where there was a small gathering, all 26 eager to hear of the conversation at the Zoological Gardens in 27 detail. When Swamiji came to the room, the disciple, as the 28 spokesman of the meeting, raised that very topic.

29 Disciple: Sir, I have not been able to follow all your remarks
30 about the evolution theory at the Zoo. Will you kindly recapitulate 31 them in simple words?

32 Swamiji: Why, which points did you fail to grasp?

33 Disciple: You have often told us that it is the power to 34 struggle with the external forces which constitutes the sign of life 35 and the first step towards improvement. Today you seem to have 36 spoken just the opposite thing.

37 Swamiji: Why should I speak differently? It was you who 38 could not follow me. In the animal kingdom we really see such laws 39 as struggle for existence, survival of the fittest, etc., evidently at 40 work. Therefore Darwin's theory seems true to a certain extent. But 41 in the human kingdom, where there is the manifestation of 42 rationality, we find just the reverse of those laws. For instance, in 43 those whom we consider really great men or ideal characters, we 44 scarcely observe any external struggle. In the animal kingdom 45 instinct prevails; but the more a man advances, the more he 46 manifests rationality. For this reason, progress in the rational 47 human kingdom cannot be achieved, like that in the animal 48 kingdom, by the destruction of others! The highest evolution of man 49 is effected through sacrifice alone. A man is great among his 50 fellows in proportion as he can sacrifice for the sake of others, 51 while in the lower strata of the animal kingdom, that animal is the 1 strongest which can kill the greatest number of animals. Hence the 2 struggle theory is not equally applicable to both kingdoms. Man's 3 struggle is in the mental sphere. A man is greater in proportion as 4 he can control his mind. When the mind's activities are perfectly at 5 rest, the Atman manifests Itself. The struggle which we observe in 6 the animal kingdom for the preservation of the gross body obtains 7 in the human plane of existence for gaining mastery over the mind 8 or for attaining the state of balance. Like a living tree and its 9 reflection in the water of a tank, we find opposite kinds of struggle 10 in the animal and human kingdoms.

11 Disciple: Why then do you advocate so much the 12 improvement of our physique?

13 Swamiji: Well, do you consider yourselves as men? You have 14 got only a bit of rationality--that's all. How will you struggle with 15 the mind unless the physique be strong? Do you deserve to be 16 called men any longer--the highest evolution in the world? What 17 have you got besides eating, sleeping, and satisfying the creature-18 comforts? Thank your stars that you have not developed into 19 quadrupeds yet! Shri Ramakrishna used to say, "He is the man who 20 is conscious of his dignity". You are but standing witnesses to the 21 lowest class of insect-like existence of which the scripture speaks, 22 that they simply undergo the round of births and deaths without 23 being allowed to go to any of the higher spheres! You are simply 24 living a life of jealousy among yourselves and are objects of hatred
25 in the eyes of the foreigner. You are animals, therefore I 26 recommend you to struggle. Leave aside theories and all that. Just 27 reflect calmly on your own everyday acts and dealings with others 28 and find out whether you are not a species of beings intermediate 29 between the animal and human planes of existence! First build up 30 your own physique. Then only you can get control over the mind.
31 "{Sanskrit}--This Self is not to be attained by the weak" (Katha 32 Upanishad, I.ii.23).

33 Disciple: But, sir, the commentator (Shankara) has 34 interpreted the word "weak" to mean "devoid of Brahmacharya or 35 continence".

36 Swamiji: Let him. I say, "The physically weak are unfit for the 37 realisation of the Self."

38 Disciple: But many dull-headed persons also have strong 39 bodies.

40 Swamiji: If you can take the pains to give them good ideas
41 once, they will be able to work them out sooner than physically unfit 42 people. Don't you find that in a weak physique it is difficult to 43 control the sex-appetite or anger? Lean people are quickly incensed 44 and are quickly overcome by the sex-instinct.

45 Disciple: But we find exceptions to the rule also.

46 Swamiji: Who denies it? Once a person gets control over the 47 mind, it matters little whether the body remains strong or becomes 48 emaciated. The gist of the thing is that unless one has a good 49 physique one can never aspire to Self-realisation. Shri Ramakrishna 50 used to say, "One fails to attain realisation if there be but a slight

1 defect in the body".

2 Finding that Swamiji had grown excited, the disciple did not 3 dare to push the topic further, but remained quiet accepting 4 Swamiji's view. Shortly after, Swamiji, addressing those present, 5 said, "By the bye, have you heard that this `priest' has today taken 6 food which was touched by Nivedita? That he took the sweets 7 touched by her did not matter so much, but--here he addressed the 8 disciple--"how did you drink the water she had touched?"

9 Disciple: But it was you, sir, who ordered me to do so. Under 10 the Guru's orders I can do anything. I was unwilling to drink the 11 water though. But you drank it and I had to take it as Prasada.

12 Swamiji: Well, your caste is gone for ever. Now nobody will 13 respect you as a Brahmin of the priest class.

14 Disciple: I don't care if they do not. I can take the rice from 15 the house of a Pariah if you order me to.

16 These words set Swamiji and all those present in a roar of 17 laughter.

18 The conversation lasted till it was past midnight, when the 19 disciple came back to his lodging, only to find it bolted. So he had to 20 pass the night out of doors.

21 The wheel of Time has rolled on in its unrelenting course, 22 and Swamiji, Swami Yogananda, and Sister Nivedita are now no 23 more on earth. Only the sacred memory of their lives remains--and 24 the disciple considers himself blessed to be able to record, in ever 25 so meagre a way, these reminiscences.

27 IX

28 [Place: The rented Math premises at Belur. Year: 1898]

29 The disciple has come to the Math (monastery) today. It has 30 now been removed to Nilambar Babu's garden-house, and the site
31 of the present Math has recently been purchased. Swamiji is out 32 visiting the new Math-grounds at about four o'clock, taking the 33 disciple with him. The site was then mostly jungle, but on the north 34 side of it there was a one-storied brick-built house. Swamiji began 35 to walk over the site and to discuss in the course of conversation 36 the plan of work of the future Math and its rules and regulations.

37 Reaching by degrees the veranda on the east side of the one-38 storied house, Swamiji said, "Here would be the place for the 39 Sadhus to live. It is my wish to convert this Math into a chief centre 40 of spiritual practices and the culture of knowledge. The power that 41 will have its rise from here will flood the whole world and turn the 42 course of men's lives into different channels; from this place will 43 spring forth ideals which will be the harmony of Knowledge, 44 Devotion, Yoga, and Work; at a nod from the men of this Math a life-45 giving impetus will in time be given to the remotest corners of the 46 globe; while all true seekers after spirituality will in course of time 47 assemble here. A thousand thoughts like these are arising in my 48 mind.

1 "Yonder plot of land on the south side of the Math will be the 2 centre of learning, where grammar, philosophy, science, literature, 3 rhetoric, the Shrutis, Bhakti scriptures, and English will be taught.
4 This Temple of Learning will be fashioned after the Tols of old days.
5 Boys who are Brahmacharins from their childhood will live there 6 and study the scriptures. Their food and clothing and all will be 7 supplied from the Math. After a course of five years' training these 8 Brahmacharins may, if they like, go back to their homes and lead 9 householders' lives; or they may embrace the monastic life with the 10 sanction of the venerable Superiors of the Math. The authorities of 11 the Math will have the power to turn out at once any of these 12 Brahmacharins who will be found refractory or of a bad character.
13 Teaching will be imparted here irrespective of caste or creed, and 14 those who will have objection to this will not be admitted. But those 15 who would like to observe their particular caste-rites, should make 16 separate arrangements for their food, etc. They will only attend the 17 classes along with the rest. The Math authorities shall keep a 18 vigilant watch over the character of these also. None but those that 19 are trained here shall be eligible for Sannyasa. Won't it be nice 20 when by degrees this Math will begin to work like this?"

21 Disciple: Then you want to reintroduce into the country the 22 ancient institution of living a Brahmacharin's life in the house of the 23 Guru?

24 Swamiji: Exactly. The modern system of education gives no 25 facility for the development of the knowledge of Brahman. We must 26 found Brahmacharya Homes as in times of old. But now we must lay 27 their foundations on a broad basis, that is to say, we must introduce 28 a good deal of change into it to suit the requirements of the times.
29 Of this I shall speak to you later on.

30 "That piece of land to the south of the Math," Swamiji 31 resumed, "we must also purchase in time. There we shall start an 32 Annasatra--a Feeding Home. There arrangements will be made for 33 serving really indigent people in the spirit of God. The Feeding 34 Home will be named after Shri Ramakrishna. Its scope will at first 35 be determined by the amount of funds. For the matter of that, we 36 may start it with two or three inmates. We must train energetic 37 Brahmacharins to conduct this Home. They will have to collect the 38 funds for its maintenance--ay, even by begging. The Math will not 39 be allowed to give any pecuniary help in this matter. The 40 Brahmacharins themselves shall have to raise funds for it. Only 41 after completing their five years' training in this Home of Service, 42 will they be allowed to join the Temple of Learning branch. After a 43 training of ten years--five in the Feeding Home and five in the 44 Temple of Learning--they will be allowed to enter the life of 45 Sannyasa, having initiation from the Math authorities--provided of 46 course they have a mind to become Sannyasins and the Math
47 authorities consider them fit for Sannyasa and are willing to admit 48 them into it. But the Head of the Math will be free to confer 49 Sannyasa on any exceptionally meritorious Brahmacharin, at any 50 time, in defiance of this rule. The ordinary Brahmacharins, however, 51 will have to qualify themselves for Sannyasa by degrees, as I have 52 just said. I have all these ideas in my brain."

1 Disciple: Sir, what will be the object of starting three such 2 sections in the Math?

3 Swamiji: Didn't you understand me? First of all, comes the 4 gift of food; next is the gift of learning, and the highest of all is the 5 gift of knowledge. We must harmonise these three ideals in the 6 Math. By continuously practising the gift of food, the 7 Brahmacharins will have the idea of practical work for the sake of 8 others and that of serving all beings in the spirit of the Lord firmly 9 impressed on their minds. This will gradually purify their minds and 10 lead to the manifestation of Sattvika (pure and unselfish) ideas. And 11 having this the Brahmacharins will in time acquire the fitness for 12 attaining the knowledge of Brahman and become eligible for 13 Sannyasa.

14 Disciple: Sir, if, as you say, the gift of (spiritual) knowledge is 15 the highest, why then start sections for the gift of food and the gift 16 of learning?

17 Swamiji: Can't you understand this point even now? Listen. If 18 in these days of food scarcity you can, for the disinterested service 19 of others, get together a few morsels of food by begging or any 20 other means, and give them to the poor and suffering, that will not 21 only be doing good to yourself and the world, but you will at the 22 same time get everybody's sympathy for this noble work. The 23 worldly-minded people, tied down to lust and wealth, will have faith 24 in you for this labour of love and come forward to help you. You will 25 attract a thousand times as many men by this unasked-for gift of 26 food, as you will by the gift of learning or of (spiritual) knowledge.
27 In no other work will you get so much public sympathy as you will 28 in this. In a truly noble work, not to speak of men, even God Himself 29 befriends the doer. When people have thus been attracted, you will 30 be able to stimulate the desire for learning and spirituality in them.
31 Therefore the gift of food comes first.

32 Disciple; Sir, to start Feeding Homes we want a site first, 33 then buildings, and then the funds to work them. Where will so 34 much money come from?

35 Swamiji: The southern portion of the Math premises I am 36 leaving at your disposal immediately, and I am getting a thatched 37 house erected under that Bael tree. You just find out one or two 38 blind or infirm people and apply yourself to their service. Go and 39 beg food for them yourself; cook with your own hands and feed 40 them. If you continue this for some days, you will find that lots of 41 people will be coming forward to assist you with plenty of money.
42 "{Sanskrit}--Never, my son, does a doer of good come to grief."
43 (Gita, VI.40)

44 Disciple: Yes, it is true. But may not that kind of continuous 45 work become a source of bondage in the long run?

46 Swamiji: If you have no eye to the fruits of work, and if you 47 have a passionate longing to go beyond all selfish desires, then 48 these good works will help to break your bonds, I tell you. How 49 thoughtless of you to say that such work will lead to bondage! Such 50 disinterested work is the only means of rooting out the bondage due

1 to selfish work. "{Sanskrit} There is no other way out"
2 (Shvetasvatara Upanishad, III.8).

3 Disciple: Your words encourage me to hear in detail about 4 your ideas of the Feeding Home and Home of Service.

5 Swamiji: We must build small well-ventilated rooms for the 6 poor. Only two or three of them will live in each room. They must be 7 given good bedding, clean clothes, and so on. There will be a doctor 8 for them, who will inspect them once or twice a week according to 9 his convenience. The Sevashrama (Home of Service) will be as a 10 ward attached to the Annasatra, where the sick will be nursed.
11 Then, gradually, as funds will accumulate, we shall build a big 12 kitchen. The Annasatra must be astir with constant shouts of food 13 demanded and supplied. The rice-gruel must run into the Ganga
14 and whiten its water! When I see such a Feeding Home started, it 15 will bring solace to my heart.

16 Disciple: When you have this kind of desire, most likely it will 17 materialise into action in course of time.

18 Hearing the disciple's words, Swamiji remained motionless
19 for a while, gazing on the Ganga. Then with a beaming countenance 20 he addressed the disciple, saying: "Who knows which of you will 21 have the lion roused up in him, and when? If in a single one 22 amongst you Mother rouses the fire, there will be hundreds of 23 Feeding Homes like that. Knowledge and Power and Devotion-- 24 everything exists in the fullest measure in all beings. We only notice 25 the varying degrees of their manifestation and call one great and 26 another little. In the minds of all creatures a screen intervenes as it 27 were and hides the perfect manifestation from view. The moment 28 that is removed, everything is settled; whatever you want, whatever 29 you will desire, will come to pass."

30 Swamiji continued: "If the Lord wills, we shall make this 31 Math a great centre of harmony. Our Lord is the visible 32 embodiment of the harmony of all ideals. He will be established on 33 earth if we keep alive that spirit of harmony here. We must see to it 34 that people of all creeds and sects, from the Brahmana down to the 35 Chandala, may come here and find their respective ideals 36 manifested. The other day when I installed Shri Ramakrishna on 37 the Math grounds, I felt as if his ideas shot forth from this place and 38 flooded the whole universe, sentient and insentient. I, for one, am 39 doing my best, and shall continue to do so--all of you too explain to 40 people the liberal ideas of Shri Ramakrishna; what is the use of 41 merely reading the Vedanta? We must prove the truth of pure 42 Advaitism in practical life. Shankara left this Advaita philosophy in 43 the hills and forests, while I have come to bring it out of those 44 places and scatter it broadcast before the workaday world and 45 society. The lion-roar of Advaita must resound in every hearth and 46 home, in meadows and groves, over hills and plains. Come all of you 47 to my assistance and set yourselves to work."

48 Disciple: Sir, it appeals to me rather to realise that state 49 through meditation than to manifest it in action.

50 Swamiji: That is but a state of stupefaction, as under liquor.

1 What will be the use of merely remaining like that? Through the 2 urge of Advaitic realisation, you should sometimes dance wildly and 3 sometimes remain lost to outward sense. Does one feel happy to 4 taste of a good thing by oneself? One should share it with others.
5 Granted that you attain personal liberation by means of the 6 realisation of the Advaita, but what matters it to the world? You 7 must liberate the whole universe before you leave this body. Then 8 only you will be established in the eternal Truth. Has that bliss any 9 match, my boy? You will be established in that bliss of the Infinite 10 which is limitless like the skies. You will be struck dumb to find your 11 presence everywhere in the world of soul and matter. You will feel 12 the whole sentient and insentient world as your own self. Then you 13 can't help treating all with the same kindness as you show towards 14 yourself. This is indeed practical Vedanta. Do you understand me?
15 Brahman is one, but is at the same time appearing to us as many, 16 on the relative plane. Name and form are at the root of this 17 relativity. For instance, what do you find when you abstract name 18 and form from a jar? Only earth, which is its essence. Similarly, 19 through delusion you are thinking of and seeing a jar, a cloth, a 20 monastery, and so on. The phenomenal world depends on this 21 nescience which obstructs knowledge and which has no real 22 existence. One sees variety such as wife, children, body, mind--only 23 in the world created by nescience by means of name and form. As 24 soon as this nescience is removed, the realisation of Brahman 25 which eternally exists is the result.

26 Disciple: Where has the nescience come from?

27 Swamiji: Where it has come from I shall tell you later on.
28 When you began to run, mistaking the rope for the snake, did the 29 rope actually turn into a snake? Or was it not your ignorance which 30 put you to flight in that way?

31 Disciple: I did it from sheer ignorance.

32 Swamiji: Well, then, consider whether, when you will again 33 come to know the rope as rope, you will not laugh at your previous 34 ignorance. Will not name and form appear to be a delusion then?

35 Disciple: They will.

36 Swamiji: If that be so, the name and form turn out to be 37 unreal. Thus Brahman, the Eternal Existence, proves to be the only 38 reality. Only through this twilight of nescience you think this is your 39 wife, that is your child, this is your own, that is not your own, and so 40 on, and fail to realise the existence of the Atman, the illuminator of 41 everything. When through the Guru's instructions and your own 42 conviction you will see, not this world of name and form, but the 43 essence which lies as its substratum then only you will realise your 44 identity with the whole universe from the Creator down to a clump 45 of grass, then only you will get the state in which "{Sanskrit}--The 46 knots of the heart are cut asunder and all doubts are dispelled".

47 Disciple: Sir, one wishes to know of the origin and cessation 48 of this nescience.

49 Swamiji: You have understood, I presume, that a thing that 50 ceases to exist afterwards is a phenomenon merely? He who has

1 truly realised Brahman will say--where is nescience, in faith? He 2 sees the rope as rope only, and never as the snake. And he laughs at 3 the alarm of those who see it as the snake. For this reason, 4 nescience has no absolute reality. You can call nescience neither 5 real nor unreal; "{Sanskrit}--Neither real, nor unreal, nor a mixture 6 of both". About a thing that is thus proved to be false, neither 7 question nor answer is of any significance. Moreover, any question 8 on such a thing is unreasonable. I shall explain how. Are not this 9 question and answer made from the standpoint of name and form, 10 of time and space? And can you explain Brahman which transcends 11 time and space, by means of questions and answers? Hence the 12 Shastras and Mantras and such other things are only relatively, and 13 not absolutely, true. Nescience has verily no essence to call its own; 14 how then can you understand it? When Brahman will manifest 15 Itself, there will be no more room for such questions. Have you not 16 heard that story of Shri Ramakrishna about the shoemaker
17 coolie?¹⁷⁷ The moment one recognises nescience, it vanishes.

18 Disciple: But, sir, whence has this nescience come?

19 Swamiji: How can that come which has no existence at all? It 20 must exist first, to admit the possibility of coming.

21 Disciple: How then did this world of souls and matter 22 originate?

23 Swamiji: There is only one Existence--Brahman. You are but 24 seeing That under different forms and names, through the veil of 25 name and form which are unreal.

26 Disciple: But why this unreal name and form? Whence have 27 they come?

28 Swamiji: The Shastras have described this ingrained notion 29 or ignorance as almost endless in a series. But it has a termination, 30 while Brahman ever remains as It is, without suffering the least 31 change, like the rope which causes the delusion of the snake.
32 Therefore the conclusion of the Vedanta is that the whole universe
33 has been superimposed on Brahman--appearing like a juggler's 34 trick. It has not caused the least aberration of Brahman from Its 35 real nature. Do you understand me?

36 Disciple: One thing I cannot yet understand.

37 Swamiji: What is that?

38 Disciple: You have just said that creation, maintenance, and

1 ¹⁷⁷ ?Once a Brahmin, desirous of going to a disciple's house, was in need of a 2 coolie to carry his load. Not finding anyone belonging to a good caste, he at last 3 asked a shoemaker to perform the function. The man at first refused on the 4 ground that he was a man belonging to an untouchable caste. But the Brahmin 5 insisted on engaging him, telling him that he would escape detection by keeping 6 perfectly silent. The man was at last persuaded to go, and when the party 7 reached their destination, someone asked the shoemaker-servant to remove a 8 pair of shoes. The servant who thought it best to keep silent, as instructed, paid 9 no attention to the order, which was repeated, whereupon the man getting 10 annoyed shouted out, "Why dost thou not hear me, sirrah? Art thou a 11 shoemaker?" "O Master," cried the bewildered shoemaker, "I am discovered. I 12 cannot stay any longer." Saying this he immediately took to his heels.

dissolution, etc. are superimposed on Brahman, and have no absolute existence. But how can that be? One can never have the delusion of something that one has not already experienced. Just as one who has never seen a snake cannot mistake a rope for a snake, so how can one who has not experienced this creation, come to mistake Brahman for the creation? Therefore creation must have been, or is, to have given rise to the delusion of creation. But this brings in a dualistic position.

Swamiji: The man of realisation will in the first place refute your objection by stating that to his vision creation and things of that sort do not at all appear. He sees Brahman and Brahman alone. He sees the rope and not the snake. If you argue that you, at any rate, are seeing this creation, or snake--then he will try to bring home to you the real nature of the rope, with a view to curing your defective vision. When through his instructions and your reasoning you will be able to realise the truth of the rope, or Brahman, then this delusive idea of the snake, or creation, will vanish. At that time, what else can you call this delusive idea of creation, maintenance, and dissolution, but a superimposition on the Brahman? If this appearance of creation etc. has continued as a beginningless series, let it do so; no advantage will be gained by settling this question. Until Brahman is realised as vividly as a fruit on the palm of one's hand this question cannot be adequately settled, and then neither such a question crops up, nor is there need for a solution. The tasting of the reality of Brahman is then like a dumb man tasting something nice, but without the power to express his feelings.

Disciple: What then will be the use of reasoning about it so much?

Swamiji: Reasoning is necessary to understand the point intellectually. But the Reality transcends reasoning: "{Sanskrit}--This conviction cannot be reached through reasoning."

In the course of such conversation Swamiji reached the Math, accompanied by the disciple. Swamiji then explained to the Sannyasins and Brahmacharins of the Math the gist of the above discussion on Brahman. While going upstairs, he remarked to the disciple, "{Sanskrit}--This Atman cannot be attained by the weak."

[Place: The rented Math premises at Belur. Year: 1899.]

The Bengali fortnightly magazine, Udbodhan, was just started by Swami Trigunatita under the direction of Swamiji for spreading the religious views of Shri Ramakrishna among the general public. After the first number came out the disciple came to the Math at Nilambar Babu's garden one day. Swamiji started the following conversation with him about the Udbodhan.

Swamiji: (Humorously caricaturing the name of the magazine) Have you seen the Udbandhana?¹⁷⁸

¹⁷⁸ ?The word means "suicide by hanging".

1 Disciple: Yes, sir; it is a good number.

2 Swamiji: We must mould the ideas, language, and everything 3 of this magazine in a new fashion.

4 Disciple: How?

5 Swamiji: Not only must we give out Shri Ramakrishna's ideas
6 to all, but we must also introduce a new vigour into the Bengali 7 language. For instance, the frequent use of verbs diminishes the 8 force of a language. We must restrict the use of verbs by the use of 9 adjectives. Begin to write articles in that way, and show them to me 10 before you give them to print in the Udbodhan.

11 Disciple: Sir, it is impossible for any other man to labour for 12 this magazine in the way Swami Trigunatita does.

13 Swamiji: Do you think these Sannyasin children of Shri 14 Ramakrishna are born simply to sit under trees lighting Dhuni-15 fires? Whenever any of them will take up some work, people will be 16 astonished to see their energy. Learn from them how to work. Here, 17 for instance, Trigunatita has given up his spiritual practices, his 18 meditation and everything, to carry out my orders, and has set 19 himself to work. Is this a matter of small sacrifice? What an amount 20 of love for me is at the back of this spirit of work, do you see? He 21 will not stop short of success! Have you householders such 22 determination?

23 Disciple: But, sir, it looks rather odd in our eyes that 24 Sannyasins in ochre robe should go about from door to door as the 25 Swami is doing.

26 Swamiji: Why? The circulation of the magazine is only for the 27 good of the householders. By the spread of new ideas within the 28 country the public at large will be benefited. Do you think this 29 unselfish work is any way inferior to devotional practices? Our 30 object is to do good to humanity. We have no idea of making money 31 from the income of this paper. We have renounced everything and 32 have no wives or children to provide for after our death. If the 33 paper be a success, the whole of its income will be spent in the 34 service of humanity. Its surplus money will be profitably spent in the 35 opening of monasteries and homes of service in different places and 36 all sorts of work of public utility. We are not certainly working like 37 householders with the plan of filling our own pockets. Know for 38 certain that all our movements are for the good of others.

39 Disciple: Even then, all will not be able to appreciate this 40 spirit.

41 Swamiji: What if they cannot? It neither adds nor takes away 42 anything from us. We do not take up any work with an eye to 43 criticism.

44 Disciple: So this magazine will be a fortnightly. We should 45 like it to be a weekly.

46 Swamiji: Yes, but where are the funds? If through the grace 47 of Shri Ramakrishna funds are raised, it can be made into a daily 48 even, in future. A hundred thousand copies may be struck off daily 49 and distributed free in every street and lane of Calcutta.

1 Disciple: This idea of yours is a capital one.

2 Swamiji: I have a mind to make the paper self-supporting 3 first, and then set you up as its editor. You have not yet got the 4 capacity to make any enterprise stand on its legs. That is reserved
5 only for these all-renouncing Sannyasins to do. They will work 6 themselves to death, but never yield. Whereas a little resistance or 7 just a trifle of criticism is bewildering to you.

8 Disciple: Sir, the other day I saw that Swami Trigunatita
9 worshipped the photograph of Sri Ramakrishna in the Press before 10 opening the work and asked for your blessings for the success of 11 the work.

12 Swamiji: Well, Shri Ramakrishna is our centre. Each one of 13 us is a ray of that light-centre. So Trigunatita worshipped Shri 14 Ramakrishna before beginning the work, did he? It was excellently 15 done. But he told me nothing of it.

16 Disciple: Sir, he fears you and yesterday he told me to come 17 to you and ask your opinion of the first issue of the magazine, after 18 which, he said, he would see you.

19 Swamiji: Tell him when you go that I am exceedingly 20 delighted with his work. Give him my loving blessings. And all of 21 you help him as far as you can. You will be doing Shri 22 Ramakrishna's work by that.

23 Immediately after saying these words Swamiji called Swami
24 Brahmananda to him and directed him to give Swami Trigunatita 25 more money for the Udbodhan if it was needed.

26 The same evening, after supper, Swamiji again referred to 27 the topic of Udbodhan in the following words:

28 "In the Udbodhan we must give the public only positive 29 ideas. Negative thoughts weaken men. Do you not find that where 30 parents are constantly taxing their sons to read and write, telling 31 them they will never learn anything, and calling them fools and so 32 forth, the latter do actually turn out to be so in many cases? If you 33 speak kind words to boys and encourage them, they are bound to 34 improve in time. What holds good of children, also holds good of 35 children in the region of higher thoughts. If you can give them 36 positive ideas, people will grow up to be men and learn to stand on 37 their own legs. In language and literature, in poetry and the arts, in 38 everything we must point out not the mistakes that people are 39 making in their thoughts and actions, but the way in which they will 40 gradually be able to do these things better. Pointing out mistakes 41 wounds a man's feelings. We have seen how Shri Ramakrishna 42 would encourage even those whom we considered as worthless and 43 change the very course of their lives thereby! His very method of 44 teaching was a unique phenomenon."

45 After a short pause, Swamiji continued, "Never take the 46 preaching of religion to mean the turning up of one's nose at 47 everything and at everybody. In matters physical, mental, and 48 spiritual--in everything we must give men positive ideas and never 49 hate anybody. It is your hatred of one another that has brought

1 about your degradation. Now we shall have to raise men by 2 scattering broadcast only positive thoughts. First we must raise the 3 whole Hindu race in this way and then the whole world. That is why 4 Shri Ramakrishna incarnated. He never destroyed a single man's 5 special inclinations. He gave words of hope and encouragement
6 even to the most degraded of persons and lifted them up. We too
7 must follow in his footsteps and lift all up, and rouse them. Do you 8 understand?

9 "Your history, literature, mythology, and all other Shastras 10 are simply frightening people. They are only telling them, 'You will 11 go to hell, you are doomed!' Therefore has this lethargy crept into 12 the very vitals of India. Hence we must explain to men in simple 13 words the highest ideas of the Vedas and the Vedanta. Through the 14 imparting of moral principles, good behaviour, and education we 15 must make the Chandala come up to the level of the Brahmana.
16 Come, write out all these things in the Udbodhan and awaken
17 everyone, young and old, man and woman. Then only shall I know 18 that your study of the Vedas and Vedanta has been a success. What 19 do you say? Will you be able to do this?"

20 Disciple: Through your blessings and command I think I shall 21 succeed in everything.

22 Swamiji: Another thing. You must learn to make the physique 23 very strong and teach the same to others. Don't you find me 24 exercising every day with dumb-bells even now? Walk in the 25 morning and evenings and do physical labour. Body and mind must 26 run parallel. It won't do to depend on others in everything. When 27 the necessity of strengthening the physique is brought home to 28 people, they will exert themselves of their own accord. It is to make 29 them feel this need that education is necessary at the present 30 moment.

31 XI

32 [Place: The Belur Math (under construction). Year: 1899.]

33 Disciple: Why is it, Swamiji, that our society and country 34 have come to such degradation?

35 Swamiji: It is you who are responsible for it.

36 Disciple: How, sir? You surprise me.

37 Swamiji: You have been despising the lower classes of the 38 country for a very long time and, as a result, you have now become 39 the objects of contempt in the eyes of the world.

40 Disciple: When did you find us despising them?

41 Swamiji: Why, you priest-class never let the non-Brahmin
42 class read the Vedas and Vedanta and all such weighty Shastras-- 43 never touch them even. You have only kept them down. It is you 44 who have always done like that through selfishness. It was the 45 Brahmins who made a monopoly of the religious books and kept the 46 question of sanction and prohibition in their own hands. And 47 repeatedly calling the other races of India low and vile, they put 48

1 this belief into their heads that they were really such. If you tell a 2 man, "You are low, you are vile", in season and out of season, then 3 he is bound to believe in course of time that he is really such. This 4 is called hypnotism. The non-Brahmin classes are now slowly 5 rousing themselves. Their faith in Brahminical scriptures and 6 Mantras is getting shaken. Through the spread of Western 7 education all the tricks of the Brahmins are giving way, like the 8 banks of the Padma in the rainy season. Do you not see that?

9 Disciple: Yes, sir, the stricture of orthodoxy is gradually 10 lessening nowadays.

11 Swamiji: It is as it should be. The Brahmins, in fact, gradually 12 took a course of gross immorality and oppression. Through 13 selfishness they introduced a large number of strange, non-Vedic, 14 immoral, and unreasonable doctrines--simply to keep intact their 15 own prestige. And the fruits of that they are reaping forthwith.

16 Disciple: What may these fruits be, sir?

17 Swamiji: Don't you perceive them? It is simply due to your 18 having despised the masses of India that you have now been living 19 a life of slavery for the last thousand years; it is therefore that you 20 are the objects of hatred in the eyes of foreigners and are looked 21 upon with indifference by your countrymen.

22 Disciple: But, sir, even now it is the Brahmins who direct all 23 ceremonials, and people are observing them according to the 24 opinions of the Brahmins. Why then do you speak like that?

25 Swamiji: I don't find it. Where do the tenfold Samskaras or 26 purifying ceremonies enjoined by the Shastras obtain still? Well, I 27 have travelled the whole of India, and everywhere I have found 28 society to be guided by local usages which are condemned by the 29 Shrutis and Smritis. Popular customs, local usages, and 30 observances prevalent among women only--have not these taken 31 the place of the Smritis everywhere? Who obeys, and whom? If you 32 can but spend enough money, the priest-class is ready to write out 33 whatever sanctions or prohibitions you want! How many of them 34 read the Vedic Kalpa (Ritual), Grihya and Shrauta Sutras? Then, 35 look, here in Bengal the code of Raghunandana is obeyed; a little 36 farther on you will find the code of Mitakshara in vogue; while in 37 another part the code of Manu holds sway! You seem to think that 38 the same laws hold good everywhere! What I want therefore is to 39 introduce the study of the Vedas by stimulating a greater regard for 40 them in the minds of the people, and to pass everywhere the 41 injunctions of the Vedas.

42 Disciple: Sir, is it possible nowadays to set them going?

43 Swamiji: It is true that all the ancient Vedic laws will not 44 have a go, but if we introduce additions and alterations in them to 45 suit the needs of the times, codify them, and hold them up as a new 46 model to society, why will they not pass current?

47 Disciple: Sir, I was under the impression that at least the 48 injunctions of Manu were being obeyed all over India even now.

49 Swamiji: Nothing of the kind. Just look to your own province

1 and see how the Vamachara (immoral practices) of the Tantras has 2 entered into your very marrow. Even modern Vaishnavism, which is 3 the skeleton of the defunct Buddhism, is saturated with Vamachara!
4 We must stem the tide of this Vamachara, which is contrary to the 5 spirit of the Vedas.

6 Disciple: Sir, is it possible now to cleanse this Aegean stable?

7 Swamiji: What nonsense do you say, you coward! You have 8 well-nigh thrown the country into ruin by crying, 'It is impossible, it 9 is impossible!' What cannot human effort achieve?

10 Disciple: But, sir, such a state of things seems impossible 11 unless sages like Manu and Yajnavalkya are again born in the 12 country.

13 Swamiji: Goodness gracious! Was it not purity and unselfish 14 labour that made them Manu and Yajnavalkya, or was it something 15 else? Well, we ourselves can be far greater than even Manu and 16 Yajnavalkya if we try to; why will not our views prevail then?

17 Disciple: Sir, it is you who said just now that we must revive 18 the ancient usages and observances within the country. How then 19 can we think lightly of sages like Manu and the rest?

20 Swamiji: What an absurd deduction! You altogether miss my 21 point. I have only said that the ancient Vedic customs must be 22 remodelled according to the need of the society and the times, and 23 passed under a new form in the land. Have I not?

24 Disciple: Yes, sir.

25 Swamiji: What, then, were you talking? You have read the 26 Shastras, and my hope and faith rest in men like you. Understand 27 my words in their true spirit, and apply yourselves to work in their 28 light.

29 Disciple: But, sir, who will listen to us? Why should our 30 countrymen accept them?

31 Swamiji: If you can truly convince them and practise what 32 you preach, they must. If, on the contrary, like a coward you simply 33 utter Shlokas as a parrot, be a mere talker and quote authority only, 34 without showing them in action--then who will care to listen to you?

35 Disciple: Please give me some advice in brief about social 36 reform.

37 Swamiji: Why, I have given you advice enough; now put at 38 least something in practice. Let the world see that your reading of 39 the scriptures and listening to me has been a success. The codes of 40 Manu and lots of other books that you have read--what is their basis 41 and underlying purpose? Keeping that basis intact, compile in the 42 manner of the ancient Rishis the essential truths of them and 43 supplement them with thoughts that are suited to the times; only 44 take care that all races and all sects throughout India be really 45 benefited by following these rules. Just write out a Smriti like that; I 46 shall revise it.

47 Disciple: Sir, it is not an easy task; and even if such a Smriti 48 be written, will it be accepted?

1 Swamiji: Why not? Just write it out. "{Sanskrit}--Time is 2 infinite, and the world is vast." If you write it in the proper way, 3 there must come a day when it will be accepted. Have faith in 4 yourself. You people were once the Vedic Rishis. Only, you have 5 come in different forms, that's all. I see it clear as daylight that you
6 all have infinite power in you. Rouse that up; arise, arise--apply 7 yourselves heart and soul, gird up your loins. What will you do with 8 wealth and fame that are so transitory? Do you know what I think? I 9 don't care for Mukti and all that. My mission is to arouse within you 10 all such ideas; I am ready to undergo a hundred thousand rebirths 11 to train up a single man.

12 Disciple: But, sir, what will be the use of undertaking such 13 works? Is not death stalking behind?

14 Swamiji: Fie upon you! If you die, you will die but once. Why 15 will you die every minute of your life by constantly harping on death 16 like a coward?

17 Disciple: All right, sir, I may not think of death, but what 18 good will come of any kind of work in this evanescent world?

19 Swamiji: My boy, when death is inevitable, is it not better to 20 die like heroes than as stocks and stones? And what is the use of 21 living a day or two more in this transitory world? It is better to wear 22 out than to rust out--specially for the sake of doing the least good to 23 others.

24 Disciple: It is true, sir. I beg pardon for troubling you so 25 much.

26 Swamiji: I don't feel tired even if I talk for two whole nights 27 to an earnest inquirer; I can give up food and sleep and talk and 28 talk. Well, if I have a mind, I can sit up in Samadhi in a Himalayan 29 cave. And you see that nowadays through the Mother's grace I have 30 not to think about food, it comes anyhow. Why then don't I do so?
31 And why am I here? Only the sight of the country's misery and the 32 thought of its future do not let me remain quiet any more!--Even 33 Samadhi and all that appear as futile--even the sphere of Brahma 34 with its enjoyments becomes insipid! My vow of life is to think of 35 your welfare. The day that vow will be fulfilled, I shall leave this 36 body and make a straight run up!

37 Hearing Swamiji's words the disciple sat speechless for a 38 while, gazing at him, wondering in his heart. Then, with a view to 39 taking his leave, he saluted Swamiji reverently and asked his 40 permission to go.

41 Swamiji: Why do you want to go? Why not live in the Math?
42 Your mind will again be polluted if you go back to the worldly-43 minded. See here, how fresh is the air, there is the Ganga, and the 44 Sadhus (holy men) are practising meditation, and holding lofty 45 talks! While the moment you will go to Calcutta, you will be 46 thinking of nasty stuff.

47 The disciple joyfully replied, "All right, sir, I shall stay today 48 at the Math."

49 Swamiji: Why "today"? Can't you live here for good? What is

1 the use of going back to the world?

2 The disciple bent down his head, hearing Swamiji's words.
3 Various thoughts crowded into his brain and kept him speechless.

5 XII

6 [Place: The Belur Math (under construction). Year: beginning 7 of 1899.]

8 Today Swamiji is walking round the new Math grounds in the 9 afternoon in company with the disciple. Standing at a little distance 10 off the Bael tree Swamiji took to singing slowly a Bengali song:¹⁷⁹ 11 "O Himalaya, Ganesh is auspicious to me" etc., ending with the 12 line--"And many Dandis (Sannyasins) and Yogis with matted hair 13 will also come." While singing the song Swamiji repeated this line 14 to the disciple and said, "Do you understand? In course of time 15 many Sadhus and Sannyasins will come here." Saying this he sat 16 under the tree and remarked, "The ground under the Bilva tree is 17 very holy. Meditating here quickly brings about an awakening of the 18 religious instinct. Shri Ramakrishna used to say so."

19 Disciple: Sir, those who are devoted to the discrimination 20 between the Self and not-Self--have they any need to consider the 21 auspiciousness of place, time, and so forth?

22 Swamiji: Those who are established in the knowledge of the 23 Atman have no need for such discrimination, but that state is not 24 attained off-hand. It comes as the result of long practice. Therefore 25 in the beginning one has to take the help of external aids and learn 26 to stand on one's own legs. Later on, when one is established in the 27 knowledge of the Atman, there is no more need for any external aid.

28 The various methods of spiritual practice that have been laid 29 down in the scriptures are all for the attainment of the knowledge 30 of the Atman. Of course these practices vary according to the 31 qualifications of different aspirants. But they also are a kind of 32 work, and so long as there is work, the Atman is not discovered.
33 The obstacles to the manifestation of the Atman are overcome by 34 practices as laid down in the scriptures; but work has no power of 35 directly manifesting the Atman, it is only effective in removing some 36 veils that cover knowledge. Then the Atman manifests by Its own 37 effulgence. Do you see? Therefore does your commentator 38 (Shankara) say, "In our knowledge of Brahman, there cannot be the 39 least touch of work."

40 Disciple: But, sir, since the obstacles to Self-manifestation 41 are not overcome without the performance of work in some form or 42 other, therefore indirectly work stands as a means to knowledge.

43 Swamiji: From the standpoint of the causal chain, it so 44 appears prima facie. Taking up this view it is stated in the Purva-45 Mimamsa that work for a definite end infallibly produces a definite 46 result. But the vision of the Atman which is Absolute is not to be

1 ¹⁷⁹ ?This is one of the songs sung in the homes of Bengal on the eve of Durga 2 Puja.
3

1 compassed by means of work. For the rule with regard to a seeker
2 of the Atman is that he should undergo spiritual practice, but have 3 no eye to its results. It follows thence that these practices are 4 simply the cause of the purification of the aspirant's mind. For if the 5 Atman could be directly realised as a result of these practices, then 6 scriptures would not have enjoined on the aspirant to give up the 7 results of work. So it is with a view to combating the Purva-8 Mimamsa doctrine of work with motive producing results, that the 9 philosophy of work without motive has been set forth in the Gita. Do 10 you see?

11 Disciple: But, sir, if one has to renounce the fruits of work, 12 why should one be induced to undertake work which is always 13 troublesome?

14 Swamiji: In this human life, one cannot help doing some kind 15 of work always. When man has perforce to do some work, Karma-
16 Yoga enjoins on him to do it in such a way as will bring freedom
17 through the realisation of the Atman. As to your objection that none 18 will be induced to work--the answer is, that whatever work you do 19 has some motive behind it; but when by the long performance of 20 work, one notices that one work merely leads to another, through a 21 round of births and rebirths, then the awakened discrimination of 22 man naturally begins to question itself, "Where is the end to this 23 interminable chain of work?" It is then that he appreciates the full 24 import of the words of the Lord in the Gita: "Inscrutable is the 25 course of work. "Therefore when the aspirant finds that work with 26 motive brings no happiness, then he renounces action. But man is 27 so constituted that to him the performance of work is a necessity, so 28 what work should he take up? He takes up some unselfish work, but 29 gives up all desire for its fruits. For he has known then that in those 30 fruits of work lie countless seeds of future births and deaths.
31 Therefore the knower of Brahman renounces all actions. Although 32 to outward appearances he engages himself in some work, he has 33 no attachment to it. Such men have been described in the 34 scriptures as Karma-Yogins.

35 Disciple: Is then the work without motive of the unselfish 36 knower of Brahman like the activities of a lunatic?

37 Swamiji: Why so? Giving up the fruits of work means not to 38 perform work for the good of one's own body or mind. The knower 39 of Brahman never seeks his own happiness. But what is there to 40 prevent him from doing work for the welfare of others? Whatever 41 work he does without attachment for its fruits brings only good to 42 the world--it is all "for the good of the many, for the happiness of 43 the many". Shri Ramakrishna used to say, "They never take a false 44 step". Haven't you read in the Uttara-Rama-Charita "{Sanskrit}-- 45 The words of the ancient Rishis have always some meaning, they 46 are never false?" When the mind is merged in the Atman by the 47 suppression of all modifications, it produces "a dispassion for the 48 enjoyment of fruits of work here or hereafter"; there remains no 49 desire in the mind for any enjoyment here, or, after death, in any 50 heavenly sphere. There is no action and interaction of desires in the 51 mind. But when the mind descends from the superconscious state 52 into the world of "I and mine", then by the momentum of previous

1 work or habit, or Samskaras (impressions), the functions of the 2 body go on as before. The mind then is generally in the 3 superconscious state; eating and other functions of the body are 4 done from mere necessity, and the body-consciousness is very much 5 attenuated. Whatever work is done after reaching this 6 transcendental state is done rightly; it conduces to the real well-7 being of men and the world; for then the mind of the doer is not 8 contaminated by selfishness or calculation of personal gain or loss.
9 The Lord has created this wonderful universe, remaining always in 10 the realm of superconsciousness; therefore there is nothing 11 imperfect in this world. So I was saying that the actions which the 12 knower of the Atman does without attachment for fruits are never 13 imperfect, but they conduce to the real well-being of men and the 14 world.

15 Disciple: Sir, you said just now that knowledge and work are 16 contradictory, that in the supreme knowledge there is no room at all 17 for work, or in other words, that by means of work the realisation of 18 Brahman cannot be attained. Why then do you now and then speak 19 words calculated to awaken great Rajas (activity)? You were telling 20 me the other day, "Work, work, work--there is no other way."

21 Swamiji: Going round the whole world, I find that people of 22 this country are immersed in great Tamas (inactivity), compared 23 with people of other countries. On the outside, there is a simulation 24 of the Sattvika (calm and balanced) state, but inside, downright 25 inertness like that of stocks and stones--what work will be done in 26 the world by such people? How long can such an inactive, lazy, and 27 sensual people live in the world? First travel in Western countries, 28 then contradict my words. How much of enterprise and devotion to 29 work, how much enthusiasm and manifestation of Rajas are there in 30 the lives of the Western people! While, in your own country, it is as 31 if the blood has become congealed in the heart, so that it cannot 32 circulate in the veins--as if paralysis has overtaken the body and it 33 has become languid. So my idea is first to make the people active by 34 developing their Rajas, and thus make them fit for the struggle for 35 existence. With no strength in the body, no enthusiasm at heart, and 36 no originality in the brain, what will they do--these lumps of dead 37 matter! By stimulating them I want to bring life into them--to this I 38 have dedicated my life. I will rouse them through the infallible 39 power of Vedic Mantras. I am born to proclaim to them that fearless 40 message--"Arise! Awake!" Be you my helpers in this work! Go from 41 village to village, from one portion of the country to another, and 42 preach this message of fearlessness to all, from the Brahmin to the 43 Chandala. Tell each and all that infinite power resides within them, 44 that they are sharers of immortal Bliss. Thus rouse up the Rajas 45 within them--make them fit for the struggle for existence, and then 46 speak to them about salvation. First make the people of the country 47 stand on their legs by rousing their inner power, first let them learn 48 to have good food and clothes and plenty of enjoyment--then tell 49 them how to be free from this bondage of enjoyment.

50 Laziness, meanness, and hypocrisy have covered the whole 51 length and breadth of the country. Can an intelligent man look on 52 all this and remain quiet? Does it not bring tears to the eyes?

1 Madras, Bombay, Punjab, Bengal--whichever way I look, I see no
2 signs of life. You are thinking yourselves highly educated. What 3 nonsense have you learnt? Getting by heart the thoughts of others 4 in a foreign language, and stuffing your brain with them and taking 5 some university degrees, you consider yourselves educated! Fie 6 upon you! Is this education? What is the goal of your education?
7 Either a clerkship, or being a roguish lawyer, or at the most a 8 Deputy Magistracy, which is another form of clerkship--isn't that 9 all? Open your eyes and see what a piteous cry for food is rising in 10 the land of Bharata, proverbial for its wealth! Will your education 11 fulfil this want? Never.

12 With the help of Western science set yourselves to dig the 13 earth and produce food-stuffs--not by means of mean servitude of 14 others--but by discovering new avenues to production, by your own 15 exertions aided by Western science. Therefore I teach the people of 16 this country to be full of activities, so as to be able to produce food 17 and clothing for themselves. For want of food and clothing and 18 plunged in anxiety for it, the country has come to ruin--what are you 19 doing to remedy this? Throw aside your scriptures in the Ganga and 20 teach the people first the means of procuring their food and 21 clothing, and then you will find time to read to them the scriptures.
22 If their material wants are not removed by the rousing of intense 23 activity, none will listen to words of spirituality. Therefore I say, first 24 rouse the inherent power of the Atman within you, then, rousing the 25 faith of the general people in that power as much as you can, teach 26 them first of all to make provision for food, and then teach them 27 religion. There is no time to sit idle--who knows when death will 28 overtake one?

29 While saying these words, a mingled expression of remorse, 30 sorrow, compassion, and power shone on his face. Looking at his 31 majestic appearance, the disciple was awed into silence. A little 32 while afterwards Swamiji said again, "That activity and self-reliance 33 must come in the people of the country in time--I see it clearly.
34 There is no escape. The intelligent man can distinctly see the vision 35 of the next three Yugas (ages) ahead. Ever since the advent of Shri 36 Ramakrishna the eastern horizon has been aglow with the dawning 37 rays of the sun which in course of time will illumine the country 38 with the splendour of the midday sun."

40 [Place: The Belur Math. Beginning of 1899.]

41 The present Math buildings are almost complete now.

42 Swamiji is not in good health; therefore doctors have advised 43 him to go out on a boat in the mornings and evenings on the Ganga.

44 Today is Sunday. The disciple is sitting in Swamiji's room and 45 conversing with him. About this time Swamiji framed certain rules 46 for the guidance of the Sannyasins and Brahmacharins of the Math, 47 the object of which was to keep them from indiscriminate mixing 48 with worldly people. The conversation turned on this topic.
49

1 Swamiji: Nowadays I feel a peculiar smell of lax self-control
2 in the dress and clothes of worldly people; therefore I have made it 3 a rule in the Math that householders should not sit or lie on the 4 beds of Sadhus. Formerly I used to read in the Shastras that such a 5 smell is felt, and therefore Sannyasins cannot bear the smell of 6 householders. Now I see it is true. By strictly observing the rules 7 that have been framed, the Brahmacharins will in time grow into 8 genuine Sannyasins. When they are established in the ideal of 9 Sannyasa, they will be able to mix on an equal footing with worldly 10 men without any harm. But now if they are not kept within the 11 barriers of strict rules, they will all go wrong. In order to attain to 12 ideal Brahmacharya one has in the beginning to observe strict rules 13 regarding chastity. Not only should one keep oneself strictly aloof 14 from the least association with the opposite sex, but also give up 15 the company of married people even.

16 The disciple who was a householder was awed at these 17 words of Swamiji, felt dejected that he would not be able to 18 associate freely as before with the Sadhus of the Math and said, 19 "Sir, I feel more intimacy with the Math and its inmates than with 20 my own family. As if they are known to me from a long long time.
21 The unbounded freedom that I enjoy in the Math, I feel nowhere 22 else in the world."

23 Swamiji: All those who are pure in spirit will feel like that 24 here. Those who do not feel so must be taken as not belonging to 25 this Math and its ideals. That is the reason why many people come 26 here out of mere sensation-mongering and then run away. Those 27 who are devoid of continence and are running after money day and 28 night will never be able to appreciate the ideals of the Math, nor 29 regard the Math people as their own. The Sannyasins of this Math 30 are not like those of old, ash-besmeared, with matted hair and iron 31 tongs in their hands, and curing disease by medicinal titbits; 32 therefore seeing the contrast, people cannot appreciate them. The 33 ways, movements and ideas of our Master were all cast in a new 34 mould, so we are also of a new type. Sometimes dressed like 35 gentlemen, we are engaged in lecturing; at other times, throwing 36 all aside, with "Hara, Hara, Vyom Vyom" on the lips, ash-clad, we 37 are immersed in meditation and austerities in mountains and 38 forests.

39 Now it won't do to merely quote the authority of our ancient 40 books. The tidal wave of Western civilisation is now rushing over 41 the length and breadth of the country. It won't do now simply to sit 42 in meditation on mountain tops without realising in the least its 43 usefulness. Now is wanted--as said in the Gita by the Lord--intense 44 Karma-Yoga, with unbounded courage and indomitable strength in 45 the heart. Then only will the people of the country be roused, 46 otherwise they will continue to be as much in the dark as you are.

47 The day is nearly ended. Swamiji came downstairs, dressed 48 for the boating excursion on the Ganga. Swamiji, accompanied by 49 the disciple and two others, boarded the boat, which passed the 50 Dakshineswar temple and reached Panihati where it was anchored 51 below the garden-house of Babu Govinda Kumar Chaudhury. It has 52 once been proposed to rent this house for the use of the Math.

1 Swamiji descended from the boat, went round the house and the 2 garden and looking over the place minutely said, "The garden is 3 nice but is at a great distance from Calcutta. The devotees of Shri 4 Ramakrishna would have been put to trouble to walk such a long 5 distance from Calcutta. It is fortunate that the Math has not been 6 established here." The boat then returned to the Math amid the 7 enveloping darkness.

10 [Place: Belur Math. Beginning of 1899.]

11 The disciple has today come to the Math with Nag 12 Mahashaya in company.

13 Swamiji to Nag Mahashaya (saluting him): You are all right, I 14 hope?

15 Nag Mahashaya: I have come today to visit you. Glory to 16 Shankara! Glory to Shankara! I am blessed today verily with the 17 sight of Shiva!

18 Saying these words, Nag Mahashaya out of reverence stood 19 with joined hands before him.

20 Swamiji: How is your health?

21 Nag Mahashaya: Why are you asking about this trifling 22 body--this cage of flesh and bones? Verily I am blessed today to see 23 you.

24 Saying these words, Nag Mahashaya prostrated before
25 Swamiji.

26 Swamiji (lifting him up): Why are you doing that to me?

27 Nag Mahashaya: I see with my inner eye that today I am 28 blessed with the vision of Shiva Himself. Glory to Ramakrishna!

29 Swamiji (addressing the disciple): Do you see? How real 30 Bhakti transforms human nature! Nag Mahashaya has lost himself 31 in the Divine, his body-consciousness has vanished altogether. (To 32 Swami Premananda) Get some Prasada for Nag Mahashaya.

33 Nag Mahashaya: Prasada! (To Swamiji with folded hands)
34 Seeing you, all my earthly hunger has vanished today.

35 The Brahmacharins and Sannyasins of the Math were 36 studying the Upanishads. Swamiji said to them, "Today a great 37 devotee of Shri Ramakrishna has come amongst us. Let it be a 38 holiday in honour of Nag Mahashaya's visit to the Math." So all 39 closed their books and sat in a circle round Nag Mahashaya;
40 Swamiji also sat in front of him.

41 Swamiji (addressing all): Do you see? Look at Nag 42 Mahashaya; he is a householder, yet he has no knowledge of the 43 mundane existence; he always lives lost in Divine consciousness.
44 (To Nag Mahashaya) Please tell us and these Brahmacharins
45 something about Shri Ramakrishna.

46 Nag Mahashaya (in reverence): What do you say, sir? What

1 shall I say? I have come to see you--the hero, the helper in the 2 divine play of Shri Ramakrishna. Now will people appreciate his 3 message and teachings. Glory to Ramakrishna!

4 Swamiji: It is you who have really appreciated and 5 understood Shri Ramakrishna. We are only spent in useless 6 wanderings.

7 Nag Mahashaya: What do you say, sir? You are the image of 8 Shri Ramakrishna--the obverse and reverse of the same coin. Those 9 who have eyes, let them see.

10 Swamiji: Is the starting of these Maths and Ashramas etc. a 11 step in the right direction?

12 Nag Mahashaya: I am an insignificant being, what do I 13 understand? Whatever you do, I know for a certainty, will conduce 14 to the well-being of the world--ay, of the world.

15 Many out of reverence proceeded to take the dust of Nag
16 Mahashaya's feet, which made him much agitated. Swamiji, 17 addressing all, said, "Don't act so as to cause pain to Nag 18 Mahashaya; he feels uncomfortable." Hearing this everybody 19 desisted.

20 Swamiji: Do please come and stay at the Math. You will be an 21 object-lesson to the boys here.

22 Nag Mahashaya: I once asked Shri Ramakrishna about that, 23 to which he replied, "Stay as a householder as you are doing." 24 Therefore I am continuing in that life. I see you all occasionally and 25 feel myself blessed.

26 Swamiji: I will go to your place once.

27 Nag Mahashaya, mad with joy, said, "Shall such a day dawn?
28 My place will be made holy by your visit, like Varanasi. Shall I be so 29 fortunate as that!"

30 Swamiji: Well, I have the desire. Now it depends on "Mother" 31 to take me there.

32 Nag Mahashaya: Who will understand you? Unless the inner 33 vision opens, nobody can understand you. Only Shri Ramakrishna 34 understood you; all else have simply put faith in his words, but none 35 has understood you really.

36 Swamiji: Now my one desire is to rouse the country--the 37 sleeping leviathan that has lost all faith in his power and makes no 38 response. If I can wake it up to a sense of the Eternal Religion then 39 I shall know that Shri Ramakrishna's advent and our birth are 40 fruitful. That is the one desire in my heart: Mukti and all else 41 appear of no consequence to me. Please give me your blessings that 42 I may succeed.

43 Nag Mahashaya: Your will and his have become one.
44 Whatever is your will is his. Glory to Shri Ramakrishna!

45 Swamiji: To work one requires a strong body; since coming to 46 this country, I am not doing well; in the West I was in very good 47 health.

1 Nag Mahashaya: "Whenever one is born in a body," Shri
2 Ramakrishna used to say, "one has to pay the house tax." Disease 3 and sorrow are the tax. But your body is a box of gold mohurs, and 4 very great care should be taken of it. But who will do it? Who will 5 understand? Only Shri Ramakrishna understood. Glory to 6 Ramakrishna!

7 Swamiji: All at the Math take great care of me.

8 Nag Mahashaya: It will be to their good if they do it, whether 9 they know it or not. If proper attention is not paid to your body, then 10 the chances are that it will fall off.

11 Swamiji: Nag Mahashaya, I do not fully understand whether 12 what I am doing is right or not. At particular times I feel a great 13 inclination to work in a certain direction, and I work according to 14 that. Whether it is for good or evil, I cannot understand.

15 Nag Mahashaya: Well, Shri Ramakrishna said, "The treasure 16 is now locked."--Therefore he does not let you know fully. The 17 moment you know it, your play of human life will be at an end.

18 Swamiji was pondering something with steadfast gaze. Then 19 Swami Premananda brought some Prasada for Nag Mahashaya who 20 was ecstatic with joy. Shortly after Nag Mahashaya found Swamiji 21 slowly digging the ground with a spade near the pond, and held him 22 by the hand saying, "When we are present, why should you do 23 that?" Swamiji leaving the spade walked about the garden talking 24 the while, and began to narrate to a disciple, "After Shri 25 Ramakrishna's passing away we heard one day that Nag
26 Mahashaya lay fasting in his humbled tiled lodgings in Calcutta.
27 Myself, Swami Turiyananda, and another went together and 28 appeared at Nag Mahashaya's cottage. Seeing us he rose from his 29 bed. We said, 'We shall have our Bhiksha (food) here today.' At once 30 Nag Mahashaya brought rice, cooking pot, fuel, etc. from the 31 bazaar and began to cook. We thought that we would eat and make 32 Nag Mahashaya also eat. Cooking over, he gave the food to us; we 33 set apart something for him and then sat down to eat. After this, we 34 requested him to take food; he at once broke the pot of rice and 35 striking his forehead began to say: 'Shall I give food to the body in 36 which God has not been realised?' Seeing this we were struck with 37 amazement. Later on after much persuasion we induced him to take 38 some food and then returned."

39 Swamiji: Will Nag Mahashaya stay in the Math tonight?

40 Disciple: No, he has some work; he must return today.

41 Swamiji: Then look for a boat. It is getting dark.

42 When the boat came, the disciple and Nag Mahashaya
43 saluted Swamiji and started for Calcutta.

1 Swamiji is now in very good health. The disciple has come to 2 the Math on a Sunday morning. After visiting Swamiji he has come 3 downstairs and is discussing the Vedantic scriptures with Swami
4 Nirmalananda. At this moment Swamiji himself came downstairs 5 and addressing the disciple, said, "What were you discussing with 6 Nirmalananda?"

7 Disciple: Sir, he was saying, "The Brahman of the Vedanta is 8 only known to you and your Swamiji. We on the contrary know that 9 "{Sanskrit}--Shri Krishna is the Lord Himself."

10 Swamiji: What did you say?

11 Disciple: I said that the Atman is the one Truth, and that 12 Krishna was merely a person who had realised this Atman. Swami 13 Nirmalananda is at heart a believer in the Advaita Vedanta, but 14 outwardly he takes up the dualistic side. His first idea seems to be 15 to moot the personal aspect of the Ishvara and then by a gradual 16 process of reasoning to strengthen the foundations of Vedanta.

17 But as soon as he calls me a "Vaishnava" I forget his real 18 intention and begin a heated discussion with him.

19 Swamiji: He loves you and so enjoys the fun of teasing you.
20 But why should you be upset by his words? You will also answer, 21 "You, sir, are an atheist, a believer in Nihilism."

22 Disciple: Sir, is there any such statement in the Upanishads 23 that Ishvara is an all-powerful Person? But people generally believe 24 in such an Ishvara.

25 Swamiji: The highest principle, the Lord of all, cannot be a 26 Person. The Jiva is an individual and the sum total of all Jivas is the 27 Ishvara. In the Jiva, Avidya, or nescience, is predominant, but 28 Ishvara controls Maya composed of Avidya and Vidya and 29 independently projects this world of moving and immovable things 30 out of Himself. But Brahman transcends both the individual and 31 collective aspects, the Jiva and Ishvara. In Brahman there is no 32 part. It is for the sake of easy comprehension that parts have been 33 imagined in It. That part of Brahman in which there is the 34 superimposition of creation, maintenance and dissolution of the 35 universe has been spoken of as Ishvara in the scriptures, while the 36 other unchangeable portion, with reference to which there is no 37 thought of duality, is indicated as Brahman. But do not on that 38 account think that Brahman is a distinct and separate substance 39 from the Jivas and the universe. The Qualified Monists hold that it is 40 Brahman that has transformed Itself into Jivas and the universe.
41 The Advaitins on the contrary maintain that Jivas and the universe
42 have been merely superimposed on Brahman. But in reality there 43 has been no modification in Brahman. The Advaitin says that the 44 universe consists only of name and form. It endures only so long as 45 there are name and form. When through meditation and other 46 practices name and form are dissolved, then only the transcendent 47 Brahman remains. Then the separate reality of Jivas and the 48 universe is felt no longer. Then it is realised that one is the Eternal 49 Pure Essence of Intelligence, or Brahman. The real nature of the 50 Jiva is Brahman. When the veil of name and form vanishes through 1 meditation etc., then that idea is simply realised. This is the 2 substance of pure Advaita. The Vedas, the Vedanta and all other 3 scriptures only explain this idea in different ways.

4 Disciple: How then is it true that Ishvara is an almighty 5 Person?

6 Swamiji: Man is man in so far as he is qualified by the 7 limiting adjunct of mind. Through the mind he has to understand 8 and grasp everything, and therefore whatever he thinks must be 9 limited by the mind. Hence it is the natural tendency of man to 10 argue, from the analogy of his own personality, the personality of 11 Ishvara (God). Man can only think of his ideal as a human being.
12 When buffeted by sorrow in this world of disease and death he is 13 driven to desperation and helplessness, then he seeks refuge with 14 someone, relying on whom he may feel safe. But where is that 15 refuge to be found? The omnipresent Atman which depends on 16 nothing else to support It is the only Refuge. At first man does not 17 find that. When discrimination and dispassion arise in the course of 18 meditation and spiritual practices, he comes to know it. But in 19 whatever way he may progress on the path of spirituality, everyone 20 is unconsciously awakening Brahman within him. But the means 21 may be different in different cases. Those who have faith in the 22 Personal God have to undergo spiritual practices holding on to that 23 idea. If there is sincerity, through that will come the awakening of 24 the lion of Brahman within. The knowledge of Brahman is the one 25 goal of all beings but the various ideas are the various paths to it.
26 Although the real nature of the Jiva is Brahman, still as he has 27 identification with the qualifying adjunct of the mind, he suffers 28 from all sorts of doubts and difficulties, pleasure and pain. But 29 everyone from Brahma down to a blade of grass is advancing 30 towards the realisation of his real nature. And none can escape the 31 round of births and deaths until he realises his identity with 32 Brahman. Getting the human birth, when the desire for freedom 33 becomes very strong, and along with it comes the grace of a person 34 of realisation, then man's desire for Self-knowledge becomes 35 intensified. Otherwise the mind of men given to lust and greed 36 never inclines that way. How should the desire to know Brahman 37 arise in one who has the hankering in his mind for the pleasures of 38 family life, for wealth and for fame? He who is prepared to 39 renounce all, who amid the strong current of the duality of good 40 and evil, happiness and misery, is calm, steady, balanced, and 41 awake to his Ideal, alone endeavours to attain to Self-knowledge.
42 He alone by the might of his own power tears asunder the net of 43 the world. "{Sanskrit}--Breaking the barriers of Maya, he emerges 44 like a mighty lion."

45 Disciple: Well then, is it true that without Sannyasa, there 46 can be no knowledge of Brahman?

47 Swamiji: That is true, a thousand times. One must have both 48 internal and external Sannyasa--renunciation in spirit as also formal 49 renunciation. Shankaracharya, in commenting on the Upanishadic 50 text, "Neither by Tapas (spiritual practice) devoid of the necessary

1 insignia",¹⁸⁰ he said that by practising Sadhana without the external 2 badge of Sannyasa (the Gerua-robe, the staff, Kamandalu, etc.), 3 Brahman, which is difficult to attain, is not realised. Without 4 dispassion for the world, without renunciation, without giving up 5 the desire for enjoyment, absolutely nothing can be accomplished in 6 the spiritual life. "It is not like a sweetmeat in the hands of a child 7 which you can snatch by a trick."¹⁸¹

8 Disciple: But, sir, in the course of spiritual practices, that 9 renunciation may come.

10 Swamiji: Let those to whom it will come gradually have it 11 that way. But why should you sit and wait for that? At once begin to 12 dig the channel which will bring the waters of spirituality to your 13 life. Shri Ramakrishna used to deprecate lukewarmness in spiritual 14 attainments as, for instance, saying that religion would come 15 gradually, and that there was no hurry for it. When one is thirsty, 16 can one sit idle? Does he not run about for water? Because your 17 thirst for spirituality has not come, therefore you are sitting idly.
18 The desire for knowledge has not grown strong, therefore you are 19 satisfied with the little pleasures of family life.

20 Disciple: Really I do not understand why I don't get that idea 21 of renouncing everything. Do make some way for that, please.

22 Swamiji: The end and the means are all in your hands. I can 23 only stimulate them. You have read so many scriptures and are 24 serving and associating with such Sadhus who have known 25 Brahman; if even this does not bring the idea of renunciation, then 26 your life is in vain. But it will not be altogether vain; the effects of 27 this will manifest in some way or other in time.

28 The disciple was much dejected and again said to Swamiji:
29 "Sir, I have come under your refuge, do open the path of Mukti for 30 me--that I may realise the Truth in this body."

31 Swamiji: What fear is there? Always discriminate--your body, 32 your house, these Jivas and the world are all absolutely unreal like a 33 dream. Always think that this body is only an inert instrument. And 34 the self-contained Purusha within is your real nature. The adjunct of 35 mind is His first and subtle covering, then, there is this body which 36 is His gross, outer covering. The indivisible changeless, self-37 effulgent Purusha is lying hidden under these delusive veils, 38 therefore your real nature is unknown to you. The direction of the 39 mind which always runs after the senses has to be turned within.
40 The mind has to be killed. The body is but gross--it dies and 41 dissolves into the five elements. But the bundle of mental 42 impressions, which is the mind, does not die soon. It remains for 43 some time in seed-form and then sprouts and grows in the form of a 44 tree--it takes on another physical body and goes the round of birth 45 and death, until Self-knowledge arises. Therefore I say, by 46 meditation and concentration and by the power of philosophical 47 discrimination plunge this mind in the Ocean of Existence-

1 ¹⁸⁰ ?Mundaka Upanishad, III. ii. 4.
2

3 ¹⁸¹ ?Song of Ramprasad.
4

1 Knowledge-Bliss Absolute. When the mind dies, all limiting adjuncts
2 vanish and you are established in Brahman.

3 Disciple: Sir, it is so difficult to direct this uncontrolled mind
4 towards Brahman.

5 Swamiji: Is there anything difficult for the hero? Only men of 6 faint hearts speak so. "{Sanskrit}--Mukti is easy of attainment only 7 to the hero--but not to cowards." Says the Gita (VI. 35), 8 "{Sanskrit}--By renunciation and by practice is the mind brought 9 under control, O Arjuna." The Chitta or mind-stuff is like a 10 transparent lake, and the waves which rise in it by the impact of 11 sense-impressions constitute Manas or the mind. Therefore the 12 mind consists of a succession of thought-waves. From these mental 13 waves arises desire. Then that desire transforms itself into will and 14 works through its gross instrument, the body. Again, as work is 15 endless, so its fruits also are endless. Hence the mind is always 16 being tossed by countless myriads of waves--the fruits of work. This 17 mind has to be divested of all modifications (Vrittis) and 18 reconverted into the transparent lake, so that there remains not a 19 single wave of modification in it. Then will Brahman manifest Itself.
20 The scriptures give a glimpse of this state in such passages as: 21 "Then all the knots of the heart are cut asunder", etc. Do you 22 understand?

23 Disciple: Yes, sir, but meditation must base itself on some 24 object?

25 Swamiji: You yourself will be the object of your meditation.
26 Think and meditate that you are the omnipresent Atman. "I am 27 neither the body, nor the mind, nor the Buddhi (determinative 28 faculty), neither the gross nor the subtle body"--by this process of 29 elimination, immerse your mind in the transcendent knowledge 30 which is your real nature. Kill the mind by thus plunging it 31 repeatedly in this. Then only you will realise the Essence of 32 Intelligence, or be established in your real nature. Knower and 33 known, meditator and the object meditated upon will then become 34 one, and the cessation of all phenomenal superimpositions will 35 follow. This is styled in the Shastras as the transcendence of the 36 triad or relative knowledge (Tripitibheda). There is no relative or 37 conditioned knowledge in this state. When the Atman is the only 38 knower, by what means can you possibly know It? The Atman is 39 Knowledge, the Atman is Intelligence, the Atman is 40 Sachchidananda. It is through the inscrutable power of Maya, 41 which cannot be indicated as either existent or non-existent, that 42 the relative consciousness has come upon the Jiva who is none 43 other than Brahman. This is generally known as the conscious state.
44 And the state in which this duality of relative existence becomes 45 one in the pure Brahman is called in the scriptures the 46 superconscious state and described in such words as, "{Sanskrit}-- 47 It is like an ocean perfectly at rest and without a name" 48 (Vivekachudamani, 410).

49 Swamiji spoke these words as if from the profound depths of 50 his realisation of Brahman.

51 Swamiji: All philosophy and scriptures have come from the 1 plane of relative knowledge of subject and object. But no thought or 2 language of the human mind can fully express the Reality which lies 3 beyond the plane of relative Knowledge! Science, philosophy, etc.

4 are only partial truths. So they can never be the adequate channels 5 of expression for the transcendent Reality. Hence viewed from the 6 transcendent standpoint, everything appears to be unreal--religious 7 creeds, and works, I and thou, and the universe--everything is 8 unreal! Then only it is perceived: "I am the only reality; I am the all-9 pervading Atman, and I am the proof of my own existence." Where 10 is the room for a separate proof to establish the reality of my 11 existence? I am, as the scriptures say, "{Sanskrit}--Always known 12 to myself as the eternal subject" (Vivekachudamani, 409). I have 13 seen that state, realised it. You also see and realise it and preach 14 this truth of Brahman to all. Then only will you attain to peace.

15 While speaking these words, Swamiji's face wore a serious 16 expression and he was lost in thought. After some time he 17 continued: "Realise in your own life this knowledge of Brahman 18 which comprehends all theories and is the rationale of all truths, 19 and preach it to the world. This will conduce to your own good and 20 the good of others as well. I have told you today the essence of all 21 truths; there is nothing higher than this."

22 Disciple: Sir, now you are speaking of Jnana; but sometimes 23 you proclaim the superiority of Bhakti, sometimes of Karma, and 24 sometimes of Yoga. This confuses our understanding.

25 Swamiji: Well, the truth is this. The knowledge of Brahman is 26 the ultimate goal--the highest destiny of man. But man cannot 27 remain absorbed in Brahman all the time. When he comes out of it, 28 he must have something to engage himself. At that time he should 29 do such work as will contribute to the real well-being of people.
30 Therefore do I urge you in the service of Jivas in a spirit of oneness.
31 But, my son, such are the intricacies of work, that even great saints 32 are caught in them and become attached.

33 Therefore work has to be done without any desire for results.
34 This is the teaching of the Gita. But know that in the knowledge of 35 Brahman there is no touch of any relation to work. Good works, at 36 the most, purify the mind. Therefore has the commentator 37 Shankara so sharply criticised the doctrine of the combination of 38 Jnana and Karma. Some attain to the knowledge of Brahman by the 39 means of unselfish work. This is also a means, but the end is the 40 realisation of Brahman. Know this thoroughly that the goal of the 41 path of discrimination and of all other modes of practice is the 42 realisation of Brahman.

43 Disciple: Now, sir, please tell me about the utility of Raja-44 Yoga and Bhakti-Yoga.

45 Swamiji: Striving in these paths also some attain to the 46 realisation of Brahman. The path of Bhakti or devotion of God is a 47 slow process, but is easy of practice. In the path of Yoga there are 48 many obstacles; perhaps the mind runs after psychic powers and 49 thus draws you away from attaining your real nature. Only the path 50 of Jnana is of quick fruition and the rationale of all other creeds; 51 hence it is equally esteemed in all countries and all ages. But even

1 in the path of discrimination there is the chance of the mind getting 2 stuck in the interminable net of vain argumentation. Therefore 3 along with it, meditation should be practised. By means of 4 discrimination and meditation, the goal or Brahman has to be 5 reached. One is sure to reach the goal by practising in this way.
6 This, in my opinion, is the easy path ensuring quick success.

7 Disciple: Now please tell me something about the doctrine of 8 Incarnation of God.

9 Swamiji: You want to master everything in a day, it seems!

10 Disciple: Sir, if the doubts and difficulties of the mind be 11 solved in one day, then I shall not have to trouble you time and 12 again.

13 Swamiji: Those by whose grace the knowledge of Atman, 14 which is extolled so much in the scriptures, is attained in a minute 15 are the moving Tirthas (seats of holiness)--the Incarnations. From 16 their very birth they are knowers of Brahman, and between 17 Brahman and the knower of Brahman there is not the least 18 difference. "{Sanskrit}--He who knows the Brahman becomes the 19 Brahman" (Mundaka, III.ii.9). The Atman cannot be known by the 20 mind for It is Itself the Knower--this I have already said. Therefore 21 man's relative knowledge reached up to the Avatars--those who 22 are always established in the Atman. The highest ideal of Ishvara 23 which the human mind can grasp is the Avatara. Beyond this there 24 is no relative knowledge. Such knowers of Brahman are rarely born 25 in the world. And very few people can understand them. They alone 26 are the proof of the truths of the scriptures--the towers of light in 27 the ocean of the world. By the company of such Avatars and by 28 their grace, the darkness of the mind disappears in a trice and 29 realisation flashes immediately in the heart. Why or by what 30 process it comes cannot be ascertained. But it does come. I have 31 seen it happen like that. Shri Krishna spoke the Gita, establishing 32 Himself in the Atman. Those passages of the Gita where He speaks 33 with the word "I", invariably indicate the Atman: "Take refuge in Me 34 alone" means, "Be established in the Atman". This knowledge of the 35 Atman is the highest aim of the Gita. The references to Yoga etc.
36 are but incidental to this realisation of the Atman. Those who have 37 not this knowledge of the Atman are "suicides". "They kill 38 themselves by the clinging to the unreal"; they lose their life in the 39 noose of sense-pleasures. You are also men, and can't you ignore 40 this trash of sensual enjoyment that won't last for two days? Should 41 you also swell the ranks of those who are born and die in utter 42 ignorance? Accept the "beneficial" and discard the "pleasant".
43 Speak of this Atman to all, even to the lowest. By continued 44 speaking your own intelligence also will clear up. And always 45 repeat the great Mantras--"{Sanskrit}--Thou art That", 46 "{Sanskrit}--I am That", "{Sanskrit}--All this is verily Brahman"-- 47 and have the courage of a lion in the heart. What is there to fear?
48 Fear is death--fear is the greatest sin. The human soul, represented 49 by Arjuna, was touched with fear. Therefore Bhagavan Shri Krishna, 50 established in the Atman, spoke to him the teachings of the Gita.
51 Still his fear would not leave him. Later, when Arjuna saw the 52 Universal Form of the Lord, and became established in the Atman,

1 then with all bondages of Karma burnt by the fire of knowledge, he 2 fought the battle.

3 Disciple: Sir, can a man do work even after realisation?

4 Swamiji: After realisation, what is ordinarily called work does 5 not persist. It changes its character. The work which the Jnani does 6 only conduces to the well-being of the world. Whatever a man of 7 realisation says or does contributes to the welfare of all. We have 8 observed Shri Ramakrishna; he was, as it were "{Sanskrit}--In the 9 body, but not of it!" About the motive of the actions of such 10 personages only this can be said: "{Sanskrit}--Everything they do 11 like men, simply by way of sport" (Brahma-Sutras , II.i.33).

14 [Place: Belur Math. Year: 1901.]

15 The disciple has come to the Math today accompanied by 16 Shri Ranadaprasad Das Gupta, the founder and professor of the 17 Jubilee Art Academy, Calcutta. Ranada Babu is an expert artist, a 18 learned man and an admirer of Swamiji. After the exchange of 19 courtesies Swamiji began to talk with Ranada Babu on various 20 topics relating to art.

21 Swamiji: I had the opportunity of seeing the beauties of art of 22 nearly every civilised country in the world, but I saw nothing like 23 the development of art which took place in our country during the 24 Buddhistic period. During the regime of the Mogul Emperors also, 25 there was a marked development of art--and the Taj and the Jumma 26 Masjid etc. are standing monuments of that culture.

27 Art has its origin in the expression of some idea in whatever 28 man produces. Where there is no expression of idea, however much 29 there may be a display of colours and so on, it cannot be styled as 30 true art. Even the articles of everyday use, such as water vessels, or 31 cups and saucers, should be used to express an idea. In the Paris 32 Exhibition I saw a wonderful figure carved in marble. In explanation 33 of the figure, the following words were inscribed underneath: Art 34 unveiling Nature. That is how art sees the inner beauty of nature by 35 drawing away with its own hands the covering veils. The work has 36 been so designed as to indicate that the beauty of nature has not 37 yet become fully unveiled; but the artist is fascinated, as it were, 38 with the beauty of the little that has become manifest. One cannot 39 refrain from praising the sculptor who has tried to express this 40 exquisite idea. You should also try to produce something original 41 like this.

42 Ranada Babu: Yes, I also have the desire to do some original 43 modelling at leisure. But I meet with no encouragement in this 44 country; it is a poor country and there is want of appreciation.

45 Swamiji: If you can with your whole heart produce one real 46 thing, if you can rightly express a single idea in art, it must win 47 appreciation in course of time. A real thing never suffers from want 48 of appreciation in this world. It is also heard that some artists have 49 gained appreciation for their works a thousand years after their 1 death!

2 Ranada Babu: That is true. But we have become so worthless
3 that we haven't got the courage to spend a lot of energy to no 4 purpose. Through these five years' struggle I have succeeded to 5 some extent. Bless me that my efforts be not in vain.

6 Swamiji: If you set to work in right earnest, then you are sure 7 to be successful. Whoever works at a thing heart and soul not only 8 achieves success in it, but through his absorption in that he also 9 realises the supreme Truth--Brahman. Whoever works at a thing 10 with his whole heart receives help from God.

11 Ranada Babu: What difference did you find between the art 12 of the West and that of India?

13 Swamiji: It is nearly the same everywhere. Originality is 14 rarely found. In those countries pictures are painted with the help 15 of models obtained by photographing various objects. But no sooner 16 does one take the help of machinery than all originality vanishes-- 17 one cannot give expression to one's ideas. The ancient artists used 18 to evolve original ideas from their brains and try to express them in 19 their paintings. Now the picture being a likeness of photographs, 20 the power of originality and the attempt to develop are getting 21 scarce. But each nation has a characteristic of its own. In its 22 manners and customs, in its mode of living, in painting and 23 sculpture is found the expression of that characteristic idea. For 24 instance, music and dancing in the West are all pointed in their 25 expression. In dance, they look as if jerking the limbs; in 26 instrumental music, the sounds prick the ear like a sword thrust, as 27 it were; so also in vocal music. In this country, on the other hand, 28 the dance has a rolling wave-like movement, and there is the same 29 rounded movement in the varieties of pitch in vocal song. So also in 30 instrumental music. Hence with regard to art also, a different 31 expression is found among different people. People who are very 32 materialistic take nature as their ideal, and try to express in art 33 ideas allied thereto, while the people whose ideal is the 34 transcendent Reality beyond nature try to express that in art 35 through the powers of nature. With regard to the former class of 36 people, nature is the primary basis of art, while with the second 37 class, ideality is the principal motive of artistic development. Thus, 38 though starting with two different ideals in art, they have advanced 39 in it each in its own way. Seeing some paintings in the West you will 40 mistake them for real natural objects. With respect to this country 41 also, when in ancient times sculpture attained a high degree of 42 perfection, if you look at a statue of the period it will make you 43 forget the material world and transport you to a new ideal world. As 44 in Western countries paintings like those of former times are not 45 produced now, so in our country also, attempts to give expression to 46 original ideas in art are no longer seen. For example, the paintings 47 from your art school have got no expression, as it were. It would be 48 well if you try to paint the objects of everyday meditation of the 49 Hindus by giving in them the expression of ancient ideals.

50 Ranada Babu: I feel much encouraged by your words. I shall 51 try to act up to your suggestions.

1 Swamiji: Take, for instance, the figure of Mother Kali. In it 2 there is the union of the blissful and the terrible aspects. But in 3 none of the pictures can be seen the true expression of these two 4 aspects. Far from this, there is no attempt to express adequately
5 even one of these two aspects! I have tried to put down some ideas 6 of the terrible aspects of Mother Kali in my English poem, Kali the 7 Mother. Can you express those ideas in a picture?

8 Ranada Babu: Please let me know them.

9 Swamiji had the poem brought from the library, and began to 10 read it out most impressively to Ranada Babu. Ranada Babu silently 11 listened to the poem, and after a while, as if visualising the figure 12 with his mind's eye, he turned to Swamiji with a frightened look.

13 Swamiji: Well, will you be able to express this idea in the 14 picture?

15 Ranada Babu: Yes, I shall try;¹⁸² but it turns one's head even 16 to imagine the idea.

17 Swamiji: After drawing the picture, please show it to me.
18 Then I will tell you about the points necessary to perfect it.

19 Then Swamiji had the design which he had sketched for the 20 seal¹⁸³ of the Ramakrishna Mission brought, showed it to Ranada 21 Babu and asked his opinion on it. It depicted a lake in which a lotus 22 blossomed, and there was a swan, and the whole was encircled by a 23 serpent. Ranada Babu at first could not catch the significance of it 24 and asked Swamiji to explain. Swamiji said, "The wavy waters in 25 the picture are symbolic of Karma; the lotus, of Bhakti; and the 26 rising-sun, of Jnana. The encircling serpent is indicative of Yoga and 27 the awakened Kundalini Shakti, while the sun in the picture stands 28 for the Paramatman (Supreme Self). Therefore the idea of the 29 picture is that by the union of Karma, Jnana, Bhakti, and Yoga, the 30 vision of the Paramatman is obtained."

31 Ranada Babu kept silent, gratified to hear the motif of the 32 picture. After a while he said, "I wish I could learn about art from 33 you!"

34 Then Swamiji showed to Ranada Babu a drawing, depicting 35 his plan of the future Ramakrishna Temple and Math. Then he 36 began to say, "In the building of this prospective Temple and Math I 37 have the desire to bring together all that is best in Eastern and 38 Western art. I shall try to apply in its construction all the ideas 39 about architecture which I have gathered in my travels all over the 40 world. A big prayer-hall will be built with roof supported on 41 numerous clustered pillars. In its walls, hundreds of lotuses will be 42 in full bloom. It must be big enough to accommodate a thousand 43 persons sitting in meditation. The Ramakrishna temple and prayer-44 hall should be built together in such a way that from a distance it 45 would taken for a representation of the symbol, "Om". Within the 2 finished, nor shown to Swamiji.

1 temple there would be a figure of Shri Ramakrishna seated on a 2 swan. On the two sides of the door will be represented the figure of 3 a lion and a lamb licking each other's body in love-expressing the 4 idea that great power and gentleness have become united in love. I 5 have these ideas in my mind; and if I live long enough I shall carry 6 them out. Otherwise future generations will try if they can do it by 7 degrees. It is my opinion that Shri Ramakrishna was born to vivify
8 all branches of art and culture in this country. Therefore this Math 9 has to be built up in such a way that religion, work, learning, Jnana, 10 and Bhakti may spread over the world from this centre. Be you my 11 helpers in this work."

12 Ranada Babu and the assembled Sannyasins and 13 Brahmacharins listened to Swamiji in mute wonder. After a while 14 Swamiji resumed, "I am discussing the subject at length with you as 15 you are yourself an adept in the line. Now please tell me what you 16 have learnt about the highest ideals of art as the result of your long 17 study of it."

18 Ranada Babu: What new thing can I tell you? On the 19 contrary, it is you who have opened my eyes on this subject. I have 20 never heard such instructive words on the subject of art in my life.
21 Bless me, sir, that I can work out the ideas that I have got from you.

22 Then Swamiji got up from his seat and paced the lawn,
23 remarking to the disciple, "He is a very spirited young man."

24 Disciple: Sir, he is astonished to hear your words.

25 Swamiji, without answering the disciple, began to hum the 26 lines of a song which Shri Ramakrishna used to sing, "The 27 controlled mind is a great treasure, the philosopher's stone, which 28 yields whatever you want."

29 After walking a while, Swamiji, washing his face, entered his 30 room with the disciple in company and read the article on Art in the 31 Encyclopaedia Britannica for some time. After finishing it, he 32 began to make fun with the disciple, caricaturing the words and 33 accents of East Bengal.

35 [Place: Belur Math. Year: 1901.]

36 Swamiji has just returned from East Bengal and Assam a few 37 days back. He is ill, and his feet have swollen. Coming to the Math, 38 the disciple went upstairs and prostrated himself at Swamiji's feet.
39 In spite of his ill health, Swamiji wore his usual smiling face and 40 affectionate look.

41 Disciple: How are you, Swamiji?

42 Swamiji: What shall I speak of my health, my son? The body 43 is getting unfit for work day by day. It has been born on the soil of 44 Bengal, and some disease or other is always overtaking it. The 45 physique of this country is not at all good. If you want to do some 46 strenuous work, it cannot bear the strain. But the few days that the 47 body lasts, I will work for you. I shall die in harness.

1 Disciple: If you give up work for some time and take rest,
2 then you will be all right. Your life means good to the world.

3 Swamiji: Am I able to sit quiet, my son! Two or three days
4 before Shri Ramakrishna's passing away, She whom he used to call 5 "Kali" entered this body. It is She who takes me here and there and 6 makes me work, without letting me remain quiet or allowing me to 7 look to my personal comforts.

8 Disciple: Are you speaking metaphorically ?

9 Swamiji: Oh, no; two or three days before his leaving the 10 body, he called me to his side one day, and asking me to sit before 11 him, looked steadfastly at me and fell into Samadhi. Then I really 12 felt that a subtle force like an electric shock was entering my body!
13 In a little while, I also lost outward consciousness and sat
14 motionless. How long I stayed in that condition I do not remember; 15 when consciousness returned I found Shri Ramakrishna shedding 16 tears. On questioning him, he answered me affectionately, "Today, 17 giving you my all, I have become a beggar. With this power you are 18 to do many works for the world's good before you will return." I feel 19 that power is constantly directing me to this or that work. This body 20 has not been made for remaining idle.

21 Hearing these words with speechless wonder the disciple
22 thought--who knows how common people will take these words?
23 Thereupon he changed the topic and said, "Sir, how did you like our 24 East Bengal?"

25 Swamiji: I liked it on the whole. The fields, I saw, were rich in 26 crops, the climate also is good, and the scenery on the hill-side is 27 charming. The Brahmaputra Valley is incomparable in its beauty.
28 The people of East Bengal are a little stronger and more active than 29 those of this part. It may be due to their taking plenty of fish and 30 meat. Whatever they do, they do with great persistence. They use a 31 great deal of oil and fat in their food, which is not good, because 32 taking too much of oily and fatty food produces fat in the body.

33 Disciple: How did you find their religious consciousness?

34 Swamiji: About religious ideas, I noticed the people are very 35 conservative, and many have turned into fanatics in trying to be 36 liberal in religion. One day a young man brought to me, in the 37 house of Mohini Babu at Dacca, a photograph and said, "Sir, please 38 tell me who he is. Is he an Avatara?" I told him gently many times 39 that I know nothing of it. When even on my telling him three or four 40 times the boy did not cease from his persistent questioning, I was 41 constrained to say at last, "My boy, henceforth take a little 42 nutritious food and then your brain will develop. Without nourishing 43 food, I see your brain has become dried up." At these words the 44 young man may have been much displeased. But what could I do?
45 Unless I spoke like this to the boys, they would turn into madcaps 46 by degrees.

47 Disciple: In our East Bengal a great many Avatars have 48 cropped up recently.

49 Swamiji: People may call their Guru an Avatara; they may

1 have any idea of him they like. But Incarnations of God are not born
2 anywhere and everywhere and at all seasons. At Dacca itself I
3 heard there were three or four Avataras!

4 Disciple: How did you find the women of that side?

5 Swamiji: The women are very nearly the same everywhere. I 6 found Vaishnavism strong at Dacca. The wife of H__ seemed to be 7 very intelligent. With great care she used to prepare food and send 8 it to me.

9 Disciple: I heard you have been to Nag Mahashaya's place.

10 Swamiji: Yes, going so far, should I not visit the birthplace of 11 such a great soul? His wife fed me with many delicacies prepared 12 by her own hand. The house is charming, like a peace retreat.
13 There I took a swimming bath in a village pond. After that I had 14 such a sound sleep that I woke at half past two in the afternoon. Of 15 the few days I had sound sleep in my life, that in Nag Mahashaya's 16 house was one. Rising from sleep I had a plentiful repast. Nag 17 Mahashaya's wife presented me a cloth which I tied round my head 18 as a turban and started for Dacca. I found that the photograph of 19 Nag Mahashaya was being worshipped there. The place where his 20 remains lie interred ought to be well kept. Even now it is not as it 21 should be.

22 Disciple: The people of that part have not been able to 23 appreciate Nag Mahashaya.

24 Swamiji: How can ordinary people appreciate a great man 25 like him? Those who had his company are blessed indeed.

26 Disciple: What did you see at Kamakhya?

27 Swamiji: The Shillong hills are very beautiful. There I met Sir 28 Henry Cotton, the Chief Commissioner of Assam. He asked me, 29 "Swamiji, after travelling through Europe and America, what have 30 you come to see here in these distant hills?" Such a good and kind-31 hearted man as Sir Henry Cotton is rarely found. Hearing of my 32 illness, he sent the Civil Surgeon and inquired after my health 33 mornings and evenings. I could not do much lecturing there, 34 because my health was very bad. On the way Nitai served and 35 looked after me nicely.

36 Disciple: What did you find the religious ideas of that part to 37 be?

38 Swamiji: It is the land of the Tantras. I heard of one "Hankar 39 Deva" who is worshipped there as an Avatara. I heard his sect is 40 very wide-spread. I could not ascertain if "Hankar Deva" was but 41 another form of the name Shankaracharya. They are monks-- 42 perhaps Tantrika Sannyasins, or perhaps one of the Shankara sects.

43 Disciple: The people of East Bengal have not been able to 44 appreciate you as is the case with Nag Mahashaya.

45 Swamiji: Whether they appreciate me or not, the people 46 there are more active and energetic than those of these parts. In 47 time it will develop more. What are nowadays known as refined or 48 civilised ways have not yet thoroughly entered those parts.

1 Gradually they will. In all times, etiquette and fashion spread to the 2 countryside from the capital. And this is happening in East Bengal
3 also. The land that has produced a great soul like Nag Mahashaya
4 is blessed and has a hopeful future. By the light of his personality
5 Eastern Bengal is radiant.

6 Disciple: But, sir, ordinary people did not know him as a 7 great soul. He hid himself in great obscurity.

8 Swamiji: There they used to make much fuss about my food 9 and say, "Why should you eat that food or eat from the hands of 10 such and such?"--and so on. To which I had to reply, "I am a 11 Sannyasin and a mendicant friar and what need have I to observe 12 so much outward formality with regard to food etc.? Do not your 13 scriptures say, "{Sanskrit}--One should beg one's food from door to 14 door, ay even from the house of an outcast"? But of course external 15 forms are necessary in the beginning, for the inner realisation of 16 religion, in order to make the truth of the scriptures practical in 17 one's life. Haven't you heard of Shri Ramakrishna's story of 18 "wringing out the almanac for water"?¹⁸⁴ Outward forms and 19 observances are only for the manifestation of the great inner 20 powers of man. The object of all scriptures is to awaken those inner 21 powers and make him understand and realise his real nature. The 22 means are of the nature of ordinances and prohibitions. If you lose 23 sight of the ideal fight over the means only, what will it avail? In 24 every country I have visited, I find this fighting over the means 25 going on, and people have no eye on the ideal. Shri Ramakrishna 26 came to show the truth of this.

27 Realisation of the truth is the essential thing. Whether you
28 bathe in the Ganga for a thousand years or live on vegetable food 29 for a like period, unless it helps towards the manifestation of the 30 Self, know that it is all of no use. If on the other hand, any one can 31 realise the Atman, without the observance of outward forms, then 32 that very non-observance of forms is the best means. But even after 33 the realisation of Atman, one should observe outward forms to a 34 certain extent for setting an example to the people. The thing is you 35 must make the mind steadfast on something. If it is steadfast on 36 one object, it attains to concentration, that is, its other 37 modifications die out and there is a uniform flow in one direction.
38 Many become wholly preoccupied with the outward forms and 39 observances merely and fail to direct their mind to thoughts of the 40 Atman! If you remain day and night within the narrow groove of 41 ordinances and prohibitions, how will there be any expression of 42 the soul? The more one has advanced in the realisation of the 43 Atman, the less is he dependent on the observances of forms.
44 Shankaracharya also has said, "{Sanskrit}--Where is there any 45 ordinance or prohibition for him whose mind is always above the 46 play of the Gunas?" Therefore the essential truth is realisation.
47 Know that to be the goal. Each distinct creed is but a way to the 48 Truth. The test of progress is the amount of renunciation that one

1 ¹⁸⁴ ?The Bengali almanac makes a forecast of the annual rainfall but not a drop 2 comes out of squeezing its pages! Similarly scriptures are useless unless their 3 truths are realised in life.
4

1 has attained. Where you find the attraction for lust and wealth
2 considerably diminished, to whatever creed he may belong, know 3 that his inner spirit is awakening. The door of Self-realisation has 4 surely opened for him. On the contrary if you observe a thousand 5 outward rules and quote a thousand scriptural texts, still, if it has 6 not brought the spirit of renunciation in you, know that your life is 7 in vain. Be earnest over this realisation and set your heart on it.
8 Well, you have read enough of scriptures. But tell me, of what avail 9 has it been? Some perhaps thinking of money have become 10 millionaires, whereas you have become a Pundit by thinking of 11 scriptures. But both are bondages. Attain the supreme knowledge 12 and go beyond Vidya and Avidya, relative knowledge and ignorance.

13 Disciple: Sir, through your grace I understand it all, but my 14 past Karma does not allow me to assimilate these teachings.

15 Swamiji: Throw aside your Karma and all such stuff. If it is a 16 truth that by your own past action you have got this body; then, 17 nullifying the effects of evil works by good works, why should you 18 not be a Jivanmukta in this very body? Know that freedom or Self-19 Knowledge is in your own hands. In real knowledge there is no 20 touch of work. But those who work after being Jivanmuktas do so 21 for the good of others. They do not look to the results of works. No 22 seed of desire finds any room in their mind. And strictly speaking it 23 is almost impossible to work like that for the good of the world from 24 the householder's position. In the whole of Hindu scriptures there is 25 the single instance of King Janaka in this respect. But you nowadays 26 want to pose as Janakas (lit. fathers) in every home by begetting 27 children year after year, while he was without the body-
28 consciousness!

29 Disciple: Please bless me that I may attain Self-realisation in 30 this very life.

31 Swamiji: What fear? If there is sincerity of spirit, I tell you, 32 for a certainty, you will attain it in this very life. But manly 33 endeavour is wanted. Do you know what it is? "I shall certainly 34 attain Self-knowledge. Whatever obstacles may come, I shall 35 certainly overcome them"--a firm determination like this is 36 Purushakara. "Whether my mother, father, friends, brothers, wife, 37 and children live or die, whether this body remains or goes, I shall 38 never turn back till I attain to the vision of the Atman"--this resolute 39 endeavour to advance towards one's goal, setting at naught all 40 other considerations, is termed manly endeavour. Otherwise, 41 endeavour for creature comforts even beasts and birds show. Man 42 has got this body simply to realise Self-knowledge. If you follow the 43 common run of people in the world and float with the general
44 current, where then is your manliness? Well, the common people 45 are going to the jaws of death! But you have come to conquer it!
46 Advance like a hero. Don't be thwarted by anything. How many 47 days will this body last, with its happiness and misery? When you 48 have got the human body, then rouse the Atman within and say--I 49 have reached the state of fearlessness! Say--I am the Atman in 50 which my lower ego has become merged for ever. Be perfect in this 51 idea; and then as long as the body endures, speak unto others this 52 message of fearlessness: "Thou art That", "Arise, awake, and stop

1 not till the goal is reached!" If you can achieve this, then shall I 2 know that you are really a tenacious East Bengal man.

5 [Place: Belur Math. Year: 1901.]

6 Swamiji is in indifferent health since his return to the Math 7 from the Shillong Hills. His feet have swollen. All this has made his 8 brother-disciples very anxious. At the request of Swami 9 Niranjanananda, Swamiji has agreed to take Ayurvedic medicine.
10 He is to begin this treatment from next Tuesday and entirely give 11 up taking water and salt. Today is Sunday. The disciple asked him, 12 "Sir, it is terribly hot now and you drink water very frequently; it 13 will be unbearable for you now to stop taking water altogether for 14 this treatment."

15 Swamiji: What do you say? I shall make a firm resolve, on the 16 morning of the day I shall begin this treatment, not to take any 17 water. After that no water shall pass down the throat any more. For 18 three weeks not a drop of water shall be able to go down the throat.
19 The body is but an outer covering of the mind and whatever the 20 mind will dictate to it, it will have to carry out. So there is nothing 21 to be afraid of. At the request of Niranjan I have to undergo this 22 treatment. Well, I cannot be indifferent to the request of my 23 brother-disciples.

24 It is now about ten o'clock. Swamiji cheerfully raised the 25 topic of his future Math for women, saying, "With the Holy Mother 26 as the centre of inspiration, a Math is to be established on the 27 eastern bank of the Ganga. As Brahmacharins and Sadhus will be 28 trained in this Math here, so in the other Math also, 29 Brahmacharinis and Sadhvis will be trained."

30 Disciple: Sir, history does not tell us of any Maths for women 31 in India in ancient times. Only during the Buddhistic period one 32 hears of Maths for women; but from it in course of time many 33 corruptions arose. The whole country was overrun by great evil 34 practices.

35 Swamiji: It is very difficult to understand why in this country 36 so much difference is made between men and women, whereas the 37 Vedanta declares that one and the same conscious Self is present in 38 all beings. You always criticise the women, but say what have you 39 done for their uplift? Writing down Smritis etc., and binding them 40 by hard rules, the men have turned the women into mere 41 manufacturing machines! If you do not raise the women, who are 42 the living embodiment of the Divine Mother, don't think that you 43 have any other way to rise.

44 Disciple: Women are a bondage and a snare to men. By their 45 Maya they cover the knowledge and dispassion of men. It is for this, 46 I suppose, that scriptural writers hint that knowledge and devotion 47 are difficult of attainment to them.

48 Swamiji: In what scriptures do you find statements that 49 women are not competent for knowledge and devotion? In the 1 period of degradation, when the priests made other castes

2 incompetent for the study of the Vedas, they deprived the women 3 also of all their rights. Otherwise you will find that in the Vedic or 4 Upanishad age Maitreyi, Gargi, and other ladies of revered memory
5 have taken the places of Rishis through their skill in discussing 6 about Brahman. In an assembly of a thousand Brahmanas who were 7 all erudite in the Vedas, Gargi boldly challenged Yajnavalkya in a 8 discussion about Brahman. Since such ideal women were entitled to 9 spiritual knowledge, why shall not the women have the same 10 privilege now? What has happened once can certainly happen 11 again. History repeats itself. All nations have attained greatness by 12 paying proper respect to women. That country and that nation 13 which do not respect women have never become great, nor will 14 ever be in future. The principal reason why your race has so much 15 degenerated is that you have no respect for these living images of 16 Shakti. Manu says, "Where women are respected, there the gods 17 delight; and where they are not, there all works and efforts come to 18 naught."¹⁸⁵ There is no hope of rise for that family or country where 19 there is no estimation of women, where they live in sadness. For 20 this reason, they have to be raised first; and an ideal Math has to be 21 started for them.

22 Disciple: Sir, when you first returned from the West, in your 23 lecture at the Star Theatre you sharply criticised the Tantras. Now 24 by your supporting the worship of women, as taught in the Tantras, 25 you are contradicting yourself.

26 Swamiji: I denounced only the present corrupted form of 27 Vamachara of the Tantras. I did not denounce the Mother-worship 28 of the Tantras, or even the real Vamachara. The purport of the 29 Tantras is to worship women in a spirit of Divinity. During the 30 downfall of Buddhism, the Vamachara became very much 31 corrupted, and that corrupted form obtains to the present day. Even 32 now the Tantra literature of India is influenced by those ideas. I 33 denounced only these corrupt and horrible practices--which I do 34 even now. I never objected to the worship of women who are the 35 living embodiment of Divine Mother, whose external manifestations, 36 appealing to the senses have maddened men, but whose internal 37 manifestations, such as knowledge, devotion, discrimination and 38 dispassion make man omniscient, of unfailing purpose, and a 39 knower of Brahman. "{Sanskrit}--She, when pleased, becomes 40 propitious and the cause of the freedom of man" (Chandi, I. 57).
41 Without propitiating the Mother by worship and obeisance, not 42 even Brahma and Vishnu have the power to elude Her grasp and 43 attain to freedom. Therefore for the worship of these family 44 goddesses, in order to manifest the Brahman within them, I shall 45 establish the women's Math.

46 Disciple: It may be a good idea but where will you get the 47 women inmates? With the present hard restrictions of society, who 48 will permit the ladies of their household to join your Math?

49 Swamiji: Why so? Even now there are women disciples of ¹⁸⁵ ?Manu, III. 56.

1 Shri Ramakrishna. With their help I shall start this Math. The Holy 2 Mother will be their central figure and the wives and daughters of 3 the devotees of Shri Ramakrishna will be its first inmates. For they 4 will easily appreciate the usefulness of such a Math. After that, 5 following their example, many householders will help in their noble 6 work.

7 Disciple: The devotees of Shri Ramakrishna will certainly join 8 this work. But I don't think the general public will help in this work.

9 Swamiji: No great work has been done in the world without 10 sacrifice. Who on seeing the tiny sprout of the banyan can imagine 11 that in course of time it will develop into a gigantic banyan tree? At 12 present I shall start the Math in this way. Later on you will see that 13 after a generation or two people of this country will appreciate the 14 worth of this Math. My women disciples will lay down their lives for 15 it. Casting off fear and cowardice, you also be helpers in this noble 16 mission and hold this high ideal before all. You will see, it will shed 17 its lustre over the whole country in time.

18 Disciple: Sir, please tell me all about your plan of this Math 19 for women.

20 Swamiji: On the other side of the Ganga a big plot of land
21 will be acquired, where unmarried girls or Brahmacharini widows 22 will live; devout married women will also be allowed to stay now 23 and then. Men will have no concern with this Math. The elderly 24 Sadhus of the Math will manage the affairs of this Math from a 25 distance. There shall be a girls' school attached to this women's 26 Math, in which religious scriptures, literature, Sanskrit, grammar, 27 and even some amount of English should be taught. Other matters 28 such as sewing, culinary art, rules of domestic work, and 29 upbringing of children, will also be taught while Japa, worship, 30 meditation, etc. shall form an indispensable part of the teaching.
31 Those who will be able to live here permanently, renouncing home 32 and family ties, will be provided with food and clothing from the 33 Math. Those who will not be able to do that will be allowed to study 34 in this Math as day-scholars. With the permission of the head of the 35 Math, the latter will be allowed even to stay in the Math
36 occasionally, and during such stay will be maintained by the Math.
37 The elder Brahmacharinis will take charge of the training of the girl 38 students in Brahmacharya. After five or six years' training in this 39 Math, the guardians of the girls may marry them. If deemed fit for 40 Yoga and religious life, with the permission of the guardians they 41 will be allowed to stay in this Math, taking the vow of celibacy.
42 These celibate nuns will in time be the teachers and preachers of 43 the Math. In villages and towns they will open centres and strive for 44 the spread of female education. Through such devout preachers of 45 character there will be the real spread of female education in the 46 country. So long as the students will remain in association with this 47 Math, they must observe Brahmacharya as the basic ideal of this 48 Math.

49 Spirituality, sacrifice, and self-control will be the motto of the 50 pupils of this Math, and service or Seva-dharma the vow of their 51 life. In view of such ideal lives, who will not respect and have faith

1 in them? If the life of the women of this country be moulded in such 2 fashion, then only will there be the reappearance of such ideal
3 characters as Sita, Savitri and Gargi. To what straits the strictures 4 of local usages have reduced the women of this country, rendering 5 them lifeless and inert, you could understand if only you visited the 6 Western countries. You alone are responsible for this miserable 7 condition of the women, and it rests with you also to raise them
8 again. Therefore I say, set to work. What will it do to memorise a 9 few religious books like the Vedas and so on?

10 Disciple: Sir, if the girl students after being trained in this 11 Math marry, how will one find ideal characters in them? Will it not 12 be better if the rule is made that those who will be educated in this 13 Math shall not marry?

14 Swamiji: Can that be brought about all at once? They must 15 be given education and left to themselves. After that they will act as 16 they think best. Even after marriage and entering the world, the 17 girls educated as above will inspire their husbands with noble 18 ideals and be the mothers of heroic sons. But there must be this 19 rule that the guardians of the students in the women's Math must 20 not even think of marrying them before they attain the age of 21 fifteen.

22 Disciple: Sir, then those girls will not command reputation in 23 society. Nobody would like to marry them.

24 Swamiji: Why will not they be wanted in marriage? You have 25 not yet understood the trend of society. These learned and 26 accomplished girls will never be in want of bridegrooms. Society 27 nowadays does not follow the texts recommending child-marriage 28 nor will do so in future. Even now don't you see?

29 Disciple: But there is sure to be a violent opposition against 30 this in the beginning.

31 Swamiji: Let it be. What is there to be afraid of in that?
32 Opposition to a righteous work initiated with moral courage will 33 only awaken the moral power of the initiators the more. That which 34 meets with no obstruction, no opposition, only takes men to the 35 path of moral death. Struggle is the sign of life.

36 Disciple: Yes, sir.

37 Swamiji: In the highest reality of the Parabrahman, there is 38 no distinction of sex. We notice this only in the relative plane. And 39 the more the mind becomes introspective, the more that idea of 40 difference vanishes. Ultimately, when the mind is wholly merged in 41 the homogeneous and undifferentiated Brahman, such ideas as this 42 is a man or that a woman do not remain at all. We have actually 43 seen this in the life of Shri Ramakrishna. Therefore do I say that 44 though outwardly there may be difference between men and 45 women, in their real nature there is none. Hence, if a man can be a 46 knower of Brahman, why cannot a woman attain to the same 47 knowledge? Therefore I was saying that if even one amongst the 48 women became a knower of Brahman, then by the radiance of her 49 personality thousands of women would be inspired and awakened 50 to truth, and great well-being of the country and society would

1 ensue. Do you understand?

2 Disciple: Sir, your teachings have opened my eyes today.

3 Swamiji: Not fully yet. When you realise that all-illuminating 4 reality of the Atman, then you will see that this idea of sex-5 distinction has vanished altogether, then only will you look upon 6 women as the veritable manifestation of Brahman. We have seen in 7 Shri Ramakrishna how he had this idea of divine motherhood in 8 every woman, of whatever caste she might be, or whatever might 9 be her worth. It is because I have seen this that I ask you all so 10 earnestly to do likewise and open girls' schools in every village and 11 try to uplift them. If the women are raised, then their children will 12 by their noble actions glorify the name of the country--then will 13 culture, knowledge, power, and devotion awaken in the land.

14 Disciple: But, sir, contrary results appear to have come out of 15 the present female education. With just a smattering of education, 16 they take merely to the Western modes of living, but it is not clear 17 how far they are advancing in the spirit of renunciation, self-18 control, austerity, Brahmacharya and other qualities conducive to 19 Brahmajana.

20 Swamiji: In the beginning a few mistakes like that are 21 unavoidable. When a new idea is preached in the country, some, 22 failing to grasp it properly, go wrong in that way. But what matters 23 it to the well-being of society at large? Well, those who are pioneers 24 of the little bit of female education that now obtains in the country 25 were undoubtedly very great-hearted. But the truth is that some 26 defect or other must creep into that learning or culture which is not 27 founded on a religious basis. But now female education is to be 28 spread with religion as its centre. All other training should be 29 secondary to religion. Religious training, the formation of character 30 and observance of the vow of celibacy--these should be attended to.
31 In the female education which has obtained up till now in India, it is 32 religion that has been made a secondary concern, hence those 33 defects you were speaking of have crept in. But no blame attaches 34 therefore to the women. Reformers having proceeded to start 35 female education without being Brahmacharins themselves have 36 stumbled like that. Founders of all good undertakings, before they 37 launch on their desired work, must attain to the knowledge of the 38 Atman through rigorous self-discipline. Otherwise defects are 39 bound to occur in their work.

40 Disciple: Yes, sir, it is observed that many educated women
41 spend their time in reading novels and so on; but in East Bengal 42 even with education women have not given up their religious 43 observances. Is it so here in this part?

44 Swamiji: In every country, nations have their good and bad
45 sides. Ours is to do good works in our lives and hold an example 46 before others. No work succeeds by condemnation. It only repels 47 people. Let anybody say what he likes, don't contradict him. In this 48 world of Maya, whatever work you will take up will be attended 49 with some defect. "{Sanskrit}--All works are covered with defects 50 as fire is with smoke" (Gita, XVIII.48). Every fire has a chance of 51 being attended with smoke. But will you, on that account, sit

1 inactive? As far as you can, you must go on doing good work.

2 Disciple: What is this good work?

3 Swamiji: Whatever helps in the manifestation of Brahman is 4 good work. Any work can be done so as to help, if not directly, at 5 least indirectly, the manifestation of the Atman. But following the 6 path laid down by the Rishis, that knowledge of the Atman 7 manifests quickly; on the contrary, the doing of works which have 8 been indicated by the scriptural writers as wrong, brings only 9 bondage of the soul and sometimes this bondage of delusion does 10 not vanish even in many lives. But in all ages and climes, freedom is 11 sure to be attained by Jivas ultimately. For the Atman is the real 12 nature of the Jiva. Can anybody give up his own nature? If you fight 13 with your shadow for a thousand years, can you drive it away from 14 you?--it will always remain with you.

15 Disciple: But, sir, according to Shankara, Karma is 16 antagonistic to Jnana. He has variously refuted the intermingling of 17 Jnana and Karma. So how can Karma be helpful to the 18 manifestation of Jnana?

19 Swamiji: Shankara after saying so has again described 20 Karma as indirect help to the manifestation of Jnana and the means 21 for the purification of the mind. But I do not contradict his 22 conclusion that in transcendent knowledge there is no touch of any 23 work whatsoever. So long as man is within the realm of the 24 consciousness of action, agent, and the result of action, he is 25 powerless to sit idle without doing some work. So, as work is thus 26 ingrained in the very nature of man, why don't you go on doing such 27 works as are helpful to the manifestation of the knowledge of the 28 Atman? That all work is the effect of ignorance may be true from 29 the absolute standpoint, but within the sphere of relative 30 consciousness it has a great utility. When you will realise the 31 Atman, the doing or non-doing of work will be within your control, 32 and whatever you will do in that state will be good work, conducive 33 to the well-being of Jivas and the world. With the manifestation of 34 Brahman, even the breath you draw will be to the good of Jiva. Then 35 you will no longer have to work by means of conscious planning. Do 36 you understand?

37 Disciple: Yes, it is a beautiful conclusion reconciling Karma
38 and Jnana from the Vedantic standpoint.

39 At this time, the bell for supper rang, and the disciple, before 40 going to partake of it, prayed with folded hands, "Bless me, sir, that 41 I may attain to the knowledge of Brahman in this very life." Swamiji 42 placing his hand on the disciple's head said, "Have no fear, my son.
43 You are not like ordinary worldly men--neither householders, nor 44 exactly Sannyasins--but quite a new type."

47 [Place: Belur Math. Year: 1901.]

48 Swamiji is in indifferent health. At the earnest request of 49 Swami Niranjanananda he has been taking Ayurvedic medicines for

1 six or seven days. According to this treatment, the drinking of water
2 is strictly forbidden. He has to appease his thirst with milk.

3 The disciple has come to the Math early in the day. Swamiji 4 on seeing him spoke with affection, "Oh, you have come? Well done, 5 I was thinking of you."

6 Disciple: I hear that you are living on milk for the last six or 7 seven days.

8 Swamiji: Yes, at the earnest entreaty of Niranjan, I had to 9 take to this medicine! I cannot disregard their request.

10 Disciple: You were in the habit of taking water very 11 frequently. How could you give it up altogether?

12 Swamiji: When I heard that according to this treatment 13 water had to be given up, I made a firm resolve immediately not to 14 take water. Now the idea of drinking water does not even occur to 15 the mind.

16 Disciple: The treatment is doing you good I hope?

17 Swamiji: That I don't know. I am simply obeying the orders of 18 my brother-disciples.

19 Disciple: I think that indigenous drugs such as the Vaidyas 20 use, are very well-suited to our constitution.

21 Swamiji: My idea is that it is better even to die under the 22 treatment of a scientific doctor than expect recovery from the 23 treatment of laymen who know nothing of modern science, but 24 blindly go by the ancient books, without gaining a mastery of the 25 subject--even though they may have cured a few cases.

26 Swamiji cooked certain dishes, one of which was prepared 27 with vermicelli. When the disciple, who partook of it, asked Swamiji 28 what it was, he replied, "It is a few English earthworms which I 29 have brought dried from London." This created laughter among 30 those present at the expense of the disciple. Despite his spare food 31 and scanty sleep, Swamiji is very active. A few days ago, a new set 32 of the Encyclopaedia Britannica had been bought for the Math.
33 Seeing the new shining volumes, the disciple said to Swamiji, "It is 34 almost impossible to read all these books in a single lifetime." He 35 was unaware that Swamiji had already finished ten volumes and 36 had begun the eleventh.

37 Swamiji: What do you say? Ask me anything you like from 38 these ten volumes, and I will answer you all.

39 The disciple asked in wonder, "Have you read all these 40 books?"

41 Swamiji: Why should I ask you to question me otherwise?

42 Being examined, Swamiji not only reproduced the sense, but 43 at places the very language of the difficult topics selected from 44 each volume. The disciple, astonished, put aside the books, saying, 45 "This is not within human power!"

46 Swamiji: Do you see, simply by the observance of strict 47 Brahmacharya (continence) all learning can be mastered in a very 1 short time--one has an unfailing memory of what one hears or 2 knows but once. It is owing to this want of continence that 3 everything is on the brink of ruin in our country.

4 Disciple: Whatever you may say,sir, the manifestation of such 5 superhuman power cannot be the result of mere Brahmacharya, 6 something else there must be.

7 Swamiji did not say anything in reply.

8 Then Swamiji began to explain lucidly to the disciple the 9 arguments and conclusions about the difficult points in all 10 philosophies. In course of the conversation Swami Brahmananda 11 entered the room and said to the disciple, "You are a nice man!
12 Swamiji is unwell, and instead of trying to keep his mind cheerful 13 by light talk, you are making him talk incessantly, raising the most 14 abstruse subjects!" The disciple was abashed. But Swamiji said to 15 Swami Brahmananda, "Keep your regulation of Ayurvedic treatment 16 aside. These are my children; and if my body goes in teaching them, 17 I don't care." After this, some light talk followed. Then arose the 18 topic of the place of Bharatchandra in Bengali literature. From the 19 beginning Swamiji began to ridicule Bharatchandra in various ways 20 and satirised the life, manners, marriage-customs, and other usages 21 of society at the time of Bharatchandra, who was an advocate of 22 child-marriage. He expressed the opinion that the poems of 23 Bharatchandra, being full of bad taste and obscenities, had not 24 found acceptance in any cultured society except in Bengal, and he 25 said, "Care should be taken that such books do not come into the 26 hands of boys." Then raising the topic of Michael Madhusudan Dutt, 27 he added, "That was a wonderful genius born in your province.
28 There is not another epic in Bengali literature like the 29 Meghnabadh, no mistake in that; and it is difficult to come across a 30 poem like that in the whole of modern European literature."

31 Disciple: But, sir, I think Michael was very fond of a 32 bombastic style.

33 Swamiji: Well, if anybody in your country does anything new, 34 you at once hoot him. First examine well what he is saying, but 35 instead of that, the people of the country will chase after anything 36 which is not quite after the old modes. For example, in order to 37 bring to ridicule this Meghnabadh Kavya, which is the gem of 38 Bengali literature, the parody of Chhuchhundaribadh Kavya (The 39 Death of a Mole) was written. They may caricature as much as they 40 like, it does not matter. But the Meghnadbadh Kavya still stands 41 unshaken in its reputation like the Himalayas while the opinions 42 and writings of carping critics who are busy picking holes in it have 43 been washed away into oblivion. What will the vulgar public 44 understand of this epic Michael has written in such a vigorous 45 diction and an original metre? And at the present time Girish Babu 46 is writing wonderful books in a new metre which your otherwise 47 Pundits are criticising and finding fault with. But does G.C. care for 48 that? People will appreciate the book afterwards.

49 Thus speaking on the subject of Michael he said, "Go and get 50 the Meghnadbadh Kavya from the library downstairs." On the 51 disciple's bringing it he said, "Now read, let me see how you can

1 read it."

2 The disciple read a portion, but the reading not being to the 3 liking of Swamiji, he took the book and showed him how to read and 4 asked him to read again. Then he asked him, "Now, can you say 5 which portion of the Kavya is best?" The disciple failing to answer, 6 Swamiji said, "That portion of the book which describes how 7 Indrajit has been killed in battle and Mandodari, beside herself with 8 grief, is dissuading Ravana from the battle--but Ravana casting off 9 forcibly from his mind the grief for his son is firmly resolved on 10 battle like a great hero, and forgetting in a fury of rage and 11 vengeance all about his wife and children, is ready to rush out for 12 battle--that is the most finely conceived portion of the book. Come 13 what may, I shall not forget my duty, whether the world remains or 14 dissolves--these are the words of a great hero. Inspired by such 15 feelings, Michael has written that portion."

16 Saying this, Swamiji opened the particular passage and 17 began to read it in the most impressive manner.

18

20 [Place: Belur Math. Year: 1901.]

21 Swamiji is much better under the Ayurvedic treatment. The 22 disciple is at the Math. While attending on Swamiji, he asked, "The 23 Atman is all-pervading, the very life of the life of all beings, and so 24 very near. Still why is It not perceived?"

25 Swamiji: Do you see yourself that you have eyes?

26 When others speak of the eyes, then you are reminded that 27 you have got eyes. Again when dust or sand enters into them and 28 sets up an irritation, then you feel quite well that you have got eyes.
29 Similarly the realisation of this universal Atman which is inner than 30 the innermost is not easily attained. Reading from scriptures or 31 hearing from the lips of the preceptor, one has some idea of It, but 32 when the hard lashes of the bitter sorrow and pain of the world 33 make the heart sore, when on the death of one's near and dear 34 relatives, man thinks himself helpless, when the impenetrable and 35 insurmountable darkness about the future life agitates his mind, 36 then does the Jiva pant for a realisation of the Atman. Therefore is 37 sorrow helpful to the knowledge of the Atman. But one should 38 remember the bitter lesson of experience. Those who die, merely 39 suffering the woes of life like cats and dogs, are they men? He is a 40 man who even when agitated by the sharp interaction of pleasure 41 and pain is discriminating, and knowing them to be of an 42 evanescent nature, becomes passionately devoted to the Atman.
43 This is all the difference between men and animals. That which is 44 nearest is least observed. The Atman is the nearest of the near, 45 therefore the careless and unsteady mind of man gets no clue to It.
46 But the man who is alert, calm, self-restrained, and discriminating, 47 ignores the external world and diving more and more into the inner 48 world, realises the glory of the Atman and becomes great. Then 49 only he attains to the knowledge of the Atman and realises the truth
50 of such scriptural texts as, "I am the Atman", "Thou art That, O

1 Shvetaketu," and so on. Do you understand?

2 Disciple: Yes, sir. But why this method of attaining Self-
3 knowledge through the path of pain and suffering? Instead of all 4 this, it would have been well if there had been no creation at all. We 5 were all at one time identified with Brahman. Why then this desire 6 for creation on the path of Brahman? Why again this going forth of 7 the Jiva (who is no other than Brahman) along the path of birth and 8 death, amidst the interaction of the dualities of life?

9 Swamiji: When a man is intoxicated, he sees many 10 hallucinations; but when the intoxication goes off, he understands 11 them as the imaginations of a heated brain. Whatever you see of 12 this creation which is without a beginning, but has an end, is only 13 an effect of your state of intoxication; when that passes off, such 14 questions will not arise at all.

15 Disciple: Then is there no reality in the creation, and 16 preservation, etc. of the Universe?

17 Swamiji: Why should not there be? So long as you identify 18 yourself with the body and have the ego-consciousness, all these 19 will remain. But when you are bereft of the body-consciousness and 20 devoted to the Atman and live in the Atman, then with respect to 21 you none of these will remain, and such questions as whether there 22 is any creation or birth or death will have no room. Then you will 23 have to say--

24 {Sanskrit}

25 --"Where is it gone, by whom is it taken, wherein is the world
26 merged? It was just observed by me and is it non-existent now?
27 What a wonder!" (Vivekachudamani 483).

28 Disciple: If there is no knowledge of the existence of the 29 universe, how can it be said, "Wherein is the world merged?"

30 Swamiji: Because one has to express the idea in language, 31 therefore that mode of expression has been used. The author has 32 tried to express in thought and language about the state where 33 thought or language cannot reach, and therefore he has stated the 34 fact that the world is wholly unreal, in a relative mode like the 35 above. The world has no absolute reality which only belongs to 36 Brahman, which is beyond the reach of mind and speech. Say what 37 more you have to ask. Today I will put an end to all your arguments.

38 The bell of the evening service in the worship-room rang at 39 the time, and everybody made for it. But the disciple stayed in 40 Swamiji's room, noticing which Swamiji said, "Won't you go to the 41 worship-room?"

42 Disciple: I should like to stay here.

43 Swamiji: All right.

44 After some time the disciple looking outside of the room said, 45 "It is the new-moon night and all the quarters are overspread with 46 darkness. It is the night for the worship of Mother Kali."

47 Swamiji without saying anything gazed at the eastern sky for 48 some time and said, "Do you see what a mysterious and solemn

1 beauty there is in this darkness!" Saying this and continuing to look 2 at the dense mass of darkness, he stood enwrapt. After some 3 minutes had passed, Swamiji slowly began to sing a Bengali song, 4 "O Mother, in deep darkness flashes Thy formless beauty", etc.
5 After the song Swamiji entered his room and sat down with an 6 occasional word like "Mother, Mother", or "Kali, Kali", on his lips.

7 Uneasy at Swamiji's profoundly abstracted mood, the 8 disciple said, "Now, sir, please speak with me."

9 Swamiji smilingly said, "Can you fathom the beauty and 10 profundity of the Atman whose external manifestation is so sweet 11 and beautiful?" The disciple wished for a change of topic, noticing 12 which, Swamiji began another song of Kali: "O Mother, Thou 13 flowing stream of nectar, in how many forms and aspects dost Thou 14 play in manifestation!" After the song he said, "This Kali is Brahman 15 in manifestation. Haven't you heard Shri Ramakrishna's illustration 16 of the 'snake moving and the snake at rest' (representing the 17 dynamic and static aspects of the same thing)?"

18 Disciple: Yes, sir.

19 Swamiji: This time, when I get well, I shall worship the 20 Mother with my heart's blood, then only will She be pleased. Your 21 Raghunandan also says like that. The Mother's child shall be a hero, 22 a Mahavira. In unhappiness, sorrow, death, and desolation, the 23 Mother's child shall always remain fearless.

25 [Place: Belur Math. Year: 1901.]

26 Swamiji is staying at the Math nowadays. His health is not 27 very good, but he goes out for a walk in the mornings and evenings.
28 The disciple, after bowing at the feet of Swamiji, inquired about his 29 health.
30

31 Swamiji: Well, this body is in such a pitiable condition, but 32 none of you are stepping forward to help in my work! What shall I 33 do single-handed? This time the body has come out of the soil of 34 Bengal, so can it bear the strain of much work? You who come here 35 are pure souls; and if you do not become my helpers in this work, 36 what shall I do alone?

37 Disciple: Sir, these self-sacrificing Brahmacharins and 38 Sannyasins are standing behind you, and I think that each one of 39 them can devote his life to your work--still why do you speak in this 40 way?

41 Swamiji: Well, I want a band of young Bengal--who alone are 42 the hope of this country. My hope of the future lies in the youths of 43 character--intelligent, renouncing all for the service of others, and 44 obedient--who can sacrifice their lives in working out my ideas and 45 thereby do good to themselves and the country at large. Otherwise, 46 boys of the common run are coming in groups and will come.
47 Dullness is written on their faces--their hearts are devoid of energy, 48 their bodies feeble and unfit for work, and minds devoid of courage.
49 What work will be done by these? If I get ten or twelve boys with

1 the faith of Nachiketa, I can turn the thoughts and pursuits of this 2 country in a new channel.

3 Disciple: Sir, so many young men are coming to you, and do 4 you find none among them of such a nature?

5 Swamiji: Among those who appear to me to be of good 6 calibre, some have bound themselves by matrimony; some have 7 sold themselves for the acquisition of worldly name, fame, or 8 wealth; while some are of feeble bodies. The rest, who form the 9 majority, are unable to receive any high idea. You are no doubt fit to 10 receive my high ideas, but you are not able to work them out in the 11 practical field. For these reasons sometimes an anguish comes into 12 the mind, and I think that taking this human body, I could not do 13 much work through untowardness of fortune. Of course, I have not 14 yet wholly given up hope, for, by the will of God, from among these 15 very boys may arise in time great heroes of action and spirituality 16 who will in future work out my ideas.

17 Disciple: It is my firm belief that your broad and liberal ideas 18 must find universal acceptance some day or other. For I see they 19 are all-sided and infusing vigour into every department of thought 20 and activity. And the people of the country are accepting, either 21 overtly or covertly, your ideas, and teaching them to the people.

22 Swamiji: What matters it if they acknowledge my name or 23 not? It is enough if they accept my ideas. Ninety-nine per cent of 24 the Sadhus, even after renouncing lust and wealth, get bound at the 25 last by the desire of name and fame. "Fame . . . that last infirmity of 26 noble mind"--haven't you read? We shall have to work, giving up 27 altogether all desire for results. People will call us both good and 28 bad. But we shall have to work like lions, keeping the ideal before 29 us, without caring whether "the wise ones praise or blame us".

30 Disciple: What ideal should we follow now?

31 Swamiji: You have now to make the character of Mahavira 32 your ideal. See how at the command of Ramachandra he crossed 33 the ocean. He had no care for life or death! He was a perfect 34 master of his senses and wonderfully sagacious. You have now to 35 build your life on this great ideal of personal service. Through that, 36 all other ideals will gradually manifest in life. Obedience to the 37 Guru without questioning, and strict observance of Brahmacharya-- 38 this is the secret of success. As on the one hand Hanuman 39 represent the ideal of service, so on the other hand he represents 40 leonine courage, striking the whole world with awe. He has not the 41 least hesitation in sacrificing his life for the good of Rama. A 42 supreme indifference to everything except the service of Rama, 43 even to the attainment of the status of Brahma and Shiva, the great 44 World-Gods! Only the carrying out of Shri Rama's best is the one 45 vow of this life! Such whole-hearted devotion is wanted. Playing on 46 the Khol and Kartal and dancing in the frenzy of Kirtana has 47 degenerated the whole people. They are, in the first place, a race of 48 dyspeptics--and if in addition to this they dance and jump in that 49 way, how can they bear the strain? In trying to imitate the highest 50 Sadhana, the preliminary qualification for which is absolute purity, 51 they have been swallowed in dire Tamas. In every district and

1 village you may visit, you will find only the sound of the Khol and 2 Kartal! Are not drums made in the country? Are not trumpets and 3 kettle-drums available in India? Make the boys hear the deep-toned 4 sound of these instruments. Hearing from boyhood the sound of 5 these effeminate forms of music and listening to the kirtana, the 6 country is well-nigh converted into a country of women. What more 7 degradation can you expect? Even the poet's imagination fails to 8 draw this picture! The Damaru¹⁸⁶ and horn have to be sounded, 9 drums are to be beaten so as to raise the deep and martial notes, 10 and with "Mahavira, Mahavira" on your lips and shouting "Hara, 11 Hara, Vyom, Vyom", the quarters are to be reverberated. The music 12 which awakens only the softer feelings of man is to be stopped now 13 for some time. Stopping the light tunes such as Kheal and Tappa for 14 some time, the people are to be accustomed to hear the Dhrupad 15 music. Through the thunder-roll of the dignified Vedic hymns, life is 16 to be brought back into the country. In everything the austere spirit 17 of heroic manhood is to be revived. In following such an ideal lies 18 the good of the people and the country. If you can build your 19 character after such an ideal, then a thousand others will follow.
20 But take care that you do not swerve an inch from the ideal. Never 21 lose heart. In eating, dressing, or lying, in singing or playing, in 22 enjoyment or disease, always manifest the highest moral courage.
23 Then only will you attain the grace of Mahashakti, the Divine
24 Mother.

25 Disciple: Sir, at times I am overcome by low spirits, I don't 26 know how.

27 Swamiji: Then think like this: "Whose child am I? I associate 28 with him and shall I have such weak-mindedness and lowness of 29 spirits?" Stamping down such weakness of mind and heart, stand 30 up, saying, "I am possessed of heroism--I am possessed of a steady 31 intellect--I am a knower of Brahman, a man of illumination." Be fully 32 conscious of your dignity by remembering, "I am the disciple of 33 such and such who is the companion-in-life of Shri Ramakrishna, 34 the conqueror of lust and wealth." This will produce a good effect.
35 He who has not this pride has no awakening of Brahman within 36 him. Haven't you heard Ramprasad's song? He used to say, "Whom 37 do I fear in the world, whose sovereign is the Divine Mother!" Keep 38 such a pride always awake in the mind. Then weakness of mind and 39 heart will no longer be able to approach you. Never allow weakness 40 to overtake your mind. Remember Mahavira, remember the Divine 41 Mother! And you will see that all weakness, all cowardice will 42 vanish at once.

43 Saying these words, Swamiji came downstairs and took his 44 accustomed seat on a cot in the courtyard. Then, addressing the 45 assembled Sannyasins and Brahmacharins, he said, "Here is the 46 unveiled presence of Brahman. Fie upon those who disregarding It 47 set their mind on other things! Ah! here is Brahman as palpable as 48 a fruit in one's palm. Don't you see? Here!"

49 These words were spoken in such an appealing way, that 186 ?An hour-glass-shaped drum, held in Shiva's hand.

1 every one stood motionless like a figure painted on canvas and felt 2 as if he were suddenly drawn into the depth of meditation. . . . After 3 some time that tension of feeling passed and they regained their 4 normal consciousness.

5 Next, in the course of a walk, Swamiji spoke to the disciple.
6 "Did you see how everybody had become concentrated today?
7 These are all children of Shri Ramakrishna, and on the very 8 uttering of the words, they felt the truth."

9 Disciple: Sir, not to speak of them, even my heart was 10 overflowing with an unearthly bliss! But now it appears like a 11 vanished dream.

12 Swamiji: Everything will come in time. Now, go on working.
13 Set yourself to some work for the good of men sunk in ignorance 14 and delusion. You will see that such experiences will come of 15 themselves.

16 Disciple: I feel nervous to enter into its labyrinths--neither 17 have I the strength. The scriptures also say, "Impenetrable is the 18 path of Karma".

19 Swamiji: What do you wish to do then?

20 Disciple: To live and hold discussion with one like you, who 21 has realised the truth of all scriptures and through hearing, 22 thinking, and meditating on the Truth to realise Brahman in this 23 very life. I have no enthusiasm, nor perhaps the strength, for 24 anything else.

25 Swamiji: If you love that, well, you can go on doing it. And 26 speak about your thoughts and conclusions about the Shastras to 27 others, it will benefit them. So long as there is the body, one cannot 28 live without doing some work or other; therefore one should do 29 such work as is conducive to the good of others. Your own 30 realisations and conclusions about scriptural truths may benefit 31 many a seeker after Truth. Put them into writing which may help 32 many others.

33 Disciple: First let me realise the Truth, then I shall write.
34 Shri Ramakrishna used to say; "Without the badge of authority, 35 none will listen to you."

36 Swamiji: There may be many in the world who have got stuck 37 in that stage of spiritual discipline and reasoning through which you 38 are passing, without being able to pass beyond that stage. Your 39 experience and way of thinking, if recorded, may be of benefit to 40 them at least. If you put down in easy language the substance of the 41 discussions which you hold with the Sadhus of this Math, it may 42 help many.

43 Disciple: Since you wish it, I shall try to do it.

44 Swamiji: What is the good of that spiritual practice or 45 realisation which does not benefit others, does not conduce to the 46 well-being of people sunk in ignorance and delusion, does not help 47 in rescuing them from the clutches of lust and wealth? Do you 48 think, so long as one Jiva endures in bondage, you will have any 49 liberation? So long as he is not liberated--it may take several

1 lifetimes--you will have to be born to help him, to make him realise
2 Brahman. Every Jiva is part of yourself--which is the rationale of all 3 work for others. As you desire the whole-hearted good of your wife 4 and children, knowing them to be your own, so when a like amount 5 of love and attraction for every Jiva will awaken in you, then I shall 6 know that Brahman is awakening in you, not a moment before.
7 When this feeling of the all-round good of all without respect for 8 caste or colour will awaken in your heart, then I shall know you are 9 advancing towards the ideal.

10 Disciple: Sir, it is a most tremendous statement that without 11 the salvation of all, there shall be no salvation for an individual! I 12 have never heard of such a wonderful proposition.

13 Swamiji: There is a class of Vedantists who hold such a view.
14 They say that individual liberation is not the real and perfect form 15 of liberation, but universal and collective liberation is true Mukti. Of 16 course, both merits and defects can be pointed out in that view.

17 Disciple: According to Vedanta, the state of individualised
18 existence is the root of bondage, and the Infinite Intelligence, 19 through desires and effects of works, appears bound in that limiting 20 condition. When by means of discrimination that limiting condition 21 vanishes and the Jiva is bereft of all adjuncts, then how can there 22 be bondage for the Atman which is of the essence of transcendent 23 Intelligence? He for whom the idea of the Jiva and the world is a 24 persisting reality may think that without the liberation of all he has 25 no liberation. But when the mind becomes bereft of all limiting 26 adjuncts and is merged in Brahman, where is there any 27 differentiation for him? So nothing can operate as a bar to his 28 Mukti.

29 Swamiji: Yes, what you say is right, and most Vedantins hold 30 that view, which is also flawless. In that view, individual liberation is 31 not barred. But just consider the greatness of his heart who thinks 32 that he will take the whole universe with him to liberation!

33 Disciple: Sir, it may indicate boldness of heart, but it is not 34 supported by the scriptures.

35 Swamiji was in an abstracted mood and did not listen to the 36 words. After some time he said: "Day and night think and meditate 37 on Brahman, meditate with great one-pointedness of mind. And 38 during the time of awakeness to outward life, either do some work 39 for the sake of others or repeat in your mind, 'Let good happen to 40 Jivas and the world!' 'Let the mind of all flow in the direction of 41 Brahman!' Even by such continuous current of thought the world
42 will be benefited. Nothing good in the world becomes fruitless, be it 43 work or thought. Your thought-currents will perhaps rouse the 44 religious feeling of someone in America."

45 Disciple: Sir, please bless me that my mind may be 46 concentrated on the Truth.

47 Swamiji: So it will be. If you have earnestness of desire, it 48 will certainly be.

[Place: The Belur Math. Year: 1901.]

At the time Belur Math was established, many among the orthodox Hindus were wont to make sharp criticism of the ways of life in the Math. Hearing the report of such criticism from the disciple, Swamiji would say (in the words of the couplet of Tulasidas), "The elephant passes in the market-place, and a thousand curs begin barking after him; so the Sadhus have no ill-feeling when worldly people slander them." Or again he would say, "Without persecution no beneficent idea can enter into the heart of a society." He would exhort everybody, "Go on working without an eye to results. One day you are sure to reap the fruits of it." Again, on the lips of Swamiji were very often heard the words of the Gita, "A doer of good never comes to grief, my son."

In May or June, 1901, seeing the disciple at the Math Swamiji said, "Bring me a copy of Ashtavimshati-tattva (Twenty-eight Categories) of Raghunandan at an early date."

Disciple: Yes, sir, but what will you do with the Raghunandan Smriti, which the present educated India calls a heap of superstition?

Swamiji: Why? Raghunandan was a wonderful scholar of his time. Collecting the ancient Smritis, he codified the customs and observances of the Hindus, adapting them to the needs of the changed times and circumstances. All Bengal is following the rules laid down by him. But in the iron grip of his rules regulating the life of a Hindu from conception to death, the Hindu society was much oppressed. In matters of eating and sleeping, in even the ordinary functions of life, not to speak of the important ones, he tried to regulate every one by rules. In the altered circumstances of the times, that did not last long. At all times in all countries the Karma-kanda, comprising the social customs and observances, changes form. Only the Jnana-kanda endures. Even in the Vedic age you find that the rituals gradually changed in form. But the philosophic portion of the Upanishads has remained unchanged up till now--only there have been many interpreters, that is all.

Disciple: What will do you with the Smriti of Raghunandan?

Swamiji: This time I have a desire to celebrate the Durga Puja (worship of goddess Durga). If the expenses are forthcoming, I shall worship the Mahamaya. Therefore I have a mind to read the ceremonial forms of that worship. When you come to the Math next Sunday, you must bring a copy of the book with you.

Disciple: All right, sir.

Next Saturday the disciple brought a copy of the book, and Swamiji was much pleased to get it. Meeting the disciple a week after this he said, "I have finished the Raghunandan Smriti presented by you. If possible, I shall celebrate the Puja of the Divine Mother."

The Durga Puja took place with great eclat at the proper

1 time.

2 Shortly after this Swamiji performed a Homa before the 3 Mother Kali at Kalighat. Referring this incident he spoke to the 4 disciple, "Well, I was glad to see that there was yet a liberality of 5 view at Kalighat. The temple authorities did not object in the least 6 to my entering the temple, though they knew that I was a man who 7 had returned from the West. On the contrary, they very cordially 8 took me into the holy precincts and helped me to worship the 9 Mother to my heart's content."

10

11 XXIII

12 [Place: The Math, Belur. Year: 1902.]

13 Today is the anniversary celebration of Shri Ramakrishna-- 14 the last that Swamiji ever saw. The disciple presented an invocatory 15 hymn on Shri Ramakrishna to Swamiji. He then proceeded to rub
16 Swamiji's feet gently. Before starting to read the poem, Swamiji 17 spoke to him: "Do it very gently as the feet have become very 18 tender."

19 After reading the poem Swamiji said, "It is well done."

20 Swamiji's illness had increased so much that the disciple, 21 observing it, felt sore at heart. Understanding his inner feeling, 22 Swamiji said, "What are you thinking? This body is born and it will 23 die. If I have been able to instil a few of my ideas into you all, then I 24 shall know that my birth has not been in vain."

25 Disciple: Are we fit objects of your mercy? If you bless me, 26 without taking my fitness into consideration, then I will consider 27 myself fortunate.

28 Swamiji: Always remember that renunciation is the root idea.
29 Unless one is initiated into this idea, not even Brahma and the 30 World-Gods have the power to attain Mukti.

31 Disciple: It is a matter of deep regret that even hearing this 32 from you almost every day, I have not been able to realise it.

33 Swamiji: Renunciation must come, but in the fulness of time.
34 "{Sanskrit}--In the fulness of time one attains to knowledge within 35 himself." When the few Samskaras (tendencies) of the previous life 36 are spent, then renunciation sprouts up in the heart.

37 After some time he said, "Why should you go outside and see 38 the big concourse of people? Stay with me now. And ask Niranjana to 39 sit at the door, so that nobody may disturb me today."

40 Then the following conversation took place between Swamiji 41 and the disciple:

42 Swamiji: I think that it will be better if from now the 43 anniversary is celebrated in a different way. The celebration should 44 extend to four or five days instead of one. On the first day, there 45 may be study and interpretation of scriptures; on the second, 46 discussion on the Vedas and the Vedanta and the solution of the 47 problems in connection with them; on the third day, there may be a

1 question class. The fourth day may be fixed for lectures. On the last 2 day, there will be a festival on the present lines. This will be like the 3 Durga Puja extending over four or five days. Of course, if the 4 celebration is on the above lines, none but the devotees of Shri 5 Ramakrishna will be able to attend on the other days except the 6 last. But that does not matter. A large promiscuous crowd of people 7 does not mean a great propagation of the message of Shri
8 Ramakrishna.

9 Disciple: Sir, it is a beautiful idea. Next time it will be done 10 according to your wishes.

11 Swamiji: Now, my son, you all will carry them out. I have no 12 more inclination for these things.

13 Disciple: Sir, this year many Kirtana parties have come.

14 Hearing these words Swamiji stood up holding the iron bars 15 of the window and looked at the assembled crowd of devotees.
16 After some time he sat down.

17 Swamiji: You are the actors in the Divine Lila (play) of Shri 18 Ramakrishna. After this, not to speak of ours, people will take your 19 names also. These hymns which you are writing will afterwards be 20 read by people for the acquirement of love and knowledge. Know 21 that the attainment of the knowledge of the Atman is the highest 22 object of life. If you have devotion for the Avatars who are the 23 world-teachers, that knowledge will manifest of itself in time.

24 Disciple: Sir, shall I attain to such knowledge?

25 Swamiji: By the blessings of Shri Ramakrishna you shall 26 attain to divine love and knowledge. You will not find much 27 happiness in the worldly life.

28 Disciple: Sir, if you condescend to destroy the weakness of 29 my mind, then only there is hope for me.

30 Swamiji: What fear! When you have chanced to come here, 31 you shall be free.

32 Disciple (with great entreaty): You must save me and lift me 33 from ignorance in this very life.

34 Swamiji: Say, who can save anybody? The Guru can only take 35 away some covering veils. When these veils are removed, the 36 Atman shines in Its own glory and manifests like the sun.

37 Disciple: Then why do we find mention of grace in the 38 scriptures?

39 Swamiji: Grace means this. He who has realised the Atman 40 becomes a storehouse of great power. Making him the centre and 41 with a certain radius a circle is formed, and whoever comes within 42 the circle becomes animated with the ideas of that saint, i.e. they 43 are overwhelmed by his ideas. Thus without much religious striving, 44 they inherit the results of his wonderful spirituality. If you call this 45 grace, you may do so.

46 Disciple: Is there no other grace than this?

47 Swamiji: Yes, there is. When the Avatara comes, then with

1 him are born liberated persons as helpers in his world-play. Only 2 Avatars have the power to dispel the darkness of a million souls
3 and give them salvation in one life. This is known as grace. Do you 4 understand?

5 Disciple: Yes, sir. But what is the way for those who have not 6 been blessed with the sight of him?

7 Swamiji: The way for them is to call on him. Calling on him, 8 many are blessed with his vision--can see him in human form just 9 like ours and obtain his grace.

10 Disciple: Have you ever had a vision of Shri Ramakrishna 11 after his passing away?

12 Swamiji: After leaving the body, I associated for some time 13 with Pavhari Baba of Ghazipur. There was a garden not far distant 14 from his Ashrama where I lived. People used to say it was a haunted 15 garden, but as you know, I am a sort of demon myself and have not 16 much fear of ghosts. In the garden there were many lemon trees 17 which bore numerous fruits. At that time I was suffering from 18 diarrhoea, and there no food could be had except bread. So, to 19 increase the digestive powers, I used to take plenty of lemons.
20 Mixing with Pavhari Baba, I liked him very much, and he also came 21 to love me deeply. One day I thought that I did not learn any art for 22 making this weak body strong, even though I lived with Shri 23 Ramakrishna for so many years. I had heard that Pavhari Baba 24 knew the science of Hatha-Yoga. So I thought I would learn the 25 practices of Hatha-Yoga from him, and through them strengthen the 26 body. You know, I have a dogged resolution, and whatever I set my 27 heart on, I always carry out. On the eve of the day on which I was to 28 take initiation, I was lying on a cot thinking; and just then I saw the 29 form of Sri Ramakrishna standing on my right side, looking 30 steadfastly at me, as if very much grieved. I had dedicated myself to 31 him, and at the thought that I was taking another Guru I was much 32 ashamed and kept looking at him. Thus perhaps two or three hours 33 passed, but no words escaped from my mouth. Then he disappeared
34 all on a sudden. My mind became upset seeing Shri Ramakrishna 35 that night, so I postponed the idea of initiation from Pavhari Baba 36 for the day. After a day or two again the idea of initiation from 37 Pavhari Baba arose in the mind--and again in the night there was 38 the appearance of Shri Ramakrishna as on the previous occasion.
39 Thus when for several nights in succession I had the vision of Shri 40 Ramakrishna, I gave up the idea of initiation altogether, thinking 41 that as every time I resolved on it, I was getting such a vision, then 42 no good but harm would come from it.

43 After some time he addressed the disciple, saying, "Those 44 who have seen Shri Ramakrishna are really blessed. Their family 45 and birth have become purified by it. All of you will also get his 46 vision. The very fact that you have come here, shows that you are 47 very near to him. Nobody has been able to understand who came on 48 earth as Sri Ramakrishna. Even his own nearest devotees have got 49 no real clue to it. Only some have got a little inkling of it. All will 50 understand it afterwards."

51 The conversation was thus going on when Swami

1 Niranjanananda knocked at the door. The disciple rose and 2 inquired, "Who has come?" Swami Niranjanananda replied, "Sister 3 Nivedita and some other English ladies." They were admitted into 4 the room, sat on the floor and inquired about the health of Swamiji.
5 After a few more words they went away. Then Swamiji said to the 6 disciple, "See how cultured they are! If they were Bengalis, they 7 would have made me talk at least for half an hour, even though they 8 found me unwell."

9 It is about half past two now, and there is a great gathering 10 of people outside. Understanding the disciple's mind, Swamiji said, 11 "Just go and have a look round--but come back soon."

12 XXIV

13 [Place: The Math, Belur. Year: 1902.]

14 After returning from Eastern Bengal Swamiji stayed in the 15 Math and lived a simple childlike life. Every year some Santal 16 labourers used to work in the Math. Swamiji would joke and make 17 fun with them and loved to hear their tales of weal and woe. One 18 day several noted gentlemen of Calcutta came to visit Swamiji in 19 the Math. That day Swamiji had started such a warm talk with the 20 Santals that, when he was informed of the arrival of those 21 gentlemen, he said, "I shan't be able to go now. I am happy with 22 these men." Really that day Swamiji did not leave the poor Santals 23 to see those visitors.

24 One among the Santals was named Keshta. Swamiji loved 25 Keshta very much. Whenever Swamiji came to talk with them, 26 Keshta used to say to Swamiji, "O my Swamiji, do not come to us 27 when we are working, for while talking with you our work stops and 28 the supervising Swami rebukes us afterwards." Swamiji would be 29 touched by these words and say, "No, no, he will not say anything; 30 tell me a little about your part of the country"--saying which he used 31 to introduce the topic of their worldly affairs.

32 One day Swamiji said to Keshta, "Well, will you take food 33 here one day?" Keshta said, "We do not take food touched by you; if 34 you put salt in our food and we eat it, we shall lose our caste." 35 Swamiji said, "Why should you take salt? We will prepare curry for 36 you without salt, will you then take it?" Keshta agreed to it. Then at 37 orders of Swamiji, bread, curry, sweets, curd, etc. were arranged 38 for the Santals, and he made them sit before him to eat. While 39 eating, Keshta said, "Whence have you got such a thing? We never 40 tasted anything like this." Feeding them sumptuously, Swamiji said, 41 "You are Narayanas, God manifest; today I have offered food to 42 Narayana." The service of "Daridra Narayana"--God in the poor-- 43 about which Swamiji spoke, he himself performed one day like this.

44 After their meal, the Santals went for rest, and Swamiji, 45 addressing the disciple, said, "I found them the veritable 46 embodiment of God--such simplicity, such sincere guileless love I 47 have seen nowhere else." Then, addressing the Sannyasins of the 48 Math, he said, "See how simple they are. Can you mitigate their 49 misery a little? Otherwise, of what good is the wearing of the Gerua 50

1 robe? Sacrifice of everything for the good of others is real 2 Sannyasa. They have never enjoyed any good thing in life.
3 Sometimes I feel a desire to sell the Math and everything, and 4 distribute the money to the poor and destitute. We have made the 5 tree our shelter. Alas! the people of the country cannot get anything 6 to eat, and how can we have the heart to raise food to our mouths?
7 When I was in the Western countries, I prayed to the Divine 8 Mother, "People here are sleeping on a bed of flowers, they eat all 9 kinds of delicacies, and what do they not enjoy, while people in our 10 country are dying of starvation. Mother, will there be no way for 11 them! One of the objects of my going to the West to preach religion 12 was to see if I could find any means for feeding the people of this 13 country.

14 "Seeing the poor people of our country starving for food, a 15 desire comes to me to overthrow all ceremonial worship and 16 learning, and go round from village to village collecting money from 17 the rich by convincing them through force of character and 18 Sadhana, and to spend the whole life in serving the poor.

19 "Alas! nobody thinks of the poor of this land. They are the 20 backbone of the country, who by their labour are producing food-- 21 these poor people, the sweepers and labourers, who if they stop 22 work for one day will create a panic in the town. But there is none 23 to sympathise with them, none to console them in their misery. Just 24 see, for want of sympathy from the Hindus, thousands of Pariahs in 25 Madras are turning Christians. Don't think this is simply due to the 26 pinch of hunger; it is because they do not get any sympathy from 27 us. We are day and night calling out to them, 'Don't touch us! Don't 28 touch us!' Is there any compassion or kindness of heart in the 29 country? Only a class of 'Don't-touchists'; kick such customs out! I 30 sometimes feel the urge to break the barriers of 'Don't-touchism', 31 to go at once and call out, 'Come, all who are poor, miserable, 32 wretched, and down-trodden', and to bring them all together in the 33 name of Shri Ramakrishna. Unless they rise, the Mother won't 34 awaken. We could not make any provision for food and clothes for 35 these--what have we done then? Alas! they know nothing of 36 worldliness, and therefore even after working day and night cannot 37 provide themselves with food and clothes. Let us open their eyes. I 38 see clear as daylight that there is the one Brahman in all, in them 39 and in me--one Shakti dwells in all. The only difference is of 40 manifestation. Unless the blood circulates over the whole body, has 41 any country risen at any time? If one limb is paralysed, then even 42 with the other limbs whole, not much can be done with that body-- 43 know this for certain."

44 Disciple: Sir, there is such a diversity of religions and ideas 45 among the people of this country that it is a difficult affair to bring 46 harmony among them.

47 Swamiji (in anger): If you think any work difficult, then do 48 not come here. Through the grace of God all paths become easy.
49 Your work is to serve the poor and miserable, without any 50 distinction of caste or colour, and you have no need to think about 51 the results. Your duty is to go on working, and then everything will 52 follow of itself. My method of work is to construct and not to pull

1 down. Read the history of the world, and you will find that a great 2 soul stood as the central figure in a certain period of a country.
3 Animated by his ideas, hundreds of people did good to the world.
4 You are all intelligent boys, and have been coming here for a long 5 time. Say, what have you done? Couldn't you give one life for the 6 service of others? In the next life you may read Vedanta and other 7 philosophies. Give this life for the service of others, then I shall 8 know that your coming here has not been in vain.

9 Saying these words, Swamiji sat silent, wrapt in deep 10 thought. After some time, he added, "After so much austerity, I have 11 understood this as the real truth--God is present in every Jiva; there 12 is no other God besides that. 'Who serves Jiva, serves God indeed'.
13 After some pause Swamiji, addressing the disciple, said, "What I 14 have told you today, inscribe in your heart. See that you do not 15 forget it."

16 17 XXV

18 [Place: The Math, Belur. Year: beginning of 1902.]

19 It was Saturday, and the disciple came to the Math just 20 before evening. An austere routine was being followed now at the 21 Math regarding spiritual practices. Swamiji had issued an order 22 that all Brahmacharins and Sannyasins should get up very early in 23 the morning and practise Japa and meditation in the worship-room.
24 Swamiji was having little sleep during these days, and would rise 25 from bed at three in the morning.

26 On the disciple saluting Swamiji just after his appearance at 27 the Math, he said, "Well, see how they are practising religious 28 exercises here nowadays. Everyone passes a considerable time in 29 Japa and meditation on mornings and evenings. Look there--a bell 30 has been procured, which is used for rousing all from sleep.
31 Everyone has to get up before dawn. Shri Ramakrishna used to say, 32 'In the morning and evening the mind remains highly imbued with 33 Sattva ideas; those are the times when one should meditate with 34 earnestness.'

1 "After the passing away of Shri Ramakrishna we underwent 2 a lot of religious practice at the Baranagore Math. We used to get 3 up at 3 a.m. and after washing our face etc.--some after bath, and 4 others without it--we would sit in the worship-room and become 5 absorbed in Japa and meditation. What a strong spirit of dispassion 6 we had in those days! We had no thought even as to whether the 7 world existed or not. Ramakrishnananda busied himself day and 8 night with the duties pertaining to Shri Ramakrishna's worship and 9 service, and occupied the same position in the Math as the mistress 10 of the house does in a family. It was he who would procure, mostly 11 by begging, the requisite articles for Shri Ramakrishna's worship 12 and our subsistence. There have been days when the Japa and 13 meditation continued from morning till four or five in the afternoon.
14 Ramakrishnananda waited and waited with our meals ready, till at 15 last he would come and snatch us from our meditation by sheer 16 force. Oh, what a wonderful constancy of devotion we have noticed 17 in him!"

18 Disciple: Sir, how did you use to meet the Math expenses
19 then?

20 Swamiji: What a question! Well, we were Sadhus, and what 21 would come by begging and other means, would be utilised for 22 defraying the Math expenses. Today both Suresh Babu (Surendra 23 Nath Mitra) and Balaram Babu are no more; had they been alive 24 they would have been exceedingly glad to see this Math. You have 25 doubtless heard Suresh Babu's name. It was he who used to bear
26 all the expenses of the Baranagore Math. It was this Suresh Mitra 27 who used to think most for us in those days. His devotion and faith 28 have no parallel!

29 Disciple; Sir, I have heard that you did not see him very often 30 while he was dying.

31 Swamiji: We could only do so if we were allowed (by his 32 relatives). Well, it is a long tale. But know this for certain that 33 among worldly people it is of little count to your relatives and 34 kinsmen whether you live or die. If you succeed in leaving some 35 property, you will find even in your lifetime that there has been set 36 up a brawl over it in your household. You will have no one to 37 console you in your death-bed--not even your wife and sons! Such is 38 the way of the world!

39 Referring to the past condition of the Math, Swamiji went on, 40 "Owing to want of funds I would sometimes fight for abolishing the 41 Math altogether. But I could never induce Ramakrishnananda to 42 accede to the proposal. Know Ramakrishnananda to be the central 43 figure of the Math. There have been days when the Math was 44 without a grain of food. If some rice was collected by begging, there 45 was no salt to take it with! On some days there would be only rice 46 and salt, but nobody cared for it in the least. We were then being 47 carried away by a tidal wave of spiritual practice. Boiled Bimba 48 leaves, rice, and salt--this was the menu for a month at a stretch.
49 Oh, those wonderful days! The austerities of that period were 50 enough to dismay supernatural beings, not to speak of men. But it is 51 a tremendous truth that if there be real worth in you, the more are

1 circumstances against you, the more will that inner power manifest
2 itself. But the reason why I have provided for beds and a tolerable
3 living in this Math is that the Sannyasins that are enrolling 4 themselves nowadays will not be able to bear so much strain as we 5 did. There was the life of Shri Ramakrishna before us, and that was 6 why we did not care much for privations and hardships. Boys of this 7 generation will not be able to undergo so much hardship. Hence it 8 is that I have provided for some sort of habitation and a bare 9 subsistence for them. If they get just enough food and clothing, the 10 boys will devote themselves to religious practice and will learn to 11 sacrifice their lives for the good of humanity."

12 Disciple: Sir, outside people say a good deal against this sort 13 of bedding and furniture.

14 Swamiji: Let them say. Even in jest they will at least once 15 think of this Math. And they say, it is easier to attain liberation 16 through cherishing a hostile spirit. Shri Ramakrishna used to say, 17 "Men should be ignored like worms." Do you mean we have to 18 conduct ourselves according to the chance opinion of others?
19 Pshaw!

20 Disciple: Sir, you sometimes say, "All are Narayanas, the poor 21 and the needy are my Narayanas", and again you say, "Men should 22 be ignored like worms." What do you really mean?

23 Swamiji: Well, there is not the least doubt that all are 24 Narayanas. But all Narayanas do not criticise the furniture of the 25 Math. I shall go on working for the good of men, without caring in 26 the least for the criticisms of others--it is in this sense that the 27 expression, "Men are to be ignored like worms", has been used. He 28 who has a dogged determination like that shall have everything.
29 Only some may have it sooner, and others a little later, that is all.
30 But one is bound to reach the goal. It is because we had such a 31 determination that we have attained the little that we have.
32 Otherwise, what dire days of privation we have had to pass 33 through! One day, for want of food I fainted in the outer platform of 34 a house on the roadside and quite a shower of rain had passed over 35 my head before I recovered my senses! Another day, I had to do odd 36 jobs in Calcutta for the whole day without food, and had my meal on 37 my return to the Math at ten or eleven in the night. And these were 38 not solitary instances.

39 Saying these words, Swamiji sat for a while pursuing some 40 trend of thought. Then he resumed:

41 Real monasticism is not easy to attain. There is no order of 42 life so rigorous as this. If you stumble ever so little, you are hurled 43 down a precipice--and are smashed to pieces. One day I was 44 travelling on foot from Agra to Vrindaban. There was not a farthing 45 with me. I was about a couple of miles from Vrindaban when I 46 found a man smoking on the roadside, and I was seized with a 47 desire to smoke. I said to the man, "Hallo, will you let me have a 48 puff at your Chillum?" He seemed to be hesitating greatly and said, 49 "Sire, I am a sweeper." Well, there was the influence of old 50 Samskaras, and I immediately stepped back and resumed my 51 journey without smoking. I had gone a short distance when the 1 thought occurred to me that I was a Sannyasin, who had renounced

2 caste, family, prestige, and everything--and still I drew back as soon 3 as the man gave himself out as a sweeper, and could not smoke at 4 the Chillum touched by him! The thought made me restless at 5 heart; then I had walked on half a mile. Again I retraced my steps
6 and came to the sweeper whom I found still sitting there. I 7 hastened to tell him, "Do prepare a Chillum of tobacco for me, my 8 dear friend." I paid no heed to his objections and insisted on having 9 it. So the man was compelled to prepare a Chillum for me. Then I 10 gladly had a puff at it and proceeded to Vrindaban. When one has 11 embraced the monastic life, one has to test whether one has gone 12 beyond the prestige of caste and birth, etc. It is so difficult to 13 observe the monastic vow in right earnest! There must not be the 14 slightest divergence between one's words and actions.

15 Disciple: Sir, you sometimes hold before us the householder's 16 ideal and sometimes the ideal of the Sannyasin. Which one are we 17 to adopt?

18 Swamiji: Well, go on listening to all. Then stick to that one 19 which appeals to you--grip it hard like a bulldog.

20 Swamiji came downstairs accompanied by the disciple, while 21 speaking these words, and began to pace to and fro, uttering now 22 and then the name of Shiva or humming a song on the Divine
23 Mother, such as, "Who knows how diversely Thou playest, O 24 Mother, Thou flowing stream of nectar", and so on.

25 26 XXVI

27 [Place: The Math, Belur. Year: 1902.]

28 The disciple passed the preceding night in Swamiji's room.
29 At 4 a.m. Swamiji roused him and said "Go and knock up the 30 Sadhus and Brahmacharins from sleep with the bell." In pursuance 31 of the order, the disciple rang the bell near the Sadhus who slept.
32 The monastic inmates hastened to go to the worship-room for 33 meditation.

34 According to Swamiji's instructions, the disciple rang the bell
35 lustily near Swami Brahmananda's bed, which made the latter 36 exclaim, "Good heavens! The Bangal¹⁸⁷ has made it too hot for us to 37 stay in the Math!" On the disciple's communicating this to Swamiji, 38 he burst out into a hearty laugh, saying, "Well done!"

39 Then Swamiji, too, washed his face and entered the chapel 40 accompanied by the disciple.

41 The Sannyasins--Swami Brahmananda and others--were 42 already seated for meditation. A separate seat was kept for 43 Swamiji, on which he sat facing the east, and pointing to a seat in 44 front to the disciple, said, "Go and meditate, sitting there."

45 Shortly after taking his seat, Swamiji became perfectly calm

1 ¹⁸⁷ ?Meaning an East Bengal man, used as a term of endearing reproach for the 2 disciple.
3

1 and motionless, like a statue, and his breathing became very slow.
2 Everyone else kept his seat.

3 After about an hour and a half, Swamiji rose from meditation 4 with the words "Shiva, Shiva". His eyes were flushed, the 5 expression placid, calm, and grave. Bowing before Shri 6 Ramakrishna he came downstairs and paced the courtyard of the 7 Math. After a while he said to the disciple. "Do you see how the 8 Sadhus are practising meditation etc. nowadays? When the 9 meditation is deep, one sees many wonderful things. While 10 meditating at the Baranagore Math, one day I saw the nerves Ida 11 and Pingala. One can see them with a little effort. Then, when one 12 has a vision of the Shushumna, one can see anything one likes. If a 13 man has unflinching devotion to the Guru, spiritual practices-- 14 meditation, Japa, and so forth--come quite naturally; one need not 15 struggle for them. `The Guru is Brahma, the Guru is Vishnu, and 16 the Guru is Shiva Himself.'"

17 Then the disciple prepared tobacco for Swamiji and when he 18 returned with it, Swamiji spoke as he puffed at it, "Within there is 19 the lion--the eternally pure, illumined, and ever free Atman; and 20 directly one realises Him through meditation and concentration, 21 this world of Maya vanishes. He is equally present in all; and the 22 more one practises, the quicker does the Kundalini (the `coiled-up' 23 power) awaken in him. When this power reaches the head, one's 24 vision is unobstructed--one realises the Atman."

25 Disciple: Sir, I have only read of these things in the 26 scriptures, but nothing has been realised as yet.

27 Swamiji: {Sanskrit}--It is bound to come in time. But some 28 attain this early, and others are a little late. One must stick to it-- 29 determined never to let it go. This is true manliness. You must keep 30 the mind fixed on one object, like an unbroken stream of oil. The 31 ordinary man's mind is scattered on different objects, and at the 32 time of meditation, too, the mind is at first apt to wander. But let 33 any desire whatever arise in the mind, you must sit calmly and 34 watch what sort of ideas are coming. By continuing to watch in that 35 way, the mind becomes calm, and there are no more thought-waves 36 in it. These waves represent the thought-activity of the mind. Those 37 things that you have previously thought deeply, have transformed 38 themselves into a subconscious current, and therefore these come 39 up in the mind in meditation. The rise of these waves, or thoughts, 40 during meditation is an evidence that your mind is tending towards 41 concentration. Sometimes the mind is concentrated on a set of 42 ideas--this is called meditation with Vikalpa or oscillation. But when 43 the mind becomes almost free from all activities, it melts in the 44 inner Self, which is the essence of infinite Knowledge, One, and 45 Itself Its own support. This is what is called Nirvikalpa Samadhi, 46 free from all activities. In Shri Ramakrishna we have again and 47 again noticed both these forms of Samadhi. He had not to struggle 48 to get these states. They came to him spontaneously, then and 49 there. It was a wonderful phenomenon. It was by seeing him that 50 we could rightly understand these things. Meditate every day alone.
51 Everything will open up of itself. Now the Divine Mother--the 52 embodiment of illumination--is sleeping within, hence you do not

1 understand this. She is the Kundalini. When, before meditating, you 2 proceed to "purify the nerves", you must mentally strike hard on the 3 Kundalini in the Muladhara (sacral plexus), and repeat, "Arise, 4 Mother, arise!" One must practise these slowly. During meditation, 5 suppress the emotional side altogether. This is a great source of 6 danger. Those that are very emotional no doubt have their Kundalini 7 rushing quickly upwards, but it is as quick to come down as to go 8 up. And when it does come down, it leaves the devotee in a state of 9 utter ruin. It is for this reason that Kirtanas and other auxiliaries to 10 emotional development have a great drawback. It is true that by 11 dancing and jumping, etc. through a momentary impulse, that 12 power is made to course upwards, but it is never enduring. On the 13 contrary when it traces back its course, it rouses violent lust in the 14 individual. Listening to my lectures in America, through temporary 15 excitement many among the audience used to get into an ecstatic 16 state, and some would even become motionless like statues. But on 17 inquiry I afterwards found that many of them had an excess of the 18 carnal instinct immediately after that state. But this happens simply 19 owing to a lack of steady practice in meditation and concentration.

20 Disciple: Sir, in no scriptures have I ever read these secrets 21 of spiritual practice. Today I have heard quite new things.

22 Swamiji: Do you think the scriptures contain all the secrets
23 of spiritual practice? These are being handed down secretly
24 through a succession of Gurus and disciples. Practise meditation 25 and concentration with the utmost care. Place fragrant flowers in 26 front and burn incense. At the outset take such external help as will 27 make the mind pure. As you repeat the name of your Guru and 28 Ishta, say, "Peace be to all creatures and the universe!" First send 29 impulses of these good wishes to the north, south, east, west, 30 above, below--in all directions, and then sit down to meditate. One 31 has to do this during the early stages. Then sitting still (you may 32 face in any direction), meditate in the way I have taught you while 33 initiating. Don't leave out a single day. If you have too much 34 pressing work, go through the spiritual exercises for at least a 35 quarter of an hour. Can you reach the goal without steadfast 36 devotion, my son?

37 Now Swamiji went upstairs, and as he did so, he said, "You 38 people will have your spiritual insight opened without much 39 trouble. Now that you have chanced to come here, you have 40 liberation and all under your thumb. Besides practising meditation, 41 etc., set yourselves heart and soul to remove to a certain extent the 42 miseries of the world, so full of wails. Through hard austerities I 43 have almost ruined this body. There is hardly any energy left in this 44 pack of bones and flesh. You set yourselves to work now, and let me 45 rest a while. If you fail to do anything else, well, you can tell the 46 world at large about the scriptural truths you have studied so long.
47 There is no higher gift than this, for the gift of knowledge is the 48 highest gift in the world."

1 Swamiji was now staying at the Math. The disciple came to 2 the Math and towards the evening accompanied Swamiji and 3 Swami Premananda for a walk. Finding Swamiji absorbed in 4 thought, the disciple entered into a conversation with Swami
5 Premananda on what Shri Ramakrishna used to say of Swamiji's 6 greatness. After walking some distance Swamiji turned to go back 7 to the Math. Seeing Swami Premananda and the disciple near by, 8 he said, "Well, what were you talking?" The disciple said, "We were 9 talking about Shri Ramakrishna and his words." Swamiji only heard 10 the reply, but again lapsed into thought and walking along the road 11 returned to the Math. He sat on the camp-cot placed under the 12 mango-tree and, resting there some time, washed his face and then, 13 pacing the upper verandah, spoke to the disciple thus: "Why do you 14 not set about propagating Vedanta in your part of the country?
15 There Tantrikism prevails to a fearful extent. Rouse and agitate the 16 country with the lion-roar of Advaitavada (monism). Then I shall 17 know you to be a Vedantist. First open a Sanskrit school there and 18 teach the Upanishads and the Brahma-Sutras . Teach the boys the 19 system of Brahmacharya. I have heard that in your country there is 20 much logic-chopping of the Nyaya school. What is there in it? Only 21 Vyapti (pervasiveness) and Anumana (inference)--on these subjects 22 the Pandits of the Nyaya school discuss for months! What does it 23 help towards the Knowledge of the Atman? Either in your village or 24 Nag Mahashaya's, open a Chatushpathi (indigenous school) in 25 which the scriptures will be studied and also the life and teachings 26 of Shri Ramakrishna. In this way you will advance your own good as 27 well as the good of the people, and your fame will endure.

28 Disciple: Sir, I cherish no desire for name or fame. Only, 29 sometimes I feel to do as you are saying. But by marriage I have got 30 so entangled in the world that I fear my desire will always remain in 31 the mind only.

32 Swamiji: What if you have married? As you are maintaining 33 your parents and brothers with food and clothing, so do for your 34 wife likewise; and by giving her religious instruction draw her to 35 your path. Think her to be a partner and helper in the living of your 36 religious life. At other times look upon her with an even eye with 37 others. Thinking thus all the unsteadiness of the mind will die out.
38 What fear?

39 The disciple felt assured by these words. After his meal, 40 Swamiji sat on his own bed, and the disciple had an opportunity of 41 doing some personal service for him.

42 Swamiji began to speak to the disciple, enjoining him to be 43 reverential to the Math members: "These children of Shri 44 Ramakrishna whom you see, are wonderful Tyagis (selfless souls), 45 and by service to them you will attain to the purification of mind 46 and be blessed with the vision of the Atman. You remember the 47 words of the Gita: 'By interrogation and service to the great soul'.
48 Therefore you must serve them, by which you will attain your goal; 49 and you know how much they love you."

50 Disciple: But I find it very difficult to understand them. Each 51 one seems to be of a different type.

1 Swamiji: Shri Ramakrishna was a wonderful gardener.
2 Therefore he has made a bouquet of different flowers and formed 3 his Order. All different types and ideas have come into it, and many 4 more will come. Shri Ramakrishna used to say, "Whoever has 5 prayed to God sincerely for one day, must come here." Know each 6 of those who are here to be of great spiritual power. Because they 7 remain shrivelled before me, do not think them to be ordinary souls.
8 When they will go out, they will be the cause of the awakening of 9 spirituality in people. Know them to be part of the spiritual body of 10 Shri Ramakrishna, who was the embodiment of infinite religious 11 ideas. I look upon them with that eye. See, for instance, 12 Brahmananda, who is here--even I have not the spirituality which 13 he has. Shri Ramakrishna looked upon him as his mind-born son;
14 and he lived and walked, ate and slept with him. He is the ornament 15 of our Math--our king. Similarly Premananda, Turiyananda, 16 Trigunatitananda, Akhandananda, Saradananda,
17 Ramakrishnananda, Subodhananda, and others; you may go round 18 the world, but it is doubtful if you will find men of such spirituality 19 and faith in God like them. They are each a centre of religious 20 power, and in time that power will manifest.

21 The disciple listened in wonder, and Swamiji said again: "But 22 from your part of the country, except Nag Mahashaya none came to 23 Shri Ramakrishna. A few others who saw Shri Ramakrishna could 24 not appreciate him." At the thought of Nag Mahashaya, Swamiji 25 kept silent for some time. It was only four or five months since he 26 had passed away. Swamiji had heard that on one occasion a spring 27 of Ganga water rose in the house of Nag Mahashaya, and 28 recollecting this he asked the disciple, "Well, how did that event 29 take place? Tell me about it."

30 Disciple: I only heard about it, but did not see it with my own 31 eyes. I heard that in a Mahavaruni Yoga Nag Mahashaya started 32 with his father for Calcutta.

33 But not getting any accommodation in the railway train he 34 stayed for three or four days in Narayangunge in vain and returned 35 home. Then Nag Mahashaya said to his father, "If the mind is pure, 36 then the Mother Ganga will appear here." Then at the auspicious 37 hour of the holy bath, a jet of water rose, piercing the ground of his 38 courtyard. Many of those who saw it are living today. But that was 39 many years before I met him.

40 Swamiji: There was nothing strange in it. He was a saint of 41 unfalsified determination. I do not consider such a phenomenon at 42 all strange in his case.

43 Saying this, Swamiji, feeling sleepy, lay on his side. At this 44 the disciple came down to take his supper.

45 XXVIII

46 [Place: From Calcutta to the Math on a boat. Year: 1902.]

47 While walking on the banks of the Ganga at Calcutta one 48 afternoon, the disciple saw a Sannyasin in the distance approaching 49

1 towards Ahiritola Ghat. While he came near, the disciple found the 2 Sannyasin to be no other than his Guru, Swami Vivekananda. In his 3 left hand he had a leaf receptacle containing fried gram, which he 4 was eating like a boy, and was walking in great joy. When he stood 5 before him, the disciple fell at his feet and asked the reason for his 6 coming to Calcutta unexpectedly.

7 Swamiji: I came on business. Come, will you go to the Math?
8 Eat a little of the fried gram. It has a nice saline and pungent taste.

9 The disciple took the food with gladness and agreed to go to 10 the Math with him.

11 Swamiji: Then look for a boat.

12 The disciple hurried to hire a boat. He was settling the 13 amount of the boat-hire with the boatman, who demanded eight 14 annas, when Swamiji also appeared on the scene and stopped the 15 disciple saying, "Why are you higgling with them?" and said to the 16 boatman, "Very well, I will give you eight annas", and got into the 17 boat. That boat proceeded slowly against the current and took 18 nearly an hour and half to reach the Math. Being alone with 19 Swamiji in the boat, the disciple had an opportunity of asking him 20 freely about all subjects. Raising the topic of the glorificatory poem 21 which the disciple had recently composed singing the greatness of 22 the devotees of Shri Ramakrishna, Swamiji asked him, "How do you 23 know that those whom you have named in your hymn are the near 24 and intimate disciples of Shri Ramakrishna?"

25 Disciple: Sir, I have associated with the Sannyasin and 26 householder disciples of Shri Ramakrishna for so many years; I 27 have heard from them that they are all devotees of Shri
28 Ramakrishna.

29 Swamiji: Yes, they are devotees of Shri Ramakrishna. But all 30 devotees do not belong to the group of his most intimate and 31 nearest disciples. Staying in the Cossipore Garden, Shri 32 Ramakrishna said to us, "The Divine Mother showed me that all of 33 these are not my inner devotees." Shri Ramakrishna said so that 34 day with respect to both his men and women devotees.

35 Then speaking of the way Shri Ramakrishna would indicate 36 different grades among devotees, high and low, Swamiji began to 37 explain to the disciple at length the great difference there is 38 between the householder's and the Sannyasin's life.

39 Swamiji: Is it possible that one would serve the path of lust
40 and wealth and understand Shri Ramakrishna aright at the same 41 time? Or will it ever be possible? Never put your faith in such 42 words. Many among the devotees of Shri Ramakrishna are now 43 proclaiming themselves as Ishvara-koti (of Divine class), Antaranga 44 (of inner circle), etc. They could not imbibe his great renunciation 45 or dispassion, yet they say they are his intimate devotees! Sweep 46 away all such words. He was a prince of Tyagis (self-renouncers), 47 and obtaining his grace can anybody spend his life in the enjoyment 48 of lust and wealth?

1 Disciple: Is it then, sir, that those who came to him at 2 Dakshineswar were not his devotees?

3 Swamiji: Who says that? Everybody who has gone to Shri 4 Ramakrishna has advanced in spirituality, is advancing, and will 5 advance. Shri Ramakrishna used to say that the perfected Rishis of 6 a previous Kalpa (cycle) take human bodies and come on earth with 7 the Avatars. They are the associates of the Lord. God works
8 through them and propagates His religion. Know this for a truth 9 that they alone are the associates of the Avatara who have 10 renounced all self for the sake of others, who, giving up all sense-11 enjoyments with repugnance, spend their lives for the good of the 12 world, for the welfare of the Jivas. The disciples of Jesus were all 13 Sannyasins. The direct recipients of the grace of Shankara, 14 Ramanuja, Shri Chaitanya and Buddha were the all-renouncing 15 Sannyasins. It is men of this stamp who have been through 16 succession of disciples spreading the Brahma-vidya (knowledge of 17 Brahman) in the world. Where and when have you heard that a man 18 being the slave of lust and wealth has been able to liberate another 19 or to show the path of God to him? Without himself free, how can he 20 make others free? In Veda, Vedanta, Itihasa (history), Purana
21 (ancient tradition), you will find everywhere that the Sannyasins 22 have been the teachers of religion in all ages and climes. History 23 repeats itself. It will also be likewise now. The capable Sannyasin 24 children of Shri Ramakrishna, the teacher of the great synthesis of 25 religions, will be honoured everywhere as the teachers of men. The 26 words of others will dissipate in the air like an empty sound. The 27 real self-sacrificing Sannyasins of the Math will be the centre of the 28 preservation and spread of religious ideas. Do you understand?

29 Disciple: Then is it not true--what the householder devotees
30 of Shri Ramakrishna are preaching about him in diverse ways?

31 Swamiji: It can't be said that they are altogether false; but 32 what they are saying about Shri Ramakrishna is only partial truth.
33 According to one's own capacity, one has understood Shri 34 Ramakrishna and so is discussing about him. It is not bad either to 35 do so. But if any of his devotees has concluded that what he has 36 understood of him is the only truth, then he is an object of pity.
37 Some are saying that Shri Ramakrishna was a Tantrika and Kaula, 38 some that he was Shri Chaitanya born on earth to preach "Naradiya 39 Bhakti" (Bhakti as taught by Narada); some again that to undertake 40 spiritual practices is opposed to faith in him as an Avatara while 41 some are opining that it is not agreeable to his teachings to take to 42 Sannyasa. You will hear such words from the householder devotees, 43 but do not listen to such one-sided estimates. He was the 44 concentrated embodiment of how many previous Avatars! Even 45 spending the whole life in religious austerity, we could not 46 understand it. Therefore one has to speak about him with caution 47 and restraint. As are one's capacities, so he fills one with spiritual 48 ideas. One spray from the full ocean of his spirituality, if realised, 49 will make gods of men. Such a synthesis of universal ideas you will 50 not find in the history of the world again. Understand from this who 51 was born in the person of Shri Ramakrishna. When he used to 52 instruct his Sannyasin disciples, he would rise from his seat and

1 look about to see if any householder was coming that way or not. If 2 he found none, then in glowing words he would depict the glory of 3 renunciation and austerity. As a result of the rousing power of that 4 fiery dispassion, we have renounced the world and become averse 5 to worldliness.

6 Disciple: He used to make such distinctions between 7 householders and Sannyasins!

8 Swamiji: Ask and learn from the householder devotees 9 themselves about it. And you yourself can think and know which are 10 greater--those of his children who for the realisation of God have 11 renounced all enjoyments of the worldly life and are spending 12 themselves in the practice of austerities on hills and forests, Tirthas 13 and Ashramas (holy places and hermitages), or those who are 14 praising and glorifying his name and practising his remembrance, 15 but are not able to rise above the delusion and bondage of the 16 world? Which are greater--those who are coming forward in the 17 service of humanity, regarding them as the Atman, those who are 18 continent since early age, who are the moving embodiments of 19 renunciation and dispassion, or those who like flies are at one time 20 sitting on a flower, and at the next moment on a dung heap? You 21 can yourself think and come to a conclusion.

22 Disciple: But, sir, what does the world really mean to those 23 who have obtained his grace? Whether they remain in the 24 householder's life or take to Sannyasa, it is immaterial--so it 25 appears to me.

26 Swamiji: The mind of those who have truly received his grace 27 cannot be attached to worldliness. The test of his grace is-- 28 unattachment to lust or wealth. If that has not come in anyone's life, 29 then he has not truly received his grace.

30 When the above discussion ended thus, the disciple raising 31 another topic, asked Swamiji, "Sir, what is the outcome of all your 32 labours here and in foreign countries?"

33 Swamiji: You will see only a little manifestation of what has 34 been done. In time the whole world must accept the universal and 35 catholic ideas of Shri Ramakrishna and of this, only the beginning 36 has been made. Before this flood everybody will be swept off.

37 Disciple: Please tell me more about Shri Ramakrishna. I like 38 very much to hear of him from your lips.

39 Swamiji: You are hearing so much about him all the time, 40 what more? He himself is his own parallel. Has he any exemplar?

41 Disciple: What is the way for us who have not seen him?

42 Swamiji: You have been blessed with the company of these 43 Sadhus who are the direct recipients of his grace. How then can 44 you say you have not seen him? He is present among his Sannyasin 45 disciples. By service to them, he will in time be revealed in your 46 heart. In time you will realise everything.

47 Disciple: But, sir, you speak about others who have received 48 his grace, but never about what he used to say about yourself.

1 Swamiji: What shall I say about myself? You see, I must be 2 one of his demons. In his presence even, I would sometimes speak 3 ill of him, hearing which he would laugh.

4 Saying thus Swamiji's face assumed a grave aspect, and he 5 looked towards the river with an absent mind and sat still for some 6 time. Within a short time the evening fell and the boat also reached 7 the Math. Swamiji was then humming a tune to himself, "Now in 8 the evening of life, take the child back to his home."

9 When the song was finished, Swamiji said, "In your part of 10 the country (East Bengal) sweet-voiced singers are not born.
11 Without drinking the water of mother Ganga, a sweet, musical voice 12 is not acquired."

13 After paying the hire, Swamiji descended from the boat and 14 taking off his coat sat in the western verandah of the Math. His fair 15 complexion and ochre robe presented a beautiful sight.

17 XXIX

18 [Place: Belur Math. Year: 1902.]

19 Today is the first of Asharh (June-July). The disciple has come 20 to the Math before dusk from Bally, with his office-dress on, as he 21 has not found time to change it. Coming to the Math, he prostrated 22 himself at the feet of Swamiji and inquired about his health.
23 Swamiji replied that he was well, but looking at his dress, he said, 24 "You put on coat and trousers, why don't you put on collars?" Saying 25 this, he called Swami Saradananda who was near and said, "Give 26 him tomorrow two collars from my stock." Swami Saradananda 27 bowed assent to his order.

28 The disciple then changed his office-dress and came to 29 Swamiji, who, addressing him, said, "By giving up one's national 30 costume and ways of eating and living, one gets denationalised.
31 One can learn from all, but that learning which leads to 32 denationalisation does not help one's uplift but becomes the cause 33 of degradation."

34 Disciple: Sir, one cannot do without putting on dress 35 approved by superior European officers in official quarters.

36 Swamiji: No one prevents that. In the interests of your 37 service, you put on official dress in official quarters. But on 38 returning home you should be a regular Bengali Babu--with flowing 39 cloth, a native shirt, and with the Chudder on the shoulder. Do you 40 understand?

41 Disciple: Yes, sir.

1 Swamiji: You go about from house to house only with the 2 European shirt on. In the West, to go about visiting people with 3 simply the shirt on is ungentlemanly--one is considered naked.
4 Without putting on a coat over the shirt, you will not be welcomed 5 in a gentleman's house. What nonsense have you learnt to imitate in 6 the matter of dress! Boys and young men nowadays adopt a 7 peculiar manner of dress which is neither Indian nor Western, but a 8 queer combination.

9 After such talk Swamiji began to pace the bank of the river,
10 and the disciple was alone with him. He was hesitating to ask 11 Swamiji a question about religious practices.

12 Swamiji: What are you thinking? Out with it.

13 The disciple with great delicacy said, "Sir, I have been 14 thinking that if you can teach me some method by which the mind 15 becomes calm within a short time, by which I may be immersed in 16 meditation quickly, I shall feel much benefited. In the round of 17 worldly duties, I feel it difficult to make the mind steady in 18 meditation at the time of spiritual practice."

19 Swamiji seemed delighted at this humility and earnestness of 20 the disciple. In reply he affectionately said, "After some time come 21 to me when I am alone upstairs, I will talk to you about it."

22 Coming up shortly after, the disciple found that Swamiji was 23 sitting in meditation, facing the west. His face wore a wonderful 24 expression, and his whole body was completely motionless. The 25 disciple stood by, looking with speechless wonder on the figure of 26 Swamiji in meditation, and when even after standing long he found 27 no sign of external consciousness in Swamiji, he sat noiselessly by.
28 After half an hour, Swamiji seemed to show signs of a return to 29 external consciousness. The disciple found that his folded hands 30 began to quiver, and a few minutes later Swamiji opened his eyes 31 and looking at the disciple said, "When did you come?"

32 Disciple: A short while ago.

33 Swamiji: Very well, get me a glass of water.

34 The disciple hurriedly brought a glass of water and Swamiji 35 drinking a little, asked the disciple to put the glass back in its 36 proper place. The disciple did so and again sat by Swamiji.

37 Swamiji: Today I had a very deep meditation.

38 Disciple: Sir, please teach me so that my mind also may get 39 absorbed in meditation.

40 Swamiji: I have already told you all the methods. Meditate 41 every day accordingly, and in the fulness of time you will feel like 42 that. Now tell me what form of Sadhana appeals to you most.

43 Disciple: Sir, I practise every day as you have told me, still I 44 don't get a deep meditation. Sometimes I think it is useless for me 45 to practise meditation. So I feel that I shall not fare well in it, and 46 therefore now desire only eternal companionship with you.

47 Swamiji: Those are weaknesses of the mind. Always try to 48 get absorbed in the eternally present Atman. If you once get the 1 vision of the Atman, you will get everything--the bonds of birth and 2 death will be broken.

3 Disciple: You bless me to attain to it. You asked me, still I 4 don't get a deep meditation. By some means, do please make my 5 mind steady.

6 Swamiji: Meditate whenever you get time. If the mind once 7 enters the path of Sushumna, everything will get right. You will not 8 have to do much after that.

9 Disciple: You encourage me in many ways. But shall I be 10 blessed with a vision of the Truth? Shall I get freedom by attaining 11 true knowledge?

12 Swamiji: Yes, of course. Everybody will attain Mukti, from a 13 worm up to Brahma, and shall you alone fail? These are weaknesses 14 of the mind; never think of such things.

15 After this, he said again: "Be possessed of Shraddha (faith), 16 of Virya (courage), attain to the knowledge of the Atman, and 17 sacrifice your life for the good of others--this is my wish and 18 blessing."

19 The bell for the meal ringing at this moment, Swamiji asked 20 the disciple to go and partake of it. The disciple, prostrating himself 21 at the feet of Swamiji, prayed for his blessings. Swamiji putting his 22 hand on his head blessed him and said, "If my blessings be of any 23 good to you, I say--may Bhagavan Shri Ramakrishna give you his 24 grace! I know of no blessing higher than this." After meals, the 25 disciple did not go upstairs to Swamiji, who had retired early that 26 night. Next morning the disciple, having to return to Calcutta in the 27 interests of his business appeared before Swamiji upstairs.

28 Swamiji: Will you go immediately?

29 Disciple: Yes, sir.

30 Swamiji: Come again next Sunday, won't you?

31 Disciple: Yes, certainly.

32 Swamiji: All right, there is a boat coming.

33 The disciple took leave of Swamiji. He did not know that this 34 was to be his last meeting with his Ishtadeva (chosen Ideal) in the 35 physical body. Swamiji with a glad heart bade him farewell and 36 said, "Come on Sunday." The disciple replied, "Yes, I will," and got 37 downstairs.

38 The boatmen were calling for him, so he ran for the boat.
39 Boarding it, he saw Swamiji pacing the upper verandah, and 40 saluting him he entered the boat.

41 Seven days after this, Swamiji passed away from mortal life.
42 The disciple had no knowledge of the impending catastrophe.
43 Getting the news on the second day of Swamiji's passing away, he 44 came to the Math, and therefore he had not the good fortune to see 45 his physical form again!

We evince a sad lack of restraint in conversation or any conjoint action such as music and so on. Everyone tries to put himself foremost. The jostling at railway or steamer station is another illustration of his. A friend of Swamiji had a talk with him one day at the Math on this subject. Swamiji remarked, "You see, we have an old adage: 'If your son is not inclined to study, put him in the Durbars (Sabha).' The word Sabha here does not mean social meetings, such as take place occasionally at people's houses--it means royal Durbars. In the days of the independent kings of Bengal, they used to hold their courts mornings and evenings. There all the affairs of the State were discussed in the morning--and as there were no newspapers at that time, the king used to converse with the leading gentry of the capital and gather from them all information regarding the people and the State. These gentlemen had to attend these meetings, for if they did not do so, the king would inquire into the reason of their non-attendance. Such Durbars were the centres of culture in every country and not merely in ours. In the present day, the western parts of India, especially Rajputana, are much better off in this respect than Bengal, as something similar to these old Durbars still obtains there."

Q.--Then, Maharaj, have our people lost their own good manners because we have no kings of our own?

Swamiji: It is all a degeneration which has its root in selfishness. That in boarding a steamer one follows the vulgar maxim, "Uncle, save thy own precious skin", and in music and moments of recreation everyone tries to make a display of himself, is a typical picture of our mental state. Only a little training in self-sacrifice would take it away. It is the fault of the parents who do not teach their children good manners. Self-sacrifice, indeed, is the basis of all civilisation.

On the other hand, owing to the undue domination exercised by the parents, our boys do not get free scope for growth. The parents consider singing as improper. But the son, when he hears a fine piece of music, at once sets his whole mind on how to learn it, and naturally he must look out for an Adda.¹⁸⁸ Then again, "It is a sin to smoke!" So what else can the young man do than mix with the servants of the house, to indulge in this habit in secret? In everyone there are infinite tendencies, which require proper scope for satisfaction. But in our country that is not allowed; and to bring about a different order of things would require a fresh training of the parents. Such is the condition! What a pity! We have not yet developed a high grade of civilisation; and in spite of this, our educated Babus want the British to hand over the government to them to manage! It makes me laugh and cry as well. Well, where is that martial spirit which, at the very outset, requires one to know how to serve and obey and to practise self-restraint! The martial

¹⁸⁸ ?Something like a club. The word has got a bad odour about it in Bengali.

1 spirit is not self-assertion but self-sacrifice. One must be ready to 2 advance and lay down one's life at the word of command, before he 3 can command the hearts and lives of others. One must sacrifice 4 himself first.

5 A devotee of Shri Ramakrishna once passed some severe 6 remarks, in a book written by him, against those who did not 7 believe in Shri Ramakrishna as an Incarnation of God. Swamiji 8 summoned the writer to his presence and addressed him thus in a 9 spirited manner:

10 What right had you to write like that, abusing others? What 11 matters it if they do not believe in your Lord? Have we created a 12 sect? Are we Ramakrishnites, that we should look upon anyone who 13 will not worship him, as our enemy? By your bigotry you have only 14 lowered him, and made him small. If your Lord is God Himself, then 15 you ought to know that in whatsoever name one is calling upon him, 16 it is his worship only--and who are you to abuse others? Do you 17 think they will hear you if you inveigh against them? How foolish!
18 You can only win others' hearts when you have sacrificed yourself to 19 them, otherwise why should they hear you?

20 Regaining his natural composure after a short while, Swamiji 21 spoke in a sorrowful tone:

22 Can anyone, my dear friend, have faith or resignation in the 23 Lord, unless he himself is a hero? Never can hatred and malice 24 vanish from one's heart unless one becomes a hero, and unless one 25 is free from these, how can one become truly civilised? Where in 26 this country is that sturdy manliness, that spirit of heroism? Alas, 27 nowhere. Often have I looked for that, and I found only one instance 28 of it, and only one.

29 Q.--In whom have you found it, Swamiji?

30 Swamiji: In G. C.¹⁸⁹ alone I have seen that true resignation-- 31 that true spirit of a servant of the Lord. And was it not because he 32 was ever ready to sacrifice himself that Shri Ramakrishna took 33 upon himself all his responsibility? What a unique spirit of 34 resignation to the Lord! I have not met his parallel. From him have I 35 learnt the lesson of self-surrender.

36 So saying, Swamiji raised his folded hands to his head out of 37 respect to him.

40 [Shri Priya Nath Sinha]

189 ?Babu Girish Chandra Ghosh.

1 Arrangements were being made for Swamiji's leaving India
2 for America for the second time (1899 A.D.). He had gone to 3 Calcutta to see one of his friends, and returning from there stopped 4 for a few minutes at Balaram Babu's house at Baghbazar. He then 5 sent for another friend to accompany him to the Math. The friend 6 came, and the following conversation took place between him and 7 Swamiji:

8 Swamiji: A very funny thing happened today. I went to a 9 friend's house. He has had a picture painted, the subject of which is 10 "Shri Krishna addressing Arjuna on the battlefield of Kurukshetra".
11 Shri Krishna stands on the chariot, holding the reins in His hand 12 and preaching the Gita to Arjuna. He showed me the picture and 13 asked me how I liked it. "Fairly well", I said. But as he insisted on 14 having my criticism on it, I had to give my honest opinion by saying, 15 "There is nothing in it to commend itself to me; first, because the 16 chariot of the time of Shri Krishna was not like the modern pagoda-17 shaped car, and also, there is no expression in the figure of Shri 18 Krishna."

19 Q.--Was not the pagoda-chariot in use then?

20 Swamiji: Don't you know that since the Buddhistic era, there 21 has been a great confusion in everything in our country? The kings 22 never used to fight in pagoda-chariots. There are chariots even 23 today in Rajputana that greatly resemble the chariots of old. Have 24 you seen the chariots in the pictures of Grecian mythology? They 25 have two wheels, and one mounts them from behind; we had that 26 sort of chariot. What good is it to paint a picture if the details are 27 wrong? An historical picture comes up to a standard of excellence 28 when after making proper study and research, things are portrayed 29 exactly as they were at that period. The truth must be represented, 30 otherwise the picture is nothing. In these days, our young men who 31 go in for painting are generally those who were unsuccessful at 32 school, and who have been given up at home as good-for-nothing; 33 what work of art can you expect from them? To paint a really good 34 picture requires as much talent as to produce a perfect drama.

35 Q.--How then should Shri Krishna be represented in the 36 picture in question?

37 Swamiji: Shri Krishna ought to be painted as He really was, 38 the Gita personified; and the central idea of the Gita should radiate 39 from His whole form as He was teaching the path of Dharma to 40 Arjuna, who had been overcome by infatuation and cowardice.

41 So saying Swamiji posed himself in the way in which Shri 42 Krishna should be portrayed, and continued: "Look here, thus does 43 he hold the bridle of the horses--so tight that they are brought to 44 their haunches, with their forelegs fighting the air, and their mouths 45 gaping. This will show a tremendous play of action in the figure of 46 Shri Krishna. His friend, the world-renowned hero, casting aside his 47 bow and arrows, has sunk down like a coward on the chariot, in the 48 midst of the two armies. And Shri Krishna, whip in one hand and 49 tightening the reins with the other, has turned Himself towards 50 Arjuna, with his childlike face beaming with unworldly love and 51 sympathy, and a calm and serene look--and is delivering the

1 message of the Gita to his beloved comrade. Now, tell me what idea
2 this picture of the Preacher of the Gita conveys to you."

3 The friend: Activity combined with firmness and serenity.

4 Swamiji: Ay, that's it! Intense action in the whole body, and 5 withal a face expressing the profound calmness and serenity of the 6 blue sky. This is the central idea of the Gita--to be calm and 7 steadfast in all circumstances, with one's body, mind, and soul
8 centred at His hallowed Feet!

9 {Sanskrit} (Gita IV.18)

10 He who even while doing action can keep his mind calm, and 11 in whom, even when not doing any outward action, flows the 12 current of activity in the form of the contemplation of Brahman, is 13 the intelligent one among men, he indeed is the Yogi, he indeed is 14 the perfect worker.

15 At this moment, the man who had been sent to arrange a 16 boat returned and said that it was ready; so Swamiji told his friend, 17 "Now let us go to the Math. You must have left word at home that 18 you were going there with me?"

19 They continued their talk as they walked to the boat.

20 Swamiji: This idea must be preached to everyone--work, 21 work, endless work--without looking at results, and always keeping 22 the whole mind and soul steadfast at the lotus feet of the Lord!

23 Q.--But is this not Karma-Yoga?

24 Swamiji: Yes, this is Karma-Yoga; but without spiritual 25 practices you will never be able to do this Karma-Yoga. You must 26 harmonise the four different Yogas; otherwise how can you always 27 keep your mind and heart wholly on the Lord?

28 Q.--It is generally said that work according to the Gita means 29 the performance of Vedic sacrifices and religious exercises; any 30 other kind of work is futile.

31 Swamiji: All right; but you must make it more 32 comprehensive. Who is responsible for every action you do, every 33 breath you take, and every thought you think? Isn't it you yourself?

34 The friend: Yes and no. I cannot solve this clearly. The truth 35 about it is that man is the instrument and the Lord is the agent. So 36 when I am directed by His will, I am not at all responsible for my 37 actions.

38 Swamiji: Well, that can be said only in the highest state of 39 realisation. When the mind will be purified by work and you will see 40 that it is He who is causing all to work, then only you will have a 41 right to speak like that. Otherwise it is all bosh, a mere cant.

42 Q.--Why so, if one is truly convinced by reasoning that the 43 Lord alone is causing all actions to be done?

44 Swamiji: It may hold good when one has been so convinced.
45 But it only lasts for that moment, and not a whit afterwards. Well, 46 consider this thoroughly, whether all that you do in your everyday 47 life, you are not doing with an egoistic idea that you yourself are

1 the agent.

2 How long do you remember that it is the Lord who is making
3 you work? But then, by repeatedly analysing like that, you will come 4 to a state when the ego will vanish and in its place the Lord will 5 come in. Then you will be able to say with justice "Thou, Lord, art 6 guarding all my actions from within." But, my friend, if the ego 7 occupies all the space within your heart, where forsooth will there 8 be room enough for the Lord to come in? The Lord is verily absent!

9 Q.--But it is He who is giving me the wicked impulse?

10 Swamiji: No, by no means. It would be blaspheming the Lord 11 to think in that way. He is not inciting you to evil action, it is all the 12 creation of your desire for self-gratification. If one says the Lord is 13 causing everything to be done, and wilfully persists in wrong-doing, 14 it only brings ruin on him. That is the origin of self-deception. Don't 15 you feel an elation after you have done a good deed? You then give 16 yourself the credit of doing something good--you can't help it, it is 17 very human. But how absurd to take the credit of doing the good 18 act on oneself and lay the blame for the evil act on the Lord! It is a 19 most dangerous idea--the effect of ill-digested Gita and Vedanta.
20 Never hold that view. Rather say that He is causing the good work 21 to be done while you are responsible for the evil action. That will 22 bring on devotion and faith, and you will see His grace manifested 23 at every step. The truth about it is that no one has created you--you 24 have created yourself. This is discrimination, this is Vedanta. But 25 one does not understand it before realisation. Therefore the 26 aspirant should begin with the dualistic standpoint, that the Lord is 27 causing the good actions, while he is doing the evil. This is the 28 easiest way to the purification of the mind. Hence you find dualism 29 so strong among the Vaishnavas. It is very difficult to entertain 30 Advaitic (non-dualistic) ideas at the outset. But the dualistic 31 standpoint gradually leads to the realisation of the Advaita.

32 Hypocrisy is always a dangerous thing. If there is no wilful 33 self-deception, that is to say, if one sincerely believes that the most 34 wicked impulse is also prompted by the Lord, rest assured that one 35 will not have to do those mean acts for long. All the impurities of 36 the mind are quickly destroyed. Our ancient scriptural writers 37 understood this well. And I think that the Tantrika form of worship 38 originated from the time that Buddhism began to decline and, 39 through the oppression of the Buddhists, people began to perform 40 their Vedic sacrifices in secret. They had no more opportunity to 41 conduct them for two months at a stretch, so they made clay 42 images, worshipped them, and consigned them to the water-- 43 finishing everything in one night, without leaving the least trace!
44 Man longs for a concrete symbol, otherwise his heart is not 45 satisfied. So in every home that one-night sacrifice began to take 46 place. As Shri Ramakrishna used to say, "Some enter the house by 47 the scavenger's entrance", so the spiritual teachers of that time saw 48 that those who could not perform any religious rite owing to their 49 evil propensities, also needed some way of coming round by 50 degrees to the path of virtue. For them those queer Tantrika rites 51 came to be invented.

1 Q.--They went on doing evil actions thinking them to be good.
2 So how could this remove their evil tendencies?

3 Swamiji: Why, they gave a different direction to their 4 propensities; they did them, but with the object of realising the 5 Lord.

6 Q.--Can this really be done?

7 Swamiji: It comes to the same thing. The motive must be 8 right. And what should prevent them from succeeding?

9 Q.--But many are caught in the temptation for wine, meat, 10 etc. in trying to get along with such means.

11 Swamiji: It was therefore that Shri Ramakrishna came. The 12 days of practising the Tantra in that fashion are gone. He, too, 13 practised the Tantra, but not in that way. Where there is the 14 injunction of drinking wine, he would simply touch his forehead 15 with a drop of it. The Tantrika form of worship is a very slippery 16 ground. Hence I say that this province has had enough of the 17 Tantra. Now it must go beyond. The Vedas should be studied. A 18 harmony of the four kinds of Yogas must be practised and absolute 19 chastity must be preserved.

20 Q.--What do you mean by the harmony of the four Yogas?

21 Swamiji: Discrimination between the real and the unreal, 22 dispassion and devotion, work and practices in concentration, and 23 along with these there must be a reverential attitude towards 24 women.

25 Q.--How can one look with reverence on women?

26 Swamiji: Well, they are the representatives of the Divine 27 Mother. And real well-being of India will commence from the day 28 that the worship of the Divine Mother will truly begin, and every 29 man will sacrifice himself at the altar of the Mother. . . .

30 Q.--Swamiji, in your boyhood, when we asked you to marry, 31 you would reply, "I won't, but you will see what I shall become." You 32 have actually verified your words.

33 Swamiji: Yes, dear brother, you saw how I was in want of 34 food, and had to work hard besides. Oh, the tremendous labour!
35 Today the Americans out of love have given me this nice bed, and I 36 have something to eat also. But, also, I have not been destined to 37 enjoy physically--and lying on the mattress only aggravates my 38 illness. I feel suffocated, as it were. I have to come down and lie on 39 the floor for relief!

43 VENGEANCE OF HISTORY

44 (Mrs. Wright)

45 [At the end of August 1893, Swami Vivekananda stayed at 46 Annisquam at the house of Prof. J. H. Wright. So astonishing a sight

1 did Swamiji present in this quiet little New England village that 2 speculations set in at once as to who this majestic and colourful 3 figure might be. From where had he come? At first they decided 4 that he was a Brahmin from India, but his manners did not fully 5 conform to their ideas.] It was something that needed explanation 6 and they unanimously repaired to the cottage after supper, to hear 7 this strange new discourse. . . .

8 "It was the other day," he said, in his musical voice, "only just 9 the other day--not more than four hundred years ago." And then 10 followed tales of cruelty and oppression, of a patient race and a 11 suffering people, and of a judgment to come! "Ah, the English!" he 12 said. "Only just a little while ago they were savages, the vermin 13 crawled on the ladies' bodies, . . . and they scented themselves to 14 disguise the abominable odour of their persons. . . . Most hor-r-ible!
15 Even now they are barely emerging from barbarism."

16 "Nonsense," said one of his scandalised hearers, "that was at 17 least five hundred years ago."

18 "And did I not say 'a little while ago'? What are a few 19 hundred years when you look at the antiquity of the human soul?" 20 Then with a turn of tone, quite reasonable and gentle, "They are 21 quite savage", he said. "The frightful cold, the want and privation of 22 their northern climate", going on more quickly and warmly, "has 23 made them wild . They only think to kill. . . . Where is their religion?
24 They take the name of that Holy One, they claim to love their 25 fellowmen, they civilise--by Christianity!--No! It is their hunger that 26 has civilised them, not their God. The love of man is on their lips, in 27 their hearts there is nothing but evil and every violence. 'I love you 28 my brother, I love you!' . . . and all the while they cut his throat!
29 Their hands are red with blood." . . . Then, going on more slowly, 30 his beautiful voice deepening till it sounded like a bell, "But the 31 judgment of God will fall upon them. 'Vengeance is mine; I will 32 repay, saith the Lord', and destruction is coming. What are your 33 Christians? Not one third of the world. Look at those Chinese, 34 millions of them. They are the vengeance of God that will light upon 35 you. There will be another invasion of the Huns", adding, with a 36 little chuckle, "they will sweep over Europe, they will not leave one 37 stone standing upon another. Men, women, children, all will go and 38 the dark ages will come again." His voice was indescribably sad and 39 pitiful; then suddenly and flippantly, dropping the seer, "Me--I don't 40 care! The world will rise up better from it, but it is coming. The 41 vengeance of God, it is coming soon."

42 "Soon?" they all asked.

43 "It will not be a thousand years before it is done."

44 They drew a breath of relief. It did not seem imminent.

45 "And God will have vengeance", he went on. "You may not 46 see it in religion, you may not see it in politics, but you must see it 47 in history, and as it has been; it will come to pass. If you grind down 48 the people, you will suffer. We in India are suffering the vengeance 49 of God. Look upon these things. They ground down those poor 50 people for their own wealth, they heard not the voice of distress,

1 they ate from gold and silver when the people cried for bread, and 2 the Mohammedans came upon them slaughtering and killing:
3 slaughtering and killing they overran them. India has been 4 conquered again and again for years, and last and worst of all came 5 the Englishman. You look about India, what has the Hindu left?
6 Wonderful temples, everywhere. What has the Mohammedan left?
7 Beautiful palaces. What has the Englishman left? Nothing but 8 mounds of broken brandy bottles! And God has had no mercy upon 9 my people because they had no mercy. By their cruelty they 10 degraded the populace; and when they needed them, the common 11 people had no strength to give for their aid. If man cannot believe 12 in the Vengeance of God, he certainly cannot deny the Vengeance of 13 History. And it will come upon the English; they have their heels on 14 our necks, they have sucked the last drop of our blood for their own 15 pleasures, they have carried away with them millions of our money, 16 while our people have starved by villages and provinces. And now 17 the Chinaman is the vengeance that will fall upon them; if the 18 Chinese rose today and swept the English into the sea, as they well 19 deserve, it would be no more than justice."

20 And then, having said his say, the Swami was silent. A babble 21 of thin-voiced chatter rose about him, to which he listened, 22 apparently unheeding. Occasionally he cast his eye up to the roof 23 and repeated softly, "Shiva! Shiva!" and the little company, shaken 24 and disturbed by the current of powerful feelings and vindictive 25 passion which seemed to be flowing like molten lava beneath the 26 silent surface of this strange being, broke up, perturbed.

27 He stayed days [actually it was only a long weekend]. . . . All 28 through, his discourses abounded in picturesque illustrations and 29 beautiful legends. . . .

30 One beautiful story he told was of a man whose wife 31 reproached him with his troubles, reviled him because of the 32 success of others, and recounted to him all his failures. "Is this 33 what your God has done for you", she said to him, "after you have 34 served Him so many years?" Then the man answered, "Am I a 35 trader in religion? Look at the mountain. What does it do for me, or 36 what have I done for it? And yet I love it because I am so made that 37 I love the beautiful. Thus I love God." . . . There was another story 38 he told of a king who offered a gift to a Rishi. The Rishi refused, but 39 the king insisted and begged that he would come with him. When 40 they came to the palace, he heard the king praying, and the king 41 begged for wealth, for power, for length of days from God. The 42 Rishi listened, wondering, until at last he picked up his mat and 43 started away. Then the king opened his eyes from his prayers and 44 saw him. "Why are you going?" he said. "You have not asked for 45 your gift." "I", said the Rishi, "ask from a beggar?"

46 When someone suggested to him that Christianity was a 47 saving power, he opened his great dark eyes upon him and said, "If 48 Christianity is a saving power in itself, why has it not saved the 49 Ethiopians, the Abyssinians?"

50 Often on Swamiji's lips was the phrase, "They would not dare 51 to do this to a monk." . . . At times he even expressed a great

1 longing that the English government would take him and shoot him.
2 "It would be the first nail in their coffin", he would say, with a little 3 gleam of his white teeth. "and my death would run through the land 4 like wild fire."

5 His great heroine was the dreadful [?] Ranee of the Indian 6 mutiny, who led her troops in person. Most of the old mutineers, he 7 said, had become monks in order to hide themselves, and this 8 accounted very well for the dangerous quality of the monks' 9 opinions. There was one man of them who had lost four sons and 10 could speak of them with composure, but whenever he mentioned 11 the Ranee, he would weep, with tears streaming down his face.
12 "That woman was a goddess", he said, "a devi. When overcome, 13 she fell on her sword and died like a man." It was strange to hear 14 the other side of the Indian mutiny, when you would never believe 15 that there was another side to it, and to be assured that a Hindu 16 could not possibly kill a woman. . . .

19 RELIGION, CIVILISATION, AND MIRACLES

20 (The Appeal-Avalanche)

21 "I am a monk," he said, as he sat in the parlors of La Salette 22 Academy,¹⁹⁰ which is his home while in Memphis, "and not a priest.
23 When at home I travel from place to place, teaching the people of 24 the villages and towns through which I pass. I am dependent upon 25 them for my sustenance, as I am not allowed to touch money."

26 "I was born," he continued, in answer to a question, "in 27 Bengal and become a monk and a celibate from choice. At my birth 28 my father had a horoscope taken of my life, but would never tell me 29 what it was. Some years ago when I visited my home, my father 30 having died, I came across the chart among some papers in my 31 mother's possession and saw from it that I was destined to become 32 a wanderer on the face of the earth."

33 There was a touch of pathos in the speaker's voice and a 34 murmur of sympathy ran around the group of listeners. Kananda¹⁹¹ 35 knocked the ashes from his cigar and was silent for a space.

36 Presently some one asked:

37 "If your religion is all that you claim it is, if it is the only true 38 faith, how is it that your people are not more advanced in 39 civilisation than we are? Why has it not elevated them among the 40 nations of the world?"

41 "Because that is not the sphere of any religion," replied the 42 Hindu gravely. "My people are the most moral in the world, or quite 43 as much as any other race. They are more considerate of their 44 fellow man's rights, and even those of dumb animals, but they are

1 not materialists. No religion has ever advanced the thought or 2 inspiration of a nation or people. In fact, no great achievement has 3 ever been attained in the history of the world that religion has not 4 retarded. Your boasted Christianity has not proven an exception in 5 this respect. Your Darwins, your Mills, your Humes, have never 6 received the endorsement of your prelates. Why, then, criticise my 7 religion on this account?"

8 "I would not give a fig for a faith that does not tend to elevate 9 mankind's lot on earth as well as his spiritual condition," said one of 10 the group, 'and therein I am not prepared to admit the correctness 11 of your statements. Christianity has founded colleges, hospitals and 12 raised the degenerate. It has elevated the downcast and helped its 13 followers to live."

14 "You are right there to a certain extent," replied the monk 15 calmly, "and yet it is not shown that these things are directly the 16 result of your Christianity. There are many causes operating in the 17 West to produce these results.

18 "Religious thought should be directed to developing man's 19 spiritual side. Science, art, learning and metaphysical research all 20 have their proper functions in life, but if you seek to blend them, 21 you destroy their individual characteristics until, in time, you 22 eliminate the spiritual, for instance, from the religious altogether.
23 You Americans worship what? The dollar. In the mad rush for gold, 24 you forget the spiritual until you have become a nation of 25 materialists. Even your preachers and churches are tainted with the 26 all-pervading desire. Show me one in the history of your people, 27 who has led the spiritual lives that those whom I can name at home
28 have done. Where are those who, when death comes, could say, 'O 29 Brother Death, I welcome thee.' Your religion helps you to build 30 Ferris wheels and Eiffel towers, but does it aid you in the 31 development of your inner lives?"

32 The monk spoke earnestly, and his voice, rich and well 33 modulated, came through the dusk that pervaded the apartment, 34 half-sadly, half-accusingly. There was something of the weird in the 35 comments of this stranger from a land whose history dates back 36 6,000 years upon the civilisation of the Nineteenth Century 37 America.

38 "But, in pursuing the spiritual, you lost sight of the demands 39 of the present," said some one. "Your doctrine does not help men to 40 live."

41 "It helps them to die," was the answer.

42 "We are sure of the present."

43 "You are sure of nothing."

44 "The aim of the ideal religion should be to help one to live 45 and to prepare one to die at the same time."

46 "Exactly," said the Hindu, quickly, "and it is that which we are 47 seeking to attain. I believe that the Hindu faith has developed the 48 spiritual in its devotees at the expense of the material, and I think 49 that in the Western world the contrary is true. By uniting the

1 materialism of the West with the spiritualism of the East I believe 2 much can be accomplished. It may be that in the attempt the Hindu 3 faith will lose much of its individuality."

4 "Would not the entire social system of India have to be 5 revolutionised to do what you hope to do?"

6 "Yet, probably, still the religion would remain unimpaired."

7 The conversation here turned upon the form of worship of 8 the Hindus, and Kananda gave some interesting information on this 9 subject. There are agnostics and atheists in India as well as 10 elsewhere. "Realisation" is the one thing essential in the lives of the 11 followers of Brahma. Faith is not necessary. Theosophy is a subject 12 with which Kananda is not versed, nor is it a part of his creed
13 unless he chooses to make it so. It is more of a separate study.
14 Kananda never met Mme. Blavatsky, but has met Col. Olcott of the 15 American Theosophical Society. He is also acquainted with Annie 16 Besant. Speaking of the "fakirs" of India, the famous jugglers or 17 musicians [magicians?], whose feats have made for them a world-18 wide reputation, Kananda told of a few episodes that had come 19 within his observation and which almost surpass belief.

20 "Five months ago," he said, when questioned on this subject, 21 "or just one month before I left India to come to this country, I 22 happened in company in a caravan or party of 25 to sojourn for a 23 space in a city in the interior. While there we learned of the 24 marvellous work of one of these itinerant magicians and had him
25 brought before us. He told us he would produce for us any article 26 we desired. We stripped him, at his request, until he was quite 27 naked and placed him in the corner of the room. I threw my 28 travelling blanket about him and then we called upon him to do as 29 he had promised. He asked what we should like, and I asked for a 30 bunch of California [?] grapes, and straightway the fellow brought 31 them forth from under his blanket. Oranges and other fruits were 32 produced, and finally great dishes of steaming rice."

33 Continuing, the monk said he believed in the existence of a 34 "sixth sense" and in telepathy. He offered no explanation of the 35 feats of the fakirs, merely saying that they were very wonderful.
36 The subject of idols came up and the monk said that idols formed a 37 part of his religion insomuch as the symbol is concerned.

38 "What do you worship?" said the monk, "What is your idea of 39 God?"

40 "The spirit," said a lady quietly.

41 "What is the spirit? Do you Protestants worship the words of 42 the Bible or something beyond? We worship the God through the 43 idol."

44 "That is, you attain the subjective through the objective," 45 said a gentleman who had listened attentively to the words of the 46 stranger.

47 "Yes, that is it," said the monk, gratefully.

48 Vive Kananda discussed further in the same strain until the 49 call terminated as the hour for the Hindu's lecture approached.

RELIGIOUS HARMONY

(The Detroit Free Press, February 14, 1894)

Swami is a person of medium stature, with the dusky complexion common with people of his nationality, gentle in manner, deliberate in movement, and extremely courteous in every word, movement, and gesture. But the most striking feature of his personality are his eyes, which are of great brilliancy. The conversation naturally drifted upon the subject of religion, when Swami said among many other striking remarks:

"I make the distinction between religion and creed. Religion is the acceptance of all existing creeds, seeing in them the same striving towards the same destination. Creed is something antagonistic and combative. There are different creeds, because there are different people, and the creed is adapted to the commonwealth where it furnishes what people want. As the world is made up of infinite variety of persons of different natures, intellectually, spiritually, and materially, so these people take to themselves that form of belief in the existence of a great and good moral law, which is best fitted for them. Religion recognizes and is glad of the existence of all these forms because of the beautiful underlying principle.

The same goal is reached by different routes and my way would not be suited perhaps to the temperament of my Western neighbour, the same that his route would not commend itself to my disposition and philosophical way of thinking. I belong to the Hindu religion. That is not the Buddhists' creed, one of the sects of the Hindu religion. We never indulge in missionary work. We do not seek to thrust the principles of our religion upon anyone. The fundamental principles of our religion forbid that. Nor do we say anything against any missionaries whom you send from this country anywhere. For all of us they are entirely welcome to penetrate the innermost recesses of the earth. Many come to us, but we do not struggle for them; we have no missionaries striving to bring anyone to our way of thinking. With no effort from us many forms of the Hindu religion are spreading far and wide, and these manifestations have taken the form of Christian science, theosophy, and Edwin Arnold's Light of Asia. Our religion is older than most religions and the Christian creed--I do not call it religion, because of its antagonistic features--came directly from the Hindu religion. It is one of the great offshoots. The Catholic religion also takes all its forms from us--the confessional, the belief in saints and so on--and a Catholic priest who saw this absolute similarity and recognised the truth of the origin of the Catholic religion was dethroned from his position because he dared to publish a volume explaining all that he observed and was convinced of."

"You recognise agnostics in your religion?" was asked.

"Oh, yes; philosophical agnostics and what you call infidels. When Buddha, who is with us a saint, was asked by one of his

1 followers: 'Does God exist?' He replied: 'God. When have I spoken 2 to you about God? This I tell you, be good and do good.' The 3 philosophical agnostics--there are many of us--believe in the great 4 moral law underlying everything in nature and in the ultimate 5 perfection. All the creeds which are accepted by all people are but 6 the endeavours of humanity to realise that infinity of Self which lies 7 in the great future."

8 "Is it beneath the dignity of your religion to resort to 9 missionary effort?"

10 For reply the visitor from the Orient turned to a little volume 11 and referred to an edict among other remarkable edicts.

12 "This," he said, "was written 200 B.C., and will be the best 13 answer I can give you on that question."

14 In delightfully clear, well modulated tones, he read:

15 "The King Piyadasi, beloved of the gods, honours all sects, 16 both ascetics and householders; he propitiates them by alms and 17 other gifts, but he attaches less importance to gifts and honours
18 than to endeavour to promote the essential moral virtues. It is true 19 the prevalence of essential virtues differs in different sects, but 20 there is a common basis. That is, gentleness, moderation in 21 language and morality. Thus one should not exalt one's own sect 22 and decry others, but tender them on every occasion the honour
23 they deserve. Striving thus, one promotes the welfare of his own 24 sect, while serving the others. Striving otherwise, one does not 25 serve his own sect, while disserving others; and whosoever, from 26 attachment to his own sect and with a view to promoting it, decries 27 others, only deals rude blows to his own sect. Hence concord alone 28 is meritorious, so that all bear and love to bear the beliefs of each 29 other. It is with this purpose that this edict has been inscribed; that 30 all people, whatever their fate may be, should be encouraged to 31 promote the essential moral doctrines in each and mutual respects 32 for all other sects. It is with this object that the ministers of 33 religion, the inspectors and other bodies of officers should all 34 work."

35 After reading this impressive passage Swami Vive Kananda 36 remarked that the same wise king who had caused this edict to be 37 inscribed had forbidden the indulgence of war, as its horrors were 38 antagonistic to all the principles of the great and universal moral 39 doctrine. "For this reason," remarked the visitor, "India has suffered 40 in its material aspect. Where brute strength and bloodshed has 41 advanced other nations, India has deprecated such brutal 42 manifestations; and by the law of the survival of the fittest, which 43 applies to nations as well as to individuals, it has fallen behind as a 44 power on the earth in the material sense."

45 "But will it not be an impossibility to find in the great 46 combative Western countries, where such tremendous energy is 47 needed to develop the pressing practical necessities of the 48 nineteenth century, this spirit which prevails in placid India?"

49 The brilliant eyes flashed, and a smile crossed the features of 50 the Eastern brother.

1 "May not one combine the energy of the lion with the 2 gentleness of the lamb?" he asked.

3 Continuing, he intimated that perhaps the future holds the 4 conjunction of the East and the West, a combination which would be 5 productive of marvellous results. A condition which speaks well for 6 the natures of the Western nation is the reverence in which women 7 are held and the gentle consideration with which they are treated.

8 He says with the dying Buddha, "Work out your own 9 salvation. I cannot help you. No man can help you. Help yourself."
10 Harmony and peace, and not dissension, is his watchword.

11 The following story is one which he related recently 12 regarding the practice of fault-finding among creeds:

13 "A frog lived in a well. It had lived there for a long time. It 14 was born there and brought up there, and yet was a little, small 15 frog. Of course the evolutionists were not there to tell us whether 16 the frog lost its eyes or not, but, for our story's sake, we must take 17 it for granted that it had eyes, and that it every day cleansed the 18 waters of all the worms and bacilli that lived in it, with an energy 19 that would give credit to our modern bacteriologists. In this way it 20 went on and became a little sleek and fat--perhaps as much so as 21 myself. Well, one day another frog that lived in the sea, came and 22 fell into the well.

23 "'Whence are you from?'

24 "'I am from the sea.'

25 "'The sea? How big is that? Is it as big as my well?' and he 26 took a leap from one side of the well to the other.

27 "'My friend,' says the frog of the sea, 'how do you compare 28 the sea with your little well?'

29 "'Then the frog took another leap and asked; 'Is your sea so 30 big?'

31 "'What nonsense you speak to compare the sea with your 32 well.'

33 "'Well, then,' said the frog of the well, 'nothing can be bigger 34 than my well; there can be nothing bigger than this; this fellow is a 35 liar, so turn him out.'

36 "That has been the difficulty all the while.

37 "I am a Hindu. I am sitting in my own little well, and thinking 38 that the world is my well. The Christian sits in his little well and the 39 whole world is his well. The Mohammedan sits in his well and 40 thinks the whole world that. I have to thank you of America for the 41 great attempt you are making to break down the barriers of this 42 little world of ours, and hope that, in the future, the Lord will help 43 you to accomplish that purpose."

FALLEN WOMEN

(The Detroit Tribune, March 17, 1894)

"Lalun is a member of the most ancient profession in the world. Lilith was her very great-grandmamma, and that was before the days of Eve, as everyone knows. In the West people say rude things about Lalun's profession and write lectures about it, and distribute the lectures to young persons in order that morality may be preserved. In the East, where the profession is hereditary, descending from mother to daughter, nobody writes lectures or takes any notice."--RUDYARD KIPLING.

The story of which the sentences that precede this one are a paragraph, was written in India. They were written by Rudyard Kipling, from whom most of us have learned all that we definitely know about India, with the exception of the fact that India raises wheat enough to be a great competitor of our own farmers, that men work there for two cents a day and that women throw their babies into the Ganga, which is the sacred river of the country.

But Vive Kananda, since he came to this country, has exploded the story about the women of India feeding their babies to the alligators, and now he says that he never heard of Rudyard Kipling until he came to America, and that it is not proper in India to talk of such a profession as that of Lalun, out of which Mr. Kipling has made one of his most delightful and instructive tales.

"In India," said Kananda yesterday, "we do not discuss such things. No one ever speaks of those unfortunate women. When a woman is discovered to be unchaste in India, she is hurled out from her caste. No one thereafter can touch or speak to her. If she went into the house, they would take up and clean the carpets and wash the walls she breathed against. No one can have anything to do with such a person. There are no women who are not virtuous in Indian society. It is not at all as it is in this country. Here there are bad women living side by side with virtuous women in your society. One cannot know who is bad and who is good in America. But in India once a woman slips, she is an outcast for ever--she and her children, sons and daughters. It is terrible, I admit, but it keeps society pure."

"How about the men?" was asked. "Does the same rule hold in regard to them? Are they outcast when they are proven to be unchaste?"

"Oh, no. It is quite different with them. It would be so, perhaps, if they could be found out. But the men move about. They can go from place to place. It is not possible to discover them. The women are shut up in the house. They are certainly discovered if they do anything wrong. And when they are discovered, they are thrown out. Nothing can save them. Sometimes it is very hard when a father has to give up his daughter or a husband his wife. But if they do not give them up, they will be banished with them too. It is very different in this country. Women cannot go about there and make associations as they do here. It is very terrible, but it makes society pure."

1 "I think that unchastity is the one great sin of your country. It
2 must be so, there is so much luxury here. A poor girl would sell 3 herself for a new bonnet. It must be so where there is so much 4 luxury."

5 Mr. Kipling says this about Lalun and her profession:

6 "Lalun's real husband, for even ladies of Lalun's profession
7 have husbands in the East, was a great, big jujube tree. Her mama, 8 who had married a fig, spent ten thousand rupees on Lalun's 9 wedding, which was blessed by forty-seven clergymen of mama's 10 church, and distributed 5,000 rupees in charity to the poor. And 11 that was a custom of the land."

12 In India when a woman is unfaithful to her husband she loses 13 her caste, but none of her civil or religious rights. She can still own 14 property and the temples are still open to her.

15 "Yes," said Kananda, "a bad woman is not allowed to marry.
16 She cannot marry any one without their being an outcast like 17 herself, so she marries a tree, or sometimes a sword. It is the 18 custom. Sometimes these women grow very rich and become very 19 charitable, but they can never regain their caste. In the interior 20 towns, where they still adhere to the old customs, she cannot ride 21 in a carriage, no matter how wealthy she may be; the best that she 22 is allowed is a pair of bullocks. And then in India she has to wear a 23 dress of her own, so that she can be distinguished. You can see 24 these people going by, but no one ever speaks to them. The greatest 25 number of these women is in the cities. A good many of them are 26 Jews too, but they all have different quarters of the cities, you know.
27 They all live apart. It is a singular thing that, bad as they are, 28 wretched as some of these women are, they will not admit a 29 Christian lover. They will not eat with them or touch them--the 30 'omnivorous barbarians', as they call them. They call them that 31 because they eat everything. Do you know what that disease, the 32 unspeakable disease, is called in India? It is called 'Bad Faringan', 33 which means 'the Christian disease'. It was the Christian that 34 brought it into India.

35 "Has there been any attempt in India to solve this question?
36 Is it a public question the way it is in America?"

37 "No, there has been very little done in India. There is a great 38 field for women missionaries if they would convert prostitutes in 39 India. They do nothing in India--very little. There is one sect, the 40 Veshnava [Vaishnava], who try to reclaim these women. This is a 41 religious sect. I think about 90 per cent [?] of all prostitutes belong 42 to this sect. This sect does not believe in caste and they go 43 everywhere without reference to caste. There are certain temples, 44 as the temple of Jagatnot [Jagannath], where there is no caste.
45 Everybody who goes into that town takes off his caste while he is 46 there, because that is holy ground and everything is supposed to be 47 pure there. When he goes outside, he resumes it again, for caste is 48 a mere worldly thing. You know some of the castes are so particular 49 that they will not eat any food unless it is prepared by themselves.
50 They will not touch any one outside their caste. But in the city they 51 all live together. This is the only sect in India that makes proselytes.

1 It makes everybody a member of its church. It goes into the 2 Himalayas and converts the wild men. You perhaps did not know 3 that there were wild men in India. Yes, there are. They dwell at the 4 foot of the Himalayas."

5 "Is there any ceremony by which a woman is declared 6 unchaste, a civil process?" Kananda was asked.

7 "No, it is not a civil process. It is just custom. Sometimes 8 there is a formal ceremony and sometimes there is not. They simply 9 make pariahs out of them. When any woman is suspected 10 sometimes they get together and give her a sort of trial, and if it is 11 decided that she is guilty, then a note is sent around to all the other 12 members of the caste, and she is banished.

13 "Mind you," he exclaimed, "I do not mean to say that this 14 is a solution of the question. The custom is terribly rigid. But you 15 have no solution of the question, either. It is a terrible thing. It is a 16 great wrong of the Western world."

MEMOIRS OF EUROPEAN TRAVEL

Om Namo Narayanaya,¹⁹² Swami.--Pronounce the last syllable of the second word in a high pitch, brother, in the Hrishikesh fashion. For seven days we have been on board the ship and every day I think of writing to you something about our mode of life, and of writing materials also you have given me enough, but the characteristic lethargy of a Bengali stands in the way and foils everything. In the first place, there is idleness; every day I think of writing--what do you call it--a diary, but then, on account of various preoccupations, it is postponed to the endless "tomorrow", and does not progress an inch. In the second place, I do not remember the dates etc., at all; you must do me the favour to fill these up yourselves. And, besides, if you be very generous, you may think that like the great devotee, Hanuman, it is impossible for me to remember dates and such other trivialities--owing to the presence of the Lord in the heart. But the real truth is that it is due to my foolishness and idleness. What nonsense! What comparison can there be between "the Solar Dynasty"¹⁹³--I beg your pardon--between Hanuman with his whole heart given to Shri Rama, the crown of the Solar Dynasty, and me, the lowest of the low! But then he crossed at one bound the ocean extending a hundred Yojanas, while we are crossing it confined within a wooden house, so to say, being pitched this side and that and somehow keeping ourselves on our feet with the help of posts and pillars. But there is one point of superiority on our side in that he had the blessed sight of Rakshasas and Rakshasis after reaching Lanka, whereas we are going in company with them. At dinner time that glittering of a hundred knives and the clattering of a hundred forks frightened brother T__¹⁹⁴ out of his wits. He now and then started lest his neighbour with auburn hair and grey, cat-like eyes, through inadvertence might plunge her knife into his flesh, and the more so, as he is rather sleek and fat. I say, did Hanuman have sea-sickness while crossing the sea? Do the ancient books say anything on that? You are all well-read men, proficient in the Ramayana and other scriptures, so you may settle that question. But our modern authorities are silent on that point. Perhaps he had not; but then the fact of his having entered into the jaws of somebody raises a doubt. Brother T__ is also of opinion that when the prow of the ship suddenly heaves up towards heaven as if to consult with the king of gods, and immediately after plunges to the bottom of the ocean as if ¹⁹² ?"Salutation to the Lord"; the usual form of addressing a Sannyasin. These memoirs of his second journey to the West were addressed to Swami Trigunatitananda, Editor, Udbodhan and hence this form of address.

¹⁹³ ?Swamiji here refers to Kalidasa's famous line of the Raghuvamsham : "O the difference between the majestic Solar Dynasty and my poor intellect!"

¹⁹⁴ ?Turiyananda.

1 to pierce king Vali, residing in the nether worlds--he at that time
2 feels that he is being swallowed by the terrible and wide-gaping 3 jaws of somebody.

4 I beg your pardon, you have entrusted your work to a nice
5 man! I owe you a description of the sea-voyage for seven days 6 which will be full of poetry and interest, and be written in a 7 polished, rhetorical style, but instead of that I am talking at 8 random. But the fact is, having striven all my life to eat the kernel 9 of Brahman, after throwing away the shell of Maya, how shall I now 10 get the power of appreciating nature's beauties all of a sudden? All 11 my life I have been on the move all over India, "from Varanasi to 12 Kashmir, and thence to Khorasan, and Gujarat".¹⁹⁵ How many hills 13 and rivers, mountains and springs, and valleys and dales, how many 14 cloud-belted peaks covered in perpetual snow, and oceans 15 tempestuous, roaring and foamy, have I not seen, and heard of, and 16 crossed! But sitting on a shabby wooden bedstead in a dark room of 17 the ground floor, requiring a lamp to be lighted in the day-time, with 18 the walls variegated by the stain of chewed betel leaves and made 19 noisy by the squeaking and tickling of rats and moles and lizards, by 20 the side of the main street resounding with the rattle of hackneys 21 and tram-cars and darkened by clouds of dust--in such poetic 22 environment, the pictures of the Himalayas, oceans, meadows, 23 deserts, etc., that poet Shyamacharan, puffing at the all too familiar 24 hookah, has drawn with such lifelike precision, to the glory of the 25 Bengalis--it is vain for us to try to imitate them! Shyamacharan in 26 his boyhood went for a change to the up-country, where the water is 27 so stimulating to the digestive functions that if you drink a 28 tumblerful of it even after a very heavy meal, every bit of it will be 29 digested and you will feel hungry again. Here it was that 30 Shyamacharan's intuitive genius caught a glimpse of the sublime 31 and beautiful aspects of nature. But there is one fly in the pot--they 32 say that Shyamacharan's peregrinations extended as far as 33 Burdwan (in Bengal) and no further!

34 But at your earnest request and also to prove that I am not 35 wholly devoid of the poetic instinct either, I set myself to the task 36 with God's name, and you, too, be all attention.

37 No ship generally leaves the port in the night--specially from 38 a commercial port like Calcutta and in a river like the Hooghly or 39 Ganga. Until the ship reaches the sea, it is in the charge of the 40 pilot, who acts as the Captain, and he gives the command. His duty 41 ends in either piloting the ship down to the sea or, if it be an 42 incoming ship, from the mouth of the sea to the port. We have got 43 two great dangers towards the mouth of the Hooghly--first, the 44 James and Mary Banks near Budge-Budge, and second, the 45 sandbank near the entrance to Diamond Harbour. Only in the high 46 tide and during the day, the pilot can very carefully steer his ship, 47 and in no other condition; consequently it took us two days to get 48 out of the Hooghly.

49 Do you remember the Ganga at Hrishikesh? That clear bluish water--in which one can count the fins of fishes five yards below the surface--that wonderfully sweet, ice-cold "charming water of the Ganga",¹⁹⁶ and that wonderful sound of "Hara, Hara" of the running water, and the echo of "Hara, Hara" from the neighbouring mountain-falls? Do you remember that life in the forest, the begging of Madhukari¹⁹⁷ alms, eating on small islands of rock in the bed of the Ganga, hearty drinking of that water with the palms, and the fearless wandering of fishes all round for crumbs of bread? You remember that love for Ganga water, that glory of the Ganga, the touch of its water that makes the mind dispassionate, that Ganga flowing over the Himalayas, through Srinagar, Tehri, Uttarkasi, and Gangotri--some of you have seen even the source of the Ganga! But there is a certain unforgettable fascination in our Ganga of Calcutta, muddy, and whitish--as if from contact with Shiva's body--and bearing a large number of ships on her bosom. Is it merely patriotism or the impressions of childhood?--Who knows? What wonderful relation is this between mother Ganga and the Hindus? Is it merely superstition? May be. They spend their lives with the name of Ganga on their lips, they die immersed in the waters of the Ganga, men from far off places take away Ganga water with them, keep it carefully in copper vessels, and sip drops of it on holy festive occasions. Kings and princes keep it in jars, and at considerable expense take the water from Gangotri to pour it on the head of Shiva at Rameshwaram! The Hindus visit foreign countries--Rangoon, Java, Hongkong, Madagascar, Suez, Aden, Malta--and they take with them Ganga water and the Gita.

195 ?Tulsidas.

The Gita and the sacred waters of the Ganga constitute the Hinduism of the Hindus. Last time I went to the West, I also took a little of it with me, fearing it might be needed, and whenever opportunities occurred I used to drink a few drops of it. And every time I drank, in the midst of the stream of humanity, amid that bustle of civilisation, that hurry of frenzied footsteps of millions of men and women in the West, the mind at once became calm and still, as it were. That stream of men, that intense activity of the West, that clash and competition at every step, those seats of luxury and celestial opulence--Paris, London, New York, Berlin, Rome--all would disappear and I used to hear that wonderful sound of "Hara, Hara", to see that lonely forest on the sides of the Himalayas, and feel the murmuring heavenly river coursing through the heart and brain and every artery of the body and thundering forth, "Hara, Hara, Hara!"

This time you, too, I see, have sent Mother Ganga, for Madras. But, dear brother, what a strange vessel have you put Mother in! Brother T__ is a Brahmacharin from his boyhood, and looks "like burning fire through the force of his spirituality".¹⁹⁸ Formerly as a Brahmana he used to be saluted as "Namo

¹⁹⁶ ?From Valmiki's hymn.

¹⁹⁷ ?Meaning, collected from door to door, in small bits.

¹⁹⁸ ?Kalidasa's Kumarasambhavam.

1 Brahmane", and now it is--oh, the sublimity of it!--"Namo 2 Narayanaya", as he is a Sannyasin. And it is perhaps due to that, 3 that Mother, in his custody, has left her seat in the Kamandalu of 4 Brahma, and been forced to enter a jar! Anyhow, getting up from 5 bed late at night I found that Mother evidently could not bear 6 staying in that awkward vessel and was trying to force her passage
7 out of it. I thought it most dangerous, for if Mother chose to re-8 enact here those previous scenes of her life, such as piercing the 9 Himalayas, washing away the great elephant Airavata, and pulling 10 down the hut of the sage Jahnu, then it would be a terrible affair. I 11 offered many prayers to Mother and said to her in various 12 supplicatory phrases, "Mother, do wait a little, let us reach Madras 13 tomorrow, and there you can do whatever you like. There are many 14 there more thick-skulled than elephants--most of them with huts 15 like that of Jahnu--while those half-shaven, shining heads with 16 ample hair-tufts are almost made of stone, compared to which even 17 the Himalayas would be soft as butter! You may break them as 18 much as you like; now pray wait a little." But all my supplications 19 were in vain. Mother would not listen to them. Then I hit upon a 20 plan, and said to her, "Mother, look at those turbaned servants with 21 jackets on, moving to and fro on the ship, they are Mohammedans, 22 real, beef-eating Mohammedans, and those whom you find moving 23 about sweeping and cleaning the rooms etc., are real scavengers, 24 disciples of Lal Beg; and if you do not hear me, I will call them and 25 ask them to touch you! Even if that is not sufficient to quiet you, I 26 will just send you to your father's home; you see that room there, if 27 you are shut in there, you will get back to your primitive condition 28 in the Himalayas, when all your restlessness will be silenced, and 29 you shall remain frozen into a block of ice." That silenced her. So it 30 is everywhere, not only in the case of gods, but among men also-- 31 whenever they get a devotee, they take an undue advantage over 32 him.

33 See, how I have again strayed from my subject and am 34 talking at random. I have already told you at the outset that those 35 things are not in my line, but if you bear with me, I shall try again.

36 There is a certain beauty in one's own people which is not to 37 be found anywhere else. Even the denizens of Paradise cannot 38 compare in point of beauty with our brothers and sisters, or sons 39 and daughters, however uncouth they may be. But, if, even roaming 40 over Paradise and seeing the people there, you find your own 41 people coming out really beautiful, then there is no bound to your 42 delight. There is also a special beauty in our Bengal, covered with 43 endless verdant stretches of grass, and bearing as garlands a 44 thousand rivers and streams. A little of this beauty one finds in 45 Malabar, and also in Kashmir. Is there not beauty in water? When 46 there is water everywhere, and heavy showers of rain are running 47 down arum leaves, while clumps of cocoanut and date palms 48 slightly bend their heads under that downpour, and there is the 49 continuous croaking of frogs all round--is there no beauty in such a 50 scene as this? And one cannot appreciate the beauty of the banks of 51 our Ganga, unless one is returning from foreign countries and 52 entering the river by its mouth at Diamond Harbour. That blue, blue

1 sky, containing in its bosom black clouds, with golden-fringed 2 whitish clouds below them, underneath which clumps of cocoanut
3 and date palms toss their tufted heads like a thousand chowries, 4 and below them again is an assemblage of light, deep, yellowish, 5 slightly dark, and other varieties of green massed together--these 6 being the mango, lichi, blackberry, and jack-fruit trees, with an 7 exuberance of leaves and foliage that entirely hide the trunk, 8 branches, and twigs--while, close by, clusters of bamboos toss in the 9 wind, and at the foot of all lies that grass, before whose soft and 10 glossy surface the carpets of Yarkand, Persia, and Turkistan are 11 almost as nothing--as far as the eye can reach that green, green 12 grass looking as even as if some one had trimmed and pruned it, 13 and stretching right down to the edge of the river--as far down the 14 banks as where the gentle waves of the Ganga have submerged and 15 are pushing playfully against, the land is framed with green grass, 16 and just below this is the sacred water of the Ganga. And if you 17 sweep your eye from the horizon right up to the zenith, you will 18 notice within a single line such a play of diverse colours, such 19 manifold shades of the same colour, as you have witnessed nowhere 20 else. I say, have you ever come under the fascination of colours--the 21 sort of fascination which impels the moths to die in the flame, and 22 the bees to starve themselves to death in the prison of flowers? I 23 tell you one thing--if you want to enjoy the beauty of Gangetic 24 scenery, enjoy it to your heart's content now, for very soon the 25 whole aspect will be altered. In the hands of money-grabbing 26 merchants, everything will disappear. In place of that green grass, 27 brick kilns will be reared and burrow-pits for the brickfields will be 28 sunk. Where, now, the tiny wavelets of the Ganga are playing with 29 the grass, there will be moored the jute-laden flats and those cargo-30 boats; and those variegated colours of cocoanuts and palms, of 31 mangoes and lichis, that blue sky, the beauty of the clouds--these 32 you will altogether miss hereafter; and you will find instead the 33 enveloping smoke of coal, and standing ghostlike in the midst of 34 that smoke, the half-distinct chimneys of the factories!

35 Now our ship has reached the sea. The description, which 36 you read in Kalidasa's Raghuvamsham of the shores "of the sea 37 appearing blue with forests of palm and other trees" and "looking 38 like a slender rim of rust on the tyre of an iron wheel" etc.--is not at 39 all accurate and faithful. With all my respects for the great poet, it 40 is my belief that he never in his life saw either the ocean or the 41 Himalayas.¹⁹⁹

42 Here there is a blending of white and black waters, 43 somewhat resembling the confluence of the Ganga and Jamuna at 44 Allahabad. Though Mukti (liberation) may be rare in most places, it 45 is sure at "Hardwar, Allahabad, and the mouth of the Ganga". But 46 they say that this is not the real mouth of the river. However, let me 47 salute the Lord here, for "He has His eyes, and head and face 48 everywhere".²⁰⁰

1 ¹⁹⁹ ?Swamiji afterwards changed his opinion with regard to the last part, i.e., 2 Kalidasa's acquaintance with the Himalayas.

3 ²⁰⁰ ?Gita, XIII, 13.
4

1 How beautiful! As far as the eye reaches, the deep blue
2 waters of the sea are rising into foamy waves and dancing 3 rhythmically to the winds. Behind us lie the sacred waters of the 4 Ganga, whitened with the ashes of Shiva's body, as we read in the 5 description, "Shiva's matted locks whitened by the foam of the 6 Ganga".²⁰¹ The water of the Ganga is comparatively still. In front of 7 us lies the parting line between the waters. There ends the white 8 water. Now begin the blue waters of the ocean--before, behind and 9 all round there is only blue, blue water everywhere, breaking 10 incessantly into waves. The sea has blue hair, his body is of a blue 11 complexion, and his garment is also blue. We read in the Puranas 12 that millions of Asuras hid themselves under the ocean through fear 13 of the gods. Today their opportunity has come, today Neptune is 14 their ally, and Aeolus is at their back. With hideous roars and 15 thundering shouts they are today dancing a terrible war-dance on 16 the surface of the ocean, and the foamy waves are their grim 17 laughter! In the midst of this tumult is our ship, and on board the 18 ship, pacing the deck with lordly steps, are men and women of that 19 nation which rules the sea-girt world, dressed in charming attire, 20 with a complexion like the moonbeams--looking like self-reliance 21 and self-confidence personified, and appearing to the black races as 22 pictures of pride and haughtiness. Overhead, the thunder of the 23 cloudy monsoon sky, on all sides the dance and roar of foam-crested 24 waves, and the din of the powerful engines of our ship setting at 25 naught the might of the sea--it was a grand conglomeration of 26 sounds, to which I was listening, lost in wonder, as if in a half-27 waking state, when, all of a sudden, drowning all these sounds, 28 there fell upon my ears the deep and sonorous music of 29 commingled male and female voices singing in chorus the national 30 anthem, "Rule Britannia, Britannia rules the waves!" Startled, I 31 looked around and found that the ship was rolling heavily, and 32 brother T__, holding his head with his hands was struggling against 33 an attack of sea-sickness.

34 In the second class are two Bengali youths going to the West 35 for study, whose condition is worse. One of them looks so frightened 36 that he would be only too glad to scuttle straight home if he were 37 allowed to land. These two lads and we two are the only Indians on 38 the ship--the representatives of modern India. During the two days 39 the ship was in the Ganga, brother T__, under the secret 40 instructions of the Editor, Udbodhan, used to urge me very much to 41 finish my article on "Modern India" quickly. I too found an 42 opportunity today and asked him, "Brother, what do you think is the 43 condition of modern India?" And he, casting a look towards the 44 second class and another at himself, said, with a sigh, "Very sad, 45 getting very much muddled up!"

46 The reason why so much importance is attached to the 47 Hooghly branch of the Ganga, instead of the bigger one, Padma, is, 48 according to many, that the Hooghly was the primary and principal 49 course of the river, and latterly the river shifted its course, and

1

1 created an outlet by the Padma. Similarly the present "Tolley's 2 Nullah" represents the ancient course of the Ganga, and is known
3 as the Adi-Ganga. The sailing merchant, the hero of Kavikankan's 4 work, makes his voyage to Ceylon along that channel. Formerly the 5 Ganga was navigable for big ships up to Triveni. The ancient port of 6 Saptagram was situated a little distance off Triveni ghat, on the 7 river Saraswati. From very ancient times Saptagram was the 8 principal port for Bengal's foreign trade. Gradually the mouth of the 9 Saraswati got silted up. In the year 1539 it silted up so much that 10 the Portuguese settlers had to take up a site further down the 11 Ganga, for their ships to come up. The site afterwards developed 12 into the famous town of Hooghly. From the commencement of the 13 sixteenth century both Indian and foreign merchants were feeling 14 much anxiety about the silting up of the Ganga. But what of that?
15 Human engineering skill has hitherto proved ineffectual against the 16 gradual silting up of the river-bed which continues to the present
17 day. In 1666 a French Missionary writes that the Ganga near Suti 18 got completely silted up at the time. Holwell, of Black-Hole fame, on 19 his way to Murshidabad was compelled to resort to small country-20 boats on account of the shallowness of the river at Santipur. In 21 1797 Captain Colebrook writes that country-boats could not ply in 22 the Hooghly and the Jalangi during summer. During the years 1822-23 1884, the Hooghly was closed to all boat-traffic. For twenty-four 24 years within this period the water was only two or three feet deep.
25 In the seventeenth century, the Dutch planted a trade settlement at 26 Chinsura, one mile below Hooghly. The French, who came still later, 27 established their settlement at Chandernagore, still further down 28 the river. In 1723 the German Ostend Company opened a factory at 29 Bankipore, five miles below Chandernagore on the other side of the 30 river. In 1616 the Danes had started a factory at Serampore, eight 31 miles below Chandernagore, and then the English established the 32 city of Calcutta still further down the river. None of the above 33 places are now accessible to ships, only Calcutta being open now.
34 But everybody is afraid of its future.

35 There is one curious reason why there remains so much 36 water in the Ganga up to about Santipur even during summer.
37 When the flow of the surface water has ceased, large quantities of 38 water percolating through the subsoil find their way into the river.
39 The bed of the Ganga is even now considerably below the level of 40 the land on either side. If the level of the river-bed should gradually 41 rise owing to the subsidence of fresh soil, then the trouble will 42 begin. And there is talk about another danger. Even near Calcutta, 43 through earthquakes or other causes, the river at times dried up so 44 much that one could wade across. It is said that in 1770 such a 45 state of things happened. There is another report that on Thursday, 46 the 9th October, 1734, during ebb-tide in the noon, the river dried 47 up completely. Had it happened a little later, during the 48 inauspicious last portion of the day, I leave it to you to infer the 49 result. Perhaps then the river would not have returned to its bed
50 again.

1 So far, then, as regards the upper portion of the Hooghly;
2 now as regards the portion below Calcutta. The great dangers to be 3 faced in this portion are the James and Mary Banks. Formerly the 4 river Damodar had its confluence with the Ganga thirty miles above 5 Calcutta, but now, through the curious transformations of time, the 6 confluence is over thirty-one miles to the south of it. Some six miles 7 below this point the Rupnarayan pours its waters into the Ganga.
8 The fact is there, that these two feeders rush themselves into the 9 Ganga in happy combination--but how shall this huge quantity of 10 mud be disposed of? Consequently big sandbanks are formed in the 11 bed of the river, which constantly shift their position and are 12 sometimes rather loose and sometimes a compact mass, causing no 13 end of fear. Day and night soundings of the river's depth are being 14 taken, the omission of which for a few days, through carelessness, 15 would mean the destruction of ships. No sooner will a ship strike 16 against them than it will either capsize or be straightway swallowed 17 up in them! Cases are even recorded that within half an hour of a 18 big three-masted ship striking one of these sandbanks, the whole of 19 it disappeared in the sand, leaving only the top of the masts visible.
20 These sandbanks may rightly be considered as the mouth of the 21 Damodar-Rupnarayan.²⁰² The Damodar is not now satisfied with 22 Santhal villages, and is swallowing ships and steamers etc. as a 23 sauce by way of variety. In 1877 a ship named "County of Sterling", 24 with a cargo of 1,444 tons of wheat from Calcutta, had no sooner 25 struck one of these terrible sandbanks than within eight minutes 26 there was no trace left of it. In 1874 a steamer carrying a load of 27 2,400 tons suffered the same fate in two minutes. Blessed be thy 28 mouth, O Mother Ganga! I salute thee for allowing us to get off 29 scot-free. Brother T__ says, "Sir, a goat ought to be offered to the 30 Mother for her benignity." I replied, "Exactly so, brother, but why 31 offer only one day, instead of everyday!" Next day brother T__ 32 readverted to the topic, but I kept silent. The next day after that I 33 pointed out to him at dinner-time to what an extent the offering of 34 goats was progressing. Brother seemed rather puzzled and said, 35 "What do you mean? It is only you who are eating." Then at 36 considerable pains I had to explain to him how it was said that a 37 youth of Calcutta once visited his father-in-law's place in a remote 38 village far from the Ganga. There at dinner-time he found people 39 waiting about with drums etc., and his mother-in-law insisted on his 40 taking a little milk before sitting to dinner. The son-in-law 41 considered it might perhaps be a local custom which he had better 42 obey; but no sooner had he taken a sip of the milk than the drums 43 began to play all around and his mother-in-law, with tears of joy, 44 placed her hand on his head and blessed him, saying, "My son, you 45 have really discharged the duties of a son today; look here, you 46 have in your stomach the water of the Ganga, as you live on its 47 banks, and in the milk there was the powdered bone of your 48 deceased father-in-law; so by this act of yours his bones have 49 reached the Ganga and his spirit has obtained all the merits

1 ²⁰² ?There is a pun on the words Damodar-Rupnarayan which not only imply the 2 two rivers, but also mean "Narayana as Damodara, or swallowing everything 3 (Damodara-rupa-Narayana)."
4

1 thereof." So here was a man from Calcutta, and on board the ship
2 there was plenty of meat preparations and every time one ate them, 3 meat was being offered to mother Ganga. So he need not be at all 4 anxious on the subject. Brother T__ is of such a grave disposition 5 that it was difficult to discover what impression the lecture made on 6 him.

7 What a wonderful thing a ship is! The sea, which from the 8 shore looks so fearful, in the heart of which the sky seems to bend 9 down and meet, from whose bosom the sun slowly rises and in 10 which it sinks again, and the least frown of which makes the heart 11 quail--that sea has been turned into a highway, the cheapest of all 12 routes, by ships. Who invented the ship? No one in particular. That 13 is to say, like all machinery indispensable to men--without which 14 they cannot do for a single moment, and by the combination and 15 adjustment of which all kinds of factory plants have been 16 constructed--the ship also is the outcome of joint labour. Take for 17 instance the wheels; how absolutely indispensable they are! From 18 the creaking bullock-cart to the car of Jagannath, from the spinning 19 wheel to the stupendous machinery of factories, everywhere there 20 is use for the wheel. Who invented the wheel? No one in particular, 21 that is to say, all jointly. The primitive man used to fell trees with 22 axes, roll big trunks along inclined planes; by degrees they were cut 23 into the shape of solid wheels, and gradually the naves and spokes 24 of the modern wheel came into vogue. Who knows how many 25 millions of years it took to do this? But in India all the successive 26 stages of improvement are preserved. However much they may be 27 improved or transformed, there are always found men to occupy the 28 lower stages of evolution, and consequently the whole series is 29 preserved. First of all a musical instrument was formed with a 30 string fixed to a piece of bamboo. Gradually it came to be played by 31 a horsehair bow, and the first violin was made; then it passed 32 through various transformations, with different sorts of strings and 33 guts, and the bow also assumed different forms and names, till at 34 last the highly finished guitar and sarang etc., came into existence.
35 But in spite of this, do not the Mohammedan cabmen even now with 36 a shabby horsehair bow play on the crude instrument made of a 37 bamboo pipe fixed to an earthen pot, and sing the story of Majwar 38 Kahar weaving his fishing net? Go to the Central Provinces, and you 39 will find even now solid wheels rolling on the roads--though it 40 bespeaks a dense intellect on the part of the people, specially in 41 these days of rubber tyres.

42 In very ancient times, that is, in the golden age, when the 43 common run of people were so sincere and truthful that they would 44 not even cover their bodies for fear of hypocrisy--making the 45 exterior look different from the interior--would not marry lest they 46 might contract selfishness, and banishing all ideas of distinction 47 between meum and tuum always used to look upon the property of 48 others "as mere clods of earth", on the strength of bludgeons, 49 stones, etc.²⁰³--in those blessed times, for voyaging over water, they

1 ²⁰³ ?Swamiji is ironically describing the naked primitive man, to whom marriage 2 was unknown, and who had no respect for person or property.
3

1 constructed canoes and rafts and so forth, burning out the interior
2 of a tree, or by fastening together a few logs of trees. Haven't you 3 seen catamarans along the sea-coast from Orissa to Colombo? And 4 you must have observed how far into the sea the rafts can go. There 5 you have rudiments of ship-building.

6 And that boat of the East Bengal boatmen boarding which 7 you have to call on the five patron-saints of the river for your safety; 8 your house-boat manned by Chittagong boatmen, which even in a 9 light storm makes its helmsmen declare his inability to control the 10 helm, and all the passengers are asked to take the names of their 11 respective gods as a last resort; that big up-country boat with a pair 12 of fantastic brass eyes at the prow, rowed by the oarsmen in a 13 standing posture; that boat of merchant Shrimanta's voyage
14 (according to Kavikankan, Shrimanta crossed the Bay of Bengal 15 simply by rowing, and was about to be drowned owing to his boat 16 getting caught in the antennae of a shoal of lobsters, and almost 17 capsizing! Also he mistook a shell for a tiny fish, and so on), in other 18 words the Gangasagar boat--nicely roofed above and having a floor 19 of split bamboos, and containing in its hold rows of jars filled with 20 Ganga water (which is deliciously cool, I beg your pardon, you visit 21 Gangasagar during hard winter, and the chill north wind drives 22 away all your relish for cooling drinks); and that small-sized boat 23 which daily takes the Bengali Babus to their office and brings them 24 back home, and is superintended over by the boatman of Bally, very 25 expert and very clever--no sooner does he sight a cloud so far away 26 as Konnagar than he puts the boat in safety!--they are now passing 27 into the hands of the strong-bodied men from Jaunpur who speak a 28 peculiar dialect, and whom your Mahant Maharaj, out of fun 29 ordered to catch a heron--which he facetiously styled as 30 "Bakasur",²⁰⁴ and this puzzled them hopelessly and they stammered 31 out, "Please, sire, where are we to get this demon? It is an enigma 32 to us"; then that bulky, slow-moving (cargo) boat nicknamed "Gadha 33 (donkey)" in Bengali, which never goes straight, but always goes 34 sideways; and that big species of boats, like the schooner, having 35 from one to three masts, which imports cargoes of cocoanuts, dates 36 and dried fish from Ceylon, the Maldives, or Arabia;--these and 37 many others too numerous to mention, represent the subsequent 38 development in naval construction.

39 To steer a ship by means of sails is a wonderful discovery. To 40 whichever direction the wind may be blowing, by a clever 41 manipulation of the sails, the ship is sure to reach her destination.
42 But she takes more time when the wind is contrary. A sailing ship is 43 a most beautiful sight, and from a distance looks like a many-44 winged great bird descending from the skies. Sails, however, do not 45 allow a ship to steer straight ahead, and if the wind is a little 46 contrary, she has to take a zigzag course. But when there is a 47 perfect lull, the ship is helpless and has to lower her sails and stand 48 still. In the equatorial regions it frequently happens even now.
49 Nowadays sailing ships also have very little of wood in them and 50 are mostly made of iron. It is much more difficult to be the captain

1 ²⁰⁴ ?A demon of the shape of a big heron, mentioned in the Bhagavata.
2

1 or sailor of a sailing ship than in a steamer, and no one can be a 2 good captain in sailing ship without experience. To know the 3 direction of the wind at every step and to be on one's guard against 4 danger-spots long ahead--these two qualifications are indispensably 5 necessary in a sailing ship, more than in a steamer. A steamer is to 6 a great extent under human control--the engines can be stopped in 7 a moment. It can be steered ahead, or astern, sideways or in any 8 desired direction, within a very short time, but the sailing ship is at 9 the mercy of the wind. By the time the sails can be lowered or the 10 helm turned, the ship may strike a bank or run up on a submarine 11 rock or collide with another ship. Nowadays sailing ships very 12 seldom carry passengers, except coolies. They generally carry 13 cargo, and that also inferior stuff, such as salt etc. Small sailing 14 ships such as the schooner, do coasting trade. Sailing ships cannot 15 afford to hire steamers to tow them along the Suez Canal and spend 16 thousands of rupees as toll, so they can go to England in six months 17 by rounding Africa.

18 Due to all these disadvantages of sailing ships, naval warfare 19 in the past was a risky affair. A slight change in the course of the 20 wind or in the ocean-current would decide the fate of a battle.
21 Again, those ships, being made of wood, would frequently catch 22 fire, which had to be put out. Their construction also was of a 23 different type; one end was flat and very high, with five or six decks.
24 On the uppermost deck at this end there used to be a wooden 25 verandah, in front of which were the commander's room and office 26 and on either side were the officers' cabins. Then there was a large 27 open space, at the other end of which were a few cabins. The lower 28 decks also had similar roofed halls, one underneath the other. In the 29 lowermost deck or hold were the sailor's sleeping and dining 30 rooms, etc. On either side of each deck were ranged cannon, their 31 muzzles projecting through the rows of apertures in the ships' 32 walls; and on both sides were heaps of cannon balls (and powder 33 bags in times of war). All the decks of these ancient men-of-war had 34 very low roofs and one had to carry his head down when moving 35 about. Then it was a troublesome business to secure marines for 36 naval warfare. There was a standing order of the Government to 37 enlist men by force or guile wherever they could be found. Sons 38 were violently snatched away from their mothers, and husbands 39 from their wives. Once they were made to board the ship, (which 40 perhaps the poor fellows had never done in their lives), they were 41 ordered straightway to climb the masts! And if through fear they 42 failed to carry out the order, they were flogged. Some would also 43 die under the ordeal. It was the rich and influential men of the 44 country who made these laws, it was they who would appropriate 45 the benefits of commerce, or ravage, or conquest of different 46 countries, and the poor people were simply to shed their blood and 47 sacrifice their lives--as has been the rule throughout the world's 48 history! Now those laws exist no longer, and the name of the 49 Pressgang does not now send a shiver through the hearts of the 50 peasantry and poor folk. Now it is voluntary service, but many 51 juvenile criminals are trained as sailors in men-of-war, instead of 52 being thrown into prison.

1 Steam-power has revolutionised all this, and sails are almost 2 superfluous ornaments in ships nowadays. They depend very little 3 on winds now, and there is much less danger from gales and the 4 like. Ships have now only to take care that they do not strike 5 against submarine rocks. And men-of-war of the present day are 6 totally different from those of the past. In the first place, they do not 7 at all look like ships, but rather like floating iron fortresses of 8 varying dimensions. The number of cannon also has been much 9 reduced, but compared with the modern turret-guns, those of the 10 past were mere child's play. And how fast these men-of-war are!
11 The smallest of these are the torpedo-boats; those that are a little 12 bigger are for capturing hostile merchant-ships, and the big ones 13 are the ponderous instruments for the actual naval fight.

14 During the Civil War of the United States of America, the 15 Unionist party fixed rows of iron rails against the outer walls of a 16 wooden ship so as to cover them. The enemy's cannon-balls striking 17 against them were repulsed without doing any harm to the ship.
18 After this, as a rule, the ship's sides began to be clad in iron, so that 19 hostile balls might not penetrate the wood. The ship's cannon also 20 began to improve--bigger and bigger cannon were constructed and 21 the work of moving, loading, and firing them came to be executed 22 by machinery, instead of with the hand. A cannon which even five 23 hundred men cannot move an inch, can now be turned vertically or 24 horizontally, loaded and fired by a little boy pressing a button, and 25 all this in a second! As the iron wall of ships began to increase in 26 thickness, so cannon with the power of thunder also began to be 27 manufactured. At the present day, a battle-ship is a fortress with 28 walls of steel, and the guns are almost as Death itself. A single shot 29 is enough to smash the biggest ship into fragments. But this "iron 30 bridal-chamber"--which Nakindar's father (in the popular Bengali 31 tale) never even dreamt of, and which, instead of standing on the 32 top of "Satali Hill" moves dancing on seventy thousand mountain-33 like billows, even this is mortally afraid of torpedoes! The torpedo is 34 a tube somewhat shaped like a cigar, and if fired at an object 35 travels under water like a fish. The, the moment it hits its object, 36 the highly explosive materials it contains explode with a terrific 37 noise, and the ship under which this takes place is reduced to its 38 original condition, that is, partly into iron and wooden fragments, 39 and partly into smoke and fire! And no trace is found of the men 40 who are caught in this explosion of the torpedo--the little that is 41 found, is almost in a state of mince-meat! Since the invention of 42 these torpedoes, naval wars cannot last long. One or two fights, and 43 a big victory is scored or a total defeat. But the wholesale loss of 44 men of both parties in naval fight which men apprehended before 45 the introduction of these men-of-war has been greatly falsified by 46 facts.

47 If a fraction of the volley of balls discharged during a field-48 fight from the guns and rifles of each hostile army on the opponents 49 hit their aim, then both rival armies would be killed to a man in two 50 minutes. Similarly if only one of five hundred shots fired from a 51 battle-ship in action hit its mark, then no trace would be left of the 52 ships on both sides. But the wonder is that, as guns and rifles are 1 improving in quality, as the latter are being made lighter, and the 2 rifling in their barrels finer, as the range is increasing, as machinery 3 for loading is being multiplied, and rate of firing quickened--the 4 more they seem to miss their aim! Armed with the old fashioned 5 unusually longbarrelled musket--which has to be supported on a 6 two-legged wooden stand while firing, and ignited by actually 7 setting fire and blowing into it--the Barakhjais and the Afridis can 8 fire with unerring precision, while the modern trained soldier with 9 the highly complex machine-guns of the present day fires 150 10 rounds in a minute and serves merely to heat the atmosphere!

11 Machinery in a small proportion is good, but too much of it kills 12 man's initiative and makes a lifeless machine of him. The men in 13 factories are doing the same monotonous work, day after day, night 14 after night, year after year, each batch of men doing one special bit 15 of work--such as fashioning the heads of pins, or uniting the ends of 16 threads, or moving backwards or forwards with the loom--for a 17 whole life. And the result is that the loss of that special job means 18 death to them--they find no other means of living and starve. Doing 19 routine work like a machine, one becomes a lifeless machine. For 20 that reason, one serving as a schoolmaster or a clerk for a whole 21 lifetime ends by turning a stupendous fool.

22 The form of merchantmen and passenger-ships is of a 23 different type. Although some merchant-ships are so constructed 24 that in times of war they can easily be equipped with a few guns 25 and give chase to unarmed hostile merchant-ships, for which they 26 get remuneration from their respective Governments, still they 27 generally differ widely from warships. These are now mostly 28 steamships and generally so big and expensive that they are seldom 29 owned by individuals, but by companies. Among the carrying 30 companies for Indian and European trade, the P. & O. Company is 31 the oldest and richest, then comes the B. I. S. N. Company, and 32 there are many others. Among those of foreign nationalities, the 33 Messageries Maritimes (French) the Austrian Lloyd, the German 34 Lloyd, and the Rubattino Company (Italian), are the most famous.
35 Of these the passenger-ships of the P. & O. Company are generally 36 believed to be the safest and fastest. And the arrangements of food 37 in the Messageries Maritimes are excellent.

1 When we left for Europe this time, the last two companies
2 had stopped booking "native" passengers for fear of the plague-
3 infection. And there is a law of the Indian Government that no 4 "native" of India can go abroad without a certificate from the 5 Emigration Office, in order to make sure that nobody is enticing him 6 away to foreign countries to sell him as a slave or to impress him as 7 a coolie, but that he is going of his own free will. This written 8 document must be produced before they will take him into the ship.
9 This law was so long silent against the Indian gentry going to 10 foreign countries. Now on account of the plague epidemic it has 11 been revived, so that the Government may be informed about every 12 "native" going out. Well, in our country we hear much about some 13 people belonging to the gentry and some to the lower classes. But 14 in the eyes of the Government all are "natives" without exception.
15 Maharajas, Rajas, Brahmins, Kshatriyas, Vaishyas, Shudras--all 16 belong to one and the same class--that of "natives". The law, and the 17 test which applies to coolies, is applicable to all "natives" without 18 distinction. Thanks to you, O English Government, through your 19 grace, for a moment at least I feel myself one with the whole body 20 of "natives". It is all the more welcome, because this body of mine 21 having come of a Kayastha family, I have become the target of 22 attack of many sections. Nowadays we hear it from the lips of 23 people of all castes in India that they are all full-blooded Aryans-- 24 only there is some difference of opinion amongst them about the 25 exact percentage of Aryan blood in their veins, some claiming to 26 have the full measure of it, while others may have one ounce more 27 or less than another--that is all. But in this they are all unanimous 28 that their castes are all superior to the Kayastha! And it is also 29 reported that they and the English race belong to the same stock-- 30 that they are cousins-german to each other, and that they are not 31 "natives". And they have come to this country out of humanitarian 32 principles, like the English. And such evil customs as child-33 marriage, polygamy, image-worship, the sutti, the zenana-system, 34 and so forth have no place in their religion--but these have been 35 introduced by the ancestors of the Kayasthas, and people of that ilk.
36 Their religion also is of the same pattern as that of the English! And 37 their forefathers looked just like the English, only living under the 38 tropical sun of India has turned them black! Now come forward 39 with your pretensions, if you dare! "You are all natives", the 40 Government says. Amongst that mass of black, a shade deeper or 41 lighter cannot be distinguished. The Government says, "They are all 42 natives". Now it is useless for you to dress yourselves after the 43 English fashion. Your European hats etc., will avail you little 44 henceforth. If you throw all the blame on the Hindus, and try to 45 fraternise with the English, you would thereby come in for a greater 46 share of cuffs and blows and not less. Blessings to you, O English 47 Government! You have already become the favoured child of 48 Fortune; may your prosperity increase ever more! We shall be 49 happy once more to wear our loin-cloth and Dhoti--the native dress.
50 Through your grace we shall continue to travel from one end of the 51 country to the other, bare-headed, and barefooted, and heartily eat 52 our habitual food of rice and Dal with our fingers, right in the 53 Indian fashion. Bless the Lord! We had well-nigh been tempted by

1 Anglo-Indian fashions and been duped by its glamour. We heard it 2 said that no sooner did we give up our native dress, native religion, 3 and native manners and customs, than the English people would 4 take us on their shoulders and lionise us. And we were about to do 5 so, when smack came the whip of the Englishman and the thud of 6 British boots--and immediately men were seized by a panic and 7 turned away, bidding good-bye to English ways, eager to confess 8 their "native" birth.

9 "The English ways we'd copy with such pains,

10 The British boots did stamp out from our brains!"

11 Blessed be the English Government! May their throne be 12 firm and their rule permanent. And the little tendency that 13 remained in me for taking to European ways vanished, thanks to 14 the Americans. I was sorely troubled by an overgrown beard, but no 15 sooner did I peep into a hair-cutting saloon than somebody called 16 out, "This is no place for such shabby-looking people as you." I 17 thought that perhaps seeing me so quaintly dressed in turban and 18 Gerua cloak, the man was prejudiced against me. So I should go 19 and buy an English coat and hat. I was about to do this when 20 fortunately I met an American gentleman who explained to me that 21 it was much better that I was dressed in my Gerua cloak, for now 22 the gentlemen would not take me amiss, but if I dressed in 23 European fashion, everybody would chase me away. I met the same 24 kind of treatment in one or two other saloons. After which I began 25 the practice of shaving with my own hands. Once I was burning 26 with hunger, and went into a restaurant, and asked for a particular 27 thing, whereupon the man said, "We do not stock it." "Why, it is 28 there." "Well, my good man, in plain language it means there is no 29 place here for you to sit and take your meal." "And why?" "Because 30 nobody will eat at the same table with you, for he will be 31 outcasted." Then America began to look agreeable to me, somewhat 32 like my own caste-ridden country. Out with these differences of 33 white and black, and this nicety about the proportion of Aryan blood 34 among the "natives"! How awkward it looks for slaves to be over-35 fastidious about pedigree! There was a Dom (a man of the sweeper-36 caste) who used to say, "You won't find anywhere on earth a caste 37 superior to ours. You must know we are Dom-m-m-s!" But do you 38 see the fun of it? The excesses about caste distinctions obtain most 39 among peoples who are least honoured among mankind.

40 Steamships are generally much bigger than sailing ships.
41 The steamships that ply across the Atlantic are just half as much 42 bigger than the "Golconda".²⁰⁵ The ship on which I crossed the 43 Pacific from Japan was also very big. In the centre of the biggest 44 ships are the first class compartments with some open space on 45 either side; then comes the second class, flanked by the "steerage" 46 on either side. At one end are the sailors' and servants' quarters.
47 The steerage corresponds to the third class, in which very poor 48 people go as passengers, as, for instance, those who are emigrating

1 ²⁰⁵ ?The B.I.S.N. steamer in which Swami Vivekananda went to the West for the 2 second time.
3

1 to America, Australia, etc. The accommodation for them is very 2 small and the food is served not on tables but from hand to hand.
3 There is no steerage in ships which ply between England and India, 4 but they take deck-passengers. The open space between the first 5 and second classes is used by them for sitting or sleeping purposes.
6 But I did not notice a single deck-passenger bound for a long 7 journey. Only in 1893, on my way to China, I found a number of 8 Chinamen going as deck-passengers from Bombay to Hongkong.

9 During stormy weather, the deck-passengers suffer great 10 inconvenience, and also to a certain extent at ports when the cargo 11 is unloaded. Excepting in the hurricane-deck which is on top of all, 12 there is a square opening in all other decks, through which cargo is 13 loaded and unloaded, at which times the deck-passengers are put to 14 some trouble. Otherwise, it is very pleasant on the deck at night 15 from Calcutta to Suez, and in summer, through Europe also. When 16 the first and second class passengers are about to melt in their 17 furnished compartments on account of the excessive heat, then the 18 deck is almost a heaven in comparison.

19 The second class in ships of this type is very uncomfortable.
20 Only, in the ships of the newly started German Lloyd Company
21 plying between Bergen, in Germany and Australia, the second class 22 arrangements are excellent; there are cabins even in the hurricane-23 deck, and food arrangements are almost on a par with those of the 24 first class in the "Golconda". That line touches Colombo on the way.

25 In the "Golconda" there are only two cabins on the hurricane-26 deck, one on each side; one is for the doctor, and the other was 27 allotted to us. But owing to the excessive heat, we had to take 28 shelter in the lower deck, for our cabin was just above the engine-29 room of the ship. Although the ship is made of iron, yet the 30 passengers' cabins are made of wood. And there are many holes 31 along the top and bottom of the wooden walls of these, for the free 32 passage of air. The walls are painted over with ivory-paint which 33 has cost nearly £25 per room. There is a small carpet spread on the 34 floor and against one of the walls are fixed two frameworks 35 somewhat resembling iron bedsteads without legs, one on top of 36 the other. Similarly on the opposite wall. Just opposite the entrance 37 there is a wash-basin, over which there is a looking-glass, two 38 bottles, and two tumblers for drinking water. Against the sides of 39 each bed is attached a netting in brass frames which can be fixed 40 up to the wall and again lowered down. In it the passengers put 41 their watch and other important personal necessities before 42 retiring. Below the lower bedstead, there is room for storing the 43 trunks and bags. The second class arrangements are on a similar 44 plan, only the space is narrower and the furniture of an inferior 45 quality. The shipping business is almost a monopoly of the English.
46 Therefore in the ships constructed by other nations also, the food 47 arrangements, as well as the regulation of the time, have to be 48 made in the English fashion, to suit the large number of English 49 passengers in them. There are great differences between England, 50 France, Germany, and Russia, as regards food and time. Just as in 51 our country, there are great differences between Bengal, Northern 52 India, the Mahratta country, and Gujarat. But these differences are 1 very little observed in the ships, because there, owing to a majority 2 of English-speaking passengers, everything is being moulded after 3 the English fashion.

4 The Captain is the highest authority in a ship. Formerly the 5 Captain used to rule in the ship in the high seas, punishing 6 offenders, hanging pirates, and so forth. Now he does not go so far, 7 but his word is law on board a ship. Under him are four officers (or 8 malims, in Indian vernacular). Then come four or five engineers, the 9 chief engineer ranking equally with an officer and getting first class 10 food. And there are four or five steersmen (sukanis, in Indian 11 vernacular) who hold the helm by turns--they are also Europeans.
12 The rest, comprising the servants, the sailors, and the coalmen are 13 all Indian, and all of them Mohammedans; Hindu sailors I saw only 14 on the Bombay side, in P. & O. ships. The servants and the sailors 15 are from Calcutta, while the coalmen belong to East Bengal; the 16 cooks also are Catholic Christians of East Bengal. There are four 17 sweepers besides, whose duty it is to clear out dirty water from the 18 compartments, make arrangements for bath and keep the latrines 19 etc. clean and tidy. The Mohammedan servants and lascars do not 20 take food cooked by Christians; besides, every day there are 21 preparations of ham or bacon on board the ship. But they manage 22 to set up some sort of privacy for themselves. They have no 23 objection to taking bread prepared in the ship's kitchen, and those 24 servants from Calcutta who have received the "new light" of 25 civilisation, do not observe any restrictions in matters of food.
26 There are three messes for the men, one for the servants, one for 27 the sailors, and one for the coalmen. The company provides each 28 mess with a cook and a servant; every mess has got a separate 29 place for cooking. A few Hindu passengers, were going from 30 Calcutta to Colombo, and they used to do their cooking in one of 31 these kitchens after the servants had finished theirs. The servants 32 draw their own drinking water. On every deck two pumps are fixed 33 against the wall, one on each side; the one is for sweet and the 34 other for salt water, and the Mohammedans draw sweet water from 35 this for their own use. Those Hindus who have no objection to 36 taking pipe-water can very easily go on these ships to England and 37 elsewhere, observing all their orthodoxy in matters of food and 38 drink. They can get a kitchen, and drinking water free from the 39 touch of any, and even the bathing water need not be touched by 40 anybody else; all kinds of food such as rice, pulse, vegetables, fish, 41 meat, milk, and ghee are available on the ship, especially on these 42 ships where mostly Indians are employed, to whom rice, pulse, 43 radish, cabbage, and potato, etc. have to be supplied every day. The 44 one thing necessary is money. With money you can proceed 45 anywhere alone, observing full orthodoxy.

46 These Bengali servants are employed nowadays in almost all 47 ships that ply between Calcutta and Europe. They are gradually 48 forming into a class by themselves. Several nautical terms also are 49 being coined by them; for instance, the captain is termed 50 bariwallah (landlord); the officer malim; the mast 'dol'; a sail sarh; 51 bring down aria; raise habish (heave), etc.

52 The body of lascars and coalmen have each a head who is

1 called serang, under whom are two or three tindals, and under 2 these come the lascars and coalmen.

3 The head of the khansamas, or "boys", is the butler, over 4 whom there is a European steward. The lascars wash and cleanse 5 the ship, throw or wind up the cables, set down or lift the boats and 6 hoist or strike sail (though this last is a rare occurrence in 7 steamships) and do similar kind of work. The Serang and the Tindal 8 are always moving about watching them and assisting in their work.
9 The coalmen keep the fire steady in the engine-room; their duty is 10 to fight day and night with fire and to keep the engines neat and 11 clean. And it is no easy task to keep that stupendous engine and all 12 its parts neat and tidy. The Serang and his assistant (or "Brother", 13 in the lascar's parlance) are from Calcutta and speak Bengali; they 14 look gentlemanly and can read and write, having studied in school; 15 they speak tolerable English also. The Serang has a son, thirteen 16 years of age, who is a servant of the Captain and waits at his door 17 as an orderly. Seeing these Bengali lascars, coalmen, servants, and 18 boys at work, the feeling of despair with regard to my countrymen 19 which I had, was much abated. How they are slowly developing 20 their manhood, with a strong physique--how fearless, yet docile!
21 That cringing, sycophant attitude common to "natives" even the 22 sweepers do not possess--what a transformation!

23 The Indian lascars do excellent work without murmur, and go 24 on a quarter of a European sailor's pay. This has dissatisfied many 25 in England, especially as many Europeans are losing their living 26 thereby. They sometimes set up an agitation. Having nothing else to 27 say against them--for the lascars are smarter in work than 28 Europeans--they only complain that in rough weather, when the ship 29 is in danger, they lose all courage. Good God! In actual 30 circumstances, that infamy is found to be baseless. In times of 31 danger, the European sailors freely drink through fear and make 32 themselves stupid and out of use. Indian sailors never take a drop 33 of liquor in their life, and up to now, not one of them has ever 34 shown cowardice in times of great danger. Does the Indian soldier 35 display any cowardice on the field of battle? No, but they must have 36 leaders. An English friend of mine, named General Strong, was in 37 India during the Sepoy Mutiny. He used to tell many stories about 38 it. One day, in the course of conversation, I asked him how it was 39 that the sepoys who had enough of guns, ammunition, and 40 provisions at their disposal, and were also trained veterans, came 41 to suffer such a defeat. He replied that the leaders among them, 42 instead of advancing forward, only kept shouting from a safe 43 position in the rear, "Fight on, brave lads", and so forth; but unless 44 the commanding officer goes ahead and faces death, the rank and 45 file will never fight with heart. It is the same in every branch. "A 46 captain must sacrifice his head," they say. If you can lay down your 47 life for a cause, then only you can be a leader. But we all want to be 48 leaders without making the necessary sacrifice. And the result is 49 zero--nobody listens to us!

1 However much you may parade your descent from Aryan 2 ancestors and sing the glories of ancient India day and night, and 3 however much you may be strutting in the pride of your birth, you, 4 the upper classes of India, do you think you are alive? You are but 5 mummies ten thousand years old! It is among those whom your 6 ancestors despised as "walking carrion" that the little of vitality
7 there is still in India is to be found; and it is you who are the real 8 "walking corpses". Your houses, your furniture, look like museum 9 specimens, so lifeless and antiquated they are; and even an eye-10 witness of your manners and customs, your movements and modes
11 of life, is inclined to think that he is listening to a grandmother's 12 tale! When, even after making a personal acquaintance with you, 13 one returns home, one seems to think one had been to visit the 14 paintings in an art gallery! In this world of Maya, you are the real 15 illusions, the mystery, the real mirage in the desert, you, the upper 16 classes of India! You represent the past tense, with all its varieties 17 of form jumbled into one. That one still seems to see you at the 18 present time, is nothing but a nightmare brought on by indigestion.
19 You are the void, the unsubstantial nonentities of the future.
20 Denizens of the dreamland, why are you loitering any longer?
21 Fleshless and bloodless skeletons of the dead body of Past India you 22 are, why do you not quickly reduce yourselves into dust and 23 disappear in the air? Ay, on your bony fingers are some priceless 24 rings of jewel, treasured up by your ancestors, and within the 25 embrace of your stinking corpses are preserved a good many 26 ancient treasure-chests. Up to now you have not had the 27 opportunity to hand them over. Now under the British rule, in these 28 days of free education and enlightenment, pass them on to your 29 heirs, ay, do it as quickly as you can. You merge yourselves in the 30 void and disappear, and let New India arise in your place. Let her 31 arise--out of the peasants' cottage, grasping the plough; out of the 32 huts of the fisherman, the cobbler, and the sweeper. Let her spring 33 from the grocer's shop, from beside the oven of the fritter-seller.
34 Let her emanate from the factory, from marts, and from markets.
35 Let her emerge from groves and forests, from hills and mountains.
36 These common people have suffered oppression for thousands of 37 years--suffered it without murmur, and as a result have got 38 wonderful fortitude. They have suffered eternal misery, which has 39 given them unflinching vitality. Living on a handful of grain, they 40 can convulse the world; give them only half a piece of bread, and 41 the whole world will not be big enough to contain their energy; they 42 are endowed with the inexhaustible vitality of a Raktabija.²⁰⁶ And, 43 besides, they have got the wonderful strength that comes of a pure 44 and moral life, which is not to be found anywhere else in the world.
45 Such peacefulness, such contentment, such love, such power of 46 silent and incessant work, and such manifestation of lion's strength 47 in times of action--where else will you find these! Skeletons of the 48 Past, there, before you, are your successors, the India that is to be.
49 Throw those treasure-chests of yours and those jewelled rings 50 among them, as soon as you can; and you vanish into the air, and be

1 ²⁰⁶ ?A demon, in the Durga-Saptashati, every drop of whose blood falling on the 2 ground produced another demon like him.
3

1 seen no more--only keep your ears open. No sooner will you
2 disappear than you will hear the inaugural shout of Renaissant
3 India, ringing with the voice of a million thunders and reverberating 4 throughout the universe, "Wah Guru Ki Fateh"--victory to the Guru!

5 Our ship is now in the Bay of Bengal, which is reported to be 6 very deep. The little of it that was shallow has been silted up by the 7 Ganga crumbling the Himalayas and washing down the North-8 Western Provinces (U.P.). That alluvial region is our Bengal. There is 9 no indication of Bengal extending further beyond the Sunderbans.
10 Some say that the Sunderbans were formerly the site of many 11 villages and towns and were an elevated region. But many do not 12 admit this now. However, the Sunderbans and the northern part of 13 the Bay of Bengal have been the scene of many historic events.
14 These were the rendezvous of the Portuguese pirates; the king of 15 Arakan made repeated attempts to occupy this region, and here 16 also the representative of the Mogul Emperor tried his best to 17 punish the Portuguese pirates headed by Gonzalez; and this has 18 frequently been the scene of many fights between the Christians, 19 Moguls, Mugs, and Bengalis.

20 The Bay of Bengal is naturally rough, and to add to this, it is 21 the monsoon season, so our ship is rolling heavily. But then, this is 22 only the beginning and there is no knowing what is to follow, as we 23 are going to Madras. The greater part of Southern India belongs 24 now to the Madras Presidency. What is there in mere extent of 25 land? Even a desert turns into heaven when it falls to the care of a 26 fortunate owner. The unknown petty village of Madras, formerly 27 called Chinnapattanam or Madraspattanam, was sold by the Raja of 28 Chandragiri to a company of merchants. Then the English had their 29 principal trade in Java, and Bantam was the centre of England's 30 Asiatic trade. Madras and other English trade settlements in India 31 were under the control of Bantam. Where is that Bantam now? And 32 what development that Madras has made! It is not whole truth to 33 say that fortune favours the enterprising man; behind there must be 34 the strength that comes of the Divine Mother. But I also admit that 35 it is the enterprising men unto whom Mother gives strength.

36 Madras reminds one of a typical South Indian province;
37 though even at the Jagannath Ghat of Calcutta, one can get a 38 glimpse of the South by seeing the Orissa Brahmin with his border-39 shaven head and tufted hair, his variously painted forehead, the 40 involuted slippers, in which only the toes may enter; that nose 41 irritated with snuff and with that habit of covering the bodies of 42 their children with sandalpaste prints. The Gujarati Brahmin, the 43 jet-black Maharashtra Brahmin, and the exceptionally fair, cat-eyed 44 square-headed Brahmin of Konkan--though all of them dress in the 45 same way, and are all known as Deccanis, yet the typical southern 46 Brahmin is to be found in Madras. That forehead covered over with 47 the ample caste-mark of the Ramanuja sect--which to the 48 uninitiated looks anything but sublime, (and whose imitation--the 49 caste-mark of the Ramananda sect of Northern India--is hailed with 50 many a facetious rhyme--and which completely throws into the 51 shade the custom prevailing in Bengal among leaders of the 52 Vaishnavite sect, of frightfully imprinting their whole body); that

1 Telugu, Tamil, and Malayalam speech of which you won't 2 understand a single syllable even if you hear it spoken for six years 3 and in which there is a play of all possible varieties of 'l' and 'd' 4 sounds; that eating of rice with 'black-peppered dal soup'--each 5 morsel of which sends a shiver through the heart (so pungent and 6 so acid!); that addition of margosa leaves, oats, etc., by way of 7 flavour, that taking of "rice-and-curd" etc., that bath with gingili oil 8 rubbed over the body, and the frying of fish in the same oil--without 9 these how can one conceive the southern country?

10 Again, the South has Hinduism alive during the 11 Mohammedan rule and even for some time previous to it. It was in 12 the South that Shankaracharya was born, among that caste who 13 wear a tuft on the front of the head and eat food prepared with 14 cocoanut oil: this was the country that produced Ramanuja: it was 15 also the birthplace of Madhva Muni. Modern Hinduism owes its 16 allegiance to these alone. The Vaishnavas of the Chaitanya sect 17 form merely a recension of the Madhva sect; the religious 18 reformers of the North such as Kabir, Dadu, Nanak, and Ramsanehi 19 are all an echo of Shankaracharya; there you find the disciples of 20 Ramanuja occupying Ayodhya and other places. These Brahmins of 21 the South do not recognise those of the North as true Brahmins, nor 22 accept them as disciples, and even to the other day would not admit 23 them to Sannyasa. The people of Madras even now occupy the 24 principal seats of religion. It was in the South that when people of 25 North India were hiding themselves in woods and forests, giving up 26 their treasures, their household deities, and wives and children, 27 before the triumphant war-cry of Mohammedan invaders-- the 28 suzerainty of the King of Vidyanagar was established firm as ever.
29 In the South, again, was born the wonderful Sayanacharya--the 30 strength of whose arms, vanquishing the Mohammedans, kept King 31 Bukka on his throne, whose wise counsels gave stability to the 32 Vidyanagar Kingdom, whose state-policy established lasting peace 33 and prosperity in the Deccan, whose superhuman genius and 34 extraordinary industry produced the commentaries on the whole 35 Vedas--and the product of whose wonderful sacrifice, renunciation, 36 and researches was the Vedanta treatise named Panchadashi--that 37 Sannyasin Vidyaranya Muni or Sayana²⁰⁷ was born in this land. The 38 Madras Presidency is the habitat of that Tamil race whose 39 civilisation was the most ancient, and a branch of whom, called the 40 Sumerians, spread a vast civilisation on the banks of the Euphrates 41 in very ancient times; whose astrology, religious lore, morals, rites, 42 etc., furnished the foundation for the Assyrian and Babylonian
43 civilisations; and whose mythology was the source of the Christian 44 Bible. Another branch of these Tamils spread from the Malabar 45 coast and gave rise to the wonderful Egyptian civilisation, and the 46 Aryans also are indebted to this race in many respects. Their 47 colossal temples in the South proclaim the triumph of the Veera 48 Shaiva and Veera Vaishnava sects. The great Vaishnava religion of 49 India has also sprung from a Tamil Pariah--Shathakopa--"who was a 50 dealer in winnowing-fans but was a Yogin all the while". And the 1 ²⁰⁷ ?According to some, Sayana, the commentator of the Vedas, was the brother 2 of Vidyaranya Muni.

3

1 Tamil Alwars or devotees still command the respect of the whole
2 Vaishnava sect. Even now the study of the Dvaita, Vishishtadvaita
3 and Advaita systems of Vedanta is cultivated more in South India
4 than anywhere else. Even now the thirst for religion is stronger 5 here than in any other place.

6 In the night of the 24th June, our ship reached Madras.
7 Getting up from bed in the morning, I found that we were within 8 the enclosed space of the Madras harbour. Within the harbour the 9 water was still, but without, towering waves were roaring, which 10 occasionally dashing against the harbour-wall were shooting up 11 fifteen or twenty feet high into the air and breaking in a mass of 12 foam. In front lay the well-known Strand Road of Madras. Two 13 European Police Inspectors, a Jamadar of Madras and a dozen 14 Constables boarded our ship and told me with great courtesy that 15 "natives" were not allowed to land on the shore, but the Europeans 16 were. A "native", whoever he might be, was of such dirty habits that 17 there was every chance of his carrying plague germs about; but the 18 Madrasis had asked for a special permit for me, which they might 19 obtain. By degrees the friends of Madras began to come near our 20 vessel on boats in small groups. As all contact was strictly 21 forbidden, we could only speak from the ship, keeping some space
22 between. I found all my friends--Alasinga, Biligiri, Narasimachary, 23 Dr. Nanjunda Rao, Kidi, and others on the boats. Basketfuls of 24 mangoes, plantains, cocoanuts, cooked rice-and-curd, and heaps of 25 sweet and salt delicacies, etc. began to come in. Gradually the 26 crowd thickened--men, women, and children in boats everywhere. I 27 found also Mr. Chamier, my English friend who had come out to 28 Madras as a barrister-at-law. Ramakrishnananda and 29 Nirbhayananda made some trips near to the ship. They insisted on 30 staying on the boat the whole day in the hot sun, and I had to 31 remonstrate with them, when they gave up the idea. And as the 32 news of my not being permitted to land got abroad, the crowd of 33 boats began to increase still more. I, too, began to feel exhaustion 34 from leaning against the railings too long. Then I bade farewell to 35 my Madras friends and entered my cabin. Alasinga got no
36 opportunity to consult me about the Brahmavadin and the Madras 37 work; so he was going to accompany me to Colombo. The ship left 38 the harbour in the evening, when I heard a great shout, and 39 peeping through the cabin-window, I found that about a thousand 40 men, women, and children of Madras who had been sitting on the 41 harbour-walls, gave this farewell shout when the ship started. On a 42 joyous occasion the people of Madras also, like the Bengalis, make 43 the peculiar sound with the tongue known as the Hulu.

44 It took us four days to go from Madras to Ceylon. That rising 45 and heaving of waves which had commenced from the mouth of the 46 Ganga began to increase as we advanced, and after we had left 47 Madras it increased still more. The ship began to roll heavily, and 48 the passengers felt terribly sea-sick, and so did the two Bengali 49 boys.

50 One of them was certain he was going to die, and we had to 51 console him with great difficulty, assuring him that there was 52 nothing to be afraid of, as it was quite a common experience and

1 nobody ever died of it. The second class, again, was right over the 2 screw of the ship. The two Bengali lads, being natives, were put 3 into a cabin almost like a black-hole, where neither air nor light had 4 any access. So the boys could not remain in the room, and on the 5 deck the rolling was terrible. Again, when the prow of the ship 6 settled into the hollow of a wave and the stern was pitched up, the 7 screw rose clear out of the water and continued to wheel in the air, 8 giving a tremendous jolting to the whole vessel. And the second 9 class then shook as when a rat is seized by a cat and shaken.

10 However, this was the monsoon season. The more the ship 11 would proceed westwards, the more gale and wind she would have 12 to encounter. The people of Madras had given plenty of fruits, the 13 greater part of which, and the sweets, and rice-and-curd, etc., I 14 gave to the boys. Alasinga had hurriedly bought a ticket and 15 boarded the ship barefooted. He says he wears shoes now and then.
16 Ways and manners differ in different countries. In Europe it is a 17 great shame on the part of ladies to show their feet, but they feel no 18 delicacy in exposing half their bust. In our country, the head must 19 be covered by all means, no matter if the rest of the body is well 20 covered or not. Alasinga, the editor of the Brahmavadin, who is a 21 Mysore Brahmin of the Ramanuja sect, having a fondness for 22 Rasam²⁰⁸ with shaven head and forehead overspread with the caste-23 mark of the Tengale sect, has brought with him with great care, as 24 his provision for the voyage, two small bundles, in one of which 25 there is fried flattened rice, and in another popped rice and fried 26 peas! His idea is to live upon these during the voyage to Ceylon, so 27 that his caste may remain intact. Alasinga had been to Ceylon once 28 before, at which his caste-people tried to put him into some trouble, 29 without success. That is a saving feature in the caste-system of 30 India--if one's caste-people do not object, no one else has any right 31 to say anything against him. And as for the South India castes-- 32 some consist of five hundred souls in all, some even hundred, or at 33 most a thousand, and so circumscribed is their limit that for want of 34 any other likely bride, one marries one's sister's daughter! When 35 railways were first introduced in Mysore, the Brahmins who went 36 from a distance to see the trains were outcasted! However, one 37 rarely finds men like our Alasinga in this world--one so unselfish, so 38 hard-working and devoted to his Guru, and such an obedient 39 disciple is indeed very rare on earth. A South Indian by birth, with 40 his head shaven so as to leave a tuft in the centre, bare-footed, and 41 wearing the Dhoti, he got into the first class; he was strolling now 42 and then on the deck and when hungry, was chewing some of the 43 popped rice and peas! The ship's servants generally take all South 44 Indians to be Chettis (merchants) and say that they have lots of 45 money, but will not spend a bit of it on either dress or food! But the 46 servants are of opinion that in our company Alasinga's purity as a 47 Brahmin is getting contaminated. And it is true--for the South 48 Indians lose much of their caste-rigours through contact with us.

49 Alasinga did not feel sea-sick. Brother T- felt a little trouble 50 at the beginning but is now all right. So the four days passed in 1 ²⁰⁸ ?Pungent and sour dal soup.

2

1 various pleasant talks and gossip. In front of us is Colombo. Here 2 we have Sinhal--Lanka. Shri Ramachandra crossed over to Lanka by 3 building a bridge across and conquered Ravana, her King. Well, I
4 have seen the bridge, and also, in the palace of the Setupati
5 Maharaja of Ramnad, the stone slab on which Bhagavan 6 Ramachandra installed his ancestor as Setupati for the first time.
7 But the Buddhist Ceylonese of these sophisticated times will not 8 admit this. They say that in their country there is not even a 9 tradition to indicate it. But what matters their denial? Are not our 10 "old books" authorities enough? Then again, they call their country 11 Sinhal and will not term it Lanka²⁰⁹--and how should they? There is 12 no piquancy either in their words, or in their work, or in their 13 nature, or in their appearance! Wearing gowns, with plaited hair, 14 and in that a big comb--quite a feminine appearance! Again, they 15 have slim, short, and tender womanlike bodies. These--the 16 descendants of Ravana and Kumbhakarna! Not a bit of it! Tradition 17 says they have migrated from Bengal--and it was well done. That 18 new type of people who are springing in Bengal--dressed like 19 women, speaking in soft and delicate accents, walking with a timid, 20 faltering gait, unable to look any one in the face and from their very 21 birth given to writing love poems and suffering the pangs of 22 separation from their beloved--well, why do they not go to Ceylon, 23 where they will find their fellows! Are the Government asleep? The 24 other day they created a great row trying to capture some people in 25 Puri. Why, in the metropolis itself are many worth seizing and 26 packing off!

27 There was a very naughty Bengali Prince, named Vijaya 28 Sinha, who quarrelled with his father, and getting together a few 29 more fellows like him set sail in a ship, and finally came upon the 30 Island of Ceylon. That country was then inhabited by an aboriginal 31 tribe whose descendants are now known as the Bedouins. The 32 aboriginal king received him very cordially and gave him his 33 daughter in marriage. There he remained quietly for some time, 34 when one night, conspiring with his wife, with a number of fellows, 35 he took the king and his nobles by surprise and massacred them.
36 Then Vijaya Sinha ascended the throne of Ceylon. But his 37 wickedness did not end here. After a time he got tired of his 38 aboriginal queen, and got more men and more girls from India and 39 himself married a girl named Anuradha, discarding his first 40 aboriginal wife. Then he began to extirpate the whole race of the 41 aborigines, almost all of whom were killed, leaving only a small 42 remnant who are still to be met with in the forests and jungles. In 43 this way Lanka came to be called Sinhal and became, to start with, 44 colony of Bengali ruffians!

45 In course of time, under the regime of Emperor Asoka, his 46 son Mahinda and his daughter Sanghamitta, who had taken the vow 47 of Sannyasa, came to the Island of Ceylon as religious missionaries.
48 Reaching there, they found the people had grown quite barbarous, 49 and, devoting their whole lives, they brought them back to 50 civilisation as far as possible; they framed good moral laws for them

1 and converted them to Buddhism. Soon the Ceylonese grew very 2 staunch Buddhists, and built a great city in the centre of the island
3 and called it Anuradhapuram. The sight of the remains of this city 4 strikes one dumb even today--huge stupas, and dilapidated stone 5 building extending for miles and miles are standing to this day; and 6 a great part of it is overgrown with jungles which have not yet been 7 cleared. Shaven-headed monks and nuns, with the begging bowl in 8 hand and clothed in yellow robes, spread all over Ceylon. In places 9 colossal temples were reared containing huge figure of Buddha in 10 meditation, of Buddha preaching the Law, and of Buddha in a 11 reclining posture--entering into Nirvana. And the Ceylonese, out of 12 mischief, painted on the walls of the temples the supposed state of 13 things in Purgatory--some are being thrashed by ghosts, some are 14 being sawed, some burnt, some fried in hot oil, and some being 15 flayed--altogether a hideous spectacle! Who could know that in this 16 religion, which preached "noninjury as the highest virtue", there 17 would be room for such things! Such is the case in China, too, so 18 also in Japan. While preaching non-killing so much in theory, they 19 provide for such an array of punishments as curdles up one's blood 20 to see. Once a thief broke into the house of a man of this non-killing 21 type. The boys of the house caught hold of the thief and were giving 22 him a sound beating. The master hearing a great row came out on 23 the upper balcony and after making inquiries shouted out, "Cease 24 from beating, my boys. Don't beat him. Non-injury is the highest 25 virtue." The fraternity of junior non-killers stopped beating and 26 asked the master what they were to do with the thief. The master 27 ordered, "Put him in a bag, and throw him into water." The thief, 28 much obliged at this humane dispensation, with folded hands said, 29 "Oh! How great is the master's compassion!" I had heard that the 30 Buddhists were very quiet people and equally tolerant of all 31 religions. Buddhist preachers come to Calcutta and abuse us with 32 choice epithets, although we offer them enough respect. Once I was 33 preaching at Anuradhapuram among the Hindus--not Buddhists-- 34 and that in an open maidan, not on anybody's property--when a 35 whole host of Buddhist monks and laymen, men and women, came 36 out beating drums and cymbals and set up an awful uproar. The 37 lecture had to stop, of course, and there was the imminent risk of 38 bloodshed. With great difficulty I had to persuade the Hindus that 39 we at any rate might practise a bit of non-injury, if they did not.
40 Then the matter ended peacefully.

41 Gradually Tamilian Hindus from the north began slowly to 42 migrate into Ceylon. The Buddhists, finding themselves in untoward 43 circumstances, left their capital to establish a hill-station called 44 Kandy, which, too, the Tamilians wrested from them in a short time 45 and placed a Hindu king on the throne. Then came hordes of 46 Europeans--the Spaniards, the Portuguese, and the Dutch. Lastly 47 the English have made themselves kings. The royal family of Kandy 48 have been sent to Tanjore, where they are living on pension and 49 Mulagutanni Rasam.

50 In northern Ceylon there is a great majority of Hindus, while 51 in the southern part, Buddhists and hybrid Eurasians of different 52 types preponderate. The principal seat of the Buddhists is Columbo,

1 the present capital, and that of the Hindus is Jaffna. The restrictions
2 of caste are here much less than in India; the Buddhists have a few 3 in marriage affairs, but none in matters of food, in which respect
4 the Hindus observe some restrictions. All the butchers of Ceylon 5 were formerly Buddhists; now the number is decreasing owing to 6 the revival of Buddhism. Most of the Buddhists are now changing 7 their anglicised titles for native ones. All the Hindu castes have 8 mixed together and formed a single Hindu caste, in which, like the 9 Punjabi Jats, one can marry a girl of any caste--even a European girl 10 at that. The son goes into a temple, puts the sacred trilinear mark 11 on the forehead, utters "Shiva, Shiva", and becomes a Hindu. The 12 husband may be a Hindu, while the wife is a Christian. The 13 Christian rubs some sacred ash on the forehead, utters "Namah 14 Parvatipataye" (salutation to Shiva), and she straightway becomes a 15 Hindu. This is what has made the Christian missionaries so cross 16 with you. Since your coming into Ceylon, many Christians, putting 17 sacred ash on their head and repeating "Salutation to Shiva", have 18 become Hindus and gone back to their caste. Advaitavada and Vira-
19 Shaivavada are the prevailing religions here. In place of the word 20 "Hindu" one has to say "Shiva". The religious dance and Sankirtana 21 which Shri Chaitanya introduced into Bengal had their origin in the 22 South, among the Tamil race. The Tamil of Ceylon is pure Tamil and 23 the religion of Ceylon is equally pure Tamil religion. That ecstatic 24 chant of a hundred thousand men, and their singing of devotional 25 hymns to Shiva, the noise of a thousand Mridangas²¹⁰ with the 26 metallic sound of big cymbals, and the frenzied dance of these ash-27 covered, red-eyed athletic Tamilians with stout rosaries of 28 Rudraksha beads on their neck, looking just like the great devotee, 29 Hanuman--you can form no idea of these, unless you personally see 30 the phenomenon.

31 Our Colombo friends had procured a permit for our landing, 32 so we landed and met our friends there. Sir Coomara Swami is the 33 foremost man among the Hindus: his wife is an English lady, and his 34 son is barefooted and wears the sacred ashes on his forehead. Mr.
35 Arunachalam and other friends came to meet me. After a long time 36 I partook of Mulagutanni and the king-cocoanut. They put some 37 green cocoanuts into my cabin. I met Mrs. Higgins and visited her 38 boarding school for Buddhist girls. I also visited the monastery and 39 school of our old acquaintance, the Countess of Canovara. The 40 Countess' house is more spacious and furnished than Mrs.
41 Higgins's. The Countess has invested her own money, whereas Mrs.
42 Higgins has collected the money by begging. The Countess herself 43 wears a Gerua cloth after the mode of the Bengali Sari. The 44 Ceylonese Buddhists have taken a great fancy to this fashion, I 45 found. I noticed carriage after carriage of women, all wearing the 46 same Bengali Sari.

47 The principal place of pilgrimage for the Buddhists is the 48 Dalada Maligawa or Tooth-temple at Kandy, which contains a tooth
49 of Lord Buddha. The Ceylonese say it was at first in the Jagannath 50 Temple at Puri and after many vicissitudes reached Ceylon, where ²¹⁰ ?A kind of Indian drum.

1 also there was no little trouble over it. Now it is lying safe. The 2 Ceylonese have kept good historical records of themselves, not like 3 those of ours--merely cock and bull stories. And the Buddhist 4 scriptures also are well preserved here in the ancient Magadhi
5 dialect. From here the Buddhist religion spread to Burma, Siam, 6 and other countries. The Ceylonese Buddhists recognise only 7 Shakyamuni mentioned in their scriptures and try to follow his 8 precepts. They do not, like the people of Nepal, Sikkim, Bhutan, 9 Ladak, China, and Japan, worship Shiva and do not know the 10 worship with mystical Mantras of such goddesses as Tara Devi and 11 so forth. But they believe in possession by spirits and things of that 12 sort. The Buddhists have now split into two schools, the Northern 13 and the Southern; the Northern school calls itself the Mahayana, 14 and the Southern school, comprising the Ceylonese, Burmese, 15 Siamese, etc., Hinayana. The Mahayana branch worships Buddha in 16 name only; their real worship is of Tara Devi and of 17 Avalokiteshwara (whom the Japanese, Chinese and Koreans call 18 Wanyin); and there is much use of various cryptic rites and 19 Mantras. The Tibetans are the real demons of Shiva. They all 20 worship Hindu gods, play the Damaru,²¹¹ keep human skulls, blow 21 horns made of the bones of dead monks, are much given to wine 22 and meat, and are always exorcising evil spirits and curing diseases 23 by means of mystical incantations. In China and Japan, on the walls 24 of all the temples I have observed various monosyllabic Mantras
25 written in big gilt letters, which approach the Bengali characters so 26 much that you can easily make out the resemblance.

27 Alasinga returned to Madras from Colombo, and we also got 28 on board our ship, with presents of some lemons from the orchard 29 of Coomara Swami, some king-cocoanuts, and two bottles of syrup, 30 etc. (The god Kartikeya has various names, such as Subrahmanya, 31 Kamara Swami etc. In the South the worship of this god is much in 32 vogue; they call Kartikeya an incarnation of the sacred formula
33 "Om".)

34 The ship left Colombo on the morning of 25th June. Now we 35 have to encounter full monsoon conditions. The more our ship is 36 advancing, the more is the storm increasing and the louder is the 37 wind howling--there is incessant rain, and enveloping darkness; 38 huge waves are dashing on the ship's deck with a terrible noise, so 39 that it is impossible to stay on the deck. The dining table has been 40 divided into small squares by means of wood partitions, placed 41 lengthwise and breadthwise, called fiddle, out of which the food 42 articles are jumping up. The ship is creaking, as if it were going to 43 break to pieces. The Captain says, "Well, this year's monsoon seems 44 to be unusually rough". The Captain is a very interesting person 45 who spent many years in the Chinese Sea and Indian Ocean; a very 46 entertaining fellow, very clever in telling cock and bull stories.
47 Numerous stories of pirates--how Chinese coolies used to kill ship's 48 officers, loot the whole ship and escape--and other stories of that ilk 49 he is narrating. And there is nothing else to do, for reading or 50 writing is out of the question in such heavy rolling. It is extremely 1 ²¹¹ ?A tabor shaped like an hour-glass.

2

1 difficult to sit inside the cabin; the window has been shut for fear of 2 the waves getting in. One day Brother T- kept it slightly ajar and a 3 fragment of a wave entered and flooded the whole cabin! And who 4 can describe the heaving and tossing on the deck! Amid such 5 conditions, you must remember, the work for your Udbodhan is 6 going on to a certain extent.

7 There are two Christian missionary passengers on our ship,
8 one of whom is an American, with a family--a very good man, named 9 Bogesh. He has been married seven years, and his children number 10 half-a-dozen. The servants call it God's special grace--though the 11 children perhaps, feel differently. Spreading a shabby bed on the 12 deck, Mrs. Bogesh makes all the children lie on it and goes away.
13 They make themselves dirty and roll on the deck, crying aloud. The 14 passengers on the deck are always nervous and cannot walk about 15 on the deck, lest they might tread on any of Bogesh's children.
16 Making the youngest baby lie in a square basket with high sides, 17 Mr. and Mrs. Bogesh sit in a corner for four hours, huddled 18 together. One finds it hard to appreciate your European civilisation.
19 If we rinse our mouth or wash our teeth in public--they say it is 20 barbarous, these things ought to be done in private. All right, but I 21 put it to you, if it is not also decent to avoid such acts as the one 22 above referred to, in public. And you run after this civilisation!
23 However you cannot understand what good Protestantism has done
24 to North Europe, unless you see the Protestant clergy. If then ten 25 crores of English people die, and only the priests survive, in twenty 26 years another ten crores will be raised!

27 Owing to the rolling of the ship most of the passengers are 28 suffering from headache. A little girl named Tootle is accompanying 29 her father; she has lost her mother. Our Nivedita has become a 30 mother to Tootle and Bogesh's children. Tootle has been brought up 31 in Mysore with her father who is a planter. I asked her, "Tootle, how 32 are you?" She replied, "This Bungalow is not good and rolls very 33 much, which makes me sick." To her every house is a bungalow.
34 One sickly child of Bogesh suffers specially from want of care; the 35 poor thing is rolling on the wooden deck the whole day. The old 36 Captain now and then comes out of his cabin and feeds him with 37 some soup with a spoon, and pointing to his slender legs says, 38 "What a sickly child--how sadly neglected!"

39 Many desire eternal happiness. But if happiness were 40 eternal, misery also would be eternal, just think of that. Could we in 41 that case have ever reached Aden! Fortunately neither happiness 42 nor misery is eternal; therefore in spite of our six days' journey 43 being prolonged into fourteen days, and our buffeting terrible wind 44 and rain night and day, we at last did reach Aden. The more we 45 were ahead of Colombo, the more the storm and rain increased, the 46 sky became a lake, and the wind and the waves grew fierce; and it 47 was almost impossible for the ship to proceed, breasting such wind 48 and wave, and her speed was halved. Near the island of Socotra, 49 the monsoon was at its worst. The Captain remarked that this was 50 the centre of the monsoon, and that if we could pass this, we should 51 gradually reach calmer waters. And so we did. And this nightmare 52 also ended.

1 On the evening of the 8th, we reached Aden. No one, white 2 or black, is allowed to land, neither is any cargo allowed into the 3 ship. And there are not many things worth seeing here. You have 4 only barren stretches of sand, bearing some resemblance to 5 Rajputana, and treeless, verdureless hills. In between the hills
6 there are forts and on the top are the soldiers' barracks. In front 7 are the hotels and shops arranged in the form of a crescent, which 8 are discernible from the ship. Many ships are lying in anchor. One 9 English, and one German man-of-war came in; the rest are either 10 cargo or passenger ships. I had visited the town last time. Behind 11 the hills are the native barracks and the bazar. A few miles from 12 there, there are big pits dug into the sides of the hills, where the 13 rain-water accumulates. Formerly that was the only source of water.
14 Now by means of an apparatus they distil the sea water and get 15 good fresh water, which, however, is very dear. Aden is just like an 16 Indian town--with its large percentage of Indian civil and military 17 population. There are a good many Parsee shopkeepers and Sindhi 18 merchants. Aden is a very ancient place--the Roman Emperor 19 Constantius sent a batch of missionaries here to preach
20 Christianity. Then the Arabs rose and killed these Christians, 21 whereupon the Roman Emperor asked the King of Abyssinia--long a 22 Christian country--to punish them. The Abyssinian King sent an 23 army and severely punished the Arabs of Aden. Afterwards Aden 24 passed into the hands of the Samanidi Kings of Persia. It is they 25 who are reputed to have first excavated those caves for the 26 accumulation of water. Then, after the rise of Mohammedanism, 27 Aden passed into the hands of the Arabs. After a certain time, a 28 Portuguese general made ineffectual attempts to capture the place.
29 Then the Sultan of Turkey made the place a naval base with the 30 object of expelling the Portuguese from the Indian Ocean.

31 Again it passed into the possession of the neighbouring 32 Arabian ruler. Afterwards, the English purchased it and they built 33 the present town. Now the warships of all the powerful nations are 34 cruising all over the world, and everyone wants to have a voice in 35 every trouble that arises in any part of it. Every nation wants to 36 safeguard its supremacy, political interest, and commerce. Hence 37 they are in need of coal every now and then. As it would not be 38 possible to get a supply of coal from an enemy country in times of 39 war, every Power wants to have a coaling station of its own. The 40 best sites have been already occupied by the English; the French 41 have come in for the next best; and after them the other Powers of 42 Europe have secured, and are securing, sites for themselves either 43 by force or by purchase, or by friendly overture. The Suez Canal is 44 now the link between Europe and Asia, and it is under the control of 45 the French. Consequently the English have made their position very 46 strong at Aden, and the other Powers also have each made a base 47 for themselves along the Red Sea. Sometimes this rage for land 48 brings disastrous consequences. Italy, trodden under foreign feet 49 for seven centuries, stood on her legs after enormous difficulties.
50 But immediately after doing this, she began to think a lot of herself 51 and became ambitious of foreign conquest. In Europe no nation can 52 seize a bit of land belonging to another; for all the Powers would 53 unite to crush the usurper. In Asia also, the big Powers--the English,

1 Russians, French, and Dutch--have left little space unoccupied. Now
2 there remained only a few bits of Africa, and thither Italy directed 3 her attention. First she tried in North Africa, where she met with 4 opposition from the French and desisted. Then the English gave her 5 a piece of land on the Red Sea, with the ulterior object that from 6 that centre Italy might absorb the Abyssinian territory. Italy, too, 7 came on with an army. But the Abyssinian King, Manalik, gave her 8 such a beating that Italy found it difficult to save herself by fleeing 9 from Africa. Besides, Russian and Abyssinian Christianity being, as 10 is alleged, very much alike, the Russian Czar is an ally of the 11 Abyssinians at bottom.

12 Well, our ship is now passing through the Red Sea. The 13 missionary said, "This is the Red Sea, which the Jewish leader 14 Moses crossed on foot with his followers. And the army which the 15 Egyptian King Pharaoh sent for their capture was drowned in the 16 sea, the wheels of their war-chariots having stuck in the mud"--like 17 Karna's in the Mahabharata story. He further said that this could 18 now be proved by modern scientific reasons. Nowadays in every 19 country it has become a fashion to support the miracles of religion 20 by scientific argument. My friend, if these phenomena were the 21 outcome of natural forces, where then is there room for their 22 intervention of your god "Yave"? A great dilemma! --If they are 23 opposed to science, those miracles are mere myths, and your 24 religion is false. And even if they are borne out by science, the glory 25 of your god is superfluous, and they are just like any other natural 26 phenomena. To this, Priest Bogesh replied, "I do not know all the 27 issues involved in it, I simply believe." This is all right--one can 28 tolerate that. But then there is a party of men, who are very clear in 29 criticising others' views and bringing forward arguments against 30 them, but where they themselves are concerned, they simply say, "I 31 only believe, my mind testifies to their veracity." These are simply 32 unbearable. Pooh! What weight has their intellect? Absolutely 33 nothing! They are very quick to label the religious beliefs of others 34 as superstitious, especially those which have been condemned by 35 the Europeans, while in their own case they concoct some fantastic 36 notions of Godhead and are beside themselves with emotions over 37 them.

38 The ship is steadily sailing north. The borders of this Red Sea 39 were a great centre of ancient civilisation. There, on the other side, 40 are the deserts of Arabia, and on this--Egypt. This is that ancient 41 Egypt. Thousands of years ago, these Egyptians starting from Punt 42 (probably Malabar) crossed the Red Sea, and steadily extended 43 their kingdom till they reached Egypt. Wonderful was the expansion 44 of their power, their territory, and their civilisation. The Greeks 45 were the disciples of these. The wonderful mausoleums of their 46 kings, the Pyramids, with figures of the Sphinx, and even their dead 47 bodies are preserved to this day. Here lived the ancient Egyptian 48 peoples, with curling hair and ear-rings, and wearing snow-white 49 dhotis without one end being tucked up behind. This is Egypt--the 50 memorable stage where the Hyksos, the Pharaohs, the Persian 51 Emperors, Alexander the Great, and the Ptolemies, and the Roman 52 and Arab conquerors played their part. So many centuries ago, they

1 left their history inscribed in great detail in hieroglyphic characters 2 on papyrus paper, on stone slabs, and on the sides of earthen 3 vessels.

4 This is the land where Isis was worshipped and Horus
5 flourished. According to these ancient Egyptians, when a man dies, 6 his subtle body moves about; but any injury done to the dead body 7 affects the subtle body, and the destruction of the former means the 8 total annihilation of the latter. Hence they took so much pains to 9 preserve the corpse. Hence the pyramids of the kings and 10 emperors. What devices, how much labour--alas, all in vain! Lured 11 by the treasures, robbers have dug into the pyramids, and 12 penetrating the mysteries of the labyrinths, have stolen the royal 13 bodies. Not now--it was the work of the ancient Egyptians 14 themselves. Some five or six centuries ago, these desiccated 15 mummies the Jewish and Arab physicians looked upon as 16 possessing great medicinal virtues and prescribed them for patients 17 all over Europe. To this day, perhaps, it is the genuine "Mumia" of 18 Unani and Hakimi methods of treatment!

19 Emperor Asoka sent preachers to this Egypt during the reign
20 of the Ptolemy dynasty. They used to preach religion, cure diseases, 21 live on vegetable food, lead celibate lives, and make Sannyasin
22 disciples. They came to found many sects--the Therapeutae, 23 Essenes, Manichaeans, and the like; from which modern 24 Christianity has sprung. It was Egypt that became, during the 25 Ptolemaic rule, the nursery of all learning. Here was that city of 26 Alexandria, famous all over the world for its university, its library, 27 and its literati--that Alexandria which, falling into the hands of 28 illiterate, bigoted, and vulgar Christians suffered destruction, with 29 its library burnt to ashes and learning stamped out! Finally, the 30 Christians killed the lady savant, Hypatia, subjected her dead body 31 to all sorts of abominable insult, and dragged it through the streets, 32 till every bit of flesh was removed from the bones!

33 And to the south lie the deserts of Arabia--the mother of 34 heroes. Have you ever seen a Bedouin Arab, with a cloak on, and a 35 big kerchief tied on his head with a bunch of woollen strings?--That 36 gait, that pose of standing, and that look, you will find in no other 37 country. From head to foot emanates the freedom of open 38 unconfined desert air--there you have the Arab. When the bigotry of 39 the Christians and the barbarity of the Goths extinguished the 40 ancient Greek and Roman civilisation, when Persia was trying to 41 hide her internal putrefaction by adding layer after layer of gold-42 leaf upon it, when, in India, the sun of splendour of Pataliputra and 43 Ujjain had set, leaving some illiterate, tyrant kings to rule over her, 44 and the corruptions of dreadful obscenities and the worship of lust 45 festering within--when such was the state of the world, this 46 insignificant, semi-brutal Arab race spread like lightning over its 47 surface.

48 There you see a steamer coming from Mecca, with a cargo of 49 pilgrims; behold--the Turk in European dress, the Egyptian in half-50 European costume, the Syrian Mussalman in Iranian attire, and the 51 real Arab wearing a cloth reaching down the knee. Before the time 52 of Mohammed, it was the custom to circumambulate round the

1 Cabba temple in a state of nudity; since his time they have to wrap 2 round a cloth. It is for this reason, that our Mohammedans unloose 3 the strings of their trousers, and let their cloth hang down to the 4 feet. Gone are those days for the Arabs. A continual influx of Kaffir, 5 Sidi, and Abyssinian blood has changed their physique, energy, and 6 all--the Arab of the desert is completely shorn of his former glory.
7 Those that live in the north are peaceful citizens of the Turkish 8 State. But the Christian subjects of the Sultan hate the Turks and 9 love the Arabs. They say that the Arabs are amenable to education, 10 become gentlemen, and are not so troublesome, while the real 11 Turks oppress the Christians very much.

12 Though the desert is very hot, that heat is not enervating.
13 There is no further trouble if you cover your body and head against 14 it. Dry heat is not only not enervating, on the contrary it has a 15 marked toning effect. The people of Rajputana, Arabia, and Africa 16 are illustrations of this. In certain districts of Marwar, men, cattle, 17 horses, and all are strong and of great stature. It is a joy to look at 18 the Arabs and Sidis. Where the heat is moist, as in Bengal, the body 19 is very much enervated, and every animal is weak.

20 The very name of the Red Sea strikes terror into the hearts 21 of the passengers--it is so dreadfully hot, specially in summer, as it 22 is now. Everyone is seated on the deck and recounts a story of some 23 terrible accident, according to his knowledge. The Captain has 24 outbidden them all.

25 He says that a few days ago a Chinese man-of-war was 26 passing through the Red Sea, and her Captain and eight sailors who 27 worked in the coal-room died of heat.

28 Indeed, those who work in the coal-room have in the first 29 place to stand in a pit of fire, and then there is the terrible heat of 30 the Red Sea. Sometimes they run mad, rush up to the deck, plunge 31 into the sea, and are drowned; or sometimes they die of heat in the 32 engine-room itself.

33 These stories were enough to throw us out of our wits, 34 nearly. But fortunately we did not experience so much heat. The 35 breeze, instead of being a south-wind, continued to blow from the 36 north, and it was the cool breeze of the Mediterranean.

37 On the 14th of July the steamer cleared the Red Sea and 38 reached Suez. In front is the Suez Canal. The steamer has cargo for 39 Suez. Well, Egypt is now under a visitation of plague, and possibly 40 we are also carrying its germs. So there is the risk of contagion on 41 both sides. Compared with the precautions taken here against 42 mutual contact, well, those of our country are as nothing. The goods 43 have to be unloaded, but the coolie of Suez must not touch the ship.
44 It meant a good deal of extra trouble for the ship's sailors. They 45 have to serve as coolies, lift up the cargo by means of cranes and 46 drop it, without touching, on the Suez boats which carry it ashore.
47 The agent of the Company has come near the ship in a small launch, 48 but he is not allowed to board her. From the launch he is talking 49 with the Captain who is in his ship. You must know this is not India, 50 where the white man is beyond the plague regulations and all--here 51 is the beginning of Europe. And all this precaution is taken lest the

1 rat-borne plague finds an entrance into this heaven. The incubation 2 period of plague-germs is ten days; hence the quarantine for ten 3 days. We have however passed that period, so the disaster has been 4 averted for us. But we shall be quarantined for ten days more if we 5 but touch any Egyptian. In that case no passengers will be landed 6 either at Naples or at Marseilles. Therefore every kind of work is 7 being done from a distance, free from contact. Consequently it will 8 take them the whole day to unload the cargo in this slow process.
9 The ship can easily cross the Canal in the night, if she be provided 10 with a searchlight; but if that is to be fitted, the Suez people will 11 have to touch the ship--there, you have ten days' quarantine. She is 12 therefore not to start in the night, and we must remain as we are in 13 this Suez harbour for twenty-four hours! This is a very beautiful 14 natural harbour, surrounded almost on three sides by sandy mounds 15 and hillocks, and the water also is very deep. There are 16 innumerable fish and sharks swimming in it. Nowhere else on earth 17 are sharks in such plenty as in this port and in the port of Sydney, in 18 Australia--they are ready to swallow men at the slightest 19 opportunity! Nobody dares to descend into the water. Men, too, on 20 their part are dead against the snakes and sharks and never let slip 21 an opportunity to kill them.

22 In the morning, even before breakfast, we came to learn that 23 big sharks were moving about behind the ship. I had never before 24 an opportunity to see live sharks--the last time I came, the ship 25 called at Suez for only a very short time, and that too, close to the 26 town. As soon as we heard of the sharks, we hastened to the spot.
27 The second class was at the stern of the ship, and from its deck, 28 crowds of men, women and children were leaning over the railings 29 to see the sharks. But our friends, the sharks, had moved off a little 30 when we appeared on the spot, which damped our spirit very much.
31 But we noticed that shoals of a kind of fish with bill-like heads were 32 swimming in the water, and there was a species of very tiny fish in 33 great abundance. Now and then a big fish, greatly resembling the 34 hilsa, was flitting like an arrow hither and thither. I thought, he 35 might be a young shark, but on inquiry I found it was not. Bonito 36 was his name. Of course I had formerly read of him, and this also I 37 had read that he was imported into Bengal from the Maldives as 38 dried fish, on big-sized boats. It was also a matter of report that his 39 meat was red and very tasteful. And we were now glad to see his 40 energy and speed. Such a large fish was flitting through the water 41 like an arrow, and in that glassy sea-water every movement of his 42 body was noticeable. We were thus watching the bonito's circuits 43 and the restless movements of the tiny fish for twenty minutes of 44 half an hour. Half an hour--three quarters--we were almost tired of 45 it, when somebody announced--there he was. About a dozen people 46 shouted, "There he is coming!" Casting my eyes I found that at 47 some distance a huge black thing was moving towards us, six or 48 seven inches below the surface of the water. Gradually the thing 49 approached nearer and nearer. The huge flat head was visible; now 50 massive his movement, there was nothing of the bonito's flitting in 51 it. But once he turned his head, a big circuit was made. A gigantic 52 fish; on he comes in a solemn gait, while in front of him are one or 53 two small fish, and a number of tiny ones are playing on his back

1 and all about his body. Some of them are holding fast on to his neck.
2 He is your shark with retinue and followers. The fish which are 3 preceding him are called the pilot fish. Their duty is to show the 4 shark his prey, and perhaps be favoured with crumbs of his meal.
5 But as one looks at the terrible gaping jaws of the shark, one
6 doubts whether they succeed much in this latter respect. The fish 7 which are moving about the shark and climbing on his back, are the 8 "suckers". About their chest there is a flat, round portion, nearly 9 four by two inches, which is furrowed and grooved, like the rubber 10 soles of many English shoes. That portion the fish applies to the 11 shark's body and sticks to it; that makes them appear as if riding on 12 the shark's body and back. They are supposed to live on the worms 13 etc. that grow on the shark's body. The shark must always have his 14 retinue of these two classes of fish. And he never injures them, 15 considering them perhaps as his followers and companions. One of 16 these fish was caught with a small hook and line. Someone slightly 17 pressed the sole of his shoe against its chest and when he raised his 18 foot, it too was found to adhere to it. In the same way it sticks to the 19 body of the shark.

20 The second class passengers have got their mettle highly 21 roused. One of them is a military man and his enthusiasm knows no 22 bounds. Rummaging the ship they found out a terrible hook--it 23 outvied the hooks that are used in Bengal for recovering water-pots
24 that have accidentally dropped into wells. To this they tightly 25 fastened about two pounds of meat with a strong cord, and a stout 26 cable was tied to it. About six feet from it, a big piece of wood was 27 attached to act as a float. Then the hook with the float was dropped 28 in the water. Below the ship a police boat was keeping guard ever 29 since we came, lest there might be any contact between us and the 30 people ashore. On this boat there were two men comfortably 31 asleep, which made them much despised in the eyes of the 32 passengers. At this moment they turned out to be great friends.
33 Roused by the tremendous shouts, our friend, the Arab, rubbed his 34 eyes and stood up. He was preparing to tuck up his dress, 35 imagining some trouble was at hand, when he came to understand 36 that so much shouting was nothing more than a request to him to 37 remove the beam that was meant as a float to catch the shark, 38 along with the hook, to a short distance. Then he breathed a sigh of 39 relief, and grinning from ear to ear he managed to push the float to 40 some distance by means of a pole. While we in eagerness stood on 41 tiptoe, leaning over the railing, and anxiously waited for the shark 42 "watching his advent with restless eyes";²¹² and as is always the 43 case with those for whom somebody may be waiting with suspense, 44 we suffered a similar fate--in other words, "the Beloved did not turn 45 up". But all miseries have an end, and suddenly about a hundred 46 yards from the ship, something of the shape of a watercarrier's 47 leather bag, but much larger, appeared above the surface of the 48 water, and immediately there was the hue and cry, "There is the 49 shark!" "Silence, you boys and girls! --the shark may run off".
50 --"Hallo, you people there, why don't you doff your white hats for a 51 while? --the shark may shy". --While shouts like these were reaching ²¹² ?From Jayadeva, the famous Sanskrit Poet of Bengal.

1 the ear, the shark, denizen of the salt sea, rushed close by, like a 2 boat under canvas, with a view to doing justice to the lump of pork
3 attached to the hook. Seven or eight feet more and the shark's jaws 4 would touch the bait. But that massive tail moved a little, and the 5 straight course was transformed into a curve. Alas, the shark has 6 made off! Again the tail slightly moved, and the gigantic body
7 turned and faced the hook. Again he is rushing on--gaping, there, 8 he is about to snap at the bait! Again the cursed tail moved, and the 9 shark wheeled his body off to a distance. Again he is taking a circuit 10 and coming on, he is gaping again; look now, he has put the bait 11 into his jaws, there, he is tilting on his side; yes, he has swallowed 12 the bait--pull, pull, forty or fifty pull together, pull on with all your 13 might! What tremendous strength the fish has, what struggles he 14 makes, how widely he gapes! Pull, pull! He is about to come above 15 the surface, there he is turning in the water, and again turning on 16 his side, pull, pull! Alas, he has extricated himself from the bait!
17 The shark has fled. Indeed, what fussy people you all are! You could 18 not wait to give him some time to swallow the bait! And you were 19 impatient enough to pull so soon as he turned on his side! However, 20 it is no use crying over spilt milk. The shark was rid of the hook and 21 made a clean run ahead. Whether he taught the pilot fish a good 22 lesson, we have got no information, but the fact was that the shark 23 was clean off. And he was tiger-like, having black stripes over his 24 body like a tiger. However, the "Tiger", with a view to avoiding the 25 dangerous vicinity of the hook, disappeared, with his retinue of 26 pilots and suckers.

27 But there is no need of giving up hopes altogether, for there, 28 just by the side of the retreating "Tiger" is coming on another, a 29 huge flat-headed creature! Alas, sharks have no language!
30 Otherwise "Tiger" would surely have made an open breast of his 31 secret to the newcomer and thus warned him. He would certainly 32 have said, "Hallo, my friend, beware there is a new creature come 33 over there, whose flesh is very tasteful and savoury, but what hard 34 bones! Well, I have been born and brought up as a shark these 35 many years and have devoured lots of animals--living, dead, and 36 half-dead, and filled my stomach with lots of bones, bricks, and 37 stones, and wooden stuff; but compared with these bones they are 38 as butter, I tell you. Look, what has become of my teeth and jaws".
39 And along with this he would certainly have shown to the new-40 comer those gaping jaws reaching almost to half his body. And the 41 other too, with characteristic experience of maturer years, would 42 have prescribed for him one or other of such infallible marine 43 remedies as the bile of one fish, the spleen of another, the cooling 44 broth of oysters, and so forth. But since nothing of the kind took 45 place, we must conclude that either the sharks are sadly in want of 46 a language, or that they may have one, but it is impossible to talk 47 under water; therefore until some characters fit for the sharks are 48 discovered, it is impossible to use that language. Or it may be that 49 "Tiger", mixing too much in human company, has imbibed a bit of 50 human disposition too, and therefore, instead of giving out the real 51 truth, asked "Flat-head", with a smile, if he was doing well, and 52 bade him good-bye: "Shall I alone be befooled?"

1 Then Bengali poem has it, "First goes Bhagiratha blowing his 2 conch, then comes Ganga bringing up the rear" etc. Well, of course, 3 no blowing of the conch is heard, but first are going the pilot fish, 4 and behind them comes "Flat-head", moving his massive body, while 5 round about him dance the suckers. Ah, who can resist such a 6 tempting bait? For a space of five yards on all sides, the surface of 7 the sea is glossy with a film of fat, and it is for "Flat-head" himself
8 to say how far the fragrance thereof has spread. Besides, what a 9 spectacle it is! White, and red, and yellow--all in one place! It was 10 real English pork, tied round a huge black hook, heaving under 11 water most temptingly!

12 Silence now, every one--don't move about, and see that you 13 don't be too hasty. But take care to keep close to the cable. There, 14 he is moving near the hook, and examining the bait, putting it in his 15 jaws! Let him do so. Hush--now he has turned on his side--look, he 16 is swallowing it whole, silence--give him time to do it. Then, as 17 "Flat-head", turning on his side, had leisurely swallowed the bait, 18 and was about to depart, immediately there was the pull behind! " 19 Flat-head", astonished, jerked his head and wanted to throw the 20 bait off, but it made matters worse! The hook pierced him, and from 21 above, men, young and old, began to pull violently at the cable.
22 Look, the head of the shark is above water--pull, brothers, pull!
23 There, about half the shark's body is above water! Oh, what jaws! It 24 is all jaws and throat, it seems! Pull on! Ah, the whole of it is clear 25 of water. There, the hook has pierced his jaws through and 26 through--pull on! Wait, wait! --Hallo, you Arab Police boatman, will 27 you tie a string round his tail? --He is such a huge monster that it is 28 difficult to haul him up otherwise. Take care, brother, a blow from 29 that tail is enough to fracture a horse's leg! Pull on--Oh, how very 30 heavy! Good God, what have we here! Indeed, what is it that hangs 31 down from under the shark's belly? Are they not the entrails! His 32 own weight has forced them out! All right, cut them off, and let 33 them drop into the sea, that will make the weight lighter. Pull on, 34 brothers! Oh, it is a fountain of blood! No, there is no use trying to 35 save the clothes. Pull, he is almost within reach. Now, set him on 36 the deck; take care, brother, be very careful, if he but charges on 37 anybody, he will bite off a whole arm! And beware of that tail! Now, 38 slacken the rope--thud! Lord! What a big shark! And with what a 39 thud he fell on board the ship! Well, one cannot be too careful-- 40 strike his head with that beam--hallo, military man, you are a 41 soldier, you are the man to do it. --"Quite so". The military 42 passenger, with body and clothes splashed with blood, raised the 43 beam and began to land heavy blows on the shark's head. And the 44 women went on shrieking, "Oh dear! How cruel! Don't kill him!"
45 and so forth, but never stopped seeing the spectacle. Let that 46 gruesome scene end here. How the shark's belly was ripped open, 47 how a torrent of blood flowed, how the monster continued to shake 48 and move for a long time even after his entrails and heart had been 49 taken off and his body dismembered, how from his stomach a heap
50 of bones, skin, flesh, and wood, etc. came out--let all these topics 51 go. Suffice it to say, that I had my meal almost spoilt that day-- 52 everything smelt of that shark.

1 This Suez Canal is a triumph of canal engineering. It was dug 2 by a French engineer, Ferdinand de Lesseps. By connecting the 3 Mediterranean with the Red Sea, it has greatly facilitated the 4 commerce between Europe and India.

5 Of all the causes which have worked for the present state of 6 human civilisation from the ancient times, the commerce of India is 7 perhaps the most important. From time immemorial India has 8 beaten all other countries in point of fertility and commercial 9 industries. Up till a century ago, the whole of the world's demand 10 for cotton cloth, cotton, jute, indigo, lac, rice, diamonds, and pearls, 11 etc. used to be supplied from India. Moreover, no other country 12 could produce such excellent silk and woollen fabrics, like the 13 kincob etc. as India. Again, India has been the land of various 14 spices such as cloves, cardamom, pepper, nutmeg, and mace.
15 Naturally, therefore, from very ancient times, whatever country 16 became civilised at any particular epoch, depended upon India for 17 those commodities. This trade used to follow two main routes--one 18 was through land, via Afghanistan and Persia, and the other was by 19 sea--through the Red Sea. After his conquest of Persia, Alexander 20 the Great despatched a general named Niarchus to explore a sea-21 route, passing by the mouth of the Indus, across the ocean, and 22 through the Red Sea. Most people are ignorant of the extent to 23 which the opulence of ancient countries like Babylon, Persia, 24 Greece, and Rome depended on Indian commerce. After the 25 downfall of Rome, Baghdad in Mohammedan territory, and Venice 26 and Genoa in Italy, became the chief Western marts of Indian 27 commerce. And when the Turks made themselves masters of the 28 Roman Empire and closed the trade-route to India for the Italians, 29 then Christopher Columbus (Christobal Colon), a Spaniard or 30 Genoese, tried to explore a new route to India across the Atlantic, 31 which resulted in the discovery of the American continent. Even 32 after reaching America, Columbus could not get rid of the delusion 33 that it was India. It is therefore that the aborigines of America are 34 to this day designated as Indians. In the Vedas we find both names, 35 "Sindhu" and "Indu", for the Indus; the Persians transformed them 36 into "Hindu", and the Greeks into "Indus", whence we derived the 37 words "India" and "Indian". With the rise of Mohammedanism the 38 word "Hindu" became degraded and meant "a dark-skinned fellow", 39 as is the case with the word "native" now.

40 The Portuguese, in the meantime, discovered a new route to 41 India, doubling Africa. The fortune of India smiled on Portugal--then 42 came the turn of the French, the Dutch, the Danes, and the English.
43 Indian commerce, Indian revenue and all are now in the possession 44 of the English; it is therefore that they are the foremost of all 45 nations now. But now, Indian products are being grown in countries 46 like America and elsewhere, even better than in India, and she has 47 therefore lost something of her prestige. This the Europeans are 48 unwilling to admit. That India, the India of "natives", is the chief 49 means and resources of their wealth and civilisation, is a fact which 50 they refuse to admit, or even understand. We too, on our part, must 51 not cease to bring it home to them.

52 Just weigh the matter in your mind. Those uncared-for lower

1 classes of India--the peasants and weavers and the rest, who have 2 been conquered by foreigners and are looked down upon by their 3 own people--it is they who from time immemorial have been 4 working silently, without even getting the remuneration of their 5 labours! But what great changes are taking place slowly, all over 6 the world, in pursuance of nature's law! Countries, civilisations, and 7 supremacy are undergoing revolutions. Ye labouring classes of 8 India, as a result of your silent, constant labours Babylon, Persia, 9 Alexandria, Greece, Rome, Venice, Genoa, Baghdad, Samargand, 10 Spain, Portugal, France, Denmark, Holland, and England have 11 successively attained supremacy and eminence! And you? --Well, 12 who cares to think of you! My dear Swami, your ancestors wrote a 13 few philosophical works, penned a dozen or so epics, or built a 14 number of temples--that is all, and you rend the skies with 15 triumphal shouts; while those whose heart's blood has contributed 16 to all the progress that has been made in the world--well, who cares 17 to praise them? The world-conquering heroes of spirituality, war, 18 and poetry are in the eyes of all, and they have received the 19 homage of mankind. But where nobody looks, no one gives a word 20 of encouragement, where everybody hates--that living amid such 21 circumstances and displaying boundless patience, infinite love, and 22 dauntless practicality, our proletariat are doing their duty in their 23 homes day and night, without the slightest murmur--well, is there 24 no heroism in this? Many turn out to be heroes when they have got 25 some great task to perform. Even a coward easily gives up his life, 26 and the most selfish man behaves disinterestedly, when there is a 27 multitude to cheer them on; but blessed indeed is he who manifests 28 the same unselfishness and devotion to duty in the smallest of acts, 29 unnoticed by all--and it is you who are actually doing this ye ever-30 trampled labouring classes of India! I bow to you.

31 This Suez Canal is also a thing of remote antiquity. During 32 the reign of the Pharaohs in Egypt, a number of lagoons were 33 connected with one another by a channel and formed a canal
34 touching both seas. During the rule of the Roman Empire in Egypt 35 also, attempts were made now and then to keep that channel open.
36 Then the Mohammedan General Amru, after his conquest of Egypt, 37 dug out the sand and changed certain features of it, so that it 38 became almost transformed.

39 After that nobody paid much attention to it. The present 40 canal was excavated by Khedive Ismail of Egypt, the Viceroy of the 41 Sultan of Turkey, according to the advice of the French, and mostly 42 through French capital. The difficulty with this canal is that owing 43 to its running through a desert, it again and again becomes filled 44 with sand. Only one good-sized merchant-ship can pass through it 45 at a time, and it is said that very big men-of-war or merchantmen 46 can never pass through it. Now, with a view to preventing incoming 47 and outgoing ships from colliding against each other, the whole 48 canal has been divided into a number of sections, and at both ends 49 of each section there are open spaces broad enough for two or 50 three ships to lie at anchor together. The Head Office is at the 51 entrance to the Mediterranean, and there are stations in every 52 section like railway stations. As soon as a ship enters the canal,

1 messages are continually wired to this Head Office, where reports 2 of how many ships are coming in and how many are going out, with 3 their position at particular moments are telegraphed, and are 4 marked on a big map. To prevent one ship confronting another, no 5 ship is allowed to leave any station without a line-clear.

6 The Suez Canal is in the hands of the French. Though the 7 majority of shares of the Canal Company are now owned by the 8 English, yet, by a political agreement, the entire management rests 9 with the French.

10 Now comes the Mediterranean. There is no more memorable 11 region than this, outside India. It marks the end of Asia, Africa, and 12 of ancient civilisation. One type of manners and customs and modes 13 of living ends here and another type of features and temperament, 14 food and dress, customs and habits begins--we enter Europe. Not 15 only this, but here also is the great centre of that historical 16 admixture of colours, races, civilisations, culture, and customs, 17 which extending over many centuries has led to the birth of modern 18 civilisation. That religion, and culture, and civilisation, and 19 extraordinary prowess which today have encircled the globe were 20 born here in the regions surrounding the Mediterranean. There, on 21 the south, is the very, very ancient Egypt, the birthplace of 22 sculpture--overflowing in wealth and food-stuffs; on the east is Asia 23 Minor, the ancient arena of the Phoenician, Philistine, Jewish, 24 valiant Babylonian, Assyrian, and Persian civilisations; and on the 25 north, the land where the Greeks--wonders of the world--flourished 26 in ancient times.

27 Well, Swami, you have had enough of countries, and rivers, 28 and mountains, and seas--now listen to a little of ancient history.
29 Most wonderful are these annals of ancient days; not fiction, but 30 truth--the true history of the human race. These ancient countries 31 were almost buried in oblivion for eternity--the little that people 32 knew of them consisted almost exclusively of the curiously fictitious 33 compositions of the ancient Greek historians, or the miraculous 34 descriptions of the Jewish mythology called the Bible. Now the 35 inscriptions on ancient stones, buildings, rooms, and tiles, and 36 linguistic analysis are voluble in their narration of the history of 37 those countries. This recounting has but just commenced, but even 38 now it has unearthed most wonderful tales, and who knows what 39 more it will do in future? Great scholars of all countries are 40 puzzling their heads day and night over a bit of rock inscription or a 41 broken utensil, a building or a tile, and discovering the tales of 42 ancient days sunk in oblivion.

43 When the Mohammedan leader Osman occupied
44 Constantinople, and the banner of Islam began to flutter 45 triumphantly over the whole of eastern Europe, then those books 46 and that learning and culture of the ancient Greeks which were 47 kept hidden with their powerless descendants spread over western 48 Europe in the wake of the retreating Greeks. Though subjected for 49 a long time to the Roman rule, the Greeks were the teachers of the 50 Romans in point of learning and culture. So much so that owing to 51 the Greeks embracing Christianity and the Christian Bible being 52 written in the Greek tongue, Christianity got a hold over the whole

1 Roman Empire. But the ancient Greeks, whom we call the Yavanas,
2 and who were the first teachers of European civilisation, attained
3 the zenith of their culture long before the Christians. Ever since 4 they became Christians, all their learning and culture was 5 extinguished. But as some part of the culture of their ancestors is 6 still preserved in the Hindu homes, so it was with the Christian 7 Greeks; these books found their way all over Europe. This it was 8 that gave the first impetus to civilisation among the English, 9 German, French, and other nations. There was a craze for learning 10 the Greek language and Greek arts. First of all, they swallowed 11 everything that was in those books. Then, as their own intelligence 12 began to brighten up, and sciences began to develop, they 13 commenced researches as to the date, author, subject, and 14 authenticity, etc. of those books. There was no restriction whatever 15 in passing free opinions on all books of the non-Christian Greeks, 16 barring only the scriptures of the Christians, and consequently 17 there cropped up a new science--that of external and internal 18 criticism.

19 Suppose, for instance, that it is written in a book that such 20 and such an incident took place on such and such a date. But must 21 a thing be accepted as authentic, simply because some one has 22 been pleased to write something about it in a book? It was 23 customary with people, specially of those times, to write many 24 things from imagination; moreover, they had very scanty knowledge 25 about nature, and even of this earth we live in. All these raised 26 grave doubts as to the authenticity of the subject-matter of a book.
27 Suppose, for instance, that a Greek historian has written that on 28 such and such a date there was a king in India called 29 Chandragupta. If now, the books of India, too, mention that king 30 under that particular date, the matter is certainly proved to a great 31 extent. If a few coins of Chandragupta's reign be found, or a 32 building of his time which contains references to him, the veracity 33 of the matter is then assured.

34 Suppose another book records a particular incident as taking 35 place in the reign of Alexander the Great, but there is mention of 36 one or two Roman Emperors in such a way that they cannot be 37 taken as interpolations--then that book is proved not to belong to 38 Alexander's time.

39 Or again, language. Every language undergoes some change 40 through the lapse of time, and authors have also their own peculiar 41 style. If in any book there is suddenly introduced a description 42 which has no bearing on the subject, and is in a style quite different 43 from the author's, it will readily be suspected as an interpolation.
44 Thus a new science of ascertaining the truth about a book, by 45 means of doubting and testing and proving in various ways, was 46 discovered.

47 To add to this, modern science began, with rapid strides, to 48 throw new light on things from all sides, with the results that any 49 book that contained a reference to supernatural incidents came to 50 be wholly disbelieved.

51 To crown all, there were the entrance of the tidal wave of 1 Sanskrit into Europe and the deciphering of ancient lapidary 2 inscriptions found in India, on the banks of the Euphrates, and in 3 Egypt, as well as the discovery of temples etc., hidden for ages 4 under the earth or on hill-sides, and the correct reading of their 5 history.

6 I have already said that this new science of research set the 7 Bible or the New Testament books quite apart. Now there are no 8 longer the tortures of the Inquisition, there is only the fear of social 9 obloquy; disregarding that, many scholars have subjected those 10 books also to a stringent analysis. Let us hope that as they 11 mercilessly hack the Hindu and other scriptures to pieces, they will 12 in time show the same moral courage towards the Jewish and 13 Christian scriptures also. Let me give an illustration to explain why 14 I say this. Maspero, a great savant and a highly reputed author on 15 Egyptology, has written a voluminous history of the Egyptians and 16 Babylonians entitled Histoire Ancienne Orientale. A few years ago
17 I read an English translation of the book by an English 18 archaeologist. This time, on my asking a Librarian of the British 19 Museum about certain books on Egypt and Babylon, Maspero's 20 book was mentioned. And when he learnt that I had with me an 21 English translation of the book, he said that it would not do, for the 22 translator was a rather bigoted Christian, and wherever Maspero's 23 researches hit Christianity in any way, he (the translator) had 24 managed to twist and torture those passages! He recommended me 25 to read the book in original French. And on reading I found it was 26 just as he had said--a terrible problem indeed! You know very well 27 what a queer thing religious bigotry is; it makes a mess of truth and 28 untruth. Thenceforth my faith in the translations of those research 29 works has been greatly shaken.

30 Another new science has developed--ethnology, that is, the 31 classification of men from an examination of their colour, hair, 32 physique, shape of the head, language, and so forth.

33 The Germans, though masters in all sciences, are specially 34 expert in Sanskrit and ancient Assyrian culture; Benfey and other 35 German scholars are illustrations of this. The French are skilled in 36 Egyptology-scholars like Maspero are French. The Dutch are 37 famous for their analysis of Jewish and ancient Christian religions-- 38 writers like Kuenen have attained a world-celebrity. The English 39 inaugurate many sciences and then leave off.

40 Let me now tell you some of the opinions of these scholars. If 41 you do not like their views, you may fight them; but pray, do not lay 42 the blame on me.

43 According to the Hindus, Jews, ancient Babylonians, 44 Egyptians, and other ancient races, all mankind have descended 45 from the same primaeval parents. People do not much believe in 46 this now.

47 Have you ever seen jet-black, flat-nosed, thick-lipped, curly-48 haired Kaffirs with receding foreheads? And have you seen the 49 Santals, and Andamanese, and Bhils with about the same features, 50 but of shorter stature, and with hair less curly? The first class are 51 called Negroes; these live in Africa. The second class are called

1 Negritos (little Negroes); in ancient times these used to inhabit 2 certain parts of Arabia, portions of the banks of the Euphrates, the 3 southern part of Persia, the whole of India, the Andamans, and 4 other islands, even as far as Australia. In modern times they are to 5 be met with in certain forests and jungles of India, in the 6 Andamans, and in Australia.

7 Have you seen the Lepchas, Bhutias, and Chinese--white or 8 yellow in colour, and with straight black hair? They have dark eyes-- 9 but these are set so as to form an angle--scanty beard and 10 moustache, a flat face, and very prominent malar bones. Have you 11 seen the Nepalese, Burmese, Siamese, Malays, and Japanese? They 12 have the same shape, but have shorter stature.

13 The two species of this type are called Mongols and 14 Mongoloids (little Mongols). The Mongolians have now occupied the 15 greater part of Asia. It is they who, divided into many branches 16 such as the Mongols, Kalmucks, Huns, Chinese, Tartars, Turks, 17 Manchus, Kirghiz, etc. lead a nomadic life, carrying tents, and 18 tending sheep, goats, cattle, and horses, and whenever an 19 opportunity occurs, sweep like a swarm of locusts and unhinge the 20 world. These Chinese and Tibetans alone are an exception to this.
21 They are also known by the name of Turanians. It is the Turan 22 which you find in the popular phrase, "Iran and Turan."

23 A race of a dark colour but with straight hair, straight nose 24 and straight dark eyes, used to inhabit ancient Egypt and ancient 25 Babylonia and now live all over India, specially in the southern 26 portion; in Europe also one finds traces of them in rare places. They 27 form one race, and have the technical name of Dravidians.

28 Another race has white colour, straight eyes, but ears and 29 noses curved and thick towards the tip, receding foreheads, and 30 thick lips--as, for instance, the people of north Arabia, the modern 31 Jews and the ancient Babylonians, Assyrians, Phoenicians, etc.; 32 their languages also have a common stock; these are called the 33 Semitic race.

34 And those who speak a language allied to Sanskrit, who have 35 straight noses, mouths, and eyes, a white complexion, black or 36 brown hair, dark or blue eyes, are called Aryans.

37 All the modern races have sprung from an admixture of these 38 races. A country which has a preponderance of one or other of 39 these races, has also its language and physiognomy mostly like 40 those of that particular race.

41 It is not a generally accepted theory in the West that a warm 42 country produces dark complexion and a cold country white 43 complexion. Many are of opinion that the existing shades between 44 black and white have been the outcome of a fusion of races.

45 According to scholars, the civilisations of Egypt and ancient 46 Babylonia are the oldest. Houses and remains of buildings are to be 47 met with in these countries dating 6,000 B.C. or even earlier. In 48 India the oldest building that may have been discovered date back 49 to Chandragupta's time at the most; that is, only 300 B.C. Houses of greater antiquity have not yet been discovered.²¹³ But there are books, etc., of a far earlier date, which one cannot find in any other country. Pandit Bal Gangadhar Tilak has brought evidence to show that the Vedas of the Hindus existed in the present form at least five thousand years before the Christian era.

The borders of this Mediterranean were the birthplace of that European civilisation which has now conquered the world. On these shores the Semitic races such as the Egyptians, Babylonians, Phoenicians, and Jews, and the Aryan races such as the Persians, Greeks, and Romans, fused together--to form the modern European civilisation.

A big stone slab with inscriptions on it, called the Rosetta Stone, was discovered in Egypt. On this there are inscriptions in hieroglyphics, below which there is another kind of writing, and below them all there are inscriptions resembling Greek characters. A scholar conjectured that those three sets of inscriptions represented the same thing, and he deciphered these ancient Egyptian inscriptions with the help of Coptic characters--the Copts being the Christian race who yet inhabit Egypt and who are known as the descendants of the ancient Egyptians. Similarly the cuneiform characters inscribed on the bricks and tiles of the Babylonians were also gradually deciphered. Meanwhile certain Indian inscriptions in plough-shaped characters were discovered as belonging to the time of Emperor Asoka. No earlier inscriptions than these have been discovered in India.²¹⁴ The hieroglyphics inscribed on various kinds of temples, columns, and sarcophagi all over Egypt are being gradually deciphered and making Egyptian antiquity more lucid.

The Egyptians entered into Egypt from a southern country called Punt, across the seas. Some say that that Punt is the modern Malabar, and that the Egyptians and Dravidians belong to the same race. Their first king was named Menes, and their ancient religion too resembles in some parts our mythological tales. The god Shibu was enveloped by the goddess Nui; later on another god Shu came and forcibly removed Nui. Nui's body became the sky, and her two hands and two legs became the four pillars of that sky. And Shibu became the earth. Osiris and Isis, the son and daughter of Nui, are the chief god and goddess in Egypt, and their son Horus is the object of universal worship. These three used to be worshipped in a group. Isis, again, is worshipped in the form of the cow.

Like the Nile on earth there is another Nile in the sky, of which the terrestrial Nile is only a part. According to the Egyptians, the Sun travels round the earth in a boat; now and then a serpent called Ahi devours him, then an eclipse takes place. The Moon is periodically attacked by a boar and torn to pieces, from which he ²¹³ ?The ancient remains at Harappa, Mohenjo-daro, etc., in the Indus Valley in Northwest India, which prove the existence of an advanced city civilisation in India dating back to more than 3000 B.C., were not dug out before 1922.--Ed.

1 takes fifteen days to recover. The deities of Egypt are some of them 2 jackal-faced, some hawk-faced, others cow-faced, and so on.

3 Simultaneously with this, another civilisation had its rise on 4 the banks of the Euphrates. Baal, Moloch, Istarte, and Damuzi were 5 the chief of deities here. Istarte fell in love with a shepherd named 6 Damuzi. A boar killed the latter and Istarte went to Hades, below 7 the earth, in search of him. There she was subjected to various 8 tortures by the terrible goddess Alat. At last Istarte declared that 9 she would no more return to earth unless she got Damuzi back. This 10 was a great difficulty; she was the goddess of sex-impulse, and 11 unless she went back, neither men, nor animals, nor vegetables
12 would multiply. Then the gods made a compromise that every year 13 Damuzi was to reside in Hades for four months and live on earth
14 during the remaining eight months. Then Istarte returned, there 15 was the advent of spring and a good harvest followed.

16 Thus Damuzi again is known under the name of Adunoi or 17 Adonis! The religion of all the Semitic races, with slight minor 18 variations, was almost the same. The Babylonians, Jews, 19 Phoenicians, and Arabs of a later date used the same form of 20 worship. Almost every god was called Moloch--the word which 21 persists to this day in the Bengali language as Malik (ruler), Mulluk 22 (kingdom) and so forth--or Baal; but of course there were minor 23 differences. According to some, the god called Alat afterwards 24 turned into Allah of the Arab.

25 The worship of these gods also included certain terrible and 26 abominable rites. Before Moloch or Baal children used to be burnt 27 alive. In the temple of Istarte the natural and unnatural satisfaction 28 of lust was the principal feature.

29 The history of the Jewish race is much more recent than that 30 of Babylon. According to scholars the scripture known as the Bible 31 was composed from 500 B.C. to several years after the Christian 32 era. Many portions of the Bible which are generally supposed to be 33 of earlier origin belong to a much later date. The main topics of the 34 Bible concern the Babylonians. The Babylonian cosmology and 35 description of the Deluge have in many parts been incorporated 36 wholesale into the Bible. Over and above this, during the rule of the 37 Persian Emperors in Asia Minor, many Persian doctrines found 38 acceptance among the Jews. According to the Old Testament, this 39 world is all; there is neither soul nor an after-life. In the New 40 Testament there is mention of the Parsee doctrines of an after-life 41 and resurrection of the dead, while the theory of Satan exclusively 42 belongs to the Parsis.

43 The principal feature of the Jewish religion is the worship of 44 Yave-Moloch. But this name does not belong to the Jewish 45 language; according to some it is an Egyptian word. But nobody 46 knows whence it came. There are descriptions in the Bible that the 47 Israelites lived confined in Egypt for a long time, but all this is 48 seldom accepted now, and the patriarchs such as Abraham, and 49 Isaac, and Joseph are proved to be mere allegories.

50 The Jews would not utter the name "Yave", in place of which 51 they used to say "Adunoi". When the Jews became divided into two

1 branches, Israel and Ephraim, two principal temples were 2 constructed in the two countries. In the temple that was built by the 3 Israelites in Jerusalem, an image of Yave, consisting of a male and 4 female figure united, was preserved in a coffer (ark), and there was 5 a big phallic column at the door. In Ephraim, Yave used to be 6 worshipped in the form of a gold-covered Bull.

7 In both places it was the practice to consign the eldest son 8 alive to the flames before the god, and a band of women used to live 9 in both the temples, within the very precincts of which they used to 10 lead most immoral lives and their earnings were utilised for temple 11 expenditure.

12 In course of time there appeared among the Jews a class of 13 men who used to invoke the presence of deities in their person by 14 means of music or dance. They were called Prophets. Many of 15 these, through association with the Persians, set themselves against 16 image-worship, sacrifice of sons, immorality, prostitution, and such 17 other practices. By degrees, circumcision took the place of human 18 sacrifice; and prostitution and image-worship etc. gradually 19 disappeared. In course of time from among these Prophets 20 Christianity had its rise.

21 There is a great dispute as to whether there ever was born a 22 man with the name of Jesus. Of the four books comprising the New 23 Testament, the Book of St. John has been rejected by some as 24 spurious. As to the remaining three, the verdict is that they have 25 been copied from some ancient book; and that, too, long after the 26 date ascribed to Jesus Christ.

27 Moreover, about the time that Jesus is believed to have been 28 born among the Jews themselves, there were born two historians, 29 Josephus and Philo. They have mentioned even petty sects among 30 the Jews, but not made the least reference to Jesus or the 31 Christians, or that the Roman Judge sentenced him to death on the 32 cross. Josephus' book had a single line about it, which has now been 33 proved to be an interpolation. The Romans used to rule over the 34 Jews at that time, and the Greeks taught all sciences and arts. They 35 have all written a good many things about the Jews, but made no
36 mention of either Jesus or the Christians.

37 Another difficulty is that the sayings, precepts, or doctrines
38 which the New Testament preaches were already in existence 39 among the Jews before the Christian era, having come from 40 different quarters, and were being preached by Rabbis like Hillel 41 and others. These are what scholars say; but they cannot, with 42 safety to their reputation, give oracular verdicts off-hand on their 43 own religion, as they are wont to do with regard to alien religions.
44 So they proceed slowly. This is what is called Higher Criticism.

45 The Western scholars are thus studying the religions, 46 customs, races, etc., of different and far-off countries. But we have 47 nothing of the kind in Bengali! And how is it possible? If a man after 48 ten years of hard labour translates a book of this kind, well, what 49 will he himself live upon, and where will he get the funds to publish 50 his book?

1 In the first place, our country is very poor, and in the second
2 place, there is practically no cultivation of learning. Shall such a 3 day dawn for our country when we shall be cultivating various kinds 4 of arts and sciences?--"She whose grace makes the dumb eloquent 5 and the lame to scale mountains"--She, the Divine Mother, only 6 knows!

7 The ship touched Naples--we reached Italy. The capital of 8 Italy is Rome--Rome, the capital of that ancient, most powerful 9 Roman Empire, whose politics, military science, art of colonisation, 10 and foreign conquest are to this day the model for the whole world!

11 After leaving Naples the ship called at Marseilles, and thence 12 straight at London.

13 You have already heard a good deal about Europe--what they 14 eat, how they dress, what are their manners and customs, and so 15 forth--so I need not write on this. But about European civilisation, 16 its origin, its relation to us, and the extent to which we should adopt 17 it--about such things I shall have much to say in future. The body is 18 no respecter of persons, dear brother, so I shall try to speak about 19 them some other time. Or what is the use? Well, who on earth can 20 vie with us (specially the Bengalis) as regards talking and 21 discussing? Show it in action if you can. Let your work proclaim, 22 and let the tongue rest. But let me mention one thing in passing, 23 viz. that Europe began to advance from the date that learning and 24 power began to flow in among the poor lower classes. Lots of 25 suffering poor people of other countries, cast off like refuse as it 26 were, find a house and shelter in America, and these are the very 27 backbone of America! It matters little whether rich men and 28 scholars listen to you, understand you, and praise or blame you-- 29 they are merely the ornaments, the decorations of the country! --It 30 is the millions of poor lower class people who are its life. Numbers 31 do not count, nor does wealth or poverty; a handful of men can 32 throw the world off its hinges, provided they are united in thought, 33 word, and deed--never forget this conviction. The more opposition 34 there is, the better. Does a river acquire velocity unless there is 35 resistance? The newer and better a thing is, the more opposition it 36 will meet with at the outset. It is opposition which foretells success.
37 Where there is no opposition there is no success either. Good-bye!

38 39 II

40 We have an adage among us that one that has a disc-like 41 pattern on the soles of his feet becomes a vagabond. I fear, I have 42 my soles inscribed all over with them. And there is not much room 43 for probability, either. I have tried my best to discover them by 44 scrutinising the soles, but all to no purpose--the feet have been 45 dreadfully cracked through the severity of cold, and no discs or 46 anything of the kind could be traced. However, when there is the 47 tradition, I take it for granted that my soles are full of those signs.
48 But the results are quite patent--it was my cherished desire to 49 remain in Paris for some time and study the French language and 50 civilisation; I left my old friends and acquaintances and put up with 51 a new friend, a Frenchman of ordinary means, who knew no

1 English, and my French--well, it was something quite extraordinary!
2 I had this in mind that the inability to live like a dumb man would 3 naturally force me to talk French, and I would attain fluency in that 4 language in no time--but on the contrary I am now on a tour 5 through Vienna, Turkey, Greece, Egypt, and Jerusalem! Well, who 6 can stem the course of the inevitable! --And this letter I am writing 7 to you from the last remaining capital of Mohammedan supremacy-- 8 from Constantinople!

9 I have three travelling companions--two of them French and 10 the third an American. The American is Miss MacLeod whom you 11 know very well; the French male companion is Monsieur Jules Bois, 12 a famous philosopher and litterateur of France; and the French lady 13 friend is the world-renowned singer, Mademoiselle Calve. "Mister" 14 is "Monsieur" in the French language, and "Miss" is 15 "Mademoiselle"--with a Z-sound. Mademoiselle Calve is the 16 foremost singer--opera singer--of the present day. Her musical 17 performances are so highly appreciated that she has an annual 18 income of three to four lakhs of rupees, solely from singing. I had 19 previously been acquainted with her. The foremost actress in the 20 West, Madame Sarah Bernhardt, and the foremost singer, Calve, 21 are both of them of French extraction, and both totally ignorant of 22 English, but they visit England and America occasionally and earn 23 millions of dollars by acting and singing. French is the language of 24 the civilised world, the mark of gentility in the West, and everybody 25 knows it; consequently these two ladies have neither the leisure nor 26 the inclination to learn English. Madame Bernhardt is an aged lady; 27 but when she steps on the stage after dressing, her imitation of the 28 age and sex of the role she plays is perfect! A girl or a boy-- 29 whatever part you want her to play, she is an exact representation 30 of that. And that wonderful voice!

31 People here say her voice has the ring of silver strings!
32 Madame Bernhardt has a special regard for India; she tells me 33 again and again that our country is "tres ancien, tres civilise"--very 34 ancient and very civilised. One year she performed a drama
35 touching on India, in which she set up a whole Indian street-scene 36 on the stage--men, women, and children, Sadhus and Nagas, and 37 everything--an exact picture of India! After the performance she 38 told me that for about a month she had visited every museum and 39 made herself acquainted with the men and women and their dress, 40 the streets and bathing ghats and everything relating to India.
41 Madame Bernhardt has a very strong desire to visit India. --"C'est 42 mon rave!" --It is the dream of my life", she says. Again, the Prince of 43 Wales²¹⁵ has promised to take her over to a tiger and elephant 44 hunting excursion. But then she said she must spend some two 45 lakhs of rupees if she went to India! She is of course in no want of 46 money. "La divine Sarah"--the divine Sarah--is her name; how can 47 she want money, she who never travels but by a special train! That 48 pomp and luxury many a prince of Europe cannot afford to indulge 49 in! One can only secure a seat for her performance by paying 50 double the fees, and that a month in advance! Well, she is not going ²¹⁵ ?His late Majesty King Edward VII, the then Prince of Wales.

1 to suffer want of money! But Sarah Bernhardt is given to spending 2 lavishly. Her travel to India is therefore put off for the present.

3 Mademoiselle Calve will not sing this winter, she will take a 4 rest and is going to temperate climates like Egypt etc. I am going as 5 her guest. Calve has not devoted herself to music alone, she is 6 sufficiently learned and has a great love for philosophical and 7 religious literature. She was born amidst very poor circumstances; 8 gradually, through her own genius and undergoing great labour and 9 much hardship, she has now amassed a large fortune and has 10 become the object of adoration of kings and potentates!

11 There are famous lady singers, such as Madame Melba, 12 Madame Emma Ames, and others; and very distinguished singers, 13 such as Jean de Reszke, Plancon, and the rest--all of whom earn two 14 or three lakhs of rupees a year! But with Calve's art is coupled a 15 unique genius. Extraordinary beauty, youth, genius, and a celestial 16 voice--all these have conspired to raise Calve to the forefront of all 17 singers. But there is no better teacher than pain and poverty! That 18 extreme penury and pain and hardship of childhood, a constant 19 struggle against which has won for Calve this victory, have 20 engendered a remarkable sympathy and a profound seriousness in 21 her life. Again, in the West, there are ample opportunities along 22 with the enterprising spirit. But in our country, there is a sad dearth 23 of opportunities, even if the spirit of enterprise be not absent. The 24 Bengali woman may be keen after acquiring education, but it comes 25 to nought for want of opportunities. And what is there to learn from 26 in the Bengali language? At best some poor novels and dramas!
27 Then again, learning is confined at present to a foreign tongue or to 28 Sanskrit and is only for the chosen few. In these Western countries 29 there are innumerable books in the mother-tongue; over and above 30 that, whenever something new comes out in a foreign tongue, it is 31 at once translated and placed before the public.

32 Monsieur Jules Bois is a famous writer; he is particularly an 33 adept in the discovery of historical truths in the different religions 34 and superstitions. He has written a famous book putting into 35 historical form the devil-worship, sorcery, necromancy, incantation, 36 and such other rites that were in vogue in Mediaeval Europe, and 37 the traces of those that obtain to this day. He is a good poet, and is 38 an advocate of the Indian Vedantic ideas that have crept into the 39 great French poets, such as Victor Hugo and Lamartine and others, 40 and the great German poets, such as Goethe, Schiller, and the rest.
41 The influence of Vedanta on European poetry and philosophy is very 42 great. Every good poet is a Vedantin, I find; and whoever writes 43 some philosophical treatise has to draw upon Vedanta in some 44 shape or other. Only some of them do not care to admit this 45 indebtedness, and want to establish their complete originality, as 46 Herbert Spencer and others, for instance. But the majority do 47 openly acknowledge. And how can they help it--in these days of 48 telegraphs and railways and newspapers? M. Jules Bois is very 49 modest and gentle, and though a man of ordinary means, he very 50 cordially received me as a guest into his house in Paris. Now he is 51 accompanying us for travel.

52 We have two other companions on the journey as far as

1 Constantinople--Pere Hyacinthe and his wife. Pere, i.e. Father
2 Hyacinthe was a monk of a strict ascetic section of the Roman 3 Catholic Church. His scholarship, extraordinary eloquence, and 4 great austerities won for him a high reputation in France and in the 5 whole Catholic Order. The great poet, Victor Hugh, used to praise 6 the French style of two men--one of these was Pere Hyacinthe. At 7 forty years of age Pere Hyacinthe fell in love with an American 8 woman and eventually married her. This created a great sensation, 9 and of course the Catholic Order immediately gave him up.
10 Discarding his ascetic garb of bare feet and loose-fitting cloak, Pere 11 Hyacinthe took up the hat, coat, and boots of the householder and 12 became--Monsieur Loyson. I, however, call him by his former name.
13 It is an old, old tale, and the matter was the talk of the whole 14 continent. The Protestants received him with honour, but the 15 Catholics began to hate him. The Pope, in consideration of his 16 attainments, was unwilling to part with him and asked him to 17 remain a Greek Catholic priest, and not abandon the Roman 18 Church. (The priests of the Greek Catholic section are allowed to 19 marry but once, but do not get any high position). Mrs. Loyson, 20 however, forcibly dragged him out of the Pope's fold. In course of 21 time they had children and grandchildren; now the very aged 22 Loyson is going to Jerusalem to try to establish cordial relations 23 among the Christians and Mussulmans. His wife had perhaps seen 24 many visions that Loyson might possibly turn out to be a second 25 Martin Luther and overthrow the Pope's throne--into the 26 Mediterranean. But nothing of the kind took place; and the only 27 result was, as the French say, that he was placed between two 28 stools. But Madame Loyson still cherishes her curious day-dreams!
29 Old Loyson is very affable in speech, modest, and of a distinctly 30 devotional turn of mind. Whenever he meets me, he holds pretty 31 long talks about various religions and creeds. But being of a 32 devotional temperament, he is a little afraid of the Advaita.
33 Madame Loyson's attitude towards me is, I fear, rather 34 unfavourable. When I discuss with the old man such topics as 35 renunciation and monasticism etc., all those long-cherished 36 sentiments wake up in his aged breast, and his wife most probably 37 smarts all the while. Besides, all French people, of both sexes, lay 38 the whole blame on the wife; they say, "That woman has spoilt one 39 of our great ascetic monks!" Madame Loyson is really in a sorry 40 predicament--specially as they live in Paris, in a Catholic country.
41 They hate the very sight of a married priest; no Catholic would ever 42 tolerate the preaching of religion by a man with family. And 43 Madame Loyson has a bit of animus also. Once she expressed her 44 dislike of an actress, saying, "It is very bad of you to live with Mr.
45 So-and-so without marrying him". The actress immediately retorted, 46 "I am a thousand times better than you. I live with a common man; 47 it may be, I have not legally married him; whereas you are a great 48 sinner--you have made such a great monk break his religious vows!
49 If you were so desperately in love with the monk, why, you might as 50 well live as his attending maid; but why did you bring ruin on him 51 by marrying him and thus converting him into a householder?"

52 However I hear all and keep silent. But old Pere Hyacinthe is 53 a really sweet-natured and peaceful man, he is happy with his wife

1 and family--and what can the whole French people have to say
2 against this? I think, everything would be settled if but his wife 3 climbed down a bit. But one thing I notice, viz. that men and 4 women, in every country, have different ways of understanding and 5 judging things. Men have one angle of vision, women another; men
6 argue from one standpoint, women from another. Men extenuate 7 women and lay the blame on men; while women exonerate men and 8 heap all the blame on women.

9 One special benefit I get from the company of these ladies
10 and gentlemen is that, except the one American lady, no one knows 11 English; talking in English is wholly eschewed,²¹⁶ and consequently 12 somehow or other I have to talk as well as hear French.

13 From Paris our friend Maxim has supplied me with letters of 14 introduction to various places, so that the countries may be 15 properly seen. Maxim is the inventor of the famous Maxim gun--the 16 gun that sends off a continuous round of balls and is loaded and 17 discharged automatically without intermission. Maxim is by birth an 18 American; now he has settled in England, where he has his gun-19 factories etc. Maxim is vexed if anybody alludes too frequently to 20 his guns in his presence and says, "My friend, have I done nothing 21 else except invent that engine of destruction?" Maxim is an admirer 22 of China and India and is a good writer on religion and philosophy 23 etc. Having read my works long since, he holds me in great--I 24 should say, excessive--admiration. He supplies guns to all kings and 25 rulers and is well known in every country, though his particular 26 friend is Li Hung Chang, his special regard is for China and his 27 devotion, for Confucianism. He is in the habit of writing 28 occasionally in the newspapers, under Chinese pseudonyms, 29 against the Christians--about what takes them to China, their real 30 motive, and so forth. He cannot at all bear the Christian 31 missionaries preaching their religion in China! His wife also is just 32 like her husband in her regard for China and hatred of Christianity!
33 Maxim has no issue; he is an old man, and immensely rich.

34 The tour programme was as follows--from Paris to Vienna, 35 and thence to Constantinople, by rail; then by steamer to Athens
36 and Greece, then across the Mediterranean to Egypt, then Asia 37 Minor, Jerusalem, and so on. The "Oriental Express" runs daily from 38 Paris to Constantinople, and is provided with sleeping, sitting, and 39 dining accommodations after the American model. Though not 40 perfect like the American cars, they are fairly well furnished. I am 41 to leave Paris by that train on October 24 (1900).

42 Today is the 23rd October; tomorrow evening I am to take 43 leave of Paris. This year Paris is a centre of the civilised world, for it 44 is the year of the Paris Exhibition, and there has been an 45 assemblage of eminent men and women from all quarters of the 46 globe. The master-minds of all countries have met today in Paris to 47 spread the glory of their respective countries by means of their 48 genius. The fortunate man whose name the bells of this great

1 ²¹⁶ ?It is not etiquette in the West to talk in company any language but one 2 known to all the party.
3

1 centre will ring today will at the same time crown his country also 2 with glory, before the world. And where art thou, my Motherland, 3 Bengal, in the great capital city swarming with German, French, 4 English, Italian, and other scholars? Who is there to utter thy 5 name? Who is there to proclaim thy existence? From among that 6 white galaxy of geniuses there stepped forth one distinguished 7 youthful hero to proclaim the name of our Motherland, Bengal--it 8 was the world-renowned scientist, Dr.²¹⁷ J. C. Bose! Alone, the 9 youthful Bengali physicist, with galvanic quickness, charmed the 10 Western audience today with his splendid genius; that electric 11 charge infused pulsations of new life into the half-dead body of the 12 Motherland! At the top of all physicists today is--Jagadish Chandra 13 Bose, an Indian, a Bengali! Well done, hero! Whichever countries, 14 Dr. Bose and his accomplished, ideal wife may visit, everywhere 15 they glorify India--add fresh laurels to the crown of Bengal. Blessed 16 pair!

17 And the daily reunion of numbers of distinguished men and 18 women which Mr. Leggett brought about at an enormous expense 19 in his Parisian mansion, by inviting them to at-homes--that too ends 20 today.

21 All types of distinguished personages--poets, philosophers, 22 scientists, moralists, politicians, singers, professors, painters, 23 artists, sculptors, musicians, and so on, of both sexes--used to be 24 assembled in Mr. Leggett's residence, attracted by his hospitality 25 and kindness. That incessant outflow of words, clear and limpid like 26 a mountainfall, that expression of sentiments emanating from all 27 sides like sparks of fire, bewitching music, the magic current of 28 thoughts from master minds coming into conflict with one another-- 29 which used to hold all spellbound, making them forgetful of time 30 and place--these too shall end.

31 Everything on earth has an end. Once again I took a round 32 over the Paris Exhibition today--this accumulated mass of dazzling 33 ideas, like lightning held steady as it were, this unique assemblage 34 of celestial panorama on earth!

35 It has been raining in Paris for the last two or three days.
36 During all this time the sun who is ever kind to France has held 37 back his accustomed grace. Perhaps his face has been darkened 38 over with clouds in disgust to witness the secretly flowing current 39 of sensuality behind this assemblage of arts and artists, learning 40 and learned folk, or perhaps he has hid his face under a pall of 41 cloud in grief over the impending destruction of this illusive heaven 42 of particoloured wood and canvas.

43 We too shall be happy to escape. The breaking up of the 44 Exhibition is a big affair; the streets of this heaven on earth, the 45 Eden-like Paris, will be filled with knee-deep mud and mortar. With 46 the exception of one or two main buildings, all the houses and their 47 parts are but a display of wood and rags and whitewashing--just as 48 the whole world is! And when they are demolished, the lime-dust 49 flies about and is suffocating; rags and sand etc. make the streets

²¹⁷ ?Later, Sir.

1 exceedingly dirty; and, if it rains in addition, it is an awful mess.

2 In the evening of October 24 the train left Paris. The night
3 was dark and nothing could be seen. Monsieur Bois and myself
4 occupied one compartment--and early went to bed. On awakening 5 from sleep we found we had crossed the French frontier and 6 entered German territory. I had already seen Germany thoroughly; 7 but Germany, after France, produces quite a jarring effect. "On the 8 one hand the moon is setting"²¹⁸--the world-encompassing France is 9 slowly consuming herself in the fire of contemplated retribution-- 10 while on the other hand, centralised, young, and mighty Germany 11 has begun her upward march above the horizon with rapid strides.
12 On one side is the artistic workmanship of the dark-haired,
13 comparatively short-statured, luxurious, highly civilised French 14 people, to whom art means life; and on the other, the clumsy 15 daubing, the unskilful manipulation, of tawny-haired, tall, gigantic 16 German. After Paris there is no other city in the Western world; 17 everywhere it is an imitation of Paris--or at least an attempt at it.
18 But in France that art is full of grace and ethereal beauty, while in 19 Germany,

1 ²¹⁸ ?{Sanskrit}--From Kalidasa's Shakuntala.
2

1 England, and America the imitation is coarse and clumsy.
2 Even the application of force on the part of the French is beautiful, 3 as it were, whereas the attempt of the Germans to display beauty 4 even is terrible. The countenance of French genius, even when 5 frowning in anger, is beautiful; that of German genius, even when 6 beaming with smiles, appears frightful, as it were. French 7 civilisation is full of nerve, like camphor or musk--it volatilises and 8 pervades the room in a moment; while German civilisation is full of 9 muscle, heavy like lead or mercury--it remains motionless and inert
10 wherever it lies. The German muscle can go on striking small blows 11 untiringly, till death; the French have tender, feminine bodies, but 12 when they do concentrate and strike, it is a sledge-hammer blow 13 and is irresistible.

14 The Germans are constructing after the French fashion big 15 houses and mansions, and placing big statues, equestrian figures, 16 etc. on top of them, but on seeing a double-storeyed German 17 building one is tempted to ask--is it a dwelling-house for men, or a 18 stable for elephants and camels, while one mistakes a five-storeyed 19 French stable for elephants and horses as a habitation for fairies.

20 America is inspired by German ideals; hundreds of thousand 21 Germans are in every town. The language is of course English, but 22 nevertheless America is being slowly Germanised. Germany is fast 23 multiplying her population and is exceptionally hardy. Today 24 Germany is the dictator to all Europe, her place is above all! Long 25 before all other nations, Germany has given man and woman 26 compulsory education, making illiteracy punishable by law, and 27 today she is enjoying the fruits of that tree. The German army is the 28 foremost in reputation, and Germany has vowed to become 29 foremost in her navy also. German manufacture of commodities has 30 beaten even England! German merchandise and the Germans 31 themselves are slowly obtaining a monopoly even in the English 32 colonies. At the behest of the German Emperor all the nations have 33 ungrudgingly submitted to the lead of the German Generalissimo in 34 the battle-fields of China!

35 The whole day the train rushed through Germany, till in the 36 afternoon it reached the frontiers of Austria, the ancient sphere of 37 German supremacy, but now an alien territory. There are certain 38 troubles in travelling through Europe. In every country enormous 39 duties are levied upon certain things, or some articles of 40 merchandise are the monopoly of the Government, as for instance, 41 tobacco. Again, in Russia and Turkey, you are totally forbidden to 42 enter without a royal passport; a passport you must always have.
43 Besides, in Russia and Turkey, all your books and papers will be 44 seized; and when on perusal the authorities are satisfied that there 45 is nothing in them against the Russian or Turkish Government and 46 religion, then only they will be returned, otherwise they will all be 47 confiscated. In other countries your tobacco is a source of great 48 trouble. You must open your chest, and trunk and packages for 49 inspection whether they contain tobacco etc. or not. And to come to 50 Constantinople one has to pass through two big States--Germany 51 and Austria, and many petty ones; the latter had formerly been 52 districts of Turkey, but later on the independent Christian kings

1 made a common cause and wrested as many of these Christian 2 districts from Mohammedan hands as they could. The bite of these 3 tiny ants is much worse than even that of the bigger ones.

4 In the evening of October 25 the train reached Vienna, the 5 capital of Austria. The members of the royal family in Austria and 6 Russia are styled Archdukes and Archduchesses. Two Archdukes
7 are to get down at Vienna by this train; and until they have done so 8 the other passengers are not allowed to get down. So we had to 9 wait. A few officers in laced uniform and some soldiers with 10 feathered caps were waiting for the Archdukes, who got down 11 surrounded by them. We too felt relieved and made haste to get 12 down and have our luggage passed. There were few passengers, 13 and it did not take us much time to show our luggage and have it 14 passed. A hotel had already been arranged for, and a man from the 15 hotel was waiting for us with a carriage. We reached the hotel duly.
16 It was out of the question to go out for sight-seeing during the 17 night; so the next morning we started to see the town. In all hotels, 18 and almost in all the countries of Europe except England and 19 Germany, the French fashion prevails. They eat twice a day like the 20 Hindus; in the morning by twelve o'clock, and in the evening by 21 eight. Early in the morning, that is, about eight or nine, they take a 22 little coffee. Tea is very little in vogue except in England and Russia.
23 The morning meal is called in French dejeuner--that is, breakfast, 24 and the evening meal diner--that is, dinner. Tea is very much in use 25 in Russia--it is too cold, and China is near enough. Chinese tea is 26 excellent, and most of it goes to Russia. The Russian mode of 27 drinking tea is also analogous to the Chinese, that is, without 28 mixing milk. Tea or coffee becomes injurious like poison if you mix 29 milk with it. The real tea-drinking races, the Chinese, Japanese, 30 Russians, and the inhabitants of Central Asia, take tea without milk.
31 Similarly, the original coffee-drinking races, such as the Turks, 32 drink coffee without milk. Only in Russia they put a slice of lemon 33 and a lump of sugar into the tea. The poor people place a lump of 34 sugar in the mouth and drink tea over it, and when one has finished 35 drinking, one passes that lump on to another, who repeats the 36 process.

37 Vienna is a small city after the model of Paris. But the 38 Austrians are German by race. The Austrian Emperor was hitherto 39 the Emperor of almost the whole of Germany. In the present times, 40 owing to the far-sightedness of King Wilhelm of Prussia, the 41 wonderful diplomacy of his able minister, Bismark, and the military 42 genius of General Von Moltke, the King of Prussia is the Emperor of 43 the whole of Germany barring Austria. Austria, shorn of her glory 44 and robbed of her power, is somehow maintaining her ancient name 45 and prestige. The Austrian royal line--the Hapsburg Dynasty--is the 46 oldest and most aristocratic dynasty in Europe. It was this Austrian 47 dynasty which hitherto rules Germany as Emperors--Germany 48 whose princes are seated on the thrones of almost all the countries 49 of Europe, and whose petty feudatory chiefs even occupy the 50 thrones of such powerful empires as England and Russia. The 51 desire for that honour and prestige Austria still cherishes in full, 52 only she lacks the power. Turkey is called "the sick man" of Europe;

1 then Austria should be called "the sick dame". Austria belongs to 2 the Catholic sect, and until recently the Austrian Empire used to be 3 called "the Holy Roman Empire". Modern Germany has a 4 preponderance of Protestants. The Austrian Emperor has always 5 been the right-hand man of the Pope, his faithful follower, and the 6 leader of the Roman Catholic sect. Now the Austrian Emperor is the 7 only Catholic Ruler in Europe; France, the eldest daughter of the 8 Catholic Church, is now a Republic, while Spain and Portugal are 9 downfallen! Italy has given only room enough for the Papal throne 10 to be established, robbing the Pope's entire splendour and 11 dominion; between the King of Italy and the Pope of Rome there is 12 no love lost, they cannot bear each other's sight. Rome, the capital 13 of the Pope, is now the capital of Italy. The King lives in the Pope's 14 ancient palace which he has seized, and the ancient Italian kingdom 15 of the Pope is now confined within the precincts of the Vatican. But 16 the Pope has still great influence in religious matters--and the chief 17 supporter of this is Austria. As a result of the struggle against 18 Austria--against the age-long thralldom of Austria, the ally of the 19 Pope--up rose modern Italy. Consequently Austria is against Italy-- 20 against, because she lost her. Unfortunately, however, young Italy, 21 under England's misdirection, set herself to create a powerful army 22 and navy. But where was the money? So, involved in debt, Italy is on 23 the way to ruin; and to her misfortune, she brought on herself a 24 fresh trouble by proceeding to extend her empire in Africa.
25 Defeated by the Abyssinian monarch, she has sunk down, bereft of 26 glory and prestige. Prussia in the meantime defeated Austria in a 27 great war and thrust her off to a great distance. Austria is slowly 28 dying, while Italy has similarly fettered herself by the misuse of her 29 new life.

30 The Austrian royal line is still the proudest of all European 31 royal families. It boasts of being a very ancient and very aristocratic 32 dynasty. The marriages and other connections of this line are 33 contracted with the greatest circumspection, and no such 34 relationship can be established with families that are not Roman 35 Catholic. It was the glamour of a connection with this line that led 36 to the fall of Napoleon the Great. Quaintly enough, he took it into 37 his head to marry a daughter of some noble royal family and found 38 a great dynasty through a succession of descendents. The hero 39 who, questioned as to his pedigree, had replied, "I owe the title to 40 my nobility to none--I am to be the founder of a great dynasty"--that 41 is to say, that he would originate a powerful dynasty, and that he 42 was not born to glorify himself with the borrowed plumes of some 43 ancestor--that hero fell into this abyss of family prestige.

1 The divorce of the Empress Josephine, the defeat of the 2 Austrian Emperor in battle and taking his daughter to wife, the 3 marriage of Bonaparte in great pomp with Marie Louise, the 4 Princess of Austria, the birth of a son, the installation of the new-5 born babe as the King of Rome, the fall of Napoleon, the enmity of 6 his father-in-law, Leipsic, Waterloo, St. Helena, Empress Marie 7 Louise living in her father's house with her child, the marriage of 8 Napoleon's royal consort with an ordinary soldier, the death of his 9 only son, the King of Rome, in the house of his maternal 10 grandfather--all these are well-known incidents of history.

11 Fallen in a comparatively weakened condition, France is now 12 ruminating on her past glory--nowadays there are very many books 13 on Napoleon. Dramatists like Sardou are writing many dramas on 14 Napoleon dead and gone; and actresses like Madame Bernhardt
15 and Rejane are performing those plays every night before bumper 16 houses. Recently Madame Bernhardt has created a great attraction 17 in Paris by playing a drama entitled L'aiglon (the Young Eagle).

18 The young Eagle is the only son of Napoleon, practically 19 interned in his maternal grandfather's residence, the Palace of 20 Vienna. The Austrian Emperor's minister, the Machiavellian 21 Metternich, is always careful not to allow the tales of heroism of his 22 father to enter into the boy's mind. But a few of Bonaparte's 23 veterans contrived to get themselves admitted into the boy's service 24 in the Schonbrunn Palace, incognito; their idea was to somehow 25 take the boy over to France and found the Bonaparte line by driving 26 out the Bourbons reinstated by the combined European potentates.
27 The child was the son of a great hero, and very soon that latent 28 heroism woke up in him to hear the glorious tales of battle of his 29 father. One day the boy fled from the Schonbrunn Palace
30 accompanied by the conspirators. But Metternich's keen intellect 31 had already scented the matter, and he cut off the journey. The son 32 of Bonaparte was carried back to the Schonbrunn Palace and the 33 Young Eagle, with his wings tied, as it were, very soon died of a 34 broken heart!

35 This Schonbrunn Palace is an ordinary palace. Of course, the 36 rooms etc. are lavishly decorated; in one of them perhaps one 37 meets with only Chinese workmanship, in another only works of 38 Hindu art, in a third the productions of some other country, and so 39 on; and the garden attached to the Palace is very charming indeed.
40 But all the people that now go to visit this Palace go there with the 41 object of seeing the room where Bonaparte's son used to lie, or his 42 study, or the room in which he died, and so forth. Many thoughtless 43 French men and women are interrogating the guard, which room 44 belonged to "L'aiglon", which bed did "L'aiglon" use to occupy, and 45 so on. What silly questions, these! The Austrians only know that he 46 was the son of Bonaparte, and the relation was established by 47 forcibly taking their girl in marriage; that hatred they have not yet 48 forgotten. The Prince was a grandchild of the Emperor, and 49 homeless, so they could not help giving him a shelter, but they could 50 give him no such title as "King of Rome"; only, being the grandson 51 of the Austrian Emperor, he was an Archduke, that was all. It may 52 be that you French people have now written a book on him, making

1 him the Young Eagle, and the addition of imaginary settings and the 2 genius of Madame Bernhardt have created a great interest in the 3 story, but how should an Austrian guard know that name? Besides, 4 it has been written in that book that the Austrian Emperor, 5 following the advice of his minister Metternich, in a way killed
6 Napoleon's son!

7 Hearing the name "L'aiglon", the guard put on a long face 8 and went on showing the rooms and other things thoroughly 9 disgusted at heart; what else could he do?--it was too much for him 10 to give up the tips. Moreover, in countries like Austria etc., the 11 military department is too poorly paid, they have to live almost on a 12 bare pittance; of course they are allowed to go back home after a 13 few years' service. The guard's countenance darkened as an 14 expression of his patriotism, but the hand instinctively moved 15 towards the tip. The French visitors put some silver pieces into the 16 guard's hand and returned home talking of "L'aiglon" and abusing 17 Metternich, while the guard shut the doors with a long salute. In his 18 heart he must have given sweet names to the ancestors of the 19 whole French people.

20 The thing most worth seeing in Vienna is the Museum, 21 specially the Scientific Museum, an institution of great benefit to 22 the student. There is a fine collection of the skeletons of various 23 species of ancient extinct animals. In the Art Gallery, paintings by 24 Dutch artists form the major portion. In the Dutch school, there is 25 very little attempt at suggestiveness; this school is famous for its 26 exact copy of natural objects and creatures. One artist has spent 27 years over the drawing of a basketful of fish, or a lump of flesh, or a 28 tumbler of water--and that fish, or flesh, or water in the tumbler is 29 wonderful. But the female figures of the Dutch school look just like 30 athletes.

31 There is of course German scholarship and German 32 intellectuality in Vienna, but the causes which helped the gradual 33 decay of Turkey are at work here also--that is to say, the mixture of 34 various races and languages. The population of Austria proper 35 speaks German; the people of Hungary belong to the Tartar stock, 36 and have a different language; while there are some who are 37 Greek-speaking and are Christians belonging to the Greek Church.
38 Austria has not the power to fuse together so many different sects.
39 Hence she has fallen.

40 In the present times a huge wave of nationalism is sweeping
41 over Europe, where people speaking the same tongue, professing 42 the same religion, and belonging to the same race want to unite 43 together. Wherever such union is being effectively accomplished, 44 there is great power being manifested; and where this is 45 impossible, death is inevitable. After the death of the present 46 Austrian Emperor,²¹⁹ Germany will surely try to absorb the German-47 speaking portion of the Austrian Empire--and Russia and others are 48 sure to oppose her; so there is the possibility of a dreadful war. The 49 present Emperor being very old, that catastrophe may take place

1 ²¹⁹ ?Francis Joseph II died in 1916.
2

1 very early. The German Emperor is nowadays an ally of the Sultan 2 of Turkey; and when Germany will attempt to seize Austrian 3 territory, Turkey, which is Russia's enemy, will certainly offer some 4 resistance to Russia; so the German Emperor is very friendly 5 towards Turkey.

6 Three days in Vienna were sufficient to tire me. To visit
7 Europe after Paris is like tasting an inferior preparation after a 8 sumptuous feast--that dress, and style of eating, that same fashion 9 everywhere; throughout the land you meet with that same black 10 suit, and the same queer hat--disgusting! Besides, you have clouds 11 above, and this swarm of people with black hats and black coats
12 below--one feels suffocated, as it were. All Europe is gradually 13 taking up that same style of dress, and that same mode of living! It 14 is a law of nature that such are the symptoms of death! By 15 hundreds of years of drill, our ancestors have so fashioned us that 16 we all clean our teeth, wash our face, eat our meals, and do 17 everything in the same way, and the result is that we have gradually 18 become mere automata; the life has gone out, and we are moving 19 about, simply like so many machines! Machines never say "yea" or 20 "nay", never trouble their heads about anything, they move on "in 21 the way their forefathers have gone", and then rot and die. The 22 Europeans too will share the same fate! "The course of time is ever 23 changing! If all people take to the same dress, same food, same 24 manner of talking, and same everything, gradually they will become 25 like so many machines, will gradually tread the path their 26 forefathers have trod", and as an inevitable consequence of that-- 27 they will rot and die!

28 On the 28th October, at 9 p.m., we again took that Orient 29 Express train, which reached Constantinople on the 30th. These 30 two nights and one day the train ran through Hungary, Serbia, and 31 Bulgaria. The people of Hungary are subjects of the Austrian 32 Emperor, whose title, however, is "Emperor of Austria and King of 33 Hungary". The Hungarians and Turks are of the same race, akin to 34 the Tibetans. The Hungarians entered Europe along the north of 35 the Caspian Sea, while the Turks slowly occupied Europe through 36 the western borders of Persia and through Asia Minor. The people 37 of Hungary are Christians, and the Turks are Mohammedans, but 38 the martial spirit characteristic of Tartar blood is noticeable in both.
39 The Hungarians have fought again and again for separation from 40 Austria and are now but nominally united. The Austrian Emperor is 41 King of Hungary in name only. Their capital, Budapest, is a very 42 neat and beautiful city. The Hungarians are a pleasure-loving race 43 and fond of music, and you will find Hungarian bands all over Paris.

44 Serbia, Bulgaria, and the rest were districts of Turkey and 45 have become practically independent after the Russo-Turkish War; 46 but the Sultan of Turkey is yet their Emperor; and Serbia and 47 Bulgaria have no right regarding foreign affairs. There are three 48 civilised nations in Europe--the French, the Germans, and the 49 English. The rest are almost as badly off as we are, and the majority 50 of them are so uncivilised that you can find no race in Asia so 51 degraded. Throughout Serbia and Bulgaria you find the same mud 52 houses, and people dressed in tattered rags, and heaps of filth--and

1 I was almost inclined to think I was back to India! Again, as they 2 are Christians, they must have a number of hogs; and a single hog 3 will make a place more dirty than two hundred barbarous men will 4 be able to do. Living in a mud house with mud roof, with tattered 5 rags on his person, and surrounded by hogs--there you have your 6 Serb or Bulgarian! After much bloodshed and many wars, they have 7 thrown off the yoke of Turkey; but along with this they have got a 8 serious disadvantage--they must construct their army after the 9 European model, otherwise the existence of not one of them is safe 10 for a day. Of course, sooner or later they will all one day be 11 absorbed by Russia; but even this two days' existence is impossible 12 without an army. So they must have conscription.

13 In an evil hour, did France suffer defeat from Germany.
14 Through anger and fear she made every citizen a soldier. Every man 15 must serve for some time in the army and learn the military 16 science; there is no exemption for anybody. He must have to live in 17 the barracks for three years and learn to fight, shouldering his gun, 18 be he a millionaire by birth. The government will provide for his 19 food and clothing, and the salary will be a centime (one pice) a day.
20 After this he must be always ready for active service for two years 21 at his home; and another fifteen years he must be ready to present 22 himself for service at the first call. Germany set a lion to fury, so she 23 too had to be ready. In other countries also conscription has been 24 introduced in mutual dread of one another--so throughout Europe, 25 excepting only England. England, being an island, is continually 26 strengthening her navy, but who knows if the lessons of the Boer 27 War will not force her to introduce conscription. Russia has the 28 largest population of all, so she can amass the biggest army in 29 Europe. Now, the titular states, like Serbia and Bulgaria, which the 30 European Powers are creating by dismembering Turkey--they, too, 31 as soon as they are born, must have up-to-date trained and well-32 equipped armies and guns etc. But ultimately who is to supply the 33 funds? Consequently the peasants have had to put on tattered 34 rags--while in the towns you will find soldiers dressed in gorgeous 35 uniforms. Throughout Europe there is a craze for soldiers--soldiers 36 everywhere. Still, liberty is one thing and slavery another; even 37 best work loses its charm if one is forced to do it by another.
38 Without the idea of personal responsibility, no one can achieve 39 anything great. Freedom with but one meal a day and tattered rags 40 on is a million times better than slavery in gold chains. A slave 41 suffers the miseries of hell both here and hereafter. The people of 42 Europe joke about the Serbs and Bulgarians etc., and taunt them 43 with their mistakes and shortcomings. But can they attain 44 proficiency all in a day, after so many years of servitude? Mistakes 45 they are bound to commit--ay, by the hundreds--but they will learn 46 through these mistakes and set them right when they have learnt.
47 Give him responsibility and the weakest man will become strong, 48 and the ignorant man sagacious.

49 The train is traversing Hungary, Rumania, and other 50 countries. Among the races that inhabit the moribund Austrian 51 Empire, the Hungarians yet possess vitality. All the races of Europe, 52 except one or two small ones, belong to the great stock which

1 European scholars term the Indo-European or Aryan race. The 2 Hungarians are among the few races which do not speak a 3 Sanskritic language. The Hungarians and Turks, as already stated, 4 belong to the same race. In comparatively modern times this very 5 powerful race established their sovereignty in Asia and Europe. The 6 country now called Turkistan, lying to the north of the Western 7 Himalayas and the Hindukush range, was the original home of the 8 Turks. The Turkish name for that country is Chagwoi. The Mogul 9 dynasty of Delhi, the present Persian royal line, the dynasty of the 10 Turkish Sultan of Constantinople, and the Hungarians have all 11 gradually extended their dominion from that country, beginning 12 with India, and pushing right up to Europe, and even today these 13 dynasties style themselves as Chagwois and speak a common 14 language. Of course these Turks were uncivilised ages ago, and 15 used to roam with herds of sheep, horses, and cattle, taking their 16 wives and children and every earthly possession with them, and 17 encamp for some time wherever they could find enough pasture for 18 their beasts. And when grass and water ran short there, they used 19 to remove somewhere else. Even now many families of this race 20 lead nomadic lives in this way in Central Asia. They have got a 21 perfect similarity with the races of Central Asia as regards
22 language, but some difference in point of physiognomy. The Turk's 23 face resembles that of the Mongolian in the shape of the head and 24 in the prominence of the cheek-bone, but the Turk's nose is not flat, 25 but rather long, and the eyes are straight and large, though the 26 space between the eyes of comparatively wide, as with the 27 Mongolians. It appears that from a long time past Aryan and 28 Semitic blood has found its way into this Turkish race. From time 29 immemorial the Turks have been exceedingly fond of war. And the 30 mixture with them of Sanskrit-speaking races and the people of 31 Kandahar and Persia has produced the war-loving races such as the 32 Afghans, Khiljis, Hazaras, Barakhais, Usufjais, etc., to whom war is 33 a passion and who have frequently oppressed India.

34 In very ancient times this Turkish race repeatedly conquered
35 the western provinces of India and founded extensive kingdoms.
36 They were Buddhists, or would turn Buddhists after occupying 37 Indian territory. In the ancient history of Kashmir there is mention 38 of these famous Turkish Emperors, Hushka, Yushka, and Kanishka.
39 It was this Kanishka who founded the Northern school of Buddhism 40 called the Mahayana. Long after, the majority of them took to 41 Mohammedanism and completely devastated the chief Buddhistic 42 seats of Central Asia such as Kandahar and Kabul. Before their 43 conversion to Mohammedanism they used to imbibe the learning 44 and culture of the countries they conquered, and by assimilating 45 the culture of other countries would try to propagate civilisation.
46 But ever since they became Mohammedans, they have only the 47 instinct for war left in them; they have not got the least vestige of 48 learning and culture; on the contrary, the countries that come under 49 their sway gradually have their civilisation extinguished. In many 50 places of modern Afghanistan and Kandahar etc., there yet exist 51 wonderful Stupas, monasteries, temples and gigantic statues built 52 by their Buddhistic ancestors. As a result of Turkish admixture and 53 their conversion to Mohammedanism, those temples etc. are almost

1 in ruins, and the present Afghans and allied races have grown so 2 uncivilised and illiterate that far from imitating those ancient works 3 of architecture, they believe them to be the creation of supernatural 4 spirits like the Jinn etc., and are firmly convinced that such great 5 undertakings are beyond the power of man to accomplish. The 6 principal cause of the present degradation of Persia is that the royal 7 line belongs to the powerful, uncivilised Turkish stock, whereas the 8 subjects are the descendants of the highly civilised ancient 9 Persians, who were Aryans. In this way the Empire of 10 Constantinople--the last political arena of the Greeks and Romans, 11 the descendants of civilised Aryans--has been ruined under the 12 blasting feet of powerful, barbarous Turkey. The Mogul Emperors 13 of India were the only exceptions to this rule; perhaps that was due 14 to an admixture of Hindu ideas and Hindu blood. In the chronicles 15 of Rajput bards and minstrels all the Mohammedan dynasties who 16 conquered India are styled as Turks. This is a very correct
17 appellation, for, or whatever races the conquering Mohammedan 18 armies might be made up, the leadership was always vested in the 19 Turks alone.

20 What is called the Mohammedan invasion, conquest, or 21 colonisation of India means only this that, under the leadership of 22 Mohammedan Turks who were renegades from Buddhism, those 23 sections of the Hindu race who continued in the faith of their 24 ancestors were repeatedly conquered by the other section of that 25 very race who also were renegades from Buddhism or the Vedic
26 religion and served under the Turks, having been forcibly converted 27 to Mohammedanism by their superior strength. Of course, the 28 language of the Turks has, like their physiognomy, been 29 considerably mixed up; specially those sections that have gone 30 farthest from their native place.

31 Chagwoi have got the most hybrid form of language. This 32 year the Shah of Persia visited the Paris Exhibition and returned to 33 his country by rail via Constantinople. Despite the immense 34 difference in time and place, the Sultan and the Shah talked with 35 each other in their ancient Turkish mother tongue. But the Sultan's 36 Turkish was mixed up with Persian, Arabic, and a few Greek words, 37 while that of the Shah was comparatively pure.

38 In ancient times these Chagwoi Turks were divided into two 39 sections; one was called the "white sheep", and the other, "black 40 sheep". But these sections started from their birthplace on the 41 north of Kashmir, tending their flocks of sheep and ravaging
42 countries, till they reached the shore of the Caspian Sea. The "white 43 sheep" penetrated into Europe along the north of the Caspian Sea 44 and founded the Kingdom of Hungary, seizing a fragment of the 45 Roman Empire then almost in ruins, while the "black sheep", 46 advancing along the south of the Caspian Sea, gradually occupied 47 the western portion of Persia and, crossing the Caucasus, by 48 degrees made themselves masters of Arabian territory such as Asia
49 Minor and so forth; gradually they seized the throne of the Caliph, 50 and bit by bit annexed the small remnant of the western Roman 51 Empire. In very remote ages these Turks were great snake-52 worshippers. Most probably it was these dynasties whom the 1 ancient Hindus used to designate as Nagas and Takshakas. Later on 2 they became Buddhists; and afterwards they very often used to 3 embrace the religion of any particular country they might conquer 4 at any particular time. In comparatively recent times, of the two 5 sections we are speaking about, the "white sheep" conquered the 6 Christians and became converts to Christianity, while the "black 7 sheep" conquered the Mohammedans and adopted their religion.

8 But in their Christianity or Mohammedanism one may even now
9 trace on research the strata of serpent-worship and of Buddhism.

10 The Hungarians, though Turks by race and language, are 11 Christians--Roman Catholics--in religion. In the past, religious 12 fanaticism had no respect for any tie--neither the tie of language, 13 nor that of blood, nor that of country. The Hungarians are ever the 14 deadly enemies of Turkey; and but for the Hungarians' aid Christian 15 states, such as Austria etc., would not have been able to maintain 16 their existence on many an occasion. In modern times, owing to the 17 spread of education and the discovery of Linguistics and Ethnology, 18 people are being more attracted to the kinship of language and 19 blood, while religious solidarity is gradually slackening. So, among 20 the educated Hungarians and Turks, there is growing up a feeling 21 of racial unity. Though a part of the Austrian Empire, Hungary has 22 repeatedly tried to cut off from her. The result of many revolutions 23 and rebellions has been that Hungary is now only nominally a 24 province of the Austrian Empire, but practically independent in all 25 respects. The Austrian Emperor is styled "the Emperor of Austria 26 and King of Hungary". Hungary manages all her internal affairs 27 independently of Austria and in these the subjects have full power.
28 The Austrian Emperor continues to be a titular leader here, but 29 even this bit of relation, it appears, will not last long. Skill in war, 30 magnanimity and other characteristic virtues of the Turkish race 31 are sufficiently present in the Hungarian also. Besides, not being 32 converted to Mohammedanism they do not consider such heavenly 33 arts as music etc. as the devil's snare, and consequently the 34 Hungarians are great adepts in music and are renowned for this all 35 over Europe.

36 Formerly I had the notion that people of cold climates did not 37 take hot chillies, which was merely a bad habit of warm climate 38 people. But the habit of taking chillies, which we observed to begin 39 with Hungary and which reached its climax in Rumania and 40 Bulgaria etc., appeared to me to beat even your South Indians.

41 42 ADDENDA²²⁰

44 The first view of Constantinople we had from the train. It is 45 an ancient city, with big drains running across the walls, narrow 46 and crooked lanes full of dirt, and wooden houses, etc., but in them 47 there is a certain beauty owing to their novelty. At the station we 48 had great trouble over our books. Mademoiselle Calve and Jules

1 Bois tried much, in French, to reason with the octroi officers, which 2 gradually led to a quarrel between the parties. The head of the 3 officers was a Turk, and his dinner was ready; so the quarrel ended 4 without further complications. They returned all the books with the 5 exception of two which they held back. They promised to send them 6 to the hotel immediately, which they never did. We went round the 7 town and bazar of Stamboul or Constantinople. Beyond the Pont or 8 creek is the Pera or foreigners' quarters, hotels, etc., whence we 9 got into a carriage, saw the town, and then took some rest. In the 10 evening we went to visit Woods Pasha, and the next day started on 11 an excursion along the Bosphorus in a boat. It was extremely cold 12 and there was a strong wind. So I and Miss MacLeod got down at 13 the first station. It was decided that we would cross over to Scutari 14 and see Pere Hyacinthe. Not knowing the language we engaged a 15 boat by signs merely, crossed over, and hired a carriage. On the 16 way we saw the seat of a Sufi Fakir. These Fakirs cure people's 17 diseases, which they do in the following manner. First they read a 18 portion of their scriptures, moving their body backward and 19 forward; then they begin to dance and gradually get a sort of 20 inspiration, after which they heal the disease by treading on the 21 patient's body.

22 We had a long talk with Pere Hyacinthe about the American 23 Colleges, after which we went to an Arab shop where we met a 24 Turkish student. Then we returned from Scutari.-- We had found out 25 a boat, but it failed to reach its exact destination. However, we took 26 a tram from the place where we were landed and returned to our 27 quarters at the hotel at Stamboul. The Museum at Stamboul is 28 situated where the ancient harem of the Greek Emperors once 29 stood. We saw some remarkable sarcophagi and other things, and 30 had a charming view of the city from above Topkhana. I enjoyed 31 taking fried chick peas here after such a long time, and had spiced 32 rice and some other dishes, prepared in the Turkish fashion. After 33 visiting the cemetery of Scutari we went to see the ancient walls.
34 Within the walls was the prison--a dreadful place. Next we met 35 Woods Pasha and started for the Bosphorus. We had our dinner 36 with the French charge d'affaires and met a Greek Pasha and an 37 Albanian gentleman. The Police have prohibited Pere Hyacinthe's 38 lectures; so I too cannot lecture. We saw Mr. Devanmall and 39 Chobeji--a Gujarati Brahmin. There are a good many Indians here-- 40 Hindustanis, Mussalmans, etc. We had a talk on Turkish Philosophy 41 and heard of Noor Bey, whose grandfather was a Frenchman. They 42 say he is as handsome as a Kashmari. The women here have got no
43 purdah system and are very free. Prostitution is chiefly a 44 Mohammedan practice. We heard of Kurd Pasha and the massacre
45 of Armenians. The Armenians have really no country of their own, 46 and those countries which they inhabit have generally a 47 preponderating Mohammedan population. A particular tract called 48 Armenia is unknown. The present Sultan is constructing a Hamidian 49 cavalry out of the Kurds who will be trained in the manner of the 50 Cossacks and they will be exempted from conscription.

51 The Sultan called the Armenian and Greek Patriarchs and 52 proposed to them conscription as an alternative for payment of 1 taxes. They might thus serve to protect their motherland. They 2 replied that if they went as soldiers to fight and died by the side of 3 the Mohammedans, there would be some confusion about the 4 interment of Christian soldiers. The Sultan's rejoinder to this was 5 that it might be remedied by providing for both Mohammedan and 6 Christian priests in each regiment, who would conduct the funeral 7 service together when in the exigencies of battle the dead bodies of 8 Christian and Mohammedan soldiers would have to be buried in a 9 heap all together, and there could possibly be no harm if the souls 10 of men of one religion heard in addition the funeral services meant 11 for those of the the other religion. But the Christians did not agree-- 12 so they continue to pay taxes. The surest reason of their not 13 acquiescing in the proposal was their fear lest by living with the 14 Mohammedans they might turn Mohammedan wholesale. The 15 present Sultan of Stamboul is a very hard-working man and he 16 personally supervises everything, including even the arrangement 17 of amusements, such as theatrical performances etc., in the palace.

18 His predecessor, Murad, was really a most unfit man, but the 19 present Sultan is very intelligent. The amount of improvement he 20 has made in the condition of the State in which he found it at his 21 accession is simply wonderful. The Parliamentary system will not be 22 successful in this country.

23 At 10 in the morning we left Constantinople, passing a night 24 and a day on the sea, which was perfectly placid. By degrees we 25 reached the Golden Horn and the Sea of Marmora. In one of the 26 islands of the Marmora we saw a monastery of the Greek religion.
27 Formerly there was ample opportunity for religious education here, 28 for it was situated between Asia on one side and Europe on the 29 other. While out in the morning on a visit of the Mediterranean
30 Archipelago we came across Profesor Liper, whose acquaintance I 31 had already made in the Pachiappa College at Madras. In one of the 32 islands we came upon the ruins of a temple, which had probably 33 been dedicated to Neptune, judging from its position on the sea-34 shore. In the evening we reached Athens, and after passing a whole 35 night under quarantine we obtained permission for landing in the 36 morning. Port Peiraeus is a small town, but very beautiful, having a 37 European air about it in all respects, except that one meets now 38 and then with one or two Greeks dressed in gowns. From there we 39 drove five miles to have a look at the ancient walls of Athens which 40 used to connect the city with the port. Then we went through the 41 town; the Acropolis, the hotels, houses, and streets, and all were 42 very neat and clean. The palace is a small one. The same day, again, 43 we climbed the hillock and had a view of the Acropolis, the temple 44 of the Wingless Victory, and the Parthenon, etc. The temple is made 45 of white marble. Some standing remains of columns also we saw.
46 The next day we again went to see these with Mademoiselle 47 Melcarvi, who explained to us various historical facts relating 48 thereto. On the second day we visited the temple of Olympian Zeus, 49 Theatre Dionysius etc., as far as the sea-shore. The third day we set 50 out for Eleusis, which was the chief religious seat of the Greeks.
51 Here it was that the famous Eleusinian Mysteries used to be played.
52 The ancient theatre of this place has been built anew by a rich 53 Greek. The Olympian games too have been revived in the present

1 times. They are held at a place near Sparta, the Americans carrying 2 off the palm in them in many respects. But the Greeks won in the 3 race from that place to this theatre of Athens. This year they gave 4 undisputed proof of this trait of theirs in a competition with the 5 Turks also. At 10 a.m. on the fourth day we got on board the 6 Russian steamer, Czar, bound for Egypt. After reaching the dock we 7 came to learn that the steamer was to start at 4 a.m.--perhaps we 8 were too early or there would be some extra delay in loading the 9 cargo. So, having no other alternative, we went round and made a 10 cursory acquaintance with the sculpture of Ageladas and his three 11 pupils, Phidias, Myron, and Polycletus, who had flourished between 12 576 B.C. and 486 B.C. Even here we began to feel the great heat. In 13 a Russian ship the first class is over the screw, and the rest is only 14 deck--full of passengers, and cattle, and sheep. Besides, no ice was 15 available in this steamer.

16 From a visit to the Louvre Museum in Paris I came to 17 understand the three stages of Greek art. First, there was the 18 Mycenaean art, then Greek art proper. The Achaean kingdom had 19 spread its sway over the neighbouring islands and also mastered all 20 the arts that flourished there, being imported from Asia. Thus did 21 art first make its appearance in Greece. From the prehistoric times 22 up to 776 B.C. was the age of the Mycenaean art. This art 23 principally engaged itself in merely copying Asiatic art. Then from 24 776 B.C. to 146 B.C. was the age of Hellenic or true Greek art. After 25 the destruction of the Achaean Empire by the Dorian race, the 26 Greeks living on the continent and in the Archipelago founded many 27 colonies in Asia. This led to a close conflict between them and 28 Babylon and Egypt, which first gave rise to Greek art. This art in 29 course of time gave up its Asiatic tinge and applied itself to an 30 exact imitation of nature. The difference between Greek art and the 31 art of other countries consists in this, that the former faithfully 32 delineates the living phenomena of natural life.

33 From 776 B.C. to 475 B.C. is the age of Archaic Greek art.
34 The figures are yet stiff--not lifelike. The lips are slightly parted, as 35 if always in smiles. In this respect they resemble the works of 36 Egyptian artists. All the statues stand erect on their legs--quite stiff.
37 The hair and beard etc. and all carved in regular lines and the 38 clothes in the statues are all wrapped close round the body, in a 39 jumble--not like flowing dress.

40 Next to Archaic Greek art comes the age of Classic Greek 41 art--from 475 B.C. to 323 B.C., that is to say, from the hegemony of 42 Athens up to the death of Alexander the Great. Peloponnesus and 43 Attica were the states where the art of this period flourished most.
44 Athens was the chief city of Attica. A learned French art critic has 45 written, "(Classic) Greek art at its highest development freed itself 46 completely from the fetters of all established canons and became 47 independent. It then recognised the art regulations of no country, 48 nor guided itself according to them. The more we study the fifth 49 century B.C., so brilliant in its art development--during which 50 period all the perfect specimens of sculpture were turned out--the 51 more is the idea brought home to our mind that Greek art owed its 52 life and vigour to its cutting loose from the pale of stereotyped

1 rules". This Classic Greek art had two schools--first, the Attic, and 2 second, the Peloponnesian. In the Attic school, again, there were 3 two different types--the first was the outcome of the genius of the 4 gifted sculptor, Phidias, which a French scholar has described in 5 the following terms: "A marvel of perfection in beauty and a 6 glorious specimen of pure and sublime ideas, which will never lose 7 their hold upon the human mind". The masters in the second type of 8 the Attic school were Scopas and Praxiteles. The work of this school 9 was to completely divorce art from religion and keep it restricted to 10 the delineation of merely human life.

11 The chief exponents of the second or Peloponnesian school of 12 Classic Greek art were Polycletus and Lysippus. One of these was 13 born in the fifth century B.C., and the other in the fourth century 14 B.C. They chiefly aimed at laying down the rule that the proportion 15 of the human body must be faithfully reproduced in art.

16 From 323 B.C. to 146 B.C., that is, from the death of 17 Alexander to the conquest of Attica by the Romans, is the period of 18 decadence in Greek art. One notices in the Greek art of this period 19 an undue attention to gorgeous embellishments, and an attempt to 20 make the statues unusually large in bulk. Then at the time of the 21 Roman occupation of Greece, Greek art contented itself merely by 22 copying the works of previous artists of that country; and the only 23 novelty there was, consisted in reproducing exactly the face of 24 some particular individual.

NOTES OF CLASS TALKS AND LECTURES

ON ART

In art, interest must be centred on the principal theme. Drama is the most difficult of all arts. In it two things are to be satisfied--first, the ears, and second, the eyes. To paint a scene, if one thing be painted, it is easy enough; but to paint different things and yet to keep up the central interest is very difficult. Another difficult thing is stage-management, that is, combining different things in such a manner as to keep the central interest intact.

ON MUSIC

There is science in Dhruvad, Kheyal, etc., but it is in Kirtana, i.e. in Mathura and Viraha and other like compositions that there is real music--for there is feeling. Feeling is the soul, the secret of everything. There is more music in common people's songs, and they should be collected together. The science of Dhruvad etc., applied to the music of Kirtana will produce the perfect music.

ON MANTRA AND MANTRA-CHAITANYA

The Mantra-Shastris (upholders of the Mantra theory) believe that some words have been handed down through a succession of teachers and disciples, and the mere utterance of them will lead to some form of realisation. There are two different meanings of the word Mantra-chaitanya. According to some, if you practise the repetition of a certain Mantra, you will see the Ishta-Devata who is the object or deity of that Mantra. But according to others, the word means that if you practise the repetition of a certain Mantra received from a Guru not competent, you will have to perform certain ceremonials by which that Mantra will become Chetana or living, and then its repetition will be successful. Different Mantras, when they are thus "living", show different signs, but the general sign is that one will be able to repeat it for a long time without feeling any strain and that his mind will very soon be concentrated. This is about the Tantrika Mantras.

From the time of the Vedas, two different opinions have been held about Mantras. Yaska and others say that the Vedas have meanings, but the ancient Mantra-shastris say that they have no meaning, and that their use consists only in uttering them in connection with certain sacrifices, when they will surely produce effect in the form of various material enjoyments or spiritual knowledge. The latter arises from the utterance of the Upanishads.

ON CONCEPTIONS OF GODHEAD

Man's inner hankering is to find some one who is free, that is, beyond the laws of nature. The Vedantins believe in such an

1 Eternal Ishvara, while the Buddhists and the Sankhyas believe only 2 a Janyeshvara (created God), that is, a God who was a man before,
3 but has become God through spiritual practice. The Puranas 4 reconcile these two positions by the doctrine of Incarnation. That is, 5 they say that the Janyeshvara is nothing but the Nitya (Eternal) 6 Ishvara, taking by Maya the form of a Janyeshvara. The argument of 7 the Sankhyas against the doctrine of Eternal Ishvara, viz "how a 8 liberated soul can create the universe", is based on false grounds.
9 For you cannot dictate anything to a liberated soul. He is free, that 10 is, he may do whatever he likes. According to the Vedanta, the 11 Janyeshvaras cannot create, preserve, or destroy the universe.

12 13 ON FOOD

14 You preach to others to be men but cannot give them good 15 food. I have been thinking over this problem for the last four years.
16 I wish to make an experiment whether something of the nature of 17 flattened rice can be made out of wheat. Then we can get a 18 different food every day. About drinking water, I searched for a 19 filter which would suit our country. I found one pan-like porcelain 20 vessel through which water was made to pass, and all the bacilli 21 remained in the porcelain pan. But gradually that filter would itself 22 become the hotbed of all germs. This is the danger of all filters.
23 After continued searching I found one method by which water was 24 distilled and then oxygen was passed into it. After this the water 25 became so pure that great improvement of health was sure to result 26 from its use.

27 28 ON SANNYASA AND FAMILY LIFE

29 Talking of the respective duties of a monk and a householder, 30 Swamiji said:

31 A Sannyasin should avoid the food, bedding, etc., which have 32 been touched or used by householders, in order to save himself -- 33 not from hatred towards them--so long as he has not risen to the 34 highest grade, that is, become a Paramahansa. A householder 35 should salute him with "Namo Narayanaya", and a Sannyasin 36 should bless the former.

37 {Sanskrit}

38 --Like the difference between the biggest mountain and a 39 mustard-seed, between the sun and a glow-worm, between the 40 ocean and a streamlet, is the wide gulf between a Sannyasin and a 41 householder.

42 Swami Vivekananda made everyone utter this and, chanting 43 some Vedanta stanzas, said, "You should always repeat to 44 yourselves these Shlokas. 'Shravana' not only means hearing from 45 the Guru, but also repetition to our own selves. '{Sanskrit}'-- 46 Scriptural truth should be often repeated for such has been 47 repeatedly enjoined'--In this Sutra of Vedanta, Vyasa lays stress on 48 repetition."

ON QUESTIONING THE COMPETENCY OF THE GURU

In the course of a conversation Swamiji spiritedly remarked, "Leave off your commercial calculating ideas. If you can get rid of your attachment to a single thing, you are on the way to liberation. Do not see a public woman, or sinner, or Sadhu. That vile woman also is the Divine Mother. A Sannyasin says once, twice, that she is Mother; then he gets deluded again and says, 'Hence, O vile, unchaste woman!' At a moment all your ignorance may vanish. It is foolish talk that ignorance disperses gradually. There are disciples who have been devoted to the Guru even when he has fallen from the ideal. I have seen in Rajputana one whose spiritual teacher had turned a Christian, but who nevertheless went on giving him his regular dues. Give up your Western ideas. Once you have pledged your faith to a particular teacher, stick to him with all force. It is children who say that there is no morality in the Vedanta. Yes, they are right. Vedanta is above morality. Talk of high things, as you have become Sannyasins."

SHRI RAMAKRISHNA: THE SIGNIFICANCE OF HIS LIFE AND TEACHINGS

In a narrow society there is depth and intensity of spirituality. The narrow stream is very rapid. In a catholic society, along with the breadth of vision we find a proportionate loss in depth and intensity. But the life of Sri Ramakrishna upsets all records of history. It is a remarkable phenomenon that in Sri Ramakrishna there has been an assemblage of ideas deeper than the sea and vaster than the skies.

We must interpret the Vedas in the light of the experience of Sri Ramakrishna. Shankaracharya and all other commentators made the tremendous mistake to think that the whole of the Vedas spoke the same truth. Therefore they were guilty of torturing those of the apparently conflicting Vedic texts which go against their own doctrines, into the meaning of their particular schools. As, in the olden times, it was the Lord alone, the deliverer of the Gita, who partially harmonised these apparently conflicting statements, so with a view to completely settling this dispute, immensely magnified in the process of time, He Himself has come as Sri Ramakrishna. Therefore no one can truly understand the Vedas and Vedanta, unless one studies them in the light of the utterance of Sri Ramakrishna who first exemplified in his life and taught that these scriptural statements which appear to the cursory view as contradictory, are meant for different grades of aspirants and are arranged in the order of evolution. The whole world will undoubtedly forget its fights and disputes and be united in a fraternal tie in religious and other matters as a consequence of these teachings.

If there is anything which Sri Ramakrishna has urged us to give up as carefully as lust and wealth, it is the limiting of the 1 infinitude of God by circumscribing it within narrow bounds.

2 Whoever, therefore, will try to limit the infinite ideals of Sri 3 Ramakrishna in that way, will go against him and be his enemy.

4 One of his own utterances is that those who have seen the 5 chameleon only once, know only one colour of the animal, but those 6 who have lived under the tree, know all the colours that it puts on.
7 For this reason, no saying of Sri Ramakrishna can be accepted as 8 authentic, unless it is verified by those who constantly lived with 9 him and whom he brought up to fulfil his life's mission.

10 Such a unique personality, such a synthesis of the utmost of 11 Jnana, Yoga, Bhakti and Karma, has never before appeared among 12 mankind. The life of Sri Ramakrishna proves that the greatest 13 breadth, the highest catholicity and the utmost intensity can exist 14 side by side in the same individual, and that society also can be 15 constructed like that, for society is nothing but an aggregate of 16 individuals.

17 He is the true disciple and follower of Sri Ramakrishna, 18 whose character is perfect and all-sided like this. The formation of 19 such a perfect character is the ideal of this age, and everyone 20 should strive for that alone.

21 22 ON SHRI RAMAKRISHNA AND HIS VIEWS

23 By force, think of one thing at least as Brahman. Of course it 24 is easier to think of Ramakrishna as God, but the danger is that we 25 cannot form Ishvara-buddhi (vision of Divinity) in others. God is 26 eternal, without any form, omnipresent. To think of Him as 27 possessing any form is blasphemy. But the secret of image-worship 28 is that you are trying to develop your vision of Divinity in one thing.

29 Shri Ramakrishna used to consider himself as an Incarnation
30 in the ordinary sense of the term, though I could not understand it.
31 I used to say that he was Brahman in the Vedantic sense; but just 32 before his passing away, when he was suffering from the 33 characteristic difficulty in breathing, he said to me as I was 34 cogitating in my mind whether he could even in that pain say that 35 he was an Incarnation, "He who was Rama and Krishna has now 36 actually become Ramakrishna--but not in your Vedantic sense!" He 37 used to love me intensely, which made many quite jealous of me. He 38 knew one's character by sight, and never changed his opinion. He 39 could perceive, as it were, supersensual things, while we try to 40 know one's character by reason, with the result that our judgments 41 are often fallacious. He called some persons his Antarangas or 42 'belonging to the inner circle', and he used to teach them the 43 secrets of his own nature and those of Yoga. To the outsiders or 44 Bahirangas he taught those parables now known as "Sayings". He 45 used to prepare those young men (the former class) for his work, 46 and though many complained to him about them, he paid no heed. I 47 may have perhaps a better opinion of a Bahiranga than an 48 Antaranga through his actions, but I have a superstitious regard for 49 the latter. "Love me, love my dog", as they say. I love that Brahmin 50 priest intensely, and therefore, love whatever he used to love,

1 whatever he used to regard! He was afraid about me that I might 2 create a sect, if left to myself.

3 He used to say to some, "You will not attain spirituality in this 4 life." He sensed everything, and this will explain his apparent
5 partiality to some. He, as a scientist, used to see that different 6 people required different treatment. None except those of the 7 "inner circle" were allowed to sleep in his room. It is not true that 8 those who have not seen him will not attain salvation; neither is it 9 true that a man who has seen him thrice will attain Mukti 10 (liberation).

11 Devotion as taught by Narada, he used to preach to the 12 masses, those who were incapable of any higher training.

13 He used generally to teach dualism. As a rule, he never 14 taught Advaitism. But he taught it to me. I had been a dualist 15 before.

16 17 SHRI RAMAKRISHNA: THE NATION'S IDEAL

18 In order that a nation may rise, it must have a high ideal.
19 Now, that ideal is, of course, the abstract Brahman. But as you all 20 cannot be inspired by an abstract ideal, you must have a personal 21 ideal. You have got that, in the person of Shri Ramakrishna. The 22 reason why other personages cannot be our ideal now is, that their 23 days are gone; and in order that Vedanta may come to everyone, 24 there must be a person who is in sympathy with the present 25 generation. This is fulfilled in Shri Ramakrishna. So now you should 26 place him before everyone. Whether one accepts him as a Sadhu or 27 an Avatara does not matter.

28 He said he would come once more with us. Then, I think, he 29 will embrace Videha-Mukti (Absolute Emancipation). If you wish to 30 work, you must have such an Ishta-Devata, or Guardian Angel, as 31 the Christian nations call it. I sometimes imagine that different 32 nations have different Ishta-Devatas, and these are each trying for 33 supremacy. Sometimes I fancy, such an Ishta-Devata becomes 34 powerless to do service to a nation.

35 36 NOTES OF LECTURES

37 38 MERCENARIES IN RELIGION

39 (Delivered in Minneapolis on November 26, 1893: Reported 40 in the Minneapolis Journal)

1 The Unitarian church was crowded yesterday morning by an 2 audience anxious to learn something of eastern religious thought as 3 outlined by Swami Vivekananda, a Brahmin priest, who was 4 prominent in the Parliament of Religions at Chicago last summer.
5 The distinguished representative of the Brahmin faith was brought 6 to Minneapolis by the Peripatetic Club, and he addressed that body 7 last Friday evening. He was induced to remain until this week, in 8 order that he might deliver the address yesterday. . . .

9 Dr. H.M. Simmons, the pastor, . . . read from Paul's lesson of 10 faith, hope and charity, and "the greatest of these is charity", 11 supplementing that reading by a selection from the Brahmin 12 scripture which teaches the same lesson, and also a selection from 13 the Moslem faith, and poems from the Hindu literature, all of which 14 are in harmony with Paul's utterances.

15 After a second hymn Swami Vivekandi [sic] was introduced.
16 He stepped to the edge of the platform and at once had his 17 audience interested by the recital of a Hindu story. He said in 18 excellent English:

19 "I will tell you a story of five blind men. There was a 20 procession in a village in India, and all the people turned out to see 21 the procession, and specially the gaily caparisoned elephant. The 22 people were delighted, and as the five blind men could not see, they 23 determined to touch the elephant that they might acquaint 24 themselves with its form. They were given the privilege, and after 25 the procession had passed, they returned home together with the 26 people, and they began to talk about the elephant. 'It was just like a 27 wall,' said one. 'No it wasn't,' said another, 'it was like a piece of 28 rope.' 'You are mistaken,' said a third, 'I felt him and it was just a 29 serpent.' The discussion grew excited, and the fourth declared the 30 elephant was like a pillow. The argument soon broke into more 31 angry expressions, and the five blind men took to fighting. Along 32 came a man with two eyes, and he said, 'My friends, what is the 33 matter?' The disputation was explained, whereupon the new-comer
34 said, 'Men, you are all right: the trouble is you touched the elephant 35 at different points. The wall was the side, the rope was the tail, the 36 serpent was the trunk, and the toes were the pillow. Stop your 37 quarrelling; you are all right, only you have been viewing the 38 elephant from different standpoints."

39 Religion, he said, had become involved in such a quarrel. The 40 people of the West thought they had the only religion of God, and 41 the people of the East held the same prejudice. Both were wrong; 42 God was in every religion.

43 There were many bright criticisms on Western thought. The 44 Christians were characterised as having a "shopkeeping religion".
45 They were always begging of God--"O God, give me this and give 46 me that; O God, do this and do that." The Hindu couldn't 47 understand this. He thought it wrong to be begging of God. Instead 48 of begging, the religious man should give. The Hindu believed in 49 giving to God, to his fellows, instead of asking God to give to them.
50 He had observed that the people of the West, very many of them, 51 thought a great deal of God, so long as they got along all right, but

1 when the reverse came, then God was forgotten: not so with the 2 Hindu, who had come to look upon God as a being of love. The 3 Hindu faith recognised the motherhood of God as well as the 4 fatherhood, because the former was a better fulfilment of the idea 5 of love. The Western Christian would work all the week for the 6 dollar, and when he succeeded he would pray, "O God, we thank 7 thee for giving us this benefit", and then he would put all the money 8 into his pocket; the Hindu would make the money and then give it 9 to God by helping the poor and the less fortunate. And so 10 comparisons were made between the ideas of the West and the 11 ideas of the East. In speaking of God, Vivekanandi said in 12 substance: "You people of the West think you have God. What is it to 13 have God? If you have Him, why is it that so much criminality exists, 14 that nine out of ten people are hypocrites? Hypocrisy cannot exist 15 where God is. You have your palaces for the worship of God, and 16 you attend them in part for a time once a week, but how few go to 17 worship God. It is the fashion in the West to attend church, and 18 many of you attend for no other reason. Have you then, you people 19 of the West, any right to lay exclusive claim to the possession of 20 God?"

21 Here the speaker was interrupted by spontaneous applause.
22 He proceeded: "We of the Hindu faith believe in worshipping God 23 for love's sake, not for what He gives us, but because God is love, 24 and no nation, no people, no religion has God until it is willing to 25 worship Him for love's sake. You of the West are practical in 26 business, practical in great inventions, but we of the East are 27 practical in religion. You make commerce your business; we make 28 religion our business. If you will come to India and talk with the 29 workman in the field, you will find he has no opinion on politics. He 30 knows nothing of politics. But you talk to him of religion, and the 31 humblest knows about monotheism, deism, and all the isms of 32 religion. You ask:

33 "What government do you live under?" and he will reply: 'I 34 don't know. I pay my taxes, and that's all I know about it.' I have 35 talked with your labourers, your farmers, and I find that in politics 36 they are all posted. They are either Democrat or Republican, and 37 they know whether they prefer free silver or a gold standard. But 38 you talk to them of religion; they are like the Indian farmer, they 39 don't know, they attend such a church, but they don't know what it 40 believes; they just pay their pew rent, and that's all they know 41 about it--or God."

42 The superstitions of India were admitted, "but what nation 43 doesn't have them?" he asked. In summing up, he held that the 44 nations had been looking at God as a monopoly. All nations had 45 God, and any impulse for good was God. The Western people, as 46 well as the Eastern people, must learn to "want God", and this 47 "want" was compared to the man under water, struggling for air; he 48 wanted it, he couldn't live without it. When the people of the West 49 "wanted" God in that manner, then they would be welcome in India, 50 because the missionaries would then come to them with God, not 51 with the idea that India knows not God, but with love in their hearts 52 and not dogma.

THE DESTINY OF MAN

(Delivered in Memphis on January 17, 1894: Reported in Appeal-Avalanche)

The audience was moderately large, and was made up of the best literary and musical talent of the city, including some of the most distinguished members of the legal fraternity and financial institutions.

The speaker differs in one respect in particular from some American orators. He advances his ideas with as much deliberation as a professor of mathematics demonstrates an example in algebra to his students. Kananda²²¹ speaks with perfect faith in his own powers and ability to hold successfully his position against all argument. He advances no ideas, nor make assertions that he does not follow up to a logical conclusion. Much of his lecture is something on the order of Ingersoll's philosophy. He does not believe in future punishment nor in God as Christians believe in Him. He does not believe the mind is immortal, from the fact that it is dependent, and nothing can be immortal except it is independent of all things. He says: "God is not a king sitting away in one corner of the universe to deal out punishment or rewards according to a man's deeds here on earth, and the time will come when man will know the truth, and stand up and say, 'I am God,' am life of His life. Why teach that God is far away when our real nature, our immortal principle is God?

"Be not deluded by your religion teaching original sin, for the same religion teaches original purity. When Adam fell, he fell from purity. (Applause) Purity is our real nature, and to regain that is the object of all religion. All men are pure; all men are good. Some objections can be raised to them, and you ask why some men are brutes? That man you call a brute is like the diamond in the dirt and dust--brush the dust off and it is a diamond, just as pure as if the dust had never been on it, and we must admit that every soul is a big diamond.

"Nothing is baser than calling our brother a sinner. A lioness once fell upon a flock of sheep and killed a lamb. A sheep found a very young lion, and it followed her, and he gave it suck, and it grew up with the sheep and learned to eat grass like a sheep. One day an old lion saw the sheep lion and tried to get it away from the sheep, but it ran away as he approached. The big lion waited till he caught the sheep lion alone, and he seized it and carried it to a clear pool of water and said, 'You are not a sheep, but a lion; look at your picture in the water.' The sheep lion, seeing its picture reflected from the water, said, 'I am a lion and not a sheep.' Let us not think we are sheep, but be lions, and don't bleat and eat grass like a sheep.

"For four months I have been in America. In Massachusetts I

²²¹ ?In those days Swamiji was generally referred to by American press as Vive Kananda.

1 visited a reformatory prison. The jailor at that prison never knows 2 for what crimes the prisoners are incarcerated. The mantle of 3 charity is thrown around them. In another city there were three 4 newspapers, edited by very learned men, trying to prove that 5 severe punishment was a necessity, while one other paper 6 contended that mercy was better than punishment. The editor of 7 one paper proved by statistics that only fifty per cent of criminals 8 who received severe punishment returned to honest lives, while 9 ninety per cent of those who received light punishment returned to 10 useful pursuits in life.

11 "Religion is not the outcome of the weakness of human 12 nature; religion is not here because we fear a tyrant; religion is 13 love, unfolding, expanding, growing. Take the watch--within the 14 little case is machinery and a spring. The spring, when wound up, 15 tries to regain its natural state. You are like the spring in the watch, 16 and it is not necessary that all watches have the same kind of a 17 spring, and it is not necessary that we all have the same religion.
18 And why should we quarrel? If we all had the same ideas the world 19 would be dead. External motion we call action; internal motion is 20 human thought. The stone falls to the earth. You say it is caused by 21 the law of gravitation. The horse draws the cart and God draws the 22 horse. That is the law of motion. Whirlpools show the strength of 23 the current; stop the current and stagnation ensues. Motion is life.
24 We must have unity and variety. The rose would smell as sweet by 25 any other name, and it does not matter what your religion is called.

26 "Six blind men lived in a village. They could not see the 27 elephant, but they went out and felt of him. One put his hand on the 28 elephant's tail, one of them on his side, one on his tongue[trunk], 29 one on his ear. They began to describe the elephant. One said he 30 was like a rope; one said he was like a great wall; one said he was 31 like a boa constrictor, and another said he was like a fan. They 32 finally came to blows and went to pummelling each other. A man 33 who could see came along and inquired the trouble, and the blind 34 men said they had seen the elephant and disagreed because one 35 accused the other of lying. 'Well,' said the man, 'you have all lied; 36 you are blind, and neither of you have seen it.' That is what is the 37 matter with our religion. We let the blind see the elephant.
38 (Applause).

39 "A monk of India said, 'I would believe you if you were to say 40 that I could press the sands of the desert and get oil, or that I could 41 pluck the tooth from the mouth of the crocodile without being 42 bitten, but I cannot believe you when you say a bigot can be 43 changed.' You ask why is there so much variance in religions? The 44 answer is this: The little streams that ripple down a thousand 45 mountain sides are destined to come at last to the mighty ocean. So 46 with the different religions. They are destined at last to bring us to 47 the bosom of God. For 1,900 years you have been trying to crush 48 the Jews. Why could you not crush them? Echo answers: Ignorance 49 and bigotry can never crush truth."

50 The speaker continued in this strain of reasoning for nearly 51 two hours, and concluded by saying: "Let us help, and not destroy."

REINCARNATION

(Delivered in Memphis on January 19, 1894: Reported in Appeal-Avalanche)

Swami Vive Kananda, the beturbaned and yellow-robed monk, lectured again last night to a fair-sized and appreciative audience at the La Salette Academy on Third street.

The subject was "Transmigration of the Soul, or "metempsychosis". Possibly Vive Kananda never appeared to greater advantage than in this role, so to speak. Metempsychosis is one of the most widely-accepted beliefs among the Eastern races, and one that they are ever ready to defend, at home or abroad. As Kananda said:

"Many of you do not know that it is one of the oldest religious doctrines of all the old religions. It was known among the Pharisees, among the Jews, among the first fathers of the Christian Church, and was a common belief among the Arabs. And it lingers still with the Hindus and the Buddhists.

"This state of things went on until the days of science which is merely a contemplation of energies. Now, you Western people believe this doctrine to be subversive of morality. In order to have a full survey of the argument, its logical and metaphysical features, we will have to go over all the ground. All of us believe in a moral governor of this universe; yet nature reveals to us instead of justice, injustice. One man is born under the best of circumstances. Throughout his entire life circumstances come ready made to his hands--all conducive to happiness and a higher order of things. Another is born, and at every point his life is at variance with that of his neighbour. He dies in depravity, exiled from society. Why so much impartiality [partiality] in the distribution of happiness?

"The theory of metempsychosis reconciles this disharmonious chord in your common beliefs. Instead of making us immoral, this theory give us the idea of justice. Some of you say: 'It is God's will.' This is no answer. It is unscientific. Everything has a cause. The sole cause and whole theory of causation being left with God, makes Him a most immoral creature. But materialism is as much illogical as the other. So far as we go, perception [causation?] involves all things. Therefore, this doctrine of the transmigration of the soul is necessary on these grounds. Here we are all born. Is this the first creation? Is creation something coming out of nothing? Analysed completely, this sentence is nonsense. It is not creation, but manifestation.

"A something cannot be the effect of a cause that is not. If I put my finger in the fire, the burn is a simultaneous effect, and I know that the cause of the burn was the action of my placing my finger in contact with the fire. And as in the case of nature, there never was a time when nature did not exist, because the cause has always existed. But for argument['s] sake, admit that there was a time when there was no existence. Where was all this mass of matter? To create something new would be the introduction of so

1 much more energy into the universe. This is impossible. Old things 2 can be re-created, but there can be no addition to the universe.

3 "No mathematical demonstration could be made that would 4 have this theory of metempsychosis. According to logic, hypothesis
5 and theory must not be believed. But my contention is that no 6 better hypothesis has been forwarded by the human intellect to 7 explain the phenomena of life.

8 "I met with a peculiar incident while on a train leaving the 9 city of Minneapolis. There was a cowboy on the train. He was a 10 rough sort of a fellow and a Presbyterian of the blue nose type. He 11 walked up and asked me where I was from. I told him India. 'What 12 are you?' he said. 'Hindu', I replied. 'Then you must go to hell', he 13 remarked. I told him of this theory, and after [my] explaining it, he 14 said he had always believed in it because he said that one day when 15 he was chopping a log, his little sister came out in her clothes and 16 said that she used to be a man. That is why he believed in the 17 transmigration of souls. The whole basis of the theory is this: If a 18 man's actions be good, he must be a higher being, and vice versa.

19 "There is another beauty in this theory--the moral motor 20 [motive] it supplies. What is done is done. It says, 'Ah, that it were 21 done better.' Do not put your finger in the fire again. Every moment 22 is a new chance."

23 24 COMPARATIVE THEOLOGY

25 (Delivered in Memphis on January 21, 1894: Reported in 26 Appeal-Avalanche)

27 "Comparative Theology" was the subject of a discourse last 28 night by Swami Vive Kananda at the Young Men's Hebrew
29 Association Hall. It was the blue-ribbon lecture of the series, and no 30 doubt increased the general admiration the people of this city 31 entertain for the learned gentleman.

32 Heretofore Vive Kananda has lectured for the benefit of one 33 charity-worthy object or another, and it can be safely said that he 34 has rendered them material aid. Last night, however, he lectured 35 for his own benefit. The lecture was planned and sustained by Mr.
36 Hu L. Brinkley, one of Vive Kananda's warmest friends and most 37 ardent admirers. In the neighbourhood of two hundred gathered at 38 the hall last night to hear the eminent Easterner for the last time in 39 this city.

40 The first question the speaker asserted in connection with 41 the subject was: "Can there be such a distinction between religions 42 as their creeds would imply?"

43 He asserted that no differences existed now, and he retraced 44 the line of progress made by all religions and brought it back to the 45 present day. He showed that such variance of opinion must of 46 necessity have existed with primitive man in regard to the idea of 47 God, but that as the world advanced step by step in a moral and 48 intellectual way, the distinctions became more and more indistinct, 49 until finally it had faded away entirely, and now there was one all-

1 prevalent doctrine--that of an absolute existence.

2 "No savage", said the speaker, "can be found who does not 3 believe in some kind of a god."

4 "Modern science does not say whether it looks upon this as a 5 revelation or not. Love among savage nations is not very strong.
6 They live in terror. To their superstitious imaginations is pictured 7 some malignant spirit, before the thought of which they quake in 8 fear and terror. Whatever he likes he thinks will please the evil 9 spirit. What will pacify him he thinks will appease the wrath of the 10 spirit. To this end he labours even against his fellow-savage."

11 The speaker went on to show by historical facts that the 12 savage man went from ancestral worship to the worship of 13 elephants, and later to gods, such as the God of Thunder and 14 Storms. Then the religion of the world was polytheism. "The beauty 15 of the sunrise, the grandeur of the sunset, the mystifying 16 appearance of the star-bedecked skies, and the weirdness of 17 thunder and lightning[nature] impressed primitive man with a force 18 that he could not explain, and suggested the idea of a higher and 19 more powerful being controlling the infinities that flocked before 20 his gaze," said Vive Kananda.

21 Then came another period--the period of monotheism. All the 22 gods disappeared and blended into one, the God of Gods, the ruler 23 of the universe. Then the speaker traced the Aryan race up to that 24 period, where they said: "We live and move in God. He is motion." 25 Then there came another period known to metaphysics as the 26 "period of Pantheism". This race rejected Polytheism and 27 Monotheism, and the idea that God was the universe, and said "the 28 soul of my soul is the only true existence. My nature is my existence 29 and will expand to me."

30 Vive Kananda then took up Buddhism. He said that they 31 neither asserted nor denied the existence of a God. Buddha would 32 simply say, when his counsel was sought: "You see misery. Then try 33 to lessen it." To a Buddhist misery is ever present, and society 34 measures the scope of his existence. Mohammedans, he said, 35 believed in the Old Testament of the Hindu [Hebrew] and the New 36 Testament of the Christian. They do not like the Christians, for they 37 say they are heretics and teach man-worship. Mohammed ever 38 forbade his followers having a picture of himself.

39 "The next question that arises," said he, "are these religions 40 true or are some of them true and some of them false? They have 41 all reached one conclusion, that of an absolute and infinite 42 existence. Unity is the object of religion. The multiple of 43 phenomena that is seen at every hand is only the infinite variety of 44 unity. an analysis of religion shows that man does not travel from 45 fallacy to truth, but from a lower truth to a higher truth.

46 "A man brings in a coat to a lot of people. Some say the coat 47 does not fit them. Well, you get out; you can't have a coat. Ask one 48 Christian minister what is the matter with all the other sects that 49 are opposed to his doctrines and dogmas, and he will answer: 'Oh, 50 they're not Christians.' But we have better instruction than these.

1 Our own natures, love, and science--they teach us better. Like the 2 eddies to a river, take them away and stagnation follows. Kill the 3 difference in opinions, and it is the death of thought. Motion is 4 necessity. Thought is the motion of the mind, and when that ceases 5 death begins.

6 "If you put a simple molecule of air in the bottom of a glass of 7 water it at once begins a struggle to join the infinite atmosphere
8 above. So it is with the soul. It is struggling to regain its pure 9 nature and to free itself from this material body. It wants to regain 10 its own infinite expansion. This is everywhere the same. Among 11 Christians, Buddhists, Mohammedans, agnostic, or priest, the soul
12 is struggling. A river flows a thousand miles down the circuitous 13 mountain side to where it joins the seas, and a man is standing 14 there to tell it to go back and start anew and assume a more direct 15 course! That man is a fool. You are a river that flows from the 16 heights of Zion. I flow from the lofty peaks of the Himalayas. I don't 17 say to you, go back and come down as I did, you're wrong. That is 18 more wrong than foolish. Stick to your beliefs. The truth is never 19 lost. Books may perish, nations may go down in a crash, but the 20 truth is preserved and is taken up by some man and handed back to 21 society, which proves a grand and continuous revelation of God."

22
23 BUDDHISM, THE RELIGION OF THE LIGHT OF ASIA

24 (Delivered in Detroit on March 19, 1894: Reported in Detroit 25 Tribune)

26 Vive Kananda lectured to an audience of about 150
27 [according to the Journal, 500] at the Auditorium last night upon 28 "Buddhism, the Religion of the Light of Asia." Honourable Don M.
29 Dickinson introduced him to the audience.

30 "Who shall say that this system of religion is divine and that 31 doomed?" asked Mr. Dickinson in his introductory remarks. "Who 32 shall draw the mystic line?"

33 Vive Kananda reviewed at length the early religions of India.
34 He told of the great slaughter of animals on the altar of sacrifice; of 35 Buddha's birth and life; of his puzzling questions to himself over the 36 causes of creation and the reasons for existence; of the earnest 37 struggle of Buddha to find the solution of creation and life; of the 38 final result.

39 Buddha, he said, stood head and shoulders above all other 40 men. He was one, he said, [of] whom his friends or enemies could 41 never say that he drew a breath or ate a crumb of bread but for the 42 good of all.

43 "He never preached transmigration of the soul," said 44 Kananda, "except he believed one soul was to its successor like the 45 wave of the ocean that grew and died away, leaving naught to the 46 succeeding wave but its force. He never preached that there was a 47 God, nor did he deny there was a God.

48 "'Why should we be good?' his disciples asked of him.

49 "'Because', he said, 'you inherited good. Let you in your turn

1 leave some heritage of good to your successors. Let us all help the 2 onward march of accumulated goodness, for goodness' sake.'

3 "He was the first prophet. He never abused any one or 4 arrogated anything to himself. He believed in our working out our 5 own salvation in religion.

6 "'I can't tell you,' he said, on his deathbed, 'nor any one.
7 Depend not on any one. Work out your own religion [salvation].'

8 "He protested against the inequality of man and man, or of 9 man and beast. All life was equal, he preached. He was the first 10 man to uphold the doctrine of prohibition in liquors. 'Be good and 11 do good', he said. 'If there is a God, you have Him by being good. If 12 there is no God, being good is good. He is to be blamed for all he 13 suffers. He is to be praised for all his good.'

14 "He was the first who brought the missionaries into 15 existence. He came as a saviour to the downtrodden millions of 16 India. They could not understand his philosophy, but they saw the 17 man and his teachings, and they followed him."

18 In conclusion Kananda said that Buddhism was the 19 foundation of the Christian religion; that the catholic church came 20 from Buddhism.

22 THE SCIENCE OF YOGA²²²

23 (Delivered at Tucker Hall, Alameda, California, on April 13, 24 1900)

25 The old Sanskrit word Yoga is defined as 26 [Chittavrittinirodha]. It means that Yoga is the science that teaches 27 us to bring the Chitta under control from the state of change. The 28 Chitta is the stuff from which our minds are made and which is 29 being constantly churned into waves by external and internal 30 influences. Yoga teaches us how to control the mind so that it is not 31 thrown out of balance into wave forms. . . .

32 What does this mean? To the student of religion almost 33 ninety-nine per cent of the books and thoughts of religion are mere 34 speculations. One man thinks religion is this and another, that. If 35 one man is more clever than the others, he overthrows their 36 speculations and starts a new one. Men have been studying new 37 religious systems for the last two thousand, four thousand, years-- 38 how long exactly nobody knows. . . . When they could not reason 39 them out, they said, "Believe!" If they were powerful, they forced 40 their beliefs. This is going on even now.

41 But there are a set of people who are not entirely satisfied 42 with this sort of thing. "Is there no way out?" they ask. You do not 43 speculate that way in physics, chemistry, and mathematics. Why 44 cannot the science of religion be like any other science? They 45 proposed this way: If such a thing as the soul of man really exists, if

1 ²²² ?Fragmentary notes of a lecture recorded by Ida Ansell and reprinted from 2 Vedanta and the West, July-August, 1957.
3

1 it is immortal, if God really exists as the ruler of this universe--He 2 must be [known] here; and all that must be [realised] in [your own]
3 consciousness.

4 The mind cannot be analysed by any external machine.
5 Supposing you could look into my brain while I am thinking, you
6 would only see certain molecules interchanged. You could not see 7 thought, consciousness, ideas, images. You would simply see the 8 mass of vibrations--chemical and physical changes. From this 9 example we see that this sort of analysis would not do.

10 Is there any other method by which the mind can be analysed 11 as mind? If there is, then the real science of religion is possible. The 12 science of Raja-Yoga claims there is such a possibility. We can all 13 attempt it and succeed to a certain degree. There is this great 14 difficulty: In external sciences the object is [comparatively easy to 15 observe]. The instruments of analysis are rigid; and both are 16 external. But in the analysis of the mind the object and the 17 instruments of analysis are the same thing. . . . The subject and the 18 object become one. . . .

19 External analysis will go to the brain and find physical and 20 chemical changes. It would never succeed [in answering the 21 questions]: What is the consciousness? What is your imagination?
22 Where does this vast mass of ideas you have come from, and where 23 do they go? We cannot deny them. They are facts. I never saw my 24 own brain. I have to take for granted I have one. But man can never 25 deny his own conscious imagination. . . .

26 The great problem is ourselves. Am I the long chain I do not 27 see--one piece following the other in rapid succession but quite 28 unconnected? Am I such a state of consciousness [for ever in a 29 flux]? Or am I something more than that--a substance, an entity, 30 what we call the soul? In other words, has man a soul or not? Is he 31 a bundle of states of consciousness without any connection, or is he 32 a unified substance? That is the great controversy. If we are merely 33 bundles of consciousness, . . . such a question as immortality would 34 be merely delusion. . . . On the other hand, if there is something in 35 me which is a unit, a substance, then of course I am immortal. The 36 unit cannot be destroyed or broken into pieces. Only compounds 37 can be broken up. . . .

38 All religions except Buddhism believe and struggle in some 39 way or other to reach such a substance. Buddhism denies the 40 substance and is quite satisfied with that. It says, this business 41 about God, the soul, immortality, and all that--do not vex yourselves 42 with such questions. But all the other religions of the world cling to 43 this substance. They all believe that the soul is the substance in 44 man in spite of all the changes, that God is the substance which is 45 in the universe. They all believe in the immortality of the soul.
46 These are speculations. Who is to decide the controversy between 47 the Buddhists and the Christians? Christianity says there is a 48 substance that will live for ever. The Christian says, "My Bible says 49 so." The Buddhist says, "I do not believe in your book." . . .

50 The question is: Are we the substance [the soul] or this 51 subtle matter, the changing, billowing mind? . . . Our minds are

1 constantly changing. Where is the substance within? We do not find 2 it. I am now this and now that. I will believe in the substance if for a 3 moment you can stop these changes. . . .

4 Of course all the beliefs in God and heaven are little beliefs
5 of organised religions. Any scientific religion never proposes such 6 things.

7 Yoga is the science that teaches us to stop the Chitta [the 8 mind-stuff] from getting into these changes. Suppose you succeed
9 in leading the mind to a perfect state of Yoga. That moment you 10 have solved the problem. You have known what you are. You have 11 mastered all the changes. After that you may let the mind run 12 about, but it is not the same mind any more. It is perfectly under 13 your control. No more like wild horses that dash you down. . . . You 14 have seen God. This is no longer a matter of speculation. There is 15 no more Mr. So-and-So, . . . no more books or Vedas, or controversy 16 of preachers, or anything. You have been yourself: I am the 17 substance beyond all these changes. I am not the changes; if I 18 were, I could not stop them. I can stop the changes, and therefore I 19 can never be the changes. This is the proposition of the science of 20 Yoga. . . .

21 We do not like these changes. We do not like changes at all.
22 Every change is being forced upon us. . . . In our country bullocks 23 carry a yoke on their shoulders [which is connected by a pole with 24 an oil press]. From the yoke projects a piece of wood [to which is 25 tied a bundle of grass] just far enough to tempt the bullock, but he 26 cannot reach it. He wants to eat the grass and goes a little farther 27 [thereby turning the oil press]. . . . We are like these bullocks, 28 always trying to eat the grass and stretching our necks to reach it.
29 We go round and round this way. Nobody likes these changes.
30 Certainly not! . . . All these changes are forced upon us. . . . We 31 cannot help it. Once we have put ourselves in the machine, we must 32 go on and on. The moment we stop, there is greater evil than if we 33 continued forward. . . .

34 Of course misery comes to us. It is all misery because it is all 35 unwilling. It is all forced. Nature orders us and we obey, but there 36 is not much love lost between us and nature. All our work is an 37 attempt to escape nature. We say we are enjoying nature. If we 38 analyse ourselves, we find that we are trying to escape everything 39 and invent ways to enjoy this and that. . . . [Nature is] like the 40 Frenchman who had invited an English friend and told him of his 41 old wines in the cellar. He called for a bottle of old wine. It was so 42 beautiful, and the light sparkled inside like a piece of gold. His 43 butler poured out a glass, and the Englishman quietly drank it. The 44 butler had brought in a bottle of castor oil! We are drinking castor 45 oil all the time; we cannot help it. . . .

46 [People in general] . . . are so reduced to machinery they do 47 not . . . even think. Just like cats, dogs and other animals, they are 48 also driven with the whip by nature. They never disobey, never 49 think of it. But even they have some experience of life. . . .

50 [Some, however,] begin to question: What is this? What are 51 all these experiences for? What is the Self? Is there any escape?

1 Any meaning to life? . . .

2 The good will die. The wicked will die. Kings will die, and 3 beggars will die. The great misery is death. . . .

4 All the time we are trying to avoid it. And if we die in a
5 comfortable religion, we think we will see Johns and Jacks 6 afterwards and have a good time.

7 In your country they bring Johns and Jacks down to show you
8 [in Seances]. I saw such people numbers of times and shook hands
9 with them. Many of you may have seen them. They bang the piano 10 and sing "Beulah Land": America is a vast land. My home is on the 11 other side of the world. I do not know where Beulah Land is. You 12 will not find it in any geography. See our good comfortable religion!
13 The old, old moth-eaten belief!

14 Those people cannot think. What can be done for them? They 15 have been eaten up by the world. There is nothing in them to think.
16 Their bones have become hollow, their brains are like cheese. . . . I 17 sympathise with them. Let them have their comfort! Some people 18 are evidently very much comforted by seeing their ancestors from 19 Beulah Land.

20 One of these mediums offered to bring my ancestors down to 21 me. I said, "Stop there. Do anything you like, but if you bring my 22 ancestors, I don't know if I can restrain myself." The medium was 23 very kind and stopped.

24 In our country, when we begin to get worried by things, we 25 pay something to the priests and make a bargain with God. . . . For 26 the time being we feel comforted, otherwise we will not pay the 27 priests. A little comfort comes, but [it turns] into reaction shortly. . .
28 . So again misery comes. The same misery is here all the time. Your 29 people in our country says, "If you believe in our doctrine you are 30 safe." Our people among the lower classes believe in your 31 doctrines. The only change is that they become beggars. . . . But is 32 that religion? It is politics--not religion. You may call it religion, 33 dragging the word religion down to that sense. But it is not 34 spiritual.

35 Among thousands of men and women a few are inclined to 36 something higher than this life. The others are like sheep. . . . Some 37 among thousands try to understand things, to find a way out. The 38 question is: Is there a way out? If there is a way out, it is in the soul 39 and nowhere else. The ways out from other sources have been tried 40 enough, and all [have been found wanting]. People do not find 41 satisfaction. The very fact that those myriads of theories and sects 42 exist show that people do not find satisfaction.

43 The science of Yoga proposes this, that the one way out is 44 through ourselves. We have to individualise ourselves. If there is 45 any truth, we can [realise it as our very essence]. . . . We will cease 46 being driven about by nature from place to place. . . .

47 The phenomenal world is always changing: [to reach the 48 Changeless] that is our goal. We want to be That, to realise that 49 Absolute, the [changeless] Reality. What is preventing us from 1 realising that Reality? It is the fact of creation. The creative mind is 2 creating all the time and gets mixed up with its own creation. [But 3 we must also remember that] it is creation that discovered God. It

4 is creation that discovered the Absolute in every individual soul. . . .

5 Going back to our definition: Yoga is stopping the Chitta, the 6 mind-stuff, from getting into these changes. When all this creation 7 has been stopped--if it is possible to stop it--then we shall see for 8 ourselves what we are in reality. . . . The Uncreated, the One that 9 creates, manifests itself.

10 The methods of Yoga are various. Some of them are very 11 difficult; it takes long training to succeed. Some are easy. Those 12 who have the perseverance and strength to follow it through attain 13 to great results. Those who do not may take a simpler method and 14 get some benefit out of it.

15 As to the proper analysis of the mind, we see at once how 16 difficult it is to grapple with the mind itself. We have become 17 bodies. That we are souls we have forgotten entirely. When we 18 think of ourselves, it is the body that comes into our imagination.
19 We behave as bodies. We talk as bodies. We are all body. From this 20 body we have to separate the soul. Therefore the training begins 21 with the body itself, [until ultimately] the spirit manifests itself. . . .
22 The central idea in all this training is to attain to that power of 23 concentration, the power of meditation.

27 Baidyanath

28 25th December, 1889

29 {original in Bengali}

30 Dear Sir {Balaram Bose},

31 I have been staying for the last few days at Baidyanath in 32 Purna Babu's Lodge. It is not so cold, and my health too is 33 indifferent. I am suffering from indigestion, probably due to excess 34 of iron in the water. I have found nothing agreeable here--neither 35 the place, nor the season, nor the company. I leave for Varanasi 36 tomorrow. Achyutananda stopped at Govinda Chaudhury's place at 37 Deoghar, and the latter, as soon as he got news of us, earnestly 38 insisted on our becoming his guests. Finally, he met us once again 39 and prevailed on us to accede to his request. The man is a great 40 worker, but has a number of women with him--old women most of 41 them, of the ordinary Vaishnava type. . . . His clerks too revere us 42 much; some of them are very much ill-disposed towards him, and 43 they spoke of his misdeeds. Incidentally, I raised the topic of __. You 44 have many wrong ideas or doubts about her; hence I write all this 45 after particular investigation. Even the aged clerks of this 46 establishment highly respect and revere her. She came to stop with 47 __ while she was a mere child, and ever lived as his wife. . . .
48 Everyone admits in one voice that her character is spotless. She 49 was all along a perfectly chaste woman and never behaved with __

1 in any relation but that of wife to husband, and she was absolutely 2 faithful. She came at too early an age to have incurred any moral 3 taint. After she had separated from __, she wrote to him to say that 4 she had never treated him as anything but her husband, but that it 5 was impossible for her to live with a man with a loose character. His 6 old office-bearers too believe him to be satanic in character; but 7 they consider __ a Devi (angel), and remark that it was following 8 her departure that __ lost all sense of shame.

9 My object in writing all this is that formerly I was not a 10 believer in the tale of the lady's early life. The idea that there might 11 be such purity in the midst of a relation which society does not 12 recognise, I used to consider as romance. But after thorough 13 investigation I have come to know that it is all right. She is very 14 pure, pure from her infancy--I have not the least doubt about it. For 15 entertaining those doubts, you and I and everyone are guilty to her; 16 I make repeated salutations to her, and ask her pardon for my guilt.
17 She is not a liar.

18 I take this opportunity to record that such courage is 19 impossible in a lying and unchaste woman. I have also been told 20 that she had a lifelong ardent faith in religion also.

21 Well, your disease is not yet improving! I don't think this is a 22 place for patients unless one is ready to spend a good deal of 23 money. Please think out some judicious course. Here every article 24 will have to be procured from elsewhere.

25 Yours sincerely,

32 {original in Bengali}

33 Dear Sir {Balam Bose},

34 Gupta left a slip when coming and the next day a letter from 35 Yogananda gave me all the news and I immediately started for 36 Allahabad which I reached the day after, to find that Yogananda had 37 completely recovered. He had chicken-pox (with one or two 38 smallpox rashes also). The doctor is a noble soul, and they have got 39 a brotherhood, who are all great pious men and highly devoted to 40 the service of Sadhus. They are particularly anxious that I pass the 41 month of Magh here, but I am leaving for Varanasi. . . . How are 42 you? I pray to God for the welfare of yourself and your family.
43 Please convey my compliments to Tulasiram, Chuni Babu, and the 44 rest.

45 Yours affectionately,

Ghazipur

30th January, 1890

{original in Bengali}

Revered Sir {Balaram Bose},

I am now stopping with Satish Babu at Ghazipur. Of the few places I have recently visited, this is the healthiest. The water of Baidyanath is very bad--it leads to indigestion. Allahabad is very congested. The few days I passed at Varanasi, I suffered from fever day and night--the place is so malarious! Ghazipur has a very salubrious climate--specially the quarter I am living in. I have visited Pavhari Baba's house--there are high walls all round, and it is fashioned like an English bungalow. There is a garden inside and big rooms and chimneys, etc. He allows nobody to enter. If he is so inclined, he comes up to the door and speaks from inside--that is all. One day I went and waited and waited in the cold and had to return. I shall go to Varanasi on Sunday next. If the meeting with the Babaji takes place in the meantime, all right, otherwise I bid him good-bye. About Pramada Babu's place I shall write definitely from Varanasi. If Kali Bhattacharya is determined to come, let him do so after I leave for Varanasi on Sunday, but he should rather not. After a few days' stay at Varanasi, I shall start for Hrishikesh. Pramada Babu may accompany me. Please accept all of you my cordial greetings--and blessing to Fakir, Ram, Krishnamayi, etc.

Yours affectionately,

Vivekananda

PS. In my opinion, it will do you much good if you come and stay for some time at Ghazipur. Here Satish will be able to secure a bungalow for you, and there is a gentleman, Gagan Chandra Ray by name, who is the head of the Opium Office and is exceedingly courteous, philanthropic, and social--they will arrange for everything. The house-rent is fifteen to twenty rupees; rice is dear, and milk sells at sixteen to twenty seers a rupee; all other things are very cheap. Besides, under the care of these gentlemen, there is no chance of any difficulty. But it is slightly expensive--it will cost over forty to fifty rupees. Varanasi is horribly malarious. I have never lived in Pramada Babu's garden. He likes to have me always in his company. The garden is indeed very beautiful, richly laid out, spacious, and open. This time when I go, I shall live there and report to you.

Salutation to Bhagavan Ramakrishna!

c/o Satish Mukherji

Gorabazar, Ghazipur

14th February, 1890

{original in Bengali}

Revered Sir {Balaram Bose},

I am in receipt of your letter of contrition. I am not leaving this place soon--it is impossible to avoid the Babaji's request. You have expressed remorse at not having reaped any appreciable results by serving the Sadhus. It is true, and yet not true; it is true if you look towards ideal bliss; but if you look behind to the place from which you started, you will find that before you were an animal, now you are a man, and will be a god or God Himself in future. Moreover, that sort of regret and dissatisfaction is very good; it is the prelude to improvement. Without this none can rise. He who puts on a turban and immediately sees the Lord, progresses thus far and no farther. You are blessed indeed to have that constant dissatisfaction preying upon your mind--rest assured that there is no danger for you. . . . You are a keenly intelligent man, and know full well that patience is the best means of success. In this respect I have no doubt that we light-headed boys have much to learn from you. . . . You are a considerate man, and I need not add anything. Man has two ears but one mouth. You specially are given to plain-speaking and are chary of making large promises--things that sometimes make me cross with you, but upon reflection I find that it is you who have acted with discretion. "Slow but sure." "What is lost in power is gained in speed." However, in this world everything depends upon one's words. To get an insight behind the words (specially, with your economical spirit masking all) is not given to all, and one must associate long with a man to be able to understand him. . . . Religion is not in sects, nor in making a fuss--why do you forget these teachings of our revered Master? Please help as far as it lies in you, but to judge what came of it, whether it was turned to good or evil account, is perhaps beyond our jurisdiction. . . . Considering the great shock which Girish Babu has received, it will give him immense peace to serve Mother at this moment. He is a very keen-witted person. And our beloved Master had perfect confidence in you, used to dine nowhere else except at your place, and, I have heard, Mother too has the fullest confidence in you. In view of these, you will please bear and forbear all shortcomings of us fickle boys, treating them as if they were done by your own boy. This is all I have got to say. Please let me know by return of post when the Anniversary is to take place. A pain in the loins is giving me much trouble. In a few days the place will look exceedingly beautiful, with miles and miles of rose-banks all in flower. Satish says he will then send some fresh roses and cuttings for the Festival. . . . May the Lord ordain that your son becomes a man, and never a coward!

Yours affectionately,

Vivekananda

PS. If Mother has come, please convey to her my countless salutations, and ask her to bless me that I may have unflinching

1 perseverance. Or, if that be impossible in this body, may it fall off 2 soon!

9 My dear Gupta {Sadananda},

10 I hope you are doing well. Do your own spiritual exercises, 11 and knowing yourself to be the humblest servant of all, serve them.
12 Those with whom you are staying are such that even I am not 13 worthy to call myself their humblest servant and take the dust of 14 their feet. Knowing this, serve them and have devotion for them.
15 Don't be angry even if they abuse or even hurt you grievously.
16 Never mix with women. Try to be hardy little by little, and gradually 17 accustom yourself to maintaining the body out of the proceeds of 18 begging. Whoever takes the name of Ramakrishna, know him to be 19 your Guru. Everyone can play the role of a master, but it is very 20 difficult to be a servant. Specially you should follow Shashi. Know it 21 for certain that without steady devotion for the Guru and 22 unflinching patience and perseverance, nothing is to be achieved.
23 You must have strict morality. Deviate an inch from this, and you 24 are gone forever.

25 Yours affectionately,

33 {original in Bengali}

34 Revered Sir {Balaram Bose},

35 Received your kind note yesterday. I am very sorry to learn 36 that Suresh Babu's illness is extremely serious. What is destined 37 will surely happen. It is a matter of great regret that you too have 38 fallen ill. So long as egoism lasts, any shortcoming in adopting 39 remedial measures is to be considered as idleness--it is a fault and a 40 guilt. For one who has not that egoistic idea, the best course is to 41 forbear. The dwelling-place of the Jivatman, this body, is a veritable 42 means of work, and he who converts this into an infernal den is 43 guilty, and he who neglects it is also to blame. Please act according 44 to circumstances as they present themselves, without the least 45 hesitation.

5 There is a dreadful outbreak of influenza at Varanasi and 6 Pramada Babu has gone to Allahabad. Baburam has suddenly come 7 here. He has got fever; he was wrong to start under such 8 circumstances. . . . I am leaving this place tomorrow. . . . My 9 countless salutations to Mother. You all bless me that I may have 10 sameness of vision, that after avoiding the bondages which one is 11 heir to by one's very birth, I may not again get stuck in self-imposed 12 bondages. If there be any Doer of good and if He have the power 13 and the opportunity, may He vouchsafe the highest blessings unto 14 you all--this is my constant prayer.

39 Dear Adhyapakji (Honourable Professor) {Prof. John Henry 40 Wright},

41 I am going off from here today. I hope you have received 42 some reply from Chicago. I have received an invitation with full 43 directions from Mr. Sanborn. So I am going to Saratoga on Monday.

1 My respects to your wife. And my love to Austin and all the 2 children. You are a real Mahatma (a great soul) and Mrs. Wright is 3 nonpareil.

4 Yours affectionately,
5 Vivekananda

11 Dear Adhyapakji {Prof. John Henry Wright},

12 I hasten to tender my heartfelt gratitude to you for your 13 letters of introduction. I have received a letter from Mr. Theles of 14 Chicago giving me the names of some of the delegates and other 15 things about the Congress.

16 Your professor of Sanskrit in his note to Miss Sanborn 17 mistakes me for Purushottama Joshi and states that there is a 18 Sanskrit library in Boston the like of which can scarcely be met with 19 in India. I would be so happy to see it.

20 Mr. Sanborn has written to me to come over to Saratoga on 21 Monday and I am going accordingly. I would stop then at a boarding 22 house called Sanatorium. If any news come from Chicago in the 23 meanwhile I hope you will kindly send it over to the Sanatorium, 24 Saratoga.

25 You and your noble wife and sweet children have made an 26 impression in my brain which is simply indelible, and I thought 27 myself so much nearer to heaven when living with you. May He, the 28 giver of all gifts, shower on your head His choicest blessings.

29 Here are a few lines written as an attempt at poetry. Hoping 30 your love will pardon this infliction.

31 Ever your friend,
32 Vivekananda

33 O'er hill and dale and mountain range,
34 In temple, church, and mosque,
35 In Vedas, Bible, Al Koran
36 I had searched for Thee in vain.
37 Like a child in the wildest forest lost
38 I have cried and cried alone,
39 "Where art Thou gone, my God, my love?"
40 The echo answered, "gone."

41
42 And days and nights and years then passed-- 43 A fire was in the brain;
44 I knew not when day changed in night,
45 The heart seemed rent in twain.
46 I laid me down on Ganga's shore,

1 Exposed to sun and rain;
2 With burning tears I laid the dust
3 And wailed with waters' roar.
4
5 I called on all the holy names
6 Of every clime and creed,
7 "Show me the way, in mercy, ye
8 Great ones who have reached the goal".
9
10 Years then passed in bitter cry,
11 Each moment seemed an age,
12 Till one day midst my cries and groans
13 Some one seemed calling me.
14
15 A gentle soft and soothing voice
16 That said "my son", "my son",
17 That seemed to thrill in unison
18 With all the chords of my soul.
19 20 I stood on my feet and tried to find 21 The place the voice came from;
22 I searched and searched and turned to see
23 Round me, before, behind.
24 Again, again it seemed to speak--
25 The voice divine to me.
26 In rapture all my soul was hushed,
27 Entranced, enthralled in bliss.
28
29 A flash illumined all my soul;
30 The heart of my heart opened wide.
31 O joy, O bliss, what do I find!
32 My love, my love, you are here,
33 And you are here, my love, my all!
34
35 And I was searching thee!
36 From all eternity you were there
37 Enthroned in majesty!
38
39 From that day forth, where'er I roam, 40 I feel Him standing by 41 O'er hill and dale, high mount and vale,
42 Far far away and high.
43
44 The moon's soft light, the stars so bright,
45 The glorious orb of day,
46 He shines in them; His beauty--might-- 47 Reflected lights are they.
48 The majestic morn, the melting eve,
49 The boundless billowy sea,
50 In nature's beauty, songs of birds,
51 I see through them--it is He.
52
53 When dire calamity seizes me,

1 The heart seems weak and faint,
 2 All nature seems to crush me down,
 3 With laws that never bend.
 4
 5 Meseems I hear Thee whispering sweet
 6 My love, "I am near", "I am near".
 7 My heart gets strong. With Thee, my love,
 8 A thousand deaths no fear.
 9 Thou speakest in the mother's lay
 10 That shuts the baby's eye;
 11 When innocent children laugh and play
 12 I see Thee standing by.
 13
 14 When holy friendship shakes the hand,
 15 He stands between them too;
 16 He pours the nectar in mother's kiss
 17 And the baby's sweet "mama".
 18 Thou wert my God with prophets old;
 19 All creeds do come from Thee;
 20 The Vedas, Bible, and Koran bold
 21 Sing Thee in harmony.
 22
 23 "Thou art", "Thou art" the Soul of souls
 24 In the rushing stream of life.
 25 "Om tat Sat om."²²³ Thou art my God.
 26 My love, I am thine, I am thine.

32 Dear Adhyapakji {Prof. John Henry Wright},

33 I do not know what you are thinking of my long silence. In 34 the first place I dropped in on the Congress in the eleventh hour, 35 and quite unprepared; and that kept me very very busy for some 36 time. Secondly, I was speaking almost every day in the Congress 37 and had no time to write; and last and greatest of all--my kind 38 friend, I owe so much to you that it would have been an insult to 39 your ahetuka (unselfish) friendship to have written you business-40 like letters in a hurry. The Congress is now over.

41 Dear brother, I was so so afraid to stand before that great 42 assembly of fine speakers and thinkers from all over the world and 43 speak; but the Lord gave me strength, and I almost every day
 44 heroically (?) faced the platform and the audience. If I have done 45 well, He gave me the strength for it; if I have miserably failed--I 46 knew that beforehand--for I am hopelessly ignorant.

47 Your friend Prof. Bradley was very kind to me and he always

1 ²²³ ?Tat Sat means that only real existence. [Swamiji's note].

1 cheered me on. And oh! everybody is so kind here to me who am
2 nothing--that it is beyond my power of expression. Glory unto Him 3 in the highest in whose sight the poor ignorant monk from India is 4 the same as the learned divines of this mighty land. And how the 5 Lord is helping me every day of my life, brother--I sometimes wish 6 for a life of [a] million million ages to serve Him through the work, 7 dressed in rags and fed by charity.

8 Oh, how I wished that you were here to see some of our 9 sweet ones from India--the tender-hearted Buddhist Dharmapala, 10 the orator Mazoomdar--and realise that in that far-off and poor 11 India there are hearts that beat in sympathy to yours, born and 12 brought up in this mighty and great country.

13 My eternal respects to your holy wife; and to your sweet 14 children my eternal love and blessings.

15 Col. Higginson, a very broad man, told me that your 16 daughter had written to his daughter about me; and he was very 17 sympathetic to me. I am going to Evanston tomorrow and hope to 18 see Prof. Bradley there.

19 May He make us all more and more pure and holy so that we 20 may live a perfect spiritual life even before throwing off this earthly 21 body.

22 Vivekananda

23 [The letter continues on a separate sheet of paper:]

24 I am now going to be reconciled to my life here. All my life I 25 have been taking every circumstance as coming from Him and 26 calmly adapting myself to it. At first in America I was almost out of 27 my water. I was afraid I would have to give up the accustomed way 28 of being guided by the Lord and cater for myself--and what a horrid 29 piece of mischief and ingratitude was that. I now clearly see that 30 He who was guiding me on the snow tops of the Himalayas and the 31 burning plains of India is here to help me and guide me. Glory unto 32 Him in the highest. So I have calmly fallen into my old ways.
33 Somebody or other gives me a shelter and food, somebody or other 34 comes to ask me to speak about Him, and I know He sends them 35 and mine is to obey. And then He is supplying my necessities, and 36 His will be done !

37 "He who rests [in] Me and gives up all other self-assertion 38 and struggles I carry to him whatever he needs" (Gita).

39 So it is in Asia. So in Europe. So in America. So in the deserts
40 of India. So in the rush of business in America. For is He not here 41 also? And if He does not, I only would take for granted that He 42 wants that I should lay aside this three minutes' body of clay--and 43 hope to lay it down gladly.

44 We may or may not meet, brother. He knows. You are great, 45 learned, and holy. I dare not preach to you or your wife; but to your 46 children I quote these passages from the Vedas--

47 "The four Vedas, sciences, languages, philosophy, and all 48 other learnings are only ornamental. The real learning, the true 49 knowledge is that which enables us to reach Him who is unchangeable in His love."

"How real, how tangible, how visible is He through whom the skin touches, the eyes see, and the world gets its reality!"

"Hearing Him nothing remains to be heard,

Seeing Him nothing remains to be seen,

Attaining Him nothing remains to be attained."

"He is the eye of our eyes, the ear of our ears, the Soul of our souls."

He is nearer to you, my dears, than even your father and mother. You are innocent and pure as flowers. Remain so, and He will reveal Himself unto you. Dear Austin, when you are playing, there is another playmate playing with you who loves you more than anybody else; and Oh, He is so full of fun. He is always playing--sometimes with great big balls which we call the sun and earth, sometimes with little children like you and laughing and playing with you. How funny it would be to see Him and play with Him! My dear, think of it.

Dear Adhyapakji, I am moving about just now. Only when I come to Chicago, I always go to see Mr. and Mrs. Lyons, one of the noblest couples I have seen here. If you would be kind enough to write to me, kindly address it to the care of Mr. John B. Lyon, 262 Michigan Ave., Chicago.

"He who gets hold of the One in this world of many--the one constant existence in a world of flitting shadows--the one life in a world of death--he alone crosses this sea of misery and struggle. None else, none else" (Vedas).

"He who is the Brahman of the Vedantins, Ishvara of the Naiyayikas, Purusha of the Sankhyas, cause of the Mimamsakas, law of the Buddhists, absolute zero of the Atheists, and love infinite unto those that love, may [He] take us all under His merciful protection": Udayanacharya--a great philosopher of the Nyaya or Dualistic school. And this is the Benediction pronounced at the very beginning of his wonderful book Kusumanjali (A handful of flowers), in which he attempts to establish the existence of a personal creator and moral ruler of infinite love independently of revelation.

Your ever grateful friend,

Vivekananda

Dear Mrs. Tannatt Woods,

I received your letter yesterday. Just now I am lecturing about Chicago--and am doing as I think very well; it is ranging from

1 30 to 80 dollars a lecture, and just now I have been so well
2 advertised in Chicago gratis by the Parliament of Religions that it is 3 not advisable to give up this field now. To which I am sure you will 4 agree . However I may come soon to Boston, but when I cannot say.
5 Yesterday I returned from Streator where I got 87 dollars for a 6 lecture. I have engagements every day this week. And hope more 7 will come by the end of the week. My love to Mr. Woods and 8 compliments to all our friends.

9 Yours truly,

17 Dear Adhyapakji {Prof. John Henry Wright},

18 You would be glad to know that I am doing well here and that 19 almost everybody has been very kind to me, except of course the 20 very orthodox. Many of the men brought together here from far-off 21 lands have got projects and ideas and missions to carry out, and 22 America is the only place where there is a chance of success for 23 everything. But I thought better and have given up speaking about 24 my project entirely--because I am sure now--the heathen draws 25 more than his project. So I want to go to work earnestly for my own 26 project only keeping the project in the background and working like 27 any other lecturer.

28 He who has brought me hither and has not left me yet will 29 not leave me ever I am here. You will be glad to know that I am 30 doing well and expect to do very well in the way of getting money.
31 Of course I am too green in the business but would soon learn my 32 trade. I am very popular in Chicago. So I want to stay here a little 33 more and get money.

34 Tomorrow I am going to lecture on Buddhism at the ladies' 35 fortnightly club--which is the most influential in this city. How to 36 thank you my kind friend or Him who brought you to me; for now I 37 think the success of my project probable, and it is you who have 38 made it so.

39 May blessings and happiness attend every step of your 40 progress in this world.

41 My love and blessings to your children.

42 Yours affectionately ever,
43 Vivekananda

3 Dear Mrs. Woods,

4 Excuse my delay in answering your letter. I do not know 5 when I will be able to see you again. I am starting tomorrow for 6 Madison and Minneapolis.

7 The English gentleman you speak of is Dr. Momerie of 8 London. He is a well-known worker amongst the poor of London
9 and is a very sweet man. You perhaps do not know that the English 10 church was the only religious denomination in the world who did 11 not send to us a representative, and Dr. Momerie came to the 12 Parliament in spite of the Archbishop of Canterbury's denouncing of 13 the Parliament of Religions.

14 My love for you, my kind friend, and your noble son is all the 15 same whether I write pretty often or not.

16 Can you express my books and the cover-all to the care of 17 Mr. Hale? I am in need of them. The express will be paid here.

18 The blessings of the Lord on you and yours.

19 Ever your friend,

20 Vivekananda

21 PS. If you have the occasion to write to Miss Sanborn and 22 others of our friends in the east, kindly give them my deepest 23 respects.

30 Dear Sister {Harriet McKindley},

31 Got your package yesterday. Sorry that you send those 32 stockings--I could have got some myself here. Glad that it shows 33 your love. After all, the satchel has become more than a thoroughly 34 stuffed sausage. I do not know how to carry it along.

35 I have returned today to Mrs. Bagley's as she was sorry that 36 I would remain so long with Mr. Palmer. Of course in Palmer's 37 house there was real "good time". He is a real jovial heartwhole 38 fellow, and likes "good time" a little too much and his "hot Scotch".
39 But he is right along innocent and childlike in his simplicity.

40 He was very sorry that I came away, but I could not help.
41 Here is a beautiful young girl. I saw her twice, I do not remember 42 her name. So brainy, so beautiful, so spiritual, so unworldly! Lord 43 bless her! She came this morning with Mrs. McDuvell and talked so 44 beautifully and deep and spiritually--that I was quite astounded.
45 She knows everything about the Yogis and is herself much

1 advanced in practice!!

2 "Thy ways are beyond searching out." Lord bless her--so 3 innocent, holy, and pure! This is the grandest recompense in my 4 terribly toilsome, miserable life--the finding of holy happy faces like 5 you from time to time. The great Buddhist prayer is, "I bow down to 6 all holy men on earth". I feel the real meaning of this prayer 7 whenever I see a face upon which the finger of the Lord has written 8 in unmistakable letters "mine". May you all be happy, blessed, good 9 and pure as you are for ever and ever. May your feet never touch 10 the mud and dirt of this terrible world. May you live and pass away 11 like flowers as you are born--is the constant prayer of your brother.

18 Dear Brother {Rev. Hume},²²⁴

19 Your letter just reached me here. I am in a hurry, so excuse a 20 few points which I would take the liberty of correcting you in.

21 In the first place, I have not one word to say against any 22 religion or founder of religion in the world--whatever you may think 23 of our religion. All religions are sacred to me. Secondly, it is a 24 misstatement that I said that missionaries do not learn our 25 vernaculars. I still stick to my statement that few, if any, of them 26 pay any attention to Sanskrit; nor is it true that I said anything 27 against any religious body--except that I do insist on my statement 28 that India can never be converted to Christianity, and further I deny 29 that the conditions of the lower classes are made any better by 30 Christianity, and add that the majority of southern Indian Christians 31 are not only Catholics, but what they call themselves, caste 32 Christians, that is, they stick close to their castes, and I am 33 thoroughly persuaded that if the Hindu society gives up its 34 exclusive policy, ninety per cent of them would rush back to 35 Hinduism with all its defects.

36 Lastly, I thank you from the bottom of my heart for calling me 37 your fellow-countryman. This is the first time any European 38 foreigner, born in India though he be, has dared to call a detested 39 native by that name--missionary or no missionary. Would you dare 40 call me the same in India? Ask your missionaries, born in India, to

1 ²²⁴ ?Reverend R.A. Hume, the Director of a Mission in India, who wrote to 2 Swami Vivekananda from Auburndale, Massachusetts, on March 21, 1894, in an 3 obvious attempt to draw him into a public debate. Mr. Hume was born in India 4 and started his letter with "Swami Vivekananda, my fellow-countryman from 5 India". His thesis was that the Missionaries were justified in what they did in 6 India and how they spoke about her abroad and that Swamiji was 7 misrepresenting India and the Christian Missionaries in Detroit and other places 8 in the U.S.A.--Ed.
9

1 do the same--and those not born, to treat them as fellow human 2 beings. As to the rest, you yourself would call me a fool if I admit 3 that my religion or society submits to be judged by strolling globe-4 trotters or story-writers' narratives.

5 My brother--excuse me--what do you know of my society or 6 religion, though born in India? It is absolutely impossible--the 7 society is so closed; and over and above, everyone judges from his 8 preconceived standard of race and religion, does he not? Lord bless 9 you for calling me a fellow-countryman. There may still come a 10 brotherly love and fellowship between the East and West.

11 Yours fraternally,

12 Vivekananda

30 Dear Sister {Isabelle McKindley},

31 Your letter reached me yesterday. You were perfectly right--I 32 enjoyed the fun of the lunatic Interior,²²⁵ but the mail you sent 33 yesterday from India was really, as Mother Church says in her 34 letter, a good news after a long interval. There is a beautiful letter 35 from Dewanji. The old man--Lord bless him--offers as usual to help 36 me. Then there was a little pamphlet published in Calcutta about 37 me--revealing that once at least in my life the prophet has been 38 honoured in his own country. There are extracts from American and 39 Indian papers and magazines about me. The extracts printed from 40 Calcutta papers were especially gratifying, although the strain is so 41 fulsome that I refuse to send the pamphlet over to you. They call me 42 illustrious, wonderful, and all sorts of nonsense, but they forward

1 ²²⁵ ?Chicago Interior, a Presbyterian newspaper which opposed Swamiji.--Ed.
2

1 me the gratitude of the whole nation. Now I do not care what they 2 even of my own people say about me--except for one thing. I have 3 an old mother. She has suffered much all her life and in the midst of 4 all she could bear to give me up for the service of God and man; but 5 to have given up the most beloved of her children--her hope--to live 6 a beastly immoral life in a far distant country, as Mazoomdar was 7 telling in Calcutta, would have simply killed her. But the Lord is 8 great, none can injure His children.

9 The cat is out of the bag--without my seeking at all. And who 10 do you think is the editor of one of our leading papers which praise 11 me so much and thank God that I came to America to represent 12 Hinduism? Mazoomdar's cousin!--Poor Mazoomdar--he has injured 13 his cause by telling lies through jealousy. Lord knows I never 14 attempted any defence.

15 I read the article of Mr. Gandhi in the Forum before this.

16 If you have got the Review of Reviews of last month--read to 17 mother the testimony about the Hindus in connection with the 18 opium question in India by one of the highest officials of the English 19 in India. He compares the English with the Hindus and lauds the 20 Hindu to the skies. Sir Lepel Griffin was one of the bitterest 21 enemies of our race. What made this change of front?

22 I had a very good time in Boston at Mrs. Breed's--and saw 23 Prof. Wright. I am going to Boston again. The tailor is making my 24 new gown. I am going to speak at Cambridge University [Harvard]
25 and would be the guest of Prof. Wright there. They write grand 26 welcomes to me in the Boston papers.

27 I am tired of all this nonsense. Towards the latter part of May 28 I will come back to Chicago, and after a few day's stay would come 29 back to the East again.

30 I spoke last night at the Waldorf hotel. Mrs. Smith sold 31 tickets at $2 each. I had a full hall which by the way was a small 32 one. I have not seen anything of the money yet. Hope to see in the 33 course of the day.

34 I made a hundred dollars at Lynn which I do not send 35 because I have to make my new gown and other nonsense.

36 Do not expect to make any money at Boston. Still I must 37 touch the brain of America and stir it up if I can.

38 Your loving brother,
39 Vivekananda

44 Dear Sister {Isabelle McKindley},

45 I am afraid I cannot send you the pamphlet just now. But I 46 got a little bit of a newspaper cutting from India yesterday which I

1 send you up. After you have read it kindly send it over to Mrs.
2 Bagley. The editor of this paper is a relative of Mr. Mazoomdar. I
3 am now sorry for poor Mazoomdar!!²²⁶

4 I could not find the exact orange colour of my coat here, so I
5 have been obliged to satisfy myself with the next best--a cardinal 6 red with more of yellow.

7 The coat will be ready in a few days.

8 Got about $70 the other day by lecturing at Waldorf. And 9 hope to get some more by tomorrow's lecture.

10 From 7th to 19th there are engagements in Boston, but they 11 pay very little.

12 Yesterday I bought a pipe for $13--meerschaum do not tell it 13 to father Pope. The coat will cost $30. I am all right getting food . . .
14 and money enough. Hope very soon to put something in the bank 15 after the coming lecture.

16 . . . in the evening I am going to speak in a vegetarian
17 dinner! Well, I am a vegetarian . . ., because I prefer it when I can 18 get it. I have another invitation to lunch with Lyman Abbott day 19 after tomorrow. After all, I am having very nice time and hope to 20 have very nice time in Boston--only that nasty nasty lecturing-- 21 disgusting. However as soon as 19th is over--one leap from Boston .
22 . . to Chicago . . . and then I will have a long long breath and rest, 23 rest for two three weeks. I will simply sit down and talk--talk and 24 smoke.

25 By the by, your New York people are very good--only more 26 money than brains.

27 I am going to speak to the students of the Harvard 28 University. Three lectures at Boston, three at Harvard--all arranged 29 by Mrs. Breed. They are arranging something here too, so that I 30 will, on my way to Chicago, come to New York once more--give 31 them a few hard raps and pocket the boodle and fly to Chicago.

32 If you want anything from New York or Boston which cannot 33 be had at Chicago--write sharp. I have plenty of dollars now. I will 34 send you over anything you want in a minute. Don't think it would 35 be indelicate anyway--no humbug about me. If I am a brother so I 36 am. I hate only one thing in the world--hypocrisy.

13 Dear Adhyapakji {Prof. John Henry Wright},

14 By this time you have got the pamphlet and the letters. If you 15 like, I would send you over from Chicago some letters from Indian 16 Princes and ministers--one of these ministers was one of the 17 Commissioners of the late opium commission that sat under Royal 18 Commission in India. If you like, I will have them write to you to 19 convince you of my not being a cheat. But, my brother, our ideal of 20 life is to hide, to suppress, and to deny.

21 We are to give up and not to take. Had I not the "Fad" in my 22 head, I would never have come over here. And it was with a hope 23 that it would help my cause that I joined the Parliament of 24 Religions--having always refused it when our people wanted to send 25 me for it. I came over telling them--"that I may or may not join that 26 assembly--and you may send me over if you like". They sent me over 27 leaving me quite free.

28 You did the rest.

29 I am morally bound to afford you every satisfaction, my kind 30 friend; but for the rest of the world I do not care what they say--the 31 Sannyasin must not have self-defence. So I beg of you not to publish 32 or show anybody anything in that pamphlet or the letters. I do not 33 care for the attempts of the old missionary; but the fever of jealousy 34 which attacked Mazoomdar gave me a terrible shock, and I pray 35 that he would know better--for he is a great and good man who has 36 tried all his life to do good. But this proves one of my Master's 37 sayings, "Living in a room covered with black soot--however careful 38 you may be--some spots must stick to your clothes." So, however 39 one may try to be good and holy, so long he is in the world, some 40 part of his nature must gravitate downwards.

41 The way to God is the opposite to that of the world. And to 42 few, very few, are given to have God and mammon at the same time.

43 I was never a missionary, nor ever would be one--my place is 44 in the Himalayas. I have satisfied myself so far that I can with a full 45 conscience say, "My God, I saw terrible misery amongst my 46 brethren; I searched and discovered the way out of it, tried my best 47 to apply the remedy, but failed. So Thy will be done."

1 May his blessings be on you and yours for ever and ever.

2 Yours affectionately,

14 Dear Adhyapakji {Prof. John Henry Wright},

15 Herewith I forward to you a letter from one of our ruling 16 princes of Rajputana, His Highness the Maharaja of Khetri, and 17 another from the opium commissioner, late minister of Junagad, one 18 of the largest states in India, and a man who is called the Gladstone 19 of India. These I hope would convince you of my being no fraud.

20 One thing I forgot to tell you. I never identified myself 21 anyway with Mr. Mazoomdar's party chief.²²⁷ If he says so, he does 22 not speak the truth.

23 I hope, after your perusal, you will kindly send the letters 24 over to me, except the pamphlet which I do not care for.

25 I am bound, my dear friend, to give you every satisfaction of 26 my being a genuine Sannyasin, but to you alone. I do not care what 27 the rabbles say or think about me.

28 "Some would call you a saint, some a chandala ; some a 29 lunatic, others a demon. Go on then straight to thy work without 30 heeding either"--thus saith one of our great Sannyasins, an old 31 emperor of India, King Bhartihari, who joined the order in old 32 times.

33 May the Lord bless you for ever and ever. My love to all your 34 children and my respects to your noble wife.

35 I remain ever your friend,

36 Vivekananda

37 PS--I had connection with Pundit Shiva Nath Shastri's party-- 38 but only on points of social reform. Mazoomdar and Chandra Sen--I 39 always considered as not sincere, and I have no reason to change 40 my opinion even now. Of course in religious matters even with my 41 friend Punditji I differed much, the chief being, I thinking Sannyasa 42 or (giving up the world) the highest ideal, and he, a sin. So the

The Brahmo Samaj, like Christian Science in your country, spread in Calcutta for a certain time and then died out. I am not sorry, neither glad that it died. It has done its work--viz social reform. Its religion was not worth a cent, and so it must die out. If Mazoomdar thinks I was one of the causes of its death, he errs. I am even now a great sympathiser of its reforms; but the "booby" religion could not hold its own against the old "Vedanta". What shall I do? Is that my fault? Mazoomdar has become childish in his old age and takes to tactics not a whit better than some of your Christian missionaries. Lord bless him and show him better ways.

Yours,

Vivekananda

When are you going to Annisquam? My love to Austin and Bime. My respects to your wife; and for you my love and gratitude is too deep for expression.

Yours ever affectionately,

Dear Adhyapakji {Prof. John Henry Wright},

Excuse my delay in sending the other letters; I could not find them earlier. I am going to New York in a week.

I do not know whether I will come to Annisquam or not. The letters need not be sent over to me until I write you again. Mrs. Bagley seems to be unsettled by that article in the Boston paper against me.²²⁸ She sent me over a copy from Detroit and has ceased correspondence with me. Lord bless her. She has been very kind to me.

Stout hearts like yours are not common, my brother. This is a queer place--this world of ours. On the whole I am very very thankful to the Lord for the amount of kindness I have received at the hands of the people of this country--I, a complete stranger here without even "credentials". Everything works for the best.

Yours ever in gratitude,

228 ?Her silence subsequent to sending Swamiji the article in the Boston paper was surely misconstrued by him, but the fact remained that, beleaguered on all sides, he thought that Mrs. Bagley had lost faith in him, and this must surely have hurt him deeply.--Ed.

Dear Mr. Bhattacharya {Manmatha Nath Bhattacharya},

I was much pleased to read your affectionate letter. I shall make inquiries about the weaving machine as soon as I can, and let you know. Now I am resting at Annisquam, a village on the seacoast; soon I shall go to the city and attend to the matter of the machine. These seaside places are filled with people during the summer; some come to bathe in the sea, some to take rest, and some to catch husbands.

There is a strong sense of decorum in this country.

You have to keep yourself always covered from neck to foot in the presence of women. You cannot so much as mention the normal functions of the body: nobody knows when anyone goes to the toilet—one has to live so circumspectly. In this country, you can blow your nose a thousand times into your handkerchief—there is no harm in that; but it is highly uncivilised to belch. Women sometimes are not embarrassed to expose their bodies above the waist—you must have seen the kind of low-cut gown they wear—but they say that to go bare-foot is as bad as being naked. Just as we always dwell on the soul, so they take care of the body, and there is no end to the cleaning and embellishing of it. One who fails to do this has no place in society.

Our method of cooking with cow-dung fuel and eating on the floor they consider eating like pigs: they say that the Hindus have no sense of disgust and that, like pigs, they eat cow-dung. The word "cow-dung" is taboo in English. On the other hand, numbers of people will drink water with the same glass without thinking of washing it, and they rarely observe the rule that things must be washed before cooking. But should the clothes of the cook be a little soiled, they will throw her out. The table-ware is all spick and span. They are the richest people on earth; their enjoyments and luxuries beggar description.

In Rajputana they imitate the Mohammedans in their mode of dining, which is, on the whole, good. They sit on a low seat and place their plate of rice on a low table. This is much better than spreading a banana leaf on the earthen floor plastered with cow-dung and filth. And how disastrous if the leaf gets torn! The Hindus did not know much about clothes or food. Moreover, whatever Hindu civilisation there was existed in the Punjab and the north-west provinces. . . .

1 Our women lose caste if they put on shoes, but the Rajput
2 women lose their caste if they don't put on shoes! Says Manu: "One 3 shall always wear shoes". There is no denying that people should 4 have a decent enough standard of living. I say they should be neat 5 and clean even though not luxurious. . . . I say, why do we have to 6 be Englishmen? It is enough for the present if we imitate our 7 brothers of the western provinces. If group after group of Indians
8 travel all over the world and back for some years, the face of India 9 will be changed within twenty years by that alone; nothing else
10 need be done. But how will anything happen if the people of one 11 village do not visit the next? However, everything will take place by 12 and by. By and by, the stubborn Bengali boys will awaken the 13 country. But Manmatha Babu, you will have to stop this shameful 14 business of marrying off nine-year-old girls. That is the root of all 15 sins. It is a very great sin, my boy. Consider further what a terrible 16 thing it was that when the government wanted to pass a law 17 stopping early marriage, our worthless people raised a tremendous 18 howl! If we don't stop it ourselves, the government will naturally 19 intervene, and that is just what it wants to do. All the world cries fie 20 upon us. You remain shut up in your homes, but the people outside 21 spit upon you. How far can I quarrel with them? What a horror-- 22 even a father and mother allow their ten-year-old daughter to be 23 given in marriage to a full-grown fat husband! O Lord, is there any 24 punishment unless there has been a sin? It is all the fruit of Karma.
25 If ours were not a terribly sinful nation, then why should it have 26 been booted and beaten for seven hundred years?

27 Now, just as in our country the parents suffer a lot to have 28 their daughter married, here in the same way the girls suffer--the 29 parents only a little--it is the job of the girls to capture husbands. I 30 am now closely associated with them in all their affairs; I am, as it 31 were, a woman amongst women. Therefore, I have seen, and am 32 seeing, all their play. To give dinners, to dance, to go to musical 33 parties, go to the watering places--all that is all right. But all the 34 while the young women are scheming within themselves how to 35 capture husbands. They hang round the boys. The boys, on the 36 other hand, are so cautious that, though they mingle with the girls 37 and flirt with them all the time, when it is time to surrender they 38 run away. The boys place the girls above themselves; they show 39 them respect and slave for them; but the moment the girls stretch 40 their hands to catch them, they run away beyond their reach. After 41 many efforts of this kind, a girl succeeds in capturing a boy. If the 42 girl has money, then many a boy dances attendance upon her, but 43 the poor have great difficulty. If a poor girl is exceedingly beautiful, 44 she can marry quickly; otherwise, she has to wait all her life. Just as 45 in our country, so here, one marriage in a thousand takes place 46 through love and courtship; the rest are based on money. After that, 47 quarrel, and then, 'Get out!--divorce. We do not have this; the only 48 way out is to hang oneself. It is the same in all countries. Only, here 49 the girls take matters into their own hands; and in our country, we 50 get the help of the parents to give their married life a decent 51 appearance. The result is the same in either case.

52 Nowadays, however, American girls don't want to marry.

1 During the Civil War a large number of men were killed and women 2 began to do all kinds of work. Since then, they have not wanted to 3 give up the rights they have acquired. They earn their own living, 4 and therefore they say, "There is no use in marrying. If we truly fall 5 in love, then we shall marry; otherwise, we shall earn and meet our 6 own expenses". Even if the father is a millionaire, the son has to 7 earn enough before he marries. One may not marry depending on 8 an allowance from the father. The girls also want the same thing
9 now. When a son marries he becomes like a stranger to his own 10 family, but when a girl marries she brings her husband, as it were, 11 into her parents' home. Men will visit their wives' parents ten times, 12 but rarely go to their own parents. Yet they are very much afraid of 13 having their mothers-in-law on their neck.

14 In this country, there are rivers of wealth and waves of 15 beauty, and an abundance of knowledge everywhere. The country is 16 very healthy; they know how to enjoy this earth. . . . When princes 17 of Europe become poor they come to marry here. The average 18 American doesn't like this; but some rich, beautiful women fall for 19 the titles. Yet it is very difficult for American women to live in 20 Europe. The husbands of this country are slaves of their wives; but 21 the European wives are slaves to their husbands--this the American 22 women don't like. In everything, the men here have to say, 'Yes 23 dear'; otherwise the wives lose face before people.

24 The women in America are very sentimental and have a 25 mania for romance. I am, however, a strange sort of animal who 26 hasn't any romantic feeling, and therefore they could not sustain 27 any such feeling toward me and they show me great respect. I 28 make all of them call me "father" or "brother". I don't allow them to 29 come near me with any other feeling, and gradually they have all 30 been straightened out. . . .

31 The ministers in this country . . . are eager to throw sinners 32 into hell. A few of them are very good, however. . . . I have a great 33 reputation among the women in this country. I have not as yet seen 34 a single unchaste girl among the unmarried. It is either a widow or 35 a married woman who turn unchaste. The unmarried girls are 36 exceedingly good, because their future is bright. . . .

37 Those emaciated Western women, looking like old dried-up 38 fruit, whom you see in India, are English, and the English are an 39 ugly race amongst the Europeans. In America, the best blood 40 strains of Europe have been blended, and therefore, the American 41 women are very beautiful. And how they take care of their beauty!
42 Can a woman retain her beauty if she gives birth to children . . .
43 every hour from her tenth year on? Damn nonsense! What a terrible 44 sin! Even the most beautiful woman of our country will look like a 45 black owl here. Yet it must be admitted that the women of the 46 Punjab have very well-drawn features. Many of the American 47 women are very well educated and put many a learned professor to 48 shame; nor do they care for anyone's opinion. And as regards their 49 virtues: what kindness, what noble thought and action! Just think, if 50 a man of this country were to visit India, nobody would even touch 51 him; yet here I am allowed to do as I please in the houses of the 52 best families--like their own son! I am like a child; their women shop for me, run errands for me. For example: I have just written to a girl for information about the machine, which she will gather carefully and send to me. Again, a phonograph was sent to the Maharaj of Khetri: the girls managed the whole affair very well. Lord! Lord! It is the difference between heaven and hell! "They are the goddess Lakshmi in beauty and the goddess Saraswati in talents and accomplishments." This cannot be achieved through the study of books. I say, can you send out some men and women to see the world? Only then will the country wake up--not through the reading of books. The men here are very clever in earning wealth. Where others do not see even dust, there they see gold. Whoever will leave India and visit another country will earn great merit.

Keeping aloof from the community of nations is the only cause for the downfall of India. Since the English came, they have been forcing you back into communion with other nations, and you are visibly rising again. Everyone that comes out of the country confers a benefit on the whole nation; for it is by doing that alone that your horizon will expand. And as women cannot avail themselves of this advantage, they have made almost no progress in India. There is no station of rest; either you progress upwards or you go back and die out. The only sign of life is going outward and forward and expansion. Contraction is death. Why should you do good to others? Because that is the only condition of life; thereby you expand beyond your little self; you live and grow. All narrowness, all contraction, all selfishness is simply slow suicide, and when a nation commits the fatal mistake of contracting itself and of thus cutting off all expansion and life, it must die. Women similarly must go forward or become idiots and soulless tools in the hands of their tyrannical lords. The children are the result of the combination of the tyrant and the idiot, and they are slaves. And this is the whole history of modern India. Oh, who would break this horrible crystallisation of death? Lord help us!²²⁹

Gradually all this will come about: "One should cross a road slowly and cautiously; one should patch a quilt carefully and cautiously; so should one be slow and cautious in crossing a mountain".

The papers have arrived duly and in good shape; there has not been any difficulty about that. The enemy has been silenced. Consider this: They have allowed me, an unknown young man, to live among their grown-up young daughters, and when my own countryman, Mazoomdar, says I am a rogue, they don't pay any attention! How noble they are, and how kind! I shall not be able to repay this debt even in a hundred lives, I am like a foster son to the American women; they are really my mother. If they don't flourish in every way, who would?

A while back several hundred intellectual men and women were gathered in a place called Greenacre, and I was there for nearly two months. Every day I would sit in our Hindu fashion under a tree, and my followers and disciples would sit on the grass

²²⁹ ?This paragraph was written in English.

1 all around me. Every morning I would instruct them, and how 2 earnest they were!

3 The whole country now knows me. The ministers are very 4 angry; but, naturally, not all of them. There are many followers of 5 mine amongst the learned ministers of this country. The ignorant 6 and the stubborn amongst them don't understand anything but only 7 make trouble, and thereby they only hurt themselves. But abusing 8 me, Mazoomdar has lost three-fourths of what little popularity he 9 had in this country. I have been adopted by them. When anyone 10 abuses me he is condemned everywhere by the women.

11 I cannot say when I shall return to India, possibly next 12 winter. There I shall have to wander, and here also I do the same.

13 There is nothing more to add. Please don't make this letter 14 public. You understand, I have to be careful about every word I 15 say--I am now a public man. Everybody is watching, particularly the 16 clergy.

17 Yours faithfully,

25 Dear Kali {Abhedananda},

26 Thanks for all that I come to know from your letter. I had no
27 news of the telegram in question having appeared in the Tribune .
28 It is six months since I left Chicago, and I have not been yet free to 29 return. So I could not keep myself well posted. You have taken great 30 pains indeed! And for this how can I thank you adequately? You 31 have all evinced a wonderful capacity for work. And how can Shri 32 Ramakrishna's words prove false?--You have got wonderful spirit in 33 you. About Shashi Sanyal, I have already written. Nothing remains 34 undetected, through the grace of Shri Ramakrishna. But let him 35 found a sect or whatever he will, what harm? "{Sanskrit}--May 36 blessings attend your path!" Secondly, I could not catch the drift of 37 your letter. I shall collect my own funds to build a monastery for 38 ourselves, and if people criticise me for it, I see nothing in this to 39 affect us either way. You have your minds pitched high and steady, 40 it will do you no harm. May you have exceeding love for one 41 another among yourselves, and it would be enough to have an 42 attitude of indifference towards public criticisms. Kalikrishna Babu 43 has deep love for the cause and is a great man. Please convey my 44 special love to him. So long as there is no feeling of disunion 45 amongst you, through the grace of the Lord, I assure you, there is 46 no danger for you, "{Sanskrit}--be it in battle, in the forest, or on 47 the top of mountains". "{Sanskrit}--All noble undertakings are 48 fraught with obstacles". It is quite in the nature of things. Keep up

1 the deepest mental poise. Take not even the slightest notice of what 2 puerile creatures may be saying against you. Indifference, 3 indifference, indifference! I have already written to Shashi 4 (Ramakrishnananda) in detail. Please do not send newspapers and 5 tracts any more. "Take the husking hammer to heaven, and there it 6 will do its husking", as the Bengali saying goes. The same trudging 7 about here as it was in India, only with the carrying of others' loads 8 added! How can I procure customers for people's books in this 9 land? I am only one amongst the many here and nothing more.
10 Whatever the papers and things of that sort in this country write 11 about me, I make an offering of to the Fire-God. You also do the 12 same. That is the proper course.

13 A bit of public demonstration was necessary for Guru 14 Maharaja's work. It is done, and so far so good. Now you must on 15 no account pay any heed to what the rabble may be prattling about 16 us. Whether I make my pile or do whatever else I am reported to, 17 shall the opinions of the riff-raff stand in the way of His work? My 18 dear brother, you are yet a boy, while I am growing grey. What 19 regard I have for the pronouncements and opinions of such people, 20 you should guess from this. So long as you gird up your loins and 21 rally behind me, there is no fear even if the whole world combine 22 against us. This much I understand that I shall have to take up a 23 very lofty attitude, I should not, I think, write to anyone except to 24 you. By the by, where is Gunanidhi? Try to find him out and bring 25 him to the Math with all kindness. He is a very sincere man and 26 highly learned. You must try your best to secure two plots of land, 27 let people say what they will. Let anyone write anything for or 28 against me in the papers; you shouldn't take the slightest notice.
29 And my dear brother, I beseech you repeatedly not to send me any 30 more newspapers by the basketful. How can you talk of rest now?
31 We shall have rest awhile only when we give up this body. Just do 32 once get up the celebration, brother, in that spirit, so that all the 33 country around may burn with enthusiasm. Bravo! Capital indeed!
34 The whole band of scoffers will be swept away by the tidal wave of 35 love. You are elephants, forsooth, what do you fear from an ant-36 bite?

37 The address²³⁰ you sent me reached me long ago and the 38 reply to it has also been despatched to Pyari Babu (18 Nov. 1894).

39 Bear in mind--the eyes are two in number and so the ears, 40 but the mouth is but one! Indifference, indifference, indifference!
41 "{Sanskrit}"--The doer of good deeds never comes to grief, my 42 dear". Ah! To fear! and whom are we going to fear, brother? Here 43 the missionaries and their ilk have howled themselves into silence-- 44 and the whole world will but do likewise.

45 "{Sanskrit}"

47 the Goddess of Fortune favours or goes her way, whether death

befalls today or after hundreds of years--persons of steady mind never swerve from the path of righteousness" (Bhartrihari, Nitishataka)

You need not even mix with the humdrub people, nor beg of them either. The Lord is supplying everything and will do so in future. What fear, my brother? All great undertakings are achieved through mighty obstacles. {Sanskrit}--You valiant one, put forth your manly efforts; wretched people under the grip of lust and gold deserve to be looked upon with indifference. Now I have got a firm footing in this country, and therefore need no assistance. But my one prayer to you all is that you should apply to the service of the Lord that active impulse of manliness which your eagerness to help me through brotherly love has brought out in you. Do not open out your mind, unless you feel it will be positively beneficial. Use agreeable and wholesome language towards even the greatest enemy. The desire for fame, for riches, for enjoyment is quite natural to every mortal, dear brother, and if that agrees well with serving both ways (i. e. serving both God and mammon), why, all men would exhibit great zeal! It is only the great saint who can work, making a mountain of an atom of virtue in others and cherishing no desire but that of the good of the world--"{Sanskrit}" etc., (Bhartrihari, Nitishataka, 70). Therefore let dullards whose intellect is steeped in ignorance and who look upon the non-Self as all in all, play out their boyish pranks. They will of themselves leave off the moment they find it too hot. Let them try to spit upon the moon--it will but recoil upon themselves. {Sanskrit}--Godspeed to them! If they have got anything substantial in them, who can bar their success? But if it be only empty swagger due to jealousy, then all will be in vain. Haramohan has sent rosaries. All right. But you should know that religion of the type that obtains in our country does not go here. You must suit it to the taste of the people. If you ask them to become Hindus, they will all give you a wide berth and hate you, as we do the Christian missionaries. They like some of the ideas of the Hindu scriptures--that is all. Nothing more than that, you should know. The men, most of them, do not trouble about religion and all that. The women are a little interested--that is all, but no large doses of it! A few thousands of people have faith in the Advaita doctrine. But they will give you the go-by if you talk obscure mannerisms about sacred writings, caste, or women. Everything proceeds slowly, by degrees. Patience, purity, perseverance.

Yours etc.,

Vivekananda

Dear Brother Shivananda,

1 Your letter just reached me. Perhaps by this time you have 2 received my other letters and learnt that it is not necessary to send 3 anything to America any more. Too much of everything is bad. This 4 newspaper booming has given me popularity no doubt, but its effect
5 is more in India than here. Here, on the other hand, constant 6 booming creates a distaste in the minds of the higher class people; 7 so enough. Now try to organise yourselves in India on the lines of 8 these meetings. You need not send anything more in this country. As 9 to money, I have determined first to build some place for Mother,²³¹
10 for women require it first. . . . I can send nearly Rs. 7,000 for a 11 place for Mother. If the place is first secured, then I do not care for 12 anything else. I hope to be able to get Rs. 1,600 a year from this 13 country even when I am gone. That sum I will make over to the 14 support of the Women's place, and then it will grow. I have written 15 to you already to secure a place. . . .

16 I would have, before this, returned to India, but India has no
17 money. Thousands honour Ramakrishna Paramahansa, but nobody 18 will give a cent--that is India. . . . In the meanwhile live in harmony 19 at any price. The world cares little for principles. They care for 20 persons. They will hear with patience the words of a man they like, 21 however nonsense, and will not listen to anyone they do not like.
22 Think of this and modify your conduct accordingly. Everything will 23 come all right. Be the servant if you will rule. That is the real 24 secret. Your love will tell even if your words be harsh. Instinctively 25 men feel the love clothed in whatever language.²³²

26 My dear brother, that Ramakrishna Paramahansa was God
27 incarnate, I have not the least doubt; but then you must let people 28 find out for themselves what he used to teach--you cannot thrust 29 these things upon them--this is my only objection.

30 Let people speak out their own opinions, why should we 31 object? Without studying Ramakrishna Paramahansa first, one can 32 never understand the real import of the Vedas, the Vedanta, of the 33 Bhagavata and the other Puranas. His life is a searchlight of 34 infinite power thrown upon the whole mass of Indian religious 35 thought. He was the living commentary to the Vedas and to their 36 aim. He had lived in one life the whole cycle of the national 37 religious existence in India.

38 Whether Bhagavan Shri Krishna was born at all we are not 39 sure; and Avataras like Buddha and Chaitanya are monotonous; 40 Ramakrishna Paramahansa is the latest and the most perfect--the 41 concentrated embodiment of knowledge, love, renunciation, 42 catholicity, and the desire to serve mankind. So where is anyone to 43 compare with him? He must have been born in vain who cannot 44 appreciate him! My supreme good fortune is that I am his servant
45 through life after life. A single word of his is to me far weightier 46 than the Vedas and the Vedanta. {Sanskrit}--Oh, I am the servant of 47 the servants of his servants. But narrow bigotry militates against 1 ²³¹ ?Holy Mother, Shri Sarada Devi.

5

1 his principles, and this makes me cross. Rather let his name be 2 drowned in oblivion, and his teachings bear fruit instead! Why, was 3 he a slave to fame? Certain fishermen and illiterate people called 4 Jesus Christ a God, but the literate people killed him. Buddha was 5 honoured in his lifetime by a number of merchants and cowherds.
6 But Ramakrishna has been worshipped in his lifetime--towards the 7 end of this nineteenth century--by the demons and giants of the 8 university as God incarnate. . . . Only a few things have been jotted 9 down in the books about them (Krishna, Buddha, Christ, etc.). "One 10 must be a wonderful housekeeper with whom we have never yet 11 lived!" so the Bengali proverb goes. But here is a man in whose 12 company we have been day and night and yet consider him to be a 13 far greater personality than any of them. Can you understand this 14 phenomenon?

15 You have not yet understood the wonderful significance of 16 Mother's life--none of you. But gradually you will know. Without 17 Shakti (Power) there is no regeneration for the world. Why is it that 18 our country is the weakest and the most backward of all 19 countries?--Because Shakti is held in dishonour there. Mother has 20 been born to revive that wonderful Shakti in India; and making her 21 the nucleus, once more will Gargis and Maitreyis be born into the 22 world. Dear brother, you understand little now, but by degrees you 23 will come to know it all. Hence it is her Math that I want first. . . .
24 Without the grace of Shakti nothing is to be accomplished. What do 25 I find in America and Europe?--the worship of Shakti, the worship of 26 Power. Yet they worship Her ignorantly through sense-gratification.
27 Imagine, then, what a lot of good they will achieve who will worship 28 Her with all purity, in a Sattvika spirit, looking upon Her as their 29 mother! I am coming to understand things clearer every day, my 30 insight is opening out more and more. Hence we must first build a 31 Math for Mother. First Mother and Mother's daughters, then Father 32 and Father's sons--can you understand this? . . . To me, Mother's 33 grace is a hundred thousand times more valuable than Father's.
34 Mother's grace, Mother's blessings are all paramount to me. . . .
35 Please pardon me. I am a little bigoted there, as regards Mother. If 36 but Mother orders, her demons can work anything. Brother, before 37 proceeding to America I wrote to Mother to bless me. Her blessings 38 came, and at one bound I cleared the ocean. There, you see. In this 39 terrible winter I am lecturing from place to place and fighting 40 against odds, so that funds may be collected for Mother's Math.
41 Baburam's mother must have lost her sense owing to old age and 42 that is why she is about to worship Durga in the earthen image, 43 ignoring the living one.²³³ Brother, faith is very difficult to achieve.
44 Brother, I shall show how to worship the living Durga and then only 45 shall I be worthy of my name. I shall be relieved when you will have 46 purchased a plot of land and established there the living Durga, the 47 Mother. Till then I am not returning to my native land. As soon as 48 you can do that, I shall have a sigh of relief after sending the 49 money. Do you accomplish this festival of Durga of mine by making 50 all the necessary arrangements. Girish Ghosh is adoring the Mother 51 splendidly; blessed is he, and blessed are his followers. Brother, ²³³ ?Viz Holy Mother Shri Sarada Devi.

1 often enough, when I am reminded of the Mother, I ejaculate, "What 2 after all is Rama?" Brother, that is where my fanaticism lies, I tell 3 you. Of Ramakrishna, you may aver, my brother, that he was an 4 Incarnation or whatever else you may like but fie on him who has no 5 devotion for the Mother. Niranjan has a militant disposition, but he 6 has great devotion for Mother and all his vagaries I can easily put 7 up with. He is now doing the most marvellous work. I am keeping 8 myself well posted. And you too have done excellently in co-
9 operating with the Madrasis. Dear brother, I expect much from you, 10 you should organise all for conjoint work. As soon as you have 11 secured the land for Mother, I go to India straight. It must be a big 12 plot; let there be a mud-house to begin with, in due course I shall 13 erect a decent building, don't be afraid.

14 The chief cause of malaria lies in water. Why do you not 15 construct two or three filters? If you first boil the water and then 16 filter it, it will be harmless. . . . Please buy two big Pasteur's 17 bacteria-proof filters. Let the cooking be done in that water and use 18 it for drinking purposes also, and you will never hear of malaria any 19 more. . . . On and on, work, work, work, this is only the beginning.

20 Yours ever,

21 Vivekananda

29 Dear and Beloved {Swami Brahmananda},

30 . . . Well, do you think there is any religion left in India! The 31 paths of knowledge, devotion, and Yoga--all have gone, and now 32 there remains only that of Don't touchism--"Don't touch me! Don't 33 touch me!" The whole world is impure, and I alone am pure. Lucid 34 Brahmajnana! Bravo! Great God! Nowadays Brahman is neither in 35 the recesses of the heart, nor in the highest heaven, nor in all 36 beings--now He is in the cooking-pot. Formerly the characteristic of 37 a noble-minded man was "{Sanskrit}--Pleasing the whole universe 38 by one's numerous acts of service" but now it is--I am pure and the 39 whole world is impure--go and get money and set it at my feet. . . .
40 Tell the sapient sage who writes to me to finish my preaching work 41 here and return home, . . . that this country is more my home. What 42 is there in Hindusthan? Who appreciates religion? Who appreciates 43 learning?

1 To return home! Where is the home! I do not care for 2 liberation, or for devotion, I would rather go to a hundred thousand 3 hells, "{Sanskrit}"—Doing good to others (silently) like the spring"— 4 this is my religion. I do not want to have any connection with lazy, 5 hard-hearted, cruel and selfish men. He whose good fortune it is, 6 may help in this great cause.

7 . . . Please convey to all my love, I want the help of everyone.
8 Neither money pays, nor name, nor fame, nor learning; it is 10 Bear this in mind. . . .

17 Dear Alasinga,

18 We have no organisation, nor want to build any. Each one is 19 quite independent to teach, quite free to preach whatever he or she 20 likes.

21 If you have the spirit within, you will never fail to attract 22 others. Theosophists' method can never be ours, for the very simple 23 reason that they are an organised sect, we are not.

24 Individuality is my motto. I have no ambition beyond training 25 individuals up. I know very little; that little I teach without reserve; 26 where I am ignorant, I confess it as such, and never am I so glad as 27 when I find people being helped by Theosophists, Christians, 28 Mohammedans, or anybody in the world. I am a Sannyasin; as such 29 I consider myself as a servant, not as a master in the world. . . . If 30 people love me, they are welcome, if they hate, they are also 31 welcome.

32 Each one will have to save himself, each one to do his own
33 work. I seek no help, I reject none. Nor have I any right in the world 34 to be helped. Whosoever has helped me or will help, it will be their 35 mercy to me, not my right, and as such I am eternally grateful.

36 When I became a Sannyasin, I consciously took the step, 37 knowing that this body would have to die of starvation. What of 38 that, I am a beggar. My friends are poor, I love the poor, I welcome 39 poverty. I am glad that I sometimes have to starve. I ask help of 40 none. What is the use? Truth will preach itself, it will not die for the 41 want of the helping hands of me! "Making happiness and misery the 42 same, making success and failure the same, fight thou on" (Gita). It 43 is that eternal love, unruffled equanimity under all circumstances, 44 and perfect freedom from jealousy or animosity that will tell. That 45 will tell, nothing else.

46 Yours,

47 Vivekananda

6 Dear Brother {Dr. I. Janes},

7 I was away in the Catskill mountains and it was almost 8 impossible to get a letter regularly posted from where I was--so 9 accept my apology for the delay in offering you my most heartfelt 10 thanks for your letter in the "Eagle".

11 It was so scholarly, truthful and noble and withal so 12 permeated with your natural universal love for the good and true 13 everywhere. It is a great work to bring this world into a spirit of 14 sympathy with each other but it should be done no doubt when such 15 brave souls as you still hold your own. Lord help you ever and ever 16 my brother and may you live long to carry on the mighty work you 17 and your society has undertaken.

Beloved Rakhal,

. . . I am now in New York City. The city is hot in summer, exactly like Calcutta. You perspire profusely, and there is not a breath of air. I made a tour in the north for a couple of months. Please answer this letter by return of post to England, for which I shall start before this will have reached you.

March, 1896

Dear Alasinga,

Last week I wrote you about the Brahmavadin. I forgot to write about the Bhakti lectures. They ought to be published in a book all together. A few hundreds may be sent to America to Goodyear in New York. Within twenty days I sail for England. I have other big books on Karma, Jnana, and Raja Yogas--the Karma is out already, the Raja will be a very big book and is already in the Press. The Jnana will have to be published, I think, in England.

A letter you published from Kripananda in the Brahmavadin was rather unfortunate. Kripananda is smarting under the blows the Christians have given him and that sort of letter is vulgar, pitching into everybody. It is not in accord with the tone of the Brahmavadin. So in future when Kripananda writes, tone down everything that is an attack upon any sect, however cranky or crude. Nothing which is against any sect, good or bad, should get into the Brahmavadin. Of course, we must not show active sympathy with frauds. Again let me remind you that the paper is too technical to find any subscriber here. The average Western neither knows nor cares to know all about jaw-breaking Sanskrit terms and technicalities. The paper is well fitted for India--that is all that I see. Every word of special pleading should be eliminated from the Editorials, and you must always remember that you are addressing the whole world, not India alone, and that the same world is entirely ignorant of what you have got to tell them. Use the translation of every Sanskrit term carefully and make things as easy as possible.

Before this reaches you I will be in England. So address me c/o E. T. Sturdy, Esq., High View, Caversham, Eng.

Yours etc.,

Vivekananda

High View, Caversham,

Dear {members of the Alambazar Math},

. . . Let me write something for you all. It is not for gaining personal authority that I do this, but for your good and for fulfilling the purpose for which the Lord came. He gave me the charge of you all, and you shall contribute to the great well-being of the world--though most of you are not yet aware of it--this is the special reason of my writing to you. It will be a great pity if any feeling of jealousy or egotism gain ground amongst you. Is it possible for those to establish cordial relations on earth who cannot cordially live with one another for any length of time? No doubt it is an evil to be bound by laws, but it is necessary at the immature stage to be guided by rules; in other words, as the Master used to say that the sapling must be hedged round, and so on. Secondly, it is quite natural for idle minds to indulge in gossip, and faction-mongering, and so forth. Hence I jot down the following hints. If you follow them, you will undoubtedly prosper, but if you don't do so, then there is a danger of all our labours coming to naught.

First let me write about the management of the Math:

1. For the purposes of the Math please hire a commodious house or garden, where everyone may have a small room to himself. There must be a spacious hall where the books may be kept, and a smaller room for meeting the visitors. If possible, there should be another big hall in the house where study of the scriptures and religious discourses will be held every day for the public.

2. Anyone wishing to visit anybody in the Math should see him only and depart, without troubling others.

3. By turns someone should be present in the hall for a few hours every day for the public, so that they may get satisfactory replies to what they come to ask.

4. Everyone must keep to his room and except on special business must not go to others' rooms. Anyone who wishes may go to the Library and read, but it should be strictly forbidden to smoke there or talk with others. The reading should be silent.

5. It shall be wholly forbidden to huddle together in a room and chat the whole day away, with any number of outsiders coming and joining in the hubbub.

6. Only those that are seekers after religion may come and peacefully wait in the Visitors' Hall and when they have seen the

1 particular persons they want, they should depart. Or, if they have 2 any general question to ask, they should refer to the person in 3 charge of that function for the day and leave.

4 7. Tale-bearing, caballing, or reporting scandals about others
5 should be altogether eschewed.

6 8. A small room should serve as the office. The Secretary 7 should live in that room, which should contain paper, ink, and other 8 materials for letter-writing. He should keep an account of the 9 income and expenditure. All correspondence should come to him, 10 and he should deliver all letters unopened to their addressees.
11 Books and pamphlets should be sent to the Library.

12 9. There will be a small room for smoking, which should not 13 be indulged in outside this room.

14 10. He who wants to indulge in invectives or show temper 15 must do so outside the boundaries of the Math. This should not be 16 deviated from even by an inch.

17 18 THE GOVERNING BODY

19 1. Every year a President should be elected by a majority of 20 votes. The next year, another, and so on.

21 2. For this year make Brahmananda the President and 22 likewise make another the Secretary, and elect a third man for 23 superintending the worship etc., as well as the arrangement of 24 food.

25 3. The Secretary shall have another function, viz to keep 26 watch over the general health. Regarding this I have three 27 instructions to give:

28 (i) In every room for each man there shall be a Nair
29 charpoy, mattress, etc. Everyone must keep his room clean.

30 (ii) All arrangements must be made to provide clear and 31 pure water for drinking and cooking purposes, for it is a deadly sin 32 to cook sacramental food in impure or unclean water.

33 (iii) Give everyone two ochre cloaks of the type that you
34 have made for Saradananda, and see that clothing is kept clean.

35 4. Anyone wishing to be a Sannyasin should be admitted as a 36 Brahmacharin first. He should live one year at the Math and one 37 year outside, after which he may be initiated into Sannyasa.

38 5. Make over charge of the worship to one of these 39 Brahmacharins, and change them now and then.

40 41 DEPARTMENTS

42 There shall be the following departments in the Math:

43 I. Study . II. Propaganda . III. Religious Practice .

1 I. Study --The object of this department is to provide books
2 and teachers for those who want to study. Every morning and 3 evening the teachers should be ready for them.

4 II. Propaganda --Within the Math, and abroad. The preachers
5 in the Math should teach the inquirers by reading out scriptures to 6 them and by means of question-classes. The preachers abroad will 7 preach from village to village and try to start Maths like the above 8 in different places.

9 III. Religious Practice --This department will try to provide 10 those who want to practise with the requisites for this. But it should 11 not be allowed that because one has taken to religious practice he 12 will prevent others from study or preaching. Any one infringing this 13 rule shall be immediately asked to clear out, and this is imperative.

14 The preachers at home should give lessons on devotion, 15 knowledge, Yoga, and work by turns; for this, the days and hours 16 should be fixed, and the routine hung up at the door of the class-17 room. That is to say, a seeker after devotion may not present 18 himself on the day fixed for knowledge and feel wounded thereby; 19 and so on.

20 None of you are fit for the Vamachara form of practice.
21 Therefore this should on no account be practised at the Math.
22 Anyone demurring to this must step out of this Order. This form of 23 practice must never even be mentioned in the Math. Ruin shall 24 seize the wicked man, both here and hereafter, who would 25 introduce vile Vamachara into His fold!

26 27 SOME GENERAL REMARKS

28 1. If any woman comes to have a talk with a Sannyasin, she 29 should do it in the Visitors' Hall. No woman shall be allowed to 30 enter any other room--except the Worship-room.

31 2. No Sannyasin shall be allowed to reside in the Women's 32 Math. Anyone refusing to obey this rule shall be expelled from the 33 Math. "Better an empty fold than a wicked herd."

34 3. Men of evil character shall be rigorously kept out. On no 35 pretence shall their shadow even cross the threshold of my room. If 36 anyone amongst you become wicked, turn him out at once, whoever 37 he be. We want no black sheep. The Lord will bring lots of good 38 people.

39 4. Any woman can come to the class-room (or preaching hall)
40 during class time or preaching hour, but must leave the place 41 directly when that period is over.

42 5. Never show temper, or harbour jealousy, or backbite
43 another in secret. It would be the height of cruelty and hard-44 heartedness to take note of others' shortcoming instead of 45 rectifying one's own.

46 6. There should be fixed hours of meals. Everyone must have 47 a seat and a low dining table. He will sit on the former and put his 48 plate on the latter, as is the custom in Rajputana.

THE OFFICE-BEARERS

All the office-bearers you should elect by ballot, as was the mandate of Lord Buddha. That is to say, one should propose that such and such should be the President this year; and all should write on bits of paper 'yes' or 'no' and put them in a pitcher. If the 'yes' have a majority, he should be elected President, and so on. Though you should elect office-bearers in this way, yet I suggest that this year Brahmananda should be President, Nirmalananda, Secretary and Treasurer, Sadananda Librarian, and Ramakrishnananda, Abhedananda, Turiyananda, and Trigunatitananda should take charge of the teaching and preaching work by turns, and so on.

It is no doubt a good idea that Trigunatita has of starting a magazine. But I shall consent to it if only you can work jointly.

About doctrines and so forth I have to say only this, that if anyone accepts Paramahansa Deva as Avatara etc., it is all right; if he doesn't do so, it is just the same. The truth about it is that in point of character, Paramahansa Deva beats all previous records; and as regards teaching, he was more liberal, more original, and more progressive than all his predecessors. In other words, the older Teachers were rather one-sided, while the teaching of this new Incarnation or Teacher is that the best point of Yoga, devotion, knowledge, and work must be combined now so as to form a new society. . . . The older ones were no doubt good, but this is the new religion of this age--the synthesis of Yoga, knowledge, devotion, and work--the propagation of knowledge and devotion to all, down to the very lowest, without distinction of age or sex. The previous Incarnations were all right, but they have been synthesised in the person of Ramakrishna. For the ordinary man and the beginner, steady devotion (Nishtha) to an ideal is of paramount importance. That is to say, teach them that all great Personalities should be duly honoured, but homage should be paid now to Ramakrishna. There can be no vigour without steady devotion. Without it one cannot preach with the intensity of a Mahavira (Hanuman). Besides, the previous ones have become rather old. Now we have a new India, with its new God, new religion, and new Vedas. When, O Lord, shall our land be free from this eternal dwelling upon the past? Well, a little bigotry also is a necessity. But we must harbour no antagonistic feelings towards others.

If you consider it wise to be guided by my ideas and if you follow these rules, then I shall supply on all necessary funds. . . . Moreover, please show this letter to Gour-Ma, Yogin-Ma, and others, and through them establish a Women's Math. Let Gour-Ma be the President there for one year, and so on. But none of you shall be allowed to visit the place. They will manage their own affairs. They will not have to work at your dictation. I shall supply all necessary expenses for that work also.

May the Lord guide you in the right direction! Two persons went to see the Lord Jagannatha. One of them beheld the Deity--while the other saw some trash that was haunting his mind! My

1 friends, many have no doubt served the Master, but whenever 2 anyone would be disposed to consider himself an extraordinary 3 personage, he should think that although he was associated with 4 Shri Ramakrishna, he has seen only the trash that was uppermost 5 in his mind! Were it not so, he would manifest the results. The 6 Master himself used to quote, "They would sing and dance in the 7 name of the Lord but come to grief in the end." The root of that 8 degeneration is egotism--to think that one is just as great as any 9 other, indeed! "He used to love me too!"--one would plead. Alas, 10 Nick Bottom, would you then be thus translated? Would such a man 11 envy or quarrel with another and degrade himself? Bear in mind 12 that through His grace lots of men will be turned out with the 13 nobility of gods--ay, wherever His mercy would drop! . . . Obedience 14 is the first duty. Well, just do with alacrity what I ask you to. Let me 15 see how you carry out these few small things. Then gradually great 16 things will come to pass.

17 Yours,

18 Vivekananda

19
20 PS. Please read the contents of this letter to all, and let me 21 know whether you consider the suggestions worth carrying out.
22 Please tell Brahmananda that he who is the servant of all is their 23 true master. He never becomes a leader in whose love there is a 24 consideration of high or low. He whose love knows no end, and 25 never stops to consider high or low, has the whole world lying at his 26 feet.

33 May, 1896

34 Dear Sister,

35 In London once more. The climate now in England is nice 36 and cool. We have fire in the grate. We have a whole house to 37 ourselves, you know, this time. It is small but convenient, and in 38 London they do not cost so much as in America. Don't you know 39 what I was thinking--about your mother! I just wrote her a letter 40 and duly posted it to her, care of Monroe & Co., 7 Rue Scribe, Paris.
41 Some old friends are here, and Miss MacLeod came over from the 42 Continent. She is good as gold, and as kind as ever. We have a nice 43 little family, in the house, with another monk from India. Poor 44 man!--a typical Hindu with nothing of that pluck and go which I 45 have, he is always dreamy and gentle and sweet! That won't do. I 46 will try to put a little activity into him. I have had two classes 47 already--they will go on for four or five months and after that to 48 India I go. But it is to Amerique--there where the heart is. I love the 1 Yankee land. I like to see new things. I do not care a fig to loaf 2 about old ruins and mope a life out about old histories and keep 3 sighing about the ancients. I have too much vigour in my blood for 4 that. In America is the place, the people, the opportunity for 5 everything. I have become horribly radical. I am just going to India

6 to see what I can do in that awful mass of conservative jelly-fish, 7 and start a new thing, entirely new--simple, strong, new and fresh 8 as the first born baby. The eternal, the infinite, the omnipresent, the 9 omniscient is a principle, not a person. You, I, and everyone are but 10 embodiments of that principle, and the more of this infinite 11 principle is embodied in a person, the greater is he, and all in the 12 end will be the perfect embodiment of that and thus all will be one 13 as they are now essentially. This is all there is of religion, and the 14 practice is through this feeling of oneness that is love. All old foggy 15 forms are mere old superstitions. Now, why struggle to keep them 16 alive? Why give thirsty people ditch-water to drink whilst the river 17 of life and truth flows by? This is only human selfishness, nothing 18 else. Life is short--time is flying--that place and people where one's 19 ideas work best should be the country and the people for everyone.
20 Ay, for a dozen bold hearts, large, noble, and sincere!

21 I am very well indeed and enjoying life immensely.

22 Yours ever with love,

23 Vivekananda

32 Dear Shashi {Ramakrishnananda},

33 . . . This City of London is a sea of human heads--ten or 34 fifteen Calcuttas put together. One is apt to be lost in the mazes 35 unless he arranges for somebody to meet him on arrival. . . .
36 However, let Kali start at once. If he be late in starting like Sharat, 37 better let no one come. It won't do to loiter and procrastinate like 38 that. It is a task that requires the height of Rajas (activity). . . . Our 39 whole country is steeped in Tamas, and nothing but that. We want 40 Rajas first, and Sattva will come afterwards--a thing far, far 41 removed.

42 Yours affectionately,

4 Dear Adhyapakji {Prof. John Henry Wright},²³⁴

5 Last mail brought the very very sad news of the blow that 6 has fallen on you.

7 This is the world my brother--this illusion of Maya--the Lord 8 alone is true. The forms are evanescent; but the spirit, being in the 9 Lord and of the Lord, is immortal and omnipresent. All that we ever 10 had are round us this minute, for the spirit can neither come nor 11 go, it only changes its plane of manifestation.

12 You are strong and pure and so is Mrs. Wright, and I am sure 13 that the Divine in you has arisen and thrown away the lie and 14 delusion that there can be death for anyone.

15 "He who sees in this world of manifoldness that one support 16 of everything, in the midst of a world of unconsciousness that one 17 eternal consciousness, in this evanescent world that one eternal 18 and unchangeable, unto him belongs eternal peace."

19 May the peace of the Lord descend upon you and yours in 20 abundance is the prayer of 21 Your ever loving friend,

22 Vivekananda

28 Dear Miss Noble {Nivedita},

29 My ideal indeed can be put into a few words and that is: to 30 preach unto mankind their divinity, and how to make it manifest in 31 every movement of life.

32 This world is in chain of superstition. I pity the oppressed, 33 whether man or woman, and I pity more the oppressors.

34 One idea that I see clear as daylight is that misery is caused 35 by ignorance and nothing else. Who will give the world light?
36 Sacrifice in the past has been the Law, it will be, alas, for ages to 37 come. The earth's bravest and best will have to sacrifice themselves 38 for the good of many, for the welfare of all. Buddhas by the hundred 39 are necessary with eternal love and pity.

40 Religions of the world have become lifeless mockeries. What 41 the world wants is character. The world is in need of those whose 42 life is one burning love, selfless. That love will make every word tell 43 like thunderbolt.

1 ²³⁴ ?The letter was written on the death of his daughter, aged 16.
2

1 It is no superstition with you, I am sure, you have the making 2 in you of a world-mover, and others will also come. Bold words and 3 bolder deeds are what we want. Awake, awake, great ones! The 4 world is burning with misery. Can you sleep? Let us call and call till 5 the sleeping gods awake, till the god within answers to the call.
6 What more is in life? What greater work? The details come to me as 7 I go. I never make plans. Plans grow and work themselves. I only 8 say, awake, awake!

9 May all blessings attend you for ever!

10 Yours affectionately,
11 Vivekananda

17 Dear Friend and Brother {Dr. Lewis I. Janes},

18 Yours of the 25th June has duly reached and gave me great 19 pleasure. I am so glad to see the noble work progressing. I had 20 learnt with the greatest delight from Mrs. Bull of the work that is 21 going to be done in Cambridge this winter and no better person
22 could have been selected to direct it as yourself. May all power 23 attend you. I will be only too glad to write for the magazine from 24 time to time and my first instalment was to be in a few weeks, when 25 I hope to get some leisure. Certainly it goes without saying that no 26 one of the types we call religious ought to die--they like races
27 require fresh infusion of blood in the form of ideas. It is wonderful 28 to be able to sympathise with others from their standpoints of view.

29 By this time Goodwin and the other Swami must have 30 reached America. They I trust will be of help to you in your noble 31 work. Godspeed to all good work and infinite blessings on all 32 workers for good.

33 Yours ever in the truth,

38 Salutation to Bhagavan Ramakrishna!

39 May you prosper! May this letter conveying blessings and 40 cordial embrace make you happy! Nowadays this fleshy tabernacle 41 of mine is comparatively well. Meseems, the snow-capped peaks of 42 the Himalayas, the Chief among mountains, bring even the 43 moribund back to life. And the fatigue of the journeys also seems to 44 have somewhat abated. I have already felt that yearning for 45 Freedom--potent enough to put the heart into turmoil--which your 46 letter suggests you are experiencing. It is this yearning that

1 gradually brings on a concentration of the mind on the eternal
2 Brahman. "There is no other way to go by." May this desire blaze up
3 more and more in you, until all your past Karma and future
4 tendencies are absolutely annihilated. Close upon the heels of that 5 will follow, all on a sudden, the manifestation of Brahman, and with 6 it the destruction of all craving for the sense-world. That this 7 freedom-in-life is approaching for your welfare is easily to be 8 inferred from the strength of your fervour. Now I pray to that world-9 teacher, Shri Ramakrishna, the Preacher of the gospel of universal 10 synthesis, to manifest himself in the region of your heart, so that, 11 having attained the consummation of your desires, you may with an 12 undaunted heart try your best to deliver others from this dreadful 13 ocean of infatuation. May you be ever possessed of valour! It is the 14 hero alone, not the coward, who has liberation within his easy 15 reach. Gird up your loins, ye heroes, for before you are your 16 enemies--the dire army of infatuation. It is undoubtedly true that 17 "all great achievements are fraught with numerous impediments"; 18 still you should exert your utmost for your end. Behold, how men 19 are already in the jaws of the shark of infatuation! Oh, listen to 20 their piteous heart-rending wails. Advance, forward, O ye brave 21 souls, to set free those that are in fetters, to lessen the burden of 22 woe of the miserable, and to illumine the abysmal darkness of 23 ignorant hearts! Look, how the Vedanta proclaims by beat of drums, 24 "Be fearless!" May that solemn sound remove the heart's knot of all 25 denizens of the earth.

26 Ever your well-wisher,
27 Vivekananda

32 Dear Mrs. Bull,

33 I have been to Darjeeling for a month to recuperate my 34 shattered health. I am very much better now. The disease 35 disappeared altogether in Darjeeling. I am going tomorrow to 36 Almora, another hill station, to perfect this improvement.

37 Things are looking not very hopeful here as I have already 38 written you--though the whole nation has risen as one man to 39 honour me and people went almost mad over me! The practical part 40 cannot be had in India. Again, the price of the land has gone up 41 very much near Calcutta. My idea at present is to start three 42 centres at three capitals. These would be my normal schools, from 43 thence I want to invade India.

44 India is already Ramakrishna's whether I live a few years 45 more or not.

46 I have a very kind letter from Prof. Janes in which he points 47 out my remarks about degraded Buddhism. You also write that 48 Dharmapala is very wroth about it. Mr. Dharmapala is a good man, 49 and I love him; but it would be entirely wrong for him to go into fits

1 over things Indian.

2 I am perfectly convinced that what they call modern 3 Hinduism with all its ugliness is only stranded Buddhism. Let the 4 Hindus understand this clearly, and then it would be easier for them 5 to reject it without murmur. As for the ancient form which the 6 Buddha preached, I have the greatest respect for it, as well as for 7 His person. And you well know that we Hindus worship Him as an 8 Incarnation. Neither is the Buddhism of Ceylon any good. My visit 9 to Ceylon has entirely disillusioned me, and the only living people
10 there are the Hindus. The Buddhists are all much Europeanised-- 11 even Mr. Dharmapala and his father had European names, which 12 they have since changed. The only respect the Buddhists pay to 13 their great tenet of non-killing is by opening "butcher-stalls" in 14 every place! And the priests encourage this. The real Buddhism, I 15 once thought, would yet do much good. But I have given up the 16 idea entirely, and I clearly see the reason why Buddhism was driven 17 out of India, and we will only be too glad if the Ceylonese carry off 18 the remnant of this religion with its hideous idols and licentious 19 rites.

20 About the Theosophists, you must remember first that in 21 India Theosophists and Buddhists are nonentities. They publish a 22 few papers and make a lot of splash and try to catch Occidental 23 ears. . . .

24 I was one man in America and another here. Here the whole 25 nation is looking upon me as their authority--there I was a much 26 reviled preacher. Here Princes draw my carriage, there I would not 27 be admitted to a decent hotel. My utterances here, therefore, must 28 be for the good of the race, my people--however unpleasant they 29 might appear to a few. Acceptance, love, toleration for everything 30 sincere and honest--but never for hypocrisy. The Theosophists tried 31 to fawn upon and flatter me as I am the authority now in India, and 32 therefore it was necessary for me to stop my work giving any 33 sanction to their humbugs, by a few bold, decisive words; and the 34 thing is done. I am very glad. If my health had permitted, I would 35 have cleared India by this time of these upstart humbugs, at least 36 tried my best. . . . Let me tell you that India is already 37 Ramakrishna's and for a purified Hinduism I have organised my 38 work here a bit.

39 Yours,
40 Vivekananda

45 My dear Shuddhananda,

46 I was very glad to receive your last report. I have very little 47 criticism to make except that you ought to write a bit more legibly.

48 I am quite satisfied with the work done so far, but it must be

1 pushed forward. I have not learnt as yet of the suggestion I made 2 before as to getting a set of chemical and physical apparatus and 3 starting classes in elementary and experimental Chemistry and 4 Physics, especially in Physiology.

5 What about the other suggestion of buying sets of all the 6 scientific books that have been translated into Bengali?

7 It now seems to me that there must at least be three 8 Mahantas (heads) elected at a time--one to direct the business part, 9 one the experimental, the other the intellectual part.

10 The difficulty is to get the director of education.
11 Brahmananda and Turiyananda may well fill the other two. Of 12 visitors I am sorry to learn that you are only getting Babus from 13 Calcutta. They are no good. What we want are brave young men 14 who will work, not tomfools.

15 Ask Brahmananda to write to both Abhedananda and 16 Saradananda to send weekly reports to the Math without fail, also 17 to send Bengali articles and notes for the would-be paper. Is G. C.
18 Ghosh getting up things for the paper? Work on with a will and be 19 ready.

20 Akhandananda is working wonderfully at Mahula, but the 21 system is not good. It seems they are frittering away their energies 22 in one little village and that only doling out rice. I do not hear that 23 any preaching has been done along with this helping. All the wealth 24 of the world cannot help one little Indian village if the people are 25 not taught to help themselves. Our work should be mainly 26 educational, both moral and intellectual. I have not learnt anything 27 about it--only so many beggars are helped ! Ask Brahmananda to 28 open centres in different districts so as to cover the largest space 29 with our small means.

30 And then, so far it seems to have been ineffectual, for they 31 have not succeeded in rousing the people of the place to start 32 societies to educate the people, so that they may learn to be self-33 reliant, frugal, and not given to marrying, and thus save themselves 34 from future famine. Charity opens the heart, but work on through 35 that wedge.

36 The easiest way is to take a hut--make it a temple of Guru 37 Maharaj! Let the poor come here to be helped, also to worship. Let 38 there be Katha (Puranic recitals) morning and evening there-- 39 through that you may teach all you want to teach the people. By 40 degrees the people will be interested. They will keep up the temple 41 themselves; maybe the hut temple will evolve into a great 42 institution in a few years. Let those that go to relief-work first select 43 a central spot in each district and start such a hut-temple, from 44 which all our little work is to proceed.

45 Even the greatest fool can accomplish a task if it be after his 46 heart. But the intelligent man is he who can convert every work into 47 one that suits his taste. No work is petty. Everything in this world is 48 like a banyan-seed, which, though appearing tiny as a mustard-49 seed, has yet the gigantic banyan tree latent within it. He indeed is 50 intelligent who notices this and succeeds in making all work truly

1 present is Madras and Calcutta. Mr. Goodwin working in Madras.
2 Also one has gone to Colombo. From the next week a monthly 3 report of the whole work will be forwarded to you if it has not 4 already reached you. I am away from the centre of work, so things 5 go a little slow, you see; but the work is satisfactory on the whole.

6 You can do more work for us from England than by coming 7 here. Lord bless you for your great self-sacrifice for the poor 8 Indians.

9 I entirely agree with you that the work in England will look 10 up when I am there. But all the same it is not proper to leave India 11 before the machine is moving at some rate and I am sure that there 12 are many to guide it in my absence. That will be done in a few 13 months. "God willing", as the Mussulmans say. One of my best 14 workers is now in England, the Raja of Khetri. I expect him soon in 15 India, and he will be of great service to me no doubt.

16 With everlasting love and blessings,

17 Yours,

18 Vivekananda

23 My dear Miss Noble {Nivedita},

24 A letter from Sturdy reached me yesterday, informing me 25 that you are determined to come to India and see things with your 26 own eyes. I replied to that yesterday, but what I learnt from Miss 27 Muller about your plans makes this further note necessary, and it is 28 better that it should be direct.

29 Let me tell you frankly that I am now convinced that you 30 have a great future in the work for India. What was wanted was not 31 a man, but a woman--a real lioness--to work for the Indians, women 32 specially.

33 India cannot yet produce great women, she must borrow 34 them from other nations. Your education, sincerity, purity, immense 35 love, determination, and above all, the Celtic blood make you just 36 the woman wanted.

37 Yet the difficulties are many. You cannot form any idea of 38 misery, the superstition, and the slavery that are here. You will be in 39 the midst of a mass of half-naked men and women with quaint ideas 40 of caste and isolation, shunning the white skin through fear or 41 hatred and hated by them intensely. On the other hand, you will be 42 looked upon by the white as a crank, and every one of your 43 movements will be watched with suspicion.

44 Then the climate is fearfully hot; our winter in most places 45 being like your summer, and in the south it is always blazing.

46 Not one European comfort is to be had in places out of the 1 cities. If in spite of all this, you dare venture into the work, you are 2 welcome, a hundred times welcome. As for me, I am nobody here as 3 elsewhere, but what little influence I have shall be devoted to your 4 service.

5 You must think well before you plunge in; and after work, if 6 you fail in this or get disgusted, on my part I promise you, I will 7 stand by you unto death whether you work for India or not, 8 whether you give up Vedanta or remain in it. "The tusks of the 9 elephant come out, but never go back"; so are the words of a man 10 never retracted. I promise you that. Again, I must give you a bit of 11 warning. You must stand on your own feet and not be under the 12 wings of Miss Muller or anybody else. Miss Muller is a good lady in 13 her own way, but unfortunately it got into her head, when she was a 14 girl, that she was a born leader and that no other qualifications 15 were necessary to move world but money! This idea is coming on 16 the surface again and again in spite of herself, and you will find it 17 impossible to pull on with her in a few days. She now intends to 18 take a house in Calcutta for herself and yourself and other 19 European or American friends who may come.

20 It is very kind and good of her, but her Lady Abbess plan will 21 never be carried out for two reasons--her violent temper and 22 overbearing conduct, and her awfully vacillating mind. Friendship 23 with many is best at a distance, and everything goes well with the 24 person who stands on his own feet.

25 Mrs. Sevier is a jewel of a lady--so good, so kind! The Seviers 26 are the only English people who do not hate the natives, Sturdy 27 not excepted. Mr. and Mrs. Sevier are the only persons who did not 28 come to patronise us, but they have no fixed plans yet. When you 29 come, you may get them to work with you, and that will be really 30 helpful to them and to you. But after all it is absolutely necessary to 31 stand on one's own feet.

32 I learn from America that two friends of mine, Mrs. Ole Bull 33 of Boston and Miss MacLeod, are coming on a visit to India this 34 autumn. Miss MacLeod you already know in London, that Paris-35 dressed young American lady; Mrs. Ole Bull is about fifty and has 36 been a kind friend to me in America. I may suggest that your joining 37 the party may while away the tedium of the journey, as they also are 38 coming by way of Europe.

39 I am glad to receive a note at least from Sturdy after long.
40 But it was so stiff and cold. It seems he is disappointed at the 41 collapse of the London work.

42 With everlasting love,

43 Yours ever in the Lord,
44 Vivekananda

48 Belur Math

16th April, 1899

Dear Madam {Shrimati Sarala Ghosal},

Very glad to receive your kind note. If by the sacrifice of some specially cherished object of either myself or my brother-disciples many pure and genuinely patriotic souls come forward to help our cause, rest assured, we will not hesitate in the least to make that sacrifice nor shed a tear-drop--you will see this verified in action. But up till now I have seen nobody coming forward to assist in this way. Only some have wished to put their own hobby in place of ours--that is all. If it really help our country or humanity--not to speak of giving up Guru-worship--believe me, we are prepared to commit any dire iniquity and suffer the eternal damnation of the Christians. But my hairs have turned grey since I began the study of man. This world is a most trying place, and it is long since I have taken to wandering with the lantern of the Grecian Philosopher in hand. A popular song my Master often used to sing comes to my mind:

"He who's a man after one's heart
Betrays himself by his very looks.
Rare indeed is such a one!
He's a man of aesthetic perceptions
Who treads a path contrary to others."

This much from my side. Please know that not one word of it is exaggerated--which you will find to be actually the case.

But then I have some doubts about those patriotic souls who can join with us if only we give up the worship of the Guru. Well, if, as they pose, they are indeed panting and struggling so much--almost to the point of dissolution from their body--to serve the country, how can the single accident of Guru-worship stop everything!

This impetuous river with rolling waves which bade fair to sweep away whole hills and mountains--was a bit of Guru-worship sufficient to turn it back to the Himalayas! I put it to you, do you think anything great will come of such patriotism, or any substantial good proceed from such assistance? It is for you to say; I can make nothing out of it. For a thirsty man to weigh so much the merits of water, or for a man about to die of hunger to cogitate so much and turn up his nose at the food presented! Well, people have strange ways of thinking. I, for one, am inclined to think that those people were best in a glass-case; the more they keep away from actual work, the better.

"Love stops not for questions of birth.

Nor the hungry man for stale food."

This is what I know. But I may be wholly mistaken. Well, if this trifle of Guru-worship sticks in one's throat to choke one to death, we had better extricate him from this predicament.

However, I have a great longing to talk over these points with you in detail. For talking these things over, disease, affliction and

1 death have given me leave till now, and I hope they will do so yet.

2 May all your wishes be fulfilled in this New Year!

3 Yours sincerely,

4 Vivekananda

12 My Dear Sturdy,

13 This is not to defend my conduct. Words cannot wipe off the 14 evils I have done, nor any censor stop from working the good 15 deeds, if any.

16 For the last few months I have been hearing so much of the 17 luxuries I was given to enjoy by the people of the West--luxuries 18 which the hypocrite myself has been enjoying, although preaching 19 renunciation all the while: luxuries, the enjoyment of which has 20 been the great stumbling-block in my way, in England at least. I 21 nearly hypnotised myself into the belief that there has at least been 22 a little oasis in the dreary desert of my life, a little spot of light in 23 one whole life of misery and gloom; one moment of relaxation in a 24 life of hard work and harder curses--even that oasis, that spot, that 25 moment was only one of sense-enjoyment!!

26 I was glad, I blessed a hundred times a day those that had 27 helped me to get it, when, lo, your last letter comes like a 28 thunderclap, and the dream is vanished. I begin to disbelieve your 29 criticisms--have little faith left in all this talk of luxuries and 30 enjoyments and other visions memory calls up. These I state. Hope 31 you will send it round to friends, if you think fit, and correct me 32 where I am wrong.

33 I remember your place at Reading, where I was fed with 34 boiled cabbage and potatoes and boiled rice and boiled lentils, 35 three times a day, with your wife's curses for sauce all the time. I do 36 not remember your giving me any cigar to smoke--shilling or penny 37 ones. Nor do I remember myself as complaining of either the food 38 or your wife's incessant curses, though I lived as a thief, shaking 39 through fear all the time, and working every day for you.

40 The next memory is of the house on St. George's Road--you 41 and Miss Muller at the head. My poor brother was ill there and 42 Miss Muller drove him away. There too I don't remember to have 43 had any luxuries as to food or drink or bed or even the room given 44 to me.

45 The next was Miss Muller's place. Though she has been very 46 kind to me, I was living on nuts and fruits. The next memory is that

1 of the black hole of London where I had to work almost day and 2 night and cook the meals oft-times for five or six, and most nights 3 with a bite of bread and butter.

4 I remember Mrs. Sturdy giving me a dinner and a night's 5 lodging in her place, and then the next day criticising the black 6 savage--so dirty and smoking all over the house.

7 With the exception of Capt. and Mrs. Sevier, I do not 8 remember even one piece of rag as big as a handkerchief I got from 9 England. On the other hand, the incessant demand on my body and 10 mind in England is the cause of my breakdown in health. This was 11 all you English people gave me, whilst working me to death; and 12 now I am cursed for the luxuries I lived in!! Whosoever of you have 13 given me a coat? Whosoever a cigar? Whosoever a bit of fish or 14 flesh? Whosoever of you dare say I asked food or drink or smoke or 15 dress or money from you? Ask, Sturdy, ask for God's sake, ask your 16 friends, and first ask your own "God within who never sleeps."

17 You have given me money for my work. Every penny of it is 18 there. Before your eyes I sent my brother away, perhaps to his 19 death; and I would not give him a farthing of the money which was 20 not my private property.

21 On the other hand, I remember in England Capt. and Mrs.
22 Sevier, who have clad me when I was cold, nursed me better than 23 my own mother would have, borne with me in my weakness, my 24 trials; and they have nothing but blessings for me. And that Mrs.
25 Sevier, because she did not care for honours, has the worship of 26 thousands today; and when she is dead millions will remember her 27 as one of the great benefactresses of the poor Indians. And they 28 never cursed me for my luxuries, though they are ready to give me 29 luxuries, if I need or wish.

30 I need not tell you of Mrs. Bull, Miss MacLeod, Mr. and Mrs.
31 Leggett. You know their love and kindness for me; and Mrs. Bull 32 and Miss MacLeod have been to our country, moved and lived with 33 us as no foreigner ever did, roughing it all, and they do not ever 34 curse me and my luxuries either; they will be only too glad to have 35 me eat well and smoke dollar cigars if I wish. And there Leggetts 36 and Bulls were the people whose bread whose money bought my 37 smokes and several times paid my rent, whilst I was killing myself 38 for your people, when you were taking my pound of flesh for the 39 dirty hole and starvation and reserving all this accusation of luxury.

40 "The clouds of autumn make great noise but send no rain;

41 The clouds of the rainy season without a word flood the 42 earth."

43 See Sturdy, those that have helped or are still helping have 44 no criticism, no curses: it is only those who do nothing, who only 45 come to grind their own axes, that curse, that criticise. That such 46 worthless, heartless, selfish, rubbish criticise, is the greatest 47 blessing that can come to me. I want nothing so much in life as to 48 be miles off from these extremely selfish axe-grinders.

49 Talking of luxuries! Take these critics up one after the other--

1 It is all flesh, all flesh and no spirit anywhere. Thank God, they 2 come out sooner or later in their true colours. And you advise me to 3 regulate my conduct, my work, according to the desires of such 4 heartless, selfish persons, and are at your wit's end because I do 5 not!

6 As to my Gurubhais (brother-disciples), they do nothing but 7 what I insist on their doing. If they have shown any selfishness 8 anywhere, that is because of my ordering them, not what they 9 would do themselves.

10 Would you like your children put into that dark hole you got 11 for me in London, made to work to death, and almost starved all the 12 time? Would Mrs. Sturdy like that? They are Sannyasins, and that 13 means, no Sannyasin should unnecessarily throw away his life or 14 undertake unnecessary hardship.

15 In undergoing all this hardship in the West we have been 16 only breaking the rules of Sannyasa. They are my brothers, my 17 children. I do not want them to die in holes for my sake. I don't, by 18 all that is good and true I don't, want them starved and worked and 19 cursed for all their pains.

20 A word more. I shall be very glad if you can point out to me
21 where I have preached torturing the flesh. As for the Shastras
22 (scriptures), I shall be only too glad if a Shastri (Pundit) dares 23 oppose us with the rules of life laid down for Sannyasins and 24 Paramahamsas.

25 Well, Sturdy, my heart aches. I understand it all. I know what 26 you are in--you are in the clutches of people who want to use you. I 27 don't mean your wife. She is too simple to be dangerous. But, my 28 poor boy, you have got the flesh-smell--a little money--and vultures 29 are around. Such is life.

30 You said a lot about ancient India. That India still lives, 31 Sturdy, is not dead, and that living India dares even today to deliver 32 her message without fear or favour of the rich, without fear of 33 anybody's opinion, either in the land where her feet are in chains or 34 in the very face of those who hold the end of the chain, her rulers.
35 That India still lives, Sturdy, India of undying love, of everlasting 36 faithfulness, the unchangeable, not only in manners and customs, 37 but also in love, in faith, in friendship. And I, the least of that India's 38 children, love you, Sturdy, with Indian love, and would any day give 39 up a thousand bodies to help you out of this delusion.

40 Ever yours,

41 Vivekananda

47 My dear Mrs. Leggett,

1 Many, many thanks for all your kindness and especially the 2 kind note. I am going to start from Chicago on Thursday next, and 3 got the ticket and berth ready for that day.

4 Miss Noble is doing very well here, and working her way out.
5 I saw Alberta the other day. She is enjoying every minute of her 6 stay here and is very happy. Miss Adams (Jane Adams), as ever is an 7 angel.

8 I shall wire to Joe Joe before I start and read all night.

9 With all love to Mr. Leggett and yourself,

17 Nothing new--except Madame Calve's visit. She is a great 18 woman. I wish I saw more of her. It is a grand sight to see a giant 19 pine struggling against a cyclone. Is it not?

20 I leave here tonight. These lines in haste as A__ is waiting.
21 Mrs. Adams is kind as usual. Margot doing splendidly. Will write

31 Dear Margot {Nivedita},

32 Your sixth has arrived, but with it yet no change in my 33 fortune. Would change be any good, do you think? Some people are 34 made that way, to love being miserable. If I did not break my heart 35 over people I was born amongst, I would do it for somebody else. I 36 am sure of that. This is the way of some, I am coming to see it. We 37 are all after happiness, true, but that some are only happy in being 38 unhappy--queer, is it not? There is no harm in it either, except that 39 happiness and unhappiness are both infectious. Ingersoll said once 40 that if he were God, he would make health catching, instead of 41 disease, little dreaming that health is quite as catching as disease, 42 if not more! That is the only danger. No harm in the world in my 43 being happy, in being miserable, but others must not catch it. This 44 is the great fact. No sooner a prophet feels miserable for the state

1 of man than he sours his face, beats his breast, and calls upon 2 everyone to drink tartaric acid, munch charcoal, sit upon a dung-3 heap covered with ashes, and speak only in groans and tears!--I find 4 they all have been wanting. Yes, they have. If you are really ready to 5 take the world's burden, take it by all means. But do not let us hear 6 your groans and curses. Do not frighten us with your sufferings, so 7 that we came to feel we were better off with our own burdens. The 8 man who really takes the burden blesses the world and goes his 9 own way. He has not a word of condemnation, a word of criticism, 10 not because there was no evil but that he has taken it on his own 11 shoulders willingly, voluntarily. It is the Saviour who should "go his 12 way rejoicing, and not the saved".

13 This is the only light I have caught this morning. This is 14 enough if it has come to live with me and permeate my life.

15 Come ye that are heavy laden and lay all your burden on me, 16 and then do whatever you like and be happy and forget that I ever 17 existed.

18 Ever with love,

27 My dear Mother {Mrs. Leggett},

28 So glad to get your nice letter. Well, you may be sure I am 29 keeping in touch with my friends. Yet a delay may sometimes cause 30 nervousness.

31 Dr. and Mrs. Hiller returned to the city, much benefited, as 32 they declare, by Mrs. Melton's rubbings. As for me, I have got 33 several huge red patches on my chest.

34 What materialises later on as to complete recovery, I will let 35 you know. Of course, my case is such that it will take time to come 36 round by itself.

37 So thankful to you and to Mrs. Adams for the kindness. I will 38 surely go and call on them in Chicago.

39 How are things going on with you? I have been following the 40 "Put up or shut up" plan here, and so far it has not proved bad. Mrs.
41 Hansborough, the second of the three sisters, is here, and she is 42 working, working, working--to help me. Lord bless their hearts. The 43 three sisters are three angels, are they not? Seeing such souls here 44 and there repays for all the nonsense of this life.

45 Well, all blessings to you for ever is my prayer. You are one of 19 to you.

20 I am getting better in health and doing financially something.
21 I am quite satisfied. I am not at all sorry that more people did not 22 respond to your call. I knew they would not. But I am eternally 23 thankful to you for all your kindness. May all blessings follow you 24 and yours for ever.

25 It is better that my mail be sent to 1231 Pine Street, C/o the 26 Home of Truth. For though I be moving about, that place is a 27 permanent establishment, and the people there are very kind to me.

28 I am so glad to learn that you are very well now. Mrs. Melton
29 has left Los Angeles--I am informed by Mrs. Blodgett. Has she gone
30 to New York? Dr. and Mrs. Hiller came back to San Francisco day 31 before yesterday. They declare themselves very much helped by 32 Mrs. Melton. Mrs. Hiller expects to get completely cured in a short 33 time.

34 I had a number of lectures here already and in Oakland. The 35 Oakland lectures paid well. The first week in San Francisco was not 36 paying, this week is. Hope the next week will pay also. I am so glad

Dear Mother {Mrs. Leggett},

Accept my congratulations for the news of the cause of the wound being completely removed. I have no doubt of your being perfectly cured this time.

Your very kind note cheered me a good deal. I do not mind at all whether people come round to help me or not; I am becoming calm and less worried.

Kindly convey my best love to Mrs. Melton. I am sure to recover in the long run. My health has been improving in the main, though there are occasional relapses. Each relapse becoming less, both in tone and in time.

It is just like you to have Turiyananda and Siri treated. The Lord has blessed you for your great heart. May all blessings ever follow you and yours.

It is perfectly true that I should go to France and work on French. I hope to reach France in July or earlier. Mother knows. May all good ever follow you, is the constant prayer of

My Dear Mr. Leggett,

Herewith I send the executed Will to you. It has been executed as desired by her, and of course, as usual, I am requesting you for the trouble of taking charge of it.

You and yours have been so uniformly kind to me. But you know, dear friend, it is human nature to ask for more favours (now that they have come) where it gets from.

I am only a man, your child.

I am so sorry A_ has made disturbances. He does that now and then, at least used to. I do not venture to meddle, for fear of creating more trouble. You know how to manage him best. By the time you receive this letter, I will be off from San Francisco. Will you kindly send my Indian mail C/o Mrs. Hale, 10 Aster Street, Chicago, and to Margot in the same place? Margot writes very thankfully of your gift of a thousand dollars for her school.

DISCOURSES ON JNANA-YOGA²³⁶

3

4 Om Tat Sat! To know the Om is to know the secret of the 5 universe. The object of Jnana-Yoga is the same as that of Bhakti and 6 Raja Yogas, but the method is different. This is the Yoga for the 7 strong, for those who are neither mystical nor devotional, but 8 rational. As the Bhakti-Yogi works his way to complete oneness with 9 the Supreme through love and devotion, so the Jnana-Yogi forces his 10 way to the realisation of God by the power of pure reason. He must 11 be prepared to throw away all old idols, all old beliefs and 12 superstitions, all desire for this world or another, and be 13 determined only to find freedom. Without Jnana (knowledge) 14 liberation cannot be ours. It consists in knowing what we really are, 15 that we are beyond fear, beyond birth, beyond death. The highest 16 good is the realisation of the Self. It is beyond sense, beyond 17 thought. The real "I" cannot be grasped. It is the eternal subject 18 and can never become the object of knowledge, because knowledge 19 is only of the related, not of the Absolute. All sense-knowledge is 20 limitation, it is an endless chain of cause and effect. This world is a 21 relative world, a shadow of the real; still, being the plane of 22 equipoise where happiness and misery are about evenly balanced, 23 it is the only plane where man can realise his true Self and know 24 that he is Brahman.

25 This world is "the evolution of nature and the manifestation of 26 God". It is our interpretation of Brahman or the Absolute, seen 27 through the veil of Maya or appearance. The world is not zero, it 28 has a certain reality; it only appears because Brahman is .

29 How shall we know the knower? The Vedanta says, "We are 30 It, but can never know It, because It can never become the object of 31 knowledge." Modern science also says that It cannot be known. We 32 can, however, have glimpses of It from time to time. When the 33 delusion of this world is once broken, it will come back to us, but no 34 longer will it hold any reality for us. We shall know it as a mirage.
 35 To reach behind the mirage is the aim of all religions. That man and 36 God are one is the constant teaching of the Vedas, but only few are 37 able to penetrate behind the veil and reach the realisation of this 38 truth.

39 The first thing to be got rid of by him who would be a Jnani is 40 fear. Fear is one of our worst enemies. Next, believe in nothing until 41 you know it. Constantly tell yourself, "I am not the body, I am not 42 the mind, I am not thought, I am not even consciousness; I am the 43 Atman." When you can throw away all, only the true Self will 44 remain. The Jnani's meditation is of two sorts: (1) to deny and think 45 away everything we are not; (2) to insist upon what we really are-- 46 the Atman, the One Self-Existence, Knowledge, and Bliss. The true

1

²³⁶ ?These were originally recorded by a prominent American disciple of the Swami, Miss S.E. Waldo. Swami Saradananda, while he was in America (1896), copied them out from her notebook--Ed.

1 rationalist must go on and fearlessly follow his reason to its farthest 2 limits. It will not answer to stop anywhere on the road. When we 3 begin to deny, all must go until we reach what cannot be thrown 4 away or denied, which is the real "I". That "I" is the witness of the 5 universe, it is unchangeable, eternal, infinite. Now, layer after layer 6 of ignorance covers it from our eyes, but it remains ever the same.

7 Two birds sat on one tree. The bird at the top was calm,
8 majestic, beautiful, perfect. The lower bird was always hopping 9 from twig to twig, now eating sweet fruits and being happy, now 10 eating bitter fruits and being miserable. One day, when he had 11 eaten a fruit more bitter than usual, he glanced up at the calm
12 majestic upper bird and thought, "How I would like to be like him!"
13 and he hopped up a little way towards him. Soon he forgot all about 14 his desire to be like the upper bird, and went on as before, eating 15 sweet and bitter fruits and being happy and miserable. Again he 16 looked up, again he went up a little nearer to the calm and majestic 17 upper bird. Many times was this repeated until at last he drew very 18 near the upper bird; the brilliancy of his plumage dazzled him, 19 seemed to absorb him, and finally, to his wonder and surprise, he 20 found there was only one bird--he was the upper bird all the time 21 and had but just found it out. Man is like that lower bird, but if he 22 perseveres in his efforts to rise to the highest ideal he can conceive 23 of, he too will find that he was the Self all the time and the other 24 was but a dream. To separate ourselves utterly from matter and all 25 belief in its reality is true Jnana. The Jnani must keep ever in his 26 mind the "Om Tat Sat", that is, Om the only real existence. Abstract 27 unity is the foundation of Jnana-Yoga. This is called Advaitism 28 ("without dualism or dvaitism"). This is the corner-stone of the 29 Vedanta philosophy, the Alpha and the Omega. "Brahman alone is 30 true, all else is false and I am Brahman." Only by telling ourselves 31 this until we make it a part of our very being, can we rise beyond all 32 duality, beyond both good and evil, pleasure and pain, joy and 33 sorrow, and know ourselves as the One, eternal, unchanging, 34 infinite--the "One without a second".

35 The Jnana-Yogi must be as intense as the narrowest sectarian, 36 yet as broad as the heavens. He must absolutely control his mind, 37 be able to be a Buddhist or a Christian, to have the power to 38 consciously divide himself into all these different ideas and yet hold 39 fast to the eternal harmony. Constant drill alone can enable us to 40 get this control. All variations are in the One, but we must learn not 41 to identify ourselves with what we do, and to hear nothing, see 42 nothing, talk of nothing but the thing in hand. We must put in our 43 whole soul and be intense. Day and night tell yourself, "I am He, I 44 am He."

45 II

46 The greatest teacher of the Vedanta philosophy was 47 Shankaracharya. By solid reasoning he extracted from the Vedas 48 the truths of Vedanta, and on them built up the wonderful system of 49 Jnana that is taught in his commentaries. He unified all the 50 conflicting descriptions of Brahman and showed that there is only 51

1 one Infinite Reality. He showed too that as man can only travel
2 slowly on the upward road, all the varied presentations are needed 3 to suit his varying capacity. We find something akin to this in the 4 teachings of Jesus, which he evidently adapted to the different 5 abilities of his hearers. First he taught them of a Father in heaven
6 and to pray to Him. Next he rose a step higher and told them, "I am 7 the vine, you are the branches", and lastly he gave them the highest 8 truth: "I and my Father are one", and "The Kingdom of Heaven is 9 within you." Shankara taught that three things were the great gifts 10 of God: (1) human body, (2) thirst after God, and (3) a teacher who 11 can show us the light. When these three great gifts are ours, we 12 may know that our redemption is at hand. Only knowledge can free 13 and save us, but with knowledge must go virtue.

14 The essence of Vedanta is that there is but one Being and that 15 every soul is that Being in full, not a part of that Being. All the sun 16 is reflected in each dew-drop. Appearing in time, space and 17 causality, this Being is man, as we know him, but behind all 18 appearance is the one Reality. Unselfishness is the denial of the 19 lower or apparent self. We have to free ourselves from this 20 miserable dream that we are these bodies. We must know the 21 truth, "I am He". We are not drops to fall into the ocean and be lost; 22 each one is the whole, infinite ocean, and will know it when 23 released from the fetters of illusion. Infinity cannot be divided, the 24 "One without a second" can have no second, all is that One. This 25 knowledge will come to all, but we should struggle to attain it now, 26 because until we have it, we cannot really give mankind the best 27 help. The Jivanmukta ('the living free' or one who knows) alone is 28 able to give real love, real charity, real truth, and it is truth alone 29 that makes us free. Desire makes slaves of us, it is an insatiable 30 tyrant and gives its victims no rest; but the Jivanmukta has 31 conquered all desire by rising to the knowledge that he is the One 32 and there is nothing left to wish for.

33 The mind brings before us all our delusions--body, sex, creed, 34 caste, bondage; so we have to tell the truth to the mind incessantly, 35 until it is made to realise it. Our real nature is all bliss, and all the 36 pleasure we know is but a reflection, an atom, of that bliss we get 37 from touching our real nature. That is beyond both pleasure and 38 pain. It is the "witness" of the universe, the unchanging reader 39 before whom turn the leaves of the book of life.

40 Through practice comes Yoga, through Yoga comes 41 knowledge, through knowledge love, and through love bliss.

42 "Me and mine" is a superstition; we have lived in it so long 43 that it is well-nigh impossible to shake it off. Still we must get rid of 44 it if we would rise to the highest. We must be bright and cheerful, 45 long faces do not make religion. Religion should be the most joyful 46 thing in the world, because it is the best. Asceticism cannot make 47 us holy. Why should a man who loves God and who is pure be 48 sorrowful? He should be like a happy child, be truly a child of God.
49 The essential thing in religion is making the heart pure; the 50 Kingdom of Heaven is within us, but only the pure in heart can see 51 the King. While we think of the world, it is only the world for us; but 52 let us come to it with the feeling that the world is God, and we shall

1 have God. This should be our thought towards everyone and 2 everything--parents, children, husbands, wives, friends, and 3 enemies. Think how it would change the whole universe for us if we 4 could consciously fill it with God! See nothing but God! All sorrow, 5 all struggle, all pain would be for ever lost to us!

6 Jnana is "creedlessness", but that does not mean that it
7 despises creeds. It only means that a stage above and beyond
8 creeds has been gained. The Jnani seeks not to destroy, but to help 9 all. As all rivers roll their waters into the sea and become one, so all 10 creeds should lead to Jnana and become one.

11 The reality of everything depends upon Brahman, and only as 12 we really grasp this truth, have we any reality. When we cease to 13 see any differences, then we know that "I and the Father are One".

14 Jnana is taught very clearly by Krishna in the Bhagavad-Gita.
15 This great poem is held to be the Crown jewel of all Indian 16 literature. It is a kind of commentary on the Vedas. It shows us that 17 our battle for spirituality must be fought out in this life; so we must 18 not flee from it, but rather compel it to give us all that it holds. As 19 the Gita typifies this struggle for higher things, it is highly poetical 20 to lay the scene in a battlefield. Krishna in the guise of a charioteer 21 to Arjuna, leader of one of the opposing armies, urges him not to be 22 sorrowful, not to fear death, since he knows he is immortal, that 23 nothing which changes can be in the real nature of man. Through 24 chapter after chapter, Krishna teaches the higher truths of 25 philosophy and religion to Arjuna. It is these teachings which make 26 this poem so wonderful; practically the whole of the Vedanta 27 philosophy is included in them. The Vedas teach that the soul is 28 infinite and in no way affected by the death of the body. The soul is 29 a circle whose circumference is nowhere, but whose centre is in 30 some body. Death (so-called) is but a change of centre. God is a 31 circle whose circumference is nowhere and whose centre is 32 everywhere, and when we can get out of the narrow centre of body, 33 we shall realise God--our true Self.

34 The present is only a line of demarcation between the past 35 and the future; so we cannot rationally say that we care only for the 36 present, as it has no existence apart from the past and the future. It 37 is all one complete whole, the idea of time being merely a condition 38 imposed upon us by the form of our understanding.

41 Jnana teaches that the world should be given up, but not on 42 that account to be abandoned. To be in the world, but not of it, is 43 the true test of the Sannyasin. This idea of renunciation has been in 44 some form common to nearly all religions. Jnana demands that we 45 look upon all alike, that we see only "sameness". Praise and blame, 46 good and bad, even heat and cold, must be equally acceptable to us.
47 In India there are many holy men of whom this is literally true. They 48 wander on the snow-clad heights of the Himalayas or over the 49 burning desert sands, entirely unclothed and apparently entirely 50 unconscious of any difference in temperature.

1 We have first of all to give up this superstition of body; we are 2 not the body. Next must go the further superstition that we are 3 mind. We are not mind; it is but the "silken body", not any part of 4 the soul. The mere word "body", applied to nearly all things, 5 includes something common among all bodies. This is existence .

6 Our bodies are symbols of thought behind, and the thoughts 7 themselves are in their turn symbols of something behind them, 8 that is, the one Real Existence, the Soul of our soul, the Self of the 9 universe, the Life of our life, our true Self. As long as we believe 10 ourselves to be even the least different from God, fear remains with 11 us; but when we know ourselves to be the One, fear goes: of what 12 can we be afraid? By sheer force of will the Jnani rises beyond body, 13 beyond mind, making this universe zero. Thus he destroys Avidya 14 and knows his true Self, the Atman. Happiness and misery are only 15 in the senses, they cannot touch our real Self. The soul is beyond 16 time, space, and causality--therefore unlimited, omnipresent.

17 The Jnani has to come out of all forms, to get beyond all rules 18 and books, and be his own book. Bound by forms, we crystallise and 19 die. Still the Jnani must never condemn those who cannot yet rise 20 above forms. He must never even think of another, "I am holier than 21 thou".

22 These are the marks of the true Jnana-Yogi: (1) He desires 23 nothing, save to know. (2) All his senses are under perfect restraint; 24 he suffers everything without murmuring, equally content if his bed 25 be the bare ground under the open sky, or if he is lodged in a king's 26 palace. He shuns no suffering, he stands and bears it--he has given 27 up all but the Self. (3) He knows that all but the One is unreal. (4)
28 He has an intense desire for freedom. With a strong will, he fixes 29 his mind on higher things and so attains to peace. If we know not 30 peace, what are we more than the brutes? He does everything for 31 others--for the Lord--giving up all fruits of work and looking for no 32 result, either here or hereafter. What can the universe give us more 33 than our own soul? Possessing that, we possess all. The Vedas 34 teach that the Atman, or Self, is the One Undivided Existence. It is 35 beyond mind, memory, thought, or even consciousness as we know 36 it. From it are all things. It is that through which (or because of 37 which) we see, hear, feel, and think. The goal of the universe is to 38 realise oneness with the "Om" or One Existence. The Jnani has to 39 be free from all forms; he is neither a Hindu, a Buddhist, nor a 40 Christian, but he is all three. All action is renounced, given up to 41 the Lord; then no action has power to bind. The Jnani is a 42 tremendous rationalist; he denies everything. He tells himself day 43 and night, "There are no beliefs, no sacred words, no heaven, no 44 hell, no creed, no church--there is only Atman." When everything 45 has been thrown away until what cannot be thrown away is 46 reached, that is the Self. The Jnani takes nothing for granted; he 47 analyses by pure reason and force of will, until he reaches Nirvana 48 which is the extinction of all relativity. No description or even 49 conception of this state is possible. Jnana is never to be judged by 50 any earthly result. Be not like the vulture which soars almost 51 beyond sight, but which is ever ready to swoop downwards at the 52 sight of a bit of carrion. Ask not for healing, or longevity, or 1 prosperity, ask only to be free.

2 We are "Existence, Knowledge, Bliss" (Sachchidananda).
3 Existence is the last generalisation in the universe; so we exist, we 4 know it; and bliss is the natural result of existence without alloy.
5 Now and then we know a moment of supreme bliss, when we ask 6 nothing, give nothing, and know nothing but bliss. Then it passes 7 and we again see the panorama of the universe going on before us 8 and we know it is but a "mosaic work set upon God, who is the 9 background of all things". When we return to earth and see the 10 Absolute as relative, we see Sachchidananda as Trinity--Father, 11 Son, Holy Ghost. Sat = the creating principle; Chit = the guiding 12 principle; Ananda = the realising principle, which joins us again to 13 the One. No one can know "existence" (Sat) except through 14 "knowledge" (Chit), and hence the force of the saying of Jesus, No 15 man can see the Father save through the Son. The Vedanta teaches 16 that Nirvana can be attained here and now, that we do not have to 17 wait for death to reach it. Nirvana is the realisation of the Self, and 18 after having once, if only for an instant, known this, never again can 19 one be deluded by the mirage of personality. Having eyes, we must 20 see the apparent; but all the time we know it for what it is, we have 21 found out its true nature. It is the "screen" that hides the Self which 22 is unchanging. The screen opens and we find the Self behind it--all 23 change is in the screen. In the saint the screen is thin and the 24 Reality can almost shine through; but in the sinner it is thick, and 25 we are apt to lose sight of the truth that the Atman is there, as well 26 as behind the saint.

27 All reasoning ends only in finding Unity; so we first use 28 analysis, then synthesis. In the world of science, the forces are 29 gradually narrowed down in the search for one underlying force.
30 When physical science can perfectly grasp the final unity, it will 31 have reached an end, for reaching unity we find rest. Knowledge is 32 final.

33 Religion, the most precious of all sciences, long ago
34 discovered that final unity, to reach which is the object of Jnana-35 Yoga. There is but one Self in the universe, of which all lower selves 36 are but manifestations. The Self, however, is infinitely more than all 37 of its manifestations. All is the Self or Brahman. The saint, the 38 sinner, the lamb, the tiger, even the murderer, as far as they have 39 any reality, can be nothing else, because there is nothing else. "That 40 which exists is One, sages call It variously." Nothing can be higher 41 than this knowledge, and in those purified by Yoga it comes in 42 flashes to the soul. The more one has been purified and prepared by 43 Yoga and meditation, the clearer are these flashes of realisation.
44 This was discovered 4,000 years ago, but has not yet become the 45 property of the race; it is still the property of some individuals only.

46 47 IV

48 All men, so-called, are not yet really human beings. Every one 49 has to judge of this world through his own mind. The higher 50 understanding is extremely difficult. The concrete is more to most 51 people than the abstract. As an illustration of this, a story is told of 1 two men in Bombay--one a Hindu and the other a Jain--who were 2 playing chess in the house of a rich merchant of Bombay. The house 3 was near the sea, the game long; the ebb and flow of the tide under 4 the balcony where they sat attracted the attention of the players.

5 One explained it by a legend that the gods in their play threw the 6 water into a great pit and then threw it out again. The other said:
7 No, the gods draw it up to the top of a high mountain to use it, and 8 then when they have done with it, they throw it down again. A 9 young student present began to laugh at them and said, "Do you not 10 know that the attraction of the moon causes the tides?" At this, both 11 men turned on him in a fury and inquired if he thought they were 12 fools. Did he suppose that they believed the moon had any ropes to 13 pull up the tides, or that it could reach so far? They utterly refused 14 to accept any such foolish explanation. At this juncture the host 15 entered the room and was appealed to by both parties. He was an 16 educated man and of course knew the truth, but seeing plainly the 17 impossibility of making the chess-players understand it, he made a 18 sign to the student and then proceeded to give an explanation of 19 the tides that proved eminently satisfactory to his ignorant hearers.
20 "You must know", he told them, "that afar off in the middle of the 21 ocean, there is a huge mountain of sponge--you have both seen 22 sponge, and know what I mean. This mountain of sponge absorbs a 23 great deal of the water and then the sea falls; by and by the gods 24 come down and dance on the mountain and their weight squeezes 25 all the water out and the sea rises again. This, gentlemen, is the 26 cause of the tides, and you can easily see for yourselves how 27 reasonable and simple is this explanation." The two men who 28 ridiculed the power of the moon to cause the tides, found nothing 29 incredible in a mountain of sponge, danced upon by the gods! The 30 gods were real to them, and they had actually seen sponge; what 31 was more likely than their joint effect upon the sea!

32 "Comfort" is no test of truth; on the contrary, truth is often far 33 from being "comfortable". If one intends to really find truth, one 34 must not cling to comfort. It is hard to let all go, but the Jnani must 35 do it. He must become pure, kill out all desires and cease to identify 36 himself with the body. Then and then only, the higher truth can 37 shine in his soul. Sacrifice is necessary, and this immolation of the 38 lower self is the underlying truth that has made sacrifice a part of 39 all religions. All the propitiatory offerings to the gods were but 40 dimly understood types of the only sacrifice that is of any real value, 41 the surrender of the apparent self, through which alone we can 42 realise the higher Self, the Atman. The Jnani must not try to 43 preserve the body, nor even wish to do so. He must be strong and 44 follow truth, though the universe fall. Those who follow "fads" can 45 never do this. It is a life-work, nay, the work of a hundred lives!
46 Only the few dare to realise the God within, to renounce heaven
47 and Personal God and all hope of reward. A firm will is needed to do 48 this; to be even vacillating is a sign of tremendous weakness. Man 49 always is perfect, or he never could become so; but he had to 50 realise it. If man were bound by external causes, he could only be 51 mortal. Immortality can only be true of the unconditioned. Nothing 52 can act on the Atman--the idea is pure delusion; but man must 53 identify himself with that, not with body or mind. Let him know that

1 he is the witness of the universe, then he can enjoy the beauty of 2 the wonderful panorama passing before him. Let him even tell 3 himself, "I am the universe, I am Brahman." When man really 4 identifies himself with the One, the Atman, everything is possible to 5 him and all matter becomes his servant. As Shri Ramakrishna has 6 said: After the butter is churned, it can be put in water or milk and 7 will never mix with either; so when man has once realised the Self, 8 he can no more be contaminated by the world.

9 "From a balloon, no minor distinctions are visible, so when 10 man rises high enough, he will not see good and evil people." "Once 11 the pot is burned, no more can it be shaped; so with the mind that 12 has once touched the Lord and has had a baptism of fire, no more 13 can it be changed." Philosophy in Sanskrit means "clear vision", and 14 religion is practical philosophy. Mere theoretic, speculative 15 philosophy is not much regarded in India. There is no church, no 16 creed, no dogma. The two great divisions are the "Dvaitists" and the 17 "Advaitists". The former say, "The way to salvation is through the 18 mercy of God; the law of causation, once set in motion, can never 19 be broken; only God, who is not bound by this law, by His mercy 20 helps us to break it". The latter say, "Behind all this nature is 21 something that is free; and finding that which is beyond all law gets 22 us freedom; and freedom is salvation." Dualism is only one phase, 23 Advaitism goes to the ultimate. To become pure is the shortest path 24 to freedom. Only that is ours which we earn. No authority can save 25 us, no beliefs. If there is a God, all can find Him. No one needs to 26 be told it is warm; each one can discover it for himself. So it should 27 be with God. He should be a fact in the consciousness of all men.
28 The Hindus do not recognise "sin", as it is understood by the 29 Western mind. Evil deeds are not "sins", we are not offending some 30 Ruler in committing these; we are simply injuring ourselves, and we 31 must suffer the penalty. It is not a sin to put one's finger in the fire, 32 but he who does so will surely suffer just as much as if it were. All 33 deeds produce certain results, and "every deed returns to the 34 doer". "Trinitarianism" is an advance on "Unitarianism" (which is 35 dualism, God and man for ever separate). The first step upwards is 36 when we recognise ourselves as the children of God; the last step is 37 when we realise ourselves as the One, the Atman.

38 39 V

40 The question why there cannot be eternal bodies is in itself 41 illogical, as "body" is a term applied to a certain combination of 42 elements, changeable and in its very nature impermanent. When we 43 are not passing through changes, we will not have bodies (so-44 called). "Matter" beyond the limit of time, space, and causality will 45 not be matter at all. Time and space exist only in us, we are the one 46 Permanent Being. All forms are transitory, that is why all religions 47 say, "God has no form". Menander was a Greco-Bactrian king. He 48 was converted to Buddhism about 150 B.C. by one of the Buddhist 49 missionary monks and was called by them "Milinda". He asked a 50 young monk, his teacher, "Can a perfect man (such as Buddha) be 51 in error or make mistakes?" The young monk's answer was : The 52 perfect man can remain in ignorance of minor matters not in his

1 experience, but he can never be in error as to what his insight has 2 actually realised. He is perfect here and now. He knows the whole 3 mystery, the Essence of the universe, but he may not know the 4 mere external variation through which that Essence is manifested
5 in time and space. He knows the clay itself, but has not had 6 experience of every shape it may be wrought into. The perfect man 7 knows the Soul itself, but not every form and combination of its 8 manifestation. He would have to attain more relative knowledge 9 just as we do, though on account of his immense power, he would 10 learn it far more quickly.

11 The tremendous "search-light" of a perfectly controlled mind, 12 when thrown on any subject, would rapidly reduce it to possession.
13 It is very important to understand this, because it saves so much 14 foolish explanation as to how a Buddha or a Jesus could be 15 mistaken in ordinary relative Knowledge, as we well know they 16 were. The disciples should not be blamed as having put down the 17 sayings erroneously. It is humbug to say that one thing is true and 18 another untrue in their statements. Accept the whole account, or 19 reject it. How can we pick out the true from the false?

20 If a thing happens once, it can happen again. If any human 21 being has ever realised perfection, we too can do so. If we cannot 22 become perfect here and now, we never can in any state or heaven 23 or condition we may imagine. If Jesus Christ was not perfect, then 24 the religion bearing his name falls to the ground. If he was perfect, 25 then we too can become perfect. The perfect man does not reason 26 or "know", as we count "knowing", for all our knowledge is mere 27 comparison, and there is no comparison, no classification, possible 28 in the Absolute. Instinct is less liable to error than reason, but 29 reason is higher and leads to intuition, which is higher still.
30 Knowledge is the parent of intuition, which like instinct, is also 31 unerring, but on a higher plane. There are three grades of 32 manifestation in living beings: (1) sub-conscious--mechanical, 33 unerring; (2) conscious--knowing, erring; (3) superconscious-- 34 intuitional, unerring; and these are illustrated in an animal, man, 35 and God. For the man who has become perfect, nothing remains but 36 to apply his understanding. He lives only to help the world, desiring 37 nothing for himself. What distinguishes is negative--the positive is 38 ever wider and wider. What we have in common is the widest of all, 39 and that is "Being".

40 "Law is a mental shorthand to explain a series of 41 phenomena"; but law as an entity, so to speak, does not exist. We 42 use the word to express the regular succession of certain 43 occurrences in the phenomenal world. We must not let law become 44 a superstition, a something inevitable, to which we must submit.
45 Error must accompany reason, but the very struggle to conquer
46 error makes us gods. Disease is the struggle of nature to cast out 47 something wrong; so sin is the struggle of the divine in us to throw 48 off the animal. We must "sin" (that is, make mistakes) in order to 49 rise to Godhood.

50 Do not pity anyone. Look upon all as your equal, cleanse 51 yourself of the primal sin of inequality. We are all equal and must 52 not think, "I am good and you are bad, and I am trying to reclaim

1 you". Equality is the sign of the free. Jesus came to publicans and 2 sinners and lived with them. He never set himself on a pedestal.
3 Only sinners see sin. See not man, see only the Lord. We 4 manufacture our own heaven and can make a heaven even in hell.
5 Sinners are only to be found in hell, and as long as we see them 6 around us, we are there ourselves. Spirit is not in time, nor in 7 space. Realise "I am Existence Absolute, Knowledge Absolute, Bliss 8 Absolute--I am He, I am He". Be glad at birth, be glad at death, 9 rejoice always in the love of God. Get rid of the bondage of body; 10 we have become slaves to it and learnt to hug our chains and love 11 our slavery; so much so that we long to perpetuate it, and go on 12 with "body" "body" for ever. Do not cling to the idea of "body", do 13 not look for a future existence in any way like this one; do not love 14 or want the body, even of those dear to us. This life is our teacher, 15 and dying only makes room to begin over again. Body is our 16 schoolmaster, but to commit suicide is folly, it is only killing the 17 "schoolmaster". Another will take his place. So until we have learnt 18 to transcend the body, we must have it, and losing one, will get 19 another. Still we must not identify ourselves with the body, but look 20 upon it only as an instrument to be used in reaching perfection.
21 Hanuman, the devotee of Rama, summed up his philosophy in these 22 words: When I identify myself with the body, O Lord, I am Thy 23 creature, eternally separate from Thee. When I identify myself with 24 the soul, I am a spark of that Divine Fire which Thou art. But when 25 I identify myself with the Atman, I and Thou art one.

26 Therefore the Jnani strives to realise the Self and nothing 27 else.

30 Thought is all important, for "what we think we become".
31 There was once a Sannyasin, a holy man, who sat under a tree and 32 taught the people. He drank milk, and ate only fruit, and made 33 endless "Pranayamas", and felt himself to be very holy. In the same 34 village lived an evil woman. Every day the Sannyasin went and 35 warned her that her wickedness would lead her to hell. The poor 36 woman, unable to change her method of life which was her only 37 means of livelihood, was still much moved by the terrible future 38 depicted by the Sannyasin. She wept and prayed to the Lord, 39 begging Him to forgive her because she could not help herself. By 40 and by both the holy man and the evil woman died. The angels 41 came and bore her to heaven, while the demons claimed the soul of 42 the Sannyasin. "Why is this!" he exclaimed, "have I not lived a most 43 holy life, and preached holiness to everybody? Why should I be 44 taken to hell while this wicked woman is taken to heaven?"
45 "Because," answered the demons, "while she was forced to commit 46 unholy acts, her mind was always fixed on the Lord and she sought 47 deliverance, which has now come to her. But you, on the contrary, 48 while you performed only holy acts, had your mind always fixed on 49 the wickedness of others. You saw only sin, and thought only of sin, 50 so now you have to go to that place where only sin is." The moral of 51 the story is obvious: The outer life avails little. The heart must be 52 pure and the pure heart sees only good, never evil. We should never

1 try to be guardians of mankind, or to stand on a pedestal as saints
2 reforming sinners. Let us rather purify ourselves, and the result 3 must be that in so doing we shall help others.

4 Physics is bounded on both sides by metaphysics. So it is with 5 reason--it starts from non-reason and ends with non-reason. If we 6 push inquiry far enough in the world of perception, we must reach a 7 plane beyond perception. Reason is really stored up and classified
8 perception, preserved by memory. We can never imagine or reason 9 beyond our sense-perceptions. Nothing beyond reason can be an 10 object of sense-knowledge. We feel the limited character of reason, 11 yet it does bring us to a plane where we get a glimpse of something 12 beyond. The question then arises: Has man an instrument that 13 transcends reason? It is very probable that in man there is a power 14 to reach beyond reason; in fact the saints in all ages assert the 15 existence of this power in themselves. But it is impossible in the 16 very nature of things to translate spiritual ideas and perceptions 17 into the language of reason; and these saints, each and all, have 18 declared their inability to make known their spiritual experiences.
19 Language can, of course, supply no words for them, so that it can 20 only be asserted that these are actual experiences and can be had 21 by all. Only in that way can they become known, but they can never 22 be described. Religion is the science which learns the 23 transcendental in nature through the transcendental in man. We 24 know as yet but little of man, consequently but little of the universe.
25 When we know more of man, we shall probably know more of the 26 universe. Man is the epitome of all things and all knowledge is in 27 him. Only for the infinitesimal portion of the universe, which comes 28 into sense-perception, are we able to find a reason; never can we 29 give the reason for any fundamental principle. Giving a reason for a 30 thing is simply to classify it and put it in a pigeon-hole of the mind.
31 When we meet a new fact, we at once strive to put it in some 32 existing category and the attempt to do this is to reason. When we 33 succeed in placing the fact, it gives a certain amount of satisfaction, 34 but we can never go beyond the physical plane in this classification.
35 That man can transcend the limits of the senses is the emphatic 36 testimony of all past ages. The Upanishads told 5,000 years ago
37 that the realisation of God could never be had through the senses.
38 So far, modern agnosticism agrees, but the Vedas go further than 39 the negative side and assert in the plainest terms that man can and 40 does transcend this sense-bound, frozen universe. He can, as it 41 were, find a hole in the ice, through which he can pass and reach 42 the whole ocean of life. Only by so transcending the world of sense, 43 can he reach his true Self and realise what he really is.

44 Jnana is never sense-knowledge. We cannot know Brahman, 45 but we are Brahman, the whole of It, not a piece. The unextended 46 can never be divided. The apparent variety is but the reflection 47 seen in time and space, as we see the sun reflected in a million 48 dewdrops, though we know that the sun itself is one and not many.
49 In Jnana we have to lose sight of the variety and see only the Unity.
50 Here there is no subject, no object, no knowing, no thou or he or I, 51 only the one, absolute Unity. We are this all the time; once free, 52 ever free. Man is not bound by the law of causation. Pain and

1 misery are not in man, they are but as the passing cloud throwing 2 its shadow over the sun, but the cloud passes, the sun is 3 unchanged; and so it is with man. He is not born, he does not die, 4 he is not in time and space. These ideas are mere reflections of the 5 mind, but we mistake them for the reality and so lose sight of the 6 glorious truth they obscure. Time is but the method of our thinking, 7 but we are the eternally present tense. Good and evil have 8 existence only in relation to us. One cannot be had without the 9 other, because neither has meaning or existence apart from the 10 other. As long as we recognise duality, or separate God and man, so 11 long we must see good and evil. Only by going to the centre, by 12 unifying ourselves with God can we escape the delusions of the 13 senses. When we let go the eternal fever of desire, the endless 14 thirst that gives us no rest, when we have for ever quenched desire, 15 we shall escape both good and evil, because we shall have 16 transcended both. The satisfaction of desire only increases it, as oil 17 poured on fire but makes it burn more fiercely. The further from the 18 centre, the faster goes the wheel, the less the rest. Draw near the 19 centre, check desire, stamp it out, let the false self go, then our 20 vision will clear and we shall see God. Only through renunciation of 21 this life and of all life to come (heaven etc.), can we reach the point 22 where we stand firmly on the true Self. While we hope for anything, 23 desire still rules us. Be for one moment really "hopeless", and the 24 mist will clear. For what to hope when one is the all of existence?
25 The secret of Jnana is to give up all and be sufficient unto ourselves.
26 Say "not", and you become "not"; say "is", and you become "is".
27 Worship the Self within, naught else exists. All that binds us is 28 Maya--delusion.

30 VII

31 The Self is the condition of all in the universe, but It can 32 never be conditioned. As soon as we know that we are It, we are 33 free. As mortals we are not and never can be free. Free mortality is 34 a contradiction in terms, for mortality implies change, and only the 35 changeless can be free. The Atman alone is free, and that is our 36 real essence. We feel this inner freedom; in spite of all theories, all 37 beliefs, we know it, and every action proves that we know it. The 38 will is not free, its apparent freedom is but a reflection from the 39 Real. If the world were only an endless chain of cause and effect, 40 where could one stand to help it? There must needs be a piece of 41 dry land for the rescuer to stand on, else how can he drag anyone 42 out of the rushing stream and save him from drowning? Even the 43 fanatic who cries "I am a worm", thinks that he is on the way to 44 become a saint. He sees the saint even in the worm.

45 There are two ends or aims of human life, real knowing 46 (Vijnana) and bliss. Without freedom, these two are impossible.
47 They are the touchstone of all life. We should feel the Eternal Unity 48 so much, that we should weep for all sinners, knowing that it is we 49 who are sinning. The eternal law is self-sacrifice, not self-assertion.
50 What self to assert when all is one? There are no "rights", all is 51 love. The great truths that Jesus taught have never been lived. Let 52 us try his method and see if the world will not be saved. The

1 contrary method has nearly destroyed it. Selflessness only, not 2 selfishness, can solve the question. The idea of "right" is a 3 limitation; there is really no "mine" and "thine", for I am thou and 4 thou art I. We have "responsibility", not "rights". We should say, "I 5 am the universe", not "I am John" or "I am Mary". These limitations
6 are all delusions and are what holds us in bondage, for as soon as I 7 think, "I am John", I want exclusive possession of certain things and 8 begin to say "me and mine", and continually make new distinctions 9 in so doing. So our bondage goes on increasing with every fresh 10 distinction, and we get further and further away from the central 11 Unity, the undivided Infinite. There is only one Individual, and each 12 of us is That. Oneness alone is love and fearlessness; separation 13 leads us to hatred and fear. Oneness fulfils the law. Here, on earth, 14 we strive to enclose little spaces and exclude outsiders, but we 15 cannot do that in the sky, though that is what sectarian religion 16 tries to do when it says, "Only this way leads to salvation, all others 17 are wrong". Our aim should be to wipe out these little enclosures to 18 widen the boundaries until they are lost sight of, and to realise that 19 all religions lead to God. This little puny self must be sacrificed.
20 This is the truth symbolised by baptism into a new life, the death of 21 the old man, the birth of the new--the perishing of the false self, the 22 realisation of the Atman, the one Self of the universe.

23 The two great divisions of the Vedas are Karma Kanda--the 24 portion pertaining to doing or work, and Jnana Kanda--the portion 25 treating of knowing, true knowledge. In the Vedas we can find the 26 whole process of the growth of religious ideas. This is because 27 when a higher truth was reached, the lower perception that led to 28 it, was still preserved. This was done, because the sages realised 29 that the world of creation being eternal, there would always be 30 those who needed the first steps to knowledge, that the highest 31 philosophy, while open to all, could never be grasped by all. In 32 nearly every other religion, only the last or highest realisation of 33 truth has been preserved, with the natural consequence that the 34 older ideas were lost, while the newer ones were only understood 35 by the few and gradually came to have no meaning for the many.
36 We see this result illustrated in the growing revolt against old 37 traditions and authorities.

38 Instead of accepting them, the man of today boldly challenges
39 them to give reasons for their claims, to make clear the grounds 40 upon which they demand acceptance. Much in Christianity is the 41 mere application of new names and meanings to old pagan beliefs
42 and customs. If the old sources had been preserved and the reasons 43 for the transitions fully explained, many things would have been 44 clearer. The Vedas preserved the old ideas and this fact 45 necessitated huge commentaries to explain them and why they 46 were kept. It also led to many superstitions, through clinging to old 47 forms after all sense of their meaning had been lost. In many 48 ceremonies, words are repeated which have survived from a now 49 forgotten language and to which no real meaning can now be 50 attached. The idea of evolution was to be found in the Vedas long 51 before the Christian era; but until Darwin said it was true, it was 52 regarded as a mere Hindu superstition.

1 All external forms of prayer and worship are included in the 2 Karma Kanda. These are good when performed in a spirit of 3 unselfishness and not allowed to degenerate into mere formality.
4 They purify the heart. The Karma-Yogi wants everyone to be saved 5 before himself. His only salvation is to help others to salvation. "To 6 serve Krishna's servants is the highest worship." One great saint 7 prayed, "Let me go to hell with the sins of the whole world, but let 8 the world be saved." This true worship leads to intense self-9 sacrifice. It is told of one sage that he was willing to give all his 10 virtues to his dog, that it might go to heaven, because it had long 11 been faithful to him, while he himself was content to go to hell.

12 The Jnana Kanda teaches that knowledge alone can save, in 13 other words, that he must become "wise unto salvation". Knowledge 14 is first objective, the Knower knowing Himself. The Self, the only 15 subject, is in manifestation seeking only to know Itself. The better 16 the mirror, the better reflection it can give; so man is the best 17 mirror, and the purer the man, the more clearly he can reflect God.
18 Man makes the mistake of separating himself from God and 19 identifying himself with the body. This mistake arises through 20 Maya, which is not exactly delusion but might be said to be seeing 21 the real as something else and not as it is. This identifying of 22 ourselves with the body leads to inequality, which inevitably leads 23 to struggle and jealousy, and so long as we see inequality, we can 24 never know happiness. "Ignorance and inequality are the two 25 sources of all misery", says Jnana.

26 When man has been sufficiently buffeted by the world, he 27 awakes to a desire for freedom; and searching for means of escape 28 from the dreary round of earthly existence, he seeks knowledge, 29 learns what he really is, and is free. After that he looks at the world 30 as a huge machine, but takes good care to keep his fingers out of 31 the wheels. Duty ceases for him who is free; what power can 32 constrain the free being? He does good, because it is his nature, not 33 because any fancied duty commands it. This does not apply to those 34 who are still in the bondage of the senses. Only for him, who has 35 transcended the lower self, is this freedom. He stands on his own 36 soul, obeys no law; he is free and perfect. He has undone the old 37 superstitions and got out of the wheel. Nature is but the mirror of 38 our own selves. There is a limit to the working power of human 39 beings, but no limit to desire; so we strive to get hold of the 40 working powers of others and enjoy the fruits of their labours, 41 escaping work ourselves. Inventing machinery to work for us can 42 never increase well-being, for in gratifying desire, we only find it, 43 and then we want more and more without end. Dying, still filled 44 with ungratified desires, we have to be born again and again in the 45 vain search for satisfaction.

46 "Eight Millions of bodies have we had, before we reached the 47 human", say the Hindus. Jnana says, "Kill desire and so get rid of 48 it". That is the only way. Cast out all causation and realise the 49 Atman. Only freedom can produce true morality. If there were only 50 an endless chain of cause and effect, Nirvana could not be. It is 51 extinction of the seeming self, bound by this chain. That is what 52 constitutes freedom, to get beyond causality.

1 Our true nature is good, it is free, the pure being that can 2 never be or do wrong. When we read God with our eyes and minds, 3 we call Him this or that; but in reality there is but One, all 4 variations are our interpretations of that One. We become nothing; 5 we regain our true Self. Buddha's summary of misery as the 6 outcome of "ignorance and caste" (inequality) has been adopted by 7 the Vedantists, because it is the best ever made. It manifests the 8 wonderful insight of this greatest among men. Let us then be brave 9 and sincere: whatever path we follow with devotion, must take us to 10 freedom. Once lay hold of one link of the chain and the whole must 11 come after it by degrees. Water the root of the tree and the whole 12 tree is watered. It is of little advantage to waste time to water each 13 leaf. In other words, seek the Lord and getting Him we get all.
14 Churches, doctrines, forms--these are merely the hedges to protect 15 the tender plant of religion; but later on they must all be broken 16 down, that the little plant may become a tree. So the various 17 religious sects, Bibles, Vedas, and scriptures are just "tubs" for the 18 little plant; but it has to get out of the tub and fill the world.

19 We must learn to feel ourselves as much in the sun, in the 20 stars, as here. Spirit is beyond all time and space; every eye seeing 21 is my eye; every mouth praising the Lord is my mouth; every sinner 22 is I. We are confined nowhere, we are not body. The universe is our 23 body. We are just the pure crystal reflecting all, but itself ever the 24 same. We are magicians waving magic wands and creating scenes 25 before us at will, but we have to go behind appearances and know 26 the Self. This world is like water in a kettle, beginning to boil; first a 27 bubble comes, then another, then many until all is in ebullition and 28 passes away in steam. The great teachers are like the bubbles as 29 they begin--here one, there one; but in the end every creature has 30 to be a bubble and escape. Creation, ever new, will bring new water 31 and go through the process all over again. Buddha and Christ are 32 the two greatest "bubbles" the world has known. They were great 33 souls who having realised freedom helped others to escape. Neither 34 was perfect, but they are to be judged by their virtues, never by 35 their defects. Jesus fell short, because he did not always live up to 36 his own highest ideal; and above all, because he did not give 37 woman an equal place with man. Woman did everything for him, yet 38 not one was made an apostle. This was doubtless owing to his 39 Semitic origin. The great Aryans, Buddha among the rest, have 40 always put woman in an equal position with man. For them sex in 41 religion did not exist. In the Vedas and Upanishads, women taught 42 the highest truths and received the same veneration as men.

43 44 VIII

45 Both happiness and misery are chains, the one golden, the 46 other iron; but both are equally strong to bind us and hold us back 47 from realising our true nature. The Atman knows neither happiness 48 nor misery. These are mere "states", and states must ever change.
49 The nature of the soul is bliss and peace unchanging. We have not 50 to get it; we have it; let us wash away the dross from our eyes and 51 see it. We must stand ever on the Self and look with perfect 52 calmness upon all the panorama of the world. It is but baby's play

1 and ought never to disturb us. If the mind is pleased by praise, it 2 will be pained by blame. All pleasures of the senses or even of the 3 mind are evanescent, but within ourselves is the one true unrelated 4 pleasure, dependent on nothing outside. "The pleasure of the Self is 5 what the world calls religion." The more our bliss is within, the 6 more spiritual we are. Let us not depend upon the world for 7 pleasure.

8 Some poor fishwives, overtaken by a violent storm, found 9 refuge in the garden of a rich man. He received them kindly, fed 10 them, and left them to rest in a summer-house, surrounded by 11 exquisite flowers which filled all the air with their rich perfume. The 12 women lay down in this sweet-smelling paradise, but could not 13 sleep. They missed something out of their lives and could not be 14 happy without it. At last one of the women arose and went to the 15 place where they had left their fish baskets, brought them to the 16 summer-house, and then once more happy in the familiar smell, 17 they were all soon sound asleep.

18 Let not the world be our "fish basket" which we have to 19 depend upon for enjoyment. This is Tamasika, or being bound by 20 the lowest of the three qualities (or Gunas). Next higher come the 21 egotistical who talk always about "I", "I". Sometimes they do good 22 work and may become spiritual. These are Rajasika or active.
23 Highest come the introspective nature (Sattvika), those who live 24 only in the Self. These three qualities are in every human being in 25 varying proportions, and different ones predominate at different 26 times. We must strive to overcome Tamas with Rajas and then to 27 submerge both in Sattva.

28 Creation is not a "making" of something, it is the struggle to 29 regain equilibrium, as when atoms of cork are thrown to the bottom 30 of a pail of water: they rush to the top singly and in clusters, and 31 when all have reached the top and equilibrium has been regained, 32 all motion or "life" ceases. So with creation; if equilibrium were 33 reached, all change would cease and life, so-called, would end. Life 34 must be accompanied with evil, for when the balance is regained, 35 the world must end, as sameness and destruction are one. There is 36 no possibility of ever having pleasure without pain, or good without 37 evil, for living itself is just the lost equilibrium. What we want is 38 freedom, not life, nor pleasure, nor good. Creation is eternal, 39 without beginning, without end, the ever moving ripple in an 40 infinite lake. There are yet unreached depths and others where 41 stillness has been regained, but the ripple is ever progressing, the 42 struggle to regain the balance is eternal. Life and death are but 43 different names for the same fact, they are the two sides of one 44 coin. Both are Maya, the inexplicable state of striving at one point 45 to live and a moment later to die. Beyond all this is the true nature, 46 the Atman. We enter into creation, and then, for us, it becomes 47 living. Things are dead in themselves, only we give them life, and 48 then, like fools, we turn round and are afraid of them or enjoy 49 them! The world is neither true nor untrue, it is the shadow of 50 truth.

51 "Imagination is the gilded shadow of truth", says the poet.
52 The internal universe, the Real, is infinitely greater than the 1 external one, which is but the shadowy projection of the true one.

2 When we see the "rope", we do not see the "serpent", and when the 3 "serpent" is, the "rope" is not. Both cannot exist at the same time; 4 so while we see the world we do not realise the Self, it is only an 5 intellectual concept. In the realisation of Brahman, the personal "I" 6 and all sense of the world is lost. The Light does not know the 7 darkness, because it has no existence in the light; so Brahman is all.
8 While we recognise a God, it is really only the Self that we have 9 separated from ourselves and worship as outside of us; but all the 10 time it is our own true Self, the one and only God. The nature of the 11 brute is to remain where he is, of man to seek good and avoid evil, 12 of God to neither seek nor avoid, but just to be blissful eternally. Let 13 us be Gods, let us make our hearts like an ocean, to go beyond all 14 the trifles of the world and see it only as a picture. We can then 15 enjoy it without being in any way affected by it. Why look for good 16 in the world, what can we find there? The best it has to offer is only 17 as if children playing in a mud puddle found a few glass beads.
18 They lose them again and have to begin the search anew. Infinite 19 strength is religion and God. We are only souls if we are free, there 20 is immortality only if we are free, there is God only if He is free.

21 Until we give up the world manufactured by the ego, never 22 can we enter the Kingdom of Heaven. None ever did, none ever 23 will. To give up the world is to utterly forget the ego, to know it not 24 at all, living in the body but not being ruled by it. This rascal ego 25 must be obliterated. Power to help mankind is with the silent ones 26 who only live and love and withdraw their own personality entirely.
27 They never say "me" or "mine", they are only blessed in being the 28 instruments to help others. They are wholly identified with God, 29 asking nothing and not consciously doing anything. They are the 30 true Jivanmuktas-the absolutely selfless, their little personality 31 thoroughly blown away, ambition non-existent. They are all 32 principle, with no personality. The more we sink the "little self", the 33 more God comes. Let us get rid of the little "I" and let only the 34 great "I" live in us. Our best work and our greatest influence is 35 when we are without a thought of self. It is the "desireless" who 36 bring great results to pass. Bless men when they revile you. Think 37 how much good they are doing by helping to stamp out the false
38 ego. Hold fast to the real Self, think only pure thoughts, and you 39 will accomplish more than a regiment of mere preachers. Out of 40 purity and silence comes the word of power.

43 Expression is necessarily degeneration, because spirit can 44 only be expressed by the "letter", and as St. Paul said, "the letter 45 killeth". Life cannot be in the "letter" which is only a reflection. Yet, 46 principle must be clothed in matter to be "known". We lose sight of 47 the Real in the covering and come to consider that as the Real, 48 instead of as the symbol. This is an almost universal mistake. Every 49 great Teacher knows this and tries to guard against it; but 50 humanity, in general, is prone to worship the seen rather than the 51 unseen. This is why a succession of prophets have come to the 52 world to point again and again to the principle behind the

1 personality and to give it a new covering suited to the times. Truth 2 remains ever unchanged, but it can only be presented in a "form"; 3 so from time to time a new "form" or expression is given to Truth, 4 as the progress of mankind makes them ready to receive it. When 5 we free ourselves from name and form, especially when we no 6 longer need a body of any kind, good or bad, coarse or fine, then 7 only do we escape from bondage. "Eternal progression" would be 8 eternal bondage. We must get beyond all differentiation and reach 9 eternal "sameness" or homogeneity or Brahman. The Atman is the 10 unity of all personalities and is unchangeable, the "One without a 11 second". It is not life, but it is coined into life. It is beyond life and 12 death and good and bad. It is the Absolute Unity. Dare to seek 13 Truth even through hell. Freedom can never be true of name and 14 form, of the related. No form can say, "I am free as a form." Not 15 until all idea of form is lost, does freedom come. If our freedom 16 hurts others, we are not free there. We must not hurt others. While 17 real perception is only one, relative perceptions must be many. The 18 fountain of all knowledge is in every one of us--in the ant as in the 19 highest angel. Real religion is one; all quarrel is with the forms, the 20 symbols, the "illustrations". The millennium exists already for those 21 who find it. The truth is, we have lost ourselves and think the world 22 to be lost. "Fool! Hearest not thou? In thine own heart, day and 23 night, is singing that Eternal Music--Sachchidananda, Soham, 24 Soham, (Existence, Knowledge, and Bliss, I am He, I am He)!"

25 To try to think without a phantasm is to try to make the 26 impossible possible. Each thought has two parts--the thinking and 27 the word, and we must have both. Neither idealists nor materialists 28 are able to explain the world; to do that, we must take both idea 29 and expression. All knowledge is of the reflected as we can only see 30 our own faces reflected in a mirror. So no one can know his Self or 31 Brahman; but each is that Self and must see it reflected in order to 32 make it an object of knowledge. This seeing the illustrations of the 33 unseen Principle is what leads to idolatry--so-called. The range of 34 idols is wider than is usually supposed. They range from wood and 35 stone to great personalities as Jesus or Buddha. The introduction of 36 idols into India was the result of Buddha's constantly inveighing 37 against a Personal God. The Vedas knew them not, but the reaction 38 against the loss of God as Creator and Friend led to making idols of 39 the great teachers, and Buddha himself became an idol and is 40 worshipped as such by millions of people. Violent attempts at 41 reform always end in retarding true reform. To worship is inherent 42 in every man's nature; only the highest philosophy can rise to pure 43 abstraction. So man will ever personify his God in order to worship 44 Him. This is very good, as long as the symbol, be it what it may, is 45 worshipped as a symbol of the Divinity behind and not in and for 46 itself. Above all, we need to free ourselves from the superstition of 47 believing because "it is in the books". To try to make everything-- 48 science, religion, philosophy, and all--conform to what any book 49 says, is a most horrible tyranny. Book-worship is the worst form of 50 idolatry. There was once a stag, proud and free, and he talked in a 51 lordly fashion to his child, "Look at me, see my powerful horns!
52 With one thrust I can kill a man; it is a fine thing to be a stag!" Just 53 then the sound of the huntsman's bugle was heard in the distance,

1 and the stag precipitately fled, followed by his wondering child.
2 When they had reached a place of safety, he inquired, "Why do you
3 fly before man, O my father, when you are so strong and brave?" 4 The stag answered, "My child, I know I am strong and powerful, but 5 when I hear that sound, something seizes me and makes me fly 6 whether I will or no." So with us. We hear the "bugle sound" of the 7 laws laid down in the books, habits and old superstitions lay hold of 8 us; and before we know it, we are fast bound and forget our real 9 nature which is freedom.

10 Knowledge exists eternally. The man who discovers a spiritual 11 truth is what we call "inspired", and what he brings to the world is 12 revelation. But revelation too is eternal and is not to be crystallised 13 as final and then blindly followed. Revelation may come to any man 14 who has fitted himself to receive it. Perfect purity is the most 15 essential thing, for only "the pure in heart shall see God". Man is 16 the highest being that exists and this is the greatest world, for here 17 can man realise freedom. The highest concept we can have of God 18 is man. Every attribute we give Him belongs also to man, only in a 19 lesser degree. When we rise higher and want to get out of this 20 concept of God, we have to get out of the body, out of mind and 21 imagination, and leave this world out of sight. When we rise to be 22 the absolute, we are no longer in the world--all is Subject, without 23 object.

24 Man is the apex of the only "world" we can ever know. Those 25 who have attained "sameness" or perfection, are said to be "living 26 in God". All hatred is "killing the self by the self"; therefore, love is 27 the law of life. To rise to this is to be perfect; but the more "perfect" 28 we are, the less work can we do. The Sattvika see and know that all 29 this world is mere child's play and do not trouble themselves about 30 that. We are not much disturbed when we see two puppies fighting 31 and biting each other. We know it is not a serious matter. The 32 perfect one knows that this world is Maya. Life is called Samsara--it 33 is the result of the conflicting forces acting upon us. Materialism 34 says, "The voice of freedom is a delusion." Idealism says, "The voice 35 that tells of bondage is but a dream." Vedanta says, "We are free 36 and not free at the same time." That means that we are never free 37 on the earthly plane, but ever free on the spiritual side. The Self is 38 beyond both freedom and bondage. We are Brahman, we are 39 immortal knowledge beyond the senses, we are Bliss Absolute.

SIX LESSONS ON RAJA-YOGA²³⁷

Raja-Yoga is as much a science as any in the world. It is an analysis of the mind, a gathering of the facts of the supersensuous world and so building up the spiritual world. All the great spiritual teachers the world has known said, "I see and I know." Jesus, Paul, and Peter all claimed actual perception of the spiritual truths they taught.

This perception is obtained by Yoga.

Neither memory nor consciousness can be the limitation of existence. There is a superconscious state. Both it and the unconscious state are sensationless, but with a vast difference between them--the difference between ignorance and knowledge. Present Yoga as an appeal to reason, as a science.

Concentration of the mind is the source of all knowledge.

Yoga teaches us to make matter our slave, as it ought to be. Yoga means "yoke", "to join", that is, to join the soul of man with the supreme Soul or God.

The mind acts in and under consciousness. What we call consciousness is only one link in the infinite chain that is our nature.

This "I" of ours covers just a little consciousness and a vast amount of unconsciousness, while over it, and mostly unknown to it, is the superconscious plane.

Through faithful practice, layer after layer of the mind opens before us, and each reveals new facts to us. We see as it were new worlds created before us, new powers are put into our hands, but we must not stop by the way or allow ourselves to be dazzled by these "beads of glass" when the mine of diamonds lies before us.

God alone is our goal. Failing to reach God, we die.

Three things are necessary to the student who wishes to succeed.

First. Give up all ideas of enjoyment in this world and the next, care only for God and Truth. We are here to know truth, not for enjoyment. Leave that to brutes who enjoy as we never can. Man is a thinking being and must struggle on until he conquers death, until he sees the light. He must not spend himself in vain talking that bears no fruit. Worship of society and popular opinion is idolatry. The soul has no sex, no country, no place, no time.

Second. Intense desire to know Truth and God. Be eager for ²³⁷ These lessons are composed of notes of class talks given by Swami Vivekananda to an intimate audience in the house of Mrs. Sara C. Bull, a devoted American disciple, and were preserved by her and finally printed in 1913 for private circulation--Ed.

1 them, long for them, as a drowning man longs for breath. Want only 2 God, take nothing else, let not "seeming" cheat you any longer. Turn 3 from all and seek only God.

4 Third. The six trainings: First--Restraining the mind from 5 going outward. Second--Restraining the senses. Third--Turning the 6 mind inward. Fourth--Suffering everything without murmuring.
7 Fifth--Fastening the mind to one idea. Take the subject before you 8 and think it out; never leave it. Do not count time. Sixth--Think 9 constantly of your real nature. Get rid of superstition. Do not 10 hypnotise yourself into a belief in your own inferiority. Day and 11 night tell yourself what you really are, until you realise (actually 12 realise) your oneness with God.

13 Without these disciplines, no results can be gained.

14 We can be conscious of the Absolute, but we can never 15 express It. The moment we try to express It, we limit It and It 16 ceases to be Absolute.

17 We have to go beyond sense limit and transcend even reason, 18 and we have the power to do this.

22 FIRST LESSON

23 This is a lesson seeking to bring out the individuality. Each 24 individuality must be cultivated. All will meet at the centre.
25 "Imagination is the door to inspiration and the basis of all thought."
26 All prophets, poets, and discoverers have had great imaginative 27 power. The explanation of nature is in us; the stone falls outside, 28 but gravitation is in us, not outside. Those who stuff themselves, 29 those who starve themselves, those who sleep too much, those who 30 sleep too little, cannot become Yogis. Ignorance, fickleness, 31 jealousy, laziness, and excessive attachment are the great enemies 32 to success in Yoga practice. The three great requisites are:

33 First. Purity, physical and mental; all uncleanness, all that 34 would draw the mind down, must be abandoned.

35 Second. Patience: At first there will be wonderful 36 manifestations, but they will all cease. This is the hardest period, 37 but hold fast; in the end the gain is sure if you have patience.

38 Third. Perseverance: Persevere through thick and thin, 39 through health and sickness, never miss a day in practice.

40 The best time for practice is the junction of day and night, the 41 calmest time in the tides of our bodies, the zero point between two 42 states. If this cannot be done, practise upon rising and going to bed.
43 Great personal cleanliness is necessary--a daily bath.

44 After bathing, sit down and hold the seat firm, that is, imagine 45 that you sit as firm as a rock, that nothing can move you. Hold the 46 head and shoulders and the hips in a straight line, keeping the 47 spinal column free; all action is along it, and it must not be 48 impaired.

1 Begin with your toes and think of each part of your body as 2 perfect; picture it so in your mind, touching each part if you prefer 3 to do so. Pass upward bit by bit until you reach the head, thinking of 4 each as perfect, lacking nothing. Then think of the whole as perfect, 5 an instrument given to you by God to enable you to attain Truth, the 6 vessel in which you are to cross the ocean and reach the shores of 7 eternal truth. When this has been done, take a long breath through 8 both nostrils, throw it out again, and then hold it out as long as you 9 comfortably can. Take four such breaths, then breathe naturally and 10 pray for illumination.

11 "I meditate on the glory of that being who created this 12 universe; may he illuminate my mind." Sit and meditate on this ten 13 or fifteen minutes.

14 Tell your experiences to no one but your Guru.

15 Talk as little as possible.

16 Keep your thoughts on virtue; what we think we tend to 17 become.

18 Holy meditation helps to burn out all mental impurities. All 19 who are not Yogis are slaves; bond after bond must be broken to 20 make us free.

21 All can find the reality beyond. If God is true, we must feel 22 him as a fact, and if there is a soul, we ought to be able to see it and 23 feel it.

24 The only way to find if there be a soul is to be something 25 which is not the body.

26 The Yogis class our organs under two chief heads: organs of 27 sense and organs of motion, or knowledge and action.

28 The internal organ or mind has four aspects. First--Manas, 29 the cogitating or thinking faculty, which is usually almost entirely 30 wasted, because uncontrolled; properly governed, it is a wonderful 31 power. Second--Buddhi, the will (sometimes called the intellect).
32 Third--Ahamkara, the self-conscious egotism (from Aham). Fourth-- 33 Chitta, the substance in and through which all the faculties act, the 34 floor of the mind as it were; or the sea in which the various faculties 35 are waves.

36 Yoga is the science by which we stop Chitta from assuming, 37 or becoming transformed into, several faculties. As the reflection of 38 the moon on the sea is broken or blurred by the waves, so is the 39 reflection of the Atman, the true Self, broken by the mental waves.
40 Only when the sea is stilled to mirror-like calmness, can the 41 reflection of the moon be seen, and only when the "mind-stuff", the 42 Chitta is controlled to absolute calmness, is the Self to be 43 recognised.

44 The mind is not the body, though it is matter in a finer form. It 45 is not eternally bound by the body. This is proved as we get 46 occasionally loosened from it. We can learn to do this at will by 47 controlling the senses.

48 When we can do that fully, we shall control the universe,

1 because our world is only what the senses bring us. Freedom is the 2 test of the higher being. Spiritual life begins when you have 3 loosened yourself from the control of the senses. He whose senses 4 rule him is worldly--is a slave.

5 If we could entirely stop our mind-stuff from breaking into 6 waves, it would put an end to our bodies. For millions of years we 7 have worked so hard to manufacture these bodies that in the 8 struggle we have forgotten our real purpose in getting them, which 9 was to become perfect. We have grown to think that body-making is 10 the end of our efforts. This is Maya. We must break this delusion 11 and return to our original aim and realise we are not the body, it is 12 our servant.

13 Learn to take the mind out and to see that it is separate from 14 the body. We endow the body with sensation and life and then think 15 it is alive and real. We have worn it so long that we forget that it is 16 not identical with us. Yoga is to help us put off our body when we 17 please and see it as our servant, our instrument, not our ruler.
18 Controlling the mental powers is the first great aim in Yoga 19 practices. The second is concentrating them in full force upon any 20 subject.

21 You cannot be a Yogi if you talk much.

23 SECOND LESSON

24 This Yoga is known as the eightfold Yoga, because it is divided 25 into eight principal parts. These are:

26 First--Yama. This is most important and has to govern the 27 whole life; it has five divisions:

28 1st. Not injuring any being by thought, word, or deed.

29 2nd. Non-covetousness in thought, word, or deed.

30 3rd. Perfect chastity in thought, word, or deed.

31 4th. Perfect truthfulness in thought, word, or deed.

32 5th. Non-receiving of gifts.

33 Second--Niyama. The bodily care, bathing daily, dietary, etc.

34 Third--Asana, posture. Hips, shoulders, and head must be 35 held straight, leaving the spine free.

36 Fourth--Pranayama, restraining the breath (in order to get 37 control of the Prana or vital force).

38 Fifth--Pratyahara, turning the mind inward and restraining it 39 from going outward, revolving the matter in the mind in order to 40 understand it.

41 Sixth--Dharana, concentration on one subject.

42 Seventh--Dhyana, meditation.

43 Eighth--Samadhi, illumination, the aim of all our efforts.

44 Yama and Niyama are for lifelong practice. As for the others,

1 we do as the leech does, not leave one blade of grass before firmly 2 grasping another. In other words, we have thoroughly to 3 understand and practise one step before taking another.

4 The subject of this lesson is Pranayama, or controlling the 5 Prana. In Raja-Yoga breathing enters the psychic plane and brings 6 us to the spiritual. It is the fly-wheel of the whole bodily system. It 7 acts first upon the lungs, the lungs act on the heart, the heart acts 8 upon the circulation, this in turn upon the brain, and the brain upon 9 the mind. The will can produce an outside sensation, and the 10 outside sensation can arouse the will. Our wills are weak; we do not 11 realise their power, we are so much bound up in matter. Most of our 12 action is from outside in. Outside nature throws us off our balance, 13 and we cannot (as we ought) throw nature off her balance. This is 14 all wrong; the stronger power is really within.

15 The great saints and teachers were those who had conquered 16 this world of thought within themselves and so spake with power.
17 The story²³⁸ of the minister confined in a high tower, who was 18 released through the efforts of his wife who brought him a beetle, 19 honey, a silken thread, a cord, and a rope, illustrates the way we 20 gain control of our mind by using first the physical regulation of the 21 breath as the silken thread. That enables us to lay hold on one 22 power after another until the rope of concentration delivers us from 23 the prison of the body and we are free. Reaching freedom, we can 24 discard the means used to bring us there.

25 Pranayama has three parts:

26 1st. Puraka--inhaling.

27 2nd. Kumbhaka--restraining.

28 3rd. Rechaka--exhaling.

29 There are two currents passing through the brain and 30 circulating down the sides of the spine, crossing at the base and 31 returning to the brain. One of these currents, called the "sun" 32 (Pingala), starts from the left hemisphere of the brain, crosses at 33 the base of the brain to the right side of the spine, and recrosses at 34 the base of the spine, like one-half of the figure eight.

35 The other current, the "moon" (Ida), reverses this action and 36 completes this figure eight. Of course, the lower part is much 37 longer than the upper. These currents flow day and night and make 38 deposits of the great life forces at different points, commonly 39 known as "plexuses"; but we are rarely conscious of them. By 40 concentration we can learn to feel them and trace them over all 41 parts of the body. These "sun" and "moon" currents are intimately 42 connected with breathing, and by regulating this we get control of 43 the body.

44 In the Katha Upanishad the body is described as the chariot, 45 the mind is the reins, the intellect is the charioteer, the senses are 46 the horses, and the objects of the senses their road. The self is the 47 rider, seated in the chariot. Unless the rider has understanding and ²³⁸ ?For the story see Complete Works of Swami Vivekananda, Vol. I, p. 143.

1 can make the charioteer control his horses, he can never attain the 2 goal; but the senses, like vicious steeds, will drag him where they 3 please and may even destroy him. These two currents are the great 4 "check rein" in the hands of the charioteer, and he must get control 5 of this to control the horses. We have to get the power to become 6 moral; until we do that, we cannot control our actions. Yoga alone 7 enables us to carry into practice the teachings of morality. To 8 become moral is the object of Yoga. All great teachers were Yogis 9 and controlled every current. The Yogis arrest these currents at the 10 base of the spine and force them through the centre of the spinal 11 column. They then become the current of knowledge, which only 12 exists in the Yogi.

13 Second Lesson in Breathing: One method is not for all. This 14 breathing must be done with rhythmic regularity, and the easiest 15 way is by counting; as that is purely mechanical, we repeat the 16 sacred word "Om" a certain number of times instead.

17 The process of Pranayama is as follows: Close the right 18 nostril with the thumb and then slowly inhale through the left 19 nostril, repeating the word "Om" four times.

20 Then firmly close both nostrils by placing the forefinger on 21 the left one and hold the breath in, mentally repeating "Om" eight 22 times.

23 Then, removing the thumb from the right nostril, exhale
24 slowly through that, repeating "Om" four times.

25 As you close the exhalation, draw in the abdomen forcibly to 26 expel all the air from the lungs. Then slowly inhale through the 27 right nostril, keeping the left one closed, repeating "Om" four times.
28 Next close the right nostril with the thumb and hold the breath 29 while repeating "Om" eight times. Then uncloze the left nostril and 30 slowly exhale, repeating "Om" four times, drawing in the abdomen 31 as before. Repeat this whole operation twice at each sitting, that is, 32 making four Pranayamas, two for each nostril. Before taking your 33 seat it is well to begin with prayer.

34 This needs to be practised a week; then gradually increase 35 the duration of breathing, keeping the same ratio, that is, if you 36 repeat "Om" six times at inhalation, then do the same at exhalation 37 and twelve times during Kumbhaka. These exercises will make us 38 more spiritual, more pure, more holy. Do not be led aside into any 39 byways or seek after power. Love is the only power that stays by us 40 and increases. He who seeks to come to God through Raja-Yoga 41 must be strong mentally, physically, morally, and spiritually. Take 42 every step in that light.

43 Of hundreds of thousands only one soul will say, "I will go 44 beyond, and I will penetrate to God." Few can face the truth; but to 45 accomplish anything, we must be willing to die for Truth.

46 47 THIRD LESSON

48 Kundalini: Realise the soul not as matter, but as it is. We are 49 thinking of the soul as body, but we must separate it from sense and

1 thought. Then alone can we know we are immortal. Change implies 2 the duality of cause and effect, and all that changes must be mortal.
3 This proves that the body cannot be immortal, nor can the mind,
4 because both are constantly changing. Only the unchangeable can 5 be immortal, because there is nothing to act upon it.

6 We do not become it, we are it; but we have to clear away the 7 veil of ignorance that hides the truth from us. The body is 8 objectified thought. The "sun" and "moon" currents bring energy to 9 all parts of the body. The surplus energy is stored at certain points 10 (plexuses) along the spinal column commonly known as nerve 11 centres.

12 These currents are not to be found in dead bodies and can 13 only be traced in a healthy organism.

14 The Yogi has an advantage; for he is able not only to feel 15 them, but actually to see them. They are luminous in his life, and so 16 are the great nerve centres.

17 There is conscious as well as unconscious action. The Yogis 18 possess a third kind, the superconscious, which in all countries and 19 in all ages has been the source of all religious knowledge. The 20 superconscious state makes no mistakes, but whereas the action of 21 the instinct would be purely mechanical, the former is beyond 22 consciousness.

23 It has been called inspiration, but the Yogi says, "This faculty 24 is in every human being, and eventually all will enjoy it."

25 We must give a new direction to the "sun" and "moon" 26 currents and open for them a new passage through the centre of 27 the spinal cord. When we succeed in bringing the currents through 28 this passage called "Sushumna", up to the brain, we are for the 29 time being separated entirely from the body.

30 The nerve centre at the base of the spine near the sacrum is 31 most important. It is the seat of the generative substance of the 32 sexual energy and is symbolised by the Yogi as a triangle containing 33 a tiny serpent coiled up in it. This sleeping serpent is called 34 Kundalini, and to raise this Kundalini is the whole object of Raja-35 Yoga.

36 The great sexual force, raised from animal action and sent 37 upward to the great dynamo of the human system, the brain, and 38 there stored up, becomes Ojas or spiritual force. All good thought, 39 all prayer, resolves a part of that animal energy into Ojas and helps 40 to give us spiritual power. This Ojas is the real man and in human 41 beings alone is it possible for this storage of Ojas to be 42 accomplished. One in whom the whole animal sex force has been 43 transformed into Ojas is a god. He speaks with power, and his 44 words regenerate the world.

45 The Yogi pictures this serpent as being slowly lifted from 46 stage to stage until the highest, the pineal gland, is reached. No 47 man or woman can be really spiritual until the sexual energy, the 48 highest power possessed by man, has been converted into Ojas.

49 No force can be created; it can only be directed. Therefore

1 we must learn to control the grand powers that are already in our 2 hands and by will power make them spiritual instead of merely 3 animal. Thus it is clearly seen that chastity is the corner-stone of all 4 morality and of all religion. In Raja-Yoga especially, absolute
5 chastity in thought, word, and deed is a sine qua non. The same 6 laws apply to the married and the single. If one wastes the most 7 potent forces of one's being, one cannot become spiritual.

8 All history teaches us that the great seers of all ages were 9 either monks and ascetics or those who had given up married life; 10 only the pure in life can see God.

11 Just before making the Pranayama, endeavour to visualise the 12 triangle. Close your eyes and picture it vividly in your imagination.
13 See it surrounded by flames and with the serpent coiled in the 14 middle. When you can clearly see the Kundalini, place it in 15 imagination at the base of the spine, and when restraining the 16 breath in Kumbhaka, throw it forcibly down on the head of the 17 serpent to awaken it. The more powerful the imagination, the more 18 quickly will the real result be attained and the Kundalini be 19 awakened. Until it does, imagine it does: try to feel the currents 20 and try to force them through the Sushumna. This hastens their 21 action.

23 FOURTH LESSON

24 Before we can control the mind we must study it.

25 We have to seize this unstable mind and drag it from its 26 wanderings and fix it on one idea. Over and over again this must be 27 done. By power of will we must get hold of the mind and make it 28 stop and reflect upon the glory of God.

29 The easiest way to get hold of the mind is to sit quiet and let 30 it drift where it will for a while. Hold fast to the idea, "I am the 31 witness watching my mind drifting. The mind is not I." Then see it 32 think as if it were a thing entirely apart from yourself. Identify 33 yourself with God, never with matter or with the mind.

34 Picture the mind as a calm lake stretched before you and the 35 thoughts that come and go as bubbles rising and breaking on its 36 surface. Make no effort to control the thoughts, but watch them and 37 follow them in imagination as they float away. This will gradually 38 lessen the circles. For the mind ranges over wide circles of thought 39 and those circles widen out into ever-increasing circles, as in a 40 pond when we throw a stone into it. We want to reverse the process 41 and starting with a huge circle make it narrower until at last we can 42 fix the mind on one point and make it stay there. Hold to the idea, "I 43 am not the mind, I see that I am thinking, I am watching my mind 44 act", and each day the identification of yourself with thought and 45 feeling will grow less, until at last you can entirely separate 46 yourself from the mind and actually know it to be apart from 47 yourself.

1 When this is done, the mind is your servant to control as you
2 will. The first stage of being a Yogi is to go beyond the senses.
3 When the mind is conquered, he has reached the highest stage.

4 Live alone as much as possible. The seat should be of 5 comfortable height; put first a grass mat, then a skin (fur), next a 6 silken cover. It is better that the seat has no back and it must stand 7 firm.

8 Thoughts being pictures, we should not create them. We have 9 to exclude all thought from the mind and make it a blank; as fast as 10 a thought comes we have to banish it. To be able to accomplish this, 11 we must transcend matter and go beyond our body. The whole life 12 of man is really an effort to do this.

13 Each soul has its own meaning: In our nature these two 14 things are connected.

15 The highest ideal we have is God. Meditate on Him. We 16 cannot know the Knower, but we are He.

17 Seeing evil, we are creating it. What we are, we see outside, 18 for the world is our mirror. This little body is a little mirror we have 19 created, but the whole universe is our body. We must think this all 20 the time; then we shall know that we cannot die or hurt another, 21 because he is our own. We are birthless and deathless and we 22 ought only to love.

23 "This whole universe is my body; all health, all happiness is 24 mine, because all is in the universe." Say, "I am the universe." We 25 finally learn that all action is from us to the mirror.

26 Although we appear as little waves, the whole sea is at our 27 back, and we are one with it. No wave can exist of itself.

28 Imagination properly employed is our greatest friend; it goes 29 beyond reason and is the only light that takes us everywhere.

30 Inspiration is from within and we have to inspire ourselves by 31 our own higher faculties.

32 33 FIFTH LESSON

34 Pratyahara and Dharana: Krishna says, "All who seek me by 35 whatever means will reach me", "All must reach me." Pratyahara is 36 a gathering toward, an attempt to get hold of the mind and focus it 37 on the desired object. The first step is to let the mind drift; watch it; 38 see what it thinks; be only the witness. Mind is not soul or spirit. It 39 is only matter in a finer form, and we own it and can learn to 40 manipulate it through the nerve energies.

41 The body is the objective view of what we call mind 42 (subjective). We, the Self, are beyond both body and mind; we are 43 "Atman", the eternal, unchangeable witness. The body is 44 crystallised thought.

45 When the breath is flowing through the left nostril, it is the 46 time for rest; when through the right, for work; and when through 47 both, the time to meditate. When we are calm and breathing equally

1 through both nostrils, we are in the right condition for quiet 2 meditation. It is no use trying to concentrate at first. Control of 3 thought will come of itself.

4 After sufficient practice of closing the nostrils with the thumb 5 and forefinger, we shall be able to do it by the power of will, 6 through thought alone.

7 Pranayama is now to be slightly changed. If the student has 8 the name of his "Ishta" (Chosen Ideal), he should use that instead of 9 "Om" during inhalation and exhalation, and use the word "Hum" 10 (pronounced Hoom) during Kumbhaka.

11 Throw the restrained breath forcibly down on the head of the 12 Kundalini at each repetition of the word Hum and imagine that this 13 awakens her. Identify yourself only with God. After a while thoughts 14 will announce their coming, and we shall learn the way they begin 15 and be aware of what we are going to think, just as on this plane we 16 can look out and see a person coming. This stage is reached when 17 we have learnt to separate ourselves from our minds and see 18 ourselves as one and thought as something apart. Do not let the 19 thoughts grasp you; stand aside, and they will die away.

20 Follow these holy thoughts; go with them; and when they melt 21 away, you will find the feet of the Omnipotent God. This is the 22 superconscious state; when the idea melts, follow it and melt with 23 it.

24 Haloes are symbols of inner light and can be seen by the Yogi.
25 Sometimes we may see a face as if surrounded by flames and in 26 them read the character and judge without erring. We may have 27 our Ishta come to us as a vision, and this symbol will be the one 28 upon which we can rest easily and fully concentrate our minds.

29 We can imagine through all the senses, but we do so mostly 30 through the eyes. Even imagination is half material. In other words, 31 we cannot think without a phantasm. But since animals appear to 32 think, yet have no words, it is probable that there is no inseparable 33 connection between thought and images.

34 Try to keep up the imagination in Yoga, being careful to keep 35 it pure and holy. We all have our peculiarities in the way of 36 imaginative power; follow the way most natural to you; it will be the 37 easiest.

38 We are the results of all reincarnations through Karma: "One 39 lamp lighted from another", says the Buddhist--different lamps, but 40 the same light.

41 Be cheerful, be brave, bathe daily, have patience, purity, and 42 perseverance, then you will become a Yogi in truth. Never try to 43 hurry, and if the higher powers come, remember that they are but 44 side-paths. Do not let them tempt you from the main road; put them 45 aside and hold fast to your only true aim--God. Seek only the 46 Eternal, finding which we are at rest for ever; having the all, 47 nothing is left to strive for, and we are for ever in free and perfect 48 existence--Existence absolute, Knowledge absolute, Bliss absolute.

1 SIXTH LESSON

2 Sushumna: It is very useful to meditate on the Sushumna. You
3 may have a vision of it come to you, and this is the best way. Then 4 meditate for a long time on that. It is a very fine, very brilliant 5 thread, this living passage through the spinal cord, this way of 6 salvation through which we have to make the Kundalini rise.

7 In the language of the Yogi, the Sushumna has its ends in two 8 lotuses, the lower lotus surrounding the triangle of the Kundalini 9 and the top one in the brain surrounding the pineal gland; between 10 these two are four other lotuses, stages on the way:

11 6th. Pineal Gland.

12 5th. Between the Eyes.

13 4th. Bottom of the Throat.

14 3rd. Level with the Heart.

15 2nd. Opposite the Navel.

16 1st. Base of Spine.

17 We must awaken the Kundalini, then slowly raise it from one 18 lotus to another till the brain is reached. Each stage corresponds to 19 a new layer of the mind.

WOMEN OF INDIA

(Delivered at the Shakespeare Club House, in Pasadena, California, on January 18, 1900)

Swami Vivekananda: "Some persons desire to ask questions about Hindu Philosophy before the lecture and to question in general about India after the lecture; but the chief difficulty is I do not know what I am to lecture on. I would be very glad to lecture on any subject, either on Hindu Philosophy or on anything concerning the race, its history, or its literature. If you, ladies and gentlemen, will suggest anything, I would be very glad."

Questioner: "I would like to ask, Swami, what special principle in Hindu Philosophy you would have us Americans, who are a very practical people, adopt, and what that would do for us beyond what Christianity can do."

Swami Vivekananda: "That is very difficult for me to decide; it rests upon you. If you find anything which you think you ought to adopt, and which will be helpful, you should take that. You see I am not a missionary, and I am not going about converting people to my idea. My principle is that all such ideas are good and great, so that some of your ideas may suit some people in India, and some of our ideas may suit some people here; so ideas must be cast abroad, all over the world."

Questioner: "We would like to know the result of your philosophy; has your philosophy and religion lifted your women above our women?"

Swami Vivekananda: "You see, that is a very invidious question: I like our women and your women too."

Questioner: "Well, will you tell us about your women, their customs and education, and the position they hold in the family?"

Swami Vivekananda: "Oh, yes, those things I would be very glad to tell you. So you want to know about Indian women tonight, and not philosophy and other things?"

The Lecture

I must begin by saying that you may have to bear with me a good deal, because I belong to an Order of people who never marry; so my knowledge of women in all their relations, as mother, as wife, as daughter and sister, must necessarily not be so complete as it may be with other men. And then, India, I must remember, is a vast continent, not merely a country, and is inhabited by many different races. The nations of Europe are nearer to each other, more similar to each other, than the races in India. You may get just a rough idea of it if I tell you that there are eight different languages in all India. Different languages--not dialects--each having a literature of its own. The Hindi language, alone, is spoken by 100,000,000 people; the Bengali by about 60,000,000, and so on. Then, again, the four northern Indian languages differ more from the southern Indian

1 languages than any two European languages from each other. They 2 are entirely different, as much different as your language differs 3 from the Japanese, so that you will be astonished to know, when I 4 go to southern India, unless I meet some people who can talk 5 Sanskrit, I have to speak to them in English. Furthermore, these 6 various races differ from each other in manners, customs, food, 7 dress, and in their methods of thought.

8 Then, again, there is caste. Each caste has become, as it
9 were, a separate racial element. If a man lives long enough in India, 10 he will be able to tell from the features what caste a man belongs 11 to. Then, between castes, the manners and customs are different.
12 And all these castes are exclusive; that is to say, they would meet 13 socially, but they would not eat or drink together, nor intermarry. In 14 those things they remain separate. They would meet and be friends 15 to each other, but there it would end.

16 Although I have more opportunity than many other men to 17 know women in general, from my position and my occupation as a 18 preacher, continuously travelling from one place to another and 19 coming in contact with all grades of society--(and women, even in 20 northern India, where they do not appear before men, in many 21 places would break this law for religion and would come to hear us 22 preach and talk to us)--still it would be hazardous on my part to 23 assert that I know everything about the women of India.

24 So I will try to place before you the ideal. In each nation, man 25 or woman represents an ideal consciously or unconsciously being 26 worked out. The individual is the external expression of an ideal to 27 be embodied. The collection of such individuals is the nation, which 28 also represents a great ideal; towards that it is moving. And, 29 therefore, it is rightly assumed that to understand a nation you 30 must first understand its ideal, for each nation refuses to be judged 31 by any other standard than its own.

32 All growth, progress, well-being, or degradation is but 33 relative. It refers to a certain standard, and each man to be 34 understood has to be referred to that standard of his perfection.
35 You see this more markedly in nations: what one nation thinks good 36 might not be so regarded by another nation. Cousin-marriage is 37 quite permissible in this country. Now, in India, it is illegal; not only 38 so, it would be classed with the most horrible incest. Widow-
39 marriage is perfectly legitimate in this country. Among the higher 40 castes in India it would be the greatest degradation for a woman to 41 marry twice. So, you see, we work through such different ideas that 42 to judge one people by the other's standard would be neither just 43 nor practicable. Therefore we must know what the ideal is that a 44 nation has raised before itself. When speaking of different nations, 45 we start with a general idea that there is one code of ethics and the 46 same kind of ideals for all races; practically, however, when we 47 come to judge of others, we think what is good for us must be good 48 for everybody; what we do is the right thing, what we do not do, of 49 course in others would be outrageous. I do not mean to say this as a 50 criticism, but just to bring the truth home. When I hear Western 51 women denounce the confining of the feet of Chinese ladies, they 52 never seem to think of the corsets which are doing far more injury

1 to the race. This is just one example; for you must know that 2 cramping the feet does not do one-millionth part of the injury to the 3 human form that the corset has done and is doing--when every 4 organ is displaced and the spine is curved like a serpent. When 5 measurements are taken, you can note the curvatures. I do not 6 mean that as a criticism but just to point out to you the situation, 7 that as you stand aghast at women of other races, thinking that you 8 are supreme, the very reason that they do not adopt your manners 9 and customs shows that they also stand aghast at you.

10 Therefore there is some misunderstanding on both sides.
11 There is a common platform, a common ground of understanding, a 12 common humanity, which must be the basis of our work. We ought 13 to find out that complete and perfect human nature which is 14 working only in parts, here and there. It has not been given to one 15 man to have everything in perfection. You have a part to play; I, in 16 my humble way, another; here is one who plays a little part; there, 17 another. The perfection is the combination of all these parts. Just as 18 with individuals, so with races. Each race has a part to play; each 19 race has one side of human nature to develop. And we have to take 20 all these together; and, possibly in the distant future, some race will 21 arise in which all these marvellous individual race perfections, 22 attained by the different races, will come together and form a new 23 race, the like of which the world has not yet dreamed. Beyond 24 saying that, I have no criticism to offer about anybody. I have 25 travelled not a little in my life; I have kept my eyes open; and the 26 more I go about the more my mouth is closed. I have no criticism to 27 offer.

28 Now, the ideal woman in India is the mother, the mother first, 29 and the mother last. The word woman calls up to the mind of the 30 Hindu, motherhood; and God is called Mother. As children, every 31 day, when we are boys, we have to go early in the morning with a 32 little cup of water and place it before the mother, and mother dips 33 her toe into it and we drink it.

34 In the West, the woman is wife. The idea of womanhood is 35 concentrated there--as the wife. To the ordinary man in India, the 36 whole force of womanhood is concentrated in motherhood. In the 37 Western home, the wife rules. In an Indian home, the mother rules.
38 If a mother comes into a Western home, she has to be subordinate 39 to the wife; to the wife belongs the home. A mother always lives in 40 our homes: the wife must be subordinate to her. See all the 41 difference of ideas.

42 Now, I only suggest comparisons; I would state facts so that 43 we may compare the two sides. Make this comparison. If you ask, 44 "What is an Indian woman as wife?", the Indian asks, "Where is the 45 American woman as mother? What is she, the all-glorious, who gave 46 me this body? What is she who kept me in her body for nine 47 months? Where is she who would give me twenty times her life, if I 48 had need? Where is she whose love never dies, however wicked, 49 however vile I am? Where is she, in comparison with her, who goes 50 to the divorce court the moment I treat her a little badly? O
51 American woman! where is she?" I will not find her in your country.
52 I have not found the son who thinks mother is first. When we die,

1 even then, we do not want our wives and our children to take her
2 place. Our mother!--we want to die with our head on her lap once 3 more, if we die before her. Where is she? Is woman a name to be 4 coupled with the physical body only? Ay! the Hindu mind fears all 5 those ideals which say that the flesh must cling unto the flesh. No, 6 no! Woman! thou shalt not be coupled with anything connected with 7 the flesh. The name has been called holy once and for ever, for what 8 name is there which no lust can ever approach, no carnality ever 9 come near, than the one word mother? That is the ideal in India.

10 I belong to an Order very much like what you have in the 11 Mendicant Friars of the Catholic Church; that is to say, we have to 12 go about without very much in the way of dress and beg from door 13 to door, live thereby, preach to people when they want it, sleep
14 where we can get a place--that way we have to follow. And the rule 15 is that the members of this Order have to call every woman 16 "mother"; to every woman and little girl we have to say "mother"; 17 that is the custom. Coming to the West, that old habit remained and 18 I would say to ladies, "Yes, mother", and they are horrified. I could 19 not understand why they should be horrified. Later on, I discovered 20 the reason: because that would mean that they are old. The ideal of 21 womanhood in India is motherhood--that marvellous, unselfish, all-22 suffering, ever-forgiving mother. The wife walks behind--the 23 shadow. She must imitate the life of the mother; that is her duty.
24 But the mother is the ideal of love; she rules the family, she 25 possesses the family. It is the father in India who thrashes the child 26 and spansks when there is something done by the child, and always 27 the mother puts herself between the father and the child. You see it 28 is just the opposite here. It has become the mother's business to 29 spank the children in this country, and poor father comes in 30 between. You see, ideals are different. I do not mean this as any 31 criticism. It is all good--this what you do; but our way is what we 32 have been taught for ages. You never hear of a mother cursing the 33 child; she is forgiving, always forgiving. Instead of "Our Father in 34 Heaven", we say "Mother" all the time; that idea and that word are 35 ever associated in the Hindu mind with Infinite Love, the mother's 36 love being the nearest approach to God's love in this mortal world 37 of ours. "Mother, O Mother, be merciful; I am wicked! Many 38 children have been wicked, but there never was a wicked mother"-- 39 so says the great saint Ramprasad.

40 There she is--the Hindu mother. The son's wife comes in as 41 her daughter; just as the mother's own daughter married and went 42 out, so her son married and brought in another daughter, and she 43 has to fall in line under the government of the queen of queens, of 44 his mother. Even I, who never married, belonging to an Order that 45 never marries, would be disgusted if my wife, supposing I had 46 married, dared to displease my mother. I would be disgusted. Why?
47 Do I not worship my mother? Why should not her daughter-in-law?
48 Whom I worship, why not she? Who is she, then, that would try to 49 ride over my head and govern my mother? She has to wait till her 50 womanhood is fulfilled; and the one thing that fulfils womanhood, 51 that is womanliness in woman, is motherhood. Wait till she becomes 52 a mother; then she will have the same right. That, according to the 1 Hindu mind, is the great mission of woman--to become a mother.

2 But oh, how different! Oh, how different! My father and mother
3 fasted and prayed, for years and years, so that I would be born.
4 They pray for every child before it is born. Says our great law-giver, 5 Manu, giving the definition of an Aryan, "He is the Aryan, who is 6 born through prayer". Every child not born through prayer is 7 illegitimate, according to the great law-giver. The child must be 8 prayed for. Those children that come with curses, that slip into the 9 world, just in a moment of inadvertence, because that could not be 10 prevented--what can we expect of such progeny? Mothers of 11 America, think of that! Think in the heart of your hearts, are you 12 ready to be women? Not any question of race or country, or that 13 false sentiment of national pride. Who dares to be proud in this 14 mortal life of ours, in this world of woes and miseries? What are we 15 before this infinite force of God? But I ask you the question tonight: 16 Do you all pray for the children to come? Are you thankful to be 17 mothers, or not? Do you think that you are sanctified by 18 motherhood, or not? Ask that of your minds. If you do not, your 19 marriage is a lie, your womanhood is false, your education is 20 superstition, and your children, if they come without prayer, will 21 prove a curse to humanity.

22 See the different ideals now coming before us. From 23 motherhood comes tremendous responsibility. There is the basis, 24 start from that. Well, why is mother to be worshipped so much?
25 Because our books teach that it is the pre-natal influence that gives 26 the impetus to the child for good or evil. Go to a hundred thousand 27 colleges, read a million books, associate with all the learned men of 28 the world--better off you are when born with the right stamp. You 29 are born for good or evil. The child is a born god or a born demon; 30 that is what the books say. Education and all these things come 31 afterwards--are a mere bagatelle. You are what you are born. Born 32 unhealthful, how many drug stores, swallowed wholesale, will keep 33 you well all through your life? How many people of good, healthy 34 lives were born of weak parents, were born of sickly, blood-35 poisoned parents? How many? None--none. We come with a 36 tremendous impetus for good or evil: born demons or born gods.
37 Education or other things are a bagatelle.

38 Thus say our books: direct the pre-natal influence. Why 39 should mother be worshipped? Because she made herself pure. She 40 underwent harsh penances sometimes to keep herself as pure as 41 purity can be. For, mind you, no woman in India thinks of giving up 42 her body to any man; it is her own. The English, as a reform, have 43 introduced at present what they call "Restitution of conjugal 44 rights", but no Indian would take advantage of it. When a man 45 comes in physical contact with his wife, the circumstances she 46 controls through what prayers and through what vows! For that 47 which brings forth the child is the holiest symbol of God himself. It 48 is the greatest prayer between man and wife, the prayer that is 49 going to bring into the world another soul fraught with a 50 tremendous power for good or for evil. Is it a joke? Is it a simple 51 nervous satisfaction? Is it a brute enjoyment of the body? Says the 52 Hindu: no, a thousand times, no!

1 But then, following that, there comes in another idea. The 2 idea we started with was that the ideal is the love for the mother-- 3 herself all-suffering, all-forbearing. The worship that is accorded to 4 the mother has its fountain-head there. She was a saint to bring me 5 into the world; she kept her body pure, her mind pure, her food
6 pure, her clothes pure, her imagination pure, for years, because I 7 would be born. Because she did that, she deserves worship. And 8 what follows? Linked with motherhood is wifehood.

9 You Western people are individualistic. I want to do this thing
10 because I like it; I will elbow every one. Why? Because I like to. I 11 want my own satisfaction, so I marry this woman. Why? Because I 12 like her. This woman marries me. Why? Because she likes me.
13 There it ends. She and I are the only two persons in the whole, 14 infinite world; and I marry her and she marries me--nobody else is 15 injured, nobody else responsible.

16 Your Johns and your Janes may go into the forest and there 17 they may live their lives; but when they have to live in society, their 18 marriage means a tremendous amount of good or evil to us. Their 19 children may be veritable demons--burning, murdering, robbing, 20 stealing, drinking, hideous, vile.

21 So what is the basis of the Indian's social order? It is the 22 caste law. I am born for the caste, I live for the caste. I do not mean 23 myself, because, having joined an Order, we are outside. I mean 24 those that live in civil society. Born in the caste, the whole life must 25 be lived according to caste regulation. In other words, in the 26 present-day language of your country, the Western man is born 27 individualistic, while the Hindu is socialistic--entirely socialistic.
28 Now, then, the books say: if I allow you freedom to go about and 29 marry any woman you like, and the woman to marry any man she 30 likes, what happens? You fall in love; the father of the woman was, 31 perchance, a lunatic or a consumptive. The girl falls in love with the 32 face of a man whose father was a roaring drunkard. What says the 33 law then? The law lays down that all these marriages would be 34 illegal. The children of drunkards, consumptives, lunatics, etc., shall 35 not be married. The deformed, humpbacked, crazy, idiotic--no 36 marriage for them, absolutely none, says the law.

37 But the Mohammedan comes from Arabia, and he has his own
38 Arabian law; so the Arabian desert law has been forced upon us.
39 The Englishman comes with his law; he forces it upon us, so far as 40 he can. We are conquered. He says, "Tomorrow I will marry your 41 sister". What can we do? Our law says, those that are born of the 42 same family, though a hundred degrees distant, must not marry, 43 that is illegitimate, it would deteriorate or make the race sterile.
44 That must not be, and there it stops. So I have no voice in my 45 marriage, nor my sister. It is the caste that determines all that.

46 We are married sometimes when children. Why? Because the 47 caste says: if they have to be married anyway without their consent, 48 it is better that they are married very early, before they have 49 developed this love: if they are allowed to grow up apart, the boy 50 may like some other girl, and the girl some other boy, and then 51 something evil will happen; and so, says the caste, stop it there. I

1 do not care whether my sister is deformed, or good-looking, or bad-2 looking: she is my sister, and that is enough; he is my brother, and 3 that is all I need to know. So they will love each other. You may say, 4 "Oh! they lose a great deal of enjoyment--those exquisite emotions 5 of a man falling in love with a woman and a woman falling in love 6 with a man. This is a sort of tame thing, loving each other like 7 brothers and sisters, as though they have to." So be it; but the 8 Hindu says, "We are socialistic. For the sake of one man's or 9 woman's exquisite pleasure we do not want to load misery on 10 hundreds of others."

11 There they are--married. The wife comes home with her 12 husband; that is called the second marriage. Marriage at an early 13 age is considered the first marriage, and they grow up separately 14 with women and with their parents. When they are grown, there is 15 a second ceremony performed, called a second marriage. And then 16 they live together, but under the same roof with his mother and 17 father. When she becomes a mother, she takes her place in turn as 18 queen of the family group.

19 Now comes another peculiar Indian institution. I have just 20 told you that in the first two or three castes the widows are not 21 allowed to marry. They cannot, even if they would. Of course, it is a 22 hardship on many. There is no denying that not all the widows like it 23 very much, because non-marrying entails upon them the life of a 24 student. That is to say, a student must not eat meat or fish, nor 25 drink wine, nor dress except in white clothes, and so on; there are 26 many regulations. We are a nation of monks--always making 27 penance, and we like it. Now, you see, a woman never drinks wine 28 or eats meat. It was a hardship on us when we were students, but 29 not on the girls. Our women would feel degraded at the idea of 30 eating meat. Men eat meat sometimes in some castes; women 31 never. Still, not being allowed to marry must be a hardship to many; 32 I am sure of that.

33 But we must go back to the idea; they are intensely 34 socialistic. In the higher castes of every country you will find the 35 statistics show that the number of women is always much larger 36 than the number of men. Why? Because in the higher castes, for 37 generation after generation, the women lead an easy life. They 38 "neither toil nor spin, yet Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed 39 like one of them". And the poor boys, they die like flies. The girl has 40 a cat's nine lives, they say in India. You will read in the statistics 41 that they outnumber the boys in a very short time, except now when 42 they are taking to work quite as hard as the boys. The number of 43 girls in the higher castes is much larger than in the lower.
44 Conditions are quite opposite in the lower castes. There they all 45 work hard; women a little harder, sometimes, because they have to 46 do the domestic work. But, mind you, I never would have thought of 47 that, but one of your American travellers, Mark Twain, writes this 48 about India: "In spite of all that Western critics have said of Hindu 49 customs, I never saw a woman harnessed to a plough with a cow or 50 to a cart with a dog, as is done in some European countries. I saw 51 no woman or girl at work in the fields in India. On both sides and 52 ahead (of the railway train) brown-bodied naked men and boys are

1 ploughing in the fields. But not a woman. In these two hours I have 2 not seen a woman or a girl working in the fields. In India, even the 3 lowest caste never does any hard work. They generally have an 4 easy lot compared to the same class in other nations; and as to 5 ploughing, they never do it."

6 Now, there you are. Among the lower classes the number of 7 men is larger than the number of women; and what would you 8 naturally expect? A woman gets more chances of marriage, the 9 number of men being larger.

10 Relative to such questions as to widows not marrying: among 11 the first two castes, the number of women is disproportionately 12 large, and here is a dilemma. Either you have a non-marriageable 13 widow problem and misery, or the non-husband-getting young lady 14 problem. To face the widow problem, or the old maid problem?
15 There you are; either of the two. Now, go back again to the idea 16 that the Indian mind is socialistic. It says, "Now look here! we take 17 the widow problem as the lesser one." Why? "Because they have 18 had their chance; they have been married. If they have lost their 19 chance, at any rate they have had one. Sit down, be quiet, and 20 consider these poor girls--they have not had one chance of 21 marriage." Lord bless you! I remember once in Oxford Street, it 22 was after ten o'clock, and all those ladies coming there, hundreds 23 and thousands of them shopping; and some man, an American, 24 looks around, and he says, "My Lord! how many of them will ever 25 get husbands, I wonder!" So the Indian mind said to the widows, 26 "Well, you have had your chance, and now we are very, very sorry 27 that such mishaps have come to you, but we cannot help it; others 28 are waiting."

29 Then religion comes into the question; the Hindu religion 30 comes in as a comfort. For, mind you, our religion teaches that 31 marriage is something bad, it is only for the weak. The very 32 spiritual man or woman would not marry at all. So the religious 33 woman says, "Well, the Lord has given me a better chance. What is 34 the use of marrying? Thank God, worship God, what is the use of 35 my loving man?" Of course, all of them cannot put their mind on 36 God. Some find it simply impossible. They have to suffer; but the 37 other poor people, they should not suffer for them. Now I leave this 38 to your judgment; but that is their idea in India.

39 Next we come to woman as daughter. The great difficulty in 40 the Indian household is the daughter. The daughter and caste 41 combined ruin the poor Hindu, because, you see, she must marry in 42 the same caste, and even inside the caste exactly in the same order; 43 and so the poor man sometimes has to make himself a beggar to get 44 his daughter married. The father of the boy demands a very high 45 price for his son, and this poor man sometimes has to sell 46 everything just to get a husband for his daughter. The great 47 difficulty of the Hindu's life is the daughter. And, curiously enough, 48 the word daughter in Sanskrit is "duhita". The real derivation is 49 that, in ancient times, the daughter of the family was accustomed to 50 milk the cows, and so the word "duhita" comes from "duh", to milk; 51 and the word "daughter" really means a milkmaid. Later on, they 52 found a new meaning to that word "duhita", the milkmaid--she who

1 milks away all the milk of the family. That is the second meaning.

2 These are the different relations held by our Indian women.
3 As I have told you, the mother is the greatest in position, the wife is 4 next, and the daughter comes after them. It is a most intricate and 5 complicated series of gradation. No foreigner can understand it, 6 even if he lives there for years. For instance, we have three forms 7 of the personal pronoun; they are a sort of verbs in our language.
8 One is very respectful, one is middling, and the lowest is just like 9 thou and thee. To children and servants the last is addressed. The 10 middling one is used with equals. You see, these are to be applied in 11 all the intricate relations of life. For example, to my elder sister I 12 always throughout my life use the pronoun apani, but she never 13 does in speaking to me; she says tumi to me. She should not, even 14 by mistake, say apani to me, because that would mean a curse.
15 Love, the love toward those that are superior, should always be 16 expressed in that form of language. That is the custom. Similarly I 17 would never dare address my elder sister or elder brother, much 18 less my mother or father, as tu or tum or tumi. As to calling our 19 mother and father by name, why, we would never do that. Before I 20 knew the customs of this country, I received such a shock when the 21 son, in a very refined family, got up and called the mother by name!
22 However, I got used to that. That is the custom of the country. But 23 with us, we never pronounce the name of our parents when they 24 are present. It is always in the third person plural, even before 25 them.

26 Thus we see the most complicated mesh-work in the social 27 life of our men and our women and in our degree of relationship.
28 We do not speak to our wives before our elders; it is only when we 29 are alone or when inferiors are present. If I were married, I would 30 speak to my wife before my younger sister, my nephews or nieces;
31 but not before my elder sister or parents. I cannot talk to my sisters 32 about their husbands at all. The idea is, we are a monastic race.
33 The whole social organisation has that one idea before it. Marriage 34 is thought of as something impure, something lower. Therefore the 35 subject of love would never be talked of. I cannot read a novel 36 before my sister, or my brothers, or my mother, or even before 37 others. I close the book.

38 Then again, eating and drinking is all in the same category.
39 We do not eat before superiors. Our women never eat before men, 40 except they be the children or inferiors. The wife would die rather 41 than, as she says, "munch" before her husband. Sometimes, for 42 instance, brothers and sisters may eat together; and if I and my 43 sister are eating, and the husband comes to the door, my sister 44 stops, and the poor husband flies out.

45 These are the customs peculiar to the country. A few of these 46 I note in different countries also. As I never married myself, I am 47 not perfect in all my knowledge about the wife. Mother, sisters--I 48 know what they are; and other people's wives I saw; from that I 49 gather what I have told you.

50 As to education and culture, it all depends upon the man.
51 That is to say, where the men are highly cultured, there the women

1 are; where the men are not, women are not. Now, from the oldest 2 times, you know, the primary education, according to the old Hindu
3 customs, belongs to the village system. All the land from time 4 immemorial was nationalised, as you say--belonged to the 5 Government. There never is any private right in land. The revenue 6 in India comes from the land, because every man holds so much 7 land from the Government. This land is held in common by a 8 community, it may be five, ten, twenty, or a hundred families. They 9 govern the whole of the land, pay a certain amount of revenue to 10 the Government, maintain a physician, a village schoolmaster, and 11 so on.

12 Those of you who have read Herbert Spencer remember what 13 he calls the "monastery system" of education that was tried in 14 Europe and which in some parts proved a success; that is, there is 15 one schoolmaster, whom the village keeps. These primary schools 16 are very rudimentary, because our methods are so simple. Each boy 17 brings a little mat; and his paper, to begin with, is palm leaves. Palm 18 leaves first, paper is too costly. Each boy spreads his little mat and 19 sits upon it, brings out his inkstand and his books and begins to 20 write. A little arithmetic, some Sanskrit grammar, a little of 21 language and accounts--these are taught in the primary school.

22 A little book on ethics, taught by an old man, we learnt by 23 heart, and I remember one of the lessons:

24 "For the good of a village, a man ought to give up his family;

25 For the good of a country, he ought to give up his village;

26 For the good of humanity, he may give up his country;

27 For the good of the world, everything."

28 Such verses are there in the books. We get them by heart, 29 and they are explained by teacher and pupil. These things we learn, 30 both boys and girls together. Later on, the education differs. The old 31 Sanskrit universities are mainly composed of boys. The girls very 32 rarely go up to those universities; but there are a few exceptions.

33 In these modern days there is a greater impetus towards 34 higher education on the European lines, and the trend of opinion is 35 strong towards women getting this higher education. Of course, 36 there are some people in India who do not want it, but those who do 37 want it carried the day. It is a strange fact that Oxford and 38 Cambridge are closed to women today, so are Harvard and Yale; but 39 Calcutta University opened its doors to women more than twenty 40 years ago. I remember that the year I graduated, several girls came 41 out and graduated--the same standard, the same course, the same 42 in everything as the boys; and they did very well indeed. And our 43 religion does not prevent a woman being educated at all. In this 44 way the girl should be educated; even thus she should be trained; 45 and in the old books we find that the universities were equally 46 resorted to by both girls and boys, but later the education of the 47 whole nation was neglected. What can you expect under foreign 48 rule? The foreign conqueror is not there to do good to us; he wants 49 his money. I studied hard for twelve years and became a graduate 50 of Calcutta University; now I can scarcely make $5.00 a month in

1 my country. Would you believe it? It is actually a fact. So these 2 educational institutions of foreigners are simply to get a lot of 3 useful, practical slaves for a little money--to turn out a host of 4 clerks, postmasters, telegraph operators, and so on. There it is.

5 As a result, education for both boys and girls is neglected, 6 entirely neglected. There are a great many things that should be 7 done in that land; but you must always remember, if you will kindly 8 excuse me and permit me to use one of your own proverbs, "What is 9 sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander." Your foreign born 10 ladies are always crying over the hardships of the Hindu woman, 11 and never care for the hardships of the Hindu man. They are all 12 weeping salt tears. But who are the little girls married to? Some 13 one, when told that they are all married to old men, asked, "And 14 what do the young men do? What! are all the girls married to old 15 men, only to old men?" We are born old--perhaps all the men there.

16 The ideal of the Indian race is freedom of the soul. This world 17 is nothing. It is a vision, a dream. This life is one of many millions 18 like it. The whole of this nature is Maya, is phantasm, a pest house 19 of phantasms. That is the philosophy. Babies smile at life and think 20 it so beautiful and good, but in a few years they will have to revert 21 to where they began. They began life crying, and they will leave it 22 crying. Nations in the vigour of their youth think that they can do 23 anything and everything: "We are the gods of the earth. We are the 24 chosen people." They think that God Almighty has given them a 25 charter to rule over all the world, to advance His plans, to do 26 anything they like, to turn the world upside down. They have a 27 charter to rob, murder, kill; God has given them this, and they do 28 that because they are only babes. So empire after empire has 29 arisen--glorious, resplendent--now vanished away--gone, nobody 30 knows where; it may have been stupendous in its ruin.

31 As a drop of water upon a lotus leaf tumbles about and falls in 32 a moment, even so is this mortal life. Everywhere we turn are ruins.
33 Where the forest stands today was once the mighty empire with 34 huge cities. That is the dominant idea, the tone, the colour of the 35 Indian mind. We know, you Western people have the youthful blood 36 coursing through your veins. We know that nations, like men, have 37 their day. Where is Greece? Where is Rome? Where that mighty 38 Spaniard of the other day? Who knows through it all what becomes 39 of India? Thus they are born, and thus they die; they rise and fall.
40 The Hindu as a child knows of the Mogul invader whose cohorts no 41 power on earth could stop, who has left in your language the 42 terrible word "Tartar". The Hindu has learnt his lesson. He does not 43 want to prattle, like the babes of today. Western people, say what 44 you have to say. This is your day. Onward, go on, babes; have your 45 prattle out. This is the day of the babies, to prattle. We have learnt 46 our lesson and are quiet. You have a little wealth today, and you 47 look down upon us. Well, this is your day. Prattle, babes, prattle-- 48 this is the Hindu's attitude.

49 The Lord of Lords is not to be attained by much frothy
50 speech. The Lord of Lords is not to be attained even by the powers 51 of the intellect. He is not gained by much power of conquest. That 52 man who knows the secret source of things and that everything else

1 is evanescent, unto him He, the Lord, comes; unto none else. India 2 has learnt her lesson through ages and ages of experience. She has 3 turned her face towards Him. She has made many mistakes; loads 4 and loads of rubbish are heaped upon the race. Never mind; what 5 of that? What is the clearing of rubbish, the cleaning of cities, and 6 all that? Does that give life? Those that have fine institutions, they 7 die. And what of institutions, those tinplate Western institutions, 8 made in five days and broken on the sixth? One of these little 9 handful nations cannot keep alive for two centuries together. And 10 our institutions have stood the test of ages. Says the Hindu, "Yes, 11 we have buried all the old nations of the earth and stand here to 12 bury all the new races also, because our ideal is not this world, but 13 the other. Just as your ideal is, so shall you be. If your ideal is 14 mortal, if your ideal is of this earth, so shalt thou be. If your ideal is 15 matter, matter shalt thou be. Behold! Our ideal is the Spirit. That 16 alone exists, nothing else exists; and like Him, we live for ever."

MY LIFE AND MISSION

(Delivered at the Shakespeare Club of Pasadena, California, on January 27, 1900)

Now, ladies and gentlemen, the subject for this morning was to have been the Vedanta Philosophy. That subject itself is interesting, but rather dry and very vast.

Meanwhile, I have been asked by your president and some of the ladies and gentlemen here to tell them something about my work and what I have been doing. It may be interesting to some here, but not so much so to me. In fact, I do not quite know how to tell it to you, for this will have been the first time in my life that I have spoken on that subject.

Now, to understand what I have been trying to do, in my small way, I will take you, in imagination, to India. We have not time to go into all the details and all the ramifications of the subject; nor is it possible for you to understand all the complexities in a foreign race in this short time. Suffice it to say, I will at least try to give you a little picture of what India is like.

It is like a gigantic building all tumbled down in ruins. At first sight, then, there is little hope. It is a nation gone and ruined. But you wait and study, then you see something beyond that. The truth is that so long as the principle, the ideal, of which the outer man is the expression, is not hurt or destroyed, the man lives, and there is hope for that man. If your coat is stolen twenty times, that is no reason why you should be destroyed. You can get a new coat. The coat is unessential. The fact that a rich man is robbed does not hurt the vitality of the man, does not mean death. The man will survive.

Standing on this principle, we look in and we see--what? India is no longer a political power; it is an enslaved race. Indians have no say, no voice in their own government; they are three hundred millions of slaves--nothing more! The average income of a man in India is two shillings a month. The common state of the vast mass of the people is starvation, so that, with the least decrease in income, millions die. A little famine means death. So there, too, when I look on that side of India, I see ruin--hopeless ruin.

But we find that the Indian race never stood for wealth. Although they acquired immense wealth, perhaps more than any other nation ever acquired, yet the nation did not stand for wealth. It was a powerful race for ages, yet we find that that nation never stood for power, never went out of the country to conquer. Quite content within their own boundaries, they never fought anybody. The Indian nation never stood for imperial glory. Wealth and power, then, were not the ideals of the race.

What then? Whether they were wrong or right--that is not the question we discuss--that nation, among all the children of men, has believed, and believed intensely, that this life is not real. The real is God; and they must cling unto that God through thick and thin. In the midst of their degradation, religion came first. The Hindu man

1 drinks religiously, sleeps religiously, walks religiously, marries 2 religiously, robs religiously.

3 Did you ever see such a country? If you want to get up a gang 4 of robbers, the leader will have to preach some sort of religion, 5 then formulate some bogus metaphysics, and say that this method
6 is the clearest and quickest way to get God. Then he finds a 7 following, otherwise not. That shows that the vitality of the race, 8 the mission of the race is religion; and because that has not been 9 touched, therefore that race lives.

10 See Rome. Rome's mission was imperial power, expansion.
11 And so soon as that was touched, Rome fell to pieces, passed out.
12 The mission of Greece was intellect, as soon as that was touched, 13 why, Greece passed out. So in modern times, Spain and all these 14 modern countries. Each nation has a mission for the world. So long 15 as that mission is not hurt, that nation lives, despite every difficulty.
16 But as soon as its mission is destroyed, the nation collapses.

17 Now, that vitality of India has not been touched yet. They 18 have not given up that, and it is still strong--in spite of all their 19 superstitions. Hideous superstitions are there, most revolting some 20 of them. Never mind. The national life-current is still there--the 21 mission of the race.

22 The Indian nation never will be a powerful conquering 23 people--never. They will never be a great political power; that is not 24 their business, that is not the note India has to play in the great 25 harmony of nations. But what has she to play? God, and God alone.
26 She clings unto that like grim death. Still there is hope there.

27 So, then, after your analysis, you come to the conclusion that 28 all these things, all this poverty and misery, are of no consequence-- 29 the man is living still, and therefore there is hope.

30 Well! You see religious activities going on all through the 31 country. I do not recall a year that has not given birth to several 32 new sects in India. The stronger the current, the more the 33 whirlpools and eddies. Sects are not signs of decay, they are a sign 34 of life. Let sects multiply, till the time comes when every one of us is 35 a sect, each individual. We need not quarrel about that.

36 Now, take your country. (I do not mean any criticism). Here 37 the social laws, the political formation--everything is made to 38 facilitate man's journey in this life. He may live very happily so long 39 as he is on this earth. Look at your streets--how clean! Your 40 beautiful cities! And in how many ways a man can make money!
41 How many channels to get enjoyment in this life! But, if a man here 42 should say, "Now look here, I shall sit down under this tree and 43 meditate; I do not want to work", why, he would have to go to jail.
44 See! There would be no chance for him at all. None. A man can live 45 in this society only if he falls in line. He has to join in this rush for 46 the enjoyment of good in this life, or he dies.

47 Now let us go back to India. There, if a man says, "I shall go 48 and sit on the top of that mountain and look at the tip of my nose all 49 the rest of my days", everybody says, "Go, and Godspeed to you!" 50 He need not speak a word. Somebody brings him a little cloth, and

1 he is all right. But if a man says, "Behold, I am going to enjoy a little 2 of this life", every door is closed to him.

3 I say that the ideas of both countries are unjust. I see no 4 reason why a man here should not sit down and look at the tip of his 5 nose if he likes. Why should everybody here do just what the 6 majority does? I see no reason.

7 Nor why, in India, a man should not have the goods of this life 8 and make money. But you see how those vast millions are forced to 9 accept the opposite point of view by tyranny. This is the tyranny of 10 the sages. This is the tyranny of the great, tyranny of the spiritual, 11 tyranny of the intellectual, tyranny of the wise. And the tyranny of 12 the wise, mind you, is much more powerful than the tyranny of the 13 ignorant. The wise, the intellectual, when they take to forcing their 14 opinions upon others, know a hundred thousand ways to make 15 bonds and barriers which it is not in the power of the ignorant to 16 break.

17 Now, I say that this thing has got to stop. There is no use in 18 sacrificing millions and millions of people to produce one spiritual 19 giant. If it is possible to make a society where the spiritual giant 20 will be produced and all the rest of the people will be happy as well, 21 that is good; but if the millions have to be ground down, that is 22 unjust. Better that the one great man should suffer for the salvation 23 of the world.

24 In every nation you will have to work through their methods.
25 To every man you will have to speak in his own language. Now, in 26 England or in America, if you want to preach religion to them, you 27 will have to work through political methods--make organisations, 28 societies, with voting, balloting, a president, and so on, because 29 that is the language, the method of the Western race. On the other 30 hand, if you want to speak of politics in India, you must speak 31 through the language of religion. You will have to tell them 32 something like this: "The man who cleans his house every morning 33 will acquire such and such an amount of merit, he will go to heaven, 34 or he comes to God." Unless you put it that way, they will not listen 35 to you. It is a question of language. The thing done is the same. But 36 with every race, you will have to speak their language in order to 37 reach their hearts. And that is quite just. We need not fret about 38 that.

39 In the Order to which I belong we are called Sannyasins. The 40 word means "a man who has renounced". This is a very, very, very 41 ancient Order. Even Buddha, who was 560 years before Christ, 42 belonged to that Order. He was one of the reformers of his Order.
43 That was all. So ancient! You find it mentioned away back in the 44 Vedas, the oldest book in the world. In old India there was the 45 regulation that every man and woman, towards the end of their 46 lives, must get out of social life altogether and think of nothing 47 except God and their own salvation. This was to get ready for the 48 great event--death. So old people used to become Sannyasins in 49 those early days. Later on, young people began to give up the 50 world. And young people are active. They could not sit down under 51 a tree and think all the time of their own death, so they went about

1 preaching and starting sects, and so on. Thus, Buddha, being 2 young, started that great reform. Had he been an old man, he 3 would have looked at the tip of his nose and died quietly.

4 The Order is not a church, and the people who join the Order
5 are not priests. There is an absolute difference between the priests
6 and the Sannyasins. In India, priesthood, like every other business 7 in a social life, is a hereditary profession. A priest's son will become 8 a priest, just as a carpenter's son will be a carpenter, or a 9 blacksmith's son a blacksmith. The priest must always be married.
10 The Hindu does not think a man is complete unless he has a wife.
11 An unmarried man has no right to perform religious ceremonies.

12 The Sannyasins do not possess property, and they do not 13 marry. Beyond that there is no organisation. The only bond that is 14 there is the bond between the teacher and the taught--and that is 15 peculiar to India. The teacher is not a man who comes just to teach 16 me, and I pay him so much, and there it ends. In India it is really 17 like an adoption. The teacher is more than my own father, and I am 18 truly his child, his son in every respect. I owe him obedience and 19 reverence first, before my own father even; because, they say, the 20 father gave me this body, but he showed me the way to salvation, 21 he is greater than father. And we carry this love, this respect for 22 our teacher all our lives. And that is the only organisation that 23 exists. I adopt my disciples. Sometimes the teacher will be a young 24 man and the disciple a very old man. But never mind, he is the son, 25 and he calls me "Father", and I have to address him as my son, my 26 daughter, and so on.

27 Now, I happened to get an old man to teach me, and he was 28 very peculiar. He did not go much for intellectual scholarship, 29 scarcely studied books; but when he was a boy he was seized with 30 the tremendous idea of getting truth direct. First he tried by 31 studying his own religion. Then he got the idea that he must get the 32 truth of other religions; and with that idea he joined all the sects, 33 one after another. For the time being he did exactly what they told 34 him to do--lived with the devotees of these different sects in turn, 35 until interpenetrated with the particular ideal of that sect. After a 36 few years he would go to another sect. When he had gone through 37 with all that, he came to the conclusion that they were all good. He 38 had no criticism to offer to any one; they are all so many paths 39 leading to the same goal. And then he said, "That is a glorious 40 thing, that there should be so many paths, because if there were 41 only one path, perhaps it would suit only an individual man. The 42 more the number of paths, the more the chance for every one of us 43 to know the truth. If I cannot be taught in one language, I will try 44 another, and so on". Thus his benediction was for every religion.

45 Now, all the ideas that I preach are only an attempt to echo
46 his ideas. Nothing is mine originally except the wicked ones, 47 everything I say which is false and wicked. But every word that I 48 have ever uttered which is true and good is simply an attempt to 49 echo his voice. Read his life by Prof. Max Muller.²³⁹

1 Well, there at his feet I conceived these ideas--there with 2 some other young men. I was just a boy. I went there when I was 3 about sixteen. Some of the other boys were still younger, some a 4 little older--about a dozen or more. And together we conceived that 5 this ideal had to be spread. And not only spread, but made 6 practical. That is to say, we must show the spirituality of the 7 Hindus, the mercifulness of the Buddhists, the activity of the 8 Christians, the brotherhood of the Mohammedans, by our practical 9 lives. "We shall start a universal religion now and here," we said, 10 "we will not wait".

11 Our teacher was an old man who would never touch a coin 12 with his hands. He took just the little food offered, just so many 13 yards of cotton cloth, no more. He could never be induced to take 14 any other gift. With all these marvellous ideas, he was strict, 15 because that made him free. The monk in India is the friend of the 16 prince today, dines with him; and tomorrow he is with the beggar, 17 sleeps under a tree. He must come into contact with everyone, must 18 always move about. As the saying is, "The rolling stone gathers no 19 moss". The last fourteen years of my life, I have never been for 20 three months at a time in any one place--continually rolling. So do 21 we all.

22 Now, this handful of boys got hold of these ideas, and all the 23 practical results that sprang out of these ideas. Universal religion, 24 great sympathy for the poor, and all that are very good in theory, 25 but one must practise.

26 Then came the sad day when our old teacher died. We nursed 27 him the best we could. We had no friends. Who would listen to a 28 few boys, with their crank notions? Nobody. At least, in India, boys 29 are nobodies. Just think of it--a dozen boys, telling people vast, big 30 ideas, saying they are determined to work these ideas out in life.
31 Why, everybody laughed. From laughter it became serious; it 32 became persecution. Why, the parents of the boys came to feel like 33 spanking every one of us. And the more we were derided, the more 34 determined we became.

35 Then came a terrible time--for me personally and for all the 36 other boys as well. But to me came such misfortune! On the one 37 side was my mother, my brothers. My father died at that time, and 38 we were left poor. Oh, very poor, almost starving all the time! I was 39 the only hope of the family, the only one who could do anything to 40 help them. I had to stand between my two worlds. On the one hand, 41 I would have to see my mother and brothers starve unto death; on 42 the other, I had believed that this man's ideas were for the good of 43 India and the world, and had to be preached and worked out. And 44 so the fight went on in my mind for days and months. Sometimes I 45 would pray for five or six days and nights together without 46 stopping. Oh, the agony of those days! I was living in hell! The 47 natural affections of my boy's heart drawing me to my family--I 48 could not bear to see those who were the nearest and dearest to me 49 suffering. On the other hand, nobody to sympathise with me. Who 50 would sympathise with the imaginations of a boy--imaginations that 51 caused so much suffering to others? Who would sympathise with 52 me? None--except one.

1 That one's sympathy brought blessing and hope. She was a 2 woman. Our teacher, this great monk, was married when he was a 3 boy and she a mere child. When he became a young man, and all 4 this religious zeal was upon him, she came to see him. Although 5 they had been married for long, they had not seen very much of 6 each other until they were grown up. Then he said to his wife, 7 "Behold, I am your husband; you have a right to this body. But I 8 cannot live the sex life, although I have married you. I leave it to 9 your judgment". And she wept and said, "God speed you! The Lord 10 bless you! Am I the woman to degrade you? If I can, I will help you.
11 Go on in your work".

12 That was the woman. The husband went on and became a 13 monk in his own way; and from a distance the wife went on helping 14 as much as she could. And later, when the man had become a great 15 spiritual giant, she came--really, she was the first disciple--and she 16 spent the rest of her life taking care of the body of this man. He 17 never knew whether he was living or dying, or anything.
18 Sometimes, when talking, he would get so excited that if he sat on 19 live charcoals, he did not know it. Live charcoals! Forgetting all 20 about his body, all the time.

21 Well, that lady, his wife, was the only one who sympathised 22 with the idea of those boys. But she was powerless. She was poorer 23 than we were. Never mind! We plunged into the breach. I believed, 24 as I was living, that these ideas were going to rationalise India and 25 bring better days to many lands and foreign races. With that belief, 26 came the realisation that it is better that a few persons suffer than 27 that such ideas should die out of the world. What if a mother or two 28 brothers die? It is a sacrifice. Let it be done. No great thing can be 29 done without sacrifice. The heart must be plucked out and the 30 bleeding heart placed upon the altar. Then great things are done. Is 31 there any other way? None have found it. I appeal to each one of 32 you, to those who have accomplished any great thing. Oh, how 33 much it has cost! What agony! What torture! What terrible suffering 34 is behind every deed of success in every life! You know that, all of 35 you.

36 And thus we went on, that band of boys. The only thing we 37 got from those around us was a kick and a curse--that was all. Of 38 course, we had to beg from door to door for our food: got hips and 39 haws--the refuse of everything--a piece of bread here and there. We 40 got hold of a broken-down old house, with hissing cobras living 41 underneath; and because that was the cheapest, we went into that 42 house and lived there.

43 Thus we went on for some years, in the meanwhile making 44 excursions all over India, trying to bring about the idea gradually.
45 Ten years were spent without a ray of light! Ten more years! A 46 thousand times despondency came; but there was one thing always 47 to keep us hopeful--the tremendous faithfulness to each other, the 48 tremendous love between us. I have got a hundred men and women 49 around me; if I become the devil himself tomorrow, they will say, 50 "Here we are still! We will never give you up!" That is a great 51 blessing. In happiness, in misery, in famine, in pain, in the grave, in 52 heaven, or in hell who never gives me up is my friend. Is such

1 friendship a joke? A man may have salvation through such 2 friendship. That brings salvation if we can love like that. If we have 3 that faithfulness, why, there is the essence of all concentration. You 4 need not worship any gods in the world if you have that faith, that 5 strength, that love. And that was there with us all throughout that 6 hard time. That was there. That made us go from the Himalayas to 7 Cape Comorin, from the Indus to the Brahmaputra.

8 This band of boys began to travel about. Gradually we began 9 to draw attention: ninety per cent was antagonism, very little of it 10 was helpful. For we had one fault: we were boys--in poverty and 11 with all the roughness of boys. He who has to make his own way in 12 life is a bit rough, he has not much time to be smooth and suave and 13 polite--"my lady and my gentleman", and all that. You have seen that 14 in life, always. He is a rough diamond, he has not much polish, he is 15 a jewel in an indifferent casket.

16 And there we were. "No compromise!" was the watchword.
17 "This is the ideal, and this has got to be carried out. If we meet the 18 king, though we die, we must give him a bit of our minds; if the 19 peasant, the same". Naturally, we met with antagonism.

20 But, mind you, this is life's experience; if you really want the 21 good of others, the whole universe may stand against you and 22 cannot hurt you. It must crumble before your power of the Lord 23 Himself in you if you are sincere and really unselfish. And those 24 boys were that.

25 They came as children, pure and fresh from the hands of 26 nature. Said our Master: I want to offer at the altar of the Lord only 27 those flowers that have not even been smelled, fruits that have not 28 been touched with the fingers. The words of the great man 29 sustained us all. For he saw through the future life of those boys 30 that he collected from the streets of Calcutta, so to say. People used 31 to laugh at him when he said, "You will see--this boy, that boy, what 32 he becomes". His faith was unalterable: "Mother showed it to me. I 33 may be weak, but when She says this is so--She can never make 34 mistakes--it must be so."

35 So things went on and on for ten years without any light, but 36 with my health breaking all the time. It tells on the body in the long 37 run: sometimes one meal at nine in the evening, another time a 38 meal at eight in the morning, another after two days, another after 39 three days--and always the poorest and roughest thing. Who is 40 going to give to the beggar the good things he has? And then, they 41 have not much in India. And most of the time walking, climbing 42 snow peaks, sometimes ten miles of hard mountain climbing, just to 43 get a meal. They eat unleavened bread in India, and sometimes they 44 have it stored away for twenty or thirty days, until it is harder than 45 bricks; and then they will give a square of that. I would have to go 46 from house to house to collect sufficient for one meal. And then the 47 bread was so hard, it made my mouth bleed to eat it. Literally, you 48 can break your teeth on that bread. Then I would put it in a pot and 49 pour over it water from the river. For months and months I existed 50 that way--of course it was telling on the health.

51 Then I thought, I have tried India: it is time for me to try

1 another country. At that time your Parliament of Religions was to be 2 held, and someone was to be sent from India. I was just a 3 vagabond, but I said, "If you send me, I am going. I have not much 4 to lose, and I do not care if I lose that." It was very difficult to find 5 the money, but after a long struggle they got together just enough 6 to pay for my passage--and I came. Came one or two months earlier, 7 so that I found myself drifting about in the streets here, without 8 knowing anybody.

9 But finally the Parliament of Religions opened, and I met kind 10 friends, who helped me right along. I worked a little, collected 11 funds, started two papers, and so on. After that I went over to 12 England and worked there. At the same time I carried on the work 13 for India in America too.

14 My plan for India, as it has been developed and centralised, is 15 this: I have told you of our lives as monks there, how we go from 16 door to door, so that religion is brought to everybody without 17 charge, except, perhaps, a broken piece of bread. That is why you 18 see the lowest of the low in India holding the most exalted religious 19 ideas. It is all through the work of these monks. But ask a man, 20 "Who are the English?"--he does not know. He says perhaps, "They 21 are the children of those giants they speak of in those books, are 22 they not?" "Who governs you?" "We do not know." "What is the 23 government?" They do not know. But they know philosophy. It is a 24 practical want of intellectual education about life on this earth they 25 suffer from. These millions and millions of people are ready for life 26 beyond this world--is not that enough for them? Certainly not. They 27 must have a better piece of bread and a better piece of rag on their 28 bodies. The great question is: How to get that better bread and 29 better rag for these sunken millions.

30 First, I must tell you, there is great hope for them, because, 31 you see, they are the gentlest people on earth. Not that they are 32 timid. When they want to fight, they fight like demons. The best 33 soldiers the English have are recruited from the peasantry of India.
34 Death is a thing of no importance to them. Their attitude is "Twenty 35 times I have died before, and I shall die many times after this. What 36 of that?" They never turn back. They are not given to much emotion, 37 but they make very good fighters.

38 Their instinct, however, is to plough. If you rob them, murder 39 them, tax them, do anything to them, they will be quiet and gentle, 40 so long as you leave them free to practise their religion. They never 41 interfere with the religion of others. "Leave us liberty to worship 42 our gods, and take everything else!" That is their attitude. When the 43 English touch them there, trouble starts. That was the real cause of 44 the 1857 Mutiny--they would not bear religious repression. The 45 great Mohammedan governments were simply blown up because 46 they touched the Indians' religion.

47 But aside from that, they are very peaceful, very quiet, very 48 gentle, and, above all, not given to vice. The absence of any strong 49 drink, oh, it makes them infinitely superior to the mobs of any other 50 country. You cannot compare the decency of life among the poor in 51 India with life in the slums here. A slum means poverty, but poverty

1 does not mean sin, indecency, and vice in India. In other countries, 2 the opportunities are such that only the indecent and the lazy need 3 be poor. There is no reason for poverty unless one is a fool or a 4 blackguard--the sort who want city life and all its luxuries. They will 5 not go into the country. They say, "We are here with all the fun, and 6 you must give us bread". But that is not the case in India, where the 7 poor fellows work hard from morning to sunset, and somebody else 8 takes the bread out of their hands, and their children go hungry.
9 Notwithstanding the millions of tons of wheat raised in India, 10 scarcely a grain passes the mouth of a peasant. He lives upon the 11 poorest corn, which you would not feed to your canary-birds.

12 Now there is no reason why they should suffer such distress-- 13 these people; oh, so pure and good! We hear so much talk about the 14 sunken millions and the degraded women of India--but none come 15 to our help. What do they say? They say, "You can only be helped, 16 you can only be good by ceasing to be what you are. It is useless to 17 help Hindus." These people do not know the history of races. There 18 will be no more India if they change their religion and their 19 institutions, because that is the vitality of that race. It will 20 disappear; so, really, you will have nobody to help.

21 Then there is the other great point to learn: that you can 22 never help really. What can we do for each other? You are growing 23 in your own life, I am growing in my own. It is possible that I can 24 give you a push in your life, knowing that, in the long run, all roads 25 lead to Rome. It is a steady growth. No national civilisation is 26 perfect yet. Give that civilisation a push, and it will arrive at its own 27 goal: do not strive to change it. Take away a nation's institutions, 28 customs, and manners, and what will be left? They hold the nation 29 together.

30 But here comes the very learned foreign man, and he says, 31 "Look here; you give up all those institutions and customs of 32 thousands of years, and take my tomfool tinpot and be happy". This 33 is all nonsense.

34 We will have to help each other, but we have to go one step 35 farther: the first thing is to become unselfish in help. "If you do just 36 what I tell you to do, I will help you; otherwise not." Is that help?

37 And so, if the Hindus want to help you spiritually, there will 38 be no question of limitations: perfect unselfishness. I give, and 39 there it ends. It is gone from me. My mind, my powers, my 40 everything that I have to give, is given: given with the idea to give, 41 and no more. I have seen many times people who have robbed half 42 the world, and they gave $20,000 "to convert the heathen".

1 What for? For the benefit of the heathen, or for their own
2 souls? Just think of that.

3 And the Nemesis of crime is working. We men try to 4 hoodwink our own eyes. But inside the heart, He has remained, the 5 real Self. He never forgets. We can never delude Him. His eyes will 6 never be hoodwinked. Whenever there is any impulse of real 7 charity, it tells, though it be at the end of a thousand years.
8 Obstructed, it yet wakens once more to burst like a thunderbolt.
9 And every impulse where the motive is selfish, self-seeking--though 10 it may be launched forth with all the newspapers blazoning, all the 11 mobs standing and cheering--it fails to reach the mark.

12 I am not taking pride in this. But, mark you, I have told the 13 story of that group of boys. Today there is not a village, not a man, 14 not a woman in India that does not know their work and bless them.
15 There is not a famine in the land where these boys do not plunge in 16 and try to work and rescue as many as they can. And that strikes to 17 the heart. The people come to know it. So help whenever you can, 18 but mind what your motive is. If it is selfish, it will neither benefit 19 those you help, nor yourself. If it is unselfish, it will bring blessings 20 upon them to whom it is given, and infinite blessings upon you, sure 21 as you are living. The Lord can never be hoodwinked. The law of 22 Karma can never be hoodwinked.

23 Well then, my plans are, therefore, to reach these masses of 24 India. Suppose you start schools all over India for the poor, still you 25 cannot educate them. How can you? The boy of four years would 26 better go to the plough or to work, than to your school. He cannot 27 go to your school. It is impossible. Self-preservation is the first 28 instinct. But if the mountain does not go to Mohammed, then 29 Mohammed can come to the mountain. Why should not education 30 go from door to door, say I. If a ploughman's boy cannot come to 31 education, why not meet him at the plough, at the factory, just 32 wherever he is? Go along with him, like his shadow. But there are 33 these hundreds and thousands of monks, educating the people on 34 the spiritual plane; why not let these men do the same work on the 35 intellectual plane? Why should they not talk to the masses a little 36 about history--about many things? The ears are the best educators.
37 The best principles in our lives were those which we heard from our 38 mothers through our ears. Books came much later. Book-learning is 39 nothing. Through the ears we get the best formative principles.
40 Then, as they get more and more interested, they may come to your 41 books too. First, let it roll on and on--that is my idea.

42 Well, I must tell you that I am not a very great believer in 43 monastic systems. They have great merits, and also great defects.
44 There should be a perfect balance between the monastics and the 45 householders. But monasticism has absorbed all the power in India.
46 We represent the greatest power. The monk is greater than the 47 prince. There is no reigning sovereign in India who dares to sit 48 down when the "yellow cloth" is there. He gives up his seat and 49 stands. Now, that is bad, so much power, even in the hands of good 50 men--although these monastics have been the bulwark of the 51 people. They stand between the priestcraft and knowledge. They 52 are the centres of knowledge and reform. They are just what the 1 prophets were among the Jews. The prophets were always 2 preaching against the priests, trying to throw out superstitions. So 3 are they in India. But all the same so much power is not good there; 4 better methods should be worked out. But you can only work in the 5 line of least resistance. The whole national soul there is upon 6 monasticism. You go to India and preach any religion as a 7 householder: the Hindu people will turn back and go out. If you 8 have given up the world, however, they say, "He is good, he has 9 given up the world. He is a sincere man, he wants to do what he 10 preaches." What I mean to say is this, that it represents a 11 tremendous power. What we can do is just to transform it, give it 12 another form. This tremendous power in the hands of the roving 13 Sannyasins of India has got to be transformed, and it will raise the 14 masses up.

15 Now, you see, we have brought the plan down nicely on 16 paper; but I have taken it, at the same time, from the regions of 17 idealism. So far the plan was loose and idealistic. As years went on, 18 it became more and more condensed and accurate; I began to see 19 by actual working its defects, and all that.

20 What did I discover in its working on the material plane?
21 First, there must be centres to educate these monks in the method 22 of education. For instance, I send one of my men, and he goes about 23 with a camera: he has to be taught in those things himself. In India, 24 you will find every man is quite illiterate, and that teaching requires 25 tremendous centres. And what does all that mean? Money. From 26 the idealistic plane you come to everyday work. Well, I have worked 27 hard, four years in your country, and two in England. And I am very 28 thankful that some friends came to the rescue. One who is here 29 today with you is amongst them. There are American friends and 30 English friends who went over with me to India, and there has been 31 a very rude beginning. Some English people came and joined the 32 orders. One poor man worked hard and died in India. There are an 33 Englishman and an Englishwoman who have retired; they have 34 some means of their own, and they have started a centre in the 35 Himalayas, educating the children. I have given them one of the 36 papers I have started--a copy you will find there on the table--The 37 Awakened India. And there they are instructing and working 38 among the people. I have another centre in Calcutta. Of course, all 39 great movements must proceed from the capital. For what is a 40 capital? It is the heart of a nation. All the blood comes into the 41 heart and thence it is distributed; so all the wealth, all the ideas, all 42 the education, all spirituality will converge towards the capital and 43 spread from it.

44 I am glad to tell you I have made a rude beginning. But the 45 same work I want to do, on parallel lines, for women. And my 46 principle is: each one helps himself. My help is from a distance.
47 There are Indian women, English women, and I hope American 48 women will come to take up the task. As soon as they have begun, I 49 wash my hands of it. No man shall dictate to a woman; nor a woman 50 to a man. Each one is independent. What bondage there may be is 51 only that of love. Women will work out their own destinies--much 52 better, too, than men can ever do for them. All the mischief to 1 women has come because men undertook to shape the destiny of 2 women. And I do not want to start with any initial mistake. One 3 little mistake made then will go on multiplying; and if you succeed, 4 in the long run that mistake will have assumed gigantic proportions 5 and become hard to correct. So, if I made this mistake of employing 6 men to work out this women's part of the work, why, women will 7 never get rid of that--it will have become a custom. But I have got 8 an opportunity. I told you of the lady who was my Master's wife. We 9 have all great respect for her. She never dictates to us. So it is quite 10 safe.

11 That part has to be accomplished.

BUDDHA'S MESSAGE TO THE WORLD

(Delivered in San Francisco, on March 18, 1900)

Buddhism is historically the most important religion--historically, not philosophically--because it was the most tremendous religious movement that the world ever saw, the most gigantic spiritual wave ever to burst upon human society. There is no civilisation on which its effect has not been felt in some way or other.

The followers of Buddha were most enthusiastic and very missionary in spirit. They were the first among the adherents of various religions not to remain content with the limited sphere of their Mother Church. They spread far and wide. They travelled east and west, north and south. They reached into darkest Tibet; they went into Persia, Asia Minor; they went into Russia, Poland, and many other countries of the Western world. They went into China, Korea, Japan; they went into Burma, Siam, the East Indies, and beyond. When Alexander the Great, through his military conquests, brought the Mediterranean world in contact with India, the wisdom of India at once found a channel through which to spread over vast portions of Asia and Europe. Buddhist priests went out teaching among the different nations; and as they taught, superstition and priestcraft began to vanish like mist before the sun.

To understand this movement properly you should know what conditions prevailed in India at the time Buddha came, just as to understand Christianity you have to grasp the state of Jewish society at the time of Christ. It is necessary that you have an idea of Indian society six hundred years before the birth of Christ, by which time Indian civilisation had already completed its growth.

When you study the civilisation of India, you find that it has died and revived several times; this is its peculiarity. Most races rise once and then decline for ever. There are two kinds of people; those who grow continually and those whose growth comes to an end. The peaceful nations, India and China, fall down, yet rise again; but the others, once they go down, do not come up--they die. Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall enjoy the earth.

At the time Buddha was born, India was in need of a great spiritual leader, a prophet. There was already a most powerful body of priests. You will understand the situation better if you remember the history of the Jews--how they had two types of religious leaders, priests and prophets, the priests keeping the people in ignorance and grinding superstitions into their minds. The methods of worship the priests prescribed were only a means by which they could dominate the people. All through the Old Testament, you find the prophets challenging the superstitions of the priests. The outcome of this fight was the triumph of the prophets and the defeat of the priests.

Priests believe that there is a God, but that this God can be

1 approached and known only through them. People can enter the 2 Holy of Holies only with the permission of the priests. You must pay 3 them, worship them, place everything in their hands. Throughout 4 the history of the world, this priestly tendency has cropped up 5 again and again--this tremendous thirst for power, this tiger-like 6 thirst, seems a part of human nature. The priests dominate you, lay 7 down a thousand rules for you. They describe simple truths in 8 roundabout ways. They tell you stories to support their own 9 superior position. If you want to thrive in this life or go to heaven 10 after death, you have to pass through their hands. You have to 11 perform all kinds of ceremonies and rituals. All this has made life so 12 complicated and has so confused the brain that if I give you plain 13 words, you will go home unsatisfied.

14 You have become thoroughly befuddled. The less you 15 understand, the better you feel! The prophets have been giving 16 warnings against the priests and their superstitions and 17 machinations; but the vast mass of people have not yet learnt to 18 heed these warnings--education is yet to come to them.

19 Men must have education. They speak of democracy, of the 20 equality of all men, these days. But how will a man know he is equal 21 with all? He must have a strong brain, a clear mind free of 22 nonsensical ideas; he must pierce through the mass of superstitions 23 encrusting his mind to the pure truth that is in his inmost Self. Then 24 he will know that all perfections, all powers are already within 25 himself, that these have not to be given him by others. When he 26 realises this, he becomes free that moment, he achieves equality.
27 He also realises that every one else is equally as perfect as he, and 28 he does not have to exercise any power, physical, mental or moral, 29 over his brother men. He abandons the idea that there was ever 30 any man who was lower than himself. Then he can talk of equality; 31 not until then.

32 Now, as I was telling you, among the Jews there was a 33 continuous struggle between the priests and the prophets; and the 34 priests sought to monopolise power and knowledge, till they 35 themselves began to lose them and the chains they had put on the 36 feet of the people were on their own feet. The masters always 37 become slaves before long. The culmination of the struggle was the 38 victory of Jesus of Nazareth. This triumph is the history of 39 Christianity. Christ at last succeeded in overthrowing the mass of 40 witchcraft. This great prophet killed the dragon of priestly 41 selfishness, rescued from its clutches the jewel of truth, and gave it 42 to all the world, so that whosoever desired to possess it would have 43 absolute freedom to do so, and would not have to wait on the 44 pleasure of any priest or priests.

45 The Jews were never a very philosophical race: they had not 46 the subtlety of the Indian brain nor did they have the Indian's 47 psychic power. The priests in India, the Brahmins, possessed great 48 intellectual and psychic powers. It was they who began the spiritual 49 development of India, and they accomplished wonderful things. But 50 the time came when the free spirit of development that had at first 51 actuated the Brahmins disappeared. They began to arrogate 52 powers and privileges to themselves. If a Brahmin killed a man, he

1 would not be punished. The Brahmin, by his very birth, is the lord of 2 the universe! Even the most wicked Brahmin must be worshipped!

3 But while the priests were flourishing, there existed also the 4 poet-prophets called Sannyasins. All Hindus, whatever their castes 5 may be, must, for the sake of attaining spirituality, give up their 6 work and prepare for death. No more is the world to be of any 7 interest to them. They must go out and become Sannyasins. The 8 Sannyasins have nothing to do with the two thousand ceremonies 9 that the priests have invented: Pronounce certain words--ten 10 syllables, twenty syllables, and so on--all these things are nonsense.

11 So these poet-prophets of ancient India repudiated the ways 12 of the priest and declared the pure truth. They tried to break the 13 power of the priests, and they succeeded a little. But in two 14 generations their disciples went back to the superstitious, 15 roundabout ways of the priests--became priests themselves: "You 16 can get truth only through us!" Truth became crystallised again, 17 and again prophets came to break the encrustations and free the 18 truth, and so it went on. Yes, there must be all the time the man, the 19 prophet, or else humanity will die.

20 You wonder why there have to be all these roundabout
21 methods of the priests. Why can you not come directly to the truth?
22 Are you ashamed of God's truth

1 that you have to hide it behind all kinds of intricate 2 ceremonies and formulas? Are you ashamed of God that you cannot 3 confess His truth before the world? Do you call that being religious 4 and spiritual? The priests are the only people fit for the truth! The 5 masses are not fit for it! It must be diluted! Water it down a little!

6 Take the Sermon on the Mount and the Gita--they are 7 simplicity itself. Even the streetwalker can understand them. How 8 grand! In them you find the truth clearly and simply revealed. But 9 no, the priests would not accept that truth can be found so directly.
10 They speak of two thousand heavens and two thousand hells. If 11 people follow their prescriptions, they will go to heaven! If they do 12 not obey the rules, they will go to hell!

13 But the people shall learn the truth. Some are afraid that if 14 the full truth is given to all, it will hurt them. They should not be 15 given the unqualified truth--so they say. But the world is not much 16 better off by compromising truth. What worse can it be than it is 17 already? Bring truth out! If it is real, it will do good. When people 18 protest and propose other methods, they only make apologies for 19 witchcraft.

20 India was full of it in Buddha's day. There were the masses of 21 people, and they were debarred from all knowledge. If just a word 22 of the Vedas entered the ears of a man, terrible punishment was 23 visited upon him. The priests had made a secret of the Vedas--the 24 Vedas that contained the spiritual truths discovered by the ancient 25 Hindus!

26 At last one man could bear it no more. He had the brain, the 27 power, and the heart--a heart as infinite as the broad sky. He felt 28 how the masses were being led by the priests and how the priests 29 were glorying in their power, and he wanted to do something about 30 it. He did not want any power over any one, and he wanted to break 31 the mental and spiritual bonds of men. His heart was large. The 32 heart, many around us may have, and we also want to help others.
33 But we do not have the brain; we do not know the ways and means 34 by which help can be given. But this man had the brain to discover 35 the means of breaking the bondages of souls. He learnt why men 36 suffer, and he found the way out of suffering. He was a man of 37 accomplishment, he worked everything out; he taught one and all 38 without distinction and made them realise the peace of 39 enlightenment. This was the man Buddha.

40 You know from Arnold's poem, The Light of Asia, how Buddha
41 was born a prince and how the misery of the world struck him 42 deeply; how, although brought up and living in the lap of luxury, he 43 could not find comfort in his personal happiness and security; how 44 he renounced the world, leaving his princess and new-born son 45 behind; how he wandered searching for truth from teacher to 46 teacher; and how he at last attained to enlightenment. You know 47 about his long mission, his disciples, his organisations. You all know 48 these things.

49 Buddha was the triumph in the struggle that had been going 50 on between the priests and the prophets in India. One thing can be 51 said for these Indian priests--they were not and never are intolerant

1 of religion; they never have persecuted religion. Any man was 2 allowed to preach against them. Theirs is such a religion; they 3 never molested any one for his religious views. But they suffered 4 from the peculiar weaknesses of all the priests: they also sought 5 power; they also promulgated rules and regulations and made 6 religion unnecessarily complicated, and thereby undermined the 7 strength of those who followed their religion.

8 Buddha cut through all these excrescences. He preached the 9 most tremendous truths. He taught the very gist of the philosophy 10 of the Vedas to one and all without distinction, he taught it to the 11 world at large, because one of his great messages was the equality 12 of man. Men are all equal. No concession there to anybody! Buddha 13 was the great preacher of equality. Every man and woman has the 14 same right to attain spirituality--that was his teaching. The 15 difference between the priests and the other castes he abolished.
16 Even the lowest were entitled to the highest attainments; he 17 opened the door of Nirvana to one and all. His teaching was bold 18 even for India. No amount of preaching can ever shock the Indian 19 soul, but it was hard for India to swallow Buddha's doctrine. How 20 much harder it must be for you!

21 His doctrine was this: Why is there misery in our life?
22 Because we are selfish. We desire things for ourselves--that is why 23 there is misery. What is the way out? The giving up of the self. The 24 self does not exist; the phenomenal world, all this that we perceive, 25 is all that exists. There is nothing called soul underlying the cycle of 26 life and death. There is the stream of thought, one thought 27 following another in succession, each thought coming into existence 28 and becoming non-existent at the same moment, that is all; there is 29 no thinker of the thought, no soul. The body is changing all the 30 time; so is mind, consciousness. The self therefore is a delusion. All 31 selfishness comes of holding on to the self, to this illusory self. If we 32 know the truth that there is no self, then we will be happy and make 33 others happy.

34 This was what Buddha taught. And he did not merely talk; he 35 was ready to give up his own life for the world. He said, "If 36 sacrificing an animal is good, sacrificing a man is better", and he 37 offered himself as a sacrifice. He said, "This animal sacrifice is 38 another superstition. God and soul are the two big superstitions.
39 God is only a superstition invented by the priests. If there is a God, 40 as these Brahmins preach, why is there so much misery in the 41 world? He is just like me, a slave to the law of causation. If he is not 42 bound by the law of causation, then why does he create? Such a 43 God is not at all satisfactory. There is the ruler in heaven that rules 44 the universe according to his sweet will and leaves us all here to die 45 in misery--he never has the goodness to look at us for a moment.
46 Our whole life is continuous suffering; but this is not sufficient 47 punishment--after death we must go to places where we have other 48 punishments. Yet we continually perform all kinds of rites and 49 ceremonies to please this creator of the world!"

50 Buddha said, "These ceremonials are all wrong. There is but 51 one ideal in the world. Destroy all delusions; what is true will 52 remain. As soon as the clouds are gone, the sun will shine". How to 1 kill the self? Become perfectly unselfish, ready to give up your life 2 even for an ant. Work not for any superstition, not to please any 3 God, not to get any reward, but because you are seeking your own 4 release by killing your self. Worship and prayer and all that, these 5 are all nonsense. You all say, "I thank God"--but where does He live?

6 You do not know, and yet you are all going crazy about God.

7 Hindus can give up everything except their God. To deny God 8 is to cut off the very ground from under the feet of devotion.
9 Devotion and God the Hindus must cling to. They can never 10 relinquish these. And here, in the teaching of Buddha, are no God 11 and no soul--simply work. What for? Not for the self, for the self is a 12 delusion. We shall be ourselves when this delusion has vanished.
13 Very few are there in the world that can rise to that height and 14 work for work's sake.

15 Yet the religion of Buddha spread fast. It was because of the 16 marvellous love which, for the first time in the history of humanity, 17 overflowed a large heart and devoted itself to the service not only 18 of all men but of all living things--a love which did not care for 19 anything except to find a way of release from suffering for all 20 beings.

21 Man was loving God and had forgotten all about his brother 22 man. The man who in the name of God can give up his very life, can 23 also turn around and kill his brother man in the name of God. That 24 was the state of the world. They would sacrifice the son for the 25 glory of God, would rob nations for the glory of God, would kill 26 thousands of beings for the glory of God, would drench the earth 27 with blood for the glory of God. This was the first time they turned 28 to the other God--man. It is man that is to be loved. It was the first 29 wave of intense love for all men--the first wave of true
30 unadulterated wisdom--that, starting from India, gradually 31 inundated country after country, north, south, east, west.

32 This teacher wanted to make truth shine as truth. No 33 softening, no compromise, no pandering to the priests, the 34 powerful, the kings. No bowing before superstitious traditions, 35 however hoary; no respect for forms and books just because they 36 came down from the distant past. He rejected all scriptures, all 37 forms of religious practice. Even the very language, Sanskrit, in 38 which religion had been traditionally taught in India, he rejected, so 39 that his followers would not have any chance to imbibe the 40 superstitions which were associated with it.

1 There is another way of looking at the truth we have been 2 discussing: the Hindu way. We claim that Buddha's great doctrine 3 of selflessness can be better understood if it is looked at in our way.
4 In the Upanishads there is already the great doctrine of the Atman 5 and the Brahman. The Atman, Self, is the same as Brahman, the 6 Lord. This Self is all that is; It is the only reality. Maya, delusion, 7 makes us see It as different. There is one Self, not many. That one 8 Self shines in various forms. Man is man's brother because all men 9 are one. A man is not only my brother, say the Vedas, he is myself.
10 Hurting any part of the universe, I only hurt myself. I am the 11 universe. It is a delusion that I think I am Mr. So-and-so--that is the 12 delusion.

13 The more you approach your real Self, the more this delusion 14 vanishes. The more all differences and divisions disappear, the 15 more you realise all as the one Divinity. God exists; but He is not 16 the man sitting upon a cloud. He is pure Spirit. Where does He 17 reside? Nearer to you than your very self. He is the Soul. How can 18 you perceive God as separate and different from yourself? When 19 you think of Him as some one separate from yourself, you do not 20 know Him. He is you yourself. That was the doctrine of the prophets 21 of India.

22 It is selfishness that you think that you see Mr. So-and-so and 23 that all the world is different from you. You believe you are different 24 from me. You do not take any thought of me. You go home and have 25 your dinner and sleep. If I die, you still eat, drink, and are merry.
26 But you cannot really be happy when the rest of the world is 27 suffering. We are all one. It is the delusion of separateness that is 28 the root of misery. Nothing exists but the Self; there is nothing else.

29 Buddha's idea is that there is no God, only man himself. He 30 repudiated the mentality which underlies the prevalent ideas of 31 God. He found it made men weak and superstitious. If you pray to 32 God to give you everything, who is it, then, that goes out and 33 works? God comes to those who work hard. God helps them that 34 help themselves. An opposite idea of God weakens our nerves, 35 softens our muscles, makes us dependent. Everything independent 36 is happy; everything dependent is miserable. Man has infinite 37 power within himself, and he can realise it--he can realise himself 38 as the one infinite Self. It can be done; but you do not believe it. You 39 pray to God and keep your powder dry all the time.

40 Buddha taught the opposite. Do not let men weep. Let them 41 have none of this praying and all that. God is not keeping shop.
42 With every breath you are praying in God. I am talking; that is a 43 prayer. You are listening; that is a prayer. Is there ever any 44 movement of yours, mental or physical, in which you do not 45 participate in the infinite Divine Energy? It is all a constant prayer.
46 If you call only a set of words prayer, you make prayer superficial.
47 Such prayers are not much good; they can scarcely bear any real 48 fruit.

49 Is prayer a magic formula, by repeating which, even if you do
50 not work hard, you gain miraculous results? No. All have to work 51 hard; all have to reach the depths of that infinite Energy. Behind

1 the poor, behind the rich, there is the same infinite Energy. It is not 2 that one man works hard, and another by repeating a few words 3 achieves results. This universe is a constant prayer. If you take 4 prayer in this sense, I am with you. Words are not necessary. Better 5 is silent prayer.

6 The vast majority of people do not understand the meaning of 7 this doctrine. In India any compromise regarding the Self means 8 that we have given power into the hands of the priests and have 9 forgotten the great teachings of the prophets. Buddha knew this; so 10 he brushed aside all the priestly doctrines and practices and made 11 man stand on his own feet. It was necessary for him to go against 12 the accustomed ways of the people; he had to bring about 13 revolutionary changes. As a result this sacrificial religion passed 14 away from India for ever, and was never revived.

15 Buddhism apparently has passed away from India; but really 16 it has not. There was an element of danger in the teaching of 17 Buddha--it was a reforming religion. In order to bring about the 18 tremendous spiritual change he did, he had to give many negative 19 teachings. But if a religion emphasises the negative side too much, 20 it is in danger of eventual destruction. Never can a reforming sect 21 survive if it is only reforming; the formative elements alone--the 22 real impulse, that is, the principles--live on and on. After a reform 23 has been brought about, it is the positive side that should be 24 emphasised; after the building is finished the scaffolding must be 25 taken away.

26 It so happened in India that as time went on, the followers of 27 Buddha emphasised the negative aspect of his teachings too much 28 and thereby caused the eventual downfall of their religion. The 29 positive aspects of truth were suffocated by the forces of negation; 30 and thus India repudiated the destructive tendencies that flourished 31 in the name of Buddhism. That was the decree of the Indian 32 national thought.

33 The negative elements of Buddhism--there is no God and no
34 soul--died out. I can say that God is the only being that exists; it is a 35 very positive statement. He is the one reality. When Buddha says 36 there is no soul, I say, "Man, thou art one with the universe; thou 37 art all things." How positive! The reformative element died out; but 38 the formative element has lived through all time. Buddha taught 39 kindness towards lower beings; and since then there has not been a 40 sect in India that has not taught charity to all beings, even to 41 animals. This kindness, this mercy, this charity--greater than any 42 doctrine--are what Buddhism left to us.

43 The life of Buddha has an especial appeal. All my life I have 44 been very fond of Buddha, but not of his doctrine. I have more 45 veneration for that character than for any other--that boldness, that 46 fearlessness, and that tremendous love! He was born for the good 47 of men. Others may seek God, others may seek truth for 48 themselves; he did not even care to know truth for himself. He 49 sought truth because people were in misery.

50 How to help them, that was his only concern. Throughout his 51 life he never had a thought for himself. How can we ignorant,

1 selfish, narrow-minded human beings ever understand the 2 greatness of this man?

3 And consider his marvellous brain! No emotionalism. That 4 giant brain never was superstitious. Believe not because an old 5 manuscript has been produced, because it has been handed down 6 to you from your forefathers, because your friends want you to--but 7 think for yourself; search truth for yourself; realise it yourself. Then 8 if you find it beneficial to one and many, give it to people. Soft-9 brained men, weak-minded, chicken-hearted, cannot find the truth.
10 One has to be free, and as broad as the sky. One has to have a mind 11 that is crystal clear; only then can truth shine in it. We are so full of 12 superstitions! Even in your country where you think you are highly 13 educated, how full of narrownesses and superstitions you are! Just 14 think, with all your claims to civilisation in this country, on one 15 occasion I was refused a chair to sit on, because I was a Hindu.

16 Six hundred years before the birth of Christ, at the time when 17 Buddha lived, the people of India must have had wonderful 18 education. Extremely free-minded they must have been. Great 19 masses followed him. Kings gave up their thrones; queens gave up 20 their thrones. People were able to appreciate and embrace his 21 teaching, so revolutionary, so different from what they had been 22 taught by the priests through the ages! But their minds have been 23 unusually free and broad.

24 And consider his death. If he was great in life, he was also 25 great in death. He ate food offered to him by a member of a race 26 similar to your American Indians. Hindus do not touch them, 27 because they eat everything indiscriminately. He told his disciples, 28 "Do not eat this food, but I cannot refuse it. Go to the man and tell 29 him he has done me one of the greatest services of my life--he has 30 released me from the body." An old man came and sat near him--he 31 had walked miles and miles to see the Master--and Buddha taught 32 him. When he found a disciple weeping, he reproved him, saying, 33 "What is this? Is this the result of all my teaching? Let there be no 34 false bondage, no dependence on me, no false glorification of this 35 passing personality. The Buddha is not a person; he is a realisation.
36 Work out your own salvation."

37 Even when dying, he would not claim any distinction for 38 himself. I worship him for that. What you call Buddhas and Christs 39 are only the names of certain states of realisation. Of all the 40 teachers of the world, he was the one who taught us most to be self-41 reliant, who freed us not only from the bondages of our false selves 42 but from dependence on the invisible being or beings called God or 43 gods. He invited every one to enter into that state of freedom which 44 he called Nirvana. All must attain to it one day; and that attainment 45 is the complete fulfilment of man.

DISCIPLESHIP

(Delivered in San Francisco, on March 29, 1900)

My subject is "Discipleship". I do not know how you will take what I have to say. It will be rather difficult for you to accept it--the ideals of teachers and disciples in this country vary so much from those in ours. An old proverb of India comes to my mind: "There are hundreds of thousands of teachers, but it is hard to find one disciple." It seems to be true. The one important thing in the attainment of spirituality is the attitude of the pupil. When the right attitude is there, illumination comes easily.

What does the disciple need in order to receive the truth? The great sages say that to attain truth takes but the twinkling of an eye--it is just a question of knowing--the dream breaks. How long does it take? In a second the dream is gone. When the illusion vanishes, how long does it take? Just the twinkling of an eye. When I know the truth, nothing happens except that the falsehood vanishes away: I took the rope for the snake, and now I see it is the rope. It is only a question of half a second and the whole thing is done. Thou art That. Thou art the Reality. How long does it take to know this? If we are God and always have been so, not to know this is most astonishing. To know this is the only natural thing. It should not take ages to find out what we have always been and what we now are.

Yet it seems difficult to realise this self-evident truth. Ages and ages pass before we begin to catch a faint glimpse of it. God is life; God is truth. We write about this; we feel in our inmost heart that this is so, that everything else than God is nothing--here today, gone tomorrow. And yet most of us remain the same all through life. We cling to untruth, and we turn our back upon truth. We do not want to attain truth. We do not want anyone to break our dream. You see, the teachers are not wanted. Who wants to learn? But if anyone wants to realise the truth and overcome illusion, if he wants to receive the truth from a teacher, he must be a true disciple.

It is not easy to be a disciple; great preparations are necessary; many conditions have to be fulfilled. Four principal conditions are laid down by the Vedantists.

The first condition is that the student who wants to know the truth must give up all desires for gain in this world or in the life to come.

1 The truth is not what we see. What we see is not truth as long
2 as any desire creeps into the mind. God is true, and the world is not 3 true. So long as there is in the heart the least desire for the world, 4 truth will not come. Let the world fall to ruin around my ears: I do 5 not care. So with the next life; I do not care to go to heaven. What is 6 heaven? Only the continuation of this earth. We would be better and 7 the little foolish dreams we are dreaming would break sooner if 8 there were no heaven, no continuation of this silly life on earth. By 9 going to heaven we only prolong the miserable illusions.

10 What do you gain in heaven? You become gods, drink nectar, 11 and get rheumatism. There is less misery there than on earth, but 12 also less truth. The very rich can understand truth much less than 13 the poorer people. "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of 14 a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God." The 15 rich man has no time to think of anything beyond his wealth and 16 power, his comforts and indulgences. The rich rarely become 17 religious. Why? Because they think, if they become religious, they 18 will have no more fun in life. In the same way, there is very little 19 chance to become spiritual in heaven; there is too much comfort 20 and enjoyment there--the dwellers in heaven are disinclined to give 21 up their fun.

22 They say there will be no more weeping in heaven. I do not 23 trust the man who never weeps; he has a big block of granite where 24 the heart should be. It is evident that the heavenly people have not 25 much sympathy. There are vast masses of them over there, and we 26 are miserable creatures suffering in this horrible place. They could 27 pull us all out of it; but they do not. They do not weep. There is no 28 sorrow or misery there; therefore they do not care for anyone's 29 misery. They drink their nectar, dances go on; beautiful wives and 30 all that.

31 Going beyond these things, the disciple should say, "I do not 32 care for anything in this life nor for all the heavens that have ever 33 existed--I do not care to go to any of them. I do not want the sense-34 life in any form--this identification of myself with the body--as I feel 35 now, 'I am this body--this huge mass of flesh.' This is what I feel I 36 am. I refuse to believe that."

37 The world and the heavens, all these are bound up with the 38 senses. You do not care for the earth if you do not have any senses.
39 Heaven also is the world. Earth, heaven, and all that is between 40 have but one name--earth.

41 Therefore the disciple, knowing the past and the present and 42 thinking of the future, knowing what prosperity means, what 43 happiness means, gives up all these and seeks to know the truth 44 and truth alone. This is the first condition.

45 The second condition is that the disciple must be able to 46 control the internal and the external senses and must be 47 established in several other spiritual virtues.

48 The external senses are the visible organs situated in 49 different parts of the body; the internal senses are intangible. We 50 have the external eyes, ears, nose, and so on; and we have the 1 corresponding internal senses. We are continually at the beck and 2 call of both these groups of senses. Corresponding to the senses are 3 sense-objects. If any sense-objects are near by, the senses compel 4 us to perceive them; we have no choice or independence. There is 5 the big nose. A little fragrance is there; I have to smell it. If there 6 were a bad odour, I would say to myself, "Do not smell it"; but 7 nature says, "Smell", and I smell it. Just think what we have 8 become! We have bound ourselves. I have eyes. Anything going on, 9 good or bad, I must see. It is the same with hearing. If anyone 10 speaks unpleasantly to me, I must hear it. My sense of hearing

11 compels me to do so, and how miserable I feel! Curse or praise-- 12 man has got to hear. I have seen many deaf people who do not 13 usually hear, but anything about themselves they always hear!

14 All these senses, external and internal, must be under the 15 disciple's control. By hard practice he has to arrive at the stage 16 where he can assert his mind against the senses, against the 17 commands of nature. He should be able to say to his mind, "You are 18 mine; I order you, do not see or hear anything", and the mind will 19 not see or hear anything--no form or sound will react on the mind.
20 In that state the mind has become free of the domination of the 21 senses, has become separated from them. No longer is it attached 22 to the senses and the body. The external things cannot order the 23 mind now; the mind refuses to attach itself to them. Beautiful 24 fragrance is there. The disciple says to the mind, "Do not smell", 25 and the mind does not perceive the fragrance. When you have 26 arrived at that point, you are just beginning to be a disciple. That is 27 why when everybody says, "I know the truth", I say, "If you know 28 the truth, you must have self-control; and if you have control of 29 yourself, show it by controlling these organs."

30 Next, the mind must be made to quiet down. It is rushing 31 about. Just as I sit down to meditate, all the vilest subjects in the 32 world come up. The whole thing is nauseating. Why should the mind 33 think thoughts I do not want it to think? I am as it were a slave to 34 the mind. No spiritual knowledge is possible so long as the mind is 35 restless and out of control. The disciple has to learn to control the 36 mind. Yes, it is the function of the mind to think. But it must not 37 think if the disciple does not want it to; it must stop thinking when 38 he commands it to. To qualify as a disciple, this state of the mind is 39 very necessary.

40 Also, the disciple must have great power of endurance. Life 41 seems comfortable; and you find the mind behaves well when 42 everything is going well with you. But if something goes wrong, 43 your mind loses its balance. That is not good. Bear all evil and 44 misery without one murmur of hurt, without one thought of 45 unhappiness, resistance, remedy, or retaliation. That is true 46 endurance; and that you must acquire.

47 Good and evil there always are in the world. Many forget 48 there is any evil--at least they try to forget; and when evil comes 49 upon them, they are overwhelmed by it and feel bitter. There are 50 others who deny that there is any evil at all and consider everything 51 good. That also is a weakness; that also proceeds from a fear of 52 evil. If something is evil-smelling, why sprinkle it with rose water

1 and call it fragrant? Yes, there are good and evil in the world--God
2 has put evil in the world. But you do not have to whitewash Him.
3 Why there is evil is none of your business. Please have faith and 4 keep quiet.

5 When my Master, Shri Ramakrishna fell ill, a Brahmin 6 suggested to him that he apply his tremendous mental power to 7 cure himself. He said that if my Master would only concentrate his 8 mind on the diseased part of the body, it would heal. Shri 9 Ramakrishna answered,

1 "What! Bring down the mind that I've given to God to this 2 little body!" He refused to think of body and illness. His mind was 3 continually conscious of God; it was dedicated to Him utterly. He 4 would not use it for any other purpose.

5 This craving for health, wealth, long life, and the like--the so-6 called good--is nothing but an illusion. To devote the mind to them 7 in order to secure them only strengthens the delusion. We have 8 these dreams and illusions in life, and we want to have more of 9 them in the life to come, in heaven. More and more illusion. Resist 10 not evil. Face it! You are higher than evil.

11 There is this misery in the world--it has to be suffered by 12 someone. You cannot act without making evil for somebody. And 13 when you seek worldly good, you only avoid an evil which must be 14 suffered by somebody else. Everyone is trying to put it on someone 15 else's shoulders. The disciple says, "Let the miseries of the world 16 come to me; I shall endure them all. Let others go free."

17 Remember the man on the cross. He could have brought 18 legions of angels to victory; but he did not resist. He pitied those 19 who crucified him. He endured every humiliation and suffering. He 20 took the burden of all upon himself: "Come unto me, all ye that 21 labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Such is true 22 endurance. How very high he was above this life, so high that we 23 cannot understand it, we slaves! No sooner does a man slap me in 24 the face than my hand hits back: bang, it goes! How can I 25 understand the greatness and blessedness of the Glorified One?
26 How can I see the glory of it?

27 But I will not drag the ideal down. I feel I am the body, 28 resisting evil. If I get a headache, I go all over the world to have it 29 cured; I drink two thousand bottles of medicine. How can I 30 understand these marvellous minds? I can see the ideal, but how 31 much of that ideal? None of this consciousness of the body, of the 32 little self, of its pleasures and pains, its hurts and comforts, none of 33 these can reach that atmosphere. By thinking only of the spirit and 34 keeping the mind out of matter all the time, I can catch a glimpse of 35 that ideal. Material thought and forms of the sense-world have no 36 place in that ideal. Take them off and put the mind upon the spirit.
37 Forget your life and death, your pains and pleasures, your name 38 and fame, and realise that you are neither body nor mind but the 39 pure spirit.

40 When I say "I", I mean this spirit. Close your eyes and see 41 what picture appears when you think of your "I". Is it the picture of 42 your body that comes, or of your mental nature? If so, you have not 43 realised your true "I" yet. The time will come, however, when as 44 soon as you say "I" you will see the universe, the Infinite Being.
45 Then you will have realised your true Self and found that you are 46 infinite. That is the truth: you are the spirit, you are not matter.
47 There is such a thing as illusion--in it one thing is taken for another:
48 matter is taken for spirit, this body for soul. That is the tremendous 49 illusion. It has to go.

50 The next qualification is that the disciple must have faith in 51 the Guru (teacher). In the West the teacher simply gives intellectual 1 knowledge; that is all. The relationship with the teacher is the 2 greatest in life. My dearest and nearest relative in life is my Guru;

3 next, my mother; then my father. My first reverence is to the Guru.
4 If my father says, "Do this", and my Guru says, "Do not do this", I do
5 not do it. The Guru frees my soul. The father and mother give me 6 this body; but the Guru gives me rebirth in the soul.

7 We have certain peculiar beliefs. One of these is that there 8 are some souls, a few exceptional ones, who are already free and 9 who will be born here for the good of the world, to help the world.
10 They are free already; they do not care for their own salvation--they 11 want to help others. They do not require to be taught anything.
12 From their childhood they know everything; they may speak the 13 highest truth even when they are babies six months old.

14 Upon these free souls depends the spiritual growth of 15 mankind. They are like the first lamps from which other lamps are 16 lighted. True, the light is in everyone, but in most men it is hidden.
17 The great souls are shining lights from the beginning. Those who 18 come in contact with them have as it were their own lamps lighted.
19 By this the first lamp does not lose anything; yet it communicates 20 its light to other lamps. A million lamps are lighted; but the first 21 lamp goes on shining with undiminished light. The first lamp is the 22 Guru, and the lamp that is lighted from it is the disciple. The second 23 in turn becomes the Guru, and so on. These great ones whom you 24 call Incarnations of God are mighty spiritual giants. They come and 25 set in motion a tremendous spiritual current by transmitting their 26 power to their immediate disciples and through them to generation 27 after generation of disciples.

28 A bishop in the Christian Church, by the laying on of hands, 29 claims to transmit the power which he is supposed to have received 30 from the preceding bishops. The bishop says that Jesus Christ 31 transmitted his power to his immediate disciples and they to others, 32 and that that is how the Christ's power has come to him. We hold 33 that every one of us, not bishops only, ought to have such power.
34 There is no reason why each of you cannot be a vehicle of the 35 mighty current of spirituality.

36 But first you must find a teacher, a true teacher, and you must 37 remember that he is not just a man. You may get a teacher in the 38 body; but the real teacher is not in the body; he is not the physical 39 man--he is not as he appears to your eyes. It may be the teacher 40 will come to you as a human being, and you will receive the power 41 from him. Sometimes he will come in a dream and transmit things 42 to the world. The power of the teacher may come to us in many 43 ways. But for us ordinary mortals the teacher must come, and our 44 preparation must go on till he comes.

45 We attend lectures and read books, argue and reason about 46 God and soul, religion and salvation. These are not spirituality, 47 because spirituality does not exist in books or theories or in 48 philosophies. It is not in learning or reasoning, but in actual inner 49 growth. Even parrots can learn things by heart and repeat them. If 50 you become learned, what of it? Asses can carry whole libraries. So 51 when real light will come, there will be no more of this learning

1 from books--no book-learning. The man who cannot write even his 2 own name can be perfectly religious, and the man with all the 3 libraries of the world in his head may fail to be. Learning is not a 4 condition of spiritual growth; scholarship is not a condition. The 5 touch of the Guru, the transmittal of spiritual energy, will quicken 6 your heart. Then will begin the growth. That is the real baptism by 7 fire. No more stopping. You go on and go on.

8 Some years ago one of your Christian teachers, a friend of 9 mine, said, "You believe in Christ?" "Yes," I answered, "but perhaps 10 with a little more reverence." "Then why don't you be baptised?" 11 How could I be baptised? By whom? Where is the man who can give 12 true baptism? What is baptism? Is it sprinkling some water over 13 you, or dipping you in water, while muttering formulas?

14 Baptism is the direct introduction into the life of the spirit. If 15 you receive the real baptism, you know you are not the body but the 16 spirit. Give me that baptism if you can. If not, you are not 17 Christians. Even after the so-called baptism which you received, 18 you have remained the same. What is the sense of merely saying 19 you have been baptised in the name of the Christ? Mere talk, talk-- 20 ever disturbing the world with your foolishness! "Ever steeped in 21 the darkness of ignorance, yet considering themselves wise and 22 learned, the fools go round and round, staggering to and fro like the 23 blind led by the blind."²⁴⁰ Therefore do not say you are Christians, 24 do not brag about baptism and things of that sort.

25 Of course there is true baptism--there was baptism in the 26 beginning when the Christ came to the earth and taught. The 27 illumined souls, the great ones that come to the earth from time to 28 time, have the power to reveal the Supernal Vision to us. This is 29 true baptism. You see, before the formulas and ceremonies of every 30 religion, there exists the germ of universal truth. In course of time 31 this truth becomes forgotten; it becomes as it were strangled by 32 forms and ceremonies. The forms remain--we find there the casket 33 with the spirit all gone. You have the form of baptism, but few can 34 evoke the living spirit of baptism. The form will not suffice. If we 35 want to gain the living knowledge of the living truth, we have to be 36 truly initiated into it. That is the ideal.

37 The Guru must teach me and lead me into light, make me a 38 link in that chain of which he himself is a link. The man in the street 39 cannot claim to be a Guru. The Guru must be a man who has 40 known, has actually realised the Divine truth, has perceived himself 41 as the spirit. A mere talker cannot be the Guru. A talkative fool like 42 me can talk much, but cannot be the Guru. A true Guru will tell the 43 disciple, "Go and sin no more"; and no more can he sin, no more has 44 the person the power to sin.

45 I have seen such men in this life. I have read the Bible and all 46 such books; they are wonderful. But the living power you cannot 47 find in the books. The power that can transform life in a moment 48 can be found only in the living illumined souls, those shining lights 49 who appear among us from time to time. They alone are fit to be ²⁴⁰ ?Katha Upanishad, I.ii.5.

1 Gurus. You and I are only hollow talk-talk, not teachers. We are 2 disturbing the world more by talking, making bad vibrations. We 3 hope and pray and struggle on, and the day will come when we 4 shall arrive at the truth, and we shall not have to speak.

5 "The teacher was a boy of sixteen; he taught a man of eighty.
6 Silence was the method of the teacher; and the doubts of the 7 disciple vanished for ever."²⁴¹ That is the Guru. Just think, if you find 8 such a man, what faith and love you ought to have for that person!
9 Why, he is God Himself, nothing less than that! That is why Christ's 10 disciples worshipped him as God. The disciple must worship the 11 Guru as God Himself. All a man can know is the living God, God as 12 embodied in man, until he himself has realised God. How else 13 would he know God?

14 Here is a man in America, born nineteen hundred years after 15 Christ, who does not even belong to the same race as Christ, the 16 Jewish race. He has not seen Jesus or his family. He says, "Jesus 17 was God. If you do not believe it, you will go to hell". We can 18 understand how the disciples believed it--that Christ was God; he 19 was their Guru, and they must have believed he was God. But what 20 has this American got to do with the man born nineteen hundred 21 years ago? This young man tells me that I do not believe in Jesus 22 and therefore I shall have to go to hell. What does he know of 23 Jesus? He is fit for a lunatic asylum. This kind of belief will not do.
24 He will have to find his Guru.

25 Jesus may be born again, may come to you. Then, if you 26 worship him as God, you are all right. We must all wait till the Guru 27 comes, and the Guru must be worshipped as God. He is God, he is 28 nothing less than that. As you look at him, the Guru gradually melts 29 away and what is left? The Guru picture gives place to God Himself.
30 The Guru is the bright mask which God wears in order to come to 31 us. As we look steadily on, gradually the mask falls off and God is 32 revealed.

33 "I bow to the Guru who is the embodiment of the Bliss Divine, 34 the personification of the highest knowledge and the giver of the 35 greatest beatitude, who is pure, perfect, one without a second, 36 eternal, beyond pleasure and pain, beyond all thought and all 37 qualification, transcendental". Such is in reality the Guru. No 38 wonder the disciple looks upon him as God Himself and trusts him, 39 reveres him, obeys him, follows him unquestioningly. This is the 40 relation between the Guru and the disciple.

41 The next condition the disciple must fulfil is to conceive an 42 extreme desire to be free.

43 We are like moths plunging into the flaming fire, knowing that 44 it will burn us, knowing that the senses only burn us, that they only 45 enhance desire. "Desire is never satiated by enjoyment; enjoyment 46 only increases desire as butter fed into fire increases the fire."²⁴²
47 Desire is increased by desire. Knowing all this, people still plunge

1 into it all the time. Life after life they have been going after the 2 objects of desire, suffering extremely in consequence, yet they 3 cannot give up desire. Even religion, which should rescue them 4 from this terrible bondage of desire, they have made a means of 5 satisfying desire. Rarely do they ask God to free them from 6 bondage to the body and senses, from slavery to desires. Instead, 7 they pray to Him for health and prosperity, for long life: "O God, 8 cure my headache, give me some money or something!"

9 The circle of vision has become so narrow, so degraded, so 10 beastly, so animal! None is desiring anything beyond this body. Oh, 11 the terrible degradation, the terrible misery of it! What little flesh, 12 the five senses, the stomach! What is the world but a combination 13 of stomach and sex? Look at millions of men and women--that is 14 what they are living for. Take these away from them and they will 15 find their life empty, meaningless, and intolerable. Such are we.
16 And such is our mind; it is continually hankering for ways and 17 means to satisfy the hunger of the stomach and sex. All the time 18 this is going on. There is also endless suffering; these desires of the 19 body bring only momentary satisfaction and endless suffering. It is 20 like drinking a cup of which the surface layer is nectar, while 21 underneath all is poison. But we still hanker for all these things.

22 What can be done? Renunciation of the senses and desires is 23 the only way out of this misery. If you want to be spiritual, you must 24 renounce. This is the real test. Give up the world--this nonsense of 25 the senses. There is only one real desire: to know what is true, to be 26 spiritual. No more materialism, no more this egoism, I must become 27 spiritual. Strong, intense must be the desire. If a man's hands and 28 feet were so tied that he could not move and then if a burning piece 29 of charcoal were placed on his body, he would struggle with all his 30 power to throw it off. When I shall have that sort of extreme desire, 31 that restless struggle, to throw off this burning world, then the time 32 will have come for me to glimpse the Divine Truth.

33 Look at me. If I lose my little pocketbook with two or three 34 dollars in it, I go twenty times into the house to find that 35 pocketbook. The anxiety, the worry, and the struggle! If one of you 36 crosses me, I remember it twenty years, I cannot forgive and forget 37 it. For the little things of the senses I can struggle like that. Who is 38 there that struggles for God that way? "Children forget everything 39 in their play. The young are mad after the enjoyment of the senses; 40 they do not care for anything else. The old are brooding over their 41 past misdeeds" (Shankara). They are thinking of their past 42 enjoyments--old men that cannot have any enjoyment. Chewing the 43 cud--that is the best they can do. None crave for the Lord in the 44 same intense spirit with which they crave for the things of the 45 senses.

46 They all say that God is the Truth, the only thing that really 47 exists; that spirit alone is, not matter. Yet the things they seek of 48 God are rarely spirit. They ask always for material things. In their 49 prayers spirit is not separated from matter. Degradation--that is 50 what religion has turned out to be. The whole thing is becoming 51 sham. And the years are rolling on and nothing spiritual is being 52 attained. But man should hunger for one thing alone, the spirit,

1 because spirit alone exists. That is the ideal. If you cannot attain it
2 now, say, "I cannot do it; that is the ideal, I know, but I cannot follow
3 it yet." But that is not what you do. You degrade religion to your low 4 level and seek matter in the name of spirit. You are all atheists. You 5 do not believe in anything except the senses. "So-and-so said such-6 and-such--there may be something in it. Let us try and have the fun.
7 Possibly some benefit will come; possibly my broken leg will get 8 straight."

9 Miserable are the diseased people; they are great 10 worshippers of the Lord, for they hope that if they pray to Him He 11 will heal them. Not that that is altogether bad--if such prayers are 12 honest and if they remember that that is not religion. Shri Krishna 13 says in the Gita (VII.16), "Four classes of people worship Me: the 14 distressed, the seeker of material things, the inquirer, and the 15 knower of truth." People who are in distress approach God for 16 relief. If they are ill, they worship Him to be healed; if they lose 17 their wealth, they pray to Him to get it back. There are other people 18 who ask Him for all kinds of things, because they are full of 19 desires--name, fame, wealth, position and so on. They will say, "O 20 Virgin Mary, I will make an offering to you if I get what I want. If 21 you are successful in granting my prayer, I will worship God and 22 give you a part of everything." Men not so material as that, but still 23 with no faith in God, feel inclined to know about Him. They study 24 philosophies, read scriptures, listen to lectures, and so on. They are 25 the inquirers. The last class are those who worship God and know 26 Him. All these four classes of people are good, not bad. All of them 27 worship Him.

28 But we are trying to be disciples. Our sole concern is to know 29 the highest truth. Our goal is the loftiest. We have said big words to 30 ourselves--absolute realisation and all that. Let us measure up to 31 the words. Let us worship the spirit in spirit, standing on spirit. Let 32 the foundation be spirit, the middle spirit, the culmination spirit.
33 There will be no world anywhere. Let it go and whirl into space-- 34 who cares? Stand thou in the spirit! That is the goal. We know we 35 cannot reach it yet. Never mind. Do not despair, and do not drag 36 the ideal down. The important thing is: how much less you think of 37 the body, of yourself as matter--as dead, dull, insentient matter; 38 how much more you think of yourself as shining immortal being.
39 The more you think of yourself as shining immortal spirit, the more 40 eager you will be to be absolutely free of matter, body, and senses.
41 This is the intense desire to be free.

42 The fourth and last condition of discipleship is the 43 discrimination of the real from the unreal. There is only one thing 44 that is real--God. All the time the mind must be drawn to Him, 45 dedicated to Him. God exists, nothing else exists, everything else 46 comes and goes. Any desire for the world is illusion, because the 47 world is unreal. More and more the mind must become conscious of 48 God alone, until everything else appears as it really is--unreal.

49 These are the four conditions which one who wants to be a 50 disciple must fulfil; without fulfilling them he will not be able to 51 come in contact with the true Guru. And even if he is fortunate 52 enough to find him, he will not be quickened by the power that the 1 Guru may transmit. There cannot be any compromising of these 2 conditions. With the fulfilment of these conditions--with all these 3 preparations--the lotus of the disciple's heart will open, and the bee 4 shall come. Then the disciple knows that the Guru was within the 5 body, within himself. He opens out. He realises. He crosses the 6 ocean of life, goes beyond. He crosses this terrible ocean: and in 7 mercy, without a thought of gain or praise, he in his turn helps 8 others to cross.

IS VEDANTA THE FUTURE RELIGION?

(Delivered in San Francisco on April 8, 1900)

Those of you who have been attending my lectures for the last month or so must, by this time, be familiar with the ideas contained in the Vedanta philosophy. Vedanta is the most ancient religion of the world; but it can never be said to have become popular. Therefore the question "Is it going to be the religion of the future?" is very difficult to answer.

At the start, I may tell you that I do not know whether it will ever be the religion of the vast majority of men. Will it ever be able to take hold of one whole nation such as the United States of America? Possibly it may. However, that is the question we want to discuss this afternoon.

I shall begin by telling you what Vedanta is not, and then I shall tell you what it is. But you must remember that, with all its emphasis on impersonal principles, Vedanta is not antagonistic to anything, though it does not compromise or give up the truths which it considers fundamental.

You all know that certain things are necessary to make a religion. First of all, there is the book. The power of the book is simply marvellous! Whatever it be, the book is the centre round which human allegiance gathers. Not one religion is living today but has a book. With all its rationalism and tall talk, humanity still clings to the books. In your country every attempt to start a religion without a book has failed. In India sects rise with great success, but within a few years they die down, because there is no book behind them. So in every other country.

Study the rise and fall of the Unitarian movement. It represents the best thought of your nation. Why should it not have spread like the Methodist, Baptist, and other Christian denominations? Because there was no book. On the other hand, think of the Jews. A handful of men, driven from one country to another, still hold together, because they have a book. Think of the Parsees--only a hundred thousand in the world. About a million are all that remain of the Jains in India. And do you know that these handfuls of Parsees and Jains still keep on just because of their books? The religions that are living at the present day--every one of them has a book.

The second requisite, to make a religion, is veneration for some person. He is worshipped either as the Lord of the world or as the great Teacher. Men must worship some embodied man! They must have the Incarnation or the prophet or the great leader. You find it in every religion today. Hindus and Christians--they have Incarnations: Buddhists, Mohammedans, and Jews have prophets. But it is all about the same--all their veneration twines round some person or persons.

The third requisite seems to be that a religion, to be strong

1 and sure of itself, must believe that it alone is the truth; otherwise it 2 cannot influence people.

3 Liberalism dies because it is dry, because it cannot rouse
4 fanaticism in the human mind, because it cannot bring out hatred
5 for everything except itself. That is why liberalism is bound to go 6 down again and again. It can influence only small numbers of 7 people. The reason is not hard to see. Liberalism tries to make us 8 unselfish. But we do not want to be unselfish--we see no immediate 9 gain in unselfishness; we gain more by being selfish. We accept 10 liberalism as long as we are poor, have nothing. The moment we 11 acquire money and power, we turn very conservative. The poor man 12 is a democrat. When he becomes rich, he becomes an aristocrat. In 13 religion, too, human nature acts in the same way.

14 A prophet arises, promises all kinds of rewards to those who 15 will follow him and eternal doom to those who will not. Thus he 16 makes his ideas spread. All existent religions that are spreading are 17 tremendously fanatic. The more a sect hates other sects, the 18 greater is its success and the more people it draws into its fold. My 19 conclusion, after travelling over a good part of the world and living 20 with many races, and in view of the conditions prevailing in the 21 world, is that the present state of things is going to continue, in 22 spite of much talk of universal brotherhood.

23 Vedanta does not believe in any of these teachings. First, it 24 does not believe in a book--that is the difficulty to start with. It 25 denies the authority of any book over any other book. It denies 26 emphatically that any one book can contain all the truths about 27 God, soul, the ultimate reality. Those of you who have read the 28 Upanishads remember that they say again and again, "Not by the 29 reading of books can we realise the Self."

30 Second, it finds veneration for some particular person still 31 more difficult to uphold. Those of you who are students of Vedanta-- 32 by Vedanta is always meant the Upanishads--know that this is the 33 only religion that does not cling to any person. Not one man or 34 woman has ever become the object of worship among the 35 Vedantins. It cannot be. A man is no more worthy of worship than 36 any bird, any worm. We are all brothers. The difference is only in 37 degree. I am exactly the same as the lowest worm. You see how 38 very little room there is in Vedanta for any man to stand ahead of us 39 and for us to go and worship him--he dragging us on and we being 40 saved by him. Vedanta does not give you that. No book, no man to 41 worship, nothing.

42 A still greater difficulty is about God. You want to be 43 democratic in this country. It is the democratic God that Vedanta 44 teaches.

45 You have a government, but the government is impersonal.
46 Yours is not an autocratic government, and yet it is more powerful 47 than any monarchy in the world. Nobody seems to understand that 48 the real power, the real life, the real strength is in the unseen, the 49 impersonal, the nobody. As a mere person separated from others, 50 you are nothing, but as an impersonal unit of the nation that rules
51 itself, you are tremendous. You are all one in the government--you

1 are a tremendous power. But where exactly is the power? Each man
2 is the power. There is no king. I see everybody equally the same. I
3 have not to take off my hat and bow low to anyone. Yet there is a 4 tremendous power in each man.

5 Vedanta is just that. Its God is not the monarch sitting on a 6 throne, entirely apart. There are those who like their God that way-- 7 a God to be feared and propitiated. They burn candles and crawl in 8 the dust before Him. They want a king to rule them--they believe in 9 a king in heaven to rule them all. The king is gone from this country 10 at least. Where is the king of heaven now? Just where the earthly 11 king is. In this country the king has entered every one of you. You 12 are all kings in this country. So with the religion of Vedanta. You are 13 all Gods. One God is not sufficient. You are all Gods, says the 14 Vedanta.

15 This makes Vedanta very difficult. It does not teach the old 16 idea of God at all. In place of that God who sat above the clouds and 17 managed the affairs of the world without asking our permission, 18 who created us out of nothing just because He liked it and made us 19 undergo all this misery just because He liked it, Vedanta teaches 20 the God that is in everyone, has become everyone and everything.
21 His majesty the king has gone from this country; the Kingdom of 22 Heaven went from Vedanta hundreds of years ago.

23 India cannot give up his majesty the king of the earth--that is 24 why Vedanta cannot become the religion of India. There is a chance 25 of Vedanta becoming the religion of your country because of 26 democracy. But it can become so only if you can and do clearly 27 understand it, if you become real men and women, not people with 28 vague ideas and superstitions in your brains, and if you want to be 29 truly spiritual, since Vedanta is concerned only with spirituality.

30 What is the idea of God in heaven? Materialism. The Vedantic 31 idea is the infinite principle of God embodied in every one of us.
32 God sitting up on a cloud! Think of the utter blasphemy of it! It is 33 materialism--downright materialism. When babies think this way, it 34 may be all right, but when grown-up men try to teach such things, it 35 is downright disgusting--that is what it is. It is all matter, all body 36 idea, the gross idea, the sense idea. Every bit of it is clay and 37 nothing but clay. Is that religion? It is no more religion than is the 38 Mumbo Jumbo "religion" of Africa. God is spirit and He should be 39 worshipped in spirit and in truth. Does spirit live only in heaven?
40 What is spirit? We are all spirit. Why is it we do not realise it? What 41 makes you different from me? Body and nothing else. Forget the 42 body, and all is spirit.

43 These are what Vedanta has not to give. No book. No man to 44 be singled out from the rest of mankind--"You are worms, and we 45 are the Lord God!"--none of that. If you are the Lord God, I also am 46 the Lord God. So Vedanta knows no sin. There are mistakes but no 47 sin; and in the long run everything is going to be all right. No 48 Satan--none of this nonsense. Vedanta believes in only one sin, only 49 one in the world, and it is this: the moment you think you are a 50 sinner or anybody is a sinner, that is sin. From that follows every 51 other mistake or what is usually called sin. There have been many

1 mistakes in our lives. But we are going on. Glory be unto us that we 2 have made mistakes! Take a long look at your past life. If your 3 present condition is good, it has been caused by all the past 4 mistakes as well as successes. Glory be unto success! Glory be unto 5 mistakes! Do not look back upon what has been done. Go ahead!

6 You see, Vedanta proposes no sin nor sinner. No God to be 7 afraid of. He is the one being of whom we shall never be afraid, 8 because He is our own Self. There is only one being of whom you 9 cannot possibly be afraid; He is that. Then is not he really the most 10 superstitious person who has fear of God? There may be someone 11 who is afraid of his shadow; but even he is not afraid of himself.
12 God is man's very Self. He is that one being whom you can never 13 possibly fear. What is all this nonsense, the fear of the Lord 14 entering into a man, making him tremble and so on? Lord bless us 15 that we are not all in the lunatic asylum! But if most of us are not 16 lunatics, why should we invent such ideas as fear of God? Lord 17 Buddha said that the whole human race is lunatic, more or less. It is 18 perfectly true, it seems.

19 No book, no person, no Personal God. All these must go.
20 Again, the senses must go. We cannot be bound to the senses. At 21 present we are tied down--like persons dying of cold in the glaciers.
22 They feel such a strong desire to sleep, and when their friends try 23 to wake them, warning them of death, they say, "Let me die, I want 24 to sleep." We all cling to the little things of the senses, even if we 25 are ruined thereby: we forget there are much greater things.

26 There is a Hindu legend that the Lord was once incarnated on 27 earth as a pig. He had a pig mate and in course of time several little 28 pigs were born to Him. He was very happy with His family, living in 29 the mire, squealing with joy, forgetting His divine glory and 30 lordship. The gods became exceedingly concerned and came to the 31 earth to beg Him to give up the pig body and return to heaven. But 32 the Lord would have none of that; He drove them away. He said He 33 was very happy and did not want to be disturbed. Seeing no other 34 course, the gods destroyed the pig body of the Lord. At once He 35 regained His divine majesty and was astonished that He could have 36 found any joy in being a pig.

37 People behave in the same way. Whenever they hear of the 38 Impersonal God, they say, "What will become of my individuality?-- 39 my individuality will go!" Next time that thought comes, remember 40 the pig, and then think what an infinite mine of happiness you have, 41 each one of you. How pleased you are with your present condition!
42 But when you realise what you truly are, you will be astonished that 43 you were unwilling to give up your sense-life. What is there in your 44 personality? It is any better than that pig life? And this you do not 45 want to give up! Lord bless us all!

46 What does Vedanta teach us? In the first place, it teaches that 47 you need not even go out of yourself to know the truth. All the past 48 and all the future are here in the present. No man ever saw the 49 past. Did any one of you see the past? When you think you are 50 knowing the past, you only imagine the past in the present moment.
51 To see the future, you would have to bring it down to the present,

1 which is the only reality--the rest is imagination. This present is all 2 that is. There is only the One. All is here right now. One moment in 3 infinite time is quite as complete and all-inclusive as every other 4 moment. All that is and was and will be is here in the present. Let 5 anybody try to imagine anything outside of it--he will not succeed.

6 What religion can paint a heaven which is not like this earth?
7 And it is all art, only this art is being made known to us gradually.
8 We, with five senses, look upon this world and find it gross, having 9 colour, form, sound, and the like. Suppose I develop an electric 10 sense--all will change. Suppose my senses grow finer--you will all 11 appear changed. If I change, you change. If I go beyond the power 12 of the senses, you will appear as spirit and God. Things are not 13 what they seem.

14 We shall understand this by and by, and then see it: all the 15 heavens--everything--are here, now, and they really are nothing but 16 appearances on the Divine Presence. This Presence is much greater 17 than all the earths and heavens. People think that this world is bad 18 and imagine that heaven is somewhere else. This world is not bad.
19 It is God Himself if you know it. It is a hard thing even to 20 understand, harder than to believe. The murderer who is going to 21 be hanged tomorrow is all God, perfect God. It is very hard to 22 understand, surely; but it can be understood.

23 Therefore Vedanta formulates, not universal brotherhood, but 24 universal oneness. I am the same as any other man, as any animal-- 25 good, bad, anything. It is one body, one mind, one soul throughout.
26 Spirit never dies. There is no death anywhere, not even for the 27 body. Not even the mind dies. How can even the body die? One leaf 28 may fall--does the tree die? The universe is my body. See how it 29 continues. All minds are mine. With all feet I walk. Through all 30 mouths I speak. In everybody I reside.

31 Why can I not feel it? Because of that individuality, that 32 piggishness. You have become bound up with this mind and can 33 only be here, not there. What is immortality? How few reply, "It is 34 this very existence of ours!" Most people think this is all mortal and 35 dead--that God is not here, that they will become immortal by going 36 to heaven. They imagine that they will see God after death. But if 37 they do not see Him here and now, they will not see Him after 38 death. Though they all believe in immortality, they do not know that 39 immortality is not gained by dying and going to heaven, but by 40 giving up this piggish individuality, by not tying ourselves down to 41 one little body. Immortality is knowing ourselves as one with all, 42 living in all bodies, perceiving through all minds. We are bound to 43 feel in other bodies than this one. We are bound to feel in other 44 bodies. What is sympathy? Is there any limit to this sympathy, this 45 feeling in our bodies? It is quite possible that the time will come 46 when I shall feel through the whole universe.

1 What is the gain? The pig body is hard to give up; we are 2 sorry to lose the enjoyment of our one little pig body! Vedanta does 3 not say, "Give it up": it says, "Transcend it". No need of asceticism-- 4 better would be the enjoyment of two bodies, better three, living in 5 more bodies than one! When I can enjoy through the whole 6 universe, the whole universe is my body.

7 There are many who feel horrified when they hear these 8 teachings. They do not like to be told that they are not just little pig 9 bodies, created by a tyrant God. I tell them, "Come up!" They say 10 they are born in sin--they cannot come up except through 11 someone's grace. I say, "You are Divine! They answer, "You 12 blasphemer, how dare you speak so? How can a miserable creature 13 be God? We are sinners!" I get very much discouraged at times, you 14 know. Hundreds of men and women tell me, "If there is no hell, how 15 can there be any religion?" If these people go to hell of their own 16 will, who can prevent them?

17 Whatever you dream and think of, you create. If it is hell, you 18 die and see hell. If it is evil and Satan, you get a Satan. If ghosts, 19 you get ghosts. Whatever you think, that you become. If you have to 20 think, think good thoughts, great thoughts. This taking for granted 21 that you are weak little worms! By declaring we are weak, we 22 become weak, we do not become better. Suppose we put out the 23 light, close the windows, and call the room dark. Think of the 24 nonsense! What good does it do me to say I am a sinner? If I am in 25 the dark, let me light a lamp. The whole thing is gone. Yet how 26 curious is the nature of men! Though always conscious that the 27 universal mind is behind their life, they think more of Satan, of 28 darkness and lies. You tell them the truth--they do not see it; they 29 like darkness better.

30 This forms the one great question asked by Vedanta: Why are 31 people so afraid? The answer is that they have made themselves 32 helpless and dependent on others. We are so lazy, we do not want to 33 do anything for ourselves. We want a Personal God, a saviour or a 34 prophet to do everything for us. The very rich man never walks, 35 always goes in the carriage; but in the course of years, he wakes up 36 one day paralysed all over. Then he begins to feel that the way he 37 had lived was not good after all. No man can walk for me. Every 38 time one did, it was to my injury. If everything is done for a man by 39 another, he will lose the use of his own limbs. Anything we do 40 ourselves, that is the only thing we do. Anything that is done for us 41 by another never can be ours. You cannot learn spiritual truths from 42 my lectures. If you have learnt anything, I was only the spark that 43 brought it out, made it flash. That is all the prophets and teachers 44 can do. All this running after help is foolishness.

45 You know, there are bullock carts in India. Usually two bulls 46 are harnessed to a cart, and sometimes a sheaf of straw is dangled 47 at the tip of the pole, a little in front of the animals but beyond their 48 reach. The bulls try continually to feed upon the straw, but never 49 succeed. This is exactly how we are helped! We think we are going 50 to get security, strength, wisdom, happiness from the outside. We 51 always hope but never realise our hope. Never does any help come 52 from the outside.

1 There is no help for man. None ever was, none is, and none
2 will be. Why should there be? Are you not men and women? Are the 3 lords of the earth to be helped by others? Are you not ashamed?
4 You will be helped when you are reduced to dust. But you are spirit.
5 Pull yourself out of difficulties by yourself! Save yourself by 6 yourself! There is none to help you--never was. To think that there 7 is, is sweet delusion. It comes to no good.

8 There came a Christian to me once and said, "You are a 9 terrible sinner." I answered, "Yes, I am. Go on." He was a Christian 10 missionary. That man would not give me any rest. When I see him, I 11 fly. He said, "I have very good things for you. You are a sinner and 12 you are going to hell." I replied, "Very good, what else?" I asked 13 him, "Where are you going?" "I am going to heaven", he answered. I 14 said, "I will go to hell." That day he gave me up.

15 Here comes a Christian man and he says, "You are all 16 doomed; but if you believe in this doctrine, Christ will help you out."
17 If this were true--but of course it is nothing but superstition--there 18 would be no wickedness in the Christian countries. Let us believe in 19 it--believing costs nothing--but why is there no result? If I ask, "Why 20 is it that there are so many wicked people?" they say, "We have to 21 work more." Trust in God, but keep your powder dry! Pray to God, 22 and let God come and help you out! But it is I who struggle, pray, 23 and worship; it is I who work out my problems--and God takes the 24 credit. This is not good. I never do it.

25 Once I was invited to a dinner. The hostess asked me to say 26 grace. I said, "I will say grace to you, madam. My grace and thanks 27 are to you." When I work, I say grace to myself. Praise be unto me 28 that I worked hard and acquired what I have!

29 All the time you work hard and bless somebody else, because 30 you are superstitious, you are afraid. No more of these 31 superstitions bred through thousands of years! It takes a little hard 32 work to become spiritual. Superstitions are all materialism, because 33 they are all based on the consciousness of body, body, body. No 34 spirit there. Spirit has no superstitions--it is beyond the vain desires 35 of the body.

1 But here and there these vain desires are being projected 2 even into the realm of the spirit. I have attended several 3 spiritualistic meetings. In one, the leader was a woman. She said to 4 me, "Your mother and grandfather came to me" She said that they 5 greeted her and talked to her. But my mother is living yet! People 6 like to think that even after death their relatives continue to exist in 7 the same bodies, and the spiritualists play on their superstitions. I 8 would be very sorry to know that my dead father is still wearing his 9 filthy body. People get consolation from this, that their fathers are 10 all encased in matter. In another place they brought me Jesus 11 Christ. I said, "Lord, how do you do?" It makes me feel hopeless. If 12 that great saintly man is still wearing the body, what is to become of 13 us poor creatures? The spiritualists did not allow me to touch any of 14 those gentlemen. Even if these were real, I would not want them. I 15 think, "Mother, Mother! atheists--that is what people really are! Just 16 the desire for these five senses! Not satisfied with what they have 17 here, they want more of the same when they die!"

18 What is the God of Vedanta? He is principle, not person. You 19 and I are all Personal Gods. The absolute God of the universe, the 20 creator, preserver, and destroyer of the universe, is impersonal 21 principle. You and I, the cat, rat, devil, and ghost, all these are Its 22 persons--all are Personal Gods. You want to worship Personal Gods.
23 It is the worship of your own self. If you take my advice, you will 24 never enter any church. Come out and go and wash off. Wash 25 yourself again and again until you are cleansed of all the 26 superstitions that have clung to you through the ages. Or, perhaps, 27 you do not like to do so, since you do not wash yourself so often in 28 this country--frequent washing is an Indian custom, not a custom of 29 your society.

30 I have been asked many times, "Why do you laugh so much 31 and make so many jokes?" I become serious sometimes--when I 32 have stomach-ache! The Lord is all blissfulness. He is the reality 33 behind all that exists, He is the goodness, the truth in everything.
34 You are His incarnations. That is what is glorious. The nearer you 35 are to Him, the less you will have occasions to cry or weep. The 36 further we are from Him, the more will long faces come. The more 37 we know of Him, the more misery vanishes. If one who lives in the 38 Lord becomes miserable, what is the use of living in Him? What is 39 the use of such a God? Throw Him overboard into the Pacific 40 Ocean! We do not want Him!

41 But God is the infinite, impersonal being--ever existent, 42 unchanging, immortal, fearless; and you are all His incarnations, 43 His embodiments. This is the God of Vedanta, and His heaven is 44 everywhere. In this heaven dwell all the Personal Gods there are-- 45 you yourselves. Exit praying and laying flowers in the temples!

46 What do you pray for? To go to heaven, to get something, and 47 let somebody else not have it. "Lord, I want more food! Let 48 somebody else starve!" What an idea of God who is the reality, the 49 infinite, ever blessed existence in which there is neither part nor 50 flaw, who is ever free, ever pure, ever perfect! We attribute to Him 51 all our human characteristics, functions, and limitations. He must 52 bring us food and give us clothes. As a matter of fact we have to do

1 all these things ourselves and nobody else ever did them for us.
2 That is the plain truth.

3 But you rarely think of this. You imagine there is God of whom 4 you are special favourites, who does things for you when you ask 5 Him; and you do not ask of Him favours for all men, all beings, but 6 only for yourself, your own family, your own people. When the 7 Hindu is starving, you do not care; at that time you do not think that 8 the God of the Christians is also the God of the Hindus. Our whole 9 idea of God, our praying, our worshipping, all are vitiated by our 10 ignorance, our foolish idea of ourselves as body. You may not like 11 what I am saying. You may curse me today, but tomorrow you will 12 bless me.

13 We must become thinkers. Every birth is painful. We must get 14 out of materialism. My Mother would not let us get out of Her 15 clutches; nevertheless we must try. This struggle is all the worship 16 there is; all the rest is mere shadow. You are the Personal God. Just 17 now I am worshipping you. This is the greatest prayer. Worship the 18 whole world in that sense--by serving it. This standing on a high 19 platform, I know, does not appear like worship. But if it is service, it 20 is worship.

21 The infinite truth is never to be acquired. It is here all the 22 time, undying and unborn. He, the Lord of the universe, is in every 23 one. There is but one temple--the body. It is the only temple that 24 ever existed. In this body, He resides, the Lord of souls and the King 25 of kings. We do not see that, so we make stone images of Him and 26 build temples over them. Vedanta has been in India always, but 27 India is full of these temples--and not only temples, but also caves 28 containing carved images. "The fool, dwelling on the bank of the 29 Ganga, digs a well for water!" Such are we! Living in the midst of 30 God--we must go and make images. We project Him in the form of 31 the image, while all the time He exists in the temple of our body. We 32 are lunatics, and this is the great delusion.

33 Worship everything as God--every form is His temple. All else 34 is delusion. Always look within, never without. Such is the God that 35 Vedanta preaches, and such is His worship. Naturally there is no 36 sect, no creed, no caste in Vedanta. How can this religion be the 37 national religion of India?

38 Hundreds of castes! If one man touches another man's food, 39 he cries out, "Lord help me, I am polluted!" When I returned to 40 India after my visit to the West, several orthodox Hindus raised a 41 howl against my association with the Western people and my 42 breaking the rules of orthodoxy. They did not like me to teach the 43 truths of the Vedas to the people of the West.

44 But how can there be these distinctions and differences? How 45 can the rich man turn up his nose at the poor man, and the learned 46 at the ignorant, if we are all spirit and all the same? Unless society 47 changes, how can such a religion as Vedanta prevail? It will take 48 thousands of years to have large numbers of truly rational human 49 beings. It is very hard to show men new things, to give them great 50 ideas. It is harder still to knock off old superstitions, very hard; they 51 do not die easily. With all his education, even the learned man

1 becomes frightened in the dark--the nursery tales come into his 2 mind, and he see ghosts.

3 The meaning of the word "Veda", from which the word 4 "Vedanta" comes, is knowledge. All knowledge is Veda, infinite as 5 God is infinite. Nobody ever creates knowledge. Did you ever see 6 knowledge created? It is only discovered--what was covered is 7 uncovered. It is always here, because it is God Himself. Past, 8 present, and future knowledge, all exist in all of us. We discover it, 9 that is all. All this knowledge is God Himself. The Vedas are a great 10 Sanskrit book. In our country we go down on our knees before the 11 man who reads the Vedas, and we do not care for the man who is 12 studying physics. That is superstition; it is not Vedanta at all. It is 13 utter materialism. With God every knowledge is sacred. Knowledge 14 is God. Infinite knowledge abides within every one in the fullest 15 measure. You are not really ignorant, though you may appear to be 16 so. You are incarnations of God, all of you. You are incarnations of 17 the Almighty, Omnipresent, Divine Principle. You may laugh at me 18 now, but the time will come when you will understand. You must.
19 Nobody will be left behind.

20 What is the goal? This that I have spoken of--Vedanta--is not a 21 new religion. So old--as old as God Himself. It is not confined to any 22 time and place, it is everywhere. Everybody knows this truth. We 23 are all working it out. The goal of the whole universe is that. This 24 applies even to external nature--every atom is rushing towards that 25 goal. And do you think that any of the infinite pure souls are left 26 without knowledge of the supreme truth? All have it, all are going 27 to the same goal--the discovery of the innate Divinity. The maniac, 28 the murderer, the superstitious man, the man who is lynched in this 29 country--all are travelling to the same goal. Only that which we do 30 ignorantly we ought to do knowingly, and better.

31 The unity of all existence--you all have it already within 32 yourselves. None was ever born without it. However you may deny 33 it, it continually asserts itself. What is human love? It is more or less 34 an affirmation of that unity: "I am one with thee, my wife, my child, 35 my friend!" Only you are affirming the unity ignorantly. "None ever 36 loved the husband for the husband's sake, but for the sake of the 37 Self that is in the husband." The wife finds unity there. The husband 38 sees himself in the wife--instinctively he does it, but he cannot do it 39 knowingly, consciously.

40 The whole universe is one existence. There cannot be 41 anything else. Out of diversities we are all going towards this 42 universal existence. Families into tribes, tribes into races, races into 43 nations, nations into humanity--how many wills going to the One! It 44 is all knowledge, all science--the realisation of this unity.

45 Unity is knowledge, diversity is ignorance. This knowledge is 46 your birthright. I have not to teach it to you. There never were 47 different religions in the world. We are all destined to have 48 salvation, whether we will it or not. You have to attain it in the long 49 run and become free, because it is your nature to be free. We are 50 already free, only we do not know it, and we do not know what we 51 have been doing. Throughout all religious systems and ideals is the 1 same morality; one thing only is preached: "Be unselfish, love

2 others." One says, "Because Jehovah commanded." "Allah," shouted 3 Mohammed. Another cries, "Jesus". If it was only the command of 4 Jehovah, how could it come to those who never knew Jehovah? If it 5 was Jesus alone who gave this command, how could any one who 6 never knew Jesus get it? If only Vishnu, how could the Jews get it, 7 who never were acquainted with that gentleman? There is another 8 source, greater than all of them. Where is it? In the eternal temple 9 of God, in the souls of all beings from the lowest to the highest. It is 10 there--that infinite unselfishness, infinite sacrifice, infinite 11 compulsion to go back to unity.

12 We have seemingly been divided, limited, because of our 13 ignorance; and we have become as it were the little Mrs. so-and-so 14 and Mr. so-and-so. But all nature is giving this delusion the lie every 15 moment. I am not that little man or little woman cut off from all 16 else; I am the one universal existence. The soul in its own majesty is 17 rising up every moment and declaring its own intrinsic Divinity.

18 This Vedanta is everywhere, only you must become conscious 19 of it. These masses of foolish beliefs and superstitions hinder us in 20 our progress. If we can, let us throw them off and understand that 21 God is spirit to be worshipped in spirit and in truth. Try to be 22 materialists no more! Throw away all matter! The conception of 23 God must be truly spiritual. All the different ideas of God, which are 24 more or less materialistic, must go. As man becomes more and 25 more spiritual, he has to throw off all these ideas and leave them 26 behind. As a matter of fact, in every country there have always been 27 a few who have been strong enough to throw away all matter and 28 stand out in the shining light, worshipping the spirit by the spirit.

29 If Vedanta--this conscious knowledge that all is one spirit-- 30 spreads, the whole of humanity will become spiritual. But is it 31 possible? I do not know. Not within thousands of years. The old 32 superstitions must run out. You are all interested in how to 33 perpetuate all your superstitions. Then there are the ideas of the 34 family brother, the caste brother, the national brother. All these are 35 barriers to the realisation of Vedanta. Religion has been religion to 36 very few.

37 Most of those who have worked in the field of religion all over 38 the world have really been political workers. That has been the 39 history of human beings. They have rarely tried to live up 40 uncompromisingly to the truth. They have always worshipped the 41 god called society; they have been mostly concerned with upholding 42 what the masses believe--their superstitions, their weakness. They 43 do not try to conquer nature but to fit into nature, nothing else. God 44 to India and preach a new creed--they will not listen to it. But if you 45 tell them it is from the Vedas--"That is good!" they will say. Here I 46 can preach this doctrine, and you--how many of you take me
47 seriously? But the truth is all here, and I must tell you the truth.

1 There is another side to the question. Everyone says that the 2 highest, the pure, truth cannot be realised all at once by all, that 3 men have to be led to it gradually through worship, prayer, and 4 other kinds of prevalent religious practices. I am not sure whether 5 that is the right method or not. In India I work both ways.

6 In Calcutta, I have all these images and temples--in the name 7 of God and the Vedas, of the Bible and Christ and Buddha. Let it be 8 tried. But on the heights of the Himalayas I have a place where I 9 am determined nothing shall enter except pure truth. There I want 10 to work out this idea about which I have spoken to you today. There 11 are an Englishman and an Englishwoman in charge of the place.
12 The purpose is to train seekers of truth and to bring up children 13 without fear and without superstition. They shall not hear about 14 Christs and Buddhas and Shivas and Vishnus--none of these. They 15 shall learn, from the start, to stand upon their own feet. They shall 16 learn from their childhood that God is the spirit and should be 17 worshipped in spirit and in truth. Everyone must be looked upon as 18 spirit. That is the ideal. I do not know what success will come of it.
19 Today I am preaching the thing I like. I wish I had been brought up 20 entirely on that, without all the dualistic superstitions.

21 Sometimes I agree that there is some good in the dualistic
22 method: it helps many who are weak. If a man wants you to show 23 him the polar star, you first point out to him a bright star near it, 24 then a less bright star, then a dim star, and then the polar star. This 25 process makes it easy for him to see it. All the various practices and 26 trainings, Bibles and Gods, are but the rudiments of religion, the 27 kindergartens of religion.

28 But then I think of the other side. How long will the world 29 have to wait to reach the truth if it follows this slow, gradual 30 process? How long? And where is the surety that it will ever 31 succeed to any appreciable degree? It has not so far. After all, 32 gradual or not gradual, easy or not easy to the weak, is not the 33 dualistic method based on falsehood? Are not all the prevalent 34 religious practices often weakening and therefore wrong? They are 35 based on a wrong idea, a wrong view of man. Would two wrong 36 make one right? Would the lie become truth? Would darkness 37 become light?

38 I am the servant of a man who has passed away. I am only the 39 messenger. I want to make the experiment. The teachings of 40 Vedanta I have told you about were never really experimented with 41 before. Although Vedanta is the oldest philosophy in the world, it 42 has always become mixed up with superstitions and everything 43 else.

44 Christ said, "I and my father are one", and you repeat it. Yet it 45 has not helped mankind. For nineteen hundred years men have not 46 understood that saying. They make Christ the saviour of men. He is 47 God and we are worms! Similarly in India. In every country, this 48 sort of belief is the backbone of every sect. For thousands of years 49 millions and millions all over the world have been taught to worship
50 the Lord of the world, the Incarnations, the saviours, the prophets.
51 They have been taught to consider themselves helpless, miserable

1 creatures and to depend upon the mercy of some person or persons 2 for salvation. There are no doubt many marvellous things in such 3 beliefs. But even at their best, they are but kindergartens of 4 religion, and they have helped but little. Men are still hypnotised 5 into abject degradation. However, there are some strong souls who 6 get over that illusion. The hour comes when great men shall arise 7 and cast off these kindergartens of religion and shall make vivid 8 and powerful the true religion, the worship of the spirit by the 9 spirit.

THE STRUGGLE FOR EXPANSION²⁴³

The old dilemma, whether the tree precedes the seed or the seed the tree, runs through all our forms of knowledge. Whether intelligence is first in the order of being or matter; whether the ideal is first or the external manifestation; whether freedom is our true nature or bondage of law; whether thought creates matter or matter thought; whether the incessant change in nature precedes the idea of rest or the idea of rest precedes the idea of change--all these are questions of the same insoluble nature. Like the rise and fall of a series of waves, they follow one another in an invariable succession and men take this side or that according to their tastes or education or peculiarity of temperaments.

For instance, if it be said on the one hand that, seeing the adjustment in nature of different parts, it is clear that it is the effect of intelligent work; on the other hand it may be argued that intelligence itself being created by matter and force in the course of evolution could not have been before this world. If it be said that the production of every form must be preceded by an ideal in the mind, it can be argued, with equal force, that the ideal was itself created by various external experiences. On the one hand, the appeal is to our ever-present idea of freedom; on the other, to the fact that nothing in the universe being causeless, everything, both mental and physical, is rigidly bound by the law of causation. If it be affirmed that, seeing the changes of the body induced by volition, it is evident that thought is the creator of this body, it is equally clear that as change in the body induces a change in the thought, the body must have produced the mind. If it be argued that the universal change must be the outcome of a preceding rest, equally logical argument can be adduced to show that the idea of unchangeability is only an illusory relative notion, brought about by the comparative differences in motion.

Thus in the ultimate analysis all knowledge resolves itself into this vicious circle: the indeterminate interdependence of cause and effect. Judging by the laws of reasoning, such knowledge is incorrect; and the most curious fact is that this knowledge is proved to be incorrect, not by comparison with knowledge which is true, but by the very laws which depend for their basis upon the selfsame vicious circle. It is clear, therefore, that the peculiarity of all our knowledge is that it proves its own insufficiency. Again, we cannot say that it is unreal, for all the reality we know and can think of is within this knowledge. Nor can we deny that it is sufficient for all practical purposes. This state of human knowledge which embraces within its scope both the external and the internal worlds is called Maya. It is unreal because it proves its own incorrectness. It is real in the sense of being sufficient for all the needs of the animal man.

²⁴³ Written by the Swami during his first visit to America in answer to questions put by a Western disciple.

1 Acting in the external world Maya manifests itself as the two 2 powers of attraction and repulsion. In the internal its 3 manifestations are desire and non-desire (Pravritti and Nivritti).
4 The whole universe is trying to rush outwards. Each atom is trying 5 to fly off from its centre. In the internal world, each thought is 6 trying to go beyond control. Again each particle in the external 7 world is checked by another force, the centripetal, and drawn 8 towards the centre. Similarly in the thought-world the controlling 9 power is checking all these outgoing desires.

10 Desires of materialisation, that is, being dragged down more 11 and more to the plane of mechanical action, belong to the animal 12 man. It is only when the desire to prevent all such bondage to the 13 senses arises that religion dawns in the heart of man. Thus we see 14 that the whole scope of religion is to prevent man from falling into 15 the bondage of the senses and to help him to assert his freedom.
16 The first effort of this power of Nivritti towards that end is called 17 morality. The scope of all morality is to prevent this degradation 18 and break this bondage. All morality can be divided into the positive 19 and the negative elements; it says either, "Do this" or "Do not do 20 this". When it says, "Do not", it is evident that it is a check to a 21 certain desire which would make a man a slave. When it says, "Do", 22 its scope is to show the way to freedom and to the breaking down of 23 a certain degradation which has already seized the human heart.

24 Now this morality is only possible if there be a liberty to be 25 attained by man. Apart from the question of the chances of 26 attaining perfect liberty, it is clear that the whole universe is a case 27 of struggle to expand, or in other words, to attain liberty. This 28 infinite space is not sufficient for even one atom. The struggle for 29 expansion must go on eternally until perfect liberty is attained. It 30 cannot be said that this struggle to gain freedom is to avoid pain or 31 to attain pleasure. The lowest grade of beings, who can have no 32 such feeling, are also struggling for expansion; and according to 33 many, man himself is the expansion of these very beings.

THE BIRTH OF RELIGION²⁴⁴

The beautiful flowers of the forest with their many-coloured petals, nodding their heads, jumping, leaping, playing with every breeze; the beautiful birds with their gorgeous plumage, their sweet songs echoing through every forest glade--they were there yesterday, my solace, my companions, and today they are gone--where? My playmates, the companions of my joys and sorrows, my pleasures and pastime--they also are gone--where? Those that nursed me when I was a child, who all through their lives had but one thought for me--that of doing everything for me--they also are gone. Everyone, everything is gone, is going, and will go. Where do they go? This was the question that pressed for an answer in the mind of the primitive man. "Why so?" you may ask, "Did he not see everything decomposed, reduced to dust before him? Why should he have troubled his head at all about where they went?"

To the primitive man everything is living in the first place, and to him death in the sense of annihilation has no meaning at all. People come to him, go away, and come again. Sometimes they go away and do not come. Therefore in the most ancient language of the world death is always expressed by some sort of going. This is the beginning of religion. Thus the primitive man was searching everywhere for a solution of his difficulty--where do they all go?

There is the morning sun radiant in his glory, bringing light and warmth and joy to a sleeping world. Slowly he travels and, alas, he also disappears, down, down below!

But the next day he appears again--glorious, beautiful! And there is the lotus--that wonderful flower in the Nile, the Indus, and the Tigris, the birth-places of civilisation--opening in the morning as the solar rays strike its closed petals and with the waning sun shutting up again. Some were there then who came and went and got up from their graves revived. This was the first solution. The sun and the lotus are, therefore, the chief symbols in the most ancient religions. Why these symbols? because abstract thought, whatever that be, when expressed, is bound to come clad in visible, tangible, gross garments. This is the law. The idea of the passing out as not out of existence but in it, had to be expressed only as a change, a momentary transformation; and reflexively, that object which strikes the senses and goes vibrating to the mind and calls up a new idea is bound to be taken up as the support, the nucleus round which the new idea spreads itself for an expression. And so the sun and the lotus were the first symbols.

There are deep holes everywhere--so dark and so dismal; down is all dark and frightful; under water we cannot see, open our eyes though we may; up is light, all light, even at night the beautiful starry hosts shedding their light. Where do they go then, those I

²⁴⁴ ?Written by the Swami during his first visit to America in answer to questions put by a Western disciple.

1 love? Not certainly down in the dark, dark place, but up, above in 2 the realm of Everlasting Light. That required a new symbol. Here is 3 fire with its glowing wonderful tongues of flame--eating up a forest 4 in a short time, cooking the food, giving warmth, and driving wild 5 animals away--this life-giving, life-saving fire; and then the flames-- 6 they all go upwards, never downwards. Here then was another--this 7 fire that carries them upwards to the places of light--the connecting 8 link between us and those that have passed over to the regions of 9 light. "Thou Ignis", begins the oldest human record, "our messenger 10 to the bright ones." So they put food and drink and whatever they 11 thought would be pleasing to these "bright ones" into the fire. This 12 was the beginning of sacrifice.

13 So far the first question was solved, at least as far as to 14 satisfy the needs of these primitive men. Then came the other 15 question: Whence has all this come? Why did it not come first?
16 Because we remember a sudden change more. Happiness, joy, 17 addition, enjoyment make not such a deep impression on our mind
18 as unhappiness, sorrow, and subtraction. Our nature is joy, 19 enjoyment, pleasure, and happiness. Anything that violently breaks 20 it makes a deeper impression than the natural course. So the 21 problem of death was the first to be solved as the great disturber.
22 Then with more advancement came the other question: Whence 23 they came? Everything that lives moves: we move; our will moves 24 our limbs; our limbs manufacture forms under the control of our 25 will. Everything then that moved had a will in it as the motor, to the 26 man-child of ancient times as it is to the child-man of the present 27 day. The wind has a will; the cloud, the whole of nature, is full of 28 separate wills, minds, and souls. They are creating all this just as 29 we manufacture many things; they--the "Devas", the "Elohim" are 30 the creators of all this.

31 Now in the meanwhile society was growing up. In society
32 there was the king--why not among the bright ones, the Elohim?
33 Therefore there was a supreme "Deva", an Elohim-Jahveh, God of 34 gods--the one God who by His single will has created all this--even 35 the "bright ones". But as He has appointed different stars and 36 planets, so He has appointed different "Devas" or angels to preside 37 over different functions of nature--some over death, some over 38 birth, etc. One supreme being, supreme by being infinitely more 39 powerful than the rest, is the common conception in the two great 40 sources of all religions, the Aryan and Semitic races. But here the 41 Aryans take a new start, a grand deviation.

42 Their God was not only a supreme being, but He was the 43 Dyaus Pitar, the Father in heaven. This is the beginning of Love.
44 The Semitic God is only a thunderer, only the terrible one, the 45 mighty Lord of hosts. To all these the Aryan added a new idea, that 46 of a Father. And the divergence becomes more and more obvious 47 all through further progress, which in fact stopped at this place in 48 the Semitic branch of the human race. The God of the Semitic is not 49 to be seen--nay, it is death to see Him; the God of the Aryan cannot 50 only be seen, but He is the goal of being; the one aim of life is to 51 see Him. The Semitic obeys his King of kings for fear of punishment 52 and keeps His commandments. The Aryan loves his father; and

1 further on he adds mother, his friend. And "Love me, love my dog", 2 they say. So each one of His creatures should be loved, because 3 they are His. To the Semitic, this life is an outpost where we are 4 posted to test our fidelity; to the Aryan this life is on the way to our 5 goal. To the Semitic, if we do our duty well, we shall have an ever-6 joyful home in heaven. To the Aryan, that home is God Himself. To 7 the Semitic, serving God is a means to an end, namely, the pay,
8 which is joy and enjoyment. To the Aryan, enjoyment, misery--
9 everything--is a means, and the end is God. The Semitic worships 10 God to go to heaven. The Aryan rejects heaven to go to God. In 11 short, this is the main difference. The aim and end of the Aryan life 12 is to see God, to see the face of the Beloved, because without Him 13 he cannot live. "Without Thy presence, the sun, the moon, and the 14 stars lose their light."

FOUR PATHS OF YOGA²⁴⁵

Our main problem is to be free. It is evident then that until we realise ourselves as the Absolute, we cannot attain to deliverance. Yet there are various ways of attaining to this realisation. These methods have the generic name of Yoga (to join, to join ourselves to our reality). These Yogas, though divided into various groups, can principally be classed into four; and as each is only a method leading indirectly to the realisation of the Absolute, they are suited to different temperaments. Now it must be remembered that it is not that the assumed man becomes the real man or Absolute. There is no becoming with the Absolute. It is ever free, ever perfect; but the ignorance that has covered Its nature for a time is to be removed. Therefore the whole scope of all systems of Yoga (and each religion represents one) is to clear up this ignorance and allow the Atman to restore its own nature. The chief helps in this liberation are Abhyasa and Vairagya. Vairagya is non-attachment to life, because it is the will to enjoy that brings all this bondage in its train; and Abhyasa is constant practice of any one of the Yogas.

Karma-Yoga . Karma-Yoga is purifying the mind by means of work. Now if any work is done, good or bad, it must produce as a result a good or bad effect; no power can stay it, once the cause is present. Therefore good action producing good Karma, and bad action, bad Karma, the soul will go on in eternal bondage without ever hoping for deliverance. Now Karma belongs only to the body or the mind, never to the Atman (Self); only it can cast a veil before the Atman.

The veil cast by bad Karma is ignorance. Good Karma has the power to strengthen the moral powers. And thus it creates non-attachment; it destroys the tendency towards bad Karma and thereby purifies the mind. But if the work is done with the intention of enjoyment, it then produces only that very enjoyment and does not purify the mind or Chitta. Therefore all work should be done without any desire to enjoy the fruits thereof. All fear and all desire to enjoy here or hereafter must be banished for ever by the Karma-Yogi. Moreover, this Karma without desire of return will destroy the selfishness, which is the root of all bondage. The watchword of the Karma-Yogi is "not I, but Thou", and no amount of self-sacrifice is too much for him. But he does this without any desire to go to heaven, or gain name or fame or any other benefit in this world. Although the explanation and rationale of this unselfish work is only in Jnana-Yoga, yet the natural divinity of man makes him love all sacrifice simply for the good of others, without any ulterior motive, whatever his creed or opinion. Again, with many the bondage of wealth is very great; and Karma-Yoga is absolutely necessary for them as breaking the crystallisation that has gathered round their love of money.

²⁴⁵ ?Written by the Swami during his first visit to America in answer to questions put by a Western disciple.

1 Next is Bhakti-Yoga . Bhakti or worship or love in some form 2 or other is the easiest, pleasantest, and most natural way of man.
3 The natural state of this universe is attraction; and that is surely 4 followed by an ultimate disunion. Even so, love is the natural 5 impetus of union in the human heart; and though itself a great 6 cause of misery, properly directed towards the proper object, it 7 brings deliverance. The object of Bhakti is God. Love cannot be 8 without a subject and an object. The object of love again must be at 9 first a being who can reciprocate our love. Therefore the God of 10 love must be in some sense a human God. He must be a God of love.
11 Aside from the question whether such a God exists or not, it is a 12 fact that to those who have love in their heart this Absolute appears 13 as a God of love, as personal.

14 The lower forms of worship, which embody the idea of God as 15 a judge or punisher or someone to be obeyed through fear, do not 16 deserve to be called love, although they are forms of worship 17 gradually expanding into higher forms. We pass on to the 18 consideration of love itself. We will illustrate love by a triangle, of 19 which the first angle at the base is fearlessness. So long as there is 20 fear, it is not love. Love banishes all fear. A mother with her baby 21 will face a tiger to save her child. The second angle is that love 22 never asks, never begs. The third or the apex is that love loves for 23 the sake of love itself. Even the idea of object vanishes. Love is the 24 only form in which love is loved. This is the highest abstraction and 25 the same as the Absolute.

26 Next is Raja-Yoga . This Yoga fits in with every one of these 27 Yogas. It fits inquirers of all classes with or without any belief, and 28 it is the real instrument of religious inquiry. As each science has its 29 particular method of investigation, so is this Raja-Yoga the method 30 of religion. This science also is variously applied according to 31 various constitutions. The chief parts are the Pranayama, 32 concentration, and meditation. For those who believe in God, a 33 symbolical name, such as Om or other sacred words received from 34 a Guru, will be very helpful. Om is the greatest, meaning the 35 Absolute. Meditating on the meaning of these holy names while 36 repeating them is the chief practice.

37 Next is Jnana-Yoga. This is divided into three parts. First:
38 hearing the truth--that the Atman is the only reality and that 39 everything else is Maya (relativity). Second: reasoning upon this 40 philosophy from all points of view. Third: giving up all further 41 argumentation and realising the truth. This realisation comes from 42 (1) being certain that Brahman is real and everything else is unreal; 43 (2) giving up all desire for enjoyment; (3) controlling the senses and 44 the mind; (4) intense desire to be free. Meditating on this reality 45 always and reminding the soul of its real nature are the only ways 46 in this Yoga. It is the highest, but most difficult. Many persons get 47 an intellectual grasp of it, but very few attain realisation.

CYCLIC REST AND CHANGE²⁴⁶

This whole universe is a case of lost balance. All motion is the struggle of the disturbed universe to regain its equilibrium, which, as such, cannot be motion. Thus in regard to the internal world it would be a state which is beyond thought, for thought itself is a motion. Now when all indication is towards perfect equilibrium by expansion and the whole universe is rushing towards it, we have no right to say that that state can never be attained. Again it is impossible that there should be any variety whatsoever in that state of equilibrium. It must be homogeneous; for as long as there are even two atoms, they will attract and repel each other and disturb the balance. Therefore this state of equilibrium is one of unity, of rest, and of homogeneity. In the language of the internal, this state of equilibrium is not thought, nor body, nor anything which we call an attribute. The only thing which we can say it will retain is what is its own nature as existence, self-consciousness, and blissfulness.

This state in the same way cannot be two. It must only be a unit, and all fictitious distinctions of I, thou, etc., all the different variations must vanish, as they belong to the state of change or Maya. It may be said that this state of change has come now upon the Self, showing that, before this, it had the state of rest and liberty; that at present the state of differentiation is the only real state, and the state of homogeneity is the primitive crudeness out of which this changeful state is manufactured; and that it will be only degeneration to go back to the state of undifferentiation. This argument would have had some weight if it could be proved that these two states, viz homogeneity and heterogeneity, are the only two states happening but once through all time. What happens once must happen again and again. Rest is followed by change--the universe. But that rest must have been preceded by other changes, and this change will be succeeded by other rests. It would be ridiculous to think that there was a period of rest and then came this change which will go on for ever. Every particle in nature shows that it is coming again and again to periodic rest and change.

This interval between one period of rest and another is called a Kalpa. But this Kalpic rest cannot be one of perfect homogeneity, for in that case there would be an end to any future manifestation. Now to say that the present state of change is one of great advance in comparison to the preceding state of rest is simply absurd, because in that case the coming period of rest being much more advanced in time must be much more perfect! There is no progression or digression in nature. It is showing again and again the same forms. In fact, the word law means this. But there is a progression with regard to souls. That is to say, the souls get nearer to their own natures, and in each Kalpa large numbers of them get deliverance from being thus whirled around. It may be said, the individual soul being a part of the universe and nature, returning ²⁴⁶ ?Written by the Swami during his first visit to America in answer to questions put by a Western disciple.

1 again and again, there cannot be any liberty for the soul, for in that 2 case the universe has to be destroyed. The answer is that the 3 individual soul is an assumption through Maya, and it is no more a 4 reality than nature itself. In reality, this individual soul is the 5 unconditioned absolute Brahman (the Supreme).

6 All that is real in nature is Brahman, only it appears to be this 7 variety, or nature, through the superimposition of Maya. Maya 8 being illusion cannot be said to be real, yet it is producing the 9 phenomena. If it be asked, how can Maya, herself being illusion, 10 produce all this, our answer is that what is produced being also 11 ignorance, the producer must also be that. How can ignorance be 12 produced by knowledge? So this Maya is acting in two ways as 13 nescience and science (relative knowledge); and this science after 14 destroying nescience or ignorance is itself also destroyed. This 15 Maya destroys herself and what remains is the Absolute, the 16 Essence of existence, knowledge, and bliss. Now whatever is reality 17 in nature is this Absolute, and nature comes to us in three forms, 18 God, conscious, and unconscious, i.e. God, personal souls, and 19 unconscious beings. The reality of all these is the Absolute; through 20 Maya it is seen to be diverse. But the vision of God is the nearest to 21 the reality and the highest. The idea of a Personal God is the 22 highest idea which man can have. All the attributes attributed to 23 God are true in the same sense as are the attributes of nature. Yet 24 we must never forget that the Personal God is the very Absolute 25 seen through Maya.

26 27 28 A PREFACE TO THE IMITATION OF 29 CHRIST²⁴⁷

30
31 The Imitation of Christ is a cherished treasure of the 32 Christian world. This great book was written by a Roman Catholic 33 monk. "Written", perhaps, is not the proper word. It would be more 34 appropriate to say that each letter of the book is marked deep with 35 the heart's blood of the great soul who had renounced all for his 36 love of Christ. That great soul whose words, living and burning, 37 have cast such a spell for the last four hundred years over the 38 hearts of myriads of men and women; whose influence today 39 remains as strong as ever and is destined to endure for all time to 40 come; before whose genius and Sadhana (spiritual effort) hundred 41 of crowned heads have bent down in reverence; and before whose 42 matchless purity the jarring sects of Christendom, whose name is 43 legion, have sunk their differences of centuries in common 44 veneration to a common principle--that great soul, strange to say, 45 has not thought fit to put his name to a book such as this. Yet there

1 ²⁴⁷ ?Translated from an original Bengali writing of the Swami in 1889. The 2 passage is the preface to his Bengali translation of The Imitation of Christ which 3 he contributed to a Bengali monthly. He translated only six chapters with 4 quotations of parallel passages from the Hindu scriptures.
5

1 is nothing strange here after all, for why should he? Is it possible 2 for one who totally renounced all earthly joys and despised the 3 desire for the bauble fame as so much dirt and filth--is it possible 4 for such a soul to care for that paltry thing, a mere author's name?
5 Posterity, however, has guessed that the author was Thomas a 6 Kempis, a Roman Catholic monk. How far the guess is true is 7 known only to God. But be he who he may, that he deserves the 8 world's adoration is a truth that can be gainsaid by none.

9 We happen to be the subjects of a Christian government now.
10 Through its favour it has been our lot to meet Christians of so many 11 sects, native as well as foreign. How startling the divergence 12 between their profession and practice! Here stands the Christian 13 missionary preaching: "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.
14 Take no thought for the morrow"--and then busy soon after, making 15 his pile and framing his budget for ten years in advance! There he 16 says that he follows him who "hath not where to lay his head", glibly 17 talking of the glorious sacrifice and burning renunciation of the 18 Master, but in practice going about like a gay bridegroom fully 19 enjoying all the comforts the world can bestow! Look where we 20 may, a true Christian nowhere do we see. The ugly impression left 21 on our mind by the ultra-luxurious, insolent, despotic, barouche-22 and-brougham-driving Christians of the Protestant sects will be 23 completely removed if we but once read this great book with the 24 attention it deserves.

25 All wise men think alike. The reader, while reading this book, 26 will hear the echo of the Bhagavad-Gita over and over again. Like 27 the Bhagavad-Gita it says, "Give up all Dharmas and follow Me".
28 The spirit of humility, the panting of the distressed soul, the best 29 expression of Dasya Bhakti (devotion as a servant) will be found 30 imprinted on every line of this great book and the reader's heart 31 will be profoundly stirred by the author's thoughts of burning 32 renunciation, marvelous surrender, and deep sense of dependence 33 on the will of God. To those of my countrymen, who under the 34 influence of blind bigotry may seek to belittle this book because it is 35 the work of a Christian, I shall quote only one aphorism of 36 Vaisheshika Darshana and say nothing more. The aphorism is this:
37 {Sanskrit}--which means that the teachings of Siddha Purushas 38 (perfected souls) have a probative force and this is technically 39 known as Shabda Pramana (verbal evidence). Rishi Jaimini, the 40 commentator, says that such Apta Purushas (authorities) may be 41 born both among the Aryans and the Mlechchhas.

42 If in ancient times Greek astronomers like Yavanacharya
43 could have been so highly esteemed by our Aryan ancestors, then it 44 is incredible that this work of the lion of devotees will fail to be 45 appreciated by my countrymen.

46 Be that as it may, we shall place the Bengali translation of 47 this book before our readers seriatim. We trust that the readers of 48 Bengal will spend over it at least one hundredth part of the time 49 they waste over cart-loads of trashy novels and dramas.

1 I have tried to make the translation as literal as possible, but 2 I cannot say how far I have succeeded. The allusions to the Bible in 3 several passages are given in the footnotes.

4 5 6 AN INTERESTING CORRESPONDENCE²⁴⁸ 7

8 Now Sister Mary,
9 You need not be sorry
10 For the hard raps I gave you,
11 You know full well,
12 Though you like me tell,
13 With my whole heart I love you.

14
15 The babies I bet,
16 The best friends I met,
17 Will stand by me in weal and woe.
18 And so will I do,
19 You know it too.

20
21 Life, name, or fame, even heaven forgo
22 For the sweet sisters four 23 Sans reproche et sans peur,
24 The truest, noblest, steadfast, best.

25
26 The wounded snake its hood unfurls,
27 The flame stirred up doth blaze,
28 The desert air resounds the calls
29 Of heart-struck lion's rage.

30
31 The cloud puts forth its deluge strength
32 When lightning cleaves its breast,
33 When the soul is stirred to its inmost depth
34 Great ones unfold their best.
35

1 ²⁴⁸ ?In order to truly appreciate this correspondence, the reader has to be 2 informed of the occasion which gave rise to it and also to remember the relation 3 that existed between the correspondents. At the outset of the first letter the 4 Swami speaks of "the hard raps" that he gave to his correspondent. These were 5 nothing but a very strong letter which he wrote to her in vindication of his 6 position, on the 1st of February, 1895, which will be found reproduced in the fifth 7 volume of the Complete Works of the Swami. It was a very beautiful letter full of 8 the fire of a Sannyasin's spirit, and we request our readers to go through it 9 before they peruse the following text. Mary Hale, to whom the Swami wrote, 10 was one of the two daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Hale whom the Swami used to 11 address as Father Pope and Mother Church. The Misses Hales and their two 12 cousins were like sisters to him, and they also in their turn held the Swami in 13 great love and reverence. Some of the finest letters of the Swami were written to 14 them.

15 In the present correspondence the Swami is seen in a new light, playful and 16 intensely human, yet keyed to the central theme of his life, Brahmajñana. The 17 first letter was written from New York, 15th February 1895--Ed.
18

1 Let eyes grow dim and heart grow faint,
2 And friendship fail and love betray,
3 Let Fate its hundred horrors send,
4 And clotted darkness block the way.
5
6 All nature wear one angry frown,
7 To crush you out--still know, my soul,
8 You are Divine. March on and on,
9 Nor right nor left but to the goal.
10
11 Nor angel I, nor man, nor brute, 12 Nor body, mind, nor he or she,
13 The books do stop in wonder mute
14 To tell my nature; I am He.
15
16 Before the sun, the moon, the earth,
17 Before the stars or comets free,
18 Before e'en time has had its birth,
19 I was, I am, and I will be.
20
21 The beauteous earth, the glorious sun,
22 The calm sweet moon, the spangled sky,
23 Causation's laws do make them run;
24 They live in bonds, in bonds they die.
25
26 And mind its mantle dreamy net
27 Cast o'er them all and holds them fast.
28 In warp and woof of thought are set,
29 Earth, hells, and heavens, or worst or best.
30
31 Know these are but the outer crust--
32 All space and time, all effect, cause.
33 I am beyond all sense, all thoughts,
34 The witness of the universe.
35
36 Not two or many, 'tis but one,
37 And thus in me all me's I have;
38 I cannot hate, I cannot shun
39 Myself from me, I can but love.
40
41 From dreams awake, from bonds be free, 42 Be not afraid. This mystery,
43 My shadow, cannot frighten me, 44 Know once for all that I am He.
45

46 Well, so far my poetry. Hope you are all right. Give my love to 47 mother and Father Pope. I am busy to death and have almost no 48 time to write even a line. So excuse me if later on I am rather late 49 in writing.

50 Yours eternally,
51 Vivekananda.

52

1 Miss M.B.H. sent Swami the following doggerel in reply:

2

3 The monk he would a poet be 4 And wooed the muse right earnestly;
5 In thought and word he could well beat her,
6 What bothered him though was the metre.

7

8 His feet were all too short too long,
9 The form not suited to his song;
10 He tried the sonnet, lyric, epic,
11 And worked so hard, he waxed dyspeptic.

12

13 While the poetic mania lasted
14 He e'en from vegetables fasted,
15 Which Leon²⁴⁹ had with tender care
16 Prepared for Swami's dainty fare.

17

18 One day he sat and mused alone--
19 Sudden a light around him shone,
20 The "still small voice" his thoughts inspire 21 And his words glow like coals of fire.

22

23 And coals of fire they proved to be 24 Heaped on the head of contrite me--
25 My scolding letter I deplore
26 And beg forgiveness o'er and o'er.

27

28 The lines you sent to your sisters four 29 Be sure they'll cherish evermore
30 For you have made them clearly see 31 The one main truth that "all is He".

32

33 Then Swami:

34

35 In days of yore,
36 On Ganga's shore preaching,
37 A hoary priest was teaching
38 How Gods they come
39 As Sita Ram,
40 And gentle Sita pining, weeping.
41 The sermons end,
42 They homeward wend their way--
43 The hearers musing, thinking.

44

45 When from the crowd
46 A voice aloud
47 This question asked beseeching, seeking-- 48 "Sir, tell me, pray,
49 Who were but they

1 ²⁴⁹ ?Leon Landsberg, a disciple of the Swami who lived with him for some 2 time.
3

These Sita Ram you were teaching, speaking!"

So Mary Hale,
Allow me tell,
You mar my doctrines wronging, baulking.
I never taught
Such queer thought
That all was God--unmeaning talking!

But this I say,
Remember pray,
That God is true, all else is nothing,
This world's a dream
Though true it seem,
And only truth is He the living!
The real me is none but He,
And never, never matter changing!
With undying love and gratitude to you all. . . .
Vivekananda.

And then Miss M.B.H.:

The difference I clearly see
'Twixt tweedledum and tweedledee--
That is a proposition sane,
But truly 'tis beyond my vein
To make your Eastern logic plain.

If "God is truth, all else is naught,"
This "world a dream", delusion up wrought,
What can exist which God is not?
All those who "many" see have much to fear,
He only lives to whom the "One" is clear.
So again I say
In my poor way,
I cannot see but that all's He,
If I'm in Him and He in me.

Then the Swami replied:

Of temper quick, a girl unique,
A freak of nature she,
A lady fair, no question there,
Rare soul is Miss Mary.
Her feelings deep she cannot keep,
But creep they out at last,
A spirit free, I can foresee,
Must be of fiery cast.

Tho' many a lay her muse can bray,
And play piano too,
Her heart so cool, chills as a rule
The fool who comes to woo.

1 Though, Sister Mary, I hear they say
2 The sway your beauty gains,
3 Be cautious now and do not bow,
4 However sweet, to chains.
5
6 For 'twill be soon, another tune
7 The moon-struck mate will hear
8 If his will but clash, your words will hash
9 And smash his life I fear.
10 These lines to thee, Sister Mary,
11 Free will I offer, take 12 "Tit for tat"--a monkey chat, 13 For monk alone can make.

14

16 THOU BLESSED DREAM²⁵⁰

17

18 If things go ill or well--
19 If joy rebounding spreads the face,
20 Or sea of sorrow swells--
21 A play--we each have part,
22 Each one to weep or laugh as may;
23 Each one his dress to don--
24 Its scenes, alternative shine and rain.

25

26 Thou dream, O blessed dream!
27 Spread far and near thy veil of haze,
28 Tone down the lines so sharp,
29 Make smooth what roughness seems.

30

31 No magic but in thee!
32 Thy touch makes desert bloom to life.
33 Harsh thunder, sweetest song,
34 Fell death, the sweet release.

35

36 LIGHT²⁵¹

37

38 I look behind and after 39 And find that all is right,
40 In my deepest sorrows
41 There is a soul of light.

34 Shiva is dancing, lost in the ecstasy of Self, sounding his 35 own cheeks.
36 His tabor is playing and the garland of skulls is swinging 37 in rhythm.
38 The waters of the Ganga are roaring among his matted 39 locks.
40 The great trident is vomiting fire, and the moon on his 41 forehead is fiercely flaming.

42 43 44 TO SHRI KRISHNA

45 (A Song in Hindi)

46
47 O Krishna, my friend, let me go to the water, 48 O let me go today.
49 Why play tricks with one who is already thy slave?

3
4 ²⁵⁶ ?Trident.

1 O friend, let me go today, let me go.
2 I have to fill my pitcher in the waters of the Jumna.
3 I pray with folded hands, friend, let me go.

6 A HYMN TO SHRI RAMAKRISHNA

7 (In Sanskrit)

8 {Sanskrit}

9 1. Om! Hrim! Thou art the True, the Imperturbable One, 10 transcending the three Gunas and yet adored for Thy virtues!
11 Inasmuch as I do not worship day and night, with yearning, Thy 12 compassionate lotus feet which destroy all ignorance, therefore, O 13 Thou friend of the lowly, Thou art my only refuge.

14 {Sanskrit}

15 2. Spiritual powers, reverence, and worship which put an end 16 to this cycle of birth and death are enough indeed to lead to the 17 greatest Truth. But this while finding utterance through the mouth 18 is not at all being brought home to my heart. Therefore, O Thou 19 friend of the lowly, Thou art my only refuge.

20
21 {Sanskrit}

22 3. If devotion is directed to Thee, O Ramakrishna, the way of 23 Divine Truth, then with desires all fulfilled in Thee, they forthwith 24 cross over this sea of Rajas: for Thy feet are like nectar to the 25 mortals, quelling the waves of death. Therefore, O Thou friend of 26 the lowly, Thou art my only refuge.

27
28 {Sanskrit}

29 4. O Thou dispeller of illusion, Thy name ending in "shna", 30 pure and auspicious, converts sinfulness to purity. Because, O Thou 31 the only goal of all beings, shelter have I none, therefore Thou art, 32 O friend of the lowly, my only refuge.

33 34 A HYMN TO SHRI RAMAKRISHNA

35 (In Sanskrit)

36 {Sanskrit}

37 1. He who was Shri Rama, whose stream of love flowed with 38 resistless might even to the Chandala (the outcaste); Oh, who ever 39 was engaged in doing good to the world though superhuman by 40 nature, whose renown there is none to equal in the three worlds, 41 Sita's beloved, whose body of Knowledge Supreme was covered by 42 devotion sweet in the form of Sita.

44 2. He who quelled the noise, terrible like that at the time of destruction, arising from the battle (of Kurukshetra), who destroyed the terrible yet natural night of ignorance (of Arjuna) and who roared out the Gita sweet and appeasing; That renowned soul is born now as Shri Ramakrishna.

{Sanskrit}

3. Hail, O Lord of Men! Victory unto You! I surrender myself to my Guru, the physician for the malady of Samsara (relative existence) who is, as it were, a wave rising in the ocean of Shakti (Power), who has shown various sports of Love Divine, and who is the weapon to destroy the demon of doubt.

Hail, O Lord of Men! Victory unto You!

{Sanskrit}

4. Hail, O Lord of Men! Victory unto you! I surrender myself to my Guru the Man-God, the physician for the malady of this Samsara (relative existence), whose mind ever dwelt on the non-dualistic Truth, whose personality was covered by the cloth of Supreme Devotion, who was ever active (for the good of humanity) and whose actions were all superhuman.

Hail, O Lord of Men! Victory unto You!

NO ONE TO BLAME²⁵⁷

The sun goes down, its crimson rays
Light up the dying day;
A startled glance I throw behind
And count my triumph shame;
No one but me to blame.

Each day my life I make or mar,
Each deed begets its kind,
Good good, bad bad, the tide once set
No one can stop or stem;
No one but me to blame.

I am my own embodied past;
Therein the plan was made;
The will, the thought, to that conform,
To that the outer frame;
No one but me to blame.

Love comes reflected back as love,
Hate breeds more fierce hate,
They mete their measures, lay on me
Through life and death their claim;
No one but me to blame.

I cast off fear and vain remorse,
I feel my Karma's sway

²⁵⁷ ?Written from New York, 16th May, 1895.

1 I face the ghosts my deeds have raised-- 2 Joy, sorrow, censure, fame;
3 No one but me to blame.
4
5 Good, bad, love, hate, and pleasure, pain
6 Forever linked go,
7 I dream of pleasure without pain,
8 It never, never came;
9 No one but me to blame.
10 11 I give up hate, I give up love,
12 My thirst for life is gone;
13 Eternal death is what I want,
14 Nirvanam goes life's flame;
15 No one is left to blame.
16
17 One only man, one only God, one ever perfect soul, 18 One only sage who ever scorned the dark and dubious ways,
19 One only man who dared think and dared show the goal-- 20 That death is curse, and so is life, and best when stops to be.

23 Om, I salute the Lord, the awakened.

NOTES OF CLASS TALKS

When Will Christ Come Again?

I never take much notice of these things. I have come to deal with principles. I have only to preach that God comes again and again, and that He came in India as Krishna, Rama, and Buddha, and that He will come again. It can almost be demonstrated that after each 500 years the world sinks, and a tremendous spiritual wave comes, and on the top of the wave is a Christ.

There is a great change now coming all over the world, and this is a cycle. Men are finding that they are losing hold of life; which way will they turn, down or up? Up, certainly. How can it be down? Plunge into the breach; fill up the breach with your body, your life. How should you allow the world to go down when you are living?

The Difference Between Man and Christ

There is much difference in manifested beings. As a manifested being you will never be Christ. Out of clay, manufacture a clay elephant, out of the same clay, manufacture a clay mouse. Soak them in water, they become one. As clay, they are eternally one; as fashioned things, they are eternally different. The Absolute is the material of both God and man. As Absolute, Omnipresent Being, we are all one; and as personal beings, God is the eternal master, and we are the eternal servants.

You have three things in you: (1) the body, (2) the mind, (3) the spirit. The spirit is intangible, the mind comes to birth and death, and so does the body. You are that spirit, but often you think you are the body.

When a man says, "I am here", he thinks of the body. Then comes another moment when you are on the highest plane; you do not say, "I am here". But if a man abuses you or curses you and you do not resent it, you are the spirit. "When I think I am the mind, I am one spark of that eternal fire which Thou art; and when I feel that I am the spirit, Thou and I are one"--so says a devotee to the Lord. Is the mind in advance of the spirit?

God does not reason; why should you reason if you knew? It is a sign of weakness that we have to go on crawling like worms to get a few facts and build generalisations, and then the whole thing tumbles down again. The spirit is reflected in the mind and everything. It is the light of the spirit that makes the mind sensate. Everything is an expression of the spirit; the minds are so many mirrors. What you call love and fear, hatred, virtue, and vice are all reflections of the spirit; only when the reflector is base the 1 reflection is bad.

3 Are Christ and Buddha Identical?

5 It is my particular fancy that the same Buddha became 6 Christ. Buddha prophesied, "I will come again in five hundred 7 years", and Christ came here in five hundred years. These are the 8 two Lights of the whole human nature. Two men have been 9 produced, Buddha and Christ; these are the two giants, huge 10 gigantic personalities, two Gods. Between them they divide the 11 whole world. Wherever there is the least knowledge in the world, 12 people bow down either to Buddha or Christ. It would be very hard 13 to produce more like them, but I hope there will be. Mohammed 14 came five hundred years after, five hundred years after came 15 Luther with his Protestant wave, and this is five hundred years after 16 that again. It is a great thing in a few thousand years to produce 17 two such men as Jesus and Buddha. Are not two such enough?
18 Christ and Buddha were Gods, the others were prophets. Study the 19 life of these two and see the manifestation of power in them--calm 20 and non-resisting, poor beggars owning nothing, without a cent in 21 their pockets, despised all their lives, called heretic and fool--and 22 think of the immense spiritual power they have wielded over 23 humanity.

25 Salvation From Sin

27 We are to be saved from sin by being saved from ignorance.
28 Ignorance is the cause of which sin is the result.

30 Coming Back to the Divine Mother

32 When a nurse takes a baby out into the garden and plays with 33 the baby, the Mother may send a word to the baby to come indoors.
34 The baby is absorbed in play, and says, "I won't come; I don't want 35 to eat." After a while the baby becomes tired with his play and says, 36 "I will go to Mother." The nurse says, "Here is a new doll", but the 37 baby says, "I don't care for dolls any more. I will go to Mother", and 38 he weeps until he goes. We are all babies. The Mother is God. We 39 are absorbed in seeking for money, wealth, and all these things; but 40 the time will come when we will awaken; and then this nature will 41 try to give us more dolls, and we will say, "No, I have had enough; I 42 will go to God."

44 No Individuality Apart From God

46 If we are inseparable from God, and always one, have we no

1 individuality? Oh yes; that is God. Our individuality is God. This is 2 not real individuality which you have now. You are coming towards 3 that true one. Individuality means what cannot be divided. How can 4 you call this state--we are now--individuality? One hour you are 5 thinking one way, and the next hour another way, and two hours 6 after another way. Individuality is that which changes not. It would 7 be tremendously dangerous for the present state to remain in 8 eternity, then the thief would always remain a thief, and the 9 blackguard, a blackguard. If a baby died, it would have to remain a 10 baby. The real individuality is that which never changes, and will 11 never change; and that is God within us.

12 13 MAN THE MAKER OF HIS DESTINY

15 There was a very powerful dynasty in Southern India. They 16 made it a rule to take the horoscope of all the prominent men living 17 from time to time, calculated from the time of their birth. In this 18 way they got a record of leading facts predicted, and compared 19 them afterwards with events as they happened. This was done for a 20 thousand years, until they found certain agreements; these were 21 generalised and recorded and made into a huge book. The dynasty 22 died out, but the family of astrologers lived and had the book in 23 their possession. It seems possible that this is how astrology came 24 into existence. Excessive attention to the minutiae of astrology is 25 one of the superstitions which has hurt the Hindus very much.

26 I think the Greeks first took astrology to India and took from 27 the Hindus the science of astronomy and carried it back with them 28 from Europe. Because in India you will find old altars made 29 according to a certain geometrical plan, and certain things had to 30 be done when the stars were in certain positions, therefore I think 31 the Greeks gave the Hindus astrology, and the Hindus gave them 32 astronomy.

33 I have seen some astrologers who predicted wonderful 34 things; but I have no reason to believe they predicted them only 35 from the stars, or anything of the sort. In many cases it is simply 36 mind-reading. Sometimes wonderful predictions are made, but in 37 many cases it is arrant trash.

38 In London, a young man used to come to me and ask me, 39 "What will become of me next year?" I asked him why he asked me
40 so. "I have lost all my money and have become very, very poor."
41 Money is the only God of many beings. Weak men, when they lose 42 everything and feel themselves weak, try all sorts of uncanny 43 methods of making money, and come to astrology and all these 44 things. "It is the coward and the fool who says, "This is fate"--so 45 says the Sanskrit proverb. But it is the strong man who stands up 46 and says, "I will make my fate." It is people who are getting old who 47 talk of fate. Young men generally do not come to astrology. We may 48 be under planetary influence, but it should not matter much to us.
49 Buddha says, "Those that get a living by calculation of the stars by 50 such art and other lying tricks are to be avoided"; and he ought to 1 know, because he was the greatest Hindu ever born. Let stars

2 come, what harm is there? If a star disturbs my life, it would not be 3 worth a cent. You will find that astrology and all these mystical 4 things are generally signs of a weak mind; therefore as soon as they 5 are becoming prominent in our minds, we should see a physician, 6 take good food and rest.

7 If you can get an explanation of a phenomenon from within its 8 nature, it is nonsense to look for an explanation from outside. If the 9 world explains itself, it is nonsense to go outside for an explanation.
10 Have you found any phenomena in the life of a man that you have 11 ever seen which cannot be explained by the power of the man 12 himself? So what is the use of going to the stars or anything else in 13 the world? My own Karma is sufficient explanation of my present 14 state. So in the case of Jesus himself. We know that his father was 15 only a carpenter. We need not go to anybody else to find an 16 explanation of his power. He was the outcome of his own past, all of 17 which was a preparation for that Jesus. Buddha goes back and back 18 to animal bodies and tells us how he ultimately became Buddha. So 19 what is the use of going to stars for explanation? They may have a 20 little influence; but it is our duty to ignore them rather than 21 hearken to them and make ourselves nervous. This I lay down as 22 the first essential in all I teach: anything that brings spiritual, 23 mental, or physical weakness, touch it not with the toes of your 24 feet. Religion is the manifestation of the natural strength that is in 25 man. A spring of infinite power is coiled up and is inside this little 26 body, and that spring is spreading itself. And as it goes on 27 spreading, body after body is found insufficient; it throws them off 28 and takes higher bodies. This is the history of man, of religion, 29 civilisation, or progress. That giant Prometheus, who is bound, is 30 getting himself unbound. It is always a manifestation of strength, 31 and all these ideas such as astrology, although there may be a grain 32 of truth in them, should be avoided.

33 There is an old story of an astrologer who came to a king and 34 said, "You are going to die in six months." The king was frightened 35 out of his wits and was almost about to die then and there from 36 fear. But his minister was a clever man, and this man told the king 37 that these astrologers were fools. The king would not believe him.
38 So the minister saw no other way to make the king see that they 39 were fools but to invite the astrologer to the palace again. There he 40 asked him if his calculations were correct. The astrologer said that 41 there could not be a mistake, but to satisfy him he went through the 42 whole of the calculations again and then said that they were 43 perfectly correct. The king's face became livid. The minister said to 44 the astrologer, "And when do you think that you will die?" "In twelve 45 years", was the reply. The minister quickly drew his sword and 46 separated the astrologer's head from the body and said to the king, 47 "Do you see this liar? He is dead this moment."

48 If you want your nation to live, keep away from all these 49 things. The only test of good things is that they make us strong.
50 Good is life, evil is death. These superstitious ideas are springing 51 like mushrooms in your country, and women wanting in logical 52 analysis of things are ready to believe them. It is because women

1 are striving for liberation, and women have not yet established
2 themselves intellectually. One gets by heart a few lines of poetry
3 from the top of a novel and says she knows the whole of Browning.
4 Another attends a course of three lectures and then thinks she 5 knows everything in the world. The difficulty is that they are unable 6 to throw off the natural superstition of women. They have a lot of 7 money and some intellectual learning, but when they have passed 8 through this transition stage and get on firm ground, they will be all 9 right. But they are played upon by charlatans. Do not be sorry; I do 10 not mean to hurt anyone, but I have to tell the truth. Do you not see 11 how open you are to these things? Do you not see how sincere these 12 women are, how that divinity latent in all never dies? It is only to 13 know how to appeal to the Divine.

14 The more I live, the more I become convinced every day that 15 every human being is divine. In no man or woman, however vile, 16 does that divinity die. Only he or she does not know how to reach it 17 and is waiting for the Truth. And wicked people are trying to 18 deceive him or her with all sorts of fooleries. If one man cheats 19 another for money, you say he is a fool and a blackguard. How much 20 greater is the iniquity of one who wants to fool others spiritually!
21 This is too bad. It is the one test, that truth must make you strong 22 and put you above superstition. The duty of the philosopher is to 23 raise you above superstition. Even this world, this body and mind 24 are superstitions; what infinite souls you are! And to be tricked by 25 twinkling stars! It is a shameful condition. You are divinities; the 26 twinkling stars owe their existence to you.

27 I was once travelling in the Himalayas, and the long road
28 stretched before us. We poor monks cannot get any one to carry us, 29 so we had to make all the way on foot. There was an old man with 30 us. The way goes up and down for hundreds of miles, and when that 31 old monk saw what was before him, he said, "Oh sir, how to cross it; 32 I cannot walk any more; my chest will break." I said to him, "Look 33 down at your feet." He did so, and I said, "The road that is under 34 your feet is the road that you have passed over and is the same 35 road that you see before you; it will soon be under your feet." The 36 highest things are under your feet, because you are Divine Stars; all 37 these things are under your feet. You can swallow the stars by the 38 handful if you want; such is your real nature. Be strong, get beyond 39 all superstitions, and be free.

40 41 42 GOD: PERSONAL AND IMPERSONAL 43

44 My idea is that what you call a Personal God is the same as 45 the Impersonal Being, a Personal and Impersonal God at the same 46 time. We are personalised impersonal beings. If you use the word in 47 the absolute sense, we are impersonal; but if you use it in a relative 48 meaning, we are personal. Each one of you is a universal being, 49 each one is omnipresent. It may seem staggering at first, but I am 50 as sure of this as that I stand before you. How can the spirit help

1 being omnipresent? It has neither length, nor breadth, nor 2 thickness, nor any material attribute whatsoever; and if we are all 3 spirits we cannot be limited by space. Space only limits space, 4 matter matter. If we were limited to this body we would be a 5 material something. Body and soul and everything would be 6 material, and such words as "living in the body", "embodying the 7 soul" would be only words used for convenience; beyond that they 8 would have no meaning. Many of you remember the definition I 9 gave of the soul; that each soul is a circle whose centre is in one 10 point and circumference nowhere. The centre is where the body is, 11 and the activity is manifested there. You are omnipresent; only you 12 have the consciousness of being concentrated in one point. That 13 point has taken up particles of matter, and formed them into a 14 machine to express itself. That through which it expresses itself is 15 called the body. So you are everywhere; when one body or machine 16 fails, you, the centre, move on and take up other particles of matter, 17 finer or grosser, and work through that. This is man. And what is 18 God? God is a circle with its circumference nowhere and centre 19 everywhere. Every point in that circle is living, conscious, active, 20 and equally working; with us limited souls, only one point is 21 conscious, and that point moves forward and backward. As the body 22 has a very infinitesimal existence in comparison with that of the 23 universe, so the whole universe, in comparison with God, is nothing.
24 When we talk of God speaking, we say He speaks through His 25 universe; and when we speak of Him beyond all limitations of time
26 and space, we say He is an Impersonal Being. Yet He is the same 27 Being.

28 To give an illustration: We stand here and see the sun.
29 Suppose you want to go towards the sun. After you get a few 30 thousand miles nearer, you will see another sun, much bigger.
31 Supposing you proceed much closer, you will see a much bigger 32 sun. At last you will see the real sun, millions and millions of miles 33 big. Suppose you divide this journey into so many stages, and take 34 photographs from each stage, and after you have taken the real 35 sun, come back and compare them; they will all appear to be 36 different, because the first view was a little red ball, and the real 37 sun was millions of miles bigger; yet it was the same sun. It is the 38 same with God: the Infinite Being we see from different 39 standpoints, from different planes of mind. The lowest man sees 40 Him as an ancestor; as his vision gets higher, as the Governor of the 41 planet; still higher as the Governor of the universe, and the highest 42 man sees Him as himself. It was the same God, and the different 43 realisations were only degrees and differences of vision.

44 45 46 THE DIVINE INCARNATION OR AVATARA 47

48 Jesus Christ was God--the Personal God become man. He has 49 manifested Himself many times in different forms and these alone 50 are what you can worship. God in His absolute nature is not to be 51 worshipped. Worshipping such God would be nonsense. We have to 1 worship Jesus Christ, the human manifestation, as God. You cannot 2 worship anything higher than the manifestation of God. The sooner 3 you give up the worship of God separate from Christ, the better for 4 you. Think of the Jehovah you manufacture and of the beautiful

5 Christ. Any time you attempt to make a God beyond Christ, you
6 murder the whole thing. God alone can worship God. It is not given 7 to man, and any attempt to worship Him beyond His ordinary 8 manifestations will be dangerous to mankind. Keep close to Christ if 9 you want salvation; He is higher than any God you can imagine. If 10 you think that Christ was a man, do not worship Him; but as soon as 11 you can realise that He is God, worship Him. Those who say He was 12 a man and then worship Him commit blasphemy; there is no half-13 way house for you; you must take the whole strength of it. "He that 14 hath seen the Son hath seen the Father", and without seeing the 15 Son, you cannot see the Father. It would be only tall talk and frothy 16 philosophy and dreams and speculations. But if you want to have a 17 hold on spiritual life, cling close to God as manifest in Christ.

18 Philosophically speaking, there was no such human being 19 living as Christ or Buddha; we saw God through them. In the Koran, 20 Mohammed again and again repeats that Christ was never 21 crucified, it was a semblance; no one could crucify Christ.

22 The lowest state of philosophical religion is dualism; the 23 highest form is the Triune state. Nature and the human soul are 24 interpenetrated by God, and this we see as the Trinity of God, 25 nature, and soul. At the same time you catch a glimpse that all 26 these three are products of the One. Just as this body is the 27 covering of the soul, so this is, as it were, the body of God. As I am 28 the soul of nature, so is God the soul of my soul. You are the centre 29 through which you see all nature in which you are. This nature, 30 soul, and God make one individual being, the universe. Therefore 31 they are a unity; yet at the same time they are separate. Then there 32 is another sort of Trinity which is much like the Christian Trinity.
33 God is absolute. We cannot see God in His absolute nature, we can 34 only speak of that as "not this, not this". Yet we can get certain 35 qualities as the nearest approach to God. First is existence, second 36 is knowledge, third is bliss--very much corresponding to your 37 Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Father is the existence out of which 38 everything comes; Son is that knowledge. It is in Christ that God 39 will be manifest. God was everywhere, in all beings, before Christ; 40 but in Christ we became conscious of Him. This is God. The third is 41 bliss, the Holy Spirit. As soon as you get this knowledge, you get 42 bliss. As soon as you begin to have Christ within you, you have bliss; 43 and that unifies the three.

44 45 46 PRANAYAMA 47

1 First of all we will try to understand a little of the meaning of 2 Pranayama. Prana stands in metaphysics for the sum total of the 3 energy that is in the universe. This universe, according to the 4 theory of the philosophers, proceeds in the form of waves; it rises, 5 and again it subsides, melts away, as it were; then again it proceeds 6 out in all this variety; then again it slowly returns. So it goes on like 7 a pulsation. The whole of this universe is composed of matter and 8 force; and according to Sanskrit philosophers, everything that we 9 call matter, solid and liquid, is the outcome of one primal matter 10 which they call Akasha or ether; and the primordial force, of which 11 all the forces that we see in nature are manifestations, they call 12 Prana. It is this Prana acting upon Akasha, which creates this 13 universe, and after the end of a period, called a cycle, there is a 14 period of rest. One period of activity is followed by a period of rest; 15 this is the nature of everything. When this period of rest comes, all 16 these forms that we see in the earth, the sun, the moon, and the 17 stars, all these manifestations melt down until they become ether 18 again. They become dissipated as ether. All these forces, either in 19 the body or in the mind, as gravitation, attraction, motion, thought, 20 become dissipated, and go off into the primal Prana. We can 21 understand from this the importance of this Pranayama. Just as this 22 ether encompasses us everywhere and we are interpenetrated by it, 23 so everything we see is composed of this ether, and we are floating 24 in the ether like pieces of ice floating in a lake. They are formed of 25 the water of the lake and float in it at the same time. So everything 26 that exists is composed of this Akasha and is floating in this ocean.
27 In the same way we are surrounded by this vast ocean of Prana-28 force and energy. It is this Prana by which we breathe and by which 29 the circulation of the blood goes on; it is the energy in the nerves 30 and in the muscles, and the thought in the brain. All forces are 31 different manifestations of this same Prana, as all matter is a 32 different manifestation of the same Akasha. We always find the 33 causes of the gross in the subtle. The chemist takes a solid lump of 34 ore and analyses it; he wants to find the subtler things out of which 35 that gross is composed. So with our thought and our knowledge; 36 the explanation of the grosser is in the finer. The effect is the gross 37 and the cause the subtle. This gross universe of ours, which we see, 38 feel, and touch, has its cause and explanation behind in the 39 thought. The cause and explanation of that is also further behind.
40 So in this human body of ours, we first find the gross movements, 41 the movements of the hands and lips; but where are the causes of 42 these? The finer nerves, the movements of which we cannot 43 perceive at all, so fine that we cannot see or touch or trace them in 44 any way with our senses, and yet we know they are the cause of 45 these grosser movements. These nerve movements, again, are 46 caused by still finer movements, which we call thought; and that is 47 caused by something finer still behind, which is the soul of man, the 48 Self, the Atman. In order to understand ourselves we have first to 49 make our perception fine. No microscope or instrument that was 50 ever invented will make it possible for us to see the fine movements 51 that are going on inside; we can never see them by any such means.
52 So the Yogi has a science that manufactures an instrument for the 53 study of his own mind, and that instrument is in the mind. The mind

1 attains to powers of finer perception which no instrument will ever 2 be able to attain.

3 To attain to this power of superfine perception we have to 4 begin from the gross. And as the power becomes finer and finer, we 5 go deeper and deeper inside our own nature; and all the gross 6 movements will first be tangible to us, and then the finer 7 movements of the thought; we will be able to trace the thought 8 before its beginning, trace it where it goes and where it ends. For 9 instance, in the ordinary mind a thought arises. The mind does not 10 know how it began or whence it comes. The mind is like the ocean 11 in which a wave rises, but although the man sees the wave, he does 12 not know how the wave came there, whence its birth, or whither it 13 melts down again; he cannot trace it any further. But when the 14 perception becomes finer, we can trace this wave long, long before 15 it comes to the surface; and we will be able to trace it for a long 16 distance after it has disappeared, and then we can understand 17 psychology as it truly is. Nowadays men think this or that and write 18 many volumes, which are entirely misleading, because they have 19 not the power to analyse their own minds and are talking of things 20 they have never known, but only theorised about. All science must 21 be based on facts, and these facts must be observed and 22 generalised. Until you have some facts to generalise upon, what are 23 you going to do? So all these attempts at generalising are based 24 upon knowing the things we generalise. A man proposes a theory, 25 and adds theory to theory, until the whole book is patchwork of 26 theories, not one of them with the least meaning. The science of 27 Raja-Yoga says, first you must gather facts about your own mind, 28 and that can be done by analysing your mind, developing its finer 29 powers of perception and seeing for yourselves what is happening 30 inside; and when you have got these facts, then generalise; and 31 then alone you will have the real science of psychology.

32 As I have said, to come to any finer perception we must take 33 the help of the grosser end of it. The current of action which is 34 manifested on the outside is the grosser.

35 If we can get hold of this and go on further and further, it 36 becomes finer and finer, and at last the finest. So this body and 37 everything we have in this body are not different existences, but, as 38 it were, various links in the same chain proceeding from fine to 39 gross. You are a complete whole; this body is the outside 40 manifestation, the crust, of the inside; the external is grosser and 41 the inside finer; and so finer and finer until you come to the Self.
42 And at last, when we come to the Self, we come to know that it was 43 only the Self that was manifesting all this; that it was the Self which 44 became the mind and became the body; that nothing else exists but 45 the Self, and all these others are manifestations of that Self in 46 various degrees, becoming grosser and grosser. So we will find by 47 analogy that in this whole universe there is the gross manifestation, 48 and behind that is the finer movement, which we can call the will of 49 God. Behind that even, we will find that Universal Self. And then we 50 will come to know that the Universal Self becomes God and 51 becomes this universe; and that it is not that this universe is one 52 and God another and the Supreme Self another, but that they are

1 different states of the manifestation of the same Unity behind.

2 All this comes of our Pranayama. These finer movements that 3 are going on inside the body are connected with the breathing; and 4 if we can get hold of this breathing and manipulate it and control it, 5 we will slowly get to finer and finer motions, and thus enter, as it 6 were, by getting hold of that breathing, into the realms of the mind.

7 The first breathing that I taught you in our last lesson was 8 simply an exercise for the time being. Some of these breathing 9 exercises, again, are very difficult, and I will try to avoid all the 10 difficult ones, because the more difficult ones require a great deal 11 of dieting and other restrictions which it is impossible for most of 12 you to keep to. So we will take the slower paths and the simpler 13 ones. This breathing consists of three parts. The first is breathing 14 in, which is called in Sanskrit Puraka, filling; and the second part is 15 called Kumbhaka, retaining, filling the lungs and stopping the air 16 from coming out; the third is called Rechaka, breathing out. The 17 first exercise which I will give you today is simply breathing in and 18 stopping the breath and throwing it out slowly. Then there is one 19 step more in the breathing which I will not give you today, because 20 you cannot remember them all; it would be too intricate. These 21 three parts of breathing make one Pranayama. This breathing 22 should be regulated, because if it is not, there is danger in the way
23 to yourselves. So it is regulated by numbers, and I will give you first 24 the lowest numbers. Breathe in four seconds, then hold the breath 25 for eight seconds, then again throw it out slowly in four seconds.²⁵⁸
26 Then begin again, and do this four times in the morning and four 27 times in the evening. There is one thing more. Instead of counting 28 by one, two, three, and all such meaningless things, it is better to 29 repeat any word that is holy to you. In our country we have 30 symbolical words, "Om" for instance, which means God. If that be 31 pronounced instead of one, two, three, four, it will serve your 32 purpose very well. One thing more. This breathing should begin 33 through the left nostril and should turn out through the right 34 nostril, and the next time it should be drawn in through the right 35 and thrown out through the left. Then reverse again, and so on. In 36 the first place you should be able to drive your breathing through 37 either nostril at will, just by the power of the will. After a time you 38 will find it easy; but now I am afraid you have not that power. So we 39 must stop the one nostril while breathing through the other with 40 the finger and during the retention, of course, both nostrils.

41 The first two lessons should not be forgotten. The first thing is 42 to hold yourselves straight; second to think of the body as sound 43 and perfect, as healthy and strong. Then throw a current of love all 44 around, think of the whole universe being happy. Then if you believe 45 in God, pray. Then breathe.

46 In many of you certain physical changes will come, 47 twitchings all over the body, nervousness; some of you will feel like 48 weeping, sometimes a violent motion will come. Do not be afraid;

1 ²⁵⁸ This process is more difficult when the ratio is two, eight, and four; for 2 further remarks see later.
3

1 these things have to come as you go on practicing. The whole body
2 will have to be rearranged as it were. New channels for thought 3 will be made in the brain, nerves which have not acted in your 4 whole life will begin to work, and a whole new series of changes 5 will come in the body itself.

6 7 8 WOMEN OF THE EAST²⁵⁹

9 (Report of a lecture in the Chicago Daily Inter-Ocean, 10 September 23, 1893)
11

1 ²⁵⁹ ?As many women as could crowd into Hall 7 yesterday afternoon flocked 2 thither to hear something as to the lives of their sisters of the Orient. Mrs. Potter 3 Palmer and Mrs. Charles Henrotin sat upon the platform, surrounded by 4 turbanned representatives of the women of the East.

5 It may interest the reader to know that the published addresses of Swami 6 Vivekananda at the Parliament of Religions in Chicago are not exhaustive and 7 many addresses, specially those delivered at the Scientific Section of the 8 Parliament were not all reported. The Scientific Sessions were conducted 9 simultaneously with the open session at the Hall of Columbus. Swami 10 Vivekananda spoke on the following subjects at the Scientific Section:

11 1. Orthodox Hinduism and the Vedanta Philosophy.

12 --Friday, September 22, 1893, at 10:30 a.m.

13 2. The Modern Religions of India.

14 --Friday, September 22, 1893 afternoon session.

15 3. On the subject of the foregoing addresses.

16 --Saturday, September 23, 1893.

17 4. The Essence of the Hindu Religion.

18 --Monday, September 25, 1893.

19 The Chicago Daily Inter-Ocean of September 23, 1893 published the following 20 note on the first lecture.

21 "In the Scientific Section yesterday morning Swami Vivekananda spoke on 22 'Orthodox Hinduism'. Hall III was crowded to overflowing and hundreds of 23 questions were asked by auditors and answered by the great Sannyasin with 24 wonderful skill and lucidity. At the close of the session he was thronged with 25 eager questioners who begged him to give a semi-public lecture somewhere on 26 the subject of his religion. He said that he already had the project under 27 consideration."
28

1 Swami Vivekananda, at a special meeting, discussed the 2 present and future of the women of the East. He said, "The best 3 thermometer to the progress of a nation is its treatment of its 4 women. In ancient Greece there was absolutely no difference in the 5 state of man and woman. The idea of perfect equality existed. No
6 Hindu can be a priest until he is married, the idea being that a 7 single man is only half a man, and imperfect. The idea of perfect 8 womanhood is perfect independence. The central idea of the life of 9 a modern Hindu lady is her chastity. The wife is the centre of a 10 circle, the fixity of which depends upon her chastity. It was the 11 extreme of this idea which caused Hindu widows to be burnt. The 12 Hindu women are very spiritual and very religious, perhaps more so 13 than any other women in the world. If we can preserve these 14 beautiful characteristics and at the same time develop the intellects 15 of our women, the Hindu woman of the future will be the ideal 16 woman of the world."

19 CONGRESS OF RELIGIOUS UNITY

20 (Report of a lecture in the Chicago Sunday Herald, 21 September 24, 1893)

23 Swami Vivekananda said, "All the words spoken at this 24 parliament come to the common conclusion that the brotherhood of 25 man is the much-to-be-desired end. Much has been said for this 26 brotherhood as being a natural condition, since we are all children 27 of one God. Now, there are sects that do not admit of the existence 28 of God--that is, a Personal God. Unless we wish to leave those sects 29 out in the cold--and in that case our brotherhood will not be 30 universal--we must have our platform broad enough to embrace all 31 mankind. It has been said here that we should do good to our fellow 32 men, because every bad or mean deed reacts on the doer. This 33 appears to me to savour of the shopkeeper--ourselves first, our 34 brothers afterwards. I think we should love our brother whether we 35 believe in the universal fatherhood of God or not, because every 36 religion and every creed recognises man as divine, and you should 37 do him no harm that you might not injure that which is divine in 38 him."

41 THE LOVE OF GOD--I

42 (Report of a lecture in the Chicago Herald, September 25, 43 1893)

45 An audience that filled the auditorium of the Third Unitarian 46 Church at Laflin and Monroe streets heard Swami Vivekananda
47 preach yesterday morning. The subject of his sermon was the love 48 of God, and his treatment of the theme was eloquent and unique.

1 He said that God was worshipped in all parts of the world, but by 2 different names and in different ways. It is natural for men, he said, 3 to worship the grand and the beautiful, and that religion was a 4 portion of their nature. The need of God was felt by all, and His love
5 prompted them to deeds of charity, mercy, and justice. All men 6 loved God because He was love itself. The speaker had heard since 7 coming to Chicago a great deal about the brotherhood of man. He 8 believed that a still stronger tie connected them, in that all are the 9 offsprings of the love of God. The brotherhood of man was the 10 logical sequence of God as the Father of all. The speaker said he 11 had travelled in the forests of India and slept in caves, and from his 12 observation of nature he had drawn the belief that there was 13 something above the natural law that kept men from wrong, and 14 that, he concluded, was the love of God. If God had spoken to 15 Christ, Mohammed, and the Rishis of the Vedas, why did He not 16 speak also to him, one of his children?

17 "Indeed, he does speak to me", the Swami continued, "and to 18 all His children. We see Him all around us and are impressed 19 continually by the boundlessness of His love, and from that love we 20 draw the inspiration for our well-being and well-doing."

23 THE LOVE OF GOD--II

24 (A lecture delivered in the Unitarian Church of Detroit on 25 February 20, 1894 and reported in the Detroit Free Press)

26
27 Vivekananda delivered a lecture on "The Love of God" at the 28 Unitarian Church last night before the largest audience that he has 29 yet had. The trend of the lecturer's remarks was to show that we do 30 not accept God because we really want Him, but because we have 31 need of Him for selfish purposes. Love, said the speaker, is 32 something absolutely unselfish, that which has no thought beyond 33 the glorification and adoration of the object upon which our 34 affections are bestowed. It is a quality which bows down and 35 worships and asks nothing in return. Merely to love is the sole 36 request that true love has to ask.

37 It is said of a Hindu saint that when she was married, she 38 said to her husband, the king, that she was already married. "To 39 whom?" asked the king. "To God", was the reply. She went among 40 the poor and the needy and taught the doctrine of extreme love for 41 God. One of her prayers is significant, showing the manner in which 42 her heart was moved: "I ask not for wealth; I ask not for position; I 43 ask not for salvation; place me in a hundred hells if it be Thy wish, 44 but let me continue to regard Thee as my love." The early language 45 abounds in beautiful prayers of this woman. When her end came, 46 she entered into Samadhi on the banks of a river. She composed a 47 beautiful song, in which she stated that she was going to meet her 48 Beloved.

49 Men are capable of philosophical analysis of religion. A

1 woman is devotional by nature and loves God from the heart and 2 soul and not from the mind. The songs of Solomon are one of the 3 most beautiful parts of the Bible. The language in them is much of 4 that affectionate kind which is found in the prayers of the Hindu 5 woman saint. And yet I have heard that Christians are going to have 6 these incomparable songs removed. I have heard an explanation of 7 the songs in which it is said that Solomon loved a young girl and 8 desired her to return his royal affection. The girl, however, loved a 9 young man and did not want to have anything to do with Solomon.
10 This explanation is excellent to some people, because they cannot 11 understand such wondrous love for God as is embodied in the 12 songs. Love for God in India is different from love for God 13 elsewhere, because when you get into a country where the 14 thermometer reads 40 degrees below zero, the temperament of the 15 people changes. The aspirations of the people in the climate where 16 the books of the Bible are said to have been written were different 17 from the aspirations of the cold-blooded Western nations, who are 18 more apt to worship the almighty dollar with the warmth expressed 19 in the songs than to worship God. Love for God seems to be based 20 upon a basis of "what can I get out of it?" In their prayers they ask 21 for all kinds of selfish things.

22 Christians are always wanting God to give them something.
23 They appear as beggars before the throne of the Almighty. A story 24 is told of a beggar who applied to an emperor for alms. While he 25 was waiting, it was time for the emperor to offer up prayers. The 26 emperor prayed, "O God, give me more wealth; give me more 27 power; give me a greater empire." The beggar started to leave. The 28 emperor turned and asked him, "Why are you going?" "I do not beg 29 of beggars", was the reply.

30 Some people find it really difficult to understand the frenzy of 31 religious fervour which moved the heart of Mohammed.

32 He would grovel in the dust and writhe in agony. Holy men 33 who have experienced these extreme emotions have been called 34 epileptic. The absence of the thought of self is the essential 35 characteristic of the love for God. Religion nowadays has become a 36 mere hobby and fashion. People go to church like a flock of sheep.
37 They do not embrace God because they need Him. Most persons 38 are unconscious atheists who self-complacently think that they are 39 devout believers.

42 INDIA

43 (Report of a lecture delivered at Detroit on Thursday, 44 February 15, 1894, with the editorial comments of the Detroit Free 45 Press)

46
47 An audience that filled the Unitarian Church heard the 48 renowned monk, Swami Vivekananda, deliver a lecture last night on 49 the manners and customs of his country. His eloquent and graceful

1 manner pleased his listeners, who followed him from beginning to 2 end with the closest attention, showing approval from time to time 3 by outbursts of applause. While his lecture was more popular in 4 character than the celebrated Address before the religious 5 congress in Chicago, it was highly entertaining, especially where 6 the speaker diverted from the instructive portions and was led to an 7 eloquent narration of certain spiritual conditions of his own people.
8 It is upon matters religious and philosophic (and necessarily 9 spiritual) that the Eastern brother is most impressive, and, while 10 outlining the duties that follow the conscientious consideration of 11 the great moral law of nature, his softly modulated tones, a 12 peculiarity of his people, and his thrilling manner are almost 13 prophetic. He speaks with marked deliberation, except when 14 placing before his listeners some moral truth, and then his 15 eloquence is of the highest kind.

16 It seemed somewhat singular that the Eastern monk, who is 17 so outspoken in his disapproval of missionary labour on the part of 18 the Christian church in India (where, he affirms, the morality is the 19 highest in the world), should have been introduced by Bishop Ninde 20 who in June will depart for China in the interest of foreign Christian 21 missions. The Bishop expects to remain away until December; but if 22 he should stay longer he will go to India. The Bishop referred to the 23 wonders of India and the intelligence of the educated classes there, 24 introducing Vivekananda in a happy manner. When that dusky 25 gentleman arose, dressed in his turban and bright gown, with 26 handsome face and bright, intelligent eyes, he presented an 27 impressive figure. He returned thanks to the Bishop for his words 28 and proceeded to explain race divisions in his own country, the 29 manners of the people, and the different languages. Principally 30 there are four northern tongues and four southern, but there is one 31 common religion. Four-fifths of the population of 300 million people 32 are Hindus and the Hindu is a peculiar person. He does everything 33 in a religious manner. He eats religiously; he sleeps religiously; he 34 rises in the morning religiously; he does good things religiously; 35 and he also does bad things religiously. At this point the lecturer 36 struck the great moral keynote of his discourse, stating that with 37 his people it was the belief that all non-self is good and all self is 38 bad. This point was emphasised throughout the evening and might 39 be termed the text of the address. To build a home is selfish, argues 40 the Hindu; so he builds it for the worship of God and for the 41 entertainment of guests. To cook food is selfish, so he cooks for the 42 poor; he will serve himself last if any hungry stranger applies, and 43 this feeling extends throughout the length and breadth of the land.
44 Any man can ask for food and shelter, and any house will be opened 45 to him.

46 The caste system has nothing to do with religion. A man's 47 occupation is hereditary: a carpenter is born a carpenter; a 48 goldsmith, a goldsmith; a workman, a workman; and a priest, a 49 priest. But this is a comparatively modern social evil, since it has 50 existed only about 1,000 years. This period of time does not seem 51 so great in India as in this and other countries. Two gifts are 52 especially appreciated--the gift of learning and the gift of life. But

1 the gift of learning takes precedence. One may save a man's life, 2 and that is excellent; one may impart to another knowledge, and 3 that is better. To instruct for money is an evil, and to do this would 4 bring opprobrium on the head of the man who barter learning for 5 gold, as though it were an article of trade. The government makes 6 gifts from time to time to the instructors, and the moral effect is 7 better than it would be if the conditions were the same as exist in 8 certain alleged civilised countries. The speaker had asked through 9 the length and breadth of the land what was the definition of 10 civilisation, and he had asked the question in many countries.
11 Sometimes the reply had been given: What we are, that is 12 civilisation. He begged to differ in the definition of the word. A 13 nation may control the elements, develop utilitarian problems of life 14 seemingly to the limit, and yet not realise that in the individual the 15 highest type of civilisation is found in him who has learnt to 16 conquer self. This condition is found in India more than in any 17 country on earth, for there the material conditions are subservient 18 to the spiritual, and the individual looks for the soul manifestations 19 in everything that has life, studying nature to this end. Hence that 20 gentle disposition to endure with indomitable patience the flings of 21 what appears unkind fortune, the while there is a full consciousness 22 of a spiritual strength and knowledge greater than those possessed 23 by any other people; hence the existence of a country and a people 24 from which flows an unending stream that attracts the attention of 25 thinkers far and near to approach and throw from their shoulders 26 an oppressive earthly burden. The early king, who in 260 B.C.
27 commanded that there should be no more bloodshed, no more wars, 28 and who sent forth instead of soldiers an army of instructors, acted 29 wisely, although in material things the land has suffered. But 30 though in bondage to brutal nations who conquer by force, the 31 Indian's spirituality endures for ever, and nothing can take it away 32 from him. There is something Christlike in the humility of the 33 people to endure the stings and arrows of outraged fortune, the 34 while the soul is advancing towards the brighter goal. Such a 35 country has no need of Christian missionaries to "preach ideas", for 36 theirs is a religion that makes men gentle, sweet, considerate, and 37 affectionate towards all God's creatures, whether man or beast.
38 Morally, said the speaker, India is head and shoulders above the 39 United States or any other country on the globe. Missionaries 40 would do well to come there and drink of the pure waters, and see 41 what a beautiful influence upon a great community have the lives of 42 the multitude of holy men.

43 Then marriage condition was described; and the privileges
44 extended to women in ancient times when the system of co-45 education flourished. In the records of the saints in India there is 46 the unique figure of the prophetess. In the Christian creed they are 47 all prophets, while in India the holy women occupy a conspicuous 48 place in the holy books. The householder has five objects for 49 worship. One of them is learning and teaching. Another is worship 50 of dumb creatures. It is hard for Americans to understand the last 51 worship, and it is difficult for Europeans to appreciate the 52 sentiment. Other nations kill animals by wholesale and kill one 53 another; they exist in a sea of blood. A European said that the

1 reason why in India animals were not killed was because it was 2 supposed that they contained the spirits of ancestors. This reason 3 was worthy of a savage nation who are not many steps from the 4 brute. The fact was that the statement was made by a set of 5 atheists in India who thus carped at the Vedic idea of non-killing 6 and transmigration of souls. It was never a religious doctrine, it was 7 an idea of a materialistic creed. The worship of dumb animals was 8 pictured in a vivid manner. The hospitable spirit--the Indian golden 9 rule, was illustrated by a story. A Brahmin, his wife, his son, and his 10 son's wife had not tasted food for some time on account of a famine.
11 The head of the house went out and after a search found a small 12 quantity of barley. He brought this home and divided it into four 13 portions, and the small family was about to eat, when a knock was 14 heard at the door. It was a guest. The different portions were set 15 before him, and he departed with his hunger satisfied, while the 16 quartette who had entertained him perished. This story is told in 17 India to illustrate what is expected in the sacred name of 18 hospitality.

19 The speaker concluded in an eloquent manner. Throughout, 20 his speech was simple; but whenever he indulged in imagery, it was 21 delightfully poetic, showing that the Eastern brother has been a 22 close and attentive observer of the beauties of nature. His excessive 23 spirituality is a quality which makes itself felt with his auditors, for 24 it manifests itself in the love for animate and inanimate things and 25 in the keen insight into the mysterious workings of the divine law of 26 harmony and kindly intentions.

27 28 29 HINDUS AND CHRISTIANS

30 (A lecture delivered at Detroit on February 21, 1894, and 31 reported in the Detroit Free Press)
32

33 Of the different philosophies, the tendency of the Hindu is not 34 to destroy, but to harmonise everything. If any new idea comes into 35 India, we do not antagonise it, but simply try to take it in, to 36 harmonise it, because this method was taught first by our prophet, 37 God incarnate on earth, Shri Krishna. This Incarnation of God 38 preached himself first: "I am the God Incarnate, I am the inspirer of 39 all books, I am the inspirer of all religions." Thus we do not reject 40 any.

41 There is one thing which is very dissimilar between us and 42 Christians, something which we never taught. That is the idea of 43 salvation through Jesus' blood, or cleansing by any man's blood. We 44 had our sacrifice as the Jews had. Our sacrifices mean simply this: 45 Here is some food I am going to eat, and until some portion is 46 offered to God, it is bad; so I offer the food. This is the pure and 47 simple idea. But with the Jew the idea is that his sin be upon the 48 lamb, and let the lamb be sacrificed and him go scot-free. We never 49 developed this beautiful idea in India, and I am glad we did not. I,

1 for one, would not come to be saved by such a doctrine. If anybody
2 would come and say, "Be saved by my blood", I would say to him, 3 "My brother, go away; I will go to hell; I am not a coward to take 4 innocent blood to go to heaven; I am ready for hell." So that 5 doctrine never cropped up amongst us, and our prophet says that 6 whenever evil and immortality prevail on earth, He will come down
7 and support His children; and this He is doing from time to time 8 and from place to place. And whenever on earth you see an 9 extraordinary holy man trying to uplift humanity, know that He is in 10 him.

11 So you see that is the reason why we never fight any religion.
12 We do not say that ours is the only way to salvation. Perfection can 13 be had by everybody, and what is the proof? Because we see the 14 holiest of men in all countries, good men and women everywhere, 15 whether born in our faith or not. Therefore it cannot be held that 16 ours is the only way to salvation. "Like so many rivers flowing from 17 different mountains, all coming and mingling their waters in the 18 sea, all the different religions, taking their births from different 19 standpoints of fact, come unto Thee." This is a part of the child's 20 everyday prayer in India. With such everyday prayers, of course, 21 such ideas as fighting because of differences of religion are simply 22 impossible. So much for the philosophers of India. We have great 23 regard for all these men, especially this prophet, Shri Krishna, on 24 account of his wonderful catholicity in harmonising all the 25 preceding revelations.

26 Then the man who is bowing down before the idol. It is not in 27 the same sense as you have heard of the Babylonian and the Roman 28 idolatry. It is peculiar to the Hindus. The man is before the idol, and 29 he shuts his eyes and tries to think, "I am He; I have neither life nor 30 death; I have neither father nor mother; I am not bound by time or 31 space; I am Existence infinite, Bliss infinite, and Knowledge infinite; 32 I am He, I am He. I am not bound by books, or holy places, or 33 pilgrimages, or anything whatsoever; I am the Existence Absolute, 34 Bliss Absolute; I am He, I am He." This he repeats and then says, "O 35 Lord, I cannot conceive Thee in myself; I am a poor man." Religion 36 does not depend upon knowledge. It is the soul itself, it is God, not 37 to be attained by simple book-knowledge or powers of speech. You 38 may take the most learned man you have and ask him to think of 39 spirit as spirit; he cannot. You may imagine spirit, he may imagine 40 spirit. It is impossible to think of spirit without training. So no 41 matter how much theology you may learn--you may be a great 42 philosopher and greater theologian--but the Hindu boy would say, 43 "Well, that has nothing to do with religion." Can you think of spirit 44 as spirit? Then alone all doubt ceases, and all crookedness of the 45 heart is made straight. Then only all fears vanish, and all doubtings 46 are for ever silent when man's soul and God come face to face.

47 A man may be wonderfully learned in the Western sense, yet 48 he may not know the A B C of religion. I would tell him that. I would 49 ask him, "Can you think of spirit as such? Are you advanced in the 50 science of the soul? Have you manifested your own soul above 51 matter?" If he has not, then I say to him, "Religion has not come to 52 you; it is all talk and book and vanity." But this poor Hindu sits

1 before that idol and tries to think that he is That, and then says, "O 2 Lord, I cannot conceive Thee as spirit, so let me conceive of Thee in 3 this form"; and then he opens his eyes and see this form, and 4 prostrating himself he repeats his prayers. And when his prayer is 5 ended, he says, "O Lord, forgive me for this imperfect worship of 6 Thee."

7 You are always being told that the Hindu worships blocks of 8 stone. Now what do you think of this fervent nature of the souls of 9 these people? I am the first monk to come over to these Western 10 countries--it is the first time in the history of the world that a Hindu 11 monk has crossed the ocean. But we hear such criticism and hear of 12 these talks, and what is the general attitude of my nation towards 13 you? They smile and say, "They are children; they may be great in 14 physical science; they may build huge things; but in religion they 15 are simply children." That is the attitude of my people.

16 One thing I would tell you, and I do not mean any unkind
17 criticism. You train and educate and clothe and pay men to do 18 what? To come over to my country to curse and abuse all my 19 forefathers, my religion, and everything. They walk near a temple 20 and say, "You idolaters, you will go to hell." But they dare not do 21 that to the Mohammedans of India; the sword would be out. But the 22 Hindu is too mild; he smiles and passes on, and says, "Let the fools 23 talk." That is the attitude. And then you who train men to abuse and 24 criticise, if I just touch you with the least bit of criticism, with the 25 kindest of purpose, you shrink and cry, "Don't touch us; we are 26 Americans. We criticise all the people in the world, curse them and 27 abuse them, say anything; but do not touch us; we are sensitive 28 plants." You may do whatever you please; but at the same time I am 29 going to tell you that we are content to live as we are; and in one 30 thing we are better off--we never teach our children to swallow 31 such horrible stuff: "Where every prospect pleases and man alone is 32 vile." And whenever your ministers criticise us, let them remember 33 this: If all India stands up and takes all the mud that is at the 34 bottom of the Indian Ocean and throws it up against the Western 35 countries, it will not be doing an infinitesimal part of that which you 36 are doing to us. And what for? Did we ever send one missionary to 37 convert anybody in the world? We say to you, "Welcome to your 38 religion, but allow me to have mine." You call yours an aggressive 39 religion. You are aggressive, but how many have you taken? Every 40 sixth man in the world is a Chinese subject, a Buddhist; then there 41 are Japan, Tibet, and Russia, and Siberia, and Burma, and Siam;
42 and it may not be palatable, but this Christian morality, the Catholic 43 Church, is all derived from them. Well, and how was this done?
44 Without the shedding of one drop of blood! With all your brags and 45 boastings, where has your Christianity succeeded without the 46 sword? Show me one place in the whole world. One, I say, 47 throughout the history of the Christian religion--one; I do not want 48 two. I know how your forefathers were converted. They had to be 49 converted or killed; that was all. What can you do better than 50 Mohammedanism, with all your bragging? "We are the only one!"
51 And why? "Because we can kill others." The Arabs said that; they 52 bragged. And where is the Arab now? He is the bedouin. The 1 Romans used to say that, and where are they now? Blessed are the 2 peace-makers; they shall enjoy the earth. Such things tumble down; 3 it is built upon sands; it cannot remain long.

4 Everything that has selfishness for its basis, competition as its 5 right hand, and enjoyment as its goal, must die sooner or later.
6 Such things must die. Let me tell you, brethren, if you want to live, 7 if you really want your nation to live, go back to Christ. You are not 8 Christians. No, as a nation you are not. Go back to Christ. Go back 9 to him who had nowhere to lay his head. "The birds have their nests
10 and the beasts their lairs, but the Son of Man has nowhere to lay 11 his head." Yours is religion preached in the name of luxury. What an 12 irony of fate! Reverse this if you want to live, reverse this. It is all 13 hypocrisy that I have heard in this country. If this nation is going to 14 live, let it go back to him. You cannot serve God and Mammon at the 15 same time. All this prosperity, all this from Christ! Christ would 16 have denied all such heresies. All prosperity which comes with 17 Mammon is transient, is only for a moment. Real permanence is in 18 Him. If you can join these two, this wonderful prosperity with the 19 ideal of Christ, it is well. But if you cannot, better go back to him 20 and give this up. Better be ready to live in rags with Christ than to 21 live in palaces without him.

22 23 24 CHRISTIANITY IN INDIA

25 (A lecture delivered at Detroit on March 11, 1894 and reported in the Detroit 26 Free Press)

27
28 "Vive Kananda spoke to a crowded audience at the Detroit 29 Opera House last night. He was given an extremely cordial 30 reception and delivered his most eloquent address here. He spoke 31 for two hours and a half.

32 Hon. T. W. Palmer, in introducing the distinguished visitor, 33 referred to the old tale of the shield that was copper on one side 34 and silver on the other and the contest which ensued. If we look on 35 both sides of a question there would be less dispute. It is possible 36 for all men to agree. The matter of foreign missions has been dear 37 to the religious heart. Vive Kananda, from the Christian standpoint, 38 said Mr. Palmer, was a pagan. It would be pleasant to hear from a 39 gentleman who spoke about the copper side of the shield.

40 Vive Kananda was received with great applause." . . .

41 I do not know much about missionaries in Japan and China, 42 but I am well posted about India. The people of this country look 43 upon India as a vast waste, with many jungles and a few civilised 44 Englishmen. India is half as large as the United States, and there 45 are three hundred million people. Many stories are related, and I 46 have become tired of denying these. The first invaders of India, the 47 Aryans, did not try to exterminate the population of India as the 48 Christians did when they went into a new land, but the endeavour 49 was made to elevate persons of brutish habits. The Spaniards came

1 to Ceylon with Christianity. The Spaniards thought that their God 2 commanded them to kill and murder and to tear down heathen 3 temples. The Buddhists had a tooth a foot long, which belonged to 4 their Prophet, and the Spaniards threw it into the sea, killed a few 5 thousand persons, and converted a few scores. The Portuguese 6 came to Western India. The Hindus have a belief in the Trinity and 7 had a temple dedicated to their sacred belief. The invaders looked 8 at the temple and said it was a creation of the devil; and so they 9 brought their cannon to bear upon the wonderful structure and 10 destroyed a portion of it. But the invaders were driven out of the 11 country by the enraged population. The early missionaries tried to 12 get hold of the land, and in their effort to secure a foothold by force, 13 they killed many people and converted a number. Some of them 14 became Christians to save their lives. Ninety-nine percent of the 15 Christians converted by the Portuguese sword were compelled to 16 be so, and they said, "We do not believe in Christianity, but we are 17 forced to call ourselves Christians." But Catholic Christianity soon 18 relapsed.

19 The East India Company got possession of a part of India with 20 the idea of making hay while the sun shone. They kept the 21 missionaries away. The Hindus were the first to welcome the 22 missionaries, not the Englishmen, who were engaged in trade. I 23 have great admiration for some of the first missionaries of the later 24 period, who were true servants of Jesus and did not vilify the people 25 or spread vile falsehoods about them. They were gentle, kindly 26 men. When Englishmen became masters of India, the missionary 27 enterprise began to become stagnant, a condition which 28 characterises the missionary efforts in India today. Dr. Long, an 29 early missionary, stood by the people. He translated a Hindu drama 30 describing the evils perpetuated in India by indigo-planters, and 31 what was the result? He was placed in jail by the English. Such 32 missionaries were of benefit to the country, but they have passed 33 away. The Suez Canal opened up a number of evils.

34 Now goes the missionary, a married man, who is hampered 35 because he is married. The missionary knows nothing about the 36 people, he cannot speak the language, so he invariably settles in 37 the little white colony. He is forced to do this because he is married.
38 Were he not married, he could go among the people and sleep on 39 the ground if necessary. So he goes to India to seek company for his 40 wife and children. He stays among the English-speaking people.
41 The great heart of India is today absolutely untouched by 42 missionary effort. Most of the missionaries are incompetent. I have 43 not met a single missionary who understands Sanskrit. How can a 44 man absolutely ignorant of the people and their traditions, get into 45 sympathy with them? I do not mean any offense, but Christians 46 send men as missionaries, who are not persons of ability. It is sad to 47 see money spent to make converts when no real results of a 48 satisfactory nature are reached.

49 Those who are converted, are the few who make a sort of 50 living by hanging round the missionaries. The converts who are not 51 kept in service in India, cease to be converts. That is about the 52 entire matter in a nutshell. As to the way of converting, it is 1 absolutely absurd. The money the missionaries bring is accepted.

2 The colleges founded by missionaries are all right, so far as the 3 education is concerned. But with religion it is different. The Hindu 4 is acute; he takes the bait but avoids the hook! It is wonderful how 5 tolerant the people are. A missionary once said, "That is the worst 6 of the whole business. People who are self-complacent can never be 7 converted."

8 As regards the lady missionaries, they go into certain houses, 9 get four shillings a month, teach them something of the Bible, and 10 show them how to knit. The girls of India will never be converted.
11 Atheism and skepticism at home is what is pushing the missionary 12 into other lands.

13 When I came into this country I was surprised to meet so 14 many liberal men and women. But after the Parliament of Religions 15 a great Presbyterian paper came out and gave me the benefit of a 16 seething article. This the editor called enthusiasm. The missionaries 17 do not and cannot throw off nationality--they are not broad enough-- 18 and so they accomplish nothing in the way of converting, although 19 they may have a nice sociable time among themselves. India
20 requires help from Christ, but not from the antichrist; these men 21 are not Christlike. They do not act like Christ; they are married and 22 come over and settle down comfortably and make a fair livelihood.
23 Christ and his disciples would accomplish much good in India, just 24 as many of the Hindu saints do; but these men are not of that 25 sacred character. The Hindus would welcome the Christ of the 26 Christians gladly, because his life was holy and beautiful; but they 27 cannot and will not receive the narrow utterances of the ignorant, 28 hypocritical or self-deceiving men.

29 Men are different. If they were not, the mentality of the world
30 would be degraded. If there were not different religions, no religion 31 would survive. The Christian requires his religion; the Hindu needs 32 his own creed. All religions have struggled against one another for 33 years. Those which were founded on a book, still stand. Why could 34 not the Christians convert the Jews? Why could they not make the 35 Persians Christians? Why could they not convert Mohammedans?
36 Why cannot any impression be made upon China or Japan?
37 Buddhism, the first missionary religion, numbers double the 38 number of converts of any other religion, and they did not use the 39 sword. The Mohammedans used the greatest violence. They 40 number the least of the three great missionary religions. The 41 Mohammedans have had their day. Every day you read of Christian 42 nations acquiring land by bloodshed. What missionaries preach 43 against this? Why should the most blood-thirsty nation exalt an 44 alleged religion which is not the religion of Christ? The Jews and 45 the Arabs were the fathers of Christianity, and how they have been 46 persecuted by the Christians! The Christians have been weighed in 47 the balance in India and have been found wanting. I do not mean to 48 be unkind, but I want to show the Christians how they look in 49 others' eyes. The missionaries who preach the burning pit are 50 regarded with horror. The Mohammedans rolled wave after wave 51 over India waving the sword, and today where are they?

52 The furthest that all religions can see is the existence of a

1 spiritual entity. So no religion can teach beyond that point. In every 2 religion there is the essential truth and the non-essential casket in 3 which this jewel lies. Believing in the Jewish book or in the Hindu 4 book is non-essential. Circumstances change; the receptacle is 5 different; but the central truth remains. The essentials being the 6 same, the educated people of every community retain the 7 essentials. If you ask a Christian what his essentials are, he should 8 reply, "The teachings of Lord Jesus." Much of the rest is nonsense.
9 But the nonsensical part is right; it forms the receptacle. The shell 10 of the oyster is not attractive, but the pearl is within it. The Hindu 11 will never attack the life of Jesus; he reverences the Sermon on the 12 Mount. But how many Christians know or have heard of the 13 teachings of the Hindu holy men? They remain in a fool's paradise.
14 Before a small fraction of the world was converted, Christianity was 15 divided into many creeds. That is the law of nature. Why take a 16 single instrument from the great religious orchestra of the earth?
17 Let the grand symphony go on. Be pure. Give up superstition and 18 see the wonderful harmony of nature. Superstition gets the better 19 of religion. All the religions are good, since the essentials are the 20 same. Each man should have the perfect exercise of his 21 individuality, but these individualities form a perfect whole. This 22 marvelous condition is already in existence. Each creed has 23 something to add to the wonderful structure.

24 I pity the Hindu who does not see the beauty in Jesus Christ's 25 character. I pity the Christian who does not reverence the Hindu 26 Christ. The more a man sees of himself, the less he sees of his 27 neighbors. Those that go about converting, who are very busy 28 saving the souls of others, in many instances forget their own souls.
29 I was asked by a lady why the women of India were not more 30 elevated. It is in a great degree owing to the barbarous invaders 31 through different ages; it is partly due to the people in India 32 themselves. But our women are any day better than the ladies of 33 this country who devotees of novels and balls. Where is the 34 spirituality one would expect in a country which is so boastful of its 35 civilisation? I have not found it. "Here" and "here-after" are words 36 to frighten children. It is all "here". To live and move in God--even 37 here, even in this body! All self should go out; all superstition 38 should be banished. Such men live in India. Where are such in this 39 country? Your preachers speak against "dreamers". The people of 40 this country would be better off if there were more "dreamers". If a 41 man here followed literally the instruction of his Lord, he would be 42 called a fanatic. There is a good deal of difference between 43 dreaming and the brag of the nineteenth century. The bees look for 44 the flowers. Open the lotus! The whole world is full of God and not 45 of sin. Let us help each other. Let us love each other. A beautiful 46 prayer of the Buddhist is: I bow down to all the saints; I bow down 47 to all the prophets; I bow down to all the holy men and women all 48 over the world!

51 THE RELIGION OF LOVE

(Notes of a lecture delivered in London on November 16, 1895)

Just as it is necessary for a man to go through symbols and ceremonies first in order to arrive at the depth of realisation, so we say in India, "It is good to be born in a church, but bad to die in one". A sapling must be hedged about for protection, but when it becomes a tree, a hedge would be a hindrance. So there is no need to criticise and condemn the old forms. We forget that in religion there must be growth.

At first we think of a Personal God, and call Him Creator, Omnipotent, Omniscient, and so forth. But when love comes, God is only love. The loving worshipper does not care what God is, because he wants nothing from Him. Says an Indian saint, "I am no beggar!" Neither does he fear. God is loved as a human being.

Here are some of the systems founded on love. (1) Shanta, a common, peaceful love, with such thoughts as those of fatherhood and help; (2) Dasya, the ideal of service; God as master or general or sovereign, giving punishments and rewards; (3) Vatsalya, God as mother or child. In India the mother never punishes. In each of these stages, the worshipper forms an ideal of God and follows it. Then (4) Sakhya, God as friend. There is here no fear. There is also the feeling of equality and familiarity. There are some Hindus who worship God as friend and playmate. Next comes (5) Madhura, sweetest love, the love of husband and wife. Of this St. Teresa and the ecstatic saints have been examples. Amongst the Persians, God has been looked upon as the wife, amongst the Hindus as the husband. We may recall the great queen Mira Bai, who preached that the Divine Spouse was all. Some carry this to such an extreme that to call God "mighty" or "father" seems to them blasphemy. The language of this worship is erotic. Some even use that of illicit passion. To this cycle belongs the story of Krishna and the Gopi-girls. All this probably seems to you to entail great degeneration on the worshipper. And so it does. Yet many great saints have been developed by it. And no human institution is beyond abuse. Would you cook nothing because there are beggars? Would you possess nothing because there are thieves? "O Beloved, one kiss of Thy lips, once tasted, hath made me mad!"

The fruit of this idea is that one can no longer belong to any sect, or endure ceremonial. Religion in India culminates in freedom. But even this comes to be given up, and all is love for love's sake.

Last of all comes love without distinction, the Self. There is a Persian poem that tells how a lover came to the door of his beloved, and knocked. She asked, "Who art thou?" and he replied, "I am so and so, thy beloved!" and she answered only, "Go! I know none such!" But when she had asked for the fourth time, he said, "I am thyself, O my Beloved, therefore open thou to me!" And the door was opened.

A great saint said, using the language of a girl, describing love: "Four eyes met. There were changes in two souls. And now I

1 cannot tell whether he is a man and I am a woman, or he is a
2 woman and I a man. This only I remember, two souls were. Love 3 came, and there was one."

4 In the highest love, union is only of the spirit. All love of any 5 other kind is quickly evanescent. Only the spiritual lasts, and this 6 grows.

7 Love sees the Ideal. This is the third angle of the triangle.
8 God has been Cause, Creator, Father. Love is the culmination. The 9 mother regrets that her child is humpbacked, but when she has 10 nursed him for a few days, she loves him and thinks him most 11 beautiful. The lover sees the beauty of Helen in the brow of 12 Ethiopia. We do not commonly realise what happens. The brow of 13 Ethiopia is merely a suggestion: the man sees Helen. His ideal is 14 thrown upon the suggestion and covers it, as the oyster makes sand 15 into a pearl. God is this ideal, through which man may see all.

16 Hence we come to love love itself. This love cannot be 17 expressed. No words can utter it. We are dumb about it.

18 The senses become very much heightened in love. Human 19 love, we must remember, is mixed up with attributes. It is 20 dependent, too, on the other's attitude. Indian languages have 21 words to describe this interdependence of love. The lowest love is 22 selfish; it consists in pleasure of being loved. We say in India, "One 23 gives the cheek, the other kisses." Above this is mutual love. But 24 this also ceases mutually. True love is all giving. We do not even 25 want to see the other, or to do anything to express our feeling. It is 26 enough to give. It is almost impossible to love a human being like 27 this, but it is possible to love God.

28 In India there is no idea of blasphemy if boys fighting in the 29 street use the name of God. We say, "Put your hand into the fire, 30 and whether you feel it or not, you will be burnt. So to utter the 31 name of God can bring nothing but good."

32 The notion of blasphemy comes from the Jews, who were 33 impressed by the spectacle of Persian loyalty. The ideas that God is 34 judge and punisher are not in themselves bad, but they are low and 35 vulgar. The three angles of the triangle are: Love begs not; Love 36 knows no fear; Love is always the ideal.

37 "Who would be able to live one second,
38 Who would be able to breathe one moment,
39 If the Loving one had not filled the universe?"

40 Most of us will find that we were born for service. We must 41 leave the results to God. The work was done only for love of God. If 42 failure comes, there need be no sorrow. The work was done only for 43 love of God.

44 In women, the mother-nature is much developed. They 45 worship God as the child. They ask nothing, and will do anything.

46 The Catholic Church teaches many of these deep things, and 47 though it is narrow, it is religious in the highest sense. In modern 48 society, Protestantism is broad but shallow. To judge truth by what 49 good it does is as bad as to question the value of a scientific

1 discovery to a baby.

2 Society must be outgrown. We must crush law and become 3 outlaws. We allow nature, only in order to conquer her.
4 Renunciation means that none can serve both God and Mammon.

5 Deepen your own power of thought and love. Bring your own 6 lotus to blossom: the bees will come of themselves. Believe first in 7 yourself, then in God. A handful of strong men will move the world.
8 We need a heart to feel, a brain to conceive, and a strong arm to do 9 the work. Buddha gave himself for the animals. Make yourself a fit 10 agent to work. But it is God who works, not you. One man contains 11 the whole universe. One particle of matter has all the energy of the 12 universe at its back. In a conflict between the heart and the brain 13 follow your heart.

14 Yesterday, competition was the law. Today, cooperation is the 15 law. Tomorrow there is no law. Let sages praise thee, or let the 16 world blame. Let fortune itself come, or let poverty and rags stare 17 thee in the face.

18 Eat the herbs of the forest, one day, for food; and the next, 19 share a banquet of fifty courses. Looking neither to right hand nor 20 to the left, follow thou on!

21 The Swami began by telling, in answer to questions, the story 22 of how Pavhari Baba snatched up his own vessels and ran after the 23 thief, only to fall at his feet and say:

24 "O Lord, I knew not that Thou wert there! Take them! They 25 are Thine! Pardon me, Thy child!"

26 Again he told how the same saint was bitten by a cobra, and 27 when, towards nightfall he recovered, he said, "A messenger came 28 to me from the Beloved."

31 JNANA AND KARMA

32 (Notes of a lecture delivered in London, on November 23, 33 1895)

34 The greatest force is derived from the power of thought. The 35 finer the element, the more powerful it is . The silent power of 36 thought influences people even at a distance, because mind is one 37 as well as many. The universe is a cobweb; minds are spiders.

38 The universe equals the phenomena of one Universal Being.
39 He, seen through our senses, is the universe. This is Maya. So the 40 world is illusion, that is, the imperfect vision of the Real, a semi-41 revelation, even as the sun in the morning is a red ball. Thus all 42 evils and wickedness are but weakness, the imperfect vision of 43 goodness.

44 A straight line projected infinitely becomes a circle. The 45 search for good comes back to Self. I am the whole mystery, God. I 46 am a body, the lower self; and I am the Lord of the universe.

47 Why should a man be moral and pure? Because this

1 strengthens his will. Everything that strengthens the will by 2 revealing the real nature is moral. Everything that does the reverse 3 is immoral. The standard varies from country to country, from 4 individual to individual. Man must recover from his state of slavery
5 to laws, to words, and so on. We have no freedom of the will now, 6 but we shall have when we are free. Renunciation is this giving up 7 of the world. Through the senses, anger comes, and sorrow comes.
8 As long as renunciation is not there, self and the passion animating 9 it are different. At last they become identified, and the man is an 10 animal at once. Become possessed with the feeling of renunciation.

11 I once had a body, was born, struggled and died: What awful 12 hallucinations! To think that one was cramped in a body, weeping 13 for salvation!

14 But does renunciation demand that we all become ascetics?
15 Who then is to help others? Renunciation is not asceticism. Are all 16 beggars Christ? Poverty is not a synonym for holiness; often the 17 reverse. Renunciation is of the mind. How does it come? In a 18 desert, when I was thirsty, I saw a lake. It was in the midst of a 19 beautiful landscape. There were trees surrounding it, and their 20 reflections could be seen in the water, upside down. But the whole 21 thing proved to be a mirage. Then I knew that every day for a 22 month I had seen this; and only that day, being thirsty, I had learnt 23 it to be unreal. Every day for a month I should see it again. But I 24 should never take it to be real. So, when we reach God, the idea of 25 the universe, the body and so on, will vanish. It will return 26 afterwards. But next time we shall know it to be unreal.

27 The history of the world is the history of persons like Buddha
28 and Jesus. The passionless and unattached do most for the world.
29 Picture Jesus in the slums. He sees beyond the misery, "You, my 30 brethren, are all divine." His work is calm. He removes causes. You 31 will be able to work for the good of the world when you know for a 32 fact that this work is all illusion. The more unconscious this work, 33 the better, because it is then the more superconscious. Our search 34 is not for good or evil; but happiness and good are nearer to truth 35 than their opposites. A man ran a thorn into his finger, and with 36 another thorn took it out. The first thorn is Evil. The second thorn is 37 Good. The Self is that Peace which passeth beyond both evil and 38 good. The universe is melting down: man draws nearer to God. For 39 one moment he is real--God. He is re-differentiated--a prophet.
40 Before him, now, the world trembles. A fool sleeps and wakes a 41 fool--a man unconscious; and superconscious, he returns with 42 infinite power, purity, and love--the God-Man. This is the use of the 43 superconscious state.

44 Wisdom can be practised even on a battlefield. The Gita was 45 preached so. There are three states of mind: the active, the passive, 46 and the serene. The passive state is characterised by slow 47 vibrations; the active by quick vibrations, and the serene by the 48 most intense vibrations of all. Know that the soul is sitting in the 49 chariot. The body is the chariot; the outer senses are the horses; 50 and the mind the reins; and the intellect the charioteer. So man 51 crosses the ocean of Maya. He goes beyond. He reaches God. When 52 a man is under the control of his senses, he is of this world. When 1 he has controlled the senses, he has renounced.

2 Even forgiveness, if weak and passive, is not true: fight is 3 better. Forgive when you could bring legions of angels to the 4 victory. Krishna, the charioteer of Arjuna, hears him say, "Let us 5 forgive our enemies", and answers, "You speak the words of wise
6 men, but you are not a wise man, but a coward". As a lotus-leaf, 7 living in the water yet untouched by it, so should the soul be in the 8 world. This is a battlefield, fight your way out. Life in this world is 9 an attempt to see God. Make your life a manifestation of will 10 strengthened by renunciation.

11 We must learn to control all our brain-centres consciously.
12 The first step is the joy of living. Asceticism is fiendish. To laugh is 13 better than to pray. Sing. Get rid of misery. Do not for heaven's sake 14 infect others with it. Never think God sells a little happiness and a 15 little unhappiness. Surround yourself with flowers and pictures and 16 incense. The saints went to the mountain tops to enjoy nature.

17 The second step is purity.

18 The third is full training of the mind. Reason out what is true 19 from what is untrue. See that God alone is true. If for a moment you 20 think you are not God, great terror will seize you. As soon as you 21 think "I am He", great peace and joy will come to you. Control the 22 senses. If a man curses me, I should still see in him God, whom 23 through my weakness I see as a curser. The poor man to whom you 24 do good is extending a privilege to you. He allows you, through His 25 mercy, to worship Him thus.

26 The history of the world is the history of a few men who had 27 faith in themselves. That faith calls out the divinity within. You can 28 do anything. You fail only when you do not strive sufficiently to 29 manifest infinite power. As soon as a man or a nation loses faith, 30 death comes.

31 There is a divine within that cannot be overcome either by 32 church dogmas or by blackguardism. A handful of Greeks speak 33 wherever there is civilisation. Some mistakes there must always be.
34 Do not grieve. Have great insight. Do not think, "What is done is 35 done. Oh, that 'twere done better!" If man had not been God, 36 humanity would by this time have become insane, with its litanies 37 and its penitence.

38 None will be left, none destroyed. All will in the end be made 39 perfect. Say, day and night, "Come up, my brothers! You are the 40 infinite ocean of purity! Be God! Manifest as God!"

41 What is civilisation? It is the feeling of the divine within.
42 When you find time, repeat these ideas to yourself and desire 43 freedom. That is all. Deny everything that is not God. Assert 44 everything that is God. Mentally assert this, day and night. So the 45 veil grows thinner:

1 "I am neither man nor angel. I have no sex nor limit. I am 2 knowledge itself. I am He. I have neither anger nor hatred. I have 3 neither pain nor pleasure. Death or birth I never had. For I am 4 Knowledge Absolute, and Bliss Absolute. I am He, my soul, I am 5 He!"

6 Find yourself bodiless. You never had a body. It was all 7 superstition. Give back the divine consciousness to all the poor, the 8 downtrodden, the oppressed, and the sick.

9 Apparently, every five hundred years or so, a wave of this 10 thought comes over the world. Little waves arise in many 11 directions: but one swallows up all the others and sweeps over 12 society. That wave does this which has most character at its back.

13 Confucius, Moses, and Pythagoras; Buddha, Christ,
14 Mohammed; Luther, Calvin, and the Sikhs; Theosophy, Spiritualism, 15 and the like; all these mean only the preaching of the Divine-in-16 Man.

17 Never say man is weak. Wisdom-Yoga is no better than the 18 others. Love is the ideal and requires no object. Love is God. So 19 even through devotion we reach the subjective God. I am He! How 20 can one work, unless one loves city, country, animals, the universe?
21 Reason leads to the finding of unity in variety. Let the atheist and 22 the agnostic work for the social good. So God comes.

23 But this you must guard against: Do not disturb the faith of 24 any. For you must know that religion is not in doctrines. Religion 25 lies in being and becoming, in realisation. All men are born 26 idolaters. The lowest man is an animal. The highest man is perfect.
27 And between these two, all have to think in sound and colour, in 28 doctrine and ritual.

29 The test of having ceased to be an idolater is: "When you say 30 'I', does the body come into your thought or not? If it does, then you 31 are still a worshipper of idols." Religion is not intellectual jargon at 32 all, but realisation. If you think about God, you are only a fool. The 33 ignorant man, by prayer and devotion, can reach beyond the 34 philosopher. To know God, no philosophy is necessary. Our duty is 35 not to disturb the faith of others. Religion is experience. Above all 36 and in all, be sincere; identification brings misery, because it brings 37 desire. Thus the poor man sees gold, and identifies himself with the 38 need of gold. Be the witness. Learn never to react.

41 THE CLAIMS OF VEDANTA ON THE MODERN 42 WORLD

43 (Report of a lecture delivered in Oakland on Sunday, February 25, 1900, 44 with editorial comments of the Oakland Enquirer)

45 The announcement that Swami Vivekananda, a distinguished 46 savant of the East, would expound the philosophy of Vedanta in the 47 Parliament of Religions at the Unitarian Church last evening, 48 attracted an immense throng. The main auditorium and ante-rooms 49 were packed, the annexed auditorium of Wendte Hall was thrown

1 open, and this was also filled to overflowing, and it is estimated that 2 fully 500 persons, who could not obtain seats or standing room
3 where they could hear conveniently, were turned away.

4 The Swami created a marked impression. Frequently he 5 received applause during the lecture, and upon concluding, held a 6 levee of enthusiastic admirers. He said in part, under the subject of 7 "The Claims of Vedanta on the Modern World":

8 Vedanta demands the consideration of the modern world. The 9 largest number of the human race is under its influence. Again and 10 again, millions upon millions have swept down on its adherents in 11 India, crushing them with their great force, and yet the religion 12 lives.

13 In all the nations of the world, can such a system be found?
14 Others have risen to come under its shadow. Born like mushrooms, 15 today they are alive and flourishing, and tomorrow they are gone. Is 16 this not the survival of the fittest?

17 It is a system not yet complete. It has been growing for 18 thousands of years and is still growing. So I can give you but an 19 idea of all I would say in one brief hour.

20 First, to tell you of the history of the rise of Vedanta. When it 21 arose, India had already perfected a religion. Its crystallisation had 22 been going on many years. Already there were elaborate 23 ceremonies; already there had been perfected a system of morals 24 for the different stages of life. But there came a rebellion against 25 the mummeries and mockeries that enter into many religions in 26 time, and great men came forth to proclaim through the Vedas the 27 true religion. Hindus received their religion from the revelation of 28 these Vedas. They were told that the Vedas were without beginning 29 and without end. It may sound ludicrous to this audience--how a 30 book can be without beginning or end; but by the Vedas no books
31 are meant. They mean the accumulated treasury of spiritual laws 32 discovered by different persons in different times.

33 Before these men came, the popular ideas of a God ruling the 34 universe, and that man was immortal, were in existence. But there 35 they stopped. It was thought that nothing more could be known.
36 Here came the daring of the expounders of Vedanta. They knew 37 that religion meant for children is not good for thinking men; that 38 there is something more to man and God.

39 The moral agnostic knows only the external dead nature.
40 From that he would form the law of the universe. He might as well 41 cut off my nose and claim to form an idea of my whole body, as 42 argue thus. He must look within. The stars that sweep through the 43 heavens, even the universe is but a drop in the bucket. Your 44 agnostic sees not the greatest, and he is frightened at the universe.

45 The world of spirit is greater than all--the God of the universe
46 who rules--our Father, our Mother. What is this heathen mummery 47 we call the world? There is misery everywhere. The child is born 48 with a cry upon its lips; it is its first utterance. This child becomes a 49 man, and so well used to misery that the pang of the heart is hidden 50 by a smile on the lips.

1 Where is the solution of this world? Those who look outside 2 will never find it; they must turn their eyes inward and find truth.
3 Religion lives inside.

4 One man preaches, if you chop your head off, you get 5 salvation. But does he get any one to follow him? Your own Jesus 6 says, "Give all to the poor and follow me." How many of you have 7 done this? You have not followed out this command, and yet Jesus 8 was the great teacher of your religion. Every one of you is practical 9 in his own life, and you find this would be impracticable.

10 But Vedanta offers you nothing that is impracticable. Every 11 science must have its own matter to work upon. Everyone needs 12 certain conditions and much of training and learning; but any Jack 13 in the street can tell you all about religion. You may want to follow 14 religion and follow an expert, but you may only care to converse 15 with Jack, for he can talk it.

16 You must do with religion as with science, come in direct 17 contact with facts, and on that foundation build a marvellous 18 structure.

19 To have a true religion you must have instruments. Belief is 20 not in question; of faith you can make nothing, for you can believe 21 anything.

22 We know that in science as we increase the velocity, the mass
23 decreases; and as we increase the mass, the velocity decreases.
24 Thus we have matter and force. The matter, we do not know how, 25 disappears into force, and force into matter. Therefore there is 26 something which is neither force nor matter, as these two may not 27 disappear into each other. This is what we call mind--the universal 28 mind.

29 Your body and my body are separate, you say. I am but a little 30 whirlpool in the universal ocean of mankind. A whirlpool, it is true, 31 but a part of the great ocean.

32 You stand by moving water where every particle is changing, 33 and yet you call it a stream. The water is changing, it is true, but 34 the banks remain the same. The mind is not changing, but the 35 body--how quick its growth! I was a baby, a boy, a man, and soon I 36 will be an old man, stooped and aged. The body is changing, and 37 you say, is the mind not changing also? When I was a child, I was 38 thinking, I have become larger, because my mind is a sea of 39 impressions.

40 There is behind nature a universal mind. The spirit is simply a 41 unit and it is not matter. For man is a spirit. The question, "Where 42 does the soul go after death?" should be answered like the boy 43 when he asked, "Why does not the earth fall down?" The questions 44 are alike, and their solutions alike; for where could the soul go to?

45 To you who talk of immortality I would ask when you go home 46 to endeavour to imagine you are dead. Stand by and touch your 47 dead body. You cannot, for you cannot get out of yourself. The 48 question is not concerning immortality, but as to whether Jack will 49 meet his Jenny after death.

1 The one great secret of religion is to know for yourself that 2 you are a spirit. Do not cry out, "I am a worm, I am nobody!" As the 3 poet says, "I am Existence, Knowledge, and Truth." No man can do 4 any good in the world by crying out, "I am one of its evils." The 5 more perfect, the less imperfections you see.

6 7 THE LAWS OF LIFE AND DEATH

8 (Report of a lecture delivered in Oakland on March 7, 1900, with editorial
9 comments of the Oakland Tribune)

10 11 Swami Vivekananda delivered a lecture last evening on the 12 subject, "The Laws of Life and Death". The Swami said: "How to get 13 rid of this birth and death--not how to go to heaven, but how one 14 can stop going to heaven--this is the object of the search of the 15 Hindu."

16 The Swami went on to say that nothing stands isolated-- 17 everything is a part of the never-ending procession of cause and 18 effect. If there are higher beings than man, they also must obey the 19 laws. Life can only spring from life, thought from thought, matter 20 from matter. A universe cannot be created out of matter. It has 21 existed for ever. If human beings came into the world fresh from the 22 hands of nature, they would come without impressions; but we do 23 not come in that way, which shows that we are not created afresh.
24 If human souls are created out of nothing, what is to prevent them 25 from going back into nothing? If we are to live all the time in the 26 future, we must have lived all the time in the past.

27 It is the belief of the Hindu that the soul is neither mind nor 28 body. What is it which remains stable--which can say, "I am I"? Not 29 the body, for it is always changing; and not the mind, which 30 changes more rapidly than the body, which never has the same 31 thoughts for even a few minutes. There must be an identity which 32 does not change--something which is to man what the banks are to 33 the river--the banks which do not change and without whose 34 immobility we would not be conscious of the constantly moving 35 stream. Behind the body, behind the mind, there must be 36 something, viz the soul, which unifies the man. Mind is merely the 37 fine instrument through which the soul--the master--acts on the 38 body. In India we say a man has given up his body, while you say, a 39 man gives up his ghost. The Hindus believe that a man is a soul and 40 has a body, while Western people believe he is a body and 41 possesses a soul.

42 Death overtakes everything which is complex. The soul is a 43 single element, not composed of anything else, and therefore it 44 cannot die. By its very nature the soul must be immortal. Body, 45 mind, and soul turn upon the wheel of law--none can escape. No 46 more can we transcend the law than can the stars, than can the 47 sun--it is all a universe of law. The law of Karma is that every action 48 must be followed sooner or later by an effect. The Egyptian seed 49 which was taken from the hand of a mummy after 5000 years and 50 sprang into life when planted is the type of the never-ending

1 influence of human acts. Action can never die without producing 2 action. Now, if our acts can only produce their appropriate effects 3 on this plane of existence, it follows that we must all come back to 4 round out the circle of causes and effects. This is the doctrine of 5 reincarnation. We are the slaves of law, the slaves of conduct, the 6 slaves of thirst, the slaves of desire, the slaves of a thousand things.
7 Only by escaping from life can we escape from slavery to freedom.
8 God is the only one who is free. God and freedom are one and the 9 same.

12 THE REALITY AND THE SHADOW

13 (Report of a lecture delivered in Oakland on March 8, 1900, with editorial
14 comments of the Oakland Tribune)

16 Swami Vivekananda, the Hindu philosopher, delivered 17 another lecture in Wendte Hall last evening. His subject was: "The 18 Reality and The Shadow". He said:

19 "The soul of man is ever striving after certainty, to find 20 something that does not change. It is never satisfied. Wealth, the 21 gratification of ambition or of appetite are all changeable. Once 22 these are attained, man is not content. Religion is the science which 23 teaches us whence to satisfy this longing after the unchangeable.
24 Behind all the local colours and derivations they teach the same 25 thing--that there is reality only in the soul of man.

26 "The philosophy of Vedanta teaches that there are two 27 worlds, the external or sensory, and the internal or subjective--the 28 thought world.

29 "It posits three fundamental concepts--time, space, and 30 causation. From these is constituted Maya, the essential 31 groundwork of human thought, not the product of thought. This 32 same conclusion was arrived at a later date by the great German 33 philosopher Kant.

34 "My reality, that of nature and of God, is the same, the 35 difference is in form of manifestation. The differentiation is caused 36 by Maya. The contour of the shore may shape the ocean into bay, 37 strait, or inlet; but when this shaping force or Maya is removed, the 38 separate form disappears, the differentiation ceases, all is ocean
39 again."

40 The Swami then spoke of the roots of the theory of evolution 41 to be found in the Vedanta philosophy.

42 "All modern religions start with the idea," continued the 43 speaker, "that man was once pure, he fell, and will become pure 44 again. I do not see where they get this idea. The seat of knowledge 45 is the soul; external circumstance simply stimulates the soul; 46 knowledge is the power of the soul. Century after century it has 47 been manufacturing bodies. The various forms of incarnation are 48 merely successive chapters of the story of the life of the soul. We

1 are constantly building our bodies. The whole universe is in a state 2 of flux, of expansion and contraction, of change. Vedanta holds that 3 the soul never changes in essence, but it is modified by Maya.
4 Nature is God limited by mind. The evolution of nature is the 5 modification of the soul. The soul in essence is the same in all forms 6 of being. Its expression is modified by the body. This unity of soul, 7 this common substance of humanity, is the basis of ethics and 8 morality. In this sense all are one, and to hurt one's brother is to 9 hurt one's Self.

10 "Love is simply an expression of this infinite unity. Upon what 11 dualistic system can you explain love? One of the European 12 philosophers says that kissing is a survival of cannibalism, a kind of 13 expression of 'how good you taste'. I do not believe it.

14 "What is it we all seek? Freedom. All the effort and struggle 15 of life is for freedom. It is the march universal of races, of worlds, 16 and of systems.

17 "If we are bound, who bound us? No power can bind the 18 Infinite but Itself."

19 After the discourse an opportunity was afforded for asking 20 questions of the speaker, who devoted half an hour to answering 21 them.

23 WAY TO SALVATION

24 (Report of a lecture delivered in Oakland on Monday, March 25 12, 1900, with editorial comments of the Oakland Enquirer)

26
27 Wendte Hall of the First Unitarian Church was crowded last 28 evening with a large audience to hear the "Way to Salvation" from 29 the standpoint of the Hindu priest, Swami Vivekananda. This was 30 the last lecture of a series of three which the Swami has delivered.
31 He said in part:

32 One man says God is in heaven, another that God is in nature 33 and everywhere present. But when the great crisis comes, we find 34 the goal is the same. We all work on different plans, but the end is 35 not different.

36 The two great watchwords of every great religion are 37 renunciation and self-sacrifice. We all want the truth, and we know 38 that it must come, whether we want it or not. In a way we are all 39 striving for that good. And what prevents our reaching it? It is 40 ourselves. Your ancestors used to call it the devil; but it is our own 41 false self.

42 We live in slavery, and we would die if we were out of it. We 43 are like the man who lived in total darkness for ninety years and 44 when taken out into the warm sunshine of nature, prayed to be 45 taken back to his dungeon. You would not leave this old life to go 46 into a newer and greater freedom which opens out.

47 The great difficulty is to go to the heart of things. These little 48 degraded delusions of Jack So-and-So's, who thinks he has an

1 infinite soul, however small he is with his different religions. In one 2 country, all as a matter of religion, a man has many wives; in 3 another one woman has many husbands. So some men have two 4 gods, some one God, and some no God at all.

5 But salvation is in work and love. You learn something 6 thoroughly; in time you may not be able to call that thing to 7 memory. Yet it has sunk into your inner consciousness and is a part 8 of you. So as you work, whether it be good or bad, you shape your 9 future course of life. If you do good work with the idea of work-- 10 work for work's sake--you will go to heaven of your idea and dream 11 of heaven.

12 The history of the world is not of its great men, of its demi-13 gods, but it is the little islands of the sea, which build themselves to 14 great continents from fragments of the sea drift. Then the history of 15 the world is in the little acts of sacrifice performed in every 16 household. Man accepts religion because he does not wish to stand 17 on his own judgment. He takes it as the best way of getting out of a 18 bad place.

19 The salvation of man lies in the great love with which he loves 20 his God. Your wife says, "O John, I could not live without you." Some 21 men when they lose their money have to be sent to the asylum. Do 22 you feel that way about your God? When you can give up money, 23 friends, fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters, all that is in the 24 world and only pray to God that He grant you something of His 25 love, then you have found salvation.

28 THE PEOPLE OF INDIA

29 (Report of a lecture delivered in Oakland on Monday, March 30 19, 1900, with editorial comments of the Oakland Enquirer)

32 The lecture which the Swami Vivekananda gave Monday
33 night in his new course on "The People of India", was interesting, 34 not only for what he had to relate of the people of that country, but 35 for the insight into their mental attitude and prejudices which the 36 speaker gave without really meaning it. It is apparent that the 37 Swami, educated and intellectual man that he is, is no admirer of 38 Western civilisation. He has evidently been a good deal embittered 39 by the talk about child widows, the oppression of women, and other 40 barbarisms alleged against the people of India, and is somewhat 41 inclined to resort to the tu quoque in reply.

42 In commencing his talk, he gave his hearers an idea of the 43 racial characteristics of the people. He said that the bond of unity in 44 India, as in other countries of Asia, is not language or race, but 45 religion. In Europe the race makes the nation, but in Asia people of 46 diverse origin and different tongues become one nation if they have 47 the same religion. The people of Northern India are divided into 48 four great classes, while in Southern India the languages are so 49 entirely different from those of Northern India that there is no

1 kinship whatever. The people of Northern India belong to the great 2 Aryan race, to which all of the people of Europe, except the 3 Basques in the Pyrennees, and the Finns, are supposed to belong.
4 The Southern India people belong to the same race as the ancient 5 Egyptians and the Semites. To illustrate the difficulties of learning 6 one another's languages in India, the Swami said that when he had 7 occasion to go into Southern India, he always talked with the native 8 people in English, unless they belonged to the select few who could 9 speak Sanskrit.

10 A good deal of the lecture was taken up in a discussion of the 11 caste system which the Swami characterised by saying that it had 12 its bad side, but that its benefits outweighed its disadvantages. In 13 brief, this caste system had grown by the practice of the son always 14 following the business of the father. In course of time the 15 community came thus to be divided into a series of classes, each 16 held rigidly within its own boundaries. But while this divided the 17 people, it also united them, because all the members of a caste 18 were bound to help their fellows in case of need. And as no man 19 could rise out of his caste, the Hindus have no such struggles for 20 social or personal supremacy as embitter the people of other 21 countries.

22 The worst feature of the caste is that it suppresses 23 competition, and the checking of competition has really been the 24 cause of the political downfall of India and its conquest by foreign 25 races.

26 Respecting the much-discussed subject of marriage, the 27 Hindus are socialistic and see nothing good in matches being made 28 by a couple of young people who might be attached to one another, 29 without regard to the welfare of the community, which is more 30 important than that of any two persons. "Because I love Jennie and 31 Jennie loves me", said the Swami, "is no reason why we should be 32 married."

33 He denied that the condition of the child widows is as bad as 34 has been represented, saying that in India the position of widows in 35 general is one of a great deal of influence, because a large part of 36 the property in the country is held by widows. In fact, so enviable is 37 the position of widows that a woman or a man either might almost 38 pray to be made a widow.

39 The child widows, or women who have been betrothed to 40 children who died before marriage, might be pitied if a marriage 41 were the only real object in life, but, according to the Hindu way of 42 thinking, marriage is rather a duty than a privilege, and the denial 43 of the right of child widows to marry is no particular hardship.

46 I AM THAT I AM

47 (Notes of a lecture give in San Francisco on March 20, 1900)

48 The subject tonight is man, man in contrast with nature. For a 49 long time the word "nature" was used almost exclusively to denote

1 external phenomena. These phenomena were found to behave 2 methodically; and they often repeated themselves: that which had 3 happened in the past happened again--nothing happened only once.
4 Thus it was concluded that nature was uniform. Uniformity is 5 closely associated with the idea of nature; without it natural 6 phenomena cannot be understood. This uniformity is the basis of 7 what we call law.

8 Gradually the word "nature" and the idea of uniformity came 9 to be applied also to internal phenomena, the phenomena of life and 10 mind. All that is differentiated is nature. Nature is the quality of the 11 plant, the quality of the animal, and the quality of man. Man's life 12 behaves according to definite methods; so does his mind. Thoughts 13 do not just happen, there is a certain method in their rise, existence 14 and fall. In other words, just as external phenomena are bound by 15 law, internal phenomena, that is to say, the life and mind of man, 16 are also bound by law.

17 When we consider law in relation to man's mind and 18 existence, it is at once obvious that there can be no such thing as 19 free will and free existence. We know how animal nature is wholly 20 regulated by law. The animal does not appear to exercise any free 21 will. The same is true of man; human nature also is bound by law.
22 The law governing functions of the human mind is called the law of 23 Karma.

24 Nobody has ever seen anything produced out of nothing; if 25 anything arises in the mind, that also must have been produced 26 from something. When we speak of free will, we mean the will is 27 not caused by anything. But that cannot be true, the will is caused; 28 and since it is caused, it cannot be free--it is bound by law. That I 29 am willing to talk to you and you come to listen to me, that is law.
30 Everything that I do or think or feel, every part of my conduct or 31 behaviour, my every movement--all is caused and therefore not free.
32 This regulation of our life and mind--that is the law of Karma.

33 If such a doctrine had been introduced in olden times into a 34 Western community, it would have produced a tremendous 35 commotion. The Western man does not want to think his mind is 36 governed by law. In India it was accepted as soon as it was 37 propounded by the most ancient Indian system of philosophy. There 38 is no such thing as freedom of the mind; it cannot be. Why did not 39 this teaching create any disturbance in the Indian mind? India 40 received it calmly; that is the speciality of Indian thought, wherein 41 it differs from every other thought in the world.

42 The external and internal natures are not two different 43 things; they are really one. Nature is the sum total of all 44 phenomena. "Nature" means all that is, all that moves. We make a 45 tremendous distinction between matter and mind; we think that the 46 mind is entirely different from matter. Actually, they are but one 47 nature, half of which is continually acting on the other half. Matter 48 is pressing upon the mind in the form of various sensations. These 49 sensations are nothing but force. The force from the outside evokes 50 the force within. From the will to respond to or get away from the 51 outer force, the inner force becomes what we call thought.

1 Both matter and mind are really nothing but forces; and if you 2 analyse them far enough, you will find that at root they are one. The 3 very fact that the external force can somehow evoke the internal 4 force shows that somewhere they join each other--they must be 5 continuous and, therefore, basically the same force. When you get 6 to the root of things, they become simple and general. Since the 7 same force appears in one form as matter and in another form as 8 mind, there is no reason to think matter and mind are different.
9 Mind is changed into matter, matter is changed into mind. Thought 10 force becomes nerve force, muscular force; muscular and nerve 11 force become thought force. Nature is all this force, whether 12 expressed as matter or mind.

13 The difference between the subtlest mind and the grossest 14 matter is only one of degree. Therefore the whole universe may be 15 called either mind or matter, it does not matter which. You may call 16 the mind refined matter, or the body concretised mind; it makes 17 little difference by which name you call which. All the troubles 18 arising from the conflict between materialism and spirituality are 19 due to wrong thinking. Actually, there is no difference between the 20 two. I and the lowest pig differ only in degree. It is less manifested, 21 I am more. Sometimes I am worse, the pig is better.

22 Nor is it any use discussing which comes first--mind or 23 matter. Is the mind first, out of which matter has come? Or is 24 matter first, out of which the mind has come? Many of the 25 philosophical arguments proceed from these futile questions. It is 26 like asking whether the egg or the hen is first. Both are first, and 27 both last--mind and matter, matter and mind. If I say matter exists 28 first and matter, growing finer and finer, becomes mind, then I must 29 admit that before matter there must have been mind. Otherwise, 30 where did matter come from? Matter precedes mind, mind 31 precedes matter. It is the hen and the egg question all through.

32 The whole of nature is bound by the law of causation and is in 33 time and space. We cannot see anything outside of space, yet we do 34 not know space. We cannot perceive anything outside of time, yet 35 we do not know time. We cannot understand anything except in 36 terms of causality, yet we do not know what causation is. These 37 three things--time, space, and causality--are in and through every 38 phenomena, but they are not phenomena. They are as it were the 39 forms or moulds in which everything must be cast before it can be 40 apprehended. Matter is substance plus time, space, and causation.
41 Mind is substance plus time, space and causation.

42 This fact can be expressed in another way. Everything is 43 substance plus name and form. Name and form come and go, but 44 substance remains ever the same. Substance, form, and name make 45 this pitcher. When it is broken, you do not call it pitcher any more, 46 nor do you see its pitcher form. Its name and form vanish, but its 47 substance remains. All the differentiation in substance is made by 48 name and form. There are not real, because they vanish. What we 49 call nature is not the substance, unchanging and indestructible.
50 Nature is time, space and causation. Nature is name and form.
51 Nature is Maya. Maya means name and form, into which everything 52 is cast. Maya is not real. We could not destroy it or change it if it

1 were real. The substance is the noumenon, Maya is phenomena.
2 There is the real "me" which nothing can destroy, and there is the 3 phenomenal "me" which is continually changing and disappearing.

4 The fact is, everything existing has two aspects. One is 5 noumenal, unchanging and indestructible; the other is phenomenal, 6 changing and destructible. Man in his true nature is substance, 7 soul, spirit. This soul, this spirit, never changes, is never destroyed; 8 but it appears to be clothed with a form and to have a name 9 associated with it. This form and name are not immutable or 10 indestructible; they continually change and are destroyed.

11 Yet men foolishly seek immortality in this changeable aspect, 12 in the body and mind--they want to have an eternal body. I do not 13 want that kind of immortality.

14 What is the relation between me and nature? In so far as 15 nature stands for name and form or for time, space, and causality, I 16 am not part of nature, because I am free, I am immortal, I am 17 unchanging and infinite. The question does not arise whether I have 18 free will or not; I am beyond any will at all. Wherever there is will, 19 it is never free. There is no freedom of will whatever. There is 20 freedom of that which becomes will when name and form get hold 21 of it, making it their slave. That substance--the soul--as it were 22 moulds itself, as it were throws itself into the cast of name and 23 form, and immediately becomes bound, whereas it was free before.
24 And yet its original nature is still there. That is why it says, "I am 25 free; in spite of all this bondage, I am free." And it never forgets 26 this.

27 But when the soul has become the will, it is no more really 28 free. Nature pulls the strings, and it has to dance as nature wants it 29 to. Thus have you and I danced throughout the years. All the things 30 that we see, do, feel, know, all our thoughts and actions, are 31 nothing but dancing to the dictates of nature. There has been, and 32 there is, no freedom in any of this. From the lowest to the highest, 33 all thoughts and actions are bound by law, and none of these 34 pertain to our real Self.

35 My true Self is beyond all law. Be in tune with slavery, with 36 nature, and you live under law, you are happy under law. But the 37 more you obey nature and its dictates, the more bound you become; 38 the more in harmony with ignorance you are, the more you are at 39 the beck and call of everything in the universe. Is this harmony with 40 nature, this obedience to law, in accord with the true nature and 41 destiny of man? What mineral ever quarrelled with and disputed 42 any law? What tree or plant ever defied any law? This table is in 43 harmony with nature, with law; but a table it remains always, it 44 does not become any better. Man begins to struggle and fight 45 against nature. He makes many mistakes, he suffers. But eventually 46 he conquers nature and realises his freedom. When he is free, 47 nature becomes his slave.

48 The awakening of the soul to its bondage and its effort to 49 stand up and assert itself--this is called life. Success in this struggle 50 is called evolution. The eventual triumph, when all the slavery is 51 blown away, is called salvation, Nirvana, freedom. Everything in the 1 universe is struggling for liberty. When I am bound by nature, by 2 name and form, by time, space and causality, I do not know what I

3 truly am. But even in this bondage my real Self is not completely
4 lost. I strain against the bonds; one by one they break, and I
5 become conscious of my innate grandeur. Then comes complete 6 liberation. I attain to the clearest and fullest consciousness of 7 myself-I know that I am the infinite spirit, the master of nature, not 8 its slave. Beyond all differentiation and combination, beyond space, 9 time and causation, I am that I am.

11 UNITY

12 (Notes of a lecture delivered at the Vedanta Society, New 13 York, in June, 1900)

14 The different sectarian systems of India all radiate from one 15 central idea of unity or dualism.

16 They are all under Vedanta, all interpreted by it. Their final 17 essence is the teaching of unity. This, which we see as many, is God.
18 We perceive matter, the world, manifold sensation. Yet there is but 19 one existence.

20 These various names mark only differences of degree in the 21 expression of that One. The worm of today is the God of tomorrow.
22 These distinctions which we do love are all parts of one infinite fact, 23 and only differ in the degree of expression. That one infinite fact is 24 the attainment of freedom.

25 However mistaken we may be as to the method, all our 26 struggle is really for freedom. We seek neither misery nor 27 happiness, but freedom. This one aim is the secret of the insatiable 28 thirst of man. Man's thirst, says the Hindu, man's thirst, says the 29 Buddhist, is a burning, unquenchable thirst for more and more. You 30 Americans are always looking for more pleasure, more enjoyment.
31 You cannot be satisfied, true; but at bottom what you seek is 32 freedom.

33 This vastness of his desire is really the sign of man's own
34 infinitude. It is because he is infinite, that he can only be satisfied 35 when his desire is infinite and its fulfilment infinite.

36 What then can satisfy man? Not gold. Not enjoyment. Not 37 beauty. One Infinite alone can satisfy him, and that Infinite is 38 Himself. When he realises this, then alone comes freedom.

39 "This flute, with the sense-organs as its keyholes, 40 With all its sensations, perceptions, and song, 41 Is singing only one thing. It longs to go back to the 42 wood whence it was cut!"

43 "Deliver thou thyself by thyself!

44 Ah, do not let thyself sink!

45 For thou art thyself thy greatest friend.

46 And thou thyself thy greatest enemy."

1 Who can help the Infinite? Even the hand that comes to you 2 through the darkness will have to be your own.

3 Fear and desire are the two causes of all this, and who 4 creates them? We ourselves. Our lives are but a passing from 5 dream to dream. Man the infinite dreamer, dreaming finite dreams!

6 Oh, the blessedness of it, that nothing external can be 7 eternal! They little know what they mean, whose hearts quake 8 when they hear that nothing in this relative world can be eternal.

9 I am the infinite blue sky. Over me pass these clouds of 10 various colours, remain a moment, and vanish. I am the same 11 eternal blue. I am the witness, the same eternal witness of all. I see, 12 therefore nature exists. I do not see, therefore she does not. Not 13 one of us could see or speak if this infinite unity were broken for a 14 moment.

16 THE WORSHIP OF THE DIVINE MOTHER

17 (Fragmentary notes taken on a Sunday afternoon in New York 18 in June, 1900)

20 From the tribal or clan-God, man arrives, in every religion, at 21 the sum, the God of gods.

22 Confucius alone has expressed the one eternal idea of ethics.
23 "Manu Deva" was transformed into Ahriman. In India, the 24 mythological expression was suppressed; but the idea remained. In 25 an old Veda is found the Mantra, "I am the empress of all that lives, 26 the power in everything."

27 Mother-worship is a distinct philosophy in itself. Power is the 28 first of our ideas. It impinges upon man at every step; power felt 29 within is the soul; without, nature. And the battle between the two 30 makes human life. All that we know or feel is but the resultant of 31 these two forces. Man saw that the sun shines on the good and evil 32 alike. Here was a new idea of God, as the Universal Power behind 33 all--the Mother-idea was born.

34 Activity, according to Sankhya, belongs to Prakriti, to nature, 35 not to Purusha or soul. Of all feminine types in India, the mother is 36 pre-eminent. The mother stands by her child through everything.
37 Wife and children may desert a man, but his mother never! Mother, 38 again, is the impartial energy of the universe, because of the 39 colourless love that asks not, desires not, cares not for the evil in 40 her child, but loves him the more. And today Mother-worship is the 41 worship of all the highest classes amongst the Hindus.

42 The goal can only be described as something not yet attained.
43 Here, there is no goal. This world is all alike the play of Mother. But 44 we forget this. Even misery can be enjoyed when there is no 45 selfishness, when we have become the witness of our own lives. The 46 thinker of this philosophy has been struck by the idea that one 47 power is behind all phenomena. In our thought of God, there is 48 human limitation, personality: with Shakti comes the idea of One

1 Universal Power. "I stretch the bow of Rudra when He desires to 2 kill", says Shakti. The Upanisads did not develop this thought; for 3 Vedanta does not care for the God-idea. But in the Gita comes the 4 significant saying to Arjuna, "I am the real, and I am the unreal. I 5 bring good, and I bring evil."

6 Again the idea slept. Later came the new philosophy. This 7 universe is a composite fact of good and evil; and one Power must 8 be manifesting through both. "A lame one-legged universe makes 9 only a lame one-legged God." And this, in the end, lands us in want 10 of sympathy and makes us brutal. The ethics built upon such a 11 concept is an ethics of brutality. The saint hates the sinner, and the 12 sinner struggles against the saint. Yet even this leads onward. For 13 finally the wicked self-sufficient mind will die, crushed under 14 repeated blows; and then we shall awake and know the Mother.

15 Eternal, unquestioning self-surrender to Mother alone can 16 give us peace. Love Her for Herself, without fear or favour. Love 17 Her because you are Her child. See Her in all, good and bad alike.
18 Then alone will come "Sameness" and Bliss Eternal that is Mother 19 Herself when we realise Her thus. Until then, misery will pursue us.
20 Only resting in Mother are we safe.

23 THE ESSENCE OF RELIGION

24 (Report of a lecture delivered in America)

26 In France the "rights of man" was long a watchword of the 27 race; in America the rights of women still beseech the public ear; in 28 India we have concerned ourselves always with the rights of Gods.

29 The Vedanta includes all sects. We have a peculiar idea in 30 India. Suppose I had a child; I should not teach him any religion, 31 but the practice of concentrating his mind; and just one line of 32 prayer--not prayer in your sense, but this: "I meditate on Him who 33 is the Creator of the universe; may He enlighten my mind." Then, 34 when old enough, he goes about hearing the different philosophies 35 and teachings, till he finds that which seems the truth to him. He 36 then becomes the Shishya or disciple of the Guru (teacher) who is 37 teaching this truth. He may choose to worship Christ or Buddha or 38 Mohammed: we recognise the rights of each of these, and the right 39 of all souls to their own Ishta or chosen way. It is, therefore, quite 40 possible for my son to be a Buddhist, my wife to be a Christian, and 41 myself a Mohammedan at one and the same time with absolute 42 freedom from friction.

43 We are all glad to remember that all roads lead to God; and 44 that the reformation of the world does not depend upon all seeing 45 God through our eyes. Our fundamental idea is that your doctrine 46 cannot be mine, nor mine yours. I am my own sect. It is true that 47 we have created a system of religion in India which we believe to 48 be the only rational religious system extant; but our belief in its

1 rationality rests upon its all-inclusion of the searchers after God; its 2 absolute charity towards all forms of worship, and its eternal 3 receptivity of those ideas trending towards the evolution of God in 4 the universe. We admit the imperfection of our system, because the 5 reality must be beyond all system; and in this admission lies the 6 portent and promise of an eternal growth. Sects, ceremonies, and 7 books, so far as they are the means of a man's realising his own 8 nature, are all right; when he has realised that, he gives up
9 everything. "I reject the Vedas!" is the last word of the Vedanta 10 philosophy. Ritual, hymns, and scriptures, through which he has 11 travelled to freedom, vanish for him. "So'ham, So'ham"--I am He, I 12 am He--bursts from his lips, and to say "Thou" to God is blasphemy, 13 for he is "one with the Father".

14 Personally, I take as much of the Vedas as agree with reason.
15 Parts of the Vedas are apparently contradictory. They are not 16 considered as inspired in the Western sense of the word, but as the 17 sum total of the knowledge of God, omniscience, which we possess.
18 But to say that only those books which we call the Vedas contain 19 this knowledge is mere sophistry. We know it is shared in varying 20 degrees by the scriptures of all sects. Manus says, that part only of 21 the Vedas which agrees with reason is Vedas; and many of our 22 philosophers have taken this view. Of all the scriptures of the world, 23 it is the Vedas alone which declare that the study of the Vedas is 24 secondary.

25 The real study is that "by which we realise the 26 Unchangeable", and that is neither by reading, nor believing, nor 27 reasoning, but by superconscious perception and Samadhi. When a 28 man has reached that perfect state, he is of the same nature as the 29 Personal God: "I and my Father are one." He knows himself one 30 with Brahman, the Absolute, and projects himself as does the 31 Personal God. The Personal God is the Absolute looked at through 32 the haze of Maya--ignorance.

33 When we approach Him with the five senses, we can only see 34 Him as the Personal God. The idea is that the Self cannot be 35 objectified. How can the knower know himself? But he can cast a 36 shadow, as it were, and the highest form of that shadow, that 37 attempt of objectifying one's Self is the Personal God. The Self is 38 the eternal subject, and we are eternally struggling to objectify that 39 Self, and out of that struggle has come this phenomenon of the 40 universe: that which we call matter. But these are weak attempts, 41 and the highest objectification of the Self, possible to us, is the 42 Personal God.

43 "An honest God's the noblest work of man", said one of your 44 Western thinkers. God is as man is. No man can see God but 45 through these human manifestations. Talk as you may, try as you 46 may, you cannot think of God but as a man; and as you are, He is.
47 An ignorant man was asked to make an image of the God Shiva; and 48 after many days of hard struggle he succeeded only in 49 manufacturing the image of a monkey! So, when we try to think of 50 God as He is in His absolute perfection, we meet with miserable 51 failure, because we are limited and bound by our present
52 constitution to see God as man. If the buffaloes desire to worship

1 God, they, in keeping with their own nature, will see Him as a huge 2 buffalo; if a fish wishes to worship God, its concept of Him would 3 inevitably be a big fish; and man must think of Him as man.
4 Suppose man, the buffalo, and the fish represent so many different 5 vessels; that these vessels all go to the sea of God to be filled, each 6 according to its shape and capacity. In man the water takes the 7 shape of man; in the buffalo the shape of the buffalo; and in the fish 8 the shape of the fish; but in each of these vessels is the same water 9 of the sea of God.

10 Two kinds of mind do not worship God as man--the human 11 brute who has no religion, and the Paramahansa who has 12 transcended the limits of his own human nature.

13 To him all nature has become his own Self; he alone can 14 worship God as He is. The human brute does not worship because 15 of his ignorance, and the Jivanmuktas (free souls) do not worship
16 because they have realised God in themselves. "So'ham, So'ham"--I 17 am He, I am He--they say; and how shall they worship themselves?

18 I will tell you a little story. There was once a baby lion left by 19 its dying mother among some sheep. The sheep fed it and gave it 20 shelter. The lion grew apace and said "Ba-a-a" when the sheep said 21 "Ba-a-a". One day another lion came by. "What do you do here?"
22 said the second lion in astonishment: for he heard the sheep-lion 23 bleating with the rest. "Ba-a-a," said the other. "I am a little sheep, I 24 am a little sheep, I am frightened." "Nonsense!" roared the first 25 lion, "come with me; I will show you." And he took him to the side of 26 a smooth stream and showed him that which was reflected therein.
27 "You are a lion; look at me, look at the sheep, look at yourself." And 28 the sheep-lion looked, and then he said, "Ba-a-a, I do not look like 29 the sheep--it is true, I am a lion!" and with that he roared a roar 30 that shook the hills to their depths.

31 That is it. We are lions in sheep's clothing of habit, we are 32 hypnotised into weakness by our surroundings. And the province of 33 Vedanta is the self-dehypnotisation. The goal to be reached is 34 freedom. I disagree with the idea that freedom is obedience to the 35 laws of nature. I do not understand what that means. According to 36 the history of human progress, it is disobedience to nature that has 37 constituted that progress. It may be said that the conquest of lower 38 laws was through the higher, but even there the conquering mind 39 was still seeking freedom; as soon as it found the struggle was 40 through law, it wished to conquer that also. So the ideal is always 41 freedom. The trees never disobey law. I never saw a cow steal. An 42 oyster never told a lie. Yet these are not greater than man.

43 Obedience to law, in the last issue, would make of us simply 44 matter--either in society, or in politics, or religion. This life is a 45 tremendous assertion of freedom; excess of laws means death. No 46 nation possesses so many laws as the Hindus, and the result is the 47 national death. But the Hindus had one peculiar idea--they never 48 made any doctrines or dogmas in religion; and the latter has had 49 the greatest growth. Therein are we practical--wherein you are 50 impractical--in our religion.

51 A few men come together in America and say, "We will have a

1 stock company"; in five minutes it is done. In India twenty men may 2 discuss a stock company for as many weeks, and it may not be 3 formed; but if one believes that by holding up his hands in air for 4 forty years he will attain wisdom, it will be done! So we are 5 practical in ours, you in your way.

6 But the way of all ways to realisation is love. When one loves 7 the Lord, the whole universe becomes dear to one, because it is all 8 His. "Everything is His, and He is my Lover; I love Him", says the 9 Bhakta. In this way everything becomes sacred to the Bhakta, 10 because all things are His. How, then, may we hurt any one? How, 11 then, may we not love another? With the love of God will come, as 12 its effect, the love of every one in the long run. The nearer we 13 approach God, the more do we begin to see that all things abide in 14 Him, our heart will become a perennial fountain of love. Man is 15 transformed in the presence of this Light of Love and realises at 16 last the beautiful and inspiring truth that Love, Lover, and the 17 Beloved are really one.

SAYINGS AND UTTERANCES

1. "Did Buddha teach that the many was real and the ego unreal, while orthodox Hinduism regards the One as the real, and the many as unreal?" the Swami was asked. "Yes", answered the Swami. "And what Ramakrishna Paramahansa and I have added to this is, that the Many and the One are the same Reality, perceived by the same mind at different times and in different attitudes."

2. "Remember!" he said once to a disciple, "Remember! the message of India is always "Not the soul for nature, but nature for the soul!"

3. "What the world wants today is twenty men and women who can dare to stand in the street yonder, and say that they possess nothing but God. Who will go? Why should one fear? If this is true, what else could matter? If it is not true, what do our lives matter!"

4. "Oh, how calm would be the work of one who really understood the divinity of man! For such, there is nothing to do, save to open men's eyes. All the rest does itself."

5. "He (Shri Ramakrishna) was contented simply to live that great life and to leave it to others to find the explanation!"

6. "Plans! Plans!" Swami Vivekananda explained in indignation, when one of his disciples had offered him some piece of worldly wisdom. "That is why . . . Western people can never create a religion! If any of you ever did, it was only a few Catholic saints who had no plans. Religion was never preached by planners!"

7. "Social life in the West is like a peal of laughter; but underneath, it is a wail. It ends in a sob. The fun and frivolity are all on the surface: really it is full of tragic intensity. Now here, it is sad and gloomy on the outside, but underneath are carelessness and merriment.

"We have a theory that the universe is God's manifestation of Himself just for fun, that the Incarnations came and lived here 'just for fun'. Play, it was all play. Why was Christ crucified? It was mere play. And so of life. Just play with the Lord. Say, "It is all play, it is all play". Do you do anything?"

8. "I am persuaded that a leader is not made in one life. He has to be born for it. For the difficulty is not in organisation and making plans; the test, the real test, of the leader, lies in holding widely different people together along the line of their common sympathies. And this can only be done unconsciously, never by trying."

9. In explanation of Plato's doctrine of Ideas, Swamiji said, "And so you see, all this is but a feeble manifestation of the great ideas, which alone, are real and perfect. Somewhere is an ideal for you, and here is an attempt to manifest it! The attempt falls short still in many ways. Still, go on! You will interpret the ideal some

1 day."

2 10. Answering the remark of a disciple who felt that it would 3 be better for her to come back to this life again and again and help 4 the causes that were of interest to her instead of striving for 5 personal salvation with a deep longing to get out of life, the Swami 6 retorted quickly: "That's because you cannot overcome the idea of 7 progress. But things do not grow better. They remain as they are; 8 and we grow better by the changes we make in them."

9 11. It was in Almora that a certain elderly man, with a face 10 full of amiable weakness, came and put him a question about 11 Karma. What were they to do, he asked, whose Karma it was to see 12 the strong oppress the weak? The Swami turned on him in 13 surprised indignation. "Why, thrash the strong, of course!" he said, 14 "You forget your own part in this Karma: Yours is always the right to 15 rebel!"

16 12. "Ought one to seek an opportunity of death in defense of 17 right, or ought one to take the lesson of the Gita and learn never to 18 react?" the Swami was asked. "I am for no reaction", said the 19 Swami, speaking slowly and with a long pause. Then he added "--for 20 Sannyasins. Self-defense for the householder!"

21 13. "It is a mistake to hold that with all men pleasure is the 22 motive. Quite as many are born to seek after pain. Let us worship 23 the Terror for Its own sake."

24 14. "Ramakrishna Paramahansa was the only man who ever 25 had the courage to say that we must speak to all men in their own 26 language!"

27 15. "How I used to hate Kali!" he said, referring to his own 28 days of doubts in accepting the Kali ideal, "And all Her ways! That 29 was the ground of my six years' fight--that I would not accept Her.
30 But I had to accept Her at last! Ramakrishna Paramahansa 31 dedicated me to Her, and now I believe that She guides me in 32 everything I do, and does with me what She will. . . . Yet I fought so 33 long! I loved him, you see, and that was what held me. I saw his 34 marvellous purity. . . . I felt his wonderful love. . . . His greatness 35 had not dawned on me then. All that came afterwards when I had 36 given in. At that time I thought him a brain-sick baby, always seeing 37 visions and the rest. I hated it. And then I, too, had to accept Her!

38 "No, the thing that made me do it is a secret that will die with 39 me. I had great misfortunes at the time. . . . It was an 40 opportunity. . . . She made a slave of me. Those were the very 41 words: 'a slave of you'. And Ramakrishna Paramahansa made me 42 over to Her. . . . Strange! He lived only two years after doing that, 43 and most of the time he was suffering. Not more than six months 44 did he keep his own health and brightness.

45 "Guru Nanak was like that, you know, looking for the one 46 disciple to whom he would give his power. And he passed over all 47 his own family--his children were as nothing to him--till he came 48 upon the boy to whom he gave it; and then he could die.

49 "The future, you say, will call Ramakrishna Paramahansa an

1 Incarnation of Kali? Yes, I think there's no doubt that She worked 2 up the body of Ramakrishna for Her own ends.

3 "You see, I cannot but believe that there is somewhere a 4 great Power that thinks of Herself as feminine, and called Kali and 5 Mother. . . . And I believe in Brahman too. . . . But is it not always 6 like that? Is it not the multitude of cells in the body that make up 7 the personality, the many brain-centres, not the one, that produce 8 consciousness? . . . Unity in complexity! Just so! And why should it 9 be different with Brahman? It is Brahman. It is the One. And yet-- 10 and yet--it is the gods too!"

11 16. "The older I grow, the more everything seems to me to lie 12 in manliness. This is my new gospel."

13 17. Referring to some European reference to cannibalism, as 14 if it were a normal part of life in some societies, the Swami 15 remarked, "That is not true! No nation ever ate human flesh, save 16 as a religious sacrifice, or in war, out of revenge. Don't you see?
17 That's not the way of gregarious animals! It would cut at the root of 18 social life!"

19 18. "Sex-love and creation! These are at the root of most 20 religions. And these in India are called Vaishnavism, and in the 21 West Christianity. How few have dared to worship Death or Kali!
22 Let us worship Death! Let us embrace the Terrible, because it is 23 terrible, not asking that it be toned down. Let us take misery for 24 misery's own sake!"

25 19. "The three cycles of Buddhism were five hundred years of 26 the Law, five hundred years of images, and five hundred years of 27 Tantras. You must not imagine that there was ever a religion in 28 India called Buddhism with temples and priests of its own order!
29 Nothing of the sort. It was always within Hinduism. Only at one 30 time the influence of Buddha was paramount, and this made the 31 nation monastic."

32 20. "The conservative's whole ideal is submission . Your ideal 33 is struggle. Consequently it is we who enjoy the life, and never 34 you! You are always striving to change yours to something better; 35 and before a millionth part of the change is carried out, you die.
36 The Western ideal is to be doing; the Eastern to be suffering. The 37 perfect life would be a wonderful harmony doing and suffering. But 38 that can never be.

39 "In our system it is accepted that a man cannot have all he 40 desires. Life is subjected to many restraints. This is ugly, yet it 41 brings out points of light and strength. Our liberals see only the 42 ugliness and try to throw it off. But they substitute something quite 43 as bad; and the new custom takes as long as the old for us to work 44 to its centres of strength.

45 "Will is not strengthened by change. It is weakened and 46 enslaved by it. But we must be always absorbing. Will grows 47 stronger by absorption. And consciously or unconsciously, will is the 48 one thing in the world that we admire. Suttee is great in the eyes of 49 the whole world, because of the will that it manifests.

1 "It is selfishness that we must seek to eliminate. I find that 2 whenever I have made a mistake in my life, it has always been 3 because self entered into the calculation. Where self has not been 4 involved, my judgment has gone straight to the mark.

5 "Without self, there would have been no religious system. If 6 man had not wanted anything for himself, do you think he would 7 have had all this praying and worship? Why! he would never have 8 thought of God at all, except perhaps for a little praise now and 9 then, at the sight of a beautiful landscape or something. And that is 10 the only attitude there ought to be. All praise and thanks. If only we 11 were rid of self!

12 "You are quite wrong when you think that fighting is a sign of 13 growth. It is not so at all. Absorption is the sign. Hinduism is a very 14 genius of absorption. We have never cared for fighting. Of course 15 we could strike a blow now and then, in defense of our homes! That 16 was right. But we never cared for fighting for its own sake. Every 17 one had to learn that. So let these races of newcomers whirl on!
18 They'll all be taken into Hinduism in the end!"

19 21. "The totality of all souls, not the human alone, is the 20 Personal God. The will of the Totality nothing can resist. It is what 21 we know as law. And this is what we mean by Shiva and Kali and so 22 on."

23 22. "Worship the Terrible! Worship Death! All else is vain. All 24 struggle is vain. That is the last lesson. Yet this is not the coward's 25 love of death, not the love of the weak or the suicide. It is the 26 welcome of the strong man who has sounded everything to its 27 depths and knows that there is no alternative."

28 23. "I disagree with all those who are giving their 29 superstitions back to my people. Like the Egyptologist's interest in 30 Egypt, it is easy to feel an interest in India that is purely selfish.
31 One may desire to see again the India of one's books, one's studies, 32 one's dreams. My hope is to see again the strong points of that 33 India, reinforced by the strong points of this age, only in a natural 34 way. The new stage of things must be a growth from within.

35 "So I preach only the Upanishads. If you look, you will find 36 that I have never quoted anything but the Upanishads. And of the 37 Upanishads, it is only that One idea, strength. The quintessence of 38 the Vedas and Vedanta and all lies in that one word. Buddha's 39 teaching was non-resistance, or non-injury. But I think this is a 40 better way of teaching the same thing. For behind that non-injury 41 lay a dreadful weakness. It is weakness that conceives the idea of 42 resistance. I do not think of punishing or escaping from a drop of 43 sea-spray. It is nothing to me. Yet to the mosquito it would be 44 serious. Now I would make all injury like that. Strength and 45 fearlessness. My own ideal is that saint whom they killed in the 46 Mutiny and who broke his silence, when stabbed to the heart, to 47 say, "And thou also art He!"

48 "But you may ask, 'What is the place of Ramakrishna in this 49 scheme?'

50 "He is the method, that wonderful unconscious method! He

1 did not understand himself. He knew nothing of England or the 2 English, save that they were queer folk from over the sea. But he 3 lived that great life: and I read the meaning. Never a word of 4 condemnation for any! Once I had been attacking one of our sects 5 of diabolists. I had been raving on for three hours, and he had 6 listened quietly. 'Well, well!' said the old man as I finished, 'perhaps 7 every house may have a backdoor. Who knows?'

8 "Hitherto the great fault of our Indian religion has lain in its 9 knowing only two words: renunciation and Mukti. Only Mukti here!
10 Nothing for the householder!

11 "But these are the very people whom I want to help. For are 12 not all souls of the same quality? Is not the goal of all the same?

13 "And so strength must come to the nation through education."

14 24. The Puranas, the Swami considered, to be the effort of 15 Hinduism to bring lofty ideas to the door of the masses. There had 16 been only one mind in India that had foreseen this need, that of 17 Krishna, probably the greatest man who ever lived.

18 The Swami said, "Thus is created a religion that ends in the 19 worship of Vishnu, as the preservation and enjoyment of life, 20 leading to the realisation of God. Our last movement, Chaitanyaism, 21 you remember, was for enjoyment. At the same time Jainism 22 represents the other extreme, the slow destruction of the body by 23 self-torture. Hence Buddhism, you see, is reformed Jainism; and 24 this is the real meaning of Buddha's leaving the company of the five 25 ascetics. In India, in every age, there is a cycle of sects which 26 represents every gradation of physical practice, from the extreme 27 of self-torture to the extreme of excess. And during the same period 28 will always be developed a metaphysical cycle, which represents 29 the realisation of God as taking place by every gradation of means, 30 from that of using the senses as an instrument to that of the 31 annihilation of the senses. Thus Hinduism always consists, as it 32 were, of two counter-spirals, completing each other, round a single 33 axis.

34 "Yes!" Vaishnavism says, 'it is all right--this tremendous love 35 for father, for mother, for brother, husband, or child! It is all right, if 36 only you will think that Krishna is the child, and when you give him 37 food, that you are feeding Krishna!' This was the cry of Chaitanya, 38 'Worship God through the senses', as against the Vedantic cry, 39 'Control the senses! suppress the senses!'

40 "I see that India is a young and living organism. Europe is 41 young and living. Neither has arrived at such a stage of 42 development that we can safely criticise its institutions. They are 43 two great experiments, neither of which is yet complete. In India 44 we have social communism, with the light of Advaita--that is, 45 spiritual individualism--playing on and around it; in Europe you are 46 socially individualists, but your thought is dualistic, which is 47 spiritual communism. Thus the one consists of socialist institutions 48 hedged in by individualist thought, while the other is made up of 49 individualist institutions within the hedge of communistic thought.

50 "Now we must help the Indian experiment as it is. Movements

1 which do not attempt to help things as they are, are, from that point 2 of view, no good. In Europe, for instance, I respect marriage as 3 highly as non-marriage. Never forget that a man is made great and 4 perfect as much by his faults as by his virtues. So we must not seek 5 to rob a nation of its character, even if it could be proved that the 6 character was all faults."

7 25. "You may always say that the image is God. The error you 8 have to avoid is to think God is the image."

9 26. The Swami was appealed to on one occasion to condemn 10 the fetishism of the Hottentot. "I do not know", he answered, "what 11 fetishism is!" Then a lurid picture was hastily put before him of the 12 object alternately worshipped, beaten, and thanked. "I do that!" he 13 exclaimed. "Don't you see," he went on, a moment later, in hot 14 resentment of injustice done to the lowly and absent, "don't you see 15 that there is no fetishism? Oh, your hearts are steeled, that you 16 cannot see that the child is right! The child sees person 17 everywhere. Knowledge robs us of the child's vision. But at last, 18 through higher knowledge, we win back to it. He connects a living 19 power with rocks, sticks, trees and the rest. And is there not a 20 living Power behind them? It is symbolism, not fetishism! Can you 21 not see?"

22 27. One day he told the story of Satyabhama's sacrifice and 23 how the word "Krishna", written on a piece of paper and thrown 24 into the balance, made Krishna himself, on the other side, kick the 25 beam. "Orthodox Hinduism", he began, "makes Shruti, the sound, 26 everything. The thing is but a feeble manifestation of the pre-27 existing and eternal idea. So the name of God is everything: God 28 Himself is merely the objectification of that idea in the eternal 29 mind. Your own name is infinitely more perfect than the person you!
30 The name of God is greater than God. Guard your speech!"

31 28. "I would not worship even the Greek Gods, for they were 32 separate from humanity! Only those should be worshipped who are 33 like ourselves but greater. The difference between the gods and me 34 must be a difference only of degree."

35 29. "A stone falls and crushes a worm. Hence we infer that all 36 stones, falling, crush worms. Why do we thus immediately reapply a 37 perception? Experience, says one. But it happens, let us suppose, 38 for the first time. Throw a baby into the air, and it cries. Experience 39 from past lives? But why applied to the future? Because there is a 40 real connection between certain things, a pervasiveness, only it lies 41 with us to see that the quality neither overlaps, nor falls short of, 42 the instance. On this discrimination depends all human knowledge.

43 "With regard to fallacies, it must be remembered that direct 44 perception itself can only be a proof, provided the instrument, the 45 method, and the persistence of the perception are all maintained 46 pure. Disease or emotion will have the effect of disturbing the 47 observation. Therefore direct perception itself is but a mode of 48 inference. Therefore all human knowledge is uncertain and may be 49 erroneous. Who is a true witness? He is a true witness to whom the 50 thing said is a direct perception. Therefore the Vedas are true, 51 because they consist of the evidence of competent persons. But is

1 this power of perception peculiar to any? No! The Rishi, the Aryan, 2 and the Mlechchha all alike have it.

3 "Modern Bengal holds that evidence is only a special case of 4 direct perception, and that analogy and parity of reasoning are only 5 bad inferences. Therefore, of actual proofs there are only two, 6 direct perception and inference.

7 "One set of persons, you see, gives priority to the external 8 manifestation, the other to the internal idea. Which is prior, the bird 9 to the egg, or the egg to the bird? Does the oil hold the cup or the 10 cup the oil? This is a problem of which there is no solution. Give it 11 up! Escape from Maya!"

12 30. "Why should I care if the world itself were to disappear?
13 According to my philosophy, that, you know, would be a very good 14 thing! But, in fact, all that is against me must be with me in the end.
15 Am I not Her soldier?"

16 31. "Yes, my own life is guided by the enthusiasm of a certain 17 great personality, but what of that? Inspiration was never filtered 18 out to the world through one man!

19 "It is true I believe Ramakrishna Paramahansa to have been 20 inspired. But then I am myself inspired also. And you are inspired.
21 And your disciples will be; and theirs after them; and so on, to the 22 end of time!

23 "Don't you see that the age for esoteric interpretation is over?
24 For good or for ill, that day is vanished, never to return. Truth, in 25 the future, is to be open to the world!"

26 32. "Buddha made the fatal mistake of thinking that the whole 27 world could be lifted to the height of the Upanishads. And self-28 interest spoilt all. Krishna was wiser, because He was more politic.
29 But Buddha would have no compromise. The world before now has 30 seen even the Avatara ruined by compromise, tortured to death for 31 want of recognition, and lost. But Buddha would have been 32 worshipped as God in his own lifetime, all over Asia, for a moment's 33 compromise. And his reply was only: 'Buddhahood is an 34 achievement, not a person!' Verily was He the only man in the world 35 who was ever quite sane, the only sane man ever born!"

36 33. People had told the Swami in the West that the greatness 37 of Buddha would have been more appealing, had he been crucified!
38 This he stigmatised as "Roman brutality", and pointed out, "The 39 lowest and most animal liking is for action. Therefore the world will 40 always love the epic. Fortunately for India, however, she has never 41 produced a Milton, with his 'hurled headlong down the steep
42 abyss!' The whole of that were well exchanged for a couple of lines 43 of Browning!" It had been this epic vigour of the story, in his 44 opinion, that had appealed to the Roman. The crucifixion it was that 45 carried Christianity over the Roman world. "Yes, Yes!" he 46 reiterated. "You Western folk want action ! You cannot yet perceive 47 the poetry of every common little incident in life! What beauty could 48 be greater than that of the story of the young mother coming to 49 Buddha with her dead boy? Or the incident of the goats? You see 50 the Great Renunciation was not new in India! . . . But after Nirvana,

1 look at the poetry!

2 "It is a wet night, and he comes to the cowherd's hut and 3 gathers in to the wall under the dripping eaves. The rain is pouring 4 down and the wind rising.

5 "Within, the cowherd catches a glimpse of a face through the 6 window and thinks, 'Ha, ha! Yellow garb! stay there! It's good 7 enough for you!' And then he begins to sing.

8 "My cattle are housed, and the fire burns bright. My wife is 9 safe, and my babes sleep sweet! Therefore ye may rain, if ye will, O 10 clouds, tonight!"

11 "And the Buddha answers from without, "My mind is 12 controlled: my senses are all gathered in; my heart firm. Therefore 13 ye may rain, if ye will, O clouds, tonight!"

14 "Again the cowherd: 'The fields are reaped, and the hay is 15 fast in the barn. The stream is full, and the roads are firm.
16 Therefore ye may rain, if ye will, O clouds, tonight.'

17 "And so it goes on, till at last the cowherd rises, in contrition 18 and wonder, and becomes a disciple.

19 "Or what would be more beautiful than the barber's story?

20 "The Blessed One passed by my house, 21 my house--the Barber's!

22 "I ran, but He turned and awaited me, 23 Awaited me--the Barber!

24 "I said, 'May I speak, O Lord, with Thee?'

25 "And He said 'Yes!'

26 'Yes!' to me--the Barber!

27 "And I said, 'Is Nirvana for such as I?'

28 "And He said 'Yes!'

29 Even for me--the Barber!

30 "And I said, 'May I follow after Thee?'

31 "And He said, 'Oh yes!'

32 Even I --the Barber!

33 "And I said, 'May I stay, O Lord, near Thee?'

34 "And He said, 'Thou mayest!'

35 Even to me--the poor Barber!"

36 34. "The great point of contrast between Buddhism and 37 Hinduism lies in the fact that Buddhism said, 'Realise all this as 38 illusion', while Hinduism said, 'Realise that within the illusion is the 39 Real.' Of how this was to be done, Hinduism never presumed to 40 enunciate any rigid law. The Buddhist command could only be 41 carried out through monasticism; the Hindu might be fulfilled
42 through any state of life. All alike were roads to the One Real. One 43 of the highest and greatest expressions of the Faith is put into the 1 mouth of a butcher, preaching by the orders of a married woman to 2 a Sannyasin. Thus Buddhism became the religion of a monastic 3 order, but Hinduism, in spite of its exaltation of monasticism, 4 remains ever the religion of faithfulness to duty, whatever it be, as 5 the path by which man may attain God."

6 35. "Lay down the rules for your group and formulate your 7 ideas," the Swami said, dealing with the monastic ideal for women, 8 "and put in a little universalism, if there is room for it. But 9 remember that not more than half a dozen people in the whole 10 world are ever at any time ready for this! There must be room for 11 sects, as well as for rising above sects. You will have to 12 manufacture your own tools. Frame laws, but frame them in such a 13 fashion that when people are ready to do without them, they can 14 burst them asunder. Our originality lies in combining perfect 15 freedom with perfect authority. This can be done even in 16 monasticism."

17 36. "Two different races mix and fuse, and out of them rises 18 one strong distinct type. This tries to save itself from admixture, 19 and here you see the beginning of caste. Look at the apple. The 20 best specimens have been produced by crossing; but once crossed, 21 we try to preserve the variety intact."

22 37. Referring to education of girls in India he said, "In 23 worship of the gods, you must of course use images. But you can 24 change these. Kali need not always be in one position. Encourage 25 your girls to think of new ways of picturing Her. Have a hundred 26 different conceptions of Saraswati. Let them draw and model and 27 paint their own ideas.

28 "In the chapel, the pitcher on the lowest step of the altar
29 must be always full of water, and lights in great Tamil butter-lamps 30 must be always burning. If, in addition, the maintenance of 31 perpetual adoration could be organised, nothing could be more in 32 accord with Hindu feeling.

33 "But the ceremonies employed must themselves be Vedic.
34 There must be a Vedic altar, on which at the hour of worship to light 35 the Vedic fire. And the children must be present to share in the 36 service of oblation. This is a rite which would claim the respect of 37 the whole of India.

38 "Gather all sorts of animals about you. The cow makes a fine 39 beginning. But you will also have dogs and cats and birds and 40 others. Let the children have a time for going to feed and look after 41 these.

42 "Then there is the sacrifice of learning. That is the most 43 beautiful of all. Do you know that every book is holy in India, not the 44 Vedas alone, but the English and Mohammedan also? All are 45 sacred.

46 "Revive the old arts. Teach your girls fruit-modelling with 47 hardened milk. Give them artistic cooking and sewing. Let them 48 learn painting, photography, the cutting of designs in paper, and 49 gold and silver filigree and embroidery. See that everyone knows 50 something by which she can earn a living in case of need.

1 "And never forget Humanity! The idea of a humanitarian man-
2 worship exists in nucleus in India, but it has never been sufficiently 3 specialised. Let your students develop it. Make poetry, make art, of 4 it. Yes, a daily worship at the feet of beggars, after bathing and 5 before the meal, would be a wonderful practical training of heart 6 and hand together. On some days, again, the worship might be of 7 children, of your own pupils. Or you might borrow babies and nurse
8 and feed them. What was it that Mataji²⁶⁰ said to me? 'Swamiji! I 9 have no help. But these blessed ones I worship, and they will take 10 me to salvation!' She feels, you see, that she is serving Uma in the 11 Kumari, and that is a wonderful thought, with which to begin a 12 school."

13 38. "Love is always a manifestation of bliss. The least shadow 14 of pain falling upon it is always a sign of physicality and 15 selfishness."

16 39. "The West regards marriage as consisting in all that lies 17 beyond the legal tie, while in India it is thought of as a bond thrown 18 by society round two people to unite them together for all eternity.
19 Those two must wed each other, whether they will or not, in life 20 after life. Each acquires half of the merit of the other. And if one 21 seems in this life to have fallen hopelessly behind, it is for the other 22 only to wait and beat time, till he or she catches up again!"

23 40. "Consciousness is a mere film between two oceans, the 24 subconscious and the superconscious."

25 41. "I could not believe my own ears when I heard Western 26 people talking so much of consciousness! Consciousness? What 27 does consciousness matter! Why, it is nothing compared with the 28 unfathomable depths of the subconscious and the heights of the 29 superconscious! In this I could never be misled, for had I not seen 30 Ramakrishna Paramahansa gather in ten minutes, from a man's 31 subconscious mind, the whole of his past, and determine from that 32 his future and his powers?"

33 42. "All these (visions etc.) are side issues. They are not true 34 Yoga. They may have a certain usefulness in establishing indirectly 35 the truth of our statements. Even a little glimpse gives faith that 36 there is something behind gross matter. Yet those who spend time 37 on such things run into grave dangers.

38 "These (psychic developments) are frontier questions ! There 39 can never be any certainty or stability of knowledge reached by 40 their means. Did I not say they were 'frontier questions'? The 41 boundary line is always shifting!"

42 43. "Now on the Advaitic side it is held that the soul neither 43 comes nor goes, and that all these spheres or layers of the universe 44 are only so many varying products of Akasha and Prana. That is to 45 say, the lowest or most condensed is the Solar Sphere, consisting of 46 the visible universe, in which Prana appears as physical force, and 47 Akasha as sensible matter. The next is called the Lunar Sphere, 48 which surrounds the Solar Sphere. This is not the moon at all, but 1 ²⁶⁰ ?Tapaswini Mataji, foundress of the Mahakali Pathashala, Calcutta.

2

1 the habitation of the gods; that is to say, Prana appears in it as 2 psychic forces, and Akasha as Tanmatras or fine particles. Beyond 3 this is the Electric Sphere; that is to say, a condition inseparable 4 from Akasha, and you can hardly tell whether electricity is force or 5 matter. Next is the Brahmaloaka, where there is neither Prana nor 6 Akasha, but both are merged into the mind-stuff, the primal energy.
7 And here--there being neither Prana nor Akasha--the Jiva 8 contemplates the whole universe as Samashti or the sum total of 9 Mahat or mind. This appears as Purusha, an abstract Universal 10 Soul, yet not the Absolute, for still there is multiplicity. From this 11 the Jiva finds at last that Unity which is the end. Advaitism says that 12 these are the visions which arise in succession before the Jiva, who 13 himself neither goes nor comes, and that in the same way this 14 present vision has been projected. The projection (Srishti) and 15 dissolution must take place in the same order, only one means going 16 backward and the other coming out.

17 "Now, as each individual can only see his own universe, that 18 universe is created with his bondage and goes away with his 19 liberation, although it remains for others who are in bondage. Now, 20 name and form constitute the universe. A wave in the ocean is a 21 wave only in so far as it is bound by name and form. If the wave 22 subsides, it is the ocean, but that name-and-form has immediately 23 vanished forever, so that the name and form of a wave could never 24 be without the water that was fashioned into the wave by them. Yet 25 the name and form themselves were not the wave; they die as soon 26 as ever it returns to water, but other names and forms live on in 27 relation to other waves. This name-and-form is called Maya and the 28 water is Brahman. The wave was nothing but water all the time, yet 29 as a wave it had the name and form. Again this name-and-form 30 cannot remain for one moment separated from the wave, although 31 the wave, as water, can remain eternally separate from name and 32 form. But because the name and form can never be separated, they 33 can never be said to exist. Yet they are not zero. This is called 34 Maya."

35 44. "I am the servant of the servants of the servants of 36 Buddha. Who was there ever like him?--the Lord--who never 37 performed one action for himself--with a heart that embraced the 38 whole world! So full of pity that he--prince and monk--would give 39 his life to save a little goat! So loving that he sacrificed himself to 40 the hunger of a tigress!--to the hospitality of a pariah and blessed 41 him! And he came into my room when I was a boy, and I fell at his 42 feet! For I knew it was the Lord Himself!"

43 45. "He (Shuka) is the ideal Paramahansa. To him alone 44 amongst men was it given to drink a handful of the waters of that 45 one undivided Ocean of Sat-Chit-Ananda--Existence, Knowledge, 46 and Bliss Absolute! Most saints die, having heard only the thunder 47 of its waves upon the shore. A few gain the vision, and still fewer, 48 taste of It. But he drank of the Sea of Bliss!"

49 46. "What is this idea of Bhakti without renunciation? It is 50 most pernicious."

1 47. "We worship neither pain nor pleasure. We seek through 2 either to come at that which transcends them both."

3 48. "Shankaracharya had caught the rhythm of the Vedas, the 4 national cadence. Indeed I always imagine that he had some vision 5 such as mine when he was young, and recovered the ancient music 6 that way. Anyway, his whole life's work is nothing but that, the 7 throbbing of the beauty of the Vedas and the Upanishads."

8 49. "Though the love of a mother is in some ways greater, yet 9 the whole world takes the love of man and woman as the type (of 10 the soul's relation to God). No other has such tremendous idealising 11 power. The beloved actually becomes what he is imagined to be.
12 This love transforms its object."

13 50. "Is it so easy to be Janaka--to sit on a throne absolutely 14 unattached, caring nothing for wealth or fame, for wife or child?
15 One after another in the West has told me that he has reached this.
16 But I could only say, 'Such great men are not born in India!'" 17 51. "Never forget to say to yourself and to teach to your 18 children, as the difference between a firefly and the blazing sun, 19 between the infinite ocean and a little pond, between a mustard 20 seed and the mountain Meru, such is the difference between the 21 householder and the Sannyasin!

22 "Everything is fraught with fear: Renunciation alone is 23 fearless.

24 "Blessed be even the fraudulent Sadhus and those who have 25 failed to carry out their vows, inasmuch as they also have witnessed 26 to their ideal and so are in some degree the cause of the success of 27 others!

28 "Let us never, never, forget our ideal!"

29 52. "The river is pure that flows, the monk is pure that goes!"

30 53. "The Sannyasin who thinks of gold, to desire it, commits 31 suicide."

32 54. "What do I care if Mohammed was a good man, or 33 Buddha? Does that altar my goodness or evil? Let us be good for 34 our own sake on our own responsibility."

35 55. "You people in this country are so afraid of losing your in-36 di-vid-u-al-i-ty! Why, you are not individuals yet. When you realise 37 your whole nature, you will attain your true individuality, not 38 before. There is another thing I am constantly hearing in this 39 country, and that is that we should live in harmony with nature.
40 Don't you know that all the progress ever made in the world was 41 made by conquering nature? We are to resist nature at every point 42 if we are to make any progress."

43 56. "In India they tell me I ought not to teach Advaita Vedanta 44 to the people at large; but I say, I can make even a child understand 45 it. You cannot begin too early to teach the highest spiritual truths."

46 57. "The less you read, the better. Read the Gita and other 47 good works on Vedanta. That is all you need. The present system of 48 education is all wrong. The mind is crammed with facts before it

1 knows how to think. Control of the mind should be taught first. If I 2 had my education to get over again and had any voice in the matter,
3 I would learn to master my mind first, and then gather facts if I 4 wanted them. It takes people a long time to learn things because 5 they can't concentrate their minds at will."

6 58. "If a bad time comes, what of that? The pendulum must 7 swing back to the other side. But that is no better. The thing to do is 8 to stop it."

Dear Sir {Shri Pramadadas Mitra},

I have received the book of Panini which you so kindly sent me. Please accept my gratitude for the same.

I had an attack of fever again--hence I could not reply to you immediately. Please excuse. I am ailing much. I am praying to the Divine Mother to keep you happy physically and mentally.

Your servant,

Dear Sir {Shri Pramadadas Mitra},

I had intended to go to Varanasi, and I planned to reach there after visiting the birthplace of my Master. But unluckily on the way to that village I had an attack of high fever followed by vomiting and purging as in cholera. There was again fever after three or four days--and as the body is now so weak that I can barely walk even two steps, I have been compelled now to give up my previous intention. I do not know what is God's will, but my body is quite unfit for treading on this path. Anyway, the body is not everything. Recovering my health after a few days here, I entertain the hope of visiting you there. The will of Vishweshwara, the Lord of the universe, will prevail--whatever that may be. You also kindly bless me. My respects to you and brother Jnanananda.

Your servant,
Vivekananda

4 Respected Sir {Shri Pramadadas Mitra},
5 It is several days since I received your last letter. Please 6 excuse the delay in replying, which was due to some special 7 reasons. I am very ill at present; there is fever now and then, but 8 there is no disorder in the spleen or other organs. I am under 9 homeopathic treatment. Now I have had to give up completely the 10 intention of going to Varanasi. Whatever God dispenses will happen 11 later on, according to the state of the body. If you meet brother 12 Jnanananda, please tell him not to be held up there in expectation 13 of my coming. My going there is very uncertain. My regards to you 14 and Jnanananda.

15 Yours
16 sincerely,

26 Respected Sir {Shri Pramadadas Mitra},

27 I was very glad to get your letter. In such circumstances many 28 give the advice to incline towards the worldly life. But you are 29 truthful and have an adamant heart. I have been highly 30 comforted by your encouraging and cheering words. My difficulties 31 here have almost come to a close--only I have engaged the services 32 of a broker for the sale of a piece of land, and I hope the sale will be 33 over soon. In that case, I shall be free from all worry and shall at 34 once go straight off to you to Varanasi.

1 Dear Sir {Shri Pramadadas Mitra},

2 I got your letter. There is no doubt that your advice is very 3 wise. It is quite true that the Lord's Will will prevail. We also are 4 spreading out here and there in small groups of two or three. I also 5 got two letters from brother Gangadhar. He is at present in the 6 house of Gagan Babu suffering from an attack of influenza. Gagan 7 Babu is taking special care of him. He will come here as soon as he 8 recovers. Our respectful salutations to you.

19 Dear Diwanji Saheb {Shri Haridas Viharidas Desai},

20 Very happy to receive your kind letter even here. I had not 21 the least difficulty in reaching your house from the station of 22 Nadiad. And your brothers, they are what they should be, your 23 brothers . May the Lord shower his choicest blessings on your 24 family. I have never found such a glorious one in all my travels. Your 25 friend Mr. Manibhai has provided every comfort for me; but, as to 26 his company, I have only seen him twice; once for a minute, the 27 other for ten minutes at the most when he talked about the system 28 of education here. Of course, I have seen the Library and the 29 pictures of Ravi Varma, and that is about all worth seeing here. So I 30 am going off this evening to Bombay. My thanks to the Diwanji here 31 (or to you) for his kind behaviour. More from Bombay.

32 Yours in 33 affection,

34 Vivekananda

35 PS. At Nadiad I met Mr. Manilal Nabhubhai. He is a very 36 learned and pious gentleman, and I enjoyed his company much.

4 It is a long time since I heard from you. I hope I have not 5 offended you anyway. I came down with the Thakore Saheb of 6 Mahabaleshwar, and I am living here with him. I would remain here
7 a week or more and then proceed to Rameshwaram via Hyderabad.

8 Perhaps by this time every hitch has been removed from your 9 way in Junagad; at least I hope so. I am very anxious to learn about 10 your health, especially that sprain, you know.

11 I saw your friend the Surti tutor to the Prince of Bhavnagar.
12 He is a perfect gentleman. It was quite a privilege to make his 13 acquaintance; he is so good and noble-natured a man.

14 My sincerest greetings to your noble-minded brothers and to 15 our friends there. Kindly send to Mr. Nabhubhai my earnest good 16 wishes in your letter home. I hope you would gratify me by a speedy 17 reply.

18 With my sincerest respects and gratitude and prayers for you

28 Dear Diwanji Saheb {Shri Haridas Viharidas Desai},

29 The bearer of this letter, Babu Akshaya Kumar Ghose, is a 30 particular friend of mine. He comes of a respectable family of 31 Calcutta. I found him at Khandwa where I made his acquaintance, 32 although I knew his family long before in Calcutta.

33 He is a very honest and intelligent boy and is an 34 undergraduate of the Calcutta University. You know how hard the 35 struggle is in Bengal nowadays, and the poor boy has been out in 36 search of some job. Knowing your native kindness of heart, I think I 37 am not disturbing you by asking and entreating you to do something 38 for this young man. I need not write more. You will find him an 39 honest and hard-working lad. If a single act of kindness done to a 40 fellow creature renders his whole life happy, I need not remind you 41 that this boy is a Patra (a person quite deserving of help), noble and 42 kind as you are.

43 I hope you are not disturbed and troubled by this request of 44 mine. This is the first and the last of its kind and made only under 45 very peculiar circumstances. Hoping and relying on your kind 46 nature, I remain,

Bombay

22nd August,

1892

Dear Diwanji Saheb {Shri Haridas Viharidas Desai},

I am very much gratified on receiving your letter, especially as that is the proof that you have the same kindness towards me.

About the kindness and gentlemanliness of your friend Mr. Bederkar of Indore and of the Dakshinis in general, the less said the better; but of course there are Dakshinis and Dakshinis, and I would only quote to you what Shankar Pandurang wrote me at Mahabaleshwar on my informing him that I had found shelter with the Limdi Thakore:

"I am so glad to learn that you have found Limdi Thakore there, else you would have been in serious troubles, our Maratha people not being so kind as the Gujaratis." So kind? heaven and hell!

I am very glad that your joint has now been nearly perfectly cured. Kindly tell your noble brother to excuse my promise-breaking as I have got here some Sanskrit books and help, too, to read, which I do not hope to get elsewhere, and am anxious to finish them. Yesterday I saw your friend Mr. Manahsukharam who has lodged a Sannyasin friend with him. He is very kind to me and so is his son.

After remaining here for 15 to 20 days I would proceed toward Rameshwaram, and on my return would surely come to you.

The world really is enriched by men, high-souled, noble-minded, and kind, like you; the rest are "only as axes which cut at the tree of youth of their mothers", as the Sanskrit poet puts it.

It is impossible that I should ever forget your fatherly kindness and care of me, and what else can a poor fakir like me do in return to a mighty minister but pray that the Giver of all gifts may give you all that is desirable on earth and in the end--which may He postpone to a day long, long ahead--may take you in His shelter of bliss and happiness and purity infinite.

Yours,

Vivekananda

PS. One thing that I am very sorry to notice in these parts is the thorough want of Sanskrit and other learning. The people of this part of the country have for their religion a certain bundle of local superstitions about eating, drinking, and bathing, and that is 1 about the whole of their religion.

2 Poor fellows! Whatever the rascally and wily priests teach 3 them--all sorts of mummary and tomfoolery as the very gist of the 4 Vedas and Hinduism (mind you, neither these rascals of priests nor 5 their forefathers have so much as seen a volume of the Vedas for 6 the last 400 generations)--they follow and degrade themselves.
7 Lord help them from the Rakshasas in the shape of the Brahmins of 8 the Kaliyuga.

9 I have sent a Bengali boy to you. Hope he would be treated 10 kindly.

17 Dear Haripada {Shri Haripada Mitra},

18 I just now received a letter from you. I reached here safe. I 19 went to visit Panjim and a few other villages and temples near by. I 20 returned just today. I have not given up the intention of visiting 21 Gokarna, Mahabaleshwar, and other places. I start for Dharwar by 22 the morning train tomorrow. I have taken the walking-stick with me.
23 Doctor Yagdekar's friend was very hospitable to me. Please give my 24 compliments to Mr. Bhate and all others there. May the Lord 25 shower His blessings on you and your wife. The town of Panjim is 26 very neat and clean. Most of the Christians here are literate. The 40 Dear Alasinga {Shri Alasinga Perumal},

41 Your friend, the young graduate, came to receive me at the 42 station, so also a Bengali gentleman. At present I am living with the 1 ²⁶¹ ?Swamiji used to call himself such in those days.

1 Bengali gentleman; tomorrow I go to live with your young friend for 2 a few days, and then I see the different sights here, and in a few 3 days you may expect me at Madras. For I am very sorry to tell you 4 that I cannot go back at present to Rajputana. It is so very 5 dreadfully hot here already. I do not know how hot it would be at 6 Rajputana, and I cannot bear heat at all. So the next thing, I would 7 do, would be to go back to Bangalore and then to Ootacamund to 8 pass the summer there. My brain boils in heat.

9 So all my plans have been dashed to the ground. That is why I 10 wanted to hurry off from Madras early. In that case I would have 11 months left in my hands to seek out for somebody amongst our 12 northern princes to send me over to America. But alas, it is now too 13 late. First, I cannot wander about in this heat--I would die.
14 Secondly, my fast friends in Rajputana would keep me bound down 15 to their sides if they get hold of me and would not let me go over to 16 Europe. So my plan was to get hold of some new person without my 17 friends' knowledge. But this delay at Madras has dashed all my 18 hopes to the ground, and with a deep sigh I give it up, and the 19 Lord's will be done! However, you may be almost sure that I shall 20 see you in a few days for a day or two in Madras and then go to 21 Bangalore and thence to Ootacamund to see "if" the M__ Maharaja
22 sends me up. "If"--because you see I cannot be sure of any promise 23 of a Dakshini (southern) Raja. They are not Rajputs. A Rajput would 24 rather die than break his promise. However, man learns as he lives, 25 and experience is the greatest teacher in the world.

26 "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven, for Thine is the 27 glory and the kingdom for ever and ever." My compliments to you 28 all.

35 Khetri

36 28th April,

37 1893

38 Dear Diwanji Saheb {Shri Haridas Viharidas Desai},

39 On my way here, I wanted to go to your place at Nadiad and 40 redeem my pledge, but certain circumstances prevented me, and 41 the greatest of them was that you were not there; and to play
42 Hamlet leaving Hamlet's part out is a ridiculous affair; and as I 43 know for certain that you are to return in a few days to Nadiad, and 44 as I am shortly going back to Bombay, say in 20 days, I thought it 45 better to postpone my visit for that time.

1 Here the Khetri Rajaji was very, very anxious to see me and 2 had sent his Private Secretary to Madras; and so I was bound to 3 leave for Khetri. But the heat is quite intolerable, and so I am flying 4 off very soon.

5 By and by, I have made the acquaintances of nearly all the 6 Dakshini Rajas and have seen most queer sights in many places of 7 which I would tell you in extenso when we meet next. I know your 8 love for me and am sure that you would excuse my not going down 9 to your place. However, I am coming to you in a few days.

10 One thing more. Have you got lion's cubs now in Junagad?
11 Can you lend me one for my Raja? He can give you some Rajputana 12 animals in exchange, if you like.

13 I saw Ratilalbhai in the train. He is the same nice and kind 14 gentleman; and what more shall I wish for you, my dear Diwanji
15 Saheb, but that the Lord would be your all in all in your well-16 merited, well-applauded and universally respected latter end of a 17 life which was ever holy, good, and devoted to the service of so 18 many of the sons and daughters of the great Father of Mercies.
19 Amen!

26 Khetri

27 May, 1893

28 Dear Diwanji Saheb {Shri Haridas Viharidas Desai},

29 Surely my letter had not reached you before you wrote to me.
30 The perusal of your letter gave me both pleasure and pain 31 simultaneously: pleasure, to see that I have the good fortune to be 32 loved by a man of your heart, power, and position; and pain, to see 33 that my motive has been misinterpreted throughout. Believe me, 34 that I love you and respect you like a father and that my gratitude 35 towards you and your family is surely unbounded. The fact is this.
36 You may remember that I had from before a desire to go to 37 Chicago. When at Madras, the people there, of their own accord, in 38 conjunction with H.H. of Mysore and Ramnad made every 39 arrangement to send me up. And you may also remember that 40 between H.H. of Khetri and myself there are the closest ties of love.
41 Well, I, as a matter of course, wrote to him that I was going to 42 America. Now the Raja of Khetri thought in his love that I was 43 bound to see him once before I departed, especially as the Lord has 44 given him an heir to the throne and great rejoicings were going on 45 here; and to make sure of my coming he sent his Private Secretary 46 all the way to Madras to fetch me, and of course I was bound to 47 come. In the meanwhile I telegraphed to your brother at Nadiad to 48 know whether you were there, and, unfortunately, the answer I

1 could not get; therefore, the Secretary who, poor fellow, had 2 suffered terribly for his master in going to and from Madras and 3 with his eye wholly on the fact that his master would be unhappy if 4 we could not reach Khetri within the Jalsa (festival), bought tickets
5 at once for Jaipur. On our way we met Mr. Ratilal who informed me 6 that my wire was received and duly answered and that Mr.
7 Viharidas was expecting me. Now it is for you to judge, whose duty 8 it has been so long to deal even justice. What would or could I do in 9 this connection? If I would have got down, I could not have reached 10 in time for the Khetri rejoicings; on the other hand, my motives 11 might be misinterpreted. But I know you and your brother's love for 12 me, and I knew also that I would have to go back to Bombay in a 13 few days on my way to Chicago. I thought that the best solution was 14 to postpone my visit till my return. As for my feeling affronted at not 15 being attended by your brothers, it is a new discovery of yours 16 which I never even dreamt of; or, God knows, perhaps, you have 17 become a thought-reader. Jokes apart, my dear Diwanji Saheb, I am 18 the same frolicsome, mischievous but, I assure you, innocent boy 19 you found me at Junagad, and my love for your noble self is the 20 same or increased a hundredfold, because I have had a mental 21 comparison between yourself and the Diwans of nearly all the 22 states in Dakshin, and the Lord be my witness how my tongue was 23 fluent in your praise (although I know that my powers are quite 24 inadequate to estimate your noble qualities) in every Southern 25 court. If this be not a sufficient explanation, I implore you to pardon 26 me as a father pardons a son, and let me not be haunted with the 27 impression that I was ever ungrateful to one who was so good to 28 me.

29 Yours,

30 Vivekananda

31 PS. I depend on you to remove any misconception in the mind
32 of your brother about my not getting down and that, even had I 33 been the very devil, I could not forget their kindness and good 34 offices for me.

35 As to the other two Swamis, they were my Gurubhais, who 36 went to you last at Junagad; of them one is our leader. I met them
37 after three years, and we came together as far as Abu and then I 38 left them. If you wish, I can take them back to Nadiad on my way to 39 Bombay. May the Lord shower His blessings on you and yours.

40 Yours,

41 V.

44 Bombay

45 22nd May,

46 1893

47 Dear Diwanji Saheb {Shri Haridas Viharidas Desai},

48 Reached Bombay a few days ago and would start off in a few

1 days. Your friend, the Banya gentleman to whom you wrote for the 2 house accommodation, writes to say that his house is already full of 3 guests and some of them are ill and that he is very sorry he cannot 4 accommodate me. After all we have got a nice, airy place.

5 . . . The Private Secretary of H. H. of Khetri and I are now
6 residing together. I cannot express my gratitude to him for his love 7 and kindness to me. He is what they call a Tazimi Sardar in 8 Rajputana, i.e. one of those whom the Rajas receive by rising from 9 their seats. Still he is so simple, and sometimes his service for me 10 makes me almost ashamed.

11 . . . Often and often, we see that the very best of men even 12 are troubled and visited with tribulations in this world; it may be 13 inexplicable; but it is also the experience of my life that the heart 14 and core of everything here is good, that whatever may be the 15 surface waves, deep down and underlying everything, there is an 16 infinite basis of goodness and love; and so long as we do not reach 17 that basis, we are troubled; but having once reached that zone of 18 calmness, let winds howl and tempests rage. The house which is 19 built on a rock of ages cannot shake. I thoroughly believe that a 20 good, unselfish and holy man like you, whose whole life has been 21 devoted to doing good to others, has already reached this basis of 22 firmness which the Lord Himself has styled as "rest upon Brahman" 23 in the Gita.

24 May the blows you have received draw you closer to that 25 Being who is the only one to be loved here and hereafter, so that 26 you may realise Him in everything past, present, and future, and 27 find everything present or lost in Him and Him alone. Amen!

28 Yours
29 affectionately,

Vivekananda

37 Dear Diwanji Saheb {Shri Haridas Viharidas Desai},

38 Your last letter reached me a few days ago. You had been to 39 see my poor mother and brothers. I am glad you did. But you have 40 touched the only soft place in my heart. You ought to know, Diwanji, 41 that I am no hard-hearted brute. If there is any being I love in the 42 whole world, it is my mother. Yet I believed and still believe that 43 without my giving up the world, the great mission which 44 Ramakrishna Paramahansa, my great Master came to preach 45 would not see the light, and where would those young men be who 46 have stood as bulwarks against the surging waves of materialism 47 and luxury of the day? These have done a great amount of good to 48 India, especially to Bengal, and this is only the beginning. With the 1 Lord's help they will do things for which the whole world will bless 2 them for ages. So on the one hand, my vision of the future of Indian 3 religion and that of the whole world, my love for the millions of 4 beings sinking down and down for ages with nobody to help them, 5 nay, nobody with even a thought for them; on the other hand,

6 making those who are nearest and dearest to me miserable; I
7 choose the former. "Lord will do the rest." He is with me, I am sure 8 of that if of anything. So long as I am sincere, nothing can resist 9 me, because He will be my help. Many and many in India could not 10 understand me; and how could they, poor men? Their thoughts 11 never strayed beyond the everyday routine business of eating and 12 drinking. I know only a few noble souls like yourself appreciate me.
13 Lord bless your noble self. But appreciation or no appreciation, I am 14 born to organise these young men; nay, hundreds more in every city 15 are ready to join me; and I want to send them rolling like 16 irresistible waves over India, bringing comfort, morality, religion, 17 education to the doors of the meanest and the most downtrodden.
18 And this I will do or die.

19 Our people have no idea, no appreciation. On the other hand, 20 that horrible jealousy and suspicious nature which is the natural 21 outcome of a thousand years of slavery make them stand as 22 enemies to every new idea. Still the Lord is great.

23 About the Arati as well as other things you speak of, it is the 24 form in every one of the monasteries in all parts of India, and the 25 worshipping of Guru is the first duty inculcated in the Vedas. It has 26 its bad and good sides. But you must remember we are a unique 27 company, nobody amongst us has a right to force his faith upon the 28 others. Many of us do not believe in any form of idolatry; but they 29 have no right to object when others do it, because that would break 30 the first principle of our religion. Again, God can only be known in 31 and through man. Vibrations of light are everywhere, even in the 32 darkest corners; but it is only in the lamp that it becomes visible to 33 man. Similarly God, though everywhere, we can only conceive Him 34 as a big man. All ideas of God such as merciful preserver, helper, 35 protector--all these are human ideas, anthropomorphic; and again 36 these must cling to a man, call him a Guru or a Prophet or an 37 Incarnation. Man cannot go beyond his nature, no more than you 38 can jump out of your body. What harm is there in some people 39 worshipping their Guru when that Guru was a hundred times more 40 holy than even your historical prophets all taken together? If there 41 is no harm in worshipping Christ, Krishna, or Buddha, why should 42 there be any in worshipping this man who never did or thought 43 anything unholy, whose intellect only through intuition stands head 44 and shoulders above all the other prophets, because they were all 45 one-sided? It was he that brought first to the world this idea of 46 truth, not in but of every religion, which is gaining ground all over 47 the world, and that without the help of science or philosophy or any 48 other acquirement.

49 But even this is not compulsory, none of the brethren has told 50 you that all must worship his Guru. No, no, no. But again none of us 51 has a right to object when another worships. Why? Because that 52 would overthrow this most unique society the world has ever seen,

1 ten men of ten different notions and ideas living in perfect harmony.
2 Wait, Diwanji, the Lord is great and merciful, you will see more.

3 We do not only tolerate but accept every religion, and with 4 the Lord's help I am trying to preach it to the whole world.

5 Three things are necessary to make every man great, every 6 nation great:

7 1. Conviction of the powers of goodness.

8 2. Absence of jealousy and suspicion.

9 3. Helping all who are trying to be and do good.

10 Why should the Hindu nation with all its wonderful 11 intelligence and other things have gone to pieces? I would answer 12 you, jealousy. Never were there people more wretchedly jealous of 13 one another, more envious of one another's fame and name than 14 this wretched Hindu race. And if you ever come out in the West, the 15 absence of this is the first feeling which you will see in the Western 16 nations.

17 Three men cannot act in concert together in India for five 18 minutes. Each one struggles for power, and in the long run the 19 whole organisation comes to grief. Lord! Lord! When will we learn 20 not to be jealous! In such a nation, and especially in Bengal, to 21 create a band of men who are tied and bound together with a most 22 undying love in spite of difference--is it not wonderful? This band 23 will increase. This idea of wonderful liberality joined with eternal 24 energy and progress must spread over India. It must electrify the 25 whole nation and must enter the very pores of society in spite of the 26 horrible ignorance, spite, caste-feeling, old boobyism, and jealousy 27 which are the heritage of this nation of slaves.

28 You are one of the few noble natures who stand as rocks out 29 of water in this sea of universal stagnation. Lord bless you for ever 30 and ever!

31 Yours ever
32 faithfully,

Vivekananda

40 Dear Sisters {the Hale sisters},

41 I am now living with Mr. Palmer. He is a very nice gentleman.
42 He gave a dinner the night before last to a group of his old friends, 43 each more than 60 years of age, which he calls his "old boys' club".
44 I spoke at an opera house for two hours and a half. People were 45 very much pleased. I am going to Boston and New York. I will get 46 here sufficient to cover my expenses there. I have forgotten the addresses of both Flagg and Prof. Wright. I am not going to lecture in Michigan, Mr. Holden tried to persuade me this morning to lecture in Michigan but I am quite bent upon seeing a little of Boston and New York. To tell you the truth, the more I am getting popularity and facility in speaking, the more I am getting fed up. My last address was the best I ever delivered. Mr. Palmer was in ecstasies and the audience remained almost spellbound, so much so that it was after the lecture that I found I had spoken so long. A speaker always feels the uneasiness or inattention of the audience. Lord save me from such nonsense, I am fed up. I would take rest in Boston or New York if the Lord permits. My love to you all. May you ever be happy!

Your affectionate
brother,

Dear Babies {the Hale sisters},

I am pulling on well with old Palmer. He is a very jolly, good old man. I got only 127 dollars by my last lecture. I am going to speak again in Detroit on Monday. Your mother asked me to write to a lady in Lynn. I have never seen her. Is it etiquette to write without any introduction? Please post me a little letter about this lady. Where is Lynn? The funniest thing said about me here was in one of the papers which said, "The cyclonic Hindu has come and is a guest with Mr. Palmer. Mr. Palmer has become a Hindu and is going to India; only he insists that two reforms should be carried out: firstly that the Car of Jagannath should be drawn by Percherons raised in Mr. Palmer's Loghouse Farm, and secondly that the Jersey cow be admitted into the pantheon of Hindu sacred cows." Mr. Palmer is passionately fond of both Percheron horse and Jersey cow and has a great stock of both in his Loghouse Farm.

The first lecture was not properly managed, the cost of the hall being 150 dollars. I have given up Holden. Here is another fellow cropped up; let me see if he does better. Mr. Palmer makes me laugh the whole day. Tomorrow there is going to be another dinner party. So far all is well; but I do not know--I have become very sad in my heart since I am here--do not know why.

I am wearied of lecturing and all that nonsense. This mixing with hundreds of varieties of the human animal has disturbed me. I will tell you what is to my taste; I cannot write, and I cannot speak, but I can think deeply, and when I am heated, can speak fire. It should be, however, to a select, a very select--few. Let them, if they will, carry and scatter my ideas broadcast--not I. This is only a just division of labour. The same man never succeeded both in thinking

1 and in scattering his thoughts. A man should be free to think, 2 especially spiritual thoughts.

3 Just because this assertion of independence, this proving that 4 man is not a machine, is the essence of all religious thought, it is 5 impossible to think it in the routine mechanical way. It is this 6 tendency to bring everything down to the level of a machine that 7 has given the West its wonderful prosperity. And it is this which has 8 driven away all religion from its doors. Even the little that is left, 9 the West has reduced to a systematic drill.

10 I am really not "cyclonic" at all. Far from it. What I want is not 11 here, nor can I longer bear this "cyclonic" atmosphere. This is the 12 way to perfection, to strive to be perfect, and to strive to make 13 perfect a few men and women. My idea of doing good is this: to 14 evolve out a few giants, and not to strew pearls before swine, and 15 so lose time, health, and energy.

16 Just now I got a letter from Flagg. He cannot help me in 17 lecturing. He says, "First go to Boston." Well, I do not care for 18 lecturing any more. It is too disgusting, this attempt to bring me to 19 suit anybody's or any audience's fads. However, I shall come back 20 to Chicago for a day or two at least before I go out of this country.
21 Lord bless you all.

22
23 brother,

Ever gratefully your

Vivekananda

31 Dear Sister Mary {Hale},

32 My heartfelt thanks for your kindly sending me the letter 33 from Calcutta. It was from my brethren at Calcutta, and it is written 34 on the occasion of a private invitation to celebrate the birthday of 35 my Master about whom you have heard so much from me--so I send 36 it over to you. The letter says that Mazoomdar has gone back to 37 Calcutta and is preaching that Vivekananda is committing every sin 38 under the sun in America. . . . This is your America's wonderful 39 spiritual man ! It is not their fault; until one is really spiritual, that 40 is, until one has got a real insight into the nature of one's own soul 41 and has got a glimpse of the world of the soul, one cannot 42 distinguish chaff from seed, tall talk from depth, and so on. I am 43 sorry for poor Mazoomdar that he should stoop so low! Lord bless 44 the old boy!

45 The address inside the letter is in English and is my old, old 46 name as written by a companion of my childhood who has also 47 taken orders. It is a very poetic name. That written in the letter is 48 an abbreviation, the full name being Narendra meaning the "Chief

1 of men" ("nara" means "man", and "indra" stands for "ruler", 2 "chief")--very ludicrous, isn't it? But such are the names in our 3 country; we cannot help, but I am glad I have given that up.

4 I am all right. Hoping it is same with you.

5 I remain your 6 brother,

14 Dear Sister {Mary Hale},

15 Your and Mother Church's letters came together just now, 16 acknowledging the receipt of the money. I am very glad to receive 17 the Khetri letter, which I send back for your perusal. You would find 18 from it that he wants some newspaper clippings. I do not think I 19 have any except the Detroit one, which I will send to him. If you can 20 get hold of some others, kindly send some over to him if it be 21 possible and convenient. You know his address--H. H. the 22 Maharajah of Khetri, Rajputana, India. Of course, this letter is for 23 the perusal of the holy family alone. Mrs. Breed wrote to me a stiff 24 burning letter first, and then today I got a telegram from her 25 inviting me to be her guest for a week. Before this I got a letter 26 from Mrs. Smith of New York writing on her behalf and another 27 lady Miss Helen Gould and another Dr. __ to come over to New York.
28 As the Lynn Club wants me on the 17th of next month, I am going to 29 New York first and come in time for their meeting at Lynn.

30 Next summer, if I do not go away, which Mrs. Bagley insists I 31 should not, I may go to Annisquam where Mrs. Bagley has engaged 32 a nice house. Mrs. Bagley is a very spiritual lady, and Mr. Palmer a 33 spirituous gentleman but very good. What shall I write more? I am 34 all right in nice health of body and mind. May you all be blessed, 35 ever blessed, my dear, dear sisters. By the by, Mrs. Sherman has 36 presented me with a lot of things amongst which is a nail set and 37 letter holder and a little satchel etc., etc. Although I objected, 38 especially to the nail set, as very dudish with mother-of-pearl 39 handles, she insisted and I had to take them, although I do not 40 know what to do with that brushing instrument. Lord bless them all.
41 She gave me one advice--never to wear this Afrikee dress in society.
42 Now I am a society man! Lord! What comes next? Long life brings 43 queer experiences! My inexpressible love for you all, my holy 44 family.

Dear Diwanji Saheb {Shri Haridas Viharidas Desai},

Your very kind note came today. I am so sorry that I could have caused pain to such a noble heart as yours with my rash and strong words. I bow down to your mild corrections. "Thy son am I, teach me thus bowing"--Gita. But you well know, Diwanji Saheb, it was my love that prompted me to say so. The backbiters, I must tell you, have not indirectly benefited me; on the other hand, they have injured me immensely in view of the fact that our Hindu people did not move a finger to tell the Americans that I represented them. Had our people sent some words thanking the American people for their kindness to me and stating that I was representing them! . . . have been telling the American people that I have donned the Sannyasin's garb only in America and that I was a cheat, bare and simple. So far as reception goes, it has no effect on the American nation; but so far as helping me with funds goes, it has a terrible effect in making them take off their helping hands from me. And it is one year since I have been here, and not one man of note from India has thought it fit to make the Americans know that I am no cheat. There again the missionaries are always seeking for something against me, and they are busy picking up anything said against me by the Christian papers of India and publishing it here. Now you must know that the people here know very little of the distinction in India between the Christian and the Hindu.

Primarily my coming has been to raise funds for an enterprise of my own. Let me tell it all to you again.

The whole difference between the West and the East is in this: They are nations, we are not, i.e., civilisation, education here is general, it penetrates into the masses. The higher classes in India and America are the same, but the distance is infinite between the lower classes of the two countries. Why was it so easy for the English to conquer India? It was because they are a nation, we are not. When one of our great men dies, we must sit for centuries to have another; they can produce them as fast as they die. When our Diwanji Saheb will pass away (which the Lord may delay long for the good of my country), the nation will see the difficulty at once of filling his place, which is seen even now in the fact that they cannot dispense with your services. It is the dearth of great ones. Why so? Because they have such a bigger field of recruiting their great ones, we have so small. A nation of 300 millions has the smallest field of recruiting its great ones compared with nations of thirty, forty, or sixty millions, because the number of educated men and women in those nations is so great. Now do not mistake me, my kind friend, this is the great defect in our nation and must be removed.

Educate and raise the masses, and thus alone a nation is possible. Our reformers do not see where the wound is, they want

1 to save the nation by marrying the widows; do you think that a 2 nation is saved by the number of husbands its widows get? Nor is 3 our religion to blame, for an idol more or less makes no difference.
4 The whole defect is here: The real nation who live in cottage have 5 forgotten their manhood, their individuality. Trodden under the foot 6 of the Hindu, Mussulman, or Christian, they have come to think that 7 they are born to be trodden under the foot of everybody who has 8 money enough in his pocket. They are to be given back their lost 9 individuality. They are to be educated. Whether idols will remain or 10 not, whether widows will have husbands enough or not, whether 11 caste is good or bad, I do not bother myself with such questions.
12 Everyone must work out his own salvation. Our duty is to put the 13 chemicals together, the crystallisation will come through God's 14 laws. Let us put ideas into their heads, and they will do the rest.
15 Now this means educating the masses. Here are these difficulties. A 16 pauper government cannot, will not, do anything; so no help from 17 that quarter.

18 Even supposing we are in a position to open schools in each 19 village free, still the poor boys would rather go to the plough to 20 earn their living than come to your school. Neither have we the 21 money, nor can we make them come to education. The problem 22 seems hopeless.

23 I have found a way out. It is this. If the mountain does not 24 come to Mohammed, Mohammed must go to the mountain. If the 25 poor cannot come to education, education must reach them at the 26 plough, in the factory, everywhere. How? You have seen my 27 brethren. Now I can get hundreds of such, all over India, unselfish, 28 good, and educated. Let these men go from village to village 29 bringing not only religion to the door of everyone but also 30 education. So I have a nucleus of organising the widows also as 31 instructors to our women.

1 Now suppose the villagers after their day's work have come
2 to their village and sitting under a tree or somewhere are smoking
3 and talking the time away. Suppose two of these educated 4 Sannyasins get hold of them there and with a camera throw 5 astronomical or other pictures, scenes from different nations, 6 histories, etc. Thus with globes, maps, etc.--and all this orally--how 7 much can be done that way, Diwanji? It is not that the eye is the 8 only door of knowledge, the ear can do all the same. So they would 9 have ideas and morality, and hope for better. Here our work ends.
10 Let them do the rest. What would make the Sannyasins do this 11 sacrifice, undertake such a task?--religious enthusiasm. Every new 12 religious wave requires a new centre. The old religion can only be 13 revived by a new centre. Hang your dogmas or doctrines, they 14 never pay. It is a character, a life, a centre, a God-man that must 15 lead the way, that must be the centre round which all other 16 elements will gather themselves and then fall like a tidal wave upon 17 the society, carrying all before it, washing away all impurities.
18 Again, a piece of wood can only easily be cut along the grain. So the 19 old Hinduism can only be reformed through Hinduism, and not 20 through the new-fangled reform movements. At the same time the 21 reformers must be able to unite in themselves the culture of both 22 the East and the West. Now do you not think that you have already 23 seen the nucleus of such a great movement, that you have heard 24 the low rumblings of the coming tidal wave? That centre, that God-
25 man to lead was born in India. He was the great Ramakrishna 26 Paramahansa, and round him this band is slowly gathering. They 27 will do the work. Now, Diwanji Maharaj, this requires an 28 organisation, money--a little at least to set the wheel in motion. Who 29 would have given us money in India?--So, Diwanji Maharaj, I 30 crossed over to America. You may remember I begged all the 31 money from the poor, and the offers of the rich I would not accept 32 because they could not understand my ideas. Now lecturing for a 33 year in this country, I could not succeed at all (of course, I have no 34 wants for myself) in my plan for raising some funds for setting up 35 my work. First, this year is a very bad year in America; thousands of 36 their poor are without work. Secondly, the missionaries and the 37 Brahmo Samajists try to thwart all my views. Thirdly, a year has 38 rolled by, and our countrymen could not even do so much for me as 39 to say to the American people that I was a real Sannyasin and no 40 cheat, and that I represented the Hindu religion. Even this much, 41 the expenditure of a few words, they could not do! Bravo, my 42 countrymen! I love them, Diwanji Saheb. Human help I spurn with 43 my foot. He who has been with me through hills and dales, through 44 deserts or forests, will be with me, I hope; if not, some heroic soul 45 would arise some time or other in India, far abler than myself, and 46 carry it out. So I have told you all about it. Diwanji, excuse my long 47 letter, my noble friend, one of the few who really feel for me, have 48 real kindness for me. You are at liberty, my friend, to think that I am 49 a dreamer, a visionary; but believe at least that I am sincere to the 50 backbone, and my greatest fault is that I love my country only too, 51 too well. May you and yours be blessed ever and ever, my noble, 52 noble friend. May the shadow of the Almighty ever rest on all those 53 you love. I offer my eternal gratitude to you. My debt to you is 1 immense, not only because you are my friend, but also because you

2 have all your life served the Lord and your motherland so well.

3 Ever yours in 4 gratitude,

13 Dear__ {a Madras disciple},

14 The other day I received a letter from G. G., Mysore. G. G.
15 unfortunately thinks that I am all-knowing, else he would have 16 written his Canarese address on the top of the letter more legibly.
17 Then again it is a great mistake to address me letters to any other 18 place but Chicago. It was my mistake of course at first, because I 19 ought to have thought of the fine Buddhi (intellect) of our friends 20 who are throwing letters at me anywhere they find an address at 21 the top. But tell our Madras Brihaspatis (i.e. wise fellows) that they 22 already knew full well that before their letters reach, I may be 1000
23 miles away from that particular place, for I am continuously 24 travelling. In Chicago there is a friend whose house is my 25 headquarters.

26 Now as to my prospects here--it is well-nigh zero. Why, 27 because although I had the best purpose, it has been made null and 28 void by these causes. All that I get about India is from Madras 29 letters. Your letters say again and again how I am being praised in 30 India. But that is between you and me, for I never saw a single 31 Indian paper writing about me, except the three square inches sent 32 to me by Alasinga. On the other hand, everything that is said by 33 Christians in India is sedulously gathered by the missionaries and 34 regularly published, and they go from door to door to make my 35 friends give me up. They have succeeded only too well, for there is 36 not one word for me from India. Indian Hindu papers may laud me 37 to the skies, but not a word of that ever came to America, so that 38 many people in this country think me a fraud. In the face of the 39 missionaries and with the jealousy of the Hindus here to back them, 40 I have not a word to say.

41 I now think it was foolish of me to go to the Parliament on the 42 strength of the urging of the Madras boys. They are boys after all.
43 Of course, I am eternally obliged to them, but they are after all 44 enthusiastic young men without any executive abilities. I came here 45 without credentials. How else to show that I am not a fraud in the 46 face of the missionaries and the Brahmo Samaj? Now I thought 47 nothing so easy as to spend a few words; I thought nothing would 48 be so easy as to hold a meeting of some respectable persons in

1 Madras and Calcutta and pass a resolution thanking me and the 2 American people for being kind to me and sending it over officially, 3 i.e. through the Secretary of the function, to America, for instance, 4 sending one to Dr. Barrows and asking him to publish it in the 5 papers and so on, to different papers of Boston, New York, and 6 Chicago. Now after all, I found that it is too terrible a task for India 7 to undertake. There has not been one voice for me in one year and 8 every one against me, for whatever you may say of me in your 9 homes, who knows anything of it here? More than two months ago I 10 wrote to Alasinga about this. He did not even answer my letter. I am 11 afraid his heart has grown lukewarm. So you must first think of that 12 and then show this letter to the Madras people. On the other hand, 13 my brethren foolishly talk nonsense about Keshab Sen; and the 14 Madrasis, telling the Theosophists anything I write about them, are 15 creating only enemies. . . . Oh! If only I had one man of some true 16 abilities and brains to back me in India! But His will be done. I 17 stand a fraud in this country. It was my foolishness to go to the 18 Parliament without any credentials, hoping that there would be 19 many for me. I have got to work it out slowly.

20 On the whole, the Americans are a million times nobler than 21 the Hindus, and I can work more good here than in the country of 22 the ingrate and the heartless. After all, I must work my Karma out.
23 So far as pecuniary circumstances go I am all right and will be all 24 right. The number of Theosophists in all America is only 625 by the 25 last census. Mixing up with them will smash me in a minute rather 26 than help me in any way. What nonsense does Alasinga mean by my 27 going to London to see Mr. Old etc. Fool! the boys there don't know 28 what they are talking. And this pack of Madras babies cannot even 29 keep a counsel in their blessed noodles! Talk nonsense all day, and 30 when it comes to the least business, they are nowhere! Boobies, 31 who cannot get up a few meetings of 50 men each and send up a 32 few empty words only to help me, talk big about influencing the 33 world. I have written to you about the phonograph. Now there is 34 here an electric fan costing $20 and working beautifully. The 35 battery works 100 hours and then can be replenished at any 36 electric plant. Good-bye, I have had enough of the Hindus. Now His 37 will be done, I obey and bow down to my Karma. However, do not 38 think me ungrateful. . . . The Madras people have done for me more 39 than I deserved and more than was in their power. It was my 40 foolishness--the forgetting for a moment that we Hindus have not 41 yet become human beings and giving up for a moment my self-42 reliance and relying upon the Hindus--that I came to grief. Every 43 moment I expected something from India. No, it never came. Last 44 two months especially I was in torture at every moment. No, not 45 even a newspaper from India! My friends waited--waited month 46 after month; nothing came, not a voice. Many consequently grew 47 cold and at last gave me up. But it is the punishment for relying 48 upon man and upon brutes, for our countrymen are not men as yet.
49 They are ready to be praised, but when their turn comes even to 50 say a word, they are nowhere.

51 My thanks eternal to the Madras young men. May the Lord 52 bless them for ever. America is the best field in the world to carry

1 on my idea; so I do not think of leaving America soon. And why?
2 Here I have food and drink and clothes, and everybody so kind, and 3 all this for a few good words! Why should I give up such a noble 4 nation to go to the land of brutes and ingrates and the brainless 5 boobies held in eternal thralldom of superstitious, merciless, pitiless 6 wretches? So good-bye again. You may show this letter to the 7 people with discretion, even Alasinga upon whom I built so much.
8 By the by, will you kindly send up a few copies of the sketch of 9 Ramakrishna Paramahansa's life written by Mazumdar to Chicago?
10 They have lots in Calcutta. Don't forget the address 541 Dearborn 11 Avenue (not Street), Chicago, or c/o Thomas Cook, Chicago. Any 12 other address would cause much delay and confusion, as I am 13 continually travelling, and Chicago is my headquarters, although 14 even this much did not come to the brains of our Madras friends.
15 Kindly give G. G., Alasinga, Secretary, and all others my eternal 16 blessings. I am always praying for their welfare, and I am not in the 17 least displeased with them, but I am not pleased with myself. I 18 committed a terrible error--of calculating upon others' help--once in 19 my life--and I have paid for it. It was my fault and not theirs. Lord 20 bless all the Madras people. They are at least far superior to the 21 Bengalis, who are simply fools and have no souls, no stamina at all.
22 Good-bye, good-bye. I have launched my boat in the waves, come 23 what may. Regarding my brutal criticisms, I have really no right to 24 make them. You have done for me infinitely more than I deserve. I 25 must bear my own Karma, and that without a murmur. Lord bless 26 you all.

27 Yours truly,

28 Vivekananda

29 PS. I am afraid Alasinga's college has closed, but I have no 30 intimation of it, and he never gave me his home address. Kidi has 31 dropped out, I am afraid.

41 Dear Mother {Mrs. George W. Hale},

42 I came yesterday to this place, and shall remain here a few 43 days. I received in New York a letter from you but did not receive 44 any Interior, for which I am glad, because I am not perfect yet, and 45 knowing the "unselfish love" the Presbyterian priests, especially the 46 Interior has for "me", I want to keep aloof from rousing bad 47 feelings towards these "sweet Christian gentlemen" in my heart.

48 Our religion teaches that anger is a great sin, even if it is

1 "righteous". Each must follow his own religion. I could not for my 2 soul distinguish ever the distinction between "religious anger" and 3 "commonplace anger", "religious killing" and "commonplace
4 killing", "religious slandering and irreligious", and so forth. Now 5 may that "fine" ethical distinction ever enter into the ethics of our 6 nation! Jestng apart, Mother Church, I do not care the least for the 7 gambols these men play, seeing as I do through and through the 8 insincerity, the hyposcrisy, and love of self and name that is the only 9 motive power in these men.

10 As to the photographs, the first time the Babies got a few 11 copies, and the second time you brought a few copies; you know 12 they are to give 50 copies in all. Sister Isabelle knows better than I.

13 With my sincerest love and respects for you and Father Pope.

14 I remain,

15 Yours,

16 Vivekananda

17 PS. How are you enjoying the heat? I am bearing the heat 18 very well here. I had an invitation to Swampscott on the sea from a 19 very rich lady whose acquaintance I made last winter in New York, 20 but I declined with thanks. I am very careful not to take the 21 hospitality of anybody here, especially the rich. I had a few other 22 invitations from some very rich people here. I refused; I have by 23 this time seen the whole business through. Lord bless you and 24 yours, Mother Church, for your sincerity. Oh! it is so rare in this 25 world.

36 O My Sisters,

37 Glory unto Jagadamba (Mother of the Universe)! I have 38 gained beyond expectations. The prophet has been honoured and 39 with a vengeance. I am weeping like a child at His mercy--He 40 never leaves His servant, sisters. The letter I send you will explain 41 all, and the printed things are coming to the American people. The 42 names there are the very flower of our country. The President was 43 the chief nobleman of Calcutta, and the other man Mahesh 44 Chandra Nyayaratna is the principal of the Sanskrit College and the 45 chief Brahmin in all India and recognised by the Government as 46 such. The letter will tell you all. O sisters! What a rogue am I that in 47 the face of such mercies sometimes the faith totters--seeing every 1 moment that I am in His hands. Still the mind sometimes gets 2 despondent. Sister, there is a God--a Father--a Mother who never 3 leaves His Children, never, never, never. Put uncanny theories aside

4 and becoming children take refuge in Him. I cannot write more--I 5 am weeping like a woman.

6 Blessed, blessed art Thou, Lord God of my soul!

16 Dear Babies {the Hale sisters},

17 Now don't let my letters stray beyond the circle, please. I had 18 a beautiful letter from sister Mary. See how I am getting the dash, 19 sister Jeany teaches me all that. She can jump and run and play and 20 swear like a devil and talk slang at the rate of 500 a minute; only 21 she does not much care for religion, only a little. She is gone today 22 home, and I am going to Greenacre. I had been to see Mrs. Breed.
23 Mrs. Stone was there, with whom is residing Mrs. Pullman and all 24 the golden bugs, my old friends hereabouts. They are kind as usual.
25 On my way back from Greenacre I am going to Annisquam to see 26 Mrs. Bagley for a few days.

27 Darn it, forget everything. I had duckings in the sea like a 28 fish. I am enjoying every bit of it. What nonsense was the song 29 Harriet taught me "dans la plaine" the deuce take it. I told it to a 30 French scholar and he laughed and laughed till the fellow was well-31 nigh burst at my wonderful translation. That is the way you would 32 have taught me French! You are a pack of fools and heathens, I tell 33 you. Now are you gasping for breath like a huge fish stranded? I am 34 glad that you are sizzling. Oh! how nice and cool it is here, and it is 35 increased a hundred-fold when I think about the gasping, sizzling, 36 boiling, frying four old maids, and how cool and nice I am here.
37 Whooooo!

38 Miss Phillips has a beautiful place somewhere in N.Y. State-- 39 mountain, lake, river, forest altogether--what more? I am going to 40 make a Himalayas there and start a monastery as sure as I am 41 living--I am not going to leave this country without throwing one 42 more apple of discord into this already roaring, fighting, kicking, 43 mad whirlpool of American religion. Well, dear old maids, you 44 sometimes have a glimpse of the lake and on every hot noon, think 45 of going down to the bottom of the lake, down, down, down, until it 46 is cool and nice, and then to lie down on the bottom, with that 47 coolness above and around, and lie there still, silent, and just doze-- 48 not sleep, but dreamy dozing half unconscious sort of bliss-- very 1 much like that which opium brings; that is delicious; and drinking 2 lots of iced water. Lord bless my soul--I had such cramps several 3 times as would have killed an elephant. So I hope to keep myself 4 away from the cold water.

5 May you be all happy, dear fin de siecle young ladies, is the 6 constant prayer of Vivekananda.

13 Dear Sisters {the Hale sisters},

14 I have been all this time in Greenacre. I enjoyed this place 15 very much. They have been all very kind to me. One Chicago lady, 16 Mrs. Pratt of Kenilworth, wanted to give me $500; she became so 17 much interested in me; but I refused. She has made me promise 18 that I would send word to her whenever I need money, which I hope 19 the Lord will never put me in. His help alone is sufficient for me. I 20 have not heard anything from you nor from Mother. Neither have I 21 any news from India as to the arrival of the phonograph.

22 If there was anything in my letter to you which was offensive, 23 I hope you all know that I meant everything in love. It is useless to 24 express my gratitude to you for your kindness. Lord bless you and 25 shower His choicest blessings on you and those you love. To your 26 family I am ever, ever beholden. You know it. You feel it. I cannot 27 express it. On Sunday I am going to lecture at Plymouth at the 28 "Sympathy of Religions" meetings of Col. Higginson. Herewith I 29 send a photograph Cora Stockham took of the group under the tree.
30 It is only a proof and will fade away under exposure, but I cannot 31 get anything better at present. Kindly tender my heartfelt love and 32 gratitude to Miss Howe. She has been so, so kind to me. I do not 33 need anything at present. I shall be very glad to let you know if I 34 need anything. I think I am going to Fishkill from Plymouth, where I 35 will be only a couple of days. I will write you again from Fishkill.
36 Hope you are all happy, or rather I know you are. Pure and good 37 souls can never be unhappy. I shall have a very nice time the few 38 weeks I am here. I will be in New York next fall. New York is a 39 grand and good place. The New York people have a tenacity of 40 purpose unknown in any other city. I had a letter from Mrs. Potter 41 Palmer asking me to see her in August. She is a very gracious and 42 kind lady, etc. I have not much to say. There is my friend Dr. Janes 43 of New York, President of the Ethical Culture Society, who has 44 begun his lectures. I must go to hear him. He and I agree so much.
45 May you be always happy!

46 Ever your well-wishing

Dear Sister {Mary Hale},

The letter from the Madras people was published in yesterday's Boston Transcript. I hope to send you a copy. You may have seen it in some Chicago paper. I am sure there is some mail for me at Cook & Sons--I shall be here till Tuesday next at least, on which day I am going to lecture here in Annisquam.

Kindly inquire at Cook's for my mail and send it over at Annisquam.

I had no news of you for some time. I sent two pictures to Mother Church yesterday and hope you will like them. I am very anxious about the Indian mail. With love for all, I am your ever affectionate brother,

Dear Leon {Landsberg},

Forgive me, but I have the right, as your Guru, to advise you, and I insist that you buy some clothes for yourself, as the want of them stands in the way of your doing anything in this country. Once you have a start, you may dress in whatever way you like. People do not object.

You need not thank me, for this is only a duty. According to Hindu law, if a Guru dies, his disciple is his heir, and not even his son--supposing him to have had one before becoming a Sannyasin. This is, you see, an actual spiritual relationship, and none of your Yankee "tutor" business!

With all blessings and prayers for your success,

Dear Sister {Mary Hale},

Your kind note reached me this morning. I have been in this hotel for about a week. I will remain in Boston some time yet. I have plenty of gowns already, in fact, more than I can carry with ease. When I had that drenching in Annisquam, I had on that beautiful black suit you appreciate so much, and I do not think it can be damaged any way; it also has been penetrated with my deep meditations on the Absolute. I am very glad that you enjoyed the summer so well. As for me, I am vagabondising. I was very much amused the other day at reading Abe Hue's description of the vagabond lamas of Tibet--a true picture of our fraternity. He says they are queer people. They come when they will, sit at everybody's table, invitation or no invitation, live where they will, and go where they will. There is not a mountain they have not climbed, not a river they have not crossed, not a nation they do not know, not a language they do not talk. He thinks that God must have put into them a part of that energy which makes the planets go round and round eternally. Today this vagabond lama was seized with a desire of going right along scribbling, and so I walked down and entering a store bought all sorts of writing material and a beautiful portfolio which shuts with a clasp and has even a little wooden inkstand. So far it promises well. Hope it will continue. Last month I had mail enough from India and am greatly delighted with my countrymen at their generous appreciation of my work. Good enough for them. I cannot find anything more to write. Prof. Wright, his wife, and children were as good as ever. Words cannot express my gratitude to them.

Everything so far is not going bad with me except that I had a bad cold. Now I think the fellow is gone. This time I tried Christian Science for insomnia and really found it worked very well. Wishing you all happiness, I remain, ever your affectionate brother,

Vivekananda

PS. Kindly tell Mother that I do not want any coat now.

4 Dear Diwanji Saheb {Shri Haridas Viharidas Desai},

5 Your kind letter reached long ago, but as I had not anything 6 to write I was late in answering.

7 Your kind note to G. W. Hale has been very gratifying, as I
8 owed them that much. I have been travelling all over this country 9 all this time and seeing everything. I have come to this conclusion 10 that there is only one country in the world which understands 11 religion--it is India; that with all their faults the Hindus are head 12 and shoulders above all other nations in morality and spirituality; 13 and that with proper care and attempt and struggle of all her 14 disinterested sons, by combining some of the active and heroic 15 elements of the West with the calm virtues of the Hindus, there will 16 come a type of men far superior to any that have ever been in this world.

17 I do not know when I come back; but I have seen enough of 18 this country, I think, and so soon will go over to Europe and then to 19 India.

20 With my best love, gratitude to you and all your brothers,

Dear Sister {Mary Hale},

I have received two letters which you were very kind to take the trouble to write. I am going to talk here today, tomorrow at Baltimore, then again Monday at Baltimore, and Tuesday at Washington again. So I will be in Philadelphia a few days after that. I shall write to you the day I start from Washington. I shall be in Philadelphia a few days only to see Prof. Wright, and then I go to New York and run for a little while between New York and Boston, and then go to Chicago via Detroit; and then "whist" . . ., as Senator Palmer says, to England.

The word "Dharma" means religion. I am very sorry they treated Petro very badly in Calcutta. I have been very well treated here and am doing very well. Nothing extraordinary in the meantime except I got vexed at getting loads of newspapers from India; so after sending a cart-load to Mother Church and another to Mrs. Guernsey, I had to write them to stop sending their newspapers. I have had "boom" enough in India. Alasinga writes that every village all over the country now has heard of me. Well, the old peace is gone for ever and no rest anywhere from heretofore. These newspapers of India will be my death, I am sure. They will now talk what I ate on such and such a date and how I sneezed. Lord bless them, it was all my foolery. I really came here to raise a little money secretly and go over but was caught in the trap and now no more of a reserved life.

Wishing you all enjoyments,
I remain, yours
affectionately,

Chicago
15th November,
1894(?)

Dear Diwanji Saheb {Shri Haridas Viharidas Desai},

I here received your kind note. So very kind of you to remember me even here, I have not seen your Narayan Hemchandra. He is not in America, I believe. I have seen many strange sights and grand things. I am glad that there is a good chance of your coming over to Europe. Avail yourself of it by any means. The fact of our isolation from all the other nations of the world is the cause of our degeneration and its only remedy is getting back into the current of the rest of the world. Motion is the sign of life. America is a grand country. It is a paradise of the poor and women. There is almost no poor in the country, and nowhere else in the world women are so free, so educated, so cultured. They are everything in society.

This is a great lesson. The Sannyasin has not lost a bit of his Sannyasinship, even his mode of living. And in this most hospitable country, every home is open to me. The Lord who guides me in India, would He not guide me here? And He has.

You may not understand why a Sannyasin should be in America, but it was necessary. Because the only claim you have to be recognised by the world is your religion, and good specimens of our religious men are required to be sent abroad to give other nations an idea that India is not dead.

Some representative men must come out of India and go to all the nations of the earth to show at least that you are not savages. You may not feel the necessity of it from your Indian home, but, believe me, much depends upon that for your nation. And a Sannyasin who has no idea of doing good to his fellows is a brute, not a Sannyasin.

I am neither a sightseer nor an idle traveller; but you will see, if you live to see, and bless me all your life.

Mr. Dvivedi's papers were too big for the Parliament, and they had to be cut short.

I spoke at the Parliament of Religions, and with what effect I

1 may quote to you from a few newspapers and magazines ready at 2 hand. I need not be self-conceited, but to you in confidence I am 3 bound to say, because of your love, that no Hindu made such an 4 impression in America, and if my coming has done nothing, it has 5 done this that the Americans have come to know that India even 6 today produces men at whose feet even the most civilised nations 7 may learn lessons of religion and morality. Don't you think that is 8 enough to say for the Hindu nation sending over here their 9 Sannyasin? You would hear the details from Virchand Gandhi.

10 These I quote from the journals: "But eloquent as were many 11 of the brief speeches, no one expressed as well the spirit of the 12 Parliament (of religions) and its limitations as the Hindu monk. I 13 copy his address in full, but I can only suggest its effect upon the 14 audience; for he is an orator by Divine right, and his strong 15 intelligent face in its picturesque setting of yellow and orange was 16 hardly less interesting than these earnest words and the rich 17 rhythmical utterance he gave them." (Here the speech is quoted in 18 extenso .) New York Critique .

19 "He has preached in clubs and churches until his faith has 20 become familiar to us. . . . His culture, his eloquence, and his 21 fascinating personality have given us a new idea of Hindu
22 civilisation His fine, intelligent face and his deep musical voice, 23 prepossessing one at once in his favour. . . . He speaks without 24 notes, presenting his facts and his conclusions with the greatest art 25 and the most convincing sincerity, and rising often to rich inspiring 26 eloquence." (ibid.)

27 "Vivekananda is undoubtedly the greatest figure in the 28 Parliament of Religions. After hearing him we feel how foolish it is 29 to send missionaries to this learned nation." Herald (the greatest 30 paper here).

31 I cease from quoting more lest you think me conceited; but 32 this was necessary to you who have become nearly frogs in the well 33 and would not see how the world is going on elsewhere. I do not 34 mean you personally, my noble friend, but our nation in general.

35 I am the same here as in India, only here in this highly 36 cultural land there is an appreciation, a sympathy which our 37 ignorant fools never dream of. There our people grudge us monks a 38 crumb of bread, here they are ready to pay one thousand rupees a 39 lecture and remain grateful for the instructions for ever.

40 I am appreciated by these strangers more than I was ever in 41 India. I can, if I will, live here all my life in the greatest luxury; but I 42 am a Sannyasin, and "India, with all thy faults I love thee still". So I 43 am coming back after some months, and go on sowing the seeds of 44 religion and progress from city to city as I was doing so long, 45 although amongst a people who know not what appreciation and 46 gratefulness are.

1 I am ashamed of my own nation when I compare their 2 beggarly, selfish, unappreciative, ignorant ungratefulness with the 3 help, hospitality, sympathy, and respect which the Americans have 4 shown to me, a representative of a foreign religion. Therefore come 5 out of the country, see others, and compare.

6 Now after these quotations, do you think it was worth while 7 to send a Sannyasin to America?

8 Please do not publish it. I hate notoriety in the same manner
9 as I did in India.

10 I am doing the Lord's work, and wherever He leads I follow.
11 {Sanskrit} etc.--He who makes the dumb eloquent and the lame 12 cross a mountain, He will help me. I do not care for human help. He 13 is ready to help me in India, in America, on the North Pole, if He 14 thinks fit. If He does not, none else can help me. Glory unto the 15 Lord for ever and ever.

16 Yours with
17 blessings,

Vivekananda

27 Dear Diwanji {Shri Haridas Viharidas Desai},

28 Your letter pleased me extremely. I, of course, understand the 29 joke, but I am not the baby to be put off with a joke; now take more.

30 The secret of success of the Westerners is the power of 31 organisation and combination. That is only possible with mutual 32 trust and co-operation and help. Now here is Virchand Gandhi, the 33 Jain, whom you well knew in Bombay. This man never takes 34 anything but pure vegetables even in this terribly cold climate, and 35 tooth and nail tries to defend his countrymen and religion. The 36 people of this country like him very well, but what are they doing 37 who sent him over? They are trying to outcast him. Jealousy is a 38 vice necessarily generated in slaves. Again it is jealousy that holds 39 them down.

40 Here were . . . ; they were all trying to lecture and get money
41 thereby. They did something, but I succeeded better than they--why, 42 I did not put myself as a bar to their success. It was the will of the 43 Lord. But all these . . . except . . . have fabricated and circulated the 44 most horrible lies about me in this country, and behind my back.
45 Americans will never stoop to such meanness.

46 . . . If any man tries to move forward here, everybody is ready

1 to help him. In India you may try tomorrow by writing a single line 2 of praise for me in any of our papers (Hindu), and the next day they 3 would be all against me. Why? It is the nature of slaves. They 4 cannot suffer to see any one of their brethren putting his head the 5 least above their rank. . . . Do you mean to compare such stuff with 6 these children of liberty, self-help, and brotherly love? The nearest 7 approach to our people are the freed slaves of the U.S.A., the 8 Negroes. Why, in the South they are about twenty millions and are 9 now free. The whites are a handful, still the whites hold them down 10 all the same. Why, even when they have every right by law, a bloody 11 war between the brothers has been fought to free these slaves? The 12 same defect--jealousy. Not one of these Negroes would bear to see 13 his brother-Negro praised or pushing on. Immediately they would 14 join the whites to crush him down. You can have no idea about it 15 until you come out of India. It is all right for those who have plenty 16 of money and position to let the world roll on such, but I call him a 17 traitor who, having been educated, nursed in luxury by the heart's 18 blood of the downtrodden millions of toiling poor, never even takes 19 a thought for them. Where, in what period of history your rich men, 20 noblemen, your priests and potentates took any thought for the 21 poor--the grinding of whose faces is the very life-blood of their 22 power?

23 But the Lord is great, the vengeance came sooner or later, 24 and they who sucked the life-blood of the poor, whose very 25 education was at their expense, whose very power was built on 26 their poverty, were in their turn sold as slaves by hundreds and 27 thousands, their wives and daughters dishonoured, their property 28 robbed for the last 1,000 years, and do you think it was for no 29 cause? Why amongst the poor of India so many are Mohammedans?
30 It is nonsense to say, they were converted by the sword. It was to 31 gain their liberty from the . . . zemindars and from the . . . priest, 32 and as a consequence you find in Bengal there are more 33 Mohammedans than Hindus amongst the cultivators, because there
34 were so many zemindars there. Who thinks of raising these sunken 35 downtrodden millions? A few thousand graduates do not make a 36 nation, a few rich men do not make a nation. True, our 37 opportunities are less, but still there is enough to feed and clothe 38 and made 300 millions more comfortable, nay, luxurious. Ninety per 39 cent of our people are without education--who thinks of that?--these 40 Babus, the so-called patriots?

41 Now, let me tell you--still there is a God, no joke. He is 42 ordering our lives, and although I know a nation of slaves cannot 43 but try to bite at the hand that wants to give them medicine, yet, 44 pray with me, you--one of the few that have real sympathy for 45 everything good, for everything great, one at least whom I know to 46 be a man of true ring, nobility of nature, and a thorough sincerity of 47 head and heart--pray with me:

48 "Lead, kindly Light, 49 amid th' encircling gloom."

50 I do not care what they say. I love my God, my religion, my 51 country, and above all, myself, a poor beggar. I love the poor, the 1 ignorant, the downtrodden, I feel for them--the Lord knows how 2 much. He will show me the way. I do not care a fig for human 3 approbation or criticism. I think of most of them as ignorant, noisy 4 children--they have not penetrated into the inner nature of 5 sympathy, into the spirit which is all love.'

6 I have that insight through the blessing of Ramakrishna. I am 7 trying to work with my little band, all of these poor beggars like me, 8 you have seen them. But the Lord's works have been always done 9 by the lowly, by the poor. You bless me that I may have faith in my 10 Guru, in my God, and in myself.

11 The only way is love and sympathy. The only worship is love.

12 May He help you and yours ever and ever!

13 With prayers and 14 blessings,

15 Vivekananda

24 Dear Sister {Mary Hale},

25 I have been here three days. We had a nice lecture from Lady 26 Henry Somerset. I have a class every morning here on Vedanta and 27 other topics. Perhaps you have got the copy of Vedantism by this 28 time which I left with Mother Temple to be sent over. I went to dine 29 with the Spaldings another day. That day they urged me, against my 30 repeated protests, to criticise the Americans. I am afraid they did 31 not relish it. It is of course always impossible to do it. What about 32 Mother Church and the family at Chicago? I had no letters from 33 them a long time. I would have run into town to see you before this, 34 had I time. I am kept pretty busy the whole day. Then there is the 35 fear of not meeting you.

36 If you have time, you may write, and I shall snatch the first 37 opportunity to see you. My time of course is always in the 38 afternoon, so long I shall be here, that is until the 27th or 28th of 39 this month; I will have to be very busy in the morning till 12 or 1.

40 With my love to you all,

41 Ever your affectionate

Dear Sister {Mary Hale},

I received your letter just now. If it is not against the rules of your society, why do you not come to see Mrs. Ole Bull, Miss Farmer, and Mrs. Adams the physical culturist from Chicago?

Any day you will find them there.

Yours ever

affectionately,

Dear Sister {Mary Hale},

I had not anything from you since your last. I am going away next Tuesday to New York. You must have received Mrs. Bull's letter in the meanwhile. If you cannot accept it, I shall be very glad to come over any day--I have time now as the lectures are at an end, except Sunday next.

Dear Miss Bell {Isabelle McKindley},

I hope you are well. . . .

My last lecture was not very much appreciated by the men but awfully so by women. You know this Brooklyn is the centre of anti-women's rights movements; and when I told them that women deserve and are fit for everything, they did not like it of course. Never mind, the women were in ecstasies.

I have got again a little cold. I am going to the Guernseys. I have got a room downtown also where I will go several hours to hold my classes etc. Mother Church must be all right by this time, and you are all enjoying this nice weather. Give Mrs. Adams

1 mountain high love and regard from me when you see her next.

2 Send my letters as usual to the Guernseys.

13 Dear Friend {Mr. Leggett},

14 It is impossible to express my gratitude for your kindly 15 inviting me to your country seat. I am involved in a mistake now 16 and find it impossible for me to come tomorrow. Tomorrow I have a 17 class at Miss Andrews' of 40 W. 9th Street. As I was given to 18 understand by Miss MacLeod that that class could be postponed, I 19 was only too glad at the prospect of joining the company tomorrow.
20 But I find that Miss MacLeod was mistaken and Miss Andrews came 21 to tell me that she could not by any means stop the class tomorrow 22 or even give notice to the members, who are about 50 or 60 in 23 number.

24 In view of this I sincerely regret my inability and hope that 25 Miss MacLeod and Mrs. Sturges will understand that it is an 26 unavoidable circumstance, and not the will, that stands in the way 27 of my taking advantage of your kind invitation.

28 I shall only be too glad to come day after tomorrow, or any 29 other day this week, as it suits you.

30 Ever

31 sincerely yours,

40 Dear Friend {Mr. E. T. Sturdy},

41 I am perfectly aware that although some truth underlies the 42 mass of mystical thought which has burst upon the Western world 43 of late, it is for the most part full of motives, unworthy, or insane.
44 For this reason, I have never had anything to do with these phases

1 of religion, either in India or elsewhere, and mystics as a class are 2 not very favourable to me. . . .

3 I quite agree with you that only the Advaita philosophy can 4 save mankind, whether in East or West, from "devil worship" and 5 kindred superstitions, giving tone and strength to the very nature of 6 man. India herself requires this, quite as much or even more than 7 the West. Yet it is hard uphill work, for we have first to create a 8 taste, then teach, and lastly proceed to build up the whole fabric.

9 Perfect sincerity, holiness, gigantic intellect, and an all-10 conquering will. Let only a handful of men work with these, and the 11 whole world will be revolutionised. I did a good deal of platform 12 work in this country last year, and received plenty of applause, but 13 found that I was only working for myself. It is the patient upbuilding 14 of character, the intense struggle to realise the truth, which alone 15 will tell in the future of humanity. So this year I am hoping to work 16 along this line--training up to practical Advaita realisation a small 17 band of men and women. I do not know how far I shall succeed. The 18 West is the field for work if a man wants to benefit humanity, rather 19 than his own particular sect or country. I agree perfectly as to your 20 idea of a magazine. But I have no business capacity at all to do 21 these things. I can teach and preach, and sometimes write. But I 22 have intense faith in Truth. The Lord will send help and hands to 23 work with me. Only let me be perfectly pure, perfectly sincere, and 24 perfectly unselfish.

25 "Truth alone triumphs, not untruth; through truth alone 26 stretches the way to the Lord" (Atharva-Veda). He who gives up the 27 little self for the world will find the whole universe his. . . . I am 28 very uncertain about coming to England. I know no one there, and 29 here I am doing some work. The Lord will guide, in His own time.

35 Dear Friend {E. T. Sturdy},

36 I received your last duly, and as I had a previous arrangement 37 to come to Europe by the end of this August, I take your invitation 38 as a Divine Call.

39 "Truth alone triumphs, not untruth. Through truth alone lies 40 the way to Devayana (the way to the gods)." Those who think that a 41 little sugar-coating of untruth helps the spread of truth are 42 mistaken and will find in the long run that a single drop of poison 43 poisons the whole mass. . . . The man who is pure, and who dares, 44 does all things. May the Lord ever protect you from illusion and 45 delusion! I am ever ready to work with you, and the Lord will send 46 us friends by the hundred, if only we be our own friends first. "The 47 Atman alone is the friend of the Atman."

48 Europe has always been the source of social, and Asia of 1 spiritual power; and the whole history of the world is the tale of the 2 varying combinations of those two powers. Slowly a new leaf is 3 being turned in the story of humanity. The signs of this are 4 everywhere. Hundreds of new plans will be created and destroyed.

5 Only the fit will survive. And what but the true and the good is the 6 fit?

7 Yours etc.,

15 Dear Babies {the Hale Sisters},

16 What I expected has come. I always thought that although 17 Prof. Max Muller in all his writings on the Hindu religion adds in 18 the last a derogatory remark, he must see the whole truth in the 19 long run. As soon as you can, get a copy of his last book Vedantism ; 20 there you will find him swallowing the whole of it--reincarnation 21 and all.

22 Of course, you will not find it difficult at all to understand, as 23 it is only a part of what I have been telling you all this time.

24 Many points you will find smack of my paper in Chicago.

25 I am glad now the old man has seen the truth, because that is

16 Dear Joe {Josephine MacLeod},

17 Experiences are gathering a bit thick round you. I am sure 18 they will lift many a veil more.

19 Mr. Leggett told me of your phonograph. I told him to get a 20 few cylinders--I talk in them through somebody's phonograph and 21 send them to Joe--to which he replied that he could buy one, 22 because "I always do what Joe asks me to do." I am glad there is so 23 much of hidden poetry in his nature.

24 I am going today to live with the Guernseys as the doctor 25 wants to watch me and cure me. . . . Doctor Guernsey, after 26 examining other things, was feeling my pulse, when suddenly 27 Landsberg (whom they had forbidden the house) got in and 28 retreated immediately after seeing me. Dr. Guernsey burst out 29 laughing and declared he would have paid that man for coming just 30 then, for he was then sure of his diagnosis of my case. The pulse 31 before was so regular, but just at the sight of Landsberg it almost 32 stopped from emotion. It is sure only a case of nervousness. He also 33 advises me strongly to go on with Doctor Helmer's treatment. He 34 thinks Helmer will do me a world of good, and that is what I need 35 now. Is not he broad?

36 I expect to see "the sacred cow" today in town. I will be in 37 New York a few days more. Helmer wants me to take three 38 treatments a week for four weeks, then two a week for four more, 39 and I will be all right. In case I go to Boston, he recommends me to 40 a very good ostad (expert) there whom he would advise on the 41 matter.

42 I said a few kind words to Landsberg and went upstairs to 43 Mother Guernsey to save poor Landsberg from embarrassment.

Going tomorrow to the Thousand Islands care Miss Dutcher's, Thousand Island Park, N.Y. Where are you now? Where will you all be in summer? I have a chance of going to Europe in August, I will come to see you before I go. So write to me. Also I expect books and letters from India. Kindly send them care Miss Phillips, 19 W. 38th Street, N.Y. This is the bark in which all holy writings are written in India. So I write Sanskrit: May the husband of Uma (Shiva) protect you always.

May you all be blessed ever and ever.

Dear Sister {Mary Hale},

The letters from India and the parcel of books reached me safe. I am so happy to know of Mr. Sam's arrival. I am sure he is "bewareing of the vidders" nicely. I met a friend of Mr. Sam's one day on the street. He is an Englishman with a name ending in "ni". He was very nice. He said he was living in the same house with Sam somewhere in Ohio.

I am going on pretty nearly in the same old fashion. Talking when I can and silent when forced to be. I do not know whether I will go to Greenacre this summer. I saw Miss Farmer the other day. She was in a hurry to go away, so I had but very little talk with her. She is a noble, noble lady.

How are you going on with your Christian Science lessons? I hope you will go to Greenacre. There you will find quite a number of them and also the Spiritualists, table turnings, palmists, astrologers, etc., etc. You will get all the "cures" and all the "isms" presided over by Miss Farmer.

Landsberg has gone away to live in some other place, so I am

1 left alone. I am living mostly on nuts and fruits and milk, and find it
2 very nice and healthy too. I hope to lose about 30 to 40 lbs. this 3 summer. That will be all right for my size. I am afraid I have 4 forgotten all about Mrs. Adam's lessons in walking. I will have to 5 renew them when she comes again to N.Y. Gandhi has gone to 6 England en route to India from Boston, I suppose.

7 I would like to know about his "chaperon" Mrs. Howard and 8 her present bereaved state. I am very glad to hear that the rugs did 9 not go down to the bottom of the Atlantic and are at last coming.

10 This year I could hardly keep my head up, and I did not go
11 about lecturing. The three great commentaries on the Vedanta 12 philosophy belonging to the three great sects of dualists, qualified 13 dualists, and monists are being sent to me from India. Hope they 14 will arrive safe. Then I will have an intellectual feast indeed. I 15 intend to write a book this summer on the Vedanta philosophy. This 16 world will always be a mixture of good and evil, of happiness and 17 misery; this wheel will ever go up and come down; dissolution and 18 resolution is the inevitable law. Blessed are those who struggle to 19 go beyond. Well, I am glad all the babies are doing well but sorry 20 there was no "catch" even this winter, and every winter the chances 21 are dwindling. down. Here near my lodgings is the Waldorf-Hotel, 22 the rendezvous of lots of titled but penniless Europeans on show for 23 "Yankee" heiresses to buy. You may have any selection here, the 24 stock is so full and varied. There is the man who talks no English; 25 there are others who lisp a few words which no one can 26 understand; and others are there who talk nice English, but their 27 chance is not so great as that of the dumb ones--the girls do not 28 think them enough foreign who talk plain English fluently.

29 I read somewhere in a funny book that an American vessel 30 was being foundered in the sea; the men were desperate and as a 31 last solace wanted some religious service being done. There was 32 "Uncle Josh" on board who was an elder in the Presbyterian 33 Church. They all began to entreat, "Do something religious, Uncle 34 Josh! We are all going to die." Uncle Joseph took his hat in his hand 35 and took up a collection on the spot!

36 That is all of religion he knew. And that is more or less 37 characteristic of the majority of such people. Collections are about 38 all the religion they know or will ever know. Lord bless them. Good-39 bye for present. I am going to eat something; I feel very hungry.

40
41 affectionately,

Yours

Dear Sister {Mary Hale},

Many thanks for the Indian mail. It brought a good deal of good news. You are enjoying by this time, I hope, the articles by Prof. Max Muller on the "Immortality of the Soul" which I sent to Mother Church. The old man has taken in Vedanta, bones and all, and has boldly come out. I am so glad to know the arrival of the rugs. Was there any duty to pay? If so I will pay that, I insist on it. There will come another big packet from the Raja of Khetri containing some shawls and brocades and nick-nacks. I want to present them to different friends. But they are not going to arrive before some months, I am sure.

I am asked again and again, as you will find in the letters from India, to go over. They are getting desperate. Now if I go to Europe, I will go as the guest of Mr. Francis Leggett of N.Y. He will travel all over Germany, England, France, and Switzerland for six weeks. From there I shall go to India, or I may return to America. I have a seed planted here and wish it to grow. This winter's work in N.Y. was splendid, and it may die if I suddenly go over to India, so I am not sure about going to India soon.

Nothing noticeable has happened during this visit to the Thousand Islands. The scenery is very beautiful and I have some of my friends here with me to talk about God and soul ad libitum. I am eating fruits and drinking milk and so forth, and studying huge Sanskrit books on Vedanta which they have kindly sent me from India.

If I come to Chicago I cannot come at least within six weeks or more. Baby needn't alter any of her plans for me. I will see you all somehow or other before I go.

You fussed so much over my reply to Madras, but it has produced a tremendous effect there. A late speech by the President of the Madras Christian College, Mr. Miller, embodies a large amount of my ideas and declares that the West is in need of Hindu ideas of God and man and calls upon the young men to go and preach to the West. This has created quite a furore of course amongst the Missions. What you allude to as being published in the Arena I did not see a bit of it. The women did not make any fuss over me at all in New York. Your friend must have drawn on his imagination. They were not of the "bossing" type at all. I hope Father Pope will go to Europe and Mother Church too. Travelling is the best thing in life. I am afraid I shall die if made to stick to one place for a long time. Nothing like a nomadic life!

The more the shades around deepen, the more the ends approach and the more one understands the true meaning of life, that it is a dream; and we begin to understand the failure of everyone to grasp it, for they only attempted to get meaning out of the meaningless. To get reality out of a dream is boyish enthusiasm. "Everything is evanescent, everything is changeful"--knowing this, the sage gives up both pleasure and pain and becomes a witness of this panorama (the universe) without attaching himself to anything.

1 "They indeed have conquered Heaven even in this life whose 2 mind has become fixed in sameness . God is pure and same to all,
3 therefore they are said to be in God " (Gita, V.19). Desire, 4 ignorance, and inequality--this is the trinity of bondage.

5 Denial of the will to live, knowledge, and same-sightedness is 6 the trinity of liberation.

7 Freedom is the goal of the universe.

8 "Nor love nor hate nor pleasure nor pain nor death nor life 9 nor religion nor irreligion: not this, not this, not this."

10 Yours ever,

20 Dear Sister {Mary Hale},

21 Many thanks for the Indian mail. I cannot express in words
22 my gratitude to you. As you have already read in Max Muller's 23 article on Immortality I sent Mother Church, that he thinks that 24 those we love in this life we must have loved in the past, so it seems 25 I must have belonged to the Holy Family in some past life. I am 26 expecting some books from India. I hope they have arrived. If so, 27 will you kindly send them over here? If any postage is due I shall 28 send it as soon as I get intimation. You did not write about the duty 29 on the rugs; there will be another big packet from Khetri containing 30 carpets and shawls and some brocades and other nick-nacks. I have 31 written them to get the duty paid there if it is possible through the 32 American Consul in Bombay. If not I shall have to pay it here. I do 33 not think they will arrive for some months yet. I am anxious about 34 the books. Kindly send them as soon as they arrive.

My love to Mother and Father Pope and all the sisters. I am enjoying this place immensely. Very little eating and good deal of thinking and talking and study. A wonderful calmness is coming over my soul. Every day I feel I have no duty to do; I am always in eternal rest and peace. It is He that works. We are only the instruments. Blessed be His name! The threefold bondage of lust and gold and fame is, as it were, fallen from me for the time being, and once more, even here, I feel what sometimes I felt in India, "From me all difference has fallen, all right or wrong, all delusion and ignorance has vanished, I am walking in the path beyond the qualities." What law I obey, what disobey? From that height the universe looks like a mud-puddle. Hari Om Tat Sat. He exists; nothing else does. I in Thee and Thou in me. Be Thou Lord my eternal refuge! Peace, Peace, Peace! Ever with love and blessings,

Your brother,

New York,

2nd August, 1895

Dear Friend {E. T. Sturdy},

Your kind note received today. I am going to Paris first with a friend and start for Europe on the 17th of August. I will however remain in Paris only a week to see my friend married, and then I go over to London.

Your advice about an organisation was very good indeed. And I am trying to act on that line.

I have many strong friends here, but unfortunately they are most of them poor. So the work here must be slow. Moreover it requires a few months more of work in New York to carry it to some visible shape: as such I will have to return to New York early this winter, and in summer I will return to London again. So far as I see now I can stay only a few weeks in London. But if the Lord wills, that small time may prove to be the beginning of great things. From Paris I will inform you by wire when I arrive in England.

Some Theosophists came to my classes in New York, but as soon as human beings perceive the glory of the Vedanta, all abracadabras fall off of themselves. This has been my uniform experience. Whenever mankind attains a higher vision, the lower vision disappears of itself. Multitude counts for nothing. A few heart-whole, sincere, and energetic men can do more in a year than a mob in a century. If there is heat in one body, then those others that come near it must catch it. This is the law. So success is ours, so long as we keep up the heat, the spirit of truth, sincerity, and love. My own life has been a very chequered one, but I have always found the eternal words verified: "Truth alone triumphs, not untruth. Through truth alone lies the way to God."

May the Sat in you be always your infallible guide! May He speedily attain to freedom and help others to attain it!

the Sat, Ever yours in

Dear Friend {E. T. Sturdy},

. . . It is only just that I should try to give you a little of my views. I fully believe that there are periodic ferments of religion in human society, and that such a period is now sweeping over the educated world. While each ferment, moreover, appears broken into various little bubbles, these are all eventually similar, showing the cause or causes behind them to be the same. That religious ferment which at present is every day gaining a greater hold over thinking men, has this characteristic that all the little thought-whirlpools into which it has broken itself declare one single aim--a vision and a search after the Unity of Being. On planes physical, ethical, and spiritual, an ever-broadening generalisation--leading up to a concept of Unity Eternal--is in the air; and this being so, all the movements of the time may be taken to represent, knowingly or unknowingly, the noblest philosophy of the unity man ever had--the Advaita Vedanta.

Again, it has always been observed that as a result of the struggles of the various fragments of thought in a given epoch, one bubble survives. The rest only arise to melt into it and form a single great wave, which sweeps over society with irresistible force.

In India, America, and England (the countries I happen to know about) hundreds of these are struggling at the present moment. In India, dualistic formulae are already on the wane, the Advaita alone holds the field in force. In America, many movements are struggling for the mastery. All these represent Advaita thought more or less, and that series, which is spreading most rapidly, approaches nearer to it than any of the others. Now if anything was ever clear to me, it is that one of these must survive, swallowing up all the rest, to be the power of the future. Which is it to be?

Referring to history, we see that only that fragment which is fit will survive, and what makes fit to survive but character? Advaita will be the future religion of thinking humanity. No doubt of that. And of all the sects, they alone shall gain the day who are able to show most character in their lives, no matter how far they may be.

1 Let me tell you a little personal experience. When my Master 2 left the body, we were a dozen penniless and unknown young men.
3 Against us were a hundred powerful organisations, struggling hard 4 to nip us in the bud. But Ramakrishna had given us one great gift, 5 the desire, and the lifelong struggle not to talk alone, but to live the 6 life . And today all India knows and reverences the Master, and the 7 truths he taught are spreading like wild fire. Ten years ago I could 8 not get a hundred persons together to celebrate his birthday
9 anniversary. Last year there were fifty thousand.

10 Neither numbers nor powers nor wealth nor learning nor 11 eloquence nor anything else will prevail, but purity, living the life, in 12 one word, anubhuti , realisation. Let there be a dozen such lion-13 souls in each country, lions who have broken their own bonds, who 14 have touched the Infinite, whose whole soul is gone to Brahman, 15 who care neither for wealth nor power nor fame, and these will be 16 enough to shake the world.

17 Here lies the secret. Says Patanjali, the father of Yoga, "When 18 a man rejects all the superhuman powers, then he attains to the 19 cloud of virtue." He sees God. He becomes God and helps others to 20 become the same. This is all I have to preach. Doctrines have been 21 expounded enough. There are books by the million. Oh, for an 22 ounce of practice!

23 As to societies and organisations, these will come of 24 themselves. Can there be jealousy where there is nothing to be 25 jealous of? The names of those who will wish to injure us will be 26 legion. But is not that the surest sign of our having the truth? The 27 more I have been opposed, the more my energy has always found 28 expression. I have been driven and worshipped by princes. I have 29 been slandered by priests and laymen alike. But what of it? Bless 30 them all! They are my very Self, and have they not helped me by 31 acting as a spring-board from which my energy could take higher 32 and higher flights?

33 . . . I have discovered one great secret--I have nothing to fear 34 from talkers of religion. And the great ones who realise--they 35 become enemies to none! Let talkers talk! They know no better! Let 36 them have their fill of name and fame and money and woman. Hold 37 we on to realisation, to being Brahman, to becoming Brahman. Let 38 us hold on to truth unto death, and from life to life. Let us not pay 39 the least attention to what others say, and if, after a lifetime's effort, 40 one soul, only one, can break the fetters of the world and be free, 41 we have done our work . Hari Om!

42 . . . One word more. Doubtless I do love India. But every day 43 my sight grows clearer. What is India, or England, or America to us?
44 We are the servants of that God who by the ignorant is called MAN.
45 He who pours water at the root, does he not water the whole tree?

46 There is but one basis of well-being, social, political or 47 spiritual--to know that I and my brother are one . This is true for all 48 countries and all people. And Westerners, let me say, will realise it 49 more quickly than Orientals, who have almost exhausted 50 themselves in formulating the idea and producing a few cases of 51 individual realisation.

Let us work without desire for name or fame or rule over others. Let us be free from the triple bonds of lust, greed of gain, and anger. And this truth is with us!

the Lord, Ever yours in

Vivekananda

Dear and Blessed Friend {E. T. Sturdy},

It is useless to express my gratitude for your kindness; it is too great for expression. . . .

I have a cordial invitation from Miss Muller, and as her place is very near to yours, I think it will be nice to come to her place first for a day or two and then to come over to you.

My body was very ill for a few days, which caused this delay in writing you.

Hoping soon for the privilege of mingling hearts and heads together.

I remain, ever yours in love, and fellowship in the Lord,

Dear Joe Joe {Josephine MacLeod},

A thousand pardons for not promptly writing to you. I arrived safe in London, found my friend, and am all right in his home. It is

1 beautiful. His wife is surely an angel, and his life is full of India. He 2 has been years there--mixing with the Sannyasins, eating their food, 3 etc., etc.; so you see I am very happy. I found already several 4 retired Generals from India; they were very civil and polite to me.
5 That wonderful knowledge of the Americans that identify every 6 black man with the negro is entirely absent here, and nobody even 7 stares at me in the street.

8 I am very much more at home here than anywhere out of 9 India. The English people know us, we know them. The standard of 10 education and civilisation is very high here--that makes a great 11 change, so does the education of many generations.

12 Have the Turtle-doves returned? The Lord bless them and 13 theirs for ever and ever. How are the babies--Alberta and Holister?
14 Give them my oceans of love and know it yourself.

15 My friend being a Sanskrit scholar, we are busy working on 16 the great commentaries of Shankara etc. Nothing but philosophy 17 and religion here, Joe Joe. I am going to try to get up classes in 18 October in London.

19 Ever affectionately with love and blessings,

31 Dear Kali {Abhedananda},

32 You may have got my earlier letter. At present send all letters 33 to me at the above address. Mr. Sturdy is known to Tarakda. He has 34 brought me to his place, and we are both trying to create a stir in 35 England. I shall this year leave again in November for America. So I 36 require a man well-up in Sanskrit and English, particularly the 37 latter language--either Shashi or you or Sarada. Now, if you have 38 completely recovered, very well, you come; otherwise send Sharat.
39 The work is to teach the devotees I shall be leaving here, to make 40 them study the Vedanta, to do a little translation work into English, 41 and to deliver occasional lectures. "Work is apt to cloud spiritual 42 vision." X_ is very eager to come, but unless the foundation is 43 strongly laid, there is every likelihood of everything toppling down.
44 I am sending you a cheque along with this letter. Buy clothes and 45 other necessary things--whoever comes. I am sending the cheque in 46 the name of Master Mahashay Mahendra Babu. Gangadhar's 47 Tibetan choga is in the Math; get the tailor to make a similar choga

1 of gerua colour. See that the collar is a little high, that is, the throat
2 and neck should be covered. . . . Above all, you must have a woollen 3 overcoat, for it is very cold. If you do not put on an overcoat on the 4 ship, you will suffer much. . . . I am sending a second class ticket, as 5 there is not much difference between a first class and a second 6 class berth. . . . If it is decided to send Shashi then inform the 7 purser of the ship beforehand to provide him with vegetarian diet.

8 Go to Bombay and see Messrs. King, King & Co., Fort, 9 Bombay, and tell them that you are Mr. Sturdy's man. They will then 10 give you a ticket to England. A letter is being sent from here to the 11 Company with instructions. I am writing to the Maharaja of Khetri 12 to instruct his Bombay agent to look after the booking of your 13 passage. If this sum of Rs. 150/- is not sufficient for your outfit, get 14 the remainder from Rakhal. I shall send him the amount 15 afterwards. Keep another Rs. 50/- for pocket expenses--take it from 16 4/21/25Rakhal; I shall pay back later. I have not up to now got any 17 acknowledgement of the amount I sent to Chuni Babu. Start as 18 quickly as possible. Inform Mahendra Babu that he is my Calcutta 19 agent. Tell him to send a letter to Mr. Sturdy by next mail informing 20 him that he is ready to look after all business transactions in 21 Calcutta on your behalf. In effect, Mr. Sturdy is my secretary in 22 England, Mahendra Babu in Calcutta, and Alasinga in Madras. Send 23 this information to Madras also. Can any work be done unless all of 24 us gird up our loins? And be up and doing! "Fortune favours the 25 brave and energetic." Don't look back--forward, infinite energy, 26 infinite enthusiasm, infinite daring, and infinite patience--then alone 27 can great deeds be accomplished. We must set the whole world 28 afire.

29 Now on the day the steamer is due to start, write a letter to 30 Mr. Sturdy informing him by which steamer you are leaving for 31 England. Otherwise there is some likelihood of your having 32 difficulties when you reach London. Take the ship that comes 33 directly to London, for even if it takes a few days longer on the 34 voyage, the fares are less. At the moment our purse is lean. In time 35 we shall send preachers in large numbers to all the quarters of the 36 globe.

37
38 affectionately,

Yours

Vivekananda

41 PS. Write at once to the Maharaja of Khetri, that you are 42 going to Bombay and that you will be glad if his agent attends to 43 the booking of your passage and sees you off the board.

44 Keep my address with you written in a pocket-book, lest there 45 should be difficulties afterwards.

9 I am going to have a few lectures in and about London. One 10 of them, a public one, will be at Princes' Hall on the 22nd at 8-30.

11 Come over and try to form a class. I have as yet done almost 12 nothing here. Of course, breaking the ice is slow always. It took me 13 two years in America to work up that little which we had in New

7 Two American ladies, mother and daughter, living in London 8 came in to the class last night--Mrs. and Miss Netter. They were 9 very sympathetic of course. The class there at Mr. Chamier's is 10 finished. I shall begin at my lodgings from Saturday night next. I 11 expect to have a pretty good-sized room or two for my classes. I 12 have been also invited to Moncure Conways's Ethical Society where 13 I speak on the 10th. I shall have a lecture in the Balboa Society next 14 Tuesday. The Lord will help. I am not sure whether I can go up with

32 Dear Friend {E. T. Sturdy},

33 Just now two young gentlemen, Mr. Silverlock and his friend, 34 left. Miss Muller also came this afternoon and left just when these 35 gentlemen came in.

36 One is an Engineer and the other is in the grain trade. They 37 have read a good deal of modern philosophy and science and have 38 been much struck by the similarity with the latest conclusions of 39 both with the ancient Hindu thought. They are very fine, intelligent, 40 and educated men. One has given up the Church, the other asked 41 me whether he should or not. Now, two things struck me after this 42 interview. First, we must hurry the book through. We will touch a 43 class thereby who are philosophically religious without the least 44 mystery-mongering. Second, both of them want to know the rituals 45 of my creed! This opened my eyes. The world in general must have 46 some form. In fact, in the ordinary sense religion is philosophy

1 concretised through rituals and symbols.

2 It is absolutely necessary to form some ritual and have a 3 Church. That is to say, we must fix on some ritual as fast as we can.
4 If you can come Saturday morning or sooner, we shall go to the 5 Asiatic Society library or you can procure for me a book which is 6 called Hemadri Kosha, from which we can get what we want, and 7 kindly bring the Upanishads. We will fix something grand, from 8 birth to death of a man. A mere loose system of philosophy gets no 9 hold on mankind.

10 If we can get it through, before we have finished the classes, 11 and publish it by publicly holding a service or two under it, it will go 12 on. They want to form a congregation, and they want ritual; that is 13 one of the causes why __ will never have a hold on Western people.

14 The Ethical Society has sent me another letter thanking me 15 for the acceptance of this offer. Also a copy of their forms. They 16 want me to bring with me a book from which to read for ten 17 minutes. Will you bring the Gita (translation) and the Buddhist 18 Jataka (translation) with you?

19 I would not do anything in this matter without seeing you 20 first.

22 Dear Joe Joe {MacLeod},

23 After 10 days of the most disastrous voyage I ever had I

25 After the clean and beautiful cities of Europe, New York 26 appears very dirty and miserable. I am going to begin work next 28 pair, as Alberta calls them. They are as usual very kind. Saw Mrs.

31 with the birds of paradise to Ridgely this Christmas. Wish ever so

43 {To E. T. Sturdy},

1 The work here is going on splendidly. I have been working 2 incessantly at two classes a day since my arrival. Tomorrow I go out
3 of town with Mr. Leggett for a week's holiday. Did you know 4 Madame Antoinette Sterling, one of your greatest singers? She is 5 very much interested in the work.

6 I have made over all the secular part of the work to a 7 committee and am free from all that botheration. I have no aptitude 8 for organising. It nearly breaks me to pieces.

9 . . . What about the Narada-Sutra ? There will be a good sale 10 of the book here, I am sure. I have now taken up the Yoga-Sutras
11 and take them up one by one and go through all the commentators 12 along with them. These talks are all taken down, and when 13 completed will form the fullest annotated translation of Patanjali in 14 English. Of course it will be rather a big work.

15 At Trubner's I think there is an edition of Kurma Purana . The 16 commentator, Vijnana Bhikshu, is continually quoting from that 17 book. I have never seen the book myself. Will you kindly find time to 18 go and see if in it there are some chapters on Yoga? If so, will you 19 kindly send me a copy? Also of the Hatha-Yoga-Pradipika, Shiva-
20 Samhita , and any other book on Yoga? The originals of course. I 21 shall send you the money for them as soon as they arrive. Also a 22 copy of Sankhya-Karika of Ishwara Krishna by John Davies. Just 23 now your letter reached along with Indian letters. The one man who 24 is ready is ill. The others say that they cannot come over on the 25 spur of the moment. So far it seems unlucky. I am sorry they could 26 not come. What can be done? Things go slow in India!

27 Ramanuja's theory is that the bound soul or Jiva has its 28 perfections involved, entered, into itself. When this perfection again 29 evolves, it becomes free. The Advaitin declares both these to take 30 place only in show; there was neither involution nor evolution. Both 31 processes were Maya, or apparent only.

32 In the first place, the soul is not essentially a knowing being.
33 Sachchidananda is only an approximate definition, and Neti Neti is 34 the essential definition. Schopenhauer caught this idea of willing 35 from the Buddhists. We have it also in Vasana or Trishna, Pali 36 tanha . We also admit that it is the cause of all manifestation which 37 are, in their turn, its effects. But, being a cause, it must be a 38 combination of the Absolute and Maya . Even knowledge, being a 39 compound, cannot be the Absolute itself, but it is the nearest 40 approach to it, and higher than Vasana, conscious or unconscious.
41 The Absolute first becomes the mixture of knowledge, then, in the 42 second degree, that of will. If it be said that plants have no 43 consciousness, that they are at best only unconscious wills, the 44 answer is that even the unconscious plant-will is a manifestation of 45 the consciousness, not of the plant, but of the cosmos, the Mahat of 46 the Sankhya Philosophy. The Buddhist analysis of everything into 47 will is imperfect, firstly, because will is itself a compound, and 48 secondly, because consciousness or knowledge which is a 49 compound of the first degree, precedes it. Knowledge is action.
50 First action, then reaction. When the mind perceives, then, as the 51 reaction, it wills . The will is in the mind. So it is absurd to say that 1 will is the last analysis. Deussen is playing into the hands of the 2 Darwinists.

3 But evolution must be brought in accordance with the more 4 exact science of Physics, which can demonstrate that every 5 evolution must be preceded by an involution. This being so, the 6 evolution of the Vasana or will must be preceded by the involution 7 of the Mahat or cosmic consciousness.

Blessed and Beloved {E. T. Sturdy},

All your letters reached by one mail today. Miss Muller also writes me one. She has read in the Indian Mirror that Swami Krishnananda is coming over to England. If that is so, he is the strongest man that I can get.

The classes I had here were six in the week, besides a question class. The general attendance varies between 70 to 120.
Besides every Sunday I have a public lecture. The last month my lectures were in a small hall holding about 600. But 900 will come

²⁶³ ?See also Vol. VIII, pp. 277-78; Vol. V. pp. 101-03.

1 as a rule, 300 standing, and about 300 going off, not finding room.
2 This week therefore I have a bigger hall, with a capacity of 3 holding 1200 people.

4 There is no admission charged in these lectures, but a 5 collection covers the rent. The newspapers have taken me up this 6 week, and altogether I have stirred up New York considerably this 7 year. If I could have remained here this summer and organised a 8 summer place, the work would be going on sure foundations here.
9 But as I intended to come over in May to England, I shall have to 10 leave it unfinished. If, however, Krishnananda comes to England, 11 and you find him strong and able, and if you find the work in 12 London will not be hurt by my absence this summer, I would 13 rather be here this summer.

14 Again, I am afraid my health is breaking down under 15 constant work. I want some rest. We are so unused to these 16 Western methods, especially the keeping to time. I will leave you 17 to decide all these. The Brahmavadin is going on here very 18 satisfactorily. I have begun to write articles on Bhakti; also send 19 them a monthly account of the work. Miss Muller wants to come 20 to America. I do not know whether she will or not. Some friends 21 here are publishing my Sunday lectures. I have sent you a few 22 copies of the first one. I shall send you next mail a few of the next 23 two lectures, and if you like them I shall ask them to send you a 24 number. Can you manage to get a few hundred copies sold in 25 England? That will encourage them in publishing the subsequent

42 Dear Sharat {Saradananda},

43 Your letter only made me sad. I see you have lost all 44 enthusiasm. I know all of you, your powers and your limitations. I 45 would not have called you to any task which you are incompetent 46 to do. The only task I would have given you was to teach 47 elementary Sanskrit, and with the help of dictionaries and other 48 things assist S. in his translations and teachings. I would have

1 moulded you to it. Anyone could have done as well--only a little 2 smattering of Sanskrit was absolutely necessary. Well, everything
3 is for the best. If it is the Lord's work the right man for the right
4 place will be forthcoming in the right time. None of you need feel 5 disturbed. As for Sanyal, I don't care who takes money or not, but 6 I have a strong hatred for child-marriage. I have suffered terribly 7 from it, and it is the great sin for which our nation has to suffer.
8 As such, I would hate myself if I help such a diabolical custom 9 directly or indirectly. I wrote to you pretty plain about it, and 10 Sanyal had no right to play a hoax upon me about his "law-suit"
11 and his attempts to become free. I am sorry for his playing tricks 12 on me who have never done him any harm. This is the world. What 13 good you do goes for nothing, but if you stop doing it, then, Lord 14 help you, you are counted as a rogue. Isn't it? Emotional natures 15 like mine are always preyed upon by relatives and friends. This 16 world is merciless. This world is our friend when we are its slaves 17 and no more. This world is broad enough for me. There will 18 always be a corner found for me somewhere. If the people of India 19 do not like me, there will be others who do. I must set my foot to 20 the best of my ability upon this devilish custom of child-marriage.
21 No blame will entail on you. You keep at a safe distance if you are 22 afraid. I am sorry, very sorry, I cannot have any partnership with 23 such doings as getting husbands for babies. Lord help me, I never 24 had and never will have. Think of the case of M__ Babu! Did you 25 ever meet a more cowardly or brutal one than that? I can kill the 26 man who gets a husband for a baby. The upshot of the whole thing 27 is--I want bold, daring, adventurous spirits to help me. Else I will 28 work alone. I have a mission to fulfil. I will work it out alone. I do 29 not care who comes or who goes. Sanyal is already done for by 30 Samsara. Beware, boy! That was all the advice I thought it my 31 duty to give you. Of course, you are great folks now--my words 32 will have no value with you. But I hope the time will come when 33 you will see clearer, know better, and think other thoughts than 34 you are now doing.

35 Good-bye! I would not bother you any more, and all 36 blessings go with you all. I am very glad I have been of some 37 service to you sometimes if you think so. At least I am pleased 38 with myself for having tried my best to discharge the duties laid 39 on me by my Guru, and well done or ill, I am glad that I tried. So 40 good-bye. Tell Sanyal that I am not at all angry with him, but I am 41 sorry, very sorry. It is not the money--that counts nothing-- but the 42 violation of a principle that pained me, and the trick he played on 43 me. Good-bye to him also, and to you all. One chapter of my life is 44 closed. Let others come in their due order. They will find me 45 ready. You need not disturb yourselves at all about me. I want no 46 help from any human being in any country. So good-bye! May the 47 Lord bless you all for ever and ever!

6 By this time the copies of the lectures must have reached 7 you. Hope they may be of some use.
8 I think, in the first place, there are so many difficulties to

27 Dear Sister {Mary Hale},
28 Many thanks for your kind New Year's greetings. I am glad 29 to learn you enjoyed your six weeks with the Esq. although they 30 be only golf playing. I have been in the midst of the genuine 31 article in England. The English people received me with open 32 arms, and I have very much toned down my ideas about the 33 English race. First of all, I found that those fellows as Lund etc.
34 who came over from England to attack me were nowhere. Their 35 existence is simply ignored by the English people. None but a 36 person belonging to the English Church is thought to be genteel .
37 Again, some of the best men of England belonging to the English 38 Church and some of the highest in position and fame became my 39 truest friends. This was quite another sort of experience from 40 what I met in America, was it not?
41 The English people laughed and laughed when I told them
42 about my experience with the Presbyterians and other fanatics 43 here and my reception in hotels etc. I also found at once the 44 difference in culture and breeding between the two countries and 45 came to understand why American girls go in shoals to be married 46 to Europeans. Everyone was kind to me there, and I have left 47 many noble friends of both sexes anxiously waiting my return in

1 the spring.

2 As to my work there, the Vedantic thought has already 3 permeated the higher classes of England. Many people of 4 education and rank, and amongst them not a few clergymen, told 5 me that the conquest of Rome by Greece was being re-enacted in 6 England.

7 There are two sorts of Englishmen who have lived in India.
8 One consisting of those who hate everything Indian, but they are 9 uneducated. The other, to whom India is the holy land, its very air 10 is holy. And they try to out-Herod Herod in their Hinduism. They 11 are awful vegetarians, and they want to form a caste in England.
12 Of course, the majority of the English people are firm believers in 13 caste. I had eight classes a week apart from public lectures, and 14 they were so crowded that a good many people, even ladies of 15 high rank, sat on the floor and did not think anything of it. In 16 England I find strong-minded men and women to take up the work 17 and carry it forward with the peculiar English grip and energy.
18 This year my work in New York is going on splendidly. Mr. Leggett 19 is a very rich man of New York and very much interested in me.
20 The New Yorker has more steadiness than any other people in this 21 country, so I have determined to make my centre here. In this 22 country my teachings are thought to be queer by the "Methodist" 23 and "Presbyterian" aristocracy. In England it is the highest 24 philosophy to the English Church aristocracy.

25 Moreover those talks and gossips, so characteristic of the 26 American woman, are almost unknown in England. The English 27 woman is slow; but when she works up to an idea, she will have a 28 hold on it sure; and they are regularly carrying on my work there 29 and sending every week a report--think of that! Here is I go away 30 for a week, everything falls to pieces. My love to all--to Sam and 31 to yourself. May the Lord bless you ever and ever!

42 Blessed and Beloved {E. T. Sturdy},

43 Many many thanks for the books. The Sankhya Karika is a 44 very good book, and the Kurma Purana, though I do not find in it 45 all expected, has a few verses on Yoga. The words dropped in my 46 last letter were Yoga-Sutra, which I am translating with notes 47 from various authorities. I want to incorporate the chapter in 48 Kurma Purana in my notes. I have very enthusiastic accounts of 1 your classes from Miss MacLeod. Mr. Galsworthy seems to be very 2 much interested now.

3 I have begun my Sunday lectures here and also the classes.
4 Both are very enthusiastically received. I make them all free and 5 take up a collection to pay the hall etc. Last Sunday's lecture was 6 very much appreciated and is in the press. I shall send you a few 7 copies next week. It was the outline of our work.

8 As my friends have engaged a stenographer (Goodwin), all 9 these class lessons and public lectures are taken down. I intend to 10 send you a copy of each. They may suggest you some ideas.

11 My great want here is a strong man like you, possessing 12 intellect, and ability, and love. In this nation of universal 13 education, all seem to melt down into a mediocrity, and the few 14 able are weighed down by the eternal money-making.

15 I have a chance of getting a piece of land in the country, and 16 some buildings on it, plenty of trees and a river, to serve as a 17 summer meditation resort. That, of course, requires a committee 18 to look after it in my absence, as also the handling of money and 19 printing and other matters.

20 I have separated myself entirely from money questions, yet 21 without it the movement cannot go on. So necessarily I have to 22 make over everything executive to a committee, which will look 23 after these things in my absence. Steady work is not in the line of 24 the Americans. The only way they work, is in a herd. So let them 25 have it. As to the teaching part, my friends will go over this 26 country from place to place, each one independent, and let them 27 form independent circles. That is the easiest way to spread. Then, 28 when there will be sufficient strength, we shall have yearly 29 gatherings to concentrate our energies.

30 The committee is entirely executive and it is confined to 31 New York alone. . . .

32 Ever yours with love and

40 Dear Alasinga,

41 By this time you must have got enough of matter on Bhakti 42 from me. The last copy, dated 21st December, of Brahmavadin is 43 in. I have been smelling something since the last few issues of the 44 Brahmavadin . Are you going to join the Theosophists? This time 45 you simply gave yourselves up. Why, you get in a notice of the 46 Theosophists' lectures in the body of your notes! Any suspicion of 47 my connection with the Theosophists will spoil my work both in

1 America and England, and well it may. They are thought by all 2 people of sound mind to be wrong, and true it is that they are held 3 so, and you know it full well. I am afraid you want to overreach 4 me. You think you can get more subscribers in England by 5 advertising Annie Besant? Fool that you are.

6 I do not want to quarrel with the Theosophists, but my 7 position is entirely ignoring them. Had they paid for the 8 advertisement? Why should you go forward to advertise them? I 9 shall get more than enough subscribers in England when I go 10 next.

11 Now, I would have no traitors, I tell you plainly, I would not 12 be played upon by any rogue. No hypocrisy with me. Hoist your 13 flag and give public notice in your paper that you have given up 14 all connections with me, and join the . . . camp of of the 15 Theosophists or cease to have anything whatsoever to do with 16 them. I give you very plain words indeed. I shall have one man 17 only to follow me, but he must be true and faithful unto death. I do 18 not care for success or no success. I am tired of this nonsense of 19 preaching all over the world. Did any of Annie Besant's people 20 come to my help when I was in England? Fudge! I must keep my 21 movement pure or I will have none.

22 Yours,

23 Vivekananda

24 PS. Reply sharp your decision. I am very decided on this 25 point. You ought to have told me so before, had your intentions 26 been such from the very beginning. The Brahmavadin is for 27 preaching Vedanta and not Theosophy. I almost lose my patience 28 when I see these underhand dealings. This is the world--those 29 whom you love best and help most try to cheat you. --V.

38 Blessed and Beloved {E. T. Sturdy},

39 I am coming before May if possible. You need not worry 40 about that. The pamphlet was beautiful. The newspaper cuttings 41 from here will be forwarded if we can get them.

42 The books and pamphlets here have been got up this way. A 43 committee was formed in New York. They paid all the expenses of 44 stenographing and printing on condition the books will belong to 45 them. So these pamphlets and books are theirs. One book, the 46 Karma-Yoga has been already published; the Raja-Yoga, a much 47 bigger one, is in the course of publication; the Jnana-Yoga may be

1 published later on. These will be popular books, the language
2 being that of talk, as you have seen already. I have purged
3 everything that is objectionable, and they help me in getting up 4 the books.

5 The books are the property of this Committee, of which Mrs.
6 Ole Bull is the principal backer, also Mrs. Leggett.

7 It is only just that they should have the books as they paid 8 all the expenses. There is no fear of the publishers meddling with 9 them, as they are the publishers themselves.

10 If any books come from India please keep them.

11 The stenographer, who is an Englishman named Goodwin, 12 has become so interested in the work that I have now made him a 13 Brahmacharin, and he is going round with me, and we shall come 14 over together to England. He will be very helpful as he has been

24 Blessed and Beloved {E. T. Sturdy},

25 I received your last just now and it frightened me 26 immensely.

27 The lectures were delivered under the auspices of certain 28 friends who paid for the stenography and all other expenses on 29 condition they alone will have the right to publish them. As such, 30 they have already published the Sunday lectures as well as three 31 books on "Karma-Yoga", "Raja-Yoga", and "Jnana-Yoga". The Raja-
32 Yoga especially has been much altered and re-arranged along 33 with the translation of "Yoga-Sutras of Patanjali". The Raja-Yoga is 34 in the hands of Longmans. The friends here are furious at the idea 35 of these books being published in England; and as they have been 36 made over to them by me legally, I am at a loss what to do. The 37 publication of the pamphlets was not so serious, but the books 38 have been so much re-arranged and changed that the American 39 edition will not recognise the English one. Now pray don't publish 40 these books, as they will place me in a very false position and 41 create endless quarrel and destroy my American work.

42 By last mail from India I learn that a Sannyasin has started 43 from India. I had a beautiful letter from Miss Muller, also one 44 from Miss MacLeod; the Leggett family has become very attached
45 to me.

46 I do not know anything about Mr. Chatterji. I hear from 47 other sources that his trouble is money, which the Theosophists

1 cannot supply him with. Moreover the help he will be able to give 2 me is very rudimentary and useless in the face of the fact of a 3 much stronger man coming from India. So far with him. We need 4 not be in a hurry.

5 I pray you again to think about this publishing business and 6 write some letters to Mrs. Ole Bull and through her ask the 7 opinion of the American friends of the Vedanta, remembering 8 "ours is the Gospel of oneness of all beings", and all national 9 feelings are but wicked superstitions. Moreover I am sure that the 10 person who is always ready to give way to other's opinions finds at 11 last that his opinion has triumphed. Yielding always conquers at 12 last. With love to all our friends,

26 Dear Mary {Hale},

Your letter reached just now. Of course, you were not jealous but all of a sudden were inspired with sympathy for poor India. Well, you need not be frightened. Wrote a letter to Mother Church weeks ago, but have not been able to get a line from her yet. I am afraid the whole party have taken orders and entered a Catholic convent--four old maids are enough to drive any mother to a convent. I had a beautiful visit with Prof. Max Muller. He is a saint--a Vedantist through and through. What think you? He has been a devoted admirer of my old Master for years. He has written an article on my Master in The Nineteenth Century, which will soon come out. We had long talk on Indian things. I wish I had half his love for India. We are going to start another little magazine here. What about The Brahnavadin? Are you pushing it? If four pushful old maids cannot push a journal, I am blowed. You will hear from me now and then. I am not a pin to be lost under a bushel. I am having classes here just now. I begin Sunday lectures from next week. The classes are very big and are in the house. We have rented it for the season. Last night I made a dish. It was such a delicious mixture of saffron, lavender, mace, nutmeg, cubebs, cinnamon, cloves, cardamom, cream, limejuice, onions, raisins, almonds, pepper, and rice, that I myself could not eat it. There was no asafoetida, though that would have made it smoother to swallow.

Yesterday I went to a marriage a la mode . Miss Muller, a rich lady, a friend who has adopted a Hindu boy and to help my work has taken rooms in this house, took us to see it. One of her nieces was married to somebody's nephew I suppose. What tiring nonsense! I am glad you do not marry. Good-bye, love to all. No more time as I am going to lunch with Miss MacLeod.

affectionately, Yours ever

Vivekananda

Dear Babies {the Hale sisters},

The work here progressed wonderfully. I had one monk here from India. I have sent him to the U.S.A. and sent for another from India. The season is closed; the classes, therefore, and the Sunday lectures are to be closed on the 16th next. And on the 19th I go for a month or so for quiet and rest in the Swiss Mountains to return next autumn to London and begin again. The work here has been very satisfactory. By rousing interest here I really do more for India than in India. Mother wrote to me that if you could rent your flat, she would be glad to take you with her to see Egypt. I am going with three English friends to the Swiss Hills. Later on, towards the end of winter, I expect to go to India with some 1 English friends who are going to live in my monastery there,

20 Dear__ {Kripananda},

21 Be you holy and, above all, sincere; and do not for a moment
22 give up your trust in the Lord, and you will see the light. Whatever 23 is truth will remain for ever; whatever is not, none can preserve.
24 We are helped in being born in a time when everything is quickly 25 searched out. Whatever others think or do, lower not your 26 standard of purity, morality, and love of God; above all, beware of 27 all secret organisations. No one who loves God need fear any 28 jugglery. Holiness is the highest and divinest power in earth and 29 in heaven. "Truth alone triumphs, not untruth. Through truth 30 alone is opened the way to God" (Mundaka, III.i.6). Do not care 31 for a moment who joins hands with you or not, be sure that you
32 touch the hand of the Lord. That is enough. . . .

33 I went to the glacier of Monte Rosa yesterday and gathered 34 a few hardy flowers growing almost in the midst of eternal snow. I 35 send you one in this letter hoping that you will attain to a similar 36 spiritual hardihood amidst all the snow and ice of this earthly 37 life. . . .

38 Your dream was very, very beautiful. In dream our souls 39 read a layer of our mind which we do not read in our waking 40 hours, and however unsubstantial imagination may be, it is behind 41 the imagination that all unknown psychic truths lie. Take heart.
42 We will try to do what we can for the good of humanity--the rest
43 depends upon the Lord. . . .

44 Well, do not be anxious, do not be in a hurry. Slow, 45 persistent and silent work does everything. The Lord is great. We 46 will succeed, my boy. We must. Blessed be His name! . . .

47 Here in America are no Ashramas. Would there was one!

1 How would I like it and what an amount of good it would do to this 2 country!

8 Dear Goodwin,

9 I am now taking rest. I read from different letters a lot 10 about Kripananda. I am sorry for him. There must be something 11 wrong in his head. Let him alone. None of you need bother about 12 him.

13 As for hurting me, that is not in the power of gods or devils.
14 So be at rest. It is unswerving love and perfect unselfishness that 15 conquer everything. We Vedantists in every difficulty ought to ask 16 the subjective question, "Why do I see that?" "Why can I not 17 conquer this with love?"

18 I am very glad at the reception the Swami has met with, also 19 at the good work he is doing. Great work requires great and 20 persistent effort for a long time. Neither need we trouble 21 ourselves if a few fail. It is in the nature of things that many 22 should fall, that troubles should come, that tremendous difficulties 23 should arise, that selfishness and all the other devils in the human 24 heart should struggle hard when they are about to be driven out 25 by the fire of spirituality. The road to the Good is the roughest and 26 steepest in the universe. It is a wonder that so many succeed, no 27 wonder that so many fall. Character has to be established through 28 a thousand stumbles.

29 I am much refreshed now. I look out of the window and see 30 the huge glaciers just before me and feel that I am in the 31 Himalayas. I am quite calm. My nerves have regained their 32 accustomed strength; and little vexations, like those you write of, 33 do not touch me at all. How shall I be disturbed by this child's 34 play? The whole world is a mere child's play--preaching, teaching, 35 and all included. "Know him to be the Sannyasin who neither 36 hates nor desires" (Gita, V.3). And what is there to be desired in 37 this little mud-puddle of a world, with its ever-recurring misery, 38 disease, and death? "He who has given up all desires, he alone is 39 happy."

40 This rest, eternal, peaceful rest, I am catching a glimpse of 41 now in this beautiful spot. "Having once known that the Atman 42 alone, and nothing else, exists, desiring what, or for whose desire, 43 shall you suffer misery about the body?" (Brihadaranyaka, 44 IV.iv.12.)

45 I feel as if I had my share of experience in what they call 46 "work". I am finished, I am longing now to get out. "Out of 47 thousands, but one strives to attain the Goal. And even of those 48 who struggle hard, but few attain" (Gita, VII.3); for the senses are 49 powerful, they drag men down.

1 "A good world", "a happy world", and "social progress", are 2 all terms equally intelligible with "hot ice" or "dark light". If it 3 were good, it would not be the world. The soul foolishly thinks of 4 manifesting the Infinite in finite matter, Intelligence through gross 5 particles; but at last it finds out its error and tries to escape. This 6 going-back is the beginning of religion, and its method, 7 destruction of self, that is, love. Not love for wife or child or 8 anybody else, but love for everything else except this little self.
9 Never be deluded by the tall talk, of which you will hear so much 10 in America, about "human progress" and such stuff. There is no
11 progress without corresponding digression. In one society there 12 is one set of evils; in another, another. So with periods of history.
13 In the Middle Ages, there were more robbers, now more cheats.
14 At one period there is less idea of married life; at another, more 15 prostitution. In one, more physical agony; in another, a 16 thousandfold more mental. So with knowledge. Did not gravitation 17 already exist in nature before it was observed and named? Then 18 what difference does it make to know that it exists? Are you 19 happier than the Red Indians?

20 The only knowledge that is of any value is to know that all 21 this is humbug. But few, very few, will ever know this. "Know the 22 Atman alone, and give up all other vain words." This is the only 23 knowledge we gain from all this knocking about the universe. This 24 is the only work, to call upon mankind to "Awake, arise, and stop 25 not till the goal is reached". It is renunciation, Tyaga, that is 26 meant by religion, and nothing else.

27 Ishwara is the sum total of individuals; yet He Himself also 28 is an individual in the same way as the human body is a unit, of 29 which each cell is an individual. Samashti or the Collective is God.
30 Vyashti or the component is the soul of Jiva. The existence of 31 Ishwara, therefore, depends on that of Jiva, as the body on the 32 cell, and vice versa. Jiva, and Ishwara are co-existent beings. As 33 long as the one exists, the other also must. Again, since in all the 34 higher spheres, except on our earth, the amount of good is vastly 35 in excess of the amount of bad, the sum total or Ishwara may be 36 said to be All-good, Almighty, and Omniscient. These are obvious 37 qualities, and need no argument to prove, from the very fact of 38 totality.

39 Brahman is beyond both of these, and is not a state. It is the 40 only unit not composed of many units. It is the principle which 41 runs through all, from a cell to God, and without which nothing 42 can exist. Whatever is real is that principle or Brahman. When I 43 think "I am Brahman", then I alone exist. It is so also when you so 44 think, and so on. Each one is the whole of that principle. . . .

45 A few days ago, I felt a sudden irresistible desire to write to 46 Kripananda. Perhaps he was unhappy and thinking of me. So I 47 wrote him a warm letter. Today from the American news, I see 48 why it was so. I sent him flowers gathered near the glaciers. Ask 49 Miss Waldo to send him some money and plenty of love. Love 50 never dies. The love of the father never dies, whatever the 51 children may do or be. He is my child. He has the same or more 52 share in my love and help, now that he is in misery.

1
2 blessings, Yours with

13 Blessed and Beloved {E. T. Sturdy},

14 A large packet of letters came along with yours. Herewith I 15 send you the letter written to me by Max Muller. It is very kind 16 and good of him.

17 Miss Muller thinks that she will go away very soon to 18 England. In that case I will not be able to go to Berne for that 19 Purity Congress I have promised. Only if the Seviars consent to 20 take me along, I will go to Kiel and write to you before. The 21 Seviars are good and kind, but I have no right to take advantage 22 of their generosity. Nor can I take the same of Miss Muller, as the 23 expenses there are frightful. As such, I think it best to give up the 24 Berne Congress, as it will come in the middle of September, a long 25 way off.

26 I am thinking, therefore, of going towards Germany, ending
27 in Kiel, and thence back to England.

28 Bala Gangadhara Tilak (Mr. Tilak) is the name and Orion
29 that of the book.

30 Yours,

31 Vivekananda

32 PS. There is also one by Jacobi--perhaps translated on the 33 same lines and with the same conclusions.

34 PS. I hope you will ask Miss Muller's opinion about the 35 lodgings and the Hall, as I am afraid she will be very displeased if 36 she and others are not consulted.

37 V.

38 Miss Muller telegraphed to Prof. Deussen last night; the 39 reply came this morning, 9th August, welcoming me; I am to be in 40 Kiel at Deussen's on the 10th September. So where will you meet 41 me? At Kiel? Miss Muller goes to England from Switzerland. I am 42 going with the Seviars to Kiel. I will be there on the 10th 43 September.

45 PS. I have not fixed yet anything about the lecture. I have no

10 Blessed and Beloved {E. T. Sturdy},

11 Today I received a letter from America, which I send to you.
12 I have written them that my idea of course is concentration, at 13 least for the present beginning. I have also suggested them that 14 instead of having too many papers, they may start by putting in a 15 few sheets in The Brahmavadin --written in America--and raise the 16 subscription a little which will cover the American expenses. Do 17 not know what they will do.

18 We will start from here towards Germany next week. Miss 19 Muller goes to England as soon as we have crossed over to 20 Germany.

21 Capt. and Mrs. Sevier and myself will expect you at Kiel.

22 I haven't yet written anything nor read anything. I am 23 indeed taking a good rest. Do not be anxious, you will have the 24 article ready. I had a letter from the Math stating that the other 25 Swami is ready to start. He will, I am sure, be just the man you 26 want. He is one of the best Sanskrit scholars we have . . . and as I 27 hear, he has improved his English much. I had a number of 28 newspaper cuttings from America about Saradananda--I hear from 29 them that he has done very well there. America is a good training 30 ground to bring out all that is in a man. There is such a sympathy 31 in the air. I had letters from Goodwin and Saradananda. S. sends 32 his love to you and Mrs. Sturdy and the baby.

43 I have at last seen Prof. Deussen. . . . The whole of 44 yesterday was spent very nicely with the Professor, sight-seeing 45 and discussing about the Vedanta.

He is what I should call "a warring Advaitist". No compromise with anything else. "Ishwara" is his bug-bear. He would have none of it if he could. He is very much delighted with the idea of your magazine and wants to confer with you on these subjects in London, where he is shortly going. . . .

Dear Sister {Mary Hale},

Today I reached London, after my two months of climbing and walking and glacier seeing in Switzerland. One good it has done me--a few pounds of unnecessary adipose tissue have returned back to the gaseous state. Well, there is no safety even in that, for the solid body of this birth has taken a fancy to outstrip the mind towards infinite expansion. If it goes on this way, I would have soon to lose all personal identity even in the flesh--at least to all the rest of the world.

It is impossible to express my joy in words at the good news contained in Harriet's letter. I have written to her today. I am sorry I cannot come over to see her married, but I will be present in "fine body" with all good wishes and blessings. Well, I am expecting such news from you and other sisters to make my joy complete. Now, my dear Mary, I will tell you a great lesson I have learnt in this life. It is this: "The higher is your ideal, the more miserable you are"; for such a thing as an ideal cannot be attained in the world , or in this life even. He who wants perfection in the world is a madman, for it cannot be.

How can you find the Infinite in the finite? Therefore I tell you, Harriet will have a most blessed and happy life, because she is not so imaginative and sentimental as to make a fool of herself. She has enough of sentiment as to make life sweet, and enough of common sense and gentleness as to soften the hard points in life which must come to everyone. So has Harriet McKindley in a still higher degree. She is just the girl to make the best of wives, only this world is so full of idiots that very few can penetrate beyond the flesh! As for you and Isabelle, I will tell you the truth, and my "language is plain".

You, Mary, are like a mettlesome Arab--grand, splendid. You will make a splendid queen--physically, mentally. You will shine alongside of a dashing, bold, adventurous, heroic husband; but, my dear sister, you will make one of the worst of wives. You will take the life out of our easy-going, practical, plodding husbands of the everyday world. Mind, my sister, although it is true that there is more romance in actual life than in any novel, yet it is few and far between. Therefore my advice to you is that until you bring 1 down your ideals to a more practical level, you ought not to marry.

2 If you do, the result will be misery for both of you. In a few 3 months you will lose all regard for a commonplace, good, nice, 4 young man, and then life will become insipid. As to sister Isabelle, 5 she has the same temperament as you; only this kindergarten has 6 taught her a good lesson of patience and forbearance. Perhaps 7 she will make a good wife.

8 There are two sorts of persons in the world. The one-- 9 strong-nerved, quiet, yielding to nature, not given to much 10 imagination, yet good, kind, sweet, etc. For such is this world; 11 they alone are born to be happy. There are others again with high-12 strung nerves, tremendously imaginative, with intense feeling, 13 always going high one moment and coming down the next. For 14 them there is no happiness. The first class will have almost an 15 even tenor of happiness; the last will have to run between ecstasy 16 and misery. But of these alone what we call geniuses are made.
17 There is some truth in the recent theory that "genius is a sort 18 madness".

19 Now, persons of this class if they want to be great, they 20 must fight to finish--clear out the deck for battle. No 21 encumbrance--no marriage, no children, no undue attachment to 22 anything except the one idea , and live and die for that. I am a 23 person of this sort. I have taken up the one idea of "Vedanta" and I 24 have "cleared the deck for action". You and Isabelle are made of 25 this metal; but let me tell you, though it is hard, you are spoiling 26 your lives in vain . Either take up one idea , clear the deck, and to 27 it dedicate the life; or be contented and practical; lower the ideal, 28 marry, and have a happy life . Either "Bhoga" or "Yoga"; none can 29 have both in one . Now or never, select quick. "He who is very 30 particular gets nothing", says the proverb. Now sincerely and 31 really and for ever determine to "clear the deck for fight", take up 32 anything, philosophy or science or religion or literature, and let 33 that be your God for the rest of your life. Achieve happiness or 34 achieve greatness. I have no sympathy with you and Isabelle; you 35 are neither for this nor for that. I wish to see you happy, as 36 Harriet has well chosen, or great . Eating, drinking, dressing, and 37 society nonsense are not things to throw a life upon--especially 38 you, Mary. You are rusting away a splendid brain and abilities, for 39 which there is not the least excuse. You must have ambition to be 40 great. I know you will take these rather harsh remarks from me in 41 the right spirit knowing I like you really as much or more than 42 what I call you, my sisters. I had long had a mind to tell you this, 43 and as experience is gathering I feel like telling you. The joyful 44 news from Harriet urged me to tell you this. I will be overjoyed to 45 hear that you are married also and happy, so far as happiness can 46 be had here, or would like to hear of you as doing great deeds.

47 I had a pleasant visit with Prof. Deussen in Germany. I am 48 sure you have heard of him as the greatest living German 49 philosopher. He and I travelled together to England and today 50 came together to see my friend here with whom I am to stop for 51 the rest of my stay in England. He (Deussen) is very fond of 52 talking Sanskrit and is the only Sanskrit scholar in the West who

1 can talk in it. As he wants to get a practice, he never talks to me
2 in any other language but Sanskrit.

3 I have come over here amongst my friends, shall work for a 4 few weeks, and then go back to India in the winter.

5 Ever your 6 loving brother,

Vivekananda

18 Dear Joe {MacLeod},

19 Many, many thanks, dear Joe Joe, for your kind invitation; 20 but the Dear God has disposed it this way, viz I am to start for 21 India on the 16th with Captain and Mrs. Sevier and Mr. Goodwin.
22 The Seviere and myself take steamer at Naples. And as there will 23 be four days at Rome, I will look in to say good-bye to Alberta.

24 Things are in a "hum" here just now; the big hall for the 25 class, 39 Victoria, is full and yet more are coming.

26 Well, the good old country now calls me; I must go. So good-27 bye to all projects of visiting Russia this April.

28 I just set things a-going a little in India and am off again for 29 the ever beautiful U.S. and England etc.

30 So very kind of you to send Mabel's letter--good news
31 indeed. Only I am a little sorry for poor Fox. However, Mabel 32 escaped him; that is better.

33 You did not write anything about how things are going on in 34 New York. I hope it is all well there. Poor Cola! is he able now to 35 make a living?

36 The coming of Goodwin was very opportune, as it captured 37 the lectures here which are being published in a periodical form.
38 Already there have been subscribers enough to cover the 39 expenses.

40 Three lectures next week, and my London work is finished 41 for this season. Of course, everybody here thinks it foolish to give 42 it up just now the "boom" is on, but the Dear Lord says, "Start for 43 Old India". I obey.

44 To Frankincense, to Mother, to Holister and everyone else 45 my eternal love and blessings, and with the same for you,

Dear Rakhal {Brahmananda},

As you see, by this time I am on my way. Before leaving London, I got your letter and the pamphlet. Take no heed of Mazoomdar's madness. He surely has gone crazy with jealousy. Such foul language as he has used would only make people laugh at him in a civilised country. He has defeated his purpose by the use of such vulgar words.

All the same, we ought not to allow Hara Mohan or any one else to go and fight Brahmos and others in our name. The public must know that we have no quarrel with any sect, and if anybody provokes a quarrel, he is doing it on his own responsibility. Quarrelling and abusing each other are our national traits. Lazy, useless, vulgar, jealous, cowardly, and quarrelsome, that is what we are, Bengalis. Anyone who wants to be my friend must give up these. Neither do you allow Hara Mohan to print any book, because such printing as he does is only cheating the public.

If there are oranges in Calcutta, send a hundred to Madras care of Alasinga, so that I may have them when I reach Madras.

Mazoomdar writes that the Sayings of Shri Ramakrishna published in The Brahmavadin are not genuine and are lies! In that case ask Suresh Dutt and Ram Babu to give him the lie in The Indian Mirror. As I did not do anything about the collection of the Uktis (Sayings), I cannot say anything.

Yours
affectionately,

Vivekananda

PS. Don't mind these fools; "No fool like an old fool" is the proverb. Let them bark a little. Their occupation is gone. Poor souls! Let them have a little satisfaction in barking.

1 Dear Mary {Hale},

2 I received your letter forwarded from London in Rome. It
3 was very very kind of you to write such a beautiful letter, and I 4 enjoyed every bit of it. I do not know anything about the evolution
5 of the orchestra in Europe. We are nearing Port Said after four 6 days of frightfully bad sailing from Naples. The ship is rolling as 7 hard as she can, and you must pardon my scrawls under such 8 circumstances.

9 From Suez begins Asia. Once more Asia. What am I? Asiatic, 10 European, or American? I feel a curious medley of personalities in 11 me. You didn't write anything about Dharmapala, his goings and 12 doings. I am much more interested in him than in Gandhi.

13 I land in a few days at Colombo and mean to "do" Ceylon a 14 bit. There was a time when Ceylon had more than 20 million 15 inhabitants and a huge capital of which the ruins cover nearly a 16 hundred square miles!

17 The Ceylonese are not Dravidians but pure Aryans. It was 18 colonised from Bengal about 800 B.C., and they have kept a very 19 clear history of their country from that time. It was the greatest 20 trade centre of the ancient world, and Anuradhapuram was the 21 London of the ancients.

22 I enjoyed Rome more than anything in the West, and after 23 seeing Pompeii I have lost all regard for the so-called "Modern 24 Civilisation". With the exception of steam and electricity they had 25 everything else and infinitely more art conceptions and executions 26 than the Moderns.

27 Please tell Miss Locke that I was mistaken when I told her 28 that sculpturing of the human figure was not developed in India as 29 among the Greeks. I am reading in Fergusson and other 30 authorities that in Orissa or Jagannath, which I did not visit, there 31 are among the ruins human figures which for beauty and 32 anatomical skill would compare with any production of the 33 Greeks. There is a colossal figure of Death, a huge female 34 skeleton covered with a shrivelled skin--the awful fidelity to 35 anatomical details are frightening and disgusting. Says my author, 36 one of the female figures in the niche is exactly like the Venus de 37 Medici and so on. But you must remember that everything almost 38 has been destroyed by the iconoclastic Mohammedan, yet the 39 remnants are more than all European debris put together! I have 40 travelled eight years and not seen many of the masterpieces.

41 Tell sister Locke also that there is a ruined temple in a 42 forest in India which and the Parthenon of Greece Fergusson 43 considers as the climax of architectural art--each of its type--the 44 one of conception, the other of conception and detail. The later 45 Mogul buildings etc., the Indo-Saracenic architecture, does not 46 compare a bit with the best types of the ancients. . . .

47 With all my 48 love,

49 Vivekananda

10 Dear Rakhal {Brahmananda},

11 I am to start by S.S. Mombasa next Sunday. I had to give up

13 I am very much pulled down by hard work and heat.

14 The Theosophists and others wanted to intimidate me.
15 Therefore I had to give them a bit of my mind. You know they 16 persecuted me all the time in America, because I did not join

31 Dear Shashi {Ramakrishnananda},

32 All of you have doubtless reached Madras by this time. I 33 should think Biligiri is certainly taking great care of you, and that 34 Sadananda serves you as your attendant. In Madras the worship 35 should be done in a completely Sattvic manner, without a trace of 36 Rajas in it. I hope Alasinga has by now returned to Madras. Don't 37 enter into wrangles with anybody--always maintain a calm 38 attitude. For the present let the worship of Shri Ramakrishna be 39 established and continued in the house of Biligiri. But see that the 40 worship does not become very elaborate and long. Time thus 41 saved should be utilised in holding classes and doing some 42 preaching. It is good to initiate as many as you can. Supervise the 43 work of the two papers, and help in whatever way you can. Biligiri 44 has two widowed daughters. Kindly educate them and make 45 special efforts that through them more such widowed women get

1 a thorough grounding in their own religion and learn a little 2 English and Sanskrit. But all this work should be done from a 3 distance. One has to be exceedingly careful before young women.
4 Once you fall, there is no way out, and the sin is unpardonable.

5 I am very sorry to hear that Gupta was bitten by a dog; but I 6 hear that the dog was not a mad one, so there is no cause for 7 alarm. In any case, see that he takes the medicine sent by 8 Gangadhar.

9 Early morning, finish daily your worship and other duties
10 briefly, and calling together Biligiri with his family, read before 11 them the Gita and other sacred books. There is not the least 12 necessity for teaching the divine Love of Radha and Krishna.
13 Teach them pure devotion to Sita-Ram and Hara-Parvati. See that 14 no mistake is made in this respect. Remember that the episodes of 15 the divine relationship between Radha and Krishna are quite 16 unsuitable for young minds. Specially Biligiri and other followers 17 of Ramanujacharya are worshippers of Rama; so see to it that 18 their innate attitude of pure devotion is never disturbed.

19 In the evenings give some spiritual teaching like that to the 20 general public. Thus gradually "even the mountain is crossed".

21 See that an atmosphere of perfect purity is always 22 maintained, and that there enters not the slightest trace of 23 Vamachara. For the rest, the Lord Himself will guide you, there is 24 no fear. Give to Biligiri my respectful salutations and loving 25 greetings, and convey my salutations to similar devotees.

26 My illness is now much less--it may even be cured 27 completely, if the Lord wills. My love, blessings, and greetings to 28 you.

29 Yours
30 affectionately,

44 My Dear Miss Noble {Sister Nivedita},

45 Your very very kind, loving, and encouraging letter gave me 46 more strength than you think of.

There are moments when one feels entirely despondent, no doubt--especially when one has worked towards an ideal during a whole life's time and just when there is a bit of hope of seeing it partially accomplished, there comes a tremendous thwarting blow. I do not care for the disease, but what depresses me is that my ideals have not had yet the least opportunity of being worked out. And you know, the difficulty is money.

The Hindus are making processions and all that, but they cannot give money. The only help I got in the world was in England, from Miss Muller, and Mr. Sevier. I thought there that a thousand pounds was sufficient to start at least the principal centre in Calcutta, but my calculation was from the experience of Calcutta ten or twelve years ago. Since then the prices have gone up three or four times.

The work has been started anyhow. A rickety old little house has been rented for six or seven shillings, where about twenty-four young men are being trained. I had to go to Darjeeling for a month to recover my health, and I am glad to tell you I am very much better, and would you believe it, without taking any medicine, only by the exercise of mental healing! I am going again to another hill station tomorrow, as it is very hot in the plains. Your society is still living, I am sure. I will send you a report, at least every month, of the work done here. The London work is not doing well at all, I hear, and that was the main reason why I would not come to England just now--although some of our Rajas going for the Jubilee tried their best to get me with them--as I would have to work hard again to revive the interest in Vedanta. And that would mean a good deal more trouble physically.

I may come over for a month or so very soon however. Only if I could see my work started here, how gladly and freely would I travel about!

So far about work. Now about you personally. Such love and faith and devotion and appreciation like yours, dear Miss Noble, repays a hundred times over any amount of labour one undergoes in this life. May all blessings be yours. My whole life is at your service, as we may say in our mother tongue.

It never was and never will be anything but very very welcome, any letters from you and other friends in England. Mr. and Mrs. Hammond wrote two very kind and nice letters and Mr. Hammond a beautiful poem in The Brahmavadin, although I did not deserve it a bit. I will write to you again from the Himalayas, where thought will be clear in sight of the snows and the nerves more settled than in this burning plains. Miss Muller is already in Almora. Mr. and Mrs. Sevier go to Simla. They have been in Darjeeling so long. So things come and go, dear friend. Only the Lord is unchangeable and He is Love. May He make our heart His eternal habitation is the constant prayer of,

Vivekananda

My Dear Rakhal {Brahmananda},

From your letter I got all the important news. I got a letter from Sudhir also and also one from Master Mahashay. I have also got two letters from Nityananda (Yogen Chatterjee) from the famine areas.

Even now money is floating on the waters, as it were, . . . but it will surely come. When it comes, buildings, land, and a permanent fund--everything will come all right. But one can never rest assured until the chickens are hatched; and I am not now going down to the hot plains within two or three months. After that I shall make a tour and shall certainly secure some money. This being so, if you think that the [land with a] frontage of eight Kathas cannot be acquired . . ., there is no harm in paying the earnest money to the middle-man vendor as though you were losing it for nothing. In all these matters use your own discretion; I cannot give any further advice. There is particularly a chance of making mistake through hurry. . . . Tell Master Mahashay that I quite approve of what he had said.

Write to Gangadhar that if he finds it difficult to get alms etc. there, he should feed himself by spending from his own pocket, and that he should publish a weekly letter in Upen's paper (The Basumati). In that case others also may help.

I understand from a letter of Shashi . . . he wants Nirbhayananda. If you think this course to be the best, then send Nirbhayananda and bring back Gupta. . . . Send Sashi a copy of the Bengali Rules and Regulations of the Math or an English version of it, and write to him to see that the work there is done in accordance with the Rules and Regulations.

I am glad to learn that the Association in Calcutta is going on nicely. It does not matter if one or two keep out. Gradually everyone will come. Be friendly and sympathetic with everybody. Sweet words are heard afar; it is particularly necessary to try and make new people come. We want more and more new members.

Yogen is doing well. On account of the great heat in Almora, I am now in an excellent garden twenty miles from there. This place is comparatively cool, but still warm. The heat does not seem to be particularly less than that of Calcutta. . . .

The feverishness is all gone. I am trying to go to a still cooler place. Heat or the fatigue of walking, I find, at once produces trouble of the liver. The air here is so dry that there is a burning sensation in the nose all the time, and the tongue becomes, as it were, a chip of wood. You have stopped criticising; otherwise I would have gone to a colder place by this time just for the fun of it. "He constantly neglects diet restrictions"--what rot do you talk? Do you really listen to the words of these fools? It is

1 just like your not allowing me to take Kalai-dal (black pulses), 2 because it contains starch! And what is more--there will be no
3 starch if rice and Roti (bread) are eaten after frying them! What 4 wonderful knowledge, my dear. The fact of the matter is my old 5 nature is coming back--this I am seeing clearly. In this part of the 6 country now, an illness takes on the colour and fashion of this 7 locality; and in that part of the country, it takes on the colour and 8 fashion of the illnesses in that locality. I am thinking of making my 9 meals at night very light; I shall eat to the full in the morning and 10 at noon; at night milk, fruits, etc. That is why I am staying in this 11 orchard, "in expectation of fruits"! Don't you see?

12 Now don't be alarmed. Does a companion of Shiva die so 13 quickly? Just now the evening lamp has been lighted, and singing 14 has to be done throughout the whole night. Nowadays my temper
15 also is not very irritable, and feverishness is all due to the liver--I 16 see this clearly. Well, I shall make that also come under control-- 17 what fear? . . . Bravely brace yourself up and do work; let us 18 create a mighty commotion.

19 Tender my love to all at the Math. At the next meeting of the 20 Association give my greetings to everybody and tell them that 21 though I am not physically present there, yet my spirit is where 22 the name of our Lord is sung--"{Sanskrit}", that is, "O Rama, so 23 long as the story of your life goes the round on the earth"-- 24 because, you see, the Atman is omnipresent.

26 affectionately,

34 Dear Sudhir,

35 Your letter gave me much pleasure. One thing, perhaps, I 36 forget to tell you--to keep a copy of the letter you sent me. Also all 37 important communications to the Math from different persons and 38 to different persons should be copied and preserved.

39 I am very glad to learn that things are going on well, that 40 the work there is steadily progressing as well as that of Calcutta.

41 I am all right now except for the fatigue of the travel which I 42 am sure will go off in a few days.

43 My love and blessings to you all.

Dear Marie {Halboister},

I begin here my promised big chatty letter with the best intention as to its growth, and if it fails, it will be owing to your own Karma. I am sure you are enjoying splendid health. I have been very, very bad indeed; now recovering a bit--hope to recover very soon.

What about the work in London? I am afraid it is going to pieces. Do you now and then visit London? Hasn't Sturdy got a new baby?

The plains of India are blazing now. I cannot bear it. So I am here in this hill station--a bit cooler than the plains.

I am living in a beautiful garden belonging to a merchant of Almora--a garden abutting several miles of mountains and forests. Night before last a leopard came here and took away a goat from the flock kept in this garden. It was a frightful din the servants made and the barking of the big Tibet watchdogs. These dogs are kept chained at a distance all night since I am here, so that they may not disturb my sleep with their deep barks. The leopard thus found his opportunity and got a decent meal, perhaps, after weeks. May it do much good to him!

Do you remember Miss Muller? She has come here for a few days and was rather frightened when she heard of the leopard incident. The demand for tanned skins in London seems very great, and that is playing havoc with our leopards and tigers more than anything else.

As I am writing to you, before me, reflecting the afternoon's flow, stand long, long lines of huge snow peaks. They are about twenty miles as the crow flies from here, and forty through the circuitous mountain roads.

I hope your translations have been well received in the Countess's paper. I had a great mind and very good opportunity of coming over to England this Jubilee season with some of our Princes, but my physicians would not allow me to venture into work so soon. For going to Europe means work, isn't it? No work, no bread.

Here the yellow cloth is sufficient, and I would have food enough. Anyhow I am taking a much desired rest, hope it will do me good.

How are you going on with your work? With joy or sorrow? Don't you like to have a good rest, say for some years, and no work? Sleep, eat, and exercise; exercise, eat, and sleep--that is what I am going to do some months yet. Mr. Goodwin is with me. You ought to have seen him in his Indian clothes. I am very soon

1 going to shave his head and make a full-blown monk of him.

2 Are you still practising some of the Yogas? Do you find any 3 benefit from them? I learn that Mr. Martin is dead. How is Mrs.
4 Martin--do you see her now and then?

5 Do you know Miss Noble? Do you ever see her? Here my 6 letter comes to an end, as a huge dust storm is blowing over me,
7 and it is impossible to write. It is all your Karma, dear Marie, for I 8 intended to write so many wonderful things and tell you such fine 9 stories; but I will have to keep them for the future, and you will 10 have to wait.

11 Ever yours in 12 the Lord,

Vivekananda

20 My Dear Miss Noble {Nivedita},

21 . . . Let me tell you plainly. Every word you write I value, and 22 every letter is welcome a hundred times.

23 Write whenever you have a mind and opportunity, and 24 whatever you like, knowing that nothing will be misinterpreted, 25 nothing unappreciated. I have not had any news of the work for so 26 long. Can you tell me anything? I do not expect any help from 27 India, in spite of all the jubilating over me. They are so poor!

28 But I have started work in the fashion in which I myself was 29 trained--that is to say, under the trees, and keeping body and soul 30 together anyhow. The plan has also changed a little. I have sent 31 some of my boys to work in the famine districts. It has acted like a 32 miracle. I find, as I always thought, that it is through the heart, 33 and that alone, that the world can be reached. The present plan 34 is, therefore, to train up numbers of young men (from the highest 35 classes, not the lowest. For the latter I shall have to wait a little), 36 and the first attack will be made by sending a number of them 37 over a district. When these sappers and miners of religion have 38 cleared the way, there will then be time enough to put in theory 39 and philosophy.

40 A number of boys are already in training, but the recent 41 earthquake has destroyed the poor shelter we had to work in, 42 which was only rented, anyway. Never mind. The work must be 43 done without shelter and under difficulties. . . . As yet it is shaven 44 heads, rags, and casual meals. This must change, however, and 45 will, for are we not working for it, head and heart? . . .

46 It is true in one way that the people here have so little to 47 give up--yet renunciation is in our blood. One of my boys in 1 training has been an executive engineer, in charge of a district.

2 That means a very big position here. He gave it up like straw! . . .

3 With all love,

4 Yours in the 5 Truth,

6 Vivekananda

11 My Dear Miss Noble {Nivedita},

12 I am being played upon curiously by both good and evil
13 influences from London these times here. . . . On the other hand, 14 your letters are full of life and sunshine, and bring strength and 15 hope to my spirits, and they sadly want these now. God knows.

16 Although I am still in the Himalayas, and shall be here for at 17 least a month more, I started the work in Calcutta before I came, 18 and they write progress every week.

19 Just now I am very busy with the famine, and except for 20 training a number of young men for future work, have not been 21 able to put more energy into the teaching work. The "feeding 22 work" is absorbing all my energy and means. Although we can 23 work only on a very small scale as yet, the effect is marvellous.
24 For the first time since the days of Buddha, Brahmin boys are 25 found nursing by the bed-side of cholera-stricken pariahs.

26 In India, lectures and teaching cannot do any good. What we 27 want is Dynamic Religion. And that, "God willing", as the 28 Mohammedans say, I am determined to show. . . . I entirely agree 29 with the prospectus of your Society, and you may take for granted 30 my agreement with everything you will do in the future. I have 31 entire faith in your ability and sympathy. I already owe you an 32 immense debt, and you are laying me every day under infinite 33 obligations. My only consolation is that it is for the good of others.
34 Else I do not deserve in the least the wonderful kindness shown to 35 me by the Wimbledon friends. You good, steady, genuine English 36 people, may the Lord always bless you. I appreciate you every day 37 more and more from a distance. Kindly convey my love everlasting 38 to__ and all the rest of our friends there.

2 1897 10th July,

3 My Dear Joe Joe {MacLeod},

4 I am glad to learn that you have at last found out that I have 5 time to read your letters.

6 I have taken to the Himalayas, tired of lecturing and 7 orating. I am so sorry the doctors would not allow my going over 8 with the Raja of Khetri to England, and that has made Sturdy 9 mad.

10 The Seviars are at Simla and Miss Muller here in Almora.

11 The plague has subsided, but the famine is still here, and as 12 it looks (on account of no rain as yet), it may wear yet a terrible 13 aspect.

14 I am very busy from here directing work by my boys in some 15 of the famine districts.

16 Do come by all means; only you must remember this. The 17 Europeans and the Hindus (called "Natives" by the Europeans) 18 live as oil and water. Mixing with Natives is damning to the 19 Europeans.

20 There are no good hotels to speak of even at the capitals.
21 You will have to travel with a number of servants about you (cost 22 cheaper than hotels). You will have to bear with people who wear 23 only a loin cloth; you will see me with only a loin cloth about me.
24 Dirt and filth everywhere, and brown people. But you will have 25 plenty of men to talk to you philosophy. If you mix with the English 26 much here, you will have more comforts but see nothing of the 27 Hindus as they are. Possibly I will not be able to eat with you, but 28 I promise that I will travel to good many places with you and do 29 everything in my power to make your journey pleasant. These are 30 what you expect; if anything good comes, so much the better.
31 Perhaps Mary Hale may come over with you. There is a young 32 lady, Miss Campbell, Orchard Lake, Orchard Island, Michigan, 33 who is a great worshipper of Krishna and lives alone in that 34 Island, fasting and praying. She will give anything to be able to 35 see India once, but she is awfully poor. If you bring her with you, I 36 will anyhow manage to pay her expenses. If Mrs. Bull brings old 37 Landsberg with her, that will be saving that fool's life as it were.

38 Most probably I may accompany you back to America. Kiss
39 Holister for me and the baby. My love to Alberta, to the Leggetts, 40 and to Mabel. What is Fox doing? Give him my love when you see 41 him. To Mrs. Bull and S. Saradananda my love. I am as strong as 42 ever, but it all depends upon leading a quiet life ever afterwards.
43 No hurly-burly any more.

44 I had a great mind to go to Tibet this year; but they would 45 not allow me, as the road is dreadfully fatiguing. However, I 46 content myself with galloping hard over precipices on mountain 47 ponies. (This is more exciting than your bicycle even, although I 48 had an experience of that at Wimbledon.) Miles and miles of uphill 49 and miles and miles of downhill, the road a few feet broad

1 hanging over sheer precipices several thousand feet deep below.

2 Ever yours in
3 the Lord,

4 Vivekananda

6 PS. The best time to come is to arrive in India by October or

22 My Dear Rakhal {Brahmananda},

23 Going to Almora from here I made special efforts for Yogen.
24 But he left for the plains as soon as he had recovered a little.
25 From Subhala valley he will write to me of his safe arrival there.
26 As it is impossible to procure a Dandi (a carrying chair) or any 27 other conveyance, Latu could not go. Achyut and myself have 28 again come back to this place. Today my health is a little bad 29 owing to this riding on horseback at breakneck speed in the sun. I 30 took Shashi Babu's medicine for two weeks--I find no special 31 benefit. . . . The pain in the liver is gone, and owing to plenty of 32 exercise my hands and legs have become muscular, but the 33 abdomen is distending very much. I feel suffocated while getting 34 up or sitting down. Perhaps this is due to the taking of milk. Ask 35 Shashi if I can give up milk. Previously I suffered from two attacks 36 of sunstroke. From that time, my eyes become red if I expose 37 myself to the sun, and the health continues to be bad for two or 38 three days at a stretch.

39 I was very pleased to get all the news from the Math, and I 40 also heard that the famine relief work is going on well. Please let 41 me know if any money has been received from the office of the 42 Brahmavadin for famine relief. Some money will be sent soon 43 from here also. There is famine in many other places as well, so it 44 is not necessary to stay so long in one place. Tell them to move to 45 other localities and write to each man to go to a separate place.
46 All such work is real work. If the field is made ready in this way,

1 the seeds of spiritual knowledge can be sown. Remember this 2 always--that the only answer to those conservative fanatics who 3 abuse us is such work. I have no objection to getting the thing
4 printed as Shashi and Sarada have suggested.

5 You yourselves come to a decision as to what the name of 6 the Math should be. . . . The money will come within seven weeks; 7 but I have no further news about the land. In this matter it seems 8 to me that it will be good if we can get the garden of Kristo Gopal 9 in Cossipore.²⁶⁴ What do you say? In future great works will be 10 accomplished. If you agree with me, don't let this matter out to 11 anybody either within the Math or outside, but quietly make 12 inquiries. The work is spoiled if plans are not kept secret. If it can 13 be bought with fifteen or sixteen thousand, then buy at once--of 14 course, only if you think it good. If something more is demanded, 15 make some advance payment and wait for those seven weeks. My 16 view is that for the present it is better to buy it. Everything else 17 will come by and by. All our associations centre round that 18 garden. In reality that is our first Math. Let the thing be done very 19 privately.

20 A work can be judged by its results only, just as one can 21 infer the nature of previous mental tendencies by their resultant 22 in present behaviour. . . .

23 Undoubtedly the price of the land of the garden at 24 Cossipore has increased; but our purse has, on the other hand, 25 dwindled. Do something or other, but do it quickly.

26 All work is spoilt by dilatoriness. This garden also has to be 27 acquired--if not today, tomorrow--however big the Math on the 28 banks of the Ganga may be. It will be still better if you can broach 29 the subject through a proxy. If they hear that we are willing to 30 buy, they will bid high. Do the work very confidentially. Be 31 fearless; Shri Ramakrishna is our helper, what fear? Give my love 32 to all.

34 affectionately,

35 Vivekananda

36 PS. (on the cover): . . . Make special efforts for Cossipore. . .
37 . Give up the land at Belur. Should the poor²⁶⁵ die of starvation 38 while you people at the top are indulging in controversy regarding 39 to whom the credit should go? If "Mahabodhi" takes all the credit, 40 let it. Let the poor be benefited. That the work is going on well is 41 good news. Work on with greater energy. I am beginning to send

My Dear Marie {Halboister},

I have time, will, and opportunity now to clear my promise. So my letter begins. I have been very weak for some time, and with that and other things my visit to England this Jubilee season had to be postponed.

I was very sorry at first not to be able to meet my nice and very dear friends once more, but Karma cannot be avoided, and I had to rest contented with my Himalayas. It is a sorry exchange, after all; for the beauty of the living spirit shining through the human face is far more pleasurable than any amount of material beauty.

The work in London had to go slow--for various reasons, and last though not the least was l'argent, mon amie ! When I am there l'argent comes in somehow, to keep the mare going. Now everybody shrugs his shoulder. I must come again and try my best to revive the work.

I am having a good deal of riding and exercise, but I had to drink a lot of skimmed milk per prescription of the doctors, with the result that I am more to the front than back! I am always a forward man though--but do not want to be too prominent just now, and I have given up drinking milk.

I am glad to learn that you are eating your meals with good appetite.

Do you know Miss Margaret Noble of Wimbledon? She is working hard for me. Do correspond with her if you can, and you help me a good deal there. Her address is, Brantwood, Worple Road, Wimbledon.

So you saw my little friend Miss Orchard and you liked her too--good. I have great hopes for her. And how I should like to be retired from life's activities entirely when I am very old, and hear the world ringing with the names of my dear, dear young friends like yourself and Miss Orchard etc.!

By and by, I am glad to find that I am aging fast, my hair is turning grey. "Silver threads among the gold"--I mean black--are coming in fast.

It is bad for a preacher to be young, don't you think so? I do, as I did all my life. People have more confidence in an old man, and it looks more venerable. Yet the old rogues are the worst rogues in the world, isn't it?

The world has its code of judgment which, alas, is very different from that of truth's.

1 So your "Universal Religion" has been rejected by the Revue
2 de deux Mondes . Never mind, try again some other paper. Once
3 the ice is broken, you get in at a quick rate, I am sure. And I am so 4 glad that you love the work: it will make its way, I have no doubt 5 of it. Our ideas have a future, ma chere Marie--and it will be 6 realised soon.

7 I think this letter will meet you in Paris--your beautiful
8 Paris--and I hope you will write me lots about French journalism 9 and the coming "World's Fair" there.

10 I am so glad that you have been helped by Vedanta and 11 Yoga. I am unfortunately sometimes like the circus clown who 12 makes others laugh, himself miserable!

13 You are naturally of a buoyant temperament. Nothing seems 14 to touch you. And you are moreover a very prudent girl, inasmuch 15 as you have scrupulously kept yourself away from "love" and all its 16 nonsense. So you see you have made your good Karma and 17 planted the seed of your lifelong well-being. Our difficulty in life is 18 that we are guided by the present and not by the future. What 19 gives us a little pleasure now drags us on to follow it, with the 20 result that we always buy a mass of pain in the future for a little 21 pleasure in the present.

22 I wish I had nobody to love, and I were an orphan in my 23 childhood. The greatest misery in my life has been my own 24 people--my brothers and sisters and mother etc. Relatives are like 25 deadly clogs to one's progress, and is it not a wonder that people 26 will still go on to find new ones by marriage !!!

27 He who is alone is happy. Do good to all, like everyone, but 28 do not love anyone. It is a bondage, and bondage brings only 29 misery. Live alone in your mind--that is happiness. To have nobody 30 to care for and never minding who cares for one is the way to be 31 free.

32 I envy so much your frame of mind--quiet, gentle, light, yet 33 deep and free . You are already free, Marie, free already--you are 34 Jivanmukta. I am more of a woman than a man, you are more of a 35 man than woman. I am always dragging other's pain into me--for 36 nothing, without being able to do any good to anybody--just as 37 women, if they have no children, bestow all their love upon a 38 cat!!!

39 Do you think this has any spirituality in it? Nonsense, it is all 40 material nervous bondage --that is what it is. O! to get rid of the 41 thraldom of the flesh!

42 Your friend Mrs. Martin very kindly sends me copies of her
43 magazine every month--but Sturdy's thermometer is now below 44 zero, it seems. He seems to be greatly disappointed with my non-45 arrival in England this summer. What could I do?

46 We have started two Maths (monasteries) here, one in 47 Calcutta, the other in Madras. The Calcutta Math (a wretched 48 rented house) was awfully shaken in the late earthquake.

49 We have got in a number of boys, and they are in training;

1 also we have opened famine relief in several places and the work
2 is going on apace. We will try to start similar centres in different 3 places in India.

4 In a few days I am going down to the plains and from thence 5 go to the Western parts of the mountains. When it is cooler in the 6 plains, I will make a lecture tour all over and see what work can 7 be done.

8 Here I cannot find any more time to write--so many people 9 are waiting--so here I stop, dear Marie, wishing you all joy and 10 happiness.

11 May you never be lured by flesh is the constant prayer of--
12 Ever yours in

21 Dear Shashi {Ramakrishnananda},

22 I got information that your work there is going on very well.
23 Get a thorough mastery of the three Bhashyas (commentaries), 24 and also study well European philosophy and allied subjects--see 25 to it without fail. To fight with others one requires sword and 26 shield--this fact should never be forgotten. I hope Sukul has now 27 reached there and is attending on you all right. If Sadananda does 28 not like to stay there, send him to Calcutta. Don't forget to send to 29 the Math every week a report of the work including income and 30 expenditure and other information.

31 Alasinga's sister's husband borrowed four hundred rupees 32 from Badridas here, promising to send it back as soon as he 33 reached Madras; inquire from Alasinga and tell him to send it
34 quickly. For I am leaving this place the day after tomorrow-- 35 whether for Mussoorie Hills or somewhere else I shall decide 36 later.

37 Yesterday I delivered a lecture in the circle of the local 38 English people, and all were highly pleased with it. But I was very 39 much pleased with the lecture in Hindi that I delivered the 40 previous day--I did not know before that I could be oratorical in 41 Hindi.

42 Are there any new boys joining the Math? If so, then carry 43 on the work in the same manner as it is being done in Calcutta. At 44 present don't use up your wisdom too much, lest it should become 45 completely exhausted--you can do that later on.

46 Pay particular attention to your health, but too much

1 coddling of the body will, on the contrary, also spoil the health. If 2 there is not the strength of knowledge, nobody would care 3 twopence for your ringing of the bell--this is certain; and knowing 4 this for certain equip yourself accordingly. My heart's love and 5 blessings to you and to Goodwin and others.

16 Dear Shashi {Ramakrishnananda},

17 I am very much pained to hear that the work in Madras is 18 not prospering for want of funds. I am glad to learn that the 19 amount borrowed by Alasinga's brother-in-law (sister's husband) 20 has been received back in Almora. Goodwin has written to me to 21 inform the Reception Committee to take some money for expenses 22 from the amount that is left as a result of the lecture. It is a very 23 mean thing to spend the money received on the occasion of that 24 lecture for the purpose of the Reception--and I do not like to tell 25 anybody anything about this matter. I have understood quite well 26 what the people of our country are when it comes to money-27 matters. . . . On my behalf, you personally talk with the friends 28 there and politely make them understand that it is all right if they 29 can find ways and means to bear the expenses; but if they cannot 30 do so, all of you come back to the Math at Calcutta or go to 31 Ramnad and establish the Math there.

32 I am now going to the hills at Dharamsala. Niranjana, Dinu, 33 Krishnalal, Latu, and Achyut will stay at Amritsar. Why did you 34 not, all these days, send Sadananda to the Math? If he is still 35 there, then send him to the Punjab on receipt of a letter from 36 Niranjana from Amritsar. I intend to start work in the Punjab after 37 a few days' more rest in the Punjab hills. The Punjab and 38 Rajputana are indeed fields for work. I shall write to you again 39 soon after starting work. . . .

40 My health was very bad recently. Now I am very slowly 41 recovering. It will be all right, if I stay in the hills for some more 42 days. My love to you and to Alasinga, G. G., R. A., Goodwin, Gupta, 43 Sukul, and all others.

My Dear Rakhal {Brahmananda},

Yogen tells me in a letter to buy the house at Baghbazar for Rs. 20,000. Even if we buy that house, there are still a lot of difficulties; for example, we shall have to break it down in part and make the drawing room into a big hall, and similar alterations and repairs. Moreover the house is very old and ramshackle. However, consult Girish Babu and Atul and do what you decide to be best. Today I am leaving by the two o'clock train with all my party for Kashmir. The recent stay at Dharamsala Hills has improved my health much, and the tonsillitis, fever, etc. have completely disappeared.

From a letter of yours I got all the news. Niranjan, Latu, Krishnalal, Dinanath, Gupta, and Achyut are all going to Kashmir with me.

The gentleman from Madras who donated Rs. 1,500 for famine relief wants an account of how exactly the money was expended. Send him such an account. We are doing more or less well.

Yours
affectionately,

Vivekananda

PS. Give my love to all at the Math.

My Dear Rakhal {Brahmananda},

Now Kashmir. The excellent accounts you heard of this place are all true. There is no place so beautiful as this; and the people also are fair and good-looking, though their eyes are not beautiful. But I have also never seen elsewhere villages and towns

1 so horribly dirty. In Srinagar I am now putting up at the house of 2 Rishibar Babu. He is very hospitable and kind. Send all my letters 3 to his address. In a few days I shall go out somewhere else on 4 excursions; but while returning, I shall come by way of Srinagar,
5 and so shall get the letters also. I have read the letter that you 6 sent regarding Gangadhar. Write to him that there are many 7 orphans in Central India and in Gorakhpur. From there the 8 Punjabis are getting many children. You must persuade Mahendra
9 Babu and get up an agitation about this matter, so that the people
10 of Calcutta are induced to take up the charge of these orphans-- 11 such a movement is very desirable. Especially a memorial should 12 be sent to the Government requesting it to see that orphans taken 13 over by the missionaries are returned to the Hindus. Tell 14 Gangadhar to come over; and on behalf of the Ramakrishna
15 Society a tearing campaign should be made. Gird up your loins, 16 and go to every house to carry on the campaign. Hold mass 17 meetings etc. Whether you succeed or not, start a furious 18 agitation. Get all the facts from the important Bengali friends at 19 Gorakhpur by writing to them, and let there be a countrywide 20 agitation over this. Let the Ramakrishna Society be fully 21 established. The secret of the whole thing is to agitate and agitate 22 without respite. I am much pleased to see the orderliness of 23 Sarada's work. Gangadhar and Sarada should not rest satisfied 24 until they have succeeded in creating a centre in every place they 25 visit.

26 Just now I received a letter from Gangadhar. It is good news 27 that he is determined to start a centre in that district. Write to 28 him saying that his friend, the Magistrate, has sent an excellent 29 reply to my letter. As soon as we come down to the plains from 30 Kashmir, I shall send back Latu, Niranjan, Dinu, and Khoka. For 31 there is no suitable work for them here any more; also within 32 three to four weeks send Shuddhananda, Sushil, and one other to 33 me. Send them to the house of Mr. Shyamacharan
34 Mukhopadhyaya, Medical Hall, Cantonment, Ambala. From there I 35 shall go to Lahore. They should have each two thick gerua-
36 coloured jerseys, and two blankets for bedding. I shall buy them 37 woollen chaddars, and other woollen necessities in Lahore. If the 38 translation of Raja-Yoga has been completed, get it published 39 bearing all the cost. . . . Where the language is obscure, make it 40 very simple and clear, and let Tulsi make a Hindi translation of it 41 if he can. If these books are published, they will help the Math 42 very greatly.

43 I hope your health is now quite all right. Since reaching 44 Dharamsala I have been all right. I like the cold places; there the 45 body keeps well. I have a desire either to visit a few places in 46 Kashmir and then choose an excellent site and live a quiet life
47 there, or to go on floating on the water. I shall do what the doctor 48 advises. The Raja is not here now. His brother, the one just next to 49 him in age, is the Commander-in-Chief. Efforts are being made to 50 arrange a lecture under his chairmanship. I shall write all about 51 this afterwards. If the meeting for the lecture is held in a day or 52 two, I shall stay back, otherwise I go out again on my travels.

1 Sevier is still at Murree. His health is very bad--going about in the 2 jolting tongas and jutkas. The Bengali gentlemen of Murree are 3 very good and courteous. Give my respects to G. C. Ghosh, Atul, 4 Master Mahashay, and others, and keep up the spirits of 5 everybody. What is the news about the house which Yogen
6 suggested we should buy? In October I shall go down from here
7 and shall deliver a few lectures in the Punjab. After that I may go 8 via Sind to Cutch, Bhuj, and Kathiawar--even down to Poona if 9 circumstances are favourable; otherwise I go to Rajputana via 10 Baroda. From Rajputana I go to the North-Western Province,²⁶⁶
11 then Nepal, and finally Calcutta--this is my present programme.
12 Everything, however, is in God's hands. My love and greetings to 13 all.

25 My Dear Shuddhananda,

26 We are in Kashmir at last. I need not tell you of all the 27 beauties of the place. It is the one land fit for Yogis, to my mind.
28 But the land is now inhabited by a race who though possessing 29 great physical beauty are extremely dirty. I am going to travel by 30 water for a month seeing the sights and getting strong. But the 31 city is very malarious just now, and Sadananda and Kristolal have 32 got fever. Sadananda is all right today, but Kristolal has fever yet.
33 The doctor came today and gave him a purgative. He will be all 34 right by tomorrow, we hope; and we start also tomorrow. The 35 State has lent me one of its barges, and it is fine and quite 36 comfortable. They have also sent orders to the Tahsildars of 37 different districts. The people here are crowding in banks to see 38 us and are doing everything they can to make us comfortable.

39 A clipping from The Indian Mirror, quoting passages from 40 an article written by Dr. Barrows in an American paper, has been 41 sent over to me by somebody without a name and asking me what 42 reply to give. I send back the cutting to Brahmananda with my 43 answer to the passages which are damned lies!

44 I am glad to learn you are doing well there and going on 45 with your usual work. I also had a letter from Shivananda giving 46 the details of work there.

1 ²⁶⁶ ?In those days this was made up of Uttar Pradesh and part of the Punjab.
2

After a month I go back to the Punjab, and I will expect three of you at Ambala. In case a centre is founded, one of you will be left in charge. Niranjana, Latu, and Kristolal will be sent back.

I intend to make a rapid march through the Punjab and Sind via Kathiawar and Baroda, back to Rajputana, and thence to Nepal and last Calcutta.

Write to me C/o Rishibar Babu at Srinagar. I will get the letter on my way back.

With love to all and blessings,

Yours,

Dear Haripada {Mitra},

My health has been very bad for the last nine months, and the heat made it still worse. So I have been wandering over the hills from place to place. Now I am in Kashmir. I have travelled far and wide, but I have never seen such a country. I shall soon leave for the Punjab and again go to work. From Sadananda I have heard all the news about you and continue to get it. I am sure to go to Karachi after visiting the Punjab. So we shall meet in person there.

With

blessings,

15 Dear Rakhal {Brahmananda},

16 I received your affectionate letter and also the letter from 17 the Math. I am leaving for the Punjab in two or three days. I have 18 received the foreign mail. The following are my answers to Miss 19 Noble's questions in her letter:

20 1. Nearly all the branches have been started, but the 21 movement is only just beginning.

22 2. Most of the monks are educated. Those that are not are 23 also having secular education. But above all, to do good, perfect 24 unselfishness is absolutely necessary.

25 To ensure that, more attention is given to spiritual exercises 26 than to anything else.

27 3. Secular educators: We get mostly those who have already 28 educated themselves. What is needed is training them into our 29 method and building up of character. The training is to make them 30 obedient and fearless; and the method is to help the poor 31 physically first and then work up to higher regions of mentality.

32 Arts and Industries: This part of the programme alone 33 cannot be begun for want of funds. The simplest method to be 34 worked upon at present is to induce Indians to use their own 35 produce and get markets for Indian artware etc. in other 36 countries. This should be done by persons who are not only not 37 middlemen themselves, but will devote the entire proceeds of this 38 branch to the benefit of the workmen.

39 4. Wandering from place to place will be necessary till 40 "people come to education". The religious character of the 41 wandering monks will carry with it a much greater weight than 42 otherwise.

43 5. All castes are open to our influence. So long the highest 44 only have been worked upon. But since the work department is in 45 full operation in different famine-centres, we are influencing the 46 lower classes more and more.

6. Nearly all the Hindus approve our work, only they are not used to practical co-operation in such works.

7. Yes, from the very start we are making no distinction in our charities or other good works between the different religions of India.

Reply to Miss N. according to these hints.

See that there is no remissness whatever in the medical treatment of Yogen--if necessary spend money by drawing on the capital. Did you go and meet Bhavanath's wife?

If Brahmachari Hariprasanna can come, it will be very helpful. Mr. Sevier has become very impatient about acquiring a house somewhere; it will be good if something is done quickly about it! Hariprasanna is an engineer; so he will be able to do something quickly about it. Also he understands better about the suitability of places. They (the Seviers) like to have a place somewhere near about Dehra Dun or Mussoorie; that is to say, the place must not be too cold and must be habitable throughout the year. So send Hariprasanna at once straight to S^j. Shyamapada Mukherjee, Medical Hall, Ambala Cantonment. As soon as I go down to the Punjab, I shall send Mr. Sevier along with him. I am returning (to the Math) in a trice after a tour of the Punjab, Karachi, and then via Rajputana, not via Kathiawar and Gujarat--to Nepal. Tulsi has gone to Madhya Bharat--is it for the famine-relief work? . . .

My blessings and love to all. I have got the news that Kali has reached New York; but he has not written any letter. Sturdy writes that his work had increased so much that people were amazed--and a few persons have also written me praising him highly. However, there is not so much difficulty in America; the work will go on somehow or other. Send Shuddhananda and his brother along with Hariprasanna. Of the party only Gupta and Achyut will accompany me.

Yours

affectionately,

Vivekananda

My Dear Shashi {Ramakrishnananda},

Now I am returning from a visit to places in Kashmir. In a day or two I shall leave for the Punjab. As my health is now much better, I have decided to tour again in the same way as before.

1 Not too much lecturing--one or two lectures, perhaps, in the 2 Punjab, otherwise none. The people of our country have not yet 3 offered me even as much as a pice for my travelling expenses--and 4 to cap it all, to take with you a whole party, well, you can easily 5 understand how troublesome it all is. It is also a matter of shame
6 to have to draw upon only the English disciples. So, as before, I 7 start out "with only a blanket". In this place there is no need for 8 any person like Goodwin, as you can see.

9 A monk from Ceylon, P. C. Jinawar Vamar by name, has 10 written to me among other things that he wants to visit India.
11 Perhaps he is the same monk who comes of the Siamese royal 12 family. His address is Wellawatta, Ceylon. If convenient, invite him 13 to Madras. He believes in the Vedanta. It will not be so difficult to 14 send him to other places from Madras. It is also good to have such 15 a person in the Order. My love and blessings to you and all others.

Dear Margo {Nivedita},

Some people do the best work when led. Not every one is born to lead. The best leader, however, is one who "leads like the baby". The baby, though apparently depending on everyone, is the king of the household. At least, to my thinking, that is the secret. . . . Many feel, but only a few can express. It is the power of expressing one's love and appreciation and sympathy for others, that enables one person to succeed better in spreading the idea than others. . . .

I shall not try to describe Kashmir to you. Suffice it to say, I never felt sorry to leave any country except this Paradise on earth; and I am trying my best, if I can, to influence the Raja in starting a centre. So much to do here, and the material so hopeful! . . .

The great difficulty is this: I see persons giving me almost the whole of their love. But I must not give anyone the whole of mine in return, for that day the work would be ruined. Yet there are some who will look for such a return, not having the breadth of the impersonal view. It is absolutely necessary to the work that I should have the enthusiastic love of as many as possible, while I myself remain entirely impersonal. Otherwise jealousy and quarrels would break up everything. A leader must be impersonal. I am sure you understand this. I do not mean that one should be a brute, making use of the devotion of others for his own ends, and laughing in his sleeve meanwhile. What I mean is what I am, intensely personal in my love, but having the power to pluck out my own heart with my own hand, if it becomes necessary, "for the good of many, for the welfare of many", as Buddha said. Madness of love, and yet in it no bondage. Matter changed into spirit by the force of love. Nay, that is the gist of our Vedanta. There is but One, seen by the ignorant as matter, by the wise as God. And the history of civilisation is the progressive reading of spirit into matter. The ignorant see the person in the non-person. The sage sees the non-person in the person. Through pain and pleasure, joy and sorrow, this is the one lesson we are learning. . . .

Yours ever with love
and truth,

Vivekananda

Murree
11th October,

1897

My Dear Rakhal {Brahmananda},

I feel I have been working as if under an irresistible impulse for the last ten days, beginning from Kashmir. It may be either a physical or a mental disease. Now I have come to the conclusion that I am unfit for further work. . . . I now understand that I have been very harsh to all of you. But I knew, however, that you would bear with all my shortcomings; in the Math there is no one else who will do so. I have been increasingly harsh to you. Whatever has happened is now past--it is all the result of past Karma. What is the good of my repentance? I do not believe in it. It is all Karma. Whatever of Mother's work was to be accomplished through me, She made me do, and has now flung me aside breaking down my body and mind. Her will be done!

Now I retire from all this work. In a day or two I shall give up everything and wander out alone; I shall spend the rest of my life quietly in some place or other. Forgive me if you all will, or do what you like.

Mrs. Bull has given much of the money. She has implicit confidence in Sharat. Do the work of the Math with Sharat's advice; or do as you will.

But I have all along been like a hero--I want my work to be quick like lightning, and firm as adamant. Likewise shall I die also. Therefore kindly do my work for me--no question of success or defeat enters here at all. I have never retreated in a fight--shall I now . . . ? There is success and failure in every work. But I am inclined to believe that one who is a coward will be born after death as an insect or a worm, that there is no salvation for a coward even after millions of years of penance. Well, shall I after all be born as a worm? . . . In my eyes this world is mere play--and it will always remain as such. Should one spend six long months brooding over the questions of honour and disgrace, gain and loss pertaining to this? . . . I am a man of action. Simply advice upon advice is being given--this one says this, that one says that; again that man threatens, and this one frightens! This life is not, in my view, such a sweet thing that I would long to live through so much care and caution and fear. Money, life, friends, and relatives, and the love of men and myself--if one wants to enter into work fully assured beforehand of all these--if one has to be so much ridden with fear, then one will get just what Gurudeva used to say, "The crow thinks itself very clever but . . ." ²⁶⁷--well, he will get that. After all, what is the purpose behind all these--money and wealth, Maths and institutions, preaching and lecturing? There is only one purpose in the whole of life--education. Otherwise what is the use of men and women, land and wealth?

1 ²⁶⁷ ?The crow thinks itself very clever, but it cannot help eating filth.
2

1 So loss of money, or loss of anything else--I cannot bother
2 about, and I will not. When I fight, I fight with girded loins--that 3 much I fully understand; and I also understand that man, that 4 hero, that god, who says, "Don't care, be fearless. O brave one, 5 here I am by your side!" To such a man-god I offer a million 6 salutations. Their presence purifies the world, they are the 7 saviours of the world. And the others who always wail, "Oh, don't 8 go forward, there is this danger, there is that danger"--those 9 dyspeptics--they always tremble with fear. But through the grace 10 of the Divine Mother my mind is so strong that even the most 11 terrible dyspepsia shall not make me a coward. To cowards what 12 advice shall I offer?--nothing whatsoever have I to say. But this I 13 desire, that I should find shelter at the feet of those brave souls 14 who dared to do great deeds even though they failed to succeed, 15 of those heroes who never quailed nor shirked, of those fighters 16 who never disobeyed orders through fear or pride. I am the child 17 of the Divine Mother, the source of all power and strength. To me, 18 cringing, fawning, whining, degrading inertia and hell are one and 19 the same thing. O Mother of the Universe, O my Gurudeva, who 20 would constantly say, "This is a hero!"--I pray that I may not have 21 to die a coward. This is my prayer, O brother. "{Sanskrit}-- 22 certainly there is, or there will be born one equal to me"; some 23 one or other will certainly arise from these thousands of devotees 24 of Shri Ramakrishna who will be like me, and who will be able to 25 understand me.

26 O hero, awake, and dream no more. Death has caught you 27 by the forelock . . . still fear not. What I have never done--fleeing 28 from the battle--well, will that happen today? For fear of defeat 29 shall I retreat from the fight? Defeat is the ornament the hero 30 adorns himself with. What, to acknowledge defeat without 31 fighting! O Mother, Mother! . . . Not one capable of even playing 32 second fiddle and yet the mind filled with petty self-importance, 33 "We understand everything". . . Now I retire; . . . everything I 34 leave in your control. If Mother sends me men again in whose 35 heart there is courage, in whose hands strength, in whose eyes 36 there is fire, real children of the Mother--if She gives me even one 37 such, then I shall work again, then I shall return. Otherwise, I 38 shall take it that, by Mother's will, this is the end. I am in a 39 tremendous hurry, I want to work at hurricane speed, and I want 40 fearless hearts.

41 I have rebuked poor Sarada severely. What to do? . . . I do 42 scold; but I also have much to complain.

43 . . . Almost suffocated by short breathing, standing and 44 standing, I have written an article for him. . . . It is all good, 45 otherwise how will renunciation come? . . . Will Mother in the end 46 kill me with attachment? I have offended all of you--do what you 47 want.

48 I bless you all with a full heart. May Mother enshrine 49 Herself in your hearts as strength: {Sanskrit}--the support that is 50 fearlessness--may She make you all fearless. This I have seen in 51 life--he who is over-cautious about himself falls into dangers at 52 every step; he who is afraid of losing honour and respect, gets

1 only disgrace; he who is always afraid of loss always loses. . . .
2 May all good attend you all.

3 Yours
4 affectionately,
5 Vivekananda

13 My Dear Rakhal {Brahmananda},

14 I wrote at length in yesterday's letter. I think it desirable to 15 give you special directions about certain matters. . . . (1) To all 16 those who collect money and send it to the Math . . . the 17 acknowledgment of the amounts will be issued from the Math. (2) 18 The acknowledgment must be in duplicate, one for the sender, and 19 one for filing in the Math. (3) There must be a big register in 20 which all the names and addresses of the donors will be entered.
21 (4) Accounts, accurate to the last pie, must be kept of the amounts 22 that are donated to the Math Fund, and fully accurate accounts 23 should be obtained from Sarada and others to whom money is 24 given. For lack of accurate account-keeping . . . see that I am not 25 accused as a cheat. These accounts should afterwards be 26 published. (5) Immediately go and register a will under lawyer's 27 advice to the effect that in case you and I die then Hari and 28 Sharat will succeed to all that there is in our Math.

29 I have not yet got any news from Ambala, whether 30 Hariprasanna and others have reached there or not. Give the 31 other half-sheet of this letter to Master Mahashay.

19 My Dear Rakhal {Brahmananda},

20 The lecture at Lahore is over somehow. I shall start for 21 Dehra Dun in a day or two. I have now postponed my tour to Sind, 22 as none of you are agreeable to it, and also because of various 23 other obstacles. Somebody has opened my two letters from 24 England on the way. So don't send me letters any further for the 25 present. Send them after I have written for them from Khetri. If 26 you go to Orissa, then make arrangements that some one will do 27 all the work as your representative--say Hari, especially now, 28 when I am daily expecting letters from America.

29 Perhaps the will that I asked you to make in favour of Hari
30 and Sharat has now been made.

31 Probably I shall leave Sadananda and Sudhir here after 32 establishing a Society. Now no more lecturing--I go in a hurry
33 straight to Rajputana.

34 The establishment of the Math must have precedence over 35 everything.

36 Without regular exercise the body does not keep fit; talking, 37 talking all the time brings illness--know this for certain. My love to

My Dear Rakhal {Brahmananda},

I hope you and Hari are now in good health. The work in Lahore went off with great eclat. Now I go to Dehra Dun. The Sind tour is postponed. I have yet no news whether Dinu, Latu, and Krishnalal have reached Jaipur. Babu Nagendranath Gupta will collect subscriptions and donations from here and send them to the Math to meet expenses. Send him regular receipts. Let me know if you have received anything from Murree, Rawalpindi, and Sialkot.

Reply to me C/o Post Master, Dehra Dun. Other letters you may send me after hearing from me from Dehra Dun. My health is good; only I have to get up at night once or twice. I am having sound sleep; sleep is not spoiled even after exhausting lectures; and I am doing exercise every day. . . . There is no trouble at all. Now, come on, work with redoubled energy. Keep an eye on that big piece of land--in all secrecy. We are making regular efforts so that big Utsava²⁶⁹ can be held there. My love to all.

Yours

affectionately,

Vivekananda

PS. It will be a very good thing if Master Mahashay will write now and then about us in The Tribune, so that Lahore will not become cold again--now it is quite warmed up. Spend money a little economically; pilgrimage expenses should be borne by you personally; preaching and propaganda expenses should be charged to the Math.

I got all news about you from Hariprasanna. I am especially pleased to hear that Rakhal and Hari are now quite well.

Now Babu Raghunath Bhattacharya of Tehri is suffering very much from some pain in the neck; I also have been suffering for a long time from some pain at the back of my neck. If you can get hold of some very old ghee, then send some of it to him at Dehra Dun and some of it to me also at my Khetri address. You are

19 Part of the money that Miss Muller promised has reached 20 Calcutta. The balance will come afterwards in a short while. We 21 have also some amount. Miss Muller will deposit the money in 22 your name as well as mine with Messrs. Grindlay & Co. As you 23 have got the power of attorney, you alone can draw all the money.
24 As soon as the money is deposited, you yourself with Hari go to 25 Patna and meet that gentleman and by some means or other 26 influence him; and if the price of the land is reasonable, buy it. If 27 it cannot be had, try for some other plot of ground. I am trying to 28 get some money in these parts too. We must hold the big festival 29 on our own plot of ground--remember this must be your first and 30 foremost work, come what may.

31 You have shown great pluck; the work you have done these 32 last eight or nine months does you great credit. Now you must see 33 to it that a Math and a centre in Calcutta are steadily established 34 before everything else. Work hard to this end but quietly and in 35 secret. Get information about the Cossipore house also. Tomorrow
36 I am going to Khetri via Alwar. My health is good, even though I 37 have caught a cold. Send all letters to Khetri. My love to all.

My Dear Rakhal {Brahmananda},

We shall start for Khetri tomorrow. Gradually the luggage has greatly increased. After Khetri I intend to send everybody to the Math. I could get done through them none of the work which I had hoped. That is to say, it is quite certain that none of them can do anything if he always remains with me. Unless each goes about independently, he will not be able to do anything. The fact is, who will care for them if they are in my company? Only waste of time. So I am sending them to the Math.

Keep as a fund for some permanent work the balance of the money left after the famine relief. Do not spend that money for any other purpose, and after giving the full accounts of the famine work, note down thus, "So much balance is left for some other good work". . . .

Work I want--I don't want any humbug. To those who have no desire to work I say, "My dear fellow, now go and follow your own way." As soon as I reach Khetri, I will send you the power of attorney with my signature if the document has reached there meanwhile. Open only those letters from America which bear the Boston postmark, not the others. Send all my letters to Khetri. I shall get money in Rajputana itself; no cause for anxiety on that score. Try energetically for the piece of land; we must have the celebration on our own ground this time.

Is the money in the Bengal Bank, or have you kept it elsewhere? Be very careful about money matters; keep detailed accounts, and regarding money know for certain that one cannot rely even on one's own father.

Give my love to all. Write to me how Hari is doing. Recently I met at Dehra Dun the Udasi Sadhu, Kalyan Dev, and a few others. I hear the people at Hrishikesh are very eager to see me and are asking again and again about me.

Yours

affectionately,

Vivekananda

30 The work will not be congenial at present, I am afraid, but it 31 is really the work for a perfect man. You know the emigrants are 32 not liked at all by the white people there. To look after the 33 Indians, and at the same time maintain cool-headedness so as not 34 to create more strife--is the work there. No immediate result can 35 be expected, but in the long run it will prove a more beneficial 36 work for India than any yet attempted. I wish you to try your luck 37 in this. If you agree, please write to Setlur, about your willingness 39 godspeed to you! I am not very well, but am going to Calcutta in a

29 My Dear Shashi {Ramakrishnananda},

30 Our congratulations for the successful carrying out of the 31 Mahotsava²⁷⁰ in Madras. Hope you had a good gathering and 32 plenty of spiritual food. We are all so glad that you have girded 33 yourself to teach more of spirituality to the Madras people than 34 those finger twistings and *klung phat*²⁷¹ you are so fond of. Really 35 your lecture on *Shriji*²⁷² was splendid. I could only catch a report 36 in the Madras Mail in Kandwa, and the Math people have not had 37 any. Why don't you send us over a copy?

38 I learn that you complain about my silence, is it? I have 39 written you more letters, however, than you ever wrote me, from 40 Europe and America even. You ought to give me all the news you

1 ²⁷⁰ ?Big celebration--of Shri Ramakrishna's birthday.

4
5 ²⁷² ?Shri Ramakrishna.

1 can from Madras every week. Simplest way is to put down a few 2 lines and a few items of news every day on a sheet.

3 My health has not been all right of late; at present it is much 4 better. Calcutta is unusually cool just now, and the American 5 friends who are here are enjoying it ever so much. Today we take 6 possession of the land we have bought, and though it is not 7 practicable to have the Mahotsava on it just now, I must have 8 something on it on Sunday. Anyhow, Shriji's relics must be taken 9 to our place for the day and worshipped. Gangadhar is here and 10 asks me to write to you that though he has succeeded in getting 11 some subscriptions for the Brahmavadin, the delivery being very 12 irregular, he is afraid of losing them also soon. I received your 13 letter of recommendation for the young man with the old story of 14 "having nothing to eat, Your Honour"; only added in the Madras
15 edition: "got a number of children too", for generating whom no 16 recommendation was needed! I would be very glad to help him, 17 but the fact is, I have no money; every cent I had I have made 18 over to Raja,²⁷³ as they all say I am a spendthrift and are afraid of 19 keeping money with me. I have, however, sent the letter to Rakhal 20 if he can find the way to help your friend, the young man, in 21 having some more children. He writes that the Christians will help 22 him out if he becomes a convert, but he won't. Perhaps he is 23 afraid that his conversion will make Hindu India lose one of her 24 brightest jewels and Hindu society the benefit of his propagating 25 power to eternal misery!

26 The boys here are rather seedy owing to the unusual 27 amount of pure and cool air they are made to breathe in and live 28 on the bank of the Ganga in the new Math. Sarada has his malaria 29 brought over from Dinajpur. I made him eat a dose of opium the 30 other day without much benefit to him except his brain which 31 progressed for some hours towards its natural direction, namely, 32 idiocy. Hari also has a touch; I hope it will take off a good bit of 33 their avoirdupois. By the by, we have once more started the 34 dancing business here, and it would make your heart glad to see 35 Hari and Sarada and my own good self in a waltz. How we keep 36 balance at all is a wonder to me.

37 Sharat has come and is hard at work as usual. We have got 38 some good furniture now, and a big jump from the old Chatai
39 (mat) in the old Math to nice tables and chairs and three Khats 40 (cots), mind you. We have curtailed the Puja (worship) work a 41 good deal, and the amount of pruning your klings and phats and 42 svahas have undergone would make you faint. The puja occupied 43 only the day, and they slept soundly all night. How are Tulsi and 44 Khoka? Are they more tractable with you than under Rakhal? You 45 may run in to Calcutta for a few days giving charge to Tulsi, but it 46 is so expensive, and then you must go back, as Madras has to be 47 thoroughly worked up. I am going to America again with Mrs.
48 Bull in a few months.

49 Give my love to Goodwin and tell him that we are going to 1 ²⁷³ ?Rakhal or Swami Brahmananda.

2

1 see him at any rate on our way to Japan. Shivananda is here, and I 2 have toned down a bit his great desire to go to the Himalayas for 3 food ! Is Tulsi contemplating the same? The bandicoot-hole will 4 be a sufficient cave for him, I suppose.

5 So the Math here is a fait accompli, and I am going over to 6 get more help. . . . Work on with energy. India is a rotten corpse
7 inside and outside. We shall revive it by the blessings of Shri 8 Maharaj. With all love,

20 My Dear Mary {Hale},

21 You have news of me already, I hope, through the letter I 22 wrote to Mother Church. You are all so kind, the whole family, to 23 me, I must have belonged to you in the past, as we Hindus say. My 24 only regret is that the millionaires do not materialise: and I want 25 them so badly just now that I am growing decrepit and old and hot 26 in the midst of building and organising. Though Harriet has got 27 one of a million virtues, a few millions of cash virtue would have 28 made it more shining, I am sure; so you do not commit the same 29 mistake.

30 A certain young couple had everything favourable to make 31 them man and wife except that the bride's father was determined 32 not to give his daughter to anyone who had not a million. The 33 young people were in despair when a clever matchmaker came to 34 the rescue. He asked the bridegroom whether he was willing to 35 part with his nose on payment of a million--which he refused. The 36 matchmaker then swore before the bride's father that the 37 bridegroom had in store goods worth several millions, and the 38 match was completed. Don't you take like millions.

39 Well, well, you could not get the millionaire, so I could not 40 get the money; so I had to worry a good deal and work hard to no 41 purpose; so I got the disease. It requires brains like mine to find 42 out the true cause--I am charmed with myself!

43 Well, it was in Southern India, when I came from London 44 and when the people were feting and feasting and pumping all the 45 work out of me, that an old hereditary disease made its 46 appearance. The tendency was always there, and excess of mental 47 work made it "express" itself. Total collapse and extreme

1 prostration followed, and I had to leave Madras immediately for 2 the cooler North; a day's delay meant waiting for a week in that 3 awful heat for another steamer. By the by, I learnt afterwards that 4 Mr. Barrows arrived in Madras next day and was very much 5 chagrined at not finding me as he expected, though I helped 6 getting up an address for him and arranged for his reception.
7 Poor man, he little knew I was at death's door then.

8 I have been travelling in the Himalayas all through last 9 summer; and a cold climate, I found immediately, brought me
10 round; but as soon as I come into the heat of the plains I am down
11 again. From today the heat in Calcutta is becoming intense, and I 12 will soon have to fly. This time to cool America as Mrs. Bull and 13 Miss MacLeod are here. I have bought a piece of land for the 14 institution on the river Ganga near Calcutta, on which is a little 15 house where they are living now; within a stone's throw is the 16 house where the Math is situated at present in which we live.

17 So I see them every day and they are enjoying it immensely
18 a L'Inde . They intend making a trip to Kashmir in a month, and I 19 am going with them as a guide and friend and philosopher 20 perhaps, if they are willing. After that we all sail for the land of 21 freedom and scandal.

22 You need not be alarmed with me as the disease will take 23 two or three years at worst to carry me off. At best it may remain 24 a harmless companion. I am content. Only I am working hard to 25 set things all right and always so that the machine moves forward 26 when I am off the stage. Death I have conquered long ago when I 27 gave up life. My only anxiety is the work , and even that to the 28 Lord I dedicate, and He knows best.

29
30 the Lord,

Ever yours in

36 (Howrah),

37 March, 1898

38 My Dear Shashi {Ramakrishnananda},

39 I forgot to write you about two things. 1. That Tulsi ought to 40 learn shorthand from Goodwin, at least the beginning. 2. I had to 41 write a letter almost every mail to Madras while I was out of 42 India. I have in vain written for a copy of those letters. Send me 43 all those letters. I want to write out my travels. Do not fail, and I 44 shall send them back as soon as they have been used up. The 45 Dawn can manage with 200 subscribers to come out regularly on 46 Rs. 40/- an issue expenditure. This is a great fact to know. The P.B.
47 (Prabuddha Bharata) seems to be very disorganised; try best to 48 organise it. Poor Alasinga, I am sorry for him. Only thing I can do

1 is to make him entirely free for a year so that he may devote all 2 his energy to the Brahmavadin work. Tell him not to worry; I have 3 him always in mind, poor child; his devotion I can never repay.

4 I am thinking of going to Kashmir again with Mrs. Bull and 5 Miss MacLeod. (I) return to Calcutta and start for America from 6 here.

7 Miss Noble is really an acquisition. She will soon surpass 8 Mrs. Besant as a speaker, I am sure.

9 Do look after Alasinga. I have an idea that he is breaking 10 himself with work. Tell him, the best work is only done by 11 alternate repose and work. Give him all my love. We had two 12 public lectures in Calcutta, one from Miss Noble and the other 13 from our Sharat. Both of them did very well indeed; there was 14 great enthusiasm, which shows that the Calcutta public has not 15 forgotten us. Some of the members of the Math had a touch of 16 influenza. They are all right now. The thing is working nicely. Shri 17 (Holy) Mother is here, and the European and American ladies 18 went the other day to see her, and what do you think, Mother ate
19 with them even there ! Is not that grand? The Lord is watching 20 over us; there is no fear; do not lose your nerves, keep your health 21 and take things easy. It is always good to give a few strong 22 strokes and rest on your oars. Rakhal is living with the new land 23 and buildings. I was not satisfied with the Mahotsava this year.
24 What it should be is a grand mixture of all the different phases 25 here. We shall try it next year--I shall send instructions. With love 26 to all of you there and blessings.

34 My Dear Joe Joe {MacLeod},

35 I was down with fever brought upon, perhaps, by excessive

37 I am better today and intend leaving this in a day or two. In 39 had some appetite. Here both have vanished--this is all the gain.

40 I could not see Miss Muller yet on the subject of 41 Marguerite; but I intend to write her today. She is making all 42 arrangements to receive her here. Mr. Gupta is also invited to 43 teach them Bengali. She may now do something about her. I shall, 44 however, write.

45 It will be easy for Marguerite to see Kashmir any time 46 during her stay; but if Miss M. is not willing, there will be a big 47 row again to injure both her and Marguerite.

1 I am not sure whether I go to Almora again. Much riding it
2 seems is sure to bring on a relapse. I will wait for you at Simla--
3 whilst you pay your visit to the Seviars. We will think on it when I 4 am in. I am so glad to learn that Miss Noble delivered an address
5 at the R.K. Mission. With all love to the Trinity,

6 Ever yours in

16 My Dear Rakhal {Brahmananda},

17 My health was excellent on my return from Sandukphu
18 (11,924 ft.) and other places; but after returning to Darjeeling, I 19 had first an attack of fever, and after recovering from that, I am 20 now suffering from cough and cold. I try to escape from this place 21 every day; but they have been constantly putting it off for a long 22 time. However, tomorrow, Sunday, I am leaving; after halting at 23 Kharsana for a day I start again for Calcutta on Monday. I shall 24 send you a wire after starting. We should hold an annual meeting 25 of the Ramakrishna Mission, and also one for the Math. In both 26 the meetings the accounts of famine relief must be submitted, and 27 the report of the famine relief must be published. Keep all this 28 ready.

29 Nityagopal says, managing an English magazine will not 30 cost much. So let us first get this one out, and we shall see to the 31 Bengali magazine afterwards. All these points will have to be 32 discussed. Is Yogen willing to shoulder the responsibility of 33 running the paper? Shashi writes that if Sharat goes some time to 34 Madras, they may make a lecture tour jointly. Oh, how hot it is 35 now! Ask Sharat if G. G., Sarada, Shashi Babu, and others have 36 got their articles ready. Give my love and blessing to Mrs. Bull, 37 Miss MacLeod, and Nivedita.

1 My Dear Joe Joe {MacLeod},

2 I have had several attacks of fever, the last being influenza.

3 It has left me now, only I am very weak yet. As soon as I 4 gather strength enough to undertake the journey, I come down to 5 Calcutta.

6 On Sunday I leave Darjeeling, probably stopping for a day or 7 two at Kurseong, then direct to Calcutta. Calcutta must be very 8 hot just now. Never mind, it is all the better for influenza. In case 9 the plague breaks out in Calcutta, I must not go anywhere; and 10 you start for Kashmir with Sadananda. How did you like the old
11 gentleman, Devendra Nath Tagore? Not as stylish as "Hans Baba" 12 with Moon God and Sun God of course. What enlightens your 13 insides on a dark night when the Fire God, Sun God, Moon God, 14 and Star Goddesses have gone to sleep? It is hunger that keeps 15 my consciousness up, I have discovered. Oh, the great doctrine of 16 correspondence of light! Think how dark the world has been all 17 these ages without it! And all this knowledge and love and work 18 and all the Buddhas and Krishnas and Christs--vain, vain have 19 been their lives and work, for they did not discover that "which 20 keeps the inner light when the Sun and Moon were gone to the 21 limbo" for the night! Delicious, isn't it?

22 If the plague comes to my native city, I am determined to 23 make myself a sacrifice; and that I am sure is a "Darn sight, better 24 way to Nirvana" than pouring oblations to all that ever twinkled.

25 I have had a good deal of correspondence with Madras with 26 the result that I need not send them any help just now. On the 27 other hand I am going to start a paper in Calcutta. I will be ever 28 so much obliged if you help me starting that. As always with 29 undying love,

30
31 the Lord.

40 My Dear Rakhal {Brahmananda},

I have got all the news from your letter and have replied to your wire already. Niranjana and Govindlal Shah will wait at Kathgodam for Yogen-Ma. After I reached Naini Tal, Baburam went from here to Naini Tal on horseback against everybody's advice, and while returning, he also accompanied us on horseback. I was far behind as I was in a Dandi. When I reached the dak bungalow at night, I heard that Baburam had again fallen

1 from the horse and had hurt one of his arms--though he had no
2 fractures. Lest I should rebuke him, he stayed in a private lodging 3 house. Because of his fall, Miss MacLeod gave him her Dandi and 4 herself came on the horse. He did not meet me that night. next 5 day I was making arrangements for a Dandi for him, when I heard 6 that he had already left on foot. Since then I have not heard of 7 him. I have wired to one or two places, but no news. Perhaps he is 8 putting up at some village. Very well! They are experts in 9 increasing one's worries.

10 There will be a Dandi for Yogen-Ma; but all the rest will 11 have to go on foot.

12 My health is much better, but the dyspepsia has not gone, 13 and again insomnia has set in. It will be very helpful if you can 14 soon send some good Ayurvedic medicine for dyspepsia.

15 Since only one or two sporadic cases of plague have 16 occurred there, there is plenty of accommodation in the 17 Government plague hospital, and there is a talk of having 18 hospitals in every Ward. Taking all this into consideration, do what 19 the situation demands. But remember that something said by 20 somebody in Baghbazar does not constitute public opinion. . . .
21 Take care that funds do not run short in times of need and that 22 there is no waste of money. For the present buy a plot of ground 23 for Ramlal in the name of Raghuvir²⁷⁴ after careful consideration. .
24 . . Holy Mother will be the Sebait (worshipper-in-charge); after 25 her will come Ramlal, and Shibu will succeed them as Sebait; or 26 make any other arrangement that seems best. You can, if you 27 think it right, begin the construction of the building even now. For 28 it is not good to live in a new house for the first one or two 29 months, as it will be damp. . . . The anti-erosion wall can be 30 completed afterwards. I am trying to raise money for the 31 magazine. See that the sum of Rs. 1,200 which I gave for the 32 magazine is kept only for that account.

33 All the others are well here. Sadananda sprained his foot 34 yesterday. He says he will be all right by the evening. The climate 35 at Almora is excellent at this time. Moreover the bungalow rented 36 by Sevier is the best in Almora. On the opposite side Annie Besant 37 is staying in a small bungalow with Chakravarty. Chakravarty is 38 now the son-in-law of Gagan (of Ghazipur). One day I went to see 39 him. Annie Besant told me entreatingly that there should be 40 friendship between her organisation and mine all over the world, 41 etc., etc. Today Besant will come here for tea. Our ladies are in a 42 small bungalow near by and are quite happy. Only Miss MacLeod 43 is a little unwell today. Harry Sevier is becoming more and more a 44 Sadhu as the days pass by. . . . Brother Hari sends you his 45 greetings and Sadananda, Ajoy, and Suren send you their 46 respectful salutations. My love to you and all the others.

48 affectionately

27 My Dear Rakhal {Brahmananda},
28 I got all the news from your letter. . . . My opinion regarding 29 what you have written about Sarada is only that it is difficult to 30 make a magazine in Bengali paying; but if all of you together 31 canvass subscribers from door to door, it may be possible. In this 32 matter do as you all decide. Poor Sarada has already been 33 disappointed once. What harm is there if we lose a thousand 34 rupees by supporting such an unselfish and very hardworking 35 person? What about the printing of Raja-Yoga ? As a last resort, 36 you may give it to Upen on certain terms of sharing the profit in 37 the sales. . . . About money matters, the advice given previously is 38 final. Henceforward do what you consider best regarding 39 expenditure and other things. I see very well that my policy is 40 wrong, and yours is correct, regarding helping others; that is to 41 say, if you help with money too much at a time, people instead of 42 feeling grateful remark on the contrary that they have got a 43 simpleton to bank upon. I always lost sight of the demoralising 44 influence of charity on the receiver. Secondly, we have no right to 1 deviate even slightly from the purposes for which we collect the 2 donations. Mrs. Bull will get her rosary all right if you send it care 3 of Chief Justice Rishibar Mukhopadhyaya, Kashmir. Mr. Mitra and 4 the Chief Justice are taking every care of them. We could not get a 5 plot of ground in Kashmir yet, but there is a chance that we shall 6 do so soon. If you can spend a winter here, you are sure to recoup 7 your health. If the house is a good one and if you have enough fuel 8 and warm clothing, then life in a land of snow is nothing but 9 enjoyable. Also for stomach troubles a cold climate is an unfailing 10 remedy. Bring Yogen with you; for the earth here is not stony, it is 11 clay like that of Bengal.

12 If the paper is brought out in Almora, the work will progress 13 much; for poor Sevier will have something to do, and the local 14 people also will get some work. Skilful management lies in giving 15 every man work after his own heart. By all the means in our 16 power the Nivedita Girls' School in Calcutta should be put on a 17 firm footing. To bring Master Mahashay to Kashmir is still a far 18 cry, for it will be long before a college is established here. But he 19 has written that it is possible to start a college in Calcutta, with 20 him as the principal, at an initial expense of a thousand rupees. I 21 hear that you all also favour this proposal. In this matter do what 22 you all consider best. My health is all right. I have to get up 23 seldom at night, even though I take twice a day rice and potatoes, 24 sugar, or whatever I get. Medicine is useless--it has no action on 25 the system of a Knower of Brahman! Everything will be digested-- 26 don't be afraid.

27 The ladies are doing well, and they send you their greetings.
28 Two letters from Shivananda have come. I have also received a 29 letter from his Australian disciple. I hear that the outbreak of 30 plague in Calcutta has completely subsided.

40 My Dear Rakhal {Brahmananda},

41 You are always under a delusion, and it does not leave you 42 because of the strong influence, good or bad, of other brains. It is 43 this: whenever I write to you about accounts, you feel that I have 44 no confidence in you. . . . My great anxiety is this: the work has 45 somehow been started, but it should go on and progress even 46 when we are not here; such thoughts worry me day and night. Any 47 amount of theoretical knowledge one may have; but unless one 48 does the thing actually, nothing is learnt. I refer repeatedly to 49 election, accounts, and discussion so that everybody may be

1 prepared to shoulder the work. If one man dies, another--why 2 another only, ten if necessary--should be ready to take it up.
3 Secondly, if a man's interest in a thing is not roused, he will not 4 work whole-heartedly; all should be made to understand that 5 everyone has a share in the work and property, and a voice in the 6 management. This should be done while there is yet time. Give a 7 responsible position to everyone alternately, but keep a watchful 8 eye so that you can control when necessary; thus only can men be 9 trained for the work. Set up such a machine as will go on 10 automatically, no matter who dies or lives. We Indians suffer from 11 a great defect, viz we cannot make a permanent organisation--and 12 the reason is that we never like to share power with others and 13 never think of what will come after we are gone.

14 I have already written everything regarding the plague.
15 Mrs. Bull and Miss Muller and others are of opinion that it is not 16 desirable to spend money uselessly when hospitals have been 17 started in every Ward. We lend our services as nurses and the 18 like. Those that pay the piper must command the tune.

19 The Maharaja of Kashmir has agreed to give us a plot of 20 land. I have also visited the site. Now the matter will be finalised 21 in a few days, if the Lord wills. Right now, before leaving, I hope 22 to build a small house here. I shall leave it in the charge of Justice 23 Mukherjee when departing. Why not come here with somebody 24 else and spend the winter? Your health will improve, and a need, 25 too, will be fulfilled. The money I have set apart for the press will 26 be sufficient for the purpose, but all will be as you decide. This 27 time I shall surely get some money from N.W.P., Rajputana, and 28 other places. Well, give as directed . . . money to a few persons. I 29 am borrowing this amount from the Math and will pay it back to 30 you with interest.

31 My health is all right in a way. It is good news that the 32 building work has begun. My love to all.

43 My Dear Mary {Hale},

44 I could not make an earlier opportunity of writing you, and 45 knowing that you were in no hurry for a letter, I will not make 46 apologies. You are learning all about Kashmir and ourselves from 47 Miss MacLeod's letter to Mrs. Leggett, I hear--therefore needless 48 going into long rigmaroles about it.

The search for Heinsholdt's Mahatmas in Kashmir will be entirely fruitless; and as the whole thing has first to be established as coming from a creditable source, the attempt will also be a little too early. How are Mother Church and Father Pope and where? How are you ladies, young and old? Going on with the old game with more zest now that one has fallen off the ranks? How is the lady that looks like a certain statue in Florence? (I have forgotten the name) I always bless her arms when I think of the comparison.

I have been away a few days. Now I am going to join the ladies. The party then goes to a nice quiet spot behind a hill, in a forest, through which a murmuring stream flows, to have meditation deep and long under the deodars (trees of God) cross-legged a la Buddha .

This will be for a month or so, when by that time our good work will have spent its powers and we shall fall from this Paradise to earth again; then work out our Karma a few months and then will have to go to hell for bad Karma in China, and our evil deeds will make us sink in bad odours with the world in Canton and other cities. Thence Purgatory in Japan? And regain Paradise once more in the U.S. of America. This is what Pumpkin Swami, brother of the Coomra Swami, foretells (in Bengali Coomra means squash). He is very clever with his hands. In fact his cleverness with his hands has several times brought him into great dangers.

I wished to send you so many nice things, but alas! the thought of the tariff makes my desires vanish "like youth in women and beggars' dreams".

By the by, I am glad now that I am growing grey every day. My head will be a full-blown white lotus by the time you see me next.

Ah! Mary, if you could see Kashmir--only Kashmir; the marvellous lakes full of lotuses and swans (there are no swans but geese--poetic licence) and the big black bee trying to settle on the wind-shaken lotus (I mean the lotus nods him off refusing a kiss--poetry), then you could have a good conscience on your death-bed. As this is earthly paradise and as logic says one bird in the hand is equal to two in the bush, a glimpse of this is wiser, but economically the other better; no trouble, no labour, no expense, a little namby-pamby dolly life and later, that is all.

My letter is becoming a bore . . . so I stop. (It is sheer idleness). Good night.

the Lord, Ever yours in

Dear Haripada {Mitra},

I got all news from your letter and wire. That you may easily pass your examination in Sindhi is my prayer to the Lord.

Recently my health was very bad, and so I have been delayed, otherwise I had intended to leave for the Punjab this week. The doctor had advised me not to go to the plains at the present time, as it is very hot there. Perhaps I may reach Karachi by about the last week of October. Now I am doing somewhat well. There is nobody else with me now excepting two American friends--ladies. Probably I shall part from them at Lahore. They will wait for me in Calcutta or in Rajputana. I shall probably visit Cutch, Bhuj, Junagad, Bhavnagar, Limbdi, and Baroda and then proceed to Calcutta. My present plan is to go to America via China and Japan in November or December, but it is all in the hands of the Lord. The above-mentioned American friends bear all my expenses, and I shall take from them all my expenses including railway fare up to Karachi. But if it is convenient to you, send me Rs. 50/- by wire C/o Rishibar Mukhopadhyaya, Chief Justice, Kashmir State, Srinagar. It will be a great help to me, for I have incurred much extra expense of late owing to illness, and I feel a little ashamed to have to depend always on my foreign devotees. With best wishes,

Yours

affectionately,

Vivekananda

In Kashmir my health has completely broken down, and I have not witnessed the Durga-Puja for the last nine years; so I am starting for Calcutta. I have for the present given up the plan of going to America. I think I shall have plenty of time to go to Karachi during the winter.

My brother-disciple Saradananda will send Rs. 50/- from 1 Lahore to Karachi. Don't yield to sorrow--everything is in God's

32 My Dear Mary {Hale},
33 Thanks to Mrs. Adams; she roused you naughty girls to a 34 letter at last. "Out of sight out of mind"—as true in India as in 35 America. And the other young lady, who just left her love as she 36 flitted by, deserves a ducking I suppose.

37 Well, I have been in a sort of merry-go-round with my body 38 which has been trying to convince me for months that it too much 39 exists.

40 However, no fear, with four mental-healing sisters as I have, 41 no sinking just now. Give me a strong pull and a long pull, will 42 you, all together, and then I am up!

43 Why do you talk so much about me in your one-letter-a-year

1 and so little about the four witches mumbling Mantras over the 2 boiling pot in a corner of Chicago?

3 Did you come across Max Muller's new book, Ramakrishna:
4 His Life and Sayings ?

5 If you have not, do, and let Mother see it. How is Mother?
6 Growing grey? And Father Pope? Who have been our last visitors
7 from America do you suppose? "Brother, love is a drawing card"
8 and "Misses Meel"; they have been doing splendid in Australia
9 and elsewhere; the same old "fellies", little changed if any. I wish 10 you could come to visit India--that will be some day in the future.
11 By the by, Mary, I heard a few months ago, when I was rather 12 worrying over your long silence, that you were just hooking a 13 "Willy", and so busy with your dances and parties; that explained 14 of course your inability to write. But "Willy" or no "Willy", I must 15 have my money, don't forget. Harriet is discreetly silent since she 16 got her boy; but where is my money, please? Remind her and her 17 husband of it. If she is Woolley, I am greasy Bengali, as the 18 English call us here--Lord, where is my money?

19 I have got a monastery on the Ganga now, after all, thanks
20 to American and English friends. Tell Mother to look sharp. I am 21 going to deluge your Yankee land with idolatrous missionaries.

22 Tell Mr. Woolley he got the sister but has not paid the 23 brother yet. Moreover, it was the fat black queerly dressed 24 apparition smoking in the parlour that frightened many a 25 temptation away, and that was one of the causes which secured 26 Harriet to Mr. Woolley; therefore, I want to be paid for my great 27 share in the work etc., etc. Plead strong, will you?

28 I do so wish I could come over to America with Joe for this 29 summer; but man proposes and who disposes? Not God surely 30 always. Well, let things slide as they will. Here is Abhayananda, 31 Marie Louse you know, and she has been very well received in 32 Bombay and Madras. She will be in Calcutta tomorrow, and we 33 are going to give her a good reception too.

34 My love to Miss Howe, Mrs. Adams, to Mother Church, and 35 Father Pope and all the rest of my friends across the seven 36 oceans. We believe in seven oceans--one of milk, one of honey, one 37 of curd, one wine, one sugar-cane juice, one salt, one I forget 38 what. To you four sisters I waft my love across the ocean of honey.
39 ...

40 Ever sincerely,
41 your brother

4 My Dear Sturdy,

5 I got your letter all right just now. I have one from M. Nobel 6 of Paris too. Miss Noble has several from America.

7 M. Nobel writes to me to defer my visit to him at Paris to 8 some other date, from London, as he will have to be away for a 9 long time. As you know sure, I shall not have many friends staying 10 now in London, and Miss MacLeod is so desirous I should come. A 11 stay in England under these circumstances is not advisable.
12 Moreover, I do not have much life left. At least I must go on with 13 that supposition. I mean, if anything has to be done in America, it 14 is high time we bring our scattered influence in America to a 15 head--if not organise regularly. Then I shall be free to return to 16 England in a few months and work with a will till I return to India.

17 I think you are absolutely wanted to gather up, as it were, 18 the American work. If you can, therefore, you ought to come over 19 with me. Turiyananda is with me. Saradananda's brother is going 20 to Boston. . . . In case you cannot come to America, I ought to go, 21 ought I not?

32 My Dear Joe {MacLeod},

33 We are in at last. Turiyananda and I have beautiful lodgings 34 here. Saradananda's brother is with Miss Noble and starts 35 Monday next.

36 I have recovered quite a bit by the voyage. It was brought 37 about by the exercise on the dumb-bells and monsoon storms 38 tumbling the steamer about the waves. Queer, isn't it? Hope it will 39 remain. Where is our Mother, the Worshipful Brahmini cow of 40 India? She is with you in New York, I think.

41 Sturdy is away, Mrs. Johnson and everybody. Margo is 42 rather worried at that. She cannot come to U.S. till next month.
43 Already I have come to love the sea. The fish Avatara is on me, I 44 am afraid--good deal of him in me, I am sure, a Bengali.

45 How is Alberta, . . . the old folks and the rest of them? I had 46 a beautiful letter from dear Mrs. Brer Rabbit; she could not meet

1 us in London; she started before we arrived.

2 It is nice and warm here; rather too much they say. I have 3 become for the present a Shunyavadi, a believer in nothingness, 4 or void. No plans, no afterthought, no attempt, for anything, 5 laissez faire to the fullest. Well, Joe, Margo would always take 6 your side on board the steamer, whenever I criticised you or the 7 Divine cow. Poor child, she knows so little! The upshot of the 8 whole is, Joe, that there cannot be any work in London, because 9 you are not here. You seem to be my fate! Grind on, old lady; it is 10 Karma and none can avoid. Say, I look several years younger by 11 this voyage. Only when the heart gives a lurch, I feel my age.
12 What is this osteopathy, anyway? Will they cut off a rib or two to 13 cure me? Not I, no manufacturing of . . . from my ribs, sure.
14 Whatever it be, it will be hard work for him to find my bones. My 15 bones are destined to make corals in the Ganga. Now I am going 16 to study French if you give me a lesson every day; but no
17 grammar business--only I will read and you explain in English.
18 Kindly give my love to Abhedananda, and ask him to get ready for 19 Turiyananda. I will leave with him. Write soon.

20 With all love

30 My Dear Marie {Halboister},

31 I am in London again. This time not busy, not hustling about 32 but quietly settled down in a corner--waiting to start for the U.S.
33 America on the first opportunity. My friends are nearly all out of 34 London in the country and elsewhere, and my health not 35 sufficiently strong.

36 So you are happy in the midst of your lakes and gardens and 37 seclusion in Canada. I am glad, so glad to know that you are up 38 again on top of the tide. May you remain there for ever!

39 You could not finish the Raja-Yoga translation yet--all right, 40 there is no hurry. Time and opportunity must come if it is to be 41 done you know, otherwise we vainly strive.

42 Canada must be beautiful now, with its short but vigorous 43 summer, and very healthy.

44 I expect to be in New York in a few weeks, and don't know 45 what next. I hope to come back to England next spring.

46 I fervently wish no misery ever came near anyone; yet it is 1 that alone that gives us an insight into the depths of our lives, 2 does it not?

3 In our moments of anguish, gates barred for ever seem to 4 open and let in many a flood of light.

5 We learn as we grow. Alas! we cannot use our knowledge 6 here. The moment we seem to learn, we are hurried off the stage.
7 And this is Maya!

8 This toy world would not be here, this play could not go on, 9 if we were knowing players. We must play blindfolded. Some of us 10 have taken the part of the rogue of the play, some heroic--never 11 mind, it is all play. This is the only consolation. There are demons 12 and lions and tigers and what not on the stage, but they are all 13 muzzled. They snap but cannot bite. The world cannot touch our 14 souls. If you want, even if the body be torn and bleeding, you may 15 enjoy the greatest peace in your mind.

16 And the way to that is to attain hopelessness. Do you know 17 that? Not the imbecile attitude of despair, but the contempt of the 18 conqueror for things he has attained, for things he struggled for 19 and then throws aside as beneath his worth.

20 This hopelessness, desirelessness, aimlessness, is just the 21 harmony with nature. In nature there is no harmony, no reason, no 22 sequence; it was chaos before, it is so still.

23 The lowest man is in consonance with nature in his earthy-24 headness; the highest the same in the fullness of knowledge. All 25 three aimless, drifting, hopeless--all three happy.

26 You want a chatty letter, don't you? I have not much to chat
27 about. Mr. Sturdy came last two days. He goes home in Wales 28 tomorrow.

29 I have to book my passage for N.Y. in a day or two.

30 None of my old friends have I seen yet except Miss Souter 31 and Max Gysic, who are in London. They have been very kind, as 32 they always were.

33 I have no news to give you, as I know nothing of London yet.
34 I don't know where Gertrude Orchard is, else would have written 35 to her. Miss Kate Steel is also away. She is coming on Thursday or 36 Saturday.

37 I had an invitation to stay in Paris with a friend, a very well-38 educated Frenchman, but I could not go this time. I hope another 39 time to live with him some days.

40 I expect to see some of our old friends and say good day to 41 them.

42 I hope to see you in America sure. Either I may 43 unexpectedly turn up in Ottawa in my peregrinations or you come 44 to N.Y.

45 Good-bye, all luck be yours.

46 Ever yours in
47 the Lord,

Vivekananda

My Dear Rakhal {Brahmananda},

I got a lot of news from your letter. My health was much better on the ship, but, after landing, owing to flatulence it is rather bad now. . . . There is a lot of difficulty here--all friends have gone out of town for the summer. In addition my health is not so good, and there is a lot of inconvenience regarding food etc. So in a few days I leave for America. Send an account to Mrs. Bull as to how much was spent on purchase of land, how much on buildings, how much on maintenance etc.

Sarada writes that the magazine is not going well. . . . Let him publish the account of my travels, and thoroughly advertise it beforehand--he will have subscribers rushing in. Do people like a magazine if three-fourths of it are filled with pious stuff? Anyway pay special attention to the magazine. Mentally take it as though I were not. Act independently on this basis. "We depend on the elder brother for money, learning, everything"--such an attitude is the road to ruin. If all the money even for the magazine is to be collected by me and all the articles too are from my pen--what will you all do? What are our Sahibs then doing? I have finished my part. You do what remains to be done. Nobody is there to collect a single penny, nobody to do any preaching, none has brains enough to take proper care of his own affairs, none has the capacity to write one line, and all are saints for nothing! . . . If this be your condition, then for six months give everything into the hands of the boys--magazine, money, preaching work, etc. If they are also not able to do anything, then sell off everything, and returning the proceeds to the donors go about as mendicants. I get no news at all from the Math. What is Sharat doing? I want to see work done. Before dying, I want to see that what I have established as a result of my lifelong struggle is put in a more or less running condition. Consult the Committee in every detail regarding money matters. Get the signatures of the Committee for every item of expenditure. Otherwise you also will be in for a bad name. This much is customary that people want some time or other an account of their donations. It is very wrong not to have it ready at every turn. . . . By such lethargy in the beginning, people finally become cheats. Make a committee of all those who are in the Math, and no expenditure will be made which is not countersigned by them--none at all! I want work, I want vigour--no matter who lives or dies. What are death and life to a Sannyasin?

If Sharat cannot rouse up Calcutta, . . . if you are not able to

1 construct the embankment this year, then you will see the fun! I 2 want work--no humbug about it. My respectful salutations to Holy 3 Mother.

4
5 affectionately, Yours
6 Vivekananda

13 My Dear Mother {Mrs. Bull},
14 It is an awful spell of the bad turn of fortune with me last six 15 months. Misfortune follows me ever wherever I go. In England, 16 Sturdy seems to have got disgusted with the work; he does not 17 see any asceticism in us from India. Here no sooner I reach than 18 Olea gets a bad attack.

19 Shall I run up to you? I know I cannot be of much help, but I 20 will try my best in being useful.

21 I hope everything will soon come right with you, and Olea 22 will be restored to perfect health even before this reaches you.
23 Mother knows best; that is all about me.

24 Ever yours
25 affectionately,

34 My Dear Sturdy,
35 I have simply been taking rest at the Leggetts' and doing 36 nothing. Abhedananda is here. He has been working hard.

37 He goes in a day or two to resume his work in different 38 places for a month. After that he comes to New York to work.

39 I am trying to do something in the line you suggested, but 40 don't know how far an account of the Hindus will be appreciated
41 by the Western public when it comes from a Hindu. . . .

42 Mrs. Johnson is of opinion that no spiritual person ought to 43 be ill. It also seems to her now that my smoking is sinful etc., etc.
44 That was Miss Muller's reason for leaving me, my illness. They

1 may be perfectly right, for aught I know--and you too--but I am
2 what I am. In India, the same defects plus eating with Europeans
3 have been taken exception to by many. I was driven out of a 4 private temple by the owners for eating with Europeans. I wish I 5 were malleable enough to be moulded into whatever one desired, 6 but unfortunately I never saw a man who could satisfy everyone.
7 Nor can anyone who has to go to different places possibly satisfy 8 all.

9 When I first came to America, they ill-treated me if I had not 10 trousers on. Next I was forced to wear cuffs and collars, else they 11 would not touch me etc., etc. They thought me awfully funny if I 12 did not eat what they offered etc., etc. . . .

13 In India the moment I landed they made me shave my head
14 and wear "Kaupin" (loin cloth), with the result that I got diabetes 15 etc. Saradananda never gave up his underwear--this saved his life, 16 with just a touch of rheumatism and much comment from our 17 people.

18 Of course, it is my Karma, and I am glad that it is so. For, 19 though it smarts for the time, it is another great experience of 20 life, which will be useful, either in this or in the next. . . .

21 As for me, I am always in the midst of ebbs and flows. I 22 knew it always and preached always that every bit of pleasure will 23 bring its quota of pain, if not with compound interest. I have a 24 good deal of love given to me by the world; I deserve a good deal 25 of hatred therefore. I am glad it is so--as it proves my theory of 26 "every wave having its corresponding dip" on my own person.

27 As for me, I stick to my nature and principle--once a friend, 28 always a friend--also the true Indian principle of looking 29 subjectively for the cause of the objective.

30 I am sure that the fault is mine, and mine only, for every 31 wave of dislike and hatred that I get. It could not be otherwise.
32 Thanking you and Mrs. Johnson for thus calling me once more to 33 the internal,

34 I remain as ever with love and 35 blessings,

36 Vivekananda

44 My Dear Mary {Hale},

45 Yes, I have arrived. I had a letter from Isabelle from 46 Greenacre. I hope to see her soon and Harriet. Harriet Woolley 47 has been uniformly silent. Never mind, I will bide my time, and as 1 soon as Mr. Woolley becomes a millionaire, demand my money.

2 You did not write any particulars about Mother Church and Father
3 Pope, only the news of something about me in some newspapers. I 4 have long ceased to take any interest in papers; only they keep me 5 before the public and get a sale of my books "anyway" as you say.
6 Do you know what I am trying to do now? Writing a book on India
7 and her people--a short chatty simple something. Again I am going 8 to learn French. If I fail to do it this year, I cannot "do" the Paris
9 Exposition next year properly. Well, I expect to learn much French 10 here where even the servants talk it.

11 You never saw Mrs. Leggett, did you? She is simply grand. I 12 am going to Paris next year as their guest, as I did the first time.

13 I have now got a monastery on the Ganga for the teaching of 14 philosophy and comparative religion and a centre of work.

15 What have you been doing all this time? Reading? Writing?
16 You did not do anything. You could have written lots by this time.
17 Even if you had taught me French, I would be quite a Froggy now, 18 and you did not, only made me talk nonsense. You never went to 19 Greenacre. I hope it is getting strength every year.

20 Say, you 24 feet and 600 lbs. of Christian Science, you could 21 not pull me up with your treatments. I am losing much faith in 22 your healing powers. Where is Sam? "Bewaring" all this time as 23 he could; bless his heart, such a noble boy!

24 I was growing grey fast, but somehow it got checked. I am 25 sorry, only a few grey hairs now; a research will unearth many 26 though. I like it and am going to cultivate a long white goaty.
27 Mother Church and Father Pope were having a fine time on the 28 continent. I saw a bit on my way home. And you have been 29 Cinderella-ing in Chicago--good for you. Persuade the old folks to 30 go to Paris next year and take you along. There must be wonderful 31 sights to see; the French are making a last great struggle, they 32 say, before closing business.

33 Well, you did not write me long, long. You do not deserve 34 this letter, but--I am so good you know, especially as death is 35 drawing near--I do not want to quarrel with anyone. I am dying to 36 see Isabelle and Harriet. I hope they have got a great supply of 37 healing power at Greenacre Inn and will help me out of my 38 present fall. In my days the Inn was well stored with spiritual 39 food, and less of material stuff. Do you know anything of 40 osteopathy? Here is one in New York working wonders really.

41 I am going to have my bones searched by him in a week.
42 Where is Miss Howe? She is such a noble soul, such a friend. By 43 the by, Mary, it is curious your family, Mother Church and her 44 clergy, both monastic and secular, have made more impression on 45 me than any family I know of. Lord bless you ever and ever.

46 I am taking rest now, and the Leggetts are so kind. I feel 47 perfectly at home. I intend to go to New York to see the Dewy 48 procession. I have not seen my friends there.

49 Write me all about yourselves. I so long to hear. You know

1 Joe Joe of course. I marred their visit to India with my constant 2 break-downs, and they were so good, so forgiving. For years Mrs.
3 Bull and she have been my guardian angels. Mrs. Bull is expected 4 here next week.

5 She would have been here before this, but her daughter 6 (Olea) had a spell of illness. She suffered much, but is now out of 7 danger. Mrs. Bull has taken one of Leggett's cottages here, and if 8 the cold weather does not set in faster than usual, we are going to 9 have a delightful month here even now. The place is so beautiful-- 10 well wooded and perfect lawns.

11 I tried to play golf the other day; I do not think it difficult at 12 all--only it requires good practice. You never went to Philadelphia 13 to visit your golfing friends? What are your plans? What do you 14 intend to do the rest of your life? Have you thought out any work?
15 Write me a long letter, will you? I saw a lady in the streets of 16 Naples as I was passing, going along with three others, must be 17 Americans, so like you that I was almost going to speak to her; 18 when I came near I saw my mistake. Good-bye for the present.
19 Write sharp. . . .

46 My Dear Optimist {Mary Hale},

1 I received your letter and am thankful that something has 2 come to force optimistic laissez faire into action. Your questions 3 have tapped the very source of pessimism, however. British rule in 4 modern India has only one redeeming feature, though 5 unconscious; it has brought India out once more on the stage of 6 the world; it has forced upon it the contact of the outside world. If 7 it had been done with an eye to the good of the people concerned, 8 as circumstances favoured Japan with, the results could have 9 been more wonderful for India. No good can be done when the 10 main idea is blood-sucking. On the whole the old regime was 11 better for the people, as it did not take away everything they had, 12 and there was some justice, some liberty.

13 A few hundred, modernised, half-educated, and 14 denationalised men are all the show of modern English India-- 15 nothing else. The Hindus were 600 million in number according to 16 Ferishta, the Mohammedan historian, in the 12th century--now 17 less than 200 million.

18 In spite of the centuries of anarchy that reigned during the 19 struggles of the English to conquer, the terrible massacre the 20 English perpetrated in 1857 and 1858, and the still more terrible 21 famines that have become the inevitable consequence of British 22 rule (there never is a famine in a native state) and that take off 23 millions, there has been a good increase of population, but not yet 24 what it was when the country was entirely independent--that is, 25 before the Mohammedan rule. Indian labour and produce can 26 support five times as many people as there are now in India with 27 comfort, if the whole thing is not taken off from them.

28 This is the state of things--even education will no more be 29 permitted to spread; freedom of the press stopped already, (of 30 course we have been disarmed long ago), the bit of self-31 government granted to them for some years is being quickly taken 32 off. We are watching what next! For writing a few words of 33 innocent criticism, men are being hurried to transportation for 34 life, others imprisoned without any trial; and nobody knows when 35 his head will be off.

36 There has been a reign of terror in India for some years.
37 English soldiers are killing our men and outraging our women-- 38 only to be sent home with passage and pension at our expense.
39 We are in a terrible gloom--where is the Lord? Mary, you can 40 afford to be optimistic, can I? Suppose you simply publish this 41 letter--the law just passed in India will allow the English
42 Government in India to drag me from here to India and kill me 43 without trial. And I know all your Christian governments will only 44 rejoice, because we are heathens. Shall I also go to sleep and 45 become optimistic? Nero was the greatest optimistic person! They 46 don't think it worth while to write these terrible things as news 47 items even! If necessary, the news agent of Reuter gives the 48 exactly opposite news fabricated to order! Heathen-murdering is 49 only a legitimate pastime for the Christians! Your missionaries go 50 to preach God and dare not speak a word of truth for fear of the 51 English, who will kick them out the next day.

1 All property and lands granted by the previous governments 2 for supporting education have been swallowed up, and the 3 present Government spends even less than Russia in education.
4 And what education?

5 The least show of originality is throttled. Mary, it is hopeless 6 with us, unless there really is a God who is the father of all, who is 7 not afraid of the strong to protect the weak, and who is not bribed 8 by wealth. Is there such a God? Time will show.

9 Well, I think I am coming to Chicago in a few weeks and talk 10 of things fully! Don't quote your authority.

11 With all love, ever your 12 brother,

13 Vivekananda

14 PS. As for religious sects--the Brahmo Samaj, the Arya 15 Samaj, and other sects have been useless mixtures; they were 16 only voices of apology to our English masters to allow us to live!
17 We have started a new India--a growth --waiting to see what 18 comes. We believe in new ideas only when the nation wants them, 19 and what will be true for us. The test of truth for this Brahmo 20 Samaj is "what our masters approve"; with us, what the Indian 21 reasoning and experience approves. The struggle has begun--not 22 between the Brahmo Samaj and us, for they are gone already, but 23 a harder, deeper, and more terrible one.

34 My Dear Sturdy,

35 Your last letter reached me after knocking about a little 36 through insufficient address.

37 It is quite probable that very much of your criticism is just 38 and correct. It is also possible that some day you may find that all 39 this springs from your dislike of certain persons, and I was the 40 scapegoat.

41 There need be no bitterness, however, on that account, as I 42 don't think I ever posed for anything but what I am. Nor is it ever 43 possible for me to do so, as an hour's contact is enough to make 44 everybody see through my smoking, bad temper, etc. "Every 45 meeting must have a separation"--this is the nature of things. I 46 carry no feeling of disappointment even. I hope you will have no

1 bitterness. It is Karma that brings us together, and Karma 2 separates.

3 I know how shy you are, and how loath to wound others'
4 feelings. I perfectly understand months of torture in your mind 5 when you have been struggling to work with people who were so 6 different from your ideal. I could not guess it before at all, else I 7 could have saved you a good deal of unnecessary mental trouble.
8 It is Karma again.

9 The accounts were not submitted before, as the work is not 10 yet finished; and I thought of submitting to my donor a complete 11 account when the whole thing was finished. The work was begun 12 only last year, as we had to wait for funds a long time, and my 13 method is never to ask but wait for voluntary help.

14 I follow the same idea in all my work, as I am so conscious 15 of my nature being positively displeasing to many, and wait till 16 somebody wants me. I hold myself ready also to depart at a 17 moment's notice. In the matter of departure thus, I never feel bad 18 about it or think much of it, as, in the constant roving life I lead, I 19 am constantly doing it. Only so sorry, I trouble others without 20 wishing it. Will you kindly send over if there is any mail for me at 21 your address?

22 May all blessings attend you and yours for ever and ever

34 My Dear Mrs. Bull,

35 After all I decide to come to Cambridge just now. I must 36 finish the stories I began. The first one I don't think was given 37 back to me by Margo.

38 My clothes will be ready the day after tomorrow, and then I 39 shall be ready to start; only my fear is, it will be for the whole 40 winter a place for becoming nervous and not for quieting of 41 nerves, with constant parties and lectures. Well, perhaps you can 42 give me a room somewhere, where I can hide myself from all the 43 goings on in the place. Again I am so nervous of going to a place 44 where indirectly the Indian Math will be. The very name of these 45 Math people is enough to frighten me. And they are determined to 46 kill with these letters etc.

47 Anyhow, I come as soon as I have my clothes--this week. You

1 need not come to New York for my sake. If you have business of 2 your own, that is another matter. I had a very kind invitation from 3 Mrs. Wheeler of Montclair. Before I start for Boston, I will have a 4 turn-in in Montclair for a few hours at least.

5 I am much better and am all right; nothing the matter with 6 me except my worry, and now I am sure to throw that all 7 overboard.

8 Only one thing I want--and I am afraid I cannot get it of 9 you--there should be no communication about me in your letters to 10 India even indirect. I want to hide for a time or for all time. How I 11 curse the day that brought me celebrity!

22 Got some news from Sharat's letter. . . . Get experience
23 while still there is a chance; I am not concerned whether you win 24 or lose. . . . I have no disease now.

25 Again. . . . I am going to tour from place to place. There is 26 no reason for anxiety, be fearless. Everything will fly away before 27 you; only don't be disobedient, and all success will be yours. . . .
28 Victory to Kali! Victory to the Mother! Victory to Kali! Wah Guru, 29 Wah Guru ki Fateh (Victory unto the Guru)!

30 . . . Really, there is no greater sin than cowardice; cowards 31 are never saved--that is sure. I can stand everything else but not 32 that. Can I have any dealings with one who will not give that 33 up? . . . If one gets one blow, one must return ten with redoubled 34 fury. . . . Then only one is a man. . . . The coward is an object to be 35 pitied.

36 I bless you all; today, on this day sacred to the Divine 37 Mother, on this night, may the Mother dance in your hearts, and 38 bring infinite strength to your arms. Victory to Kali! Victory to 39 Kali! Mother will certainly come down--and with great strength 40 will bring all victory, world victory. Mother is coming, what dear?
41 Whom to fear? Victory to Kali! At the tread of each one of you the 42 earth will tremble. . . . Victory to Kali! Again onward, forward!
43 Wah Guru! Victory to the Mother! Kali! Kali! Kali! Disease, sorrow, 44 danger, weakness--all these have departed from you all. All 45 victory, all good fortune, all prosperity yours. Fear not! Fear not!
46 The threat of calamity is vanishing, fear not! Victory to Kali!
47 Victory to Kali!

1 Vivekananda

2 PS. I am the servant of the Mother, you are all servants of 3 the Mother--what destruction, what fear is there for us? Don't

30 My Dear Brahmananda,

31 The accounts are all right. I have handed them over to Mrs.
32 Bull who has taken charge of reporting the different parts of the 33 accounts to different donors. Never mind what I have said in 34 previous harsh letters. They would do you good. Firstly, they will 35 make you business-like in the future to keep regular and clear 36 accounts and get the brethren into it. Secondly, if these scolding 37 don't make you brave, I shall have no more hopes of you. I want to 38 see you die even, but you must make a fight. Die in obeying 39 commands like a soldier, and go to Nirvana, but no cowardice.

40 It is necessary that I must disappear for some time. Let not 41 anyone write me or seek me during that time, it is absolutely 42 necessary for my health. I am only nervous, that is all, nothing 43 more.

44 All blessings follow you. Never mind my harshness. You 45 know the heart always, whatever the lips say. All blessings on you.

1 For the last year or so I have not been in my senses at all. I do not 2 know why. I had to pass through this hell--and I have. I am much
3 better--well, in fact. Lord help you all. I am going to the Himalayas 4 soon to retire for ever. My work is done.

15 My Dear Dhira Mata {Mrs. Bull},

16 I have a letter from Calcutta today, from which I learn your 17 cheques have arrived; a great many thanks and grateful words 18 also came.

19 Miss Souter of London sends me a printed New Year's 20 greetings. I think she must have got the accounts you sent her by 21 this time.

22 Kindly send Saradananda's letters that have come to your 23 care.

24 As for me, I had a slight relapse of late, for which the healer 25 has rubbed several inches of my skin off.

26 Just now I am feeling it, the smart. I had a very hopeful note 27 from Margo. I am grinding on in Pasadena; hope some result will 28 come out of my work here. Some people here are very 29 enthusiastic; the Raja-Yoga book did indeed great services on this 30 coast. I am mentally very well; indeed I never really was so calm 31 as of late. The lectures for one thing do not disturb my sleep, that 32 is some gain. I am doing some writing too. The lectures here were 33 taken down by a stenographer, the people here want to print
34 them.

35 I learn they are well and doing good work at the Math--from 36 Swami Saradananda's letter to Joe. Slowly as usual plans are 37 working; but Mother knows, as I say. May She give me release 38 and find other workers for Her plans. By the by, I have made a 39 discovery as to the mental method of really practising what the 40 Gita teaches, of working without an eye to results. I have seen 41 much light on concentration and attention and control of 42 concentration, which if practised will take us out of all anxiety and 43 worry. It is really the science of bottling up our minds whenever 44 we like. Now what about yourself, poor Dhira Mata! This is the 45 result of motherhood and its penalties; we all think of ourselves, 46 and never of the Mother. How are you? How are things going on 47 with you? What about your daughter? about Mrs. Briggs?

1 I hope Turiyananda is completely recovered now and 2 working. Poor man, suffering is the lot! Never mind; there is a 3 pleasure in suffering even, when it is for others, is there not? Mrs.
4 Leggett is doing well; so is Joe; I--they say--I too am. May be they 5 are right. I work anyway and want to die in harness; if that be 6 what Mother wants, I am quite content.

7 Ever your
8 son,

17 Beloved Dhira Mata {Mrs. Bull},

18 An eventful and happy New Year to you and many such 19 returns!

20 I am much better in health--able enough to work once more.
21 I have started work already and have sent to Saradananda some 22 money--Rs. 1,300 already--as expenses for the law suit. I shall 23 send more, if they need it. I had a very bad dream this morning 24 and had not any news of Saradananda for three weeks. Poor boys!
25 How hard I am on them at times. Well, they know, in spite of all 26 that, I am their best friend.

27 Mr. Leggett has got a little over £500 I had with Sturdy on 28 account of Raja-Yoga and the Maharaja of Khetri. I have now 29 about a thousand dollars with Mr. Leggett. If I die, kindly send 30 that money to my mother. I wired to the boys three weeks ago that 31 I was perfectly cured. If I don't get any worse, this much health as 32 I have now will do well enough. Do not worry at all on my account; 33 I am up and working with a will.

34 I am sorry I could not write any more of the stories. I have 35 written some other things and mean to write something almost 36 every day.

37 I am very much more peaceful and find that the only way to 38 keep my peace is to teach others. Work is my only safety valve.

39 I only want some clear business head to take care of the 40 details as I push onwards and work on. I am afraid it will be a 41 long time to find such in India, and if there are any, they ought to 42 be educated by somebody from the West.

43 Again, I can only work when thrown completely on my own 44 feet. I am at my best when I am alone. Mother seems to arrange 45 so. Joe believes great things are brewing--in Mother's cup; hope it 46 is so.

1 Joe and Margot have developed into actual prophets, it
2 seems. I can only say, every blow I had in this life, every pang, will 3 only become joyful sacrifice if Mother becomes propitious to India 4 once more.

5 Miss Greenstidel writes a beautiful letter to me, about you 6 most of it. She thinks a lot about Turiyananda too. Give 7 Turiyananda my love. I am sure he will work well. He has the 8 pluck and stamina.

9 I am going soon to work in California; when I leave I shall 10 send for Turiyananda and make him work on the Pacific coast. I 11 am sure here is a great field. The Raja-Yoga book seems to be very 12 well known here. Miss Greenstidel had found great peace under 13 your roof and is very happy. I am so glad it is so. May things go a 14 little better with her every day. She has a good business head and 15 practical sense.

16 Joe has unearthed a magnetic healing woman. We are both 17 under her treatment. Joe thinks she is pulling me up splendidly.
18 On her has been worked a miracle, she claims. Whether it is 19 magnetic healing, California ozone, or the end of the present spell 20 of bad Karma, I am improving. It is a great thing to be able to 21 walk three miles, even after a heavy dinner.

22 All love and blessings to Olea. My love to Dr. Janes and 23 other Boston friends.

24 Ever your 25 son,

36 My Dear Mary {Hale},

37 Merry Christmas and Happy New Year and many, many 38 glorious returns of such for your birthday. All these wishes, 39 prayers, greetings in one breath. I am cured, you will be glad to 40 know. It was only indigestion and no heart or kidney affection, 41 quoth the healers; nothing more. And I am walking three miles a 42 day--after a heavy dinner.

43 Say--the person healing me insisted on my smoking! So I am 44 having my pipe nicely and am all the better for it. In plain English 45 the nervousness etc. was all due to dyspepsia and nothing more.

46 . . . I am at work too; working, working, not hard; but I don't

1 care, and I want to make money this time. Tell this to Margot,
2 especially the pipe business. You know who is healing me? No
3 physician, no Christian Science healer, but a magnetic healing 4 woman who skins me every time she treats me. Wonders--she 5 performs operations by rubbing--internal operations too, her 6 patients tell me.

7 It is getting late in the night. I have to give up writing 8 separate letters to Margot, Harriet, Isabelle, and Mother Church.
9 Wish is half the work. They all know how I love them dearly, 10 passionately ; so you become the medium for my spirit for the 11 time, and carry them my New Year's messages.

12 It is exactly like Northern Indian winter here, only some 13 days a little warmer; the roses are here and the beautiful palms.
14 Barley is in the fields, roses and many other flowers round about 15 the cottage where I live. Mrs. Blodgett, my host, is a Chicago 16 lady--fat, old, and extremely witty. She heard me in Chicago and is 17 very motherly.

18 I am so sorry, the English have caught a Tartar in South 19 Africa. A soldier on duty outside a camp bawled out that he had 20 caught a Tartar. "Bring him in", was the order from inside the 21 tent. "He will not come", replied the sentry. "Then you come 22 yourself", rang the order again. "He will not let me come either".
23 Hence the phrase "to catch a Tartar". Don't you catch any.

24 I am happy just now and hope to remain so for all the rest of 25 my life. Just now I am Christian Science--no evil, and "love is a 26 drawing card".

27 I shall be very happy if I can make a lot of money. I am 28 making some. Tell Margot, I am going to make a lot of money and 29 go home by way of Japan, Honolulu, China, and Java. This is a nice 30 place to make money quick in; and San Francisco is better, I hear.
31 Has she made any?

32 You could not get the millionaire. Why don't you start for 33 half or one-fourth million? Something is better than nothing. We 34 want money; he may go into Lake Michigan, we have not the least 35 objection. We had a bit of an earthquake here the other day. I 36 hope it has gone to Chicago and raised Isabelle's mud-puddle up.
37 It is getting late. I am yawning, so here I quit.

38 Good-bye; all blessings,
39 all love,

45 My Dear Dhira Mata {Mrs. Bull},

46 I received yours with the enclosures for Saradananda; and 47 there was some good news. I hope to get some more news this 48 week. You did not write anything about your plans. I had a letter

1 from Miss Greenstidel expressing her deep gratitude for your 2 kindness--and who does not? Turiyananda is getting well by this 3 time, I hope.

4 I have been able to remit Rs. 2,000 to Saradananda, with 5 the help of Miss MacLeod and Mrs. Leggett. Of course they 6 contributed the best part. The rest was got by lectures. I do not 7 expect anything much here or anywhere by lecturing. I can 8 scarcely make expenses. No, not even that; whenever it comes to 9 paying, the people are nowhere. The field of lecturing in this 10 country has been overworked; the people have outgrown that.

11 I am decidedly better in health. The healer thinks I am now 12 at liberty to go anywhere I choose, the process will go on, and I 13 shall completely recover in a few months. She insists on this, that 14 I am cured already; only nature will have to work out the rest.

15 Well, I came here principally for health. I have got it; in 16 addition I got Rs. 2,000, to defray the law expenses. Good.

17 Now it occurs to me that my mission from the platform is 18 finished, and I need not break my health again by that sort of 19 work.

20 It is becoming clearer to me that I lay down all the concerns
21 of the Math and for a time go back to my mother. She has suffered 22 much through me. I must try to smooth her last days. Do you 23 know, this was just exactly what the great Shankaracharya himself 24 had to do! He had to go back to his mother in the last few days of 25 her life! I accept it, I am resigned. I am calmer than ever. The only 26 difficulty is the financial part. Well, the Indian people owe 27 something. I will try Madras and a few other friends in India.
28 Anyhow, I must try, as I have forebodings that my mother has not 29 very many years to live. Then again, this is coming to me as the 30 greatest of all sacrifices to make, the sacrifice of ambition, of 31 leadership, of fame. I am resigned and must do the penance. The 32 one thousand dollars with Mr. Leggett and if a little more is 33 collected, will be enough to fall back upon in case of need. Will 34 you send me back to India? I am ready any time. Don't go to 35 France without seeing me. I have become practical at least 36 compared to the visionary dreams of Joe and Margot. Let them
37 work their dreams out for me--they are not more than dreams. I 38 want to make out a trust-deed of the Math in the names of 39 Saradananda, Brahmananda, and yourself. I will do it as soon as I 40 get the papers from Saradananda. Then I am quits. I want rest, a 41 meal, a few books, and I want to do some scholarly work. Mother 42 shows this light vividly now. Of course you were the one to whom 43 She showed it first. I would not believe it then. But then, it is now 44 shown that--leaving my mother was a great renunciation in 1884-- 45 it is a greater renunciation to go back to my mother now .
46 Probably Mother wants me to undergo the same that She made 47 the great Acharya undergo in old days. Is it? I am surer of your 48 guidance than of my own. Joe and Margot are great souls, but to 49 you Mother is now sending the light for my guidance. Do you see 50 light? What do you advise? At least do not go out of this country 51 without sending me home.

1 I am but a child; what work have I to do? My powers I 2 passed over to you. I see it. I cannot any more tell from the 3 platform. Don't tell it to anyone--not even to Joe. I am glad. I want 4 rest; not that I am tired, but the next phase will be the miraculous 5 touch and not the tongue --like Ramakrishna's. The word has 6 gone to you and the voice to Margo. No more it is in me. I am
7 glad. I am resigned. Only get me out to India, won't you? Mother 8 will make you do it. I am sure.

18 Dear Dhira Mata {Mrs. Bull},

19 Before this reaches you, I am off to San Francisco. You 20 already know all about the work. I have not done much work, but 21 my heart is growing stronger every day, physically and mentally.
22 Some days I feel I can bear everything and suffer everything.
23 There was nothing of note inside the bundle of papers sent by 24 Miss Muller. I did not write her, not knowing her address. Then 25 again, I am afraid.

26 I can always work better alone, and am physically and 27 mentally best when entirely alone! I scarcely had a day's illness 28 during my eight years of lone life away from my brethren. Now I 29 am again getting up, being alone. Strange, but that is what 30 Mother wants me to be. "Wandering alone like the rhinoceros", as 31 Joe likes it. I think the conferences are ended. Poor Turiyananda 32 suffered so much and never let me know; he is so strong and 33 good. Poor Niranjana, I learn from Mrs. Sevier, is so seriously ill in 34 Calcutta that I don't know whether he has passed away or not.
35 Well, good and evil both love company; queer, they come in 36 strings. I had a letter from my cousin telling me her daughter (the 37 adopted little child) was dead. Suffering seems to be the lot of 38 India! Good. I am getting rather callous, rather stilted, of late.
39 Good. Mother knows. I am so ashamed of myself--of this display of 40 weakness for the last two years! Glad it is ended.

My Dear Mary {Hale},

Your letter bearing the sad news of Mr. Hale's passing away reached me yesterday. I am sorry, because in spite of monastic training, the heart lives on; and then Mr. Hale was one of the best souls I met in life. Of course you are sorry, miserable, and so are Mother Church and Harriet and the rest, especially as this is the first grief of its kind you have met, is it not? I have lost many, suffered much, and the most curious cause of suffering when somebody goes off is the feeling that I was not good enough to that person. When my father died, it was a pang for months, and I had been so disobedient. You have been very dutiful; if you feel anything like that, it is only a form of sorrow.

Just now I am afraid life begins for you, Mary, in earnest. We may read books, hear lectures, and talk miles, but experience is the one teacher, the one eye-opener. It is best as it is. We learn, through smiles and tears we learn. We don't know why, but we see it is so; and that is enough. Of course Mother Church has the solace of her religion. I wish we could all dream undisturbed good dreams.

You have had shelter all your life. I was in the glare, burning and panting all the time. Now for a moment you have caught a glimpse of the other side. My life is made up of continuous blows like that, and hundred times worse, because of poverty, treachery, and my own foolishness! Pessimism! You will understand it, how it comes. Well, well, what shall I say to you, Mary? You know all the talks; only I say this and it is true--if it were possible to exchange grief, and had I a cheerful mind, I would exchange mine for your grief ever and always. Mother knows best.

Your ever faithful
brother,

Vivekananda

Dear Mary {Hale},

Very kind of you to write to invite me to Chicago. I wish I could be there this minute. But I am busy making money; only I do not make much. Well, I have to make enough to pay my passage home at any rate. Here is a new field, where I find ready listeners by hundreds, prepared beforehand by my books.

Of course money making is slow and tedious. If I could make a few hundreds, I would be only too glad.

By this time you must have received my previous note. I am coming eastward in a month or six weeks, I hope.

How are you all? Give Mother my heartfelt love. I wish I had her strength, she is a true Christian. My health is much better, but the old strength is not there yet. I hope it will come some day, but then, one had to work so hard to do the least little thing. I wish I had rest and peace for a few days at least, which I am sure I can get with the sisters at Chicago. Well, Mother knows best, as I say always. She knows best. The last two years have been specially bad. I have been living in mental hell. It is partially lifted now, and I hope for better days, better states. All blessings on you and the sisters and Mother. Mary, you have been always the sweetest notes in my jarring and clashing life. Then you had the great good Karma to start without oppressive surroundings. I never know a moment's peaceful life. It has always been high pressure, mentally. Lord bless you.

Dear Dhira Mata {Mrs. Bull},

I have not had a word from you for a month. I am in Frisco. The people here have been prepared by my writing beforehand, and they come in big crowds. But it remains to be seen how much of that enthusiasm endures when it comes to paying at the door. Rev. Benjamin Fay Mills invited me to Oakland and gave me big crowds to preach to. He and his wife have been reading my works and keeping track of my movements all the time. I sent the letter of introduction from Miss Thursby to Mrs. Hearst. She has invited me to one of her musicals Sunday next.

My health is about the same; don't find much difference; it is improving, perhaps, but very imperceptibly. I can use my voice, however, to make 3,000 people hear me, as I did twice in Oakland, and get good sleep too after two hours of speaking.

I learn Margot is with you. When are you sailing for France?

1 I will leave here in April and go to the East. I am very desirous of 2 getting to England in May if I can. Must not go home before trying 3 England once more.

4 I have nice letters from Brahmananda and Saradananda;
5 they are all doing well. They are trying to bring the municipality
6 to its senses; I am glad. In this world of Maya one need not injure, 7 but "spread the hood, without striking". That is enough.

8 Things must get round; if they don't, it is all right. I have a 9 very nice letter from Mrs. Sevier too. They are doing fine in the 10 mountains. How is Mrs. Vaughan? When is your conference to 11 close? How is Turiyananda?

12 With everlasting love and gratitude.

24 Dear Dhira Mata {Mrs. Bull},

25 Your letter, enclosing one from Saradananda only and the 26 accounts, came. I am very much reassured by all the news I since 27 received from India. As for the accounts and the disposal of the 28 Rs. 30,000, do just what you please. I have given over the 29 management to you, the Master will show you what is best to do.
30 The money is Rs. 35,000; the Rs. 5,000, for building the cottage 31 on the Ganga, I wrote to Saradananda not to use just now. I have 32 already taken Rs. 5,000 of that money. I am not going to take 33 more. I had paid back Rs. 2,000 or more of that Rs. 5,000 in India.
34 But it seems, Brahmananda, wanting to show as much of the Rs.
35 35,000 intact as he could, drew upon my Rs. 2,000; so I owe them
36 Rs. 5,000 still on that score.

37 Anyway, I thought I could make money here in California
38 and pay them up quietly. Now I have entirely failed in California 39 financially. It is worse here than in Los Angeles. They come in 40 crowds when there is a free lecture and very few when there is 41 something to pay.

42 I have some hopes yet in England. It is necessary for me to 43 reach England in May. There is not the least use in breaking my 44 health in San Francisco for nothing. Moreover, with all Joe's 45 enthusiasm, I have not yet found any real benefit from the 46 magnetic healer, except a few red patches on my chest from 47 scratching! Platform work is nigh gone for me, and forcing it is

1 only hastening the end. I leave here very soon, as soon as I can 2 make money for a passage. I have 300 dollars in hand, made in 3 Los Angeles. I will lecture here next week and then I stop. As for 4 the Math and the money, the sooner I am released of that burden 5 the better.

6 I am ready to do whatever you advise me to do. You have 7 been a real mother to me. You have taken up one of my great 8 burdens on yourself--I mean my poor cousin. I feel quite satisfied.
9 As for my mother, I am going back to her--for my last days and 10 hers. The thousand dollars I have in New York will bring Rs. 9 a 11 month; then I bought for her a bit of land which will bring about 12 Rs. 6; and her old house--that will bring, say, Rs. 6. I leave the 13 house under litigation out of consideration, as I have not got it.
14 Myself, my mother, my grandmother, and my brother will live on 15 Rs. 20 a month easy. I would start just now, if I could make money 16 for a passage to India, without touching the 1,000 dollars in New 17 York.

18 Anyhow I will scrape three or four hundred dollars--400 19 dollars will be enough for a second class passage and for a few 20 weeks' stay in London. I do not ask you to do anything more for 21 me; I do not want it. What you have done is more, ever so much 22 more than I deserve. I have given my place solemnly to you in Shri 23 Ramakrishna's work. I am out of it. All my life I have been a 24 torture to my poor mother. Her whole life has been one of 25 continuous misery. If it be possible, my last attempt should be to 26 make her a little happy. I have planned it all out. I have served the 27 Mother all my life. It is done; I refuse now to grind Her axe. Let 28 Her find other workers--I strike.

29 You have been one friend with whom Shri Ramakrishna has 30 become the goal of life--that is the secret of my trust in you.
31 Others love me personally. But they little dream that what they 32 love me for is Ramakrishna; leaving Him, I am only a mass of 33 foolish selfish emotions. Anyway this stress is terrible, thinking of 34 what may come next, wishing what ought to come next. I am 35 unequal to the responsibility; I am found wanting. I must give up 36 this work. If the work has not life in it, let it die; if it has, it need 37 not wait for poor workers like myself.

38 Now the money, Rs. 30,000, is in my name, in Government
39 Securities. If they are sold now, we shall lose fearfully, on account 40 of the war; then, how can they be sent over here without being 41 sold there? To sell them there I must sign them. I do not know 42 how all this is going to be straightened out. Do what you think 43 best about it all. In the meanwhile, it is absolutely necessary that I 44 execute a will in your favour for everything, in case I suddenly 45 die. Send me a draft will as soon as possible and I shall register it 46 in San Francisco or Chicago; then my conscience will be safe. I 47 don't know any lawyer here, else I would have got it drawn up; 48 neither have I the money. The will must be done immediately; the 49 trust and things have time enough for them.

50 Ever your
51 son,

15 am so so in health. No money. Hard work. No result. Worse than 16 Los Angeles.

17 They come in crowds when the lecture is free--when there is 18 payment, they don't. That's all. I have a relapse--for some days-- 19 and am feeling very bad. I think lecturing every night is the cause.
20 I hope to do something in Oakland at least to work out my passage 21 to New York, where I mean to work for my passage to India. I may 22 go to London if I make money here to pay a few months' lodging 23 there.

24 Will you send me our General's address? Even the name 25 slips from memory now!

26 Good-bye. May see you in Paris, may not. Lord bless you, 27 you have done for me more than I ever deserve.

28 With infinite love and gratitude,

39 My Dear Rakhal {Brahmananda},

40 I got a letter from you some time ago. A letter from Sharat 41 reached me yesterday. I saw a copy of the invitation letters for the 42 birthday anniversary of Gurudeva (Divine Master). I am 43 frightened hearing that Sharat is troubled by rheumatism. Alas, sickness, sorrow, and pain have been my companions for the last two years. Tell Sharat that I am not going to work so hard any more. But he who does not work enough to earn his food will have to starve to death! . . . I hope Durgaprasanna has done by this time whatever was necessary for the compound wall. . . . The raising of a compound wall is not, after all, a difficult thing. If I can, I shall build a small house there and serve my old grandmother and mother. Evil actions leave none scot-free; Mother never spares anybody. I admit my actions have been wrong. Now, brother, all of you are Sadhus and great saints, kindly pray to the Mother that I do not have to shoulder all this trouble and burden any longer. Now I desire a little peace--it seems there is no more strength left to bear the burden of work and responsibility--rest and peace for the few days that I shall yet live! Victory to the Guru! Victory to the Guru! . . . No more lectures or anything of that sort. Peace!

As soon as Sharat sends the trust-deed of the Math, I shall put my signature to it. You all manage--truly I require rest. This disease is called neurasthenia, a disease of the nerves. Once it comes, it continues for some years. But after a complete rest for three or four years it is cured. This country is the home of the disease, and here it has caught me. However, it is not only no fatal disease, but it makes a man live long. Don't be anxious on my account. I shall go on rolling. But there is only this sorrow that the work of Gurudeva is not progressing; there is this regret that I have not been able to accomplish anything of his work. How much I abuse you all and speak harshly! I am the worst of men! Today, on the anniversary of his birthday, put the dust of your feet on my head--and my mind will become steady again. Victory to the Guru! Victory to the Guru! You are my only refuge--you are my only refuge! Now that my mind is steady, let me tell you that this resignation is the permanent attitude of my mind. All other moods that come are, you should know, only disease. Please don't allow me to work at all any longer. Now I shall quietly do Japa and meditation for some time--nothing more. Mother knows all else. Victory to the Mother of the Universe!

affectionately,
Yours
Vivekananda

Dear Mary {Hale},

How are you? How is Mother, and the sisters? How are things going on in Chicago? I am in Frisco, and shall remain here for a month or so. I start for Chicago early in April. I shall write to you before that of course. How I wish I could be with you for a few days; one gets tired of work so much. My health is so so, but my mind is very peaceful and has been so for some time. I am trying to give up all anxiety unto the Lord. I am only a worker. My mission is to obey and work. He knows the rest.

"Giving up all vexations and paths, do thou take refuge unto Me. I will save you from all dangers" (Gita, XVIII.66).

I am trying hard to realise that. May I be able to do it soon.

My Dear Dhira Mata {Mrs. Bull},

Your letter from Cambridge came yesterday. Now I have got a fixed address, 1719 Turk Street, San Francisco. Hope you will have time to pen a few lines in reply to this. I had a manuscript account sent me by you. I sent it back as you desired; besides that, I had no other accounts. It is all right.

I had a nice letter from Miss Souter from London. She expects to have Mr. . . . to dine with her.

So glad to hear of Margot's success. I have given her over to you, and am sure you will take care of her. I will be here a few weeks more and then go East. I am only waiting for the warm season.

I have not been at all successful financially here, but am not in want. Anyway, things will go on as usual with me, I am sure; and if they don't, what then?

I am perfectly resigned. I had a letter from the Math; they had the Utsava yesterday. I do not intend to go by the Pacific. Don't care where I go, and when. Now perfectly resigned; Mother knows; a great change, peacefulness is coming on me. Mother, I know, will see to it. I die a Sannyasin. You have been more than mother to me and mine. All love, all blessings be yours for ever, is the constant prayer of

1 PS. Kindly tell Mrs. Leggett that my address for some weeks

13 My Dear Mary {Hale},

14 Many thanks for your kind note. You are correct that I have 15 many other thoughts to think besides Indian people, but they have 16 all to go to the background before the all-absorbing mission--my 17 Master's work.

18 I would that this sacrifice were pleasant. It is not, and 19 naturally makes one bitter at times; for know, Mary, I am yet a 20 man and cannot wholly forget myself; hope I shall some time. Pray 21 for me.

22 Of course I am not to be held responsible for Miss 23 MacLeod's or Miss Noble's or anybody else's views regarding 24 myself or anything else, am I? You never found me smart under 25 criticism.

26 I am glad you are going over to Europe for a long period.
27 Make a long tour, you have been long a house-dove.

28 As for me, I am tired on the other hand of eternal tramping; 29 that is why I want to go back home and be quiet. I do not want to 30 work any more. My nature is the retirement of a scholar. I never 31 get it! I pray I will get it, now that I am all broken and worked out.
32 Whenever I get a letter from Mrs. Sevier from her Himalayan 33 home, I feel like flying off the the Himalayas. I am really sick of 34 this platform work and eternal trudging and seeing new faces and 35 lecturing.

36 You need not bother about getting up classes in Chicago. I 37 am getting money in Frisco and will soon make enough for my 38 passage home.

39 How are you and the sisters? I expect to come to Chicago 40 some time towards the first part of April.

7 Well Blessed Mary {Hale},

8 This is to let you know "I am very happy". Not that I am 9 getting into a shadowy optimism, but my power of suffering is 10 increasing. I am being lifted up above the pestilential miasma of 11 this world's joys and sorrows; they are losing their meaning. It is a 12 land of dreams; it does not matter whether one enjoys or weeps; 13 they are but dreams, and as such, must break sooner or later.
14 How are things going on with you folks there? Harriet is going to 15 have a good time at Paris. I am sure to meet her over there and 16 parler fransaise ! I am getting by heart a French dictionnaire ! I 17 am making some money too; hard work morning and evening; yet 18 better for all that. Good sleep, good digestion, perfect irregularity.

19 You are going to the East. I hope to come to Chicago before 20 the end of April. If I can't, I will surely meet you in the East before 21 you go.

22 What are the McKindley girls doing? Eating grapefruit 23 concoctions and getting plump? Go on, life is but a dream. Are you 24 not glad it is so? My! They want an eternal heaven! Thank God, 25 nothing is eternal except Himself. He alone can bear it, I am sure.
26 Eternity of nonsense!

27 Things are beginning to hum for me; they will presently 28 roar. I shall remain quiet though, all the same. Things are not 29 humming for you just now. I am so sorry, that is, I am trying to be, 30 for I cannot be sorry for anything and more. I am attaining peace 31 that passeth understanding, which is neither joy nor sorrow, but 32 something above them both. Tell Mother that. My passing through 33 the valley of death, physical, mental, last two years, has helped 34 me in this. Now I am nearing that Peace , the eternal silence. Now 35 I mean to see things as they are, everything in that peace, perfect 36 in its way. "He whose joy is only in himself, whose desires are only 37 in himself, he has learned his lessons." This is the great lesson 38 that we are here to learn through myriads of births and heavens 39 and hells--that there is nothing to be asked for, desired for, beyond 40 one's Self. "The greatest thing I can obtain is my Self." "I am 41 free", therefore I require none else for my happiness. "Alone
42 through eternity, because I was free, am free, and will remain free 43 for ever." This is Vedantism. I preached the theory so long, but oh, 44 joy! Mary, my dear sister, I am realising it now every day. Yes, I 45 am--"I am free." "Alone, alone, I am the one without a second."

46 Ever yours in the Sat-Chit-47 Ananda,

48 Vivekananda

49 PS. Now I am going to be truly Vivekananda. Did you ever

1 enjoy evil! Ha! ha! you silly girl, all is good! Nonsense. Some 2 good, some evil. I enjoy the good and I enjoy the evil. I was Jesus
3 and I was Judas Iscariot; both my play, my fun. "So long as there 4 are two, fear shall not leave thee." Ostrich method? Hide your 5 heads in the sand and think there is nobody seeing you! All is 6 good! Be brave and face everything--come good, come evil, both 7 welcome, both of you my play. I have no good to attain, no ideal to 8 clench up to, no ambition to fulfil; I, the diamond mine, am playing 9 with pebbles, good and evil; good for you--evil, come; good for 10 you--good, you come too. If the universe tumbles round my ears, 11 what is that to me? I am Peace that passeth understanding; 12 understanding only gives us good or evil. I am beyond, I am 13 peace.

6 My Dear Joe {MacLeod},

7 Just a line before you start for France. Are you going via 8 England? I had a beautiful letter from Mrs. Sevier in which I find 9 that Miss Muller sent simply a paper without any other words to 10 Kali who was with her in Darjeeling.

11 Congreave is the name of her nephew, and he is in the 12 Transvaal war; that is the reason she underlined that, to show her 13 nephew fighting the Boers in Transvaal. That was all. I cannot 14 understand it any more now than then, of course.

15 I am physically worse than at Los Angeles, mentally much 16 better, stronger, and peaceful. Hope it will continue to be so.

17 I have not got a reply to my letter to you; I expect it soon.

18 One Indian letter of mine was directed by mistake to Mrs.
19 Wheeler; it came all right to me in the end. I had nice notes from 20 Saradananda; they are doing beautifully over there. The boys are 21 working up; well, scolding has both sides, you see; it makes them 22 up and doing. We Indians have been so dependent for so long that 23 it requires, I am sorry, a good lot of tongue to make them active.
24 One of the laziest fellows had taken charge of the anniversary this 25 year and pulled it through. They have planned and are 26 successfully working famine works by themselves without my 27 help. . . . All this comes from the terrific scolding I have been 28 giving, sure!

29 They are standing on their own feet. I am so glad. See Joe, 30 the Mother is working.

31 I sent Miss Thursby's letter to Mrs. Hearst. She sent me an 32 invitation to her musical. I could not go. I had a bad cold. So that 33 was all. Another lady for whom I had a letter from Miss Thursby, 34 an Oakland lady, did not reply. I don't know whether I shall make 35 enough in Frisco to pay my fare to Chicago! Oakland work has 36 been successful. I hope to get about $100 from Oakland, that is 37 all. After all, I am content. It is better that I tried. . . . Even the 38 magnetic healer had not anything for me. Well, things will go on 39 anyhow for me; I do not care how. . . . I am very peaceful. I learn 40 from Los Angeles, Mrs. Leggett has been bad again. I wired to 41 New York to learn what truth was in it. I will get a reply soon, I 42 expect.

43 Say, how will you arrange about my mail when the Leggetts
44 are over on the other side? Will you so arrange that they reach me 45 right?

46 I have nothing more to say; all love and gratitude is yours;
47 already you know that. You have already done more than I ever 48 deserved. I don't know whether I go to Paris or not, but I must go

1 to England sure in May. I must not go home without trying 2 England a few weeks more. With all love,

18 Dear Dhira Mata {Mrs. Bull},

19 Your kind note came this morning. I am so happy to learn 20 that all the New York friends are being cured by Mrs. Milton. She 21 has been very unsuccessful, it seems, in Los Angeles, as all the 22 people we introduced tell me. Some are in a worse state than 23 before the skin paring. Kindly give Mrs. Milton my love; her 24 rubbings used to do me good at the time at least. Poor Dr. Hiller!
25 We send him over post-haste to Los Angeles to get his wife cured.
26 You ought to have seen him the other morning and heard him too!
27 Mrs. Hiller, it appears, is many times worse for all the rubbings 28 given; and she is only a few bones; and, above all, the doctor had 29 to spend 500 dollars in Los Angeles. That makes him feel very 30 bad. I, of course, would not write this to Joe; she is happy in her 31 dreams of having done so much good to poor sufferers. But oh, if 32 she could hear the Los Angeles folks and this old Dr. Hiller, she 33 would change her mind at once and learn wisdom from an old 34 adage not to recommend medicine to any one. I am so glad I did 35 not write of old Dr. Hiller's alacrity in getting over to Los Angeles 36 when he heard of this cure from Joe. She ought to have seen the 37 old man dance about my room, with greater alacrity! 500 dollars 38 was too much for the old man; he is a German; he dances about, 39 slaps his pockets and says, "You can't have goth the five 40 hundred, but for this silly cure!"

41 Then there are poor people who paid her three dollars a 42 rubbing sometimes and now complimenting Joe and myself. Don't 43 tell this to Joe. You and she can afford to lose money on anyone.
44 So also the old German doctor, but the poor boy finds it a bit hard.
45 The old doctor is now persuaded that some devils are 46 misarranging his affairs of late. He had counted on so much to 47 have me as his guest, and his wife righted, but he had to run to 48 Los Angeles and that upset the whole plan; and now, though he

1 tries his best to get me in as his guest, I fight shy, not of him, but 2 of his wife and sister-in-law. He is sure, "Devils must be in it"; he 3 has been a Theosophical student. I told him to write to Miss 4 MacLeod to hunt up a devil-driver somewhere so that he might 5 run with his wife and spend another five hundred! Doing good is 6 not always smooth!

7 As for me, I get the fun out of it--as long as Joe pays--bone-
8 cracker, or skin-parer, or any system whatever. But this was not 9 fair of Joe--after having got in all these people to get rubbed 10 down, to run off and let me bear all the compliments! I am glad 11 she is not introducing any outsiders to be skinned. Otherwise Joe 12 would be gone to Paris, leaving poor Mr. Leggett to collect the 13 compliments. I sent in a Christian Science healer to Dr. Hiller as a 14 make-up of Joe's misdemeanour, but his wife slammed the door in 15 her face and would have nothing to do with queer healing.

16 Anyhow, I sincerely hope and pray Mrs. Leggett will be well 17 this time. Did they analyse the sting?

18 I hope the will will arrive soon; I am a bit anxious about it. I 19 expected to get a draft trust-deed also by this mail from India; no 20 letters came, not even Awakened India, though I find Awakened
21 India has reached San Francisco.

22 I read in the papers the other day of 500 deaths in one week
23 of plague in Calcutta! Mother knows what is good.

24 So Mr. Leggett has got the V. Society up. Good.

25 How is Olea? Where is Margot? I wrote her a letter the 26 other day to 21 W. 34, N.Y. I am so happy that she is making 27 headway. With all love,

28 Ever your 29 son,

Vivekananda

31 PS. I am getting all the work I can do and more. I will make 32 my passage, anyhow. Though they cannot pay me much, yet they 33 pay some, and by constant work I will make enough to pay my way 34 and have a few hundred in the pocket anyhow. So you needn't be 35 the least anxious about me.

42 Here is a long letter from A_. He seems to be entirely

3 I think, as things stand in New York, they require my 5 I have been making enough money to pay my passage. I will

Dear Joe {MacLeod},

There is a squabble in New York, I see. I got a letter from A__ stating that he was going to leave New York. He thought Mrs. Bull and you have written lots against him to me. I wrote him back to be patient and wait, and that Mrs. Bull and Miss MacLeod wrote only good things about him.

Well, Joe Joe, you know my method in all these rows; to leave all rows alone! "Mother" sees to all such things. I have finished my work. I am retired, Joe. "Mother" will work now Herself. That is all.

Now, as you say, I am going to send all the money I have made here. I could do it today, but I am waiting to make it a thousand. I expect to make a thousand in Frisco by the end of this week. I will buy a draft on New York and send it or ask the bank the best way to do it.

I have plenty of letters from the Math and the Himalayan centre. This morning came one from Swarupananda. Yesterday one from Mrs. Sevier.

I told Mrs. Hansborough about the photos.

You tell Mr. Leggett from me to do what is best about the Vedanta Society matter. The only thing I see is that in every country we have to follow its own method. As such, if I were you, I would convene a meeting of all the members and sympathisers and ask them what they want to do. Whether they want to organise or not, what sort of organisation they want if any, etc. But Lordy, do it on your own hook. I am quits. Only if you think my presence would be of any help I can come in fifteen days.

I have finished my work here; only, out of San Francisco, Stockton is a little city I want to work a few days in; then I go East. I think I should rest now, although I can have $100 a week average in this city, all along. This time I want to let upon New York the charge of the Light Brigade.

With all love,

Ever yours

affectionately,

Vivekananda

PS. If the workers are all averse to organising, do you think there is any benefit in it? You know best. Do what you think best. I

1 have a letter from Margot from Chicago. She asks some 2 questions; I am going to reply.

10 {To an American friend},

11 Mother is becoming propitious once more. Things are 12 looking up. They must.

13 Work always brings evil with it. I have paid for the 14 accumulated evil with bad health. I am glad. My mind is all the 15 better for it. There is a mellowness and a calmness in life now, 16 which was never there before. I am learning now how to be 17 detached as well as attached, and mentally becoming my own 18 master. . . .

19 Mother is doing Her own work; I do not worry much now.
20 Moths like me die by the thousand every instant. Her work goes 21 on all the same. Glory unto Mother! . . . Alone and drifting about 22 in the will-current of the Mother has been my whole life. The 23 moment I have tried to break this, that moment I have been hurt.
24 Her will be done! . . .

25 I am happy, at peace with myself, and more of the Sannyasin 26 than I ever was before. The love for my own kith and kin is 27 growing less every day, and that for Mother increasing. Memories 28 of long nights of vigil with Shri Ramakrishna under the 29 Dakshineswar Banyan are waking up once more. And work? What 30 is work? Whose work? Whom shall I work for?

31 I am free. I am Mother's child. She works, She plays. Why 32 should I plan? What should I plan? Things came and went, just as 33 She liked, without my planning. We are Her automata. She is the 34 wirepuller.

41 My Dear Joe {MacLeod},

42 Received your note today. I wrote you one yesterday but 43 directed it to England thinking you will be there.

44 I have given your message to Mrs. Betts. I am so sorry this 45 little quarrel came with A_. I got also his letter you sent. He is 46 correct so far as he says, "Swami wrote me 'Mr. Leggett is not

1 interested in Vedanta and will not help any more. You stand on 2 your own feet.'" It was as you and Mrs. Leggett desired me to 3 write him from Los Angeles about New York--in reply to his asking 4 me what to do for funds.

5 Well, things will take their own shape, but it seems in Mrs.
6 Bull's and your mind there is some idea that I ought to do 7 something. But in the first place I do not know anything about the 8 difficulties. None of you write me anything about what that is for, 9 and I am no thought-reader. You simply wrote me a general idea 10 that A__ wanted to keep things in his hands. What can I 11 understand from it? What are the difficulties? Regarding what the 12 differences are about, I am as much in the dark as about the exact 13 date of the Day of Destruction! And yet Mrs. Bull's and your 14 letters show quite an amount of vexation! These things get 15 complicated sometimes, in spite of ourselves. Let them take their 16 shape.

17 I have executed and sent the will to Mr. Leggett as desired
18 by Mrs. Bull.

19 I am going on, sometimes well and at other times ill. I 20 cannot say, on my conscience, that I have been the least benefited 21 by Mrs. Milton. She has been good to me, I am very thankful. My 22 love to her. Hope she will benefit others.

23 For writing to Mrs. Bull this fact, I got a four page sermon, 24 as to how I ought to be grateful and thankful, etc., etc. All that is, 25 sure, the outcome of this A__ business! Sturdy and Mrs. Johnson 26 got disturbed by Margot, and they fell upon me. Now A__ disturbs 27 Mrs. Bull and, of course, I have to bear the brunt of it. Such is 28 life!

29 You and Mrs. Leggett wanted me to write him to be free and 30 independent and that Mr. Leggett was not going to help them. I 31 wrote it--now what can I do? If John or Jack does not obey you, am 32 I to be hanged for it? What do I know about this Vedanta Society?
33 Did I start it? Had I any hand in it? Then again, nobody 34 condescends to write me anything about what the affair is! Well, 35 this world is a great fun.

36 I am glad Mrs. Leggett is recovering fast. I pray every 37 moment for her complete recovery. I start for Chicago on Monday.
38 A kind lady has given me a pass up to New York to be used within 39 three months. The Mother will take care of me. She is not going to 40 strand me now after guarding me all my life.

41
42 gratefully, Ever yours

1 My Dear Mary {Hale},

2 I ought to have started today but circumstances so
3 happened that I cannot forgo the temptation to be in a camp
4 under the huge red-wood trees of California before I leave.
5 Therefore I postpone it for three or four days. Again after the 6 incessant work I require a breath of God's free air before I start 7 on this bone-breaking journey of four days.

8 Margot insists in her letter that I must keep my promise to 9 come to see Aunt Mary in fifteen days. It will be kept--only in 10 twenty days instead of fifteen. By that I avoid the nasty snowstorm 11 Chicago had lately and get a little strength too.

12 Margot is a great partisan of Aunt Mary it seems, and other 13 people besides me have nieces and cousins and aunts.

14 I start tomorrow to the woods. Woof! get my lungs full of 15 ozone before getting into Chicago. In the meanwhile keep my mail 16 for me when it comes to Chicago and don't send it off here like a 17 good girl as you are.

18 I have finished work. Only a few days' rest, my friends 19 insist--three or four--before facing the railway.

20 I have got a free pass for three months from here to New 21 York; no expense except the sleeping car; so, you see, free, free!

43 My Dear Nivedita,

44 I have been very ill--one more relapse brought about by

1 months of hard work. Well, it has shown me that I have no kidney 2 or heart disease whatsoever, only overworked nerves. I am,
3 therefore, going today in the country for some days till I
4 completely recover, which I am sure will be in a few days.

5 In the meanwhile I do not want to read any India letters 6 with the plague news etc. My mail is coming to Mary; either she 7 or you keep them (you, if she goes away) till I return.

8 I am going to throw off all worry, and glory unto Mother.

9 Mrs. C. P. Huntington, a very, very wealthy lady, who has 10 helped me, came; wants to see and help you. She will be in New 11 York by the first of June. Do not go away without seeing her. If I 12 cannot come early enough, I will send you an introduction to her.

13 Give my love to Mary. I am leaving here in a few days.

14 Ever yours with 15 blessings,

16 Vivekananda

17 PS. The accompanying letter is to introduce you to Mrs. M.
18 C. Adams, wife of Judge Adams. Go to see her immediately. Much 19 good may come out of it. She is well known; find out her address.

2 1900 17th June,

3 My Dear Mary {Hale},

4 It is true I am much better, but not yet completely 5 recovered; anyway, the complexion of the mind is one belonging to 6 everyone that suffers. It is neither gas nor anything else.

7 Kali worship is not a necessary step in any religion. The 8 Upanishads teach us all there is of religion. Kali worship is my 9 special fad ; you never heard me preach it, or read of my 10 preaching it in India. I only preach what is good for universal 11 humanity. If there is any curious method which applies entirely to 12 me, I keep it a secret and there it ends. I must not explain to you 13 what Kali worship is, as I never taught it to anybody.

14 You are entirely mistaken if you think the Boses are rejected
15 by the Hindu people. The English rulers want to push him into a 16 corner. They don't of course like that sort of development in the 17 Indian race. They make it hot for him, that is why he seeks to go 18 elsewhere.

19 By the "anglicised" are meant people who by their manners 20 and conduct show that they are ashamed of us poor, old type 21 Hindus. I am not ashamed of my race or my birth or nationality.
22 That such people are not liked by the Hindus, I cannot wonder.

23 Ceremonials and symbols etc. have no place in our religion 24 which is the doctrine of the Upanishads, pure and simple. Many 25 people think the ceremonial etc. help them in realising religion. I 26 have no objection.

27 Religion is that which does not depend upon books or 28 teachers or prophets or saviours, and that which does not make us 29 dependent in this or in any other lives upon others. In this sense 30 Advaitism of the Upanishads is the only religion. But saviours, 31 books, prophets, ceremonials, etc. have their places. They may 32 help many as Kali worship helps me in my secular work . They are 33 welcome.

34 The Guru, however, is a different idea. It is the relation 35 between the transmitter and the receiver of force--psychic power 36 and knowledge. Each nation is a type, physically and mentally.
37 Each is constantly receiving ideas from others only to work them 38 out into its type, that is, along the national line. The time has not 39 come for the destruction of types. All education from any source is 40 compatible with the ideals in every country; only they must be 41 nationalised, i.e. fall in line with the rest of the type 42 manifestation.

43 Renunciation is always the ideal of every race; only other 44 races do not know what they are made to do by nature 45 unconsciously. Through the ages one purpose runs sure. And that 46 will be finished with the destruction of this earth and the sun! And 47 worlds are always in progress indeed! And nobody as yet 48 developed enough in any one of the infinite worlds to 49 communicate with us! Bosh! They are born, show the same phenomena, and die the same death! Increasing purpose! Babies!

Live in the land of dreams, you babies!

Well, now about me. You must persuade Harriet to give me a few dollars every month, and I will have some other friends do the same. If I succeed, I fly off to India. I am dead tired of the platform work for a living. It does not please me any more. I retire and do some writing if I can do some scholarly work.

I am coming soon to Chicago, hope to be there in a few days. Say, would not Mrs. Adams be able to get up a class for me to pay my passage back?

Of course I shall try different places. So much of optimism has come to me, Mary, that I should fly off to the Himalayas if I had wings.

I have worked for this world, Mary, all my life, and it does not give me a piece of bread without taking a pound of flesh.

If I can get a piece of bread a day, I retire entirely; but this is impossible--this is the increasing purpose that is unfolding all the devilish inwardness, as I am getting older!

Ever yours in
the Lord,

Vivekananda

PS. If ever a man found the vanity of things, I have it now. This is the world, hideous, beastly corpse. Who thinks of helping it is a fool! But we have to work out our slavery by doing good or evil; I have worked it out, I hope. May the Lord take me to the other shore! Amen! I have given up all thoughts about India or any land. I am now selfish, want to save myself!

Dear Brother Hari {Turiyananda},

I got your letter from California. So three persons are getting spiritual trances; well, it is not bad. Even out of that much good will come. Shri Ramakrishna knows! Let things happen as they will. His work He knows, you and I are but servants and nothing else.

I am sending this letter to San Francisco--care of Mrs. C. Panel. Just now I got some news from New York. They are well. Kali is on tour. Write in detail about your health and work in San Francisco. And don't be indifferent to the question of sending money to the Math. See that money goes certainly every month, from Los Angeles and San Francisco.

I am on the whole doing well. I am shortly starting for England. I get news of Sharat. Recently he had an attack of dysentery. The rest are all well. This time few got malaria; nor is it so prevalent on the banks of the Ganga. This year, owing to the scarcity of rain, there is fear of famine in Bengal also.

By the grace of Mother, go on doing work, brother. Mother knows, and you know--but I am off! Now I am going to take a rest.

Yours
affectionately,

Dear Brother Hari {Turiyananda},

Now I am staying on the sea-coast of France. The session of the Congress of History of Religions is over. It was not a big affair; some twenty scholars chattered a lot on the origin of the Shalagrama and the origin of Jehovah, and similar topics. I also said something on the occasion.

My body and mind are broken down; I need rest badly. In addition, there is not a single person on whom I can depend; on the other hand so long as I live, all will become very selfish depending upon me for everything. . . . Dealing with people entails constant mental uneasiness. . . . I have cut myself off by a will. Now I am writing to say that nobody will have sole power. All will be done in accordance with the view of the majority. . . . If a trust-deed on similar lines can be executed, then I am free. . . .

What you are doing is also Guru Maharaj's work. Continue to do it. Now I have done my part. Don't write to me any more about those things; do not even mention the subject. I have no opinions whatever to give on that subject. . . .

Yours

affectionately,

6 My Dear Hari {Turiyananda},

7 I learnt everything from your letter. Earlier I had an inkling

12 For some time now I have been living incognito . I shall stay 13 with the French to pick up their language. I am somewhat freed 14 from worries; that is to say, I have signed the trust-deed and other 15 things and sent them to Calcutta. I have not reserved any right or 16 ownership for myself. You now possess everything and will 17 manage all work by the Master's grace.

18 I have no longer any desire to kill myself by touring. For the 19 present I feel like settling down somewhere and spending my time 20 among books. I have somewhat mastered the French language; 21 but if I stay among the French for a month or two, I shall be able 22 to carry on conversation well. If one can master this language and 23 German sufficiently, one can virtually become well acquainted 24 with European learning. The people of France are mere 25 intellectualists, they run after worldly things and firmly believe 26 God and souls to be superstitious; they are extremely loath to talk 27 on such subjects. This is a truly materialistic country! Let me see 28 what that Lord does. But this country is at the head of Western 29 culture, and Paris is the capital of that culture.

30 Brother, free me from all work connected with preaching. I 31 am now aloof from all that, you manage it yourselves. It is my firm 32 conviction that Mother will get work done through all of you a 33 hundredfold more than through me.

34 Many days ago I received a letter from Kali. He must have 35 reached New York by now. Miss Waldo sends news now and then.

36 I keep sometimes well and sometimes bad. Of late I am 37 again having that massage treatment by Mrs. Milton, who says, 38 "You have already recovered!" This much I see--whatever the 39 flatulence, I feel no difficulty in moving, walking, or even 40 climbing. In the morning I take vigorous exercise, and then have a 41 dip in cold water.

42 Yesterday I went to see the house of the gentleman with 43 whom I shall stay. He is a poor scholar, has his room filled with 44 books and lives in a flat on the fifth floor. And as there are no lifts 45 in this country as in America, one has to climb up and down. But it 46 is no longer trying to me.

47 There is a beautiful public park round the house. The 48 gentleman cannot speak English; that is a further reason for my going. I shall have to speak French perforce. It is all Mother's will. She knows best what She wants to have done. She never speaks out, "only keeps mum". But this much I notice that for a month or so I have been having intense meditation and repetition of the Lord's name.

Please convey my love to Miss Boocke, Miss Bell, Mrs. Aspinel, Miss Beckham, Mr. George, Dr. Logan, and other friends and accept it yourself. My love to all in Los Angeles also.

Yours,

Vivekananda

My Dear Turiyananda,

Just now I received your letter. Through Mother's will all work will go on; don't be afraid. I shall soon leave for some other place. Perhaps I shall be on a tour of Constantinople and other places for some time. Mother knows what will come next. I have received a letter from Mrs. Wilmot. From this, too, it appears that she is very enthusiastic. Sit firm and free from worries. Everything will be all right. If hearing the Nada etc. does anyone harm, he can get rid of it if he gives up meditation for a time and takes to fish and meat. If the body does not become progressively weak, there is no cause for alarm. Practice should be slow.

I shall leave this place before your reply comes. So do not send the reply to this letter here. I have received all the issues of Sarada's paper, and wrote to him lots a few weeks ago. I have a mind to send more later on.

There is no knowing where my next stop will be. This much I can say that I am trying to be free from care.

I received a letter from Kali, too, today. I shall send him a reply tomorrow. The body is somehow rolling on. Work makes it ill, and rest keeps it well--that is all. Mother knows. Nivedita has gone to England. She and Mrs. Bull are collecting funds. She has a mind to run a school at Kishengarh with the girls she had there. Let her do what she can. I do not intervene any more in any matter--that is all.

My love to you. But I have nothing more to advise as regards work.

Yours in

service,

My Dear Mademoiselle,

I have been very happy and content here. I am having the best of times after many years. I find life here with Mr. Bois very satisfactory--the books, the calm, and the absence of everything that usually troubles me.

But I don't know what kind of destiny is waiting for me now.

My letter is funny, isn't it? But it is my first attempt.

Yours

{To Sister Christine},

God bless you at each step, my dear Christine, such is my constant prayer!

Your letter, so beautiful and so calm, has given me that fresh energy which I am often losing.

I am happy, yes, I am happy, but the cloud has not left me entirely. It sometimes comes back, unfortunately, but it no longer has the morbidity it used to have.

I am staying with a famous French writer, M. Jules Bois. I am his guest. As he is a man making his living with his pen, he is not rich; but we have many great ideas in common and feel happy together.

He discovered me a few years ago and has already translated some of my pamphlets into French. We shall in the end find what we are looking for, isn't it?

Thus, I shall travel with Madame Calve, Miss MacLeod, and M. Jules Bois. I shall be the guest of Madame Calve, the famous singer. We shall go to Constantinople, the Near East, Greece, and Egypt. On our way back, we shall visit Venice.

It may be that I shall give a few lectures in Paris after my return, but they will be in English with an interpreter. I have no time any more, nor the power to study a new language at my age. I am an old man, isn't it?

Mrs. Funke is ill. I think she works too hard. She already had some nervous trouble. I hope she will soon be well.

I am sending all the money I earned in America to India. Now I am free, the begging-monk as before. I have also resigned from the Presidentship of the Monastery. Thank God, I am free! It is no more for me to carry such a responsibility. I am so nervous and so weak.

"As the birds which have slept in the branches of a tree wake up, singing when the dawn comes, and soar up into the deep blue sky, so is the end of my life."

I have had many difficulties, and also some very great successes. But all my difficulties and suffering count for nothing, as I have succeeded. I have attained my aim. I have found the pearl for which I dived into the ocean of life. I have been rewarded. I am pleased.

Thus it seems to me that a new chapter of my life is opening. It seems to me that Mother will now lead me slowly and softly. No more effort on roads full of obstacles, now it is the bed prepared with birds' down. Do you understand that? Believe me, I feel quite sure.

The experience of all my life, up to now, has taught me, thank God, that I always find what I am looking for with eagerness. Sometimes it is after much suffering, but it does not matter! All is forgotten in the softness of the reward. You are also going through troubles, my friend, but you shall have your reward. Alas! What you now find is not a reward but an additional affliction.

As to myself, I see the cloud lifting, vanishing, the cloud of my bad Karma. And the sun of my good Karma rises--shining, beautiful, and powerful. This will also be the case for you, my friend. My knowledge of this language has not the power to express my emotion. But which language can really do so?

So I drop it, leaving it to your heart to clothe my thought with a soft, loving, and shining language. Good night, gute Nacht !

friend, Your devoted

Vivekananda

12 Dear Joe {MacCleod},

13 The steamer was late; so I am waiting. Thank goodness, it 14 entered the Canal this morning at Port Said. That means it will 15 arrive some time in the evening if everything goes right.

16 Of course it is like solitary imprisonment these two days, 17 and I am holding my soul in patience.

18 But they say the change is thrice dear. Mr. Gaze's agent 19 gave me all wrong directions. In the first place, there was nobody 20 here to tell me a thing, not to speak of receiving me. Secondly, I 21 was not told that I had to change my Gaze's ticket for a steamer 22 one at the agent's office, and that was at Suez, not here. It was 23 good one way, therefore, that the steamer was late; so I went to 24 see the agent of the steamer and he told me to exchange Gaze's 25 pass for a regular ticket.

26 I hope to board the steamer some time tonight. I am well 27 and happy and am enjoying the fun immensely.

28 How is Mademoiselle? Where is Bois? Give my everlasting 29 gratitude and good wishes to Mme. Calve. She is a good lady.

30 Hoping you will enjoy your trip.

To Balaram Bose
Glory to Ramakrishna

[Ghazipur
February 6, 1890]

Respected Sir,

I have talked with Pavhari Baba. He is a wonderful saint—the embodiment of humility, devotion, and Yoga. Although he is an orthodox Vaishnava, he is not prejudiced against others of different beliefs. He has tremendous love for Mahâprabhu Chaitanya, and he [Pavhari Baba] speaks of Shri Ramakrishna as "an incarnation of God". He loves me very much, and I am going to stay here for some days at his request.

Pavhari Baba can live in Samâdhi for from two to six months at a stretch. He can read Bengali and has kept a photograph of Shri Ramakrishna in his room. I have not yet seen him face to face, since he speaks from behind a door, but I have never heard such a sweet voice. I have many things to say about him but not just at present.

Please try to get a copy of Chaitanya-Bhâgavata for him and send it immediately to the following address: Gagan Chandra Roy, Opium Department, Ghazipur. Please don't forget.

Pavhari Baba is an ideal Vaishnava and a great scholar; but he is reluctant to reveal his learning. His elder brother acts as his attendant, but even he is not allowed to enter his room.

Please send him a copy of Chaitanya-Mangala also, if it is still in print. And remember that if Pavhari Baba accepts your presents, that will be your great fortune. Ordinarily, he does not accept anything from anybody. Nobody knows what he eats or even what he does.

Please don't let it be known that I am here and don't send news of anyone to me. I am busy with an important work.

Your servant,
Narendra

February 11,

Respected Sir,

I have received your book. In Hrishikesh, Kali [Swami Abhedananda] has had a relapse and is again suffering from what seems to be malaria. Once it comes, the fever does not easily leave

1 those who have never had it before. I too suffered the same way
2 when I first had the attack of fever. Kali has never had the fever 3 before. I have not received any letter from Hrishikesh. Where 4 is . . . ?

5 I am suffering terribly from a backache which began in 6 Allahabad. I had recovered from it some time back, but it has 7 recurred. So I will have to stay here awhile longer because of my 8 back and also because Babaji [Pavhari Baba] has requested it.

9 What you have written about uncooked bread is true. But a 10 monk dies that way, not like the breaking of a cup and saucer. This 11 time I am not going to be overcome by weakness in any way. And if 12 I die, that will be good for me. It is better to depart from this world 13 very soon.

22 20 February 1890

23 Respected Sir,

24 I have received an anonymous letter which I have been 25 unable to trace back to the gigantic soul who wrote it. Indeed, one 26 should pay homage to such a man. He who considers a great soul 27 like Pavhari Baba to be no more than water in a hoof print, he who 28 has nothing to learn in this world and who feels it a disgrace to be 29 taught by any other man—truly, such a new incarnation must be 30 visited. I hope that if the government should discover the identity of 31 this person, he will be handled with special care and be placed in 32 the Alipore garden [zoo]. If you happen to know this man, please 33 ask him to bless me, so that even a dog or a jackal may be my 34 Guru—not to speak of a great soul like Pavhari Baba.

35 I have many things to learn. My master used to say: "As long 36 as I live, so long do I learn". Also please tell this fellow that 37 unfortunately I do not have the time to "cross the seven seas and 38 thirteen rivers" or to go to Sri Lanka in order to sleep after having 39 put oil in the nostrils.²⁷⁸

1 278 ?

2 Here the Swami is referring to Kumbhakarna, the brother of the villain
3 Râvana of the Râmâyana. He was of such a lethargic and evil nature that Brahmâ 4 granted the boon that he should sleep for six months at a stretch. Putting 5 mustard oil in the nostrils is considered to be an aid to sleeping soundly.

6 "Crossing seven seas and thirteen rivers" is a Bengali phrase meaning to 7 travel a great distance. Sri Lanka is the ancient name for the island of Ceylon and 8 was the capital of Ravana's kingdom.

34 32 Ashâdha [July 15, 1890]

35 My dear Sharat,

36 I am sorry to learn that [Vaikunthanath] Sanyal's habits are 37 as yet not Pucca [firm]; and what about Brahmacharya? I don't 38 understand you. If so, the best thing for you both is to come down 39 and live here. The widow of Mohindra Mukherjee is trying head and 40 heart to erect a Math for you, and Surendranath Mitra has left 41 another thousand so that you are very likely soon to get a beautiful 42 place on the river. As for all the hardships up there, I reserve my own opinions.

It was not at all my intention to come down, only the death of Balaram Bose had made me have a peep here and go back. If the mountains be so bad, there is more than enough place for me; only I leave Bengal. If one does not suit, another will. So that is my determination. Everyone here will be so glad at your return here, and from your letter I see it would be downright injurious to you if you didn't come down. So come down at your earliest opportunity. I will leave this place before this letter reaches you; only I won't go to Almora. I have my own plans for the future and they shall be a secret.

As for Sanyal, I do not see how I can benefit him. Of course, you are at liberty to hold your own opinion about the Sanga [holy company] here. That I can find places Sudrishya [having scenic beauty] and Subhiksha [where alms are available] is enough. Sanga is not much, or, I think, not at all necessary for me.

Yours, etc.,

Narendra.

To Mrs. G. W. Hale

Minneapolis

21 November 1893.

Dear Mother,

I reached Madison safely, went to a hotel, and sent a message to Mr. Updike. He came to see me. He is a Congregational and so, of course, was not very friendly at first; but in the course of an hour or so became very kind to me, and took me over the whole place and the University. I had a fine audience and $100. Immediately after the lecture I took the night train to Minneapolis.

I tried to get the clergymen's ticket, but they could not give me any, not being the headquarters. The thing to be done is to get a permit from every head office of every line in Chicago. Perhaps it is possible for Mr. Hale to get the permits for me. If it is so, I hope he will take the trouble to send them over to me to Minneapolis if they can reach me by the 25th, or to Des Moines if by the 29th. Else I would do it the next time in Chicago. I have taken the money in a draft on the bank, which cost me 40¢.

May you be blessed for ever, my kind friend; you and your whole family have made such a heavenly impression on me as I would carry all my life.

Yours sincerely,

Vivekananda.

5 Dear Mother,

6 I am still in Minneapolis. I am to lecture this afternoon, and 7 the day after tomorrow go to Des Moines.

8 The day I came here they had their first snow, and it snowed
9 all through the day and night, and I had great use for the arctics.²⁸⁰
10 I went to see the frozen Minnehaha Falls. They are very beautiful.
11 The temperature today is 21° below zero, but I had been out 12 sleighing and enjoyed it immensely. I am not the least afraid of 13 losing the tips of my ears or nose.

14 The snow scenery here has pleased me more than any other 15 sight in this country.

16 I saw people skating on a frozen lake yesterday.

28 Dear Mother,

29 Arrived safely night before last at 1 o'clock a.m. The train was 30 seven hours late, being blocked by snowdrifts on the way. However, 31 I enjoyed the novelty of the sight: several men cutting and clearing 32 the snow and two engines tugging and pulling was a new sight to 33 me.

34 Here I met Mr. Bagley, the youngest [Paul F. Bagley], waiting 35 for me at the station; and, it being very late in the night, Mrs.
36 Bagley²⁸¹ had retired, but the daughters sat up for me.

5 Mrs. John Judson Bagley (1833-1898) was one of Detroit's most in-

7 in Chicago. She was a great admirer and supporter of the Swami and was his 8 hostess during this period. She honoured him with an enormous and gala 9 reception to which the élite of Detroit were invited.

1 They are very rich, kind and hospitable. Mrs. Bagley is 2 especially interested in India. The daughters are very good,
3 educated and good-looking. The eldest gave me a luncheon at a 4 club where I met some of the finest ladies and gentlemen of the 5 city. Last evening there was a reception given here in the house.
6 Today I am going to speak for the first time. Mrs. Bagley is a very

22 Detroit,

23 20 February 1894.

24 Dear Mother,

25 My lectures here are over. I have made some very good 26 friends here, amongst them Mr. Palmer,²⁸⁴ President of the late

1
2 ²⁸² ?

3 The Slayton Lyceum Lecture Bureau of Chicago, with whom the Swami
4 had signed a contract for three years. Later he broke the contract after noticing 5 that the Bureau had been cheating him.

6
7 ²⁸³ ? Narasimhacharya of Madras was a delegate to the Parliament of Reli-
8 gions, held at Chicago in 1893, where he became acquainted with Swami 9 Vivekananda. After the Parliament was over, he stayed for some months in the 10 United States. He had written a letter to Swami Vivekananda from the Nicholson 11 Hotel, Nashville, Tennessee, where he was stranded. The letter reads: "Dear 12 Swami, I have come here, and without being able to get out am stopping; and I 13 would be very much obliged if you would kindly send me $50 so that I can fix the 14 whole thing and come over to Chicago, from which place I shall go back home.
15 Please do so at once as I am in trouble. Hoping to hear from you soon, I remain, 16 Yours sincerely, Narasimhacharya".

17 Swami Vivekananda mailed this letter to Mrs. G. W. Hale on February 14, 18 1894, from Detroit with a line: "What do you advise, Mother? Vivekananda".

20 ²⁸⁴ ?

21 Mr. Thomas W. Palmer of Detroit was a rich businessman and statesman. In 22 1883 he was elected to the United States Senate and later became Minister to 23 Spain. He was chosen President of the World's Fair Commission when the 24 World's Columbian Exposition was organized at Chicago, in the 1890s. In all

1 World's Fair. I am thoroughly disgusted with this Slayton²⁸⁵
2 business and am trying hard to break loose. I have lost at least 3 $5,000 by joining this man. Hope you are all well. Mrs. Bagley and 4 her daughters are very kind to me. I hope to do some private 5 lecturing here and then go to Ada and then back to Chicago. It is 6 snowing here this morning. They are very nice people here, and the 7 different clubs took a good deal of interest in me. It is rather 8 wearisome, these constant receptions and dinners; and their 9 horrible dinners—a hundred dinners concentrated into one—and 10 when in a man's club, why, smoking on between the courses and 11 then beginning afresh. I thought the Chinese alone make a dinner 12 run through half a day with intervals of smoking!!

13 However, they are very gentlemanly men and, strange to say,
14 an Episcopal clergyman²⁸⁶ and a Jewish rabbi²⁸⁷ take great interest 15 in me and eulogize me. Now the man who got up the lectures here 16 got at least a thousand dollars. So in every place. And this is 17 Slayton's duty to do for me. Instead, he, the liar, had told me often 18 that he has agents everywhere and would advertise and do all that 19 for me. And this is what he is doing. His will be done. I am going 20 home. Seeing the liking the American people have for me, I could 21 have, by this time, got a pretty large sum. But Jimmy Mills²⁸⁸ and 22 Slayton were sent by the Lord to stand in the way. His ways are 23 inscrutable.

24 However, this is a secret. President Palmer has gone to 25 Chicago to try to get me loose from this liar of a Slayton. Pray that 26 he may succeed. Several judges here have seen my contract, and 27 they say it is a shameful fraud and can be broken any moment; but I 28 am a monk—no self-defence. Therefore, I had better throw up the 29 whole thing and go to India.

30 My love to Harriets, Mary, Isabelle, Mother Temple, Mr.
31 Matthews, Father Pope and you all.²⁸⁹

1 probability, it was at the Parliament of Religions that he first came to know and 2 admire Swami Vivekananda.

8 February 22, 1894

9 Dear Mother,

10 I have got the $200 for the engagements, $175 and $117 by 11 private lectures²⁹⁰ and $100 as a present from a lady.

12 This sum will be sent to you tomorrow in cheques by Mrs.
13 Bagley. Today, the banks being closed, we could not do it.

14 I am going tomorrow to lecture at Ada, Ohio. I do not know 15 whether I will go to Chicago from Ada or not. However, kindly let 16 not Slayton know anything about the rest of the money, as I am 17 going to separate myself from him.

18 Yours obediently,
19 Vivekananda.

23 To Mrs. G. W. Hale

24 Detroit,

25 10 March 1894.

26 Dear Mother,

27 Reached Detroit safely yesterday evening.²⁹¹ The two younger 28 daughters were waiting for me with a carriage. So everything was 29 all right. I hope the lecture will be a success, as one of the girls said 30 the tickets are selling like hot cakes. Here I found a letter from Mr.
31 Palmer awaiting me with a request that I should come over to his

1 Hale's sister (Mrs. James Matthews) as "Mother Temple", Mr. G. W. Hale as 2 "Father Pope" and Mrs. G. W. Hale as "Mother Church".
3

4 ²⁹⁰ ?

5 When Swami Vivekananda realized that the Slayton Lyceum Lecture
6 Bureau was cheating him, he began to arrange lectures privately, not knowing 7 that Mr. T. W. Palmer, who had gone to Chicago on his behalf, had broken the 8 contract on the day this letter was written.
9

10 ²⁹¹ ?

11 On Friday, February 23, 1894, Swami Vivekananda had left Detroit for 12 Ada, Ohio, and from there he may have returned to Chicago. It appears that his 13 Detroit admirers called him back to fight the Christian onslaught which had been 14 launched against him.
15

1 house and be his guest. Could not go last night. He will come in the 2 course of the day to take me over. As I am going over to Mr.
3 Palmer's, I have not opened the awfully-packed bag. The very idea 4 of repacking seems to me to be hopeless. So I could not shave this 5 morning. However, I hope to shave during the course of the day. I 6 am thinking of going over to Boston and New York just now, as the 7 Michigan cities I can come and take over in summer; but the 8 fashionables of New York and Boston will fly off. Lord will show the 9 way.

10 Mrs. Bagley and all the family are heartily glad at my return 11 and people are again coming in to see me.

12 The photographer here has sent me some of the pictures he 13 made. They are positively villainous—Mrs. Bagley does not like them 14 at all. The real fact is that between the two photos my face has 15 become so fat and heavy—what can the poor photographers do?

16 Kindly send over four copies of photographs. Not yet made 17 any arrangement with Holden.²⁹² Everything promises to be very 18 nice. "Ssenator Ppalmer"²⁹³ is a very nice gentleman and very kind 19 to me. He has got a French chef—Lord bless his stomach! I am 20 trying to starve and the whole world is against me!! He used to give 21 the best dinners in all Washington! Hopeless! I am resigned!

22 I will write more from Mr. Palmer's house.

23 If the Himalayas become the inkpot, the ocean ink, if the 24 heavenly eternal Devadaroo²⁹⁴ becomes the pen, and if the sky itself 25 becomes paper, still I would not be able to write a drop of the debt 26 of gratitude I owe to you and yours. Kindly convey my love to the 27 four full notes and the four half notes of the Hale gamut.²⁹⁵ May the 28 blessings of the Lord be upon you and yours ever and ever.

29 Ever yours in grateful affection,

30 Vivekananda.

12 Mr. and Mrs. James Matthews; the half notes were Harriet and Mary Hale and 13 Harriet and Isabelle McKindley—respectively, the daughters and nieces of Mrs. G.
14 W. Hale.

2 16 March 1894

3 Dear Mother,

4 Since my last, there has been nothing of interest here. Except 5 that Mr. Palmer is a very hearty, jolly, good old man and very rich.
6 He has been uniformly kind to me. Tomorrow I go back to Mrs.
7 Bagley's because I am afraid she is rather uneasy at my long stay 8 here. I am shrewd enough to know that in every country in general, 9 and America in particular, "she" is the real operator at the nose 10 string.

11 I am going to lecture here on Monday²⁹⁶ and in two places 12 near the town on Tuesday and Wednesday.²⁹⁷ I do not remember the 13 lady you refer me to,²⁹⁸ and she is in Lynn; what is Lynn, where on 14 the globe its position is—I do not know.²⁹⁹ I want to go to Boston.
15 What good would it do me by stopping at Lynn? Kindly give me a 16 more particular idea. Nor could I read the name of the lady at 17 whose house you say I met the lady. However, I am in no way very 18 anxious. I am taking life very easy in my natural way. I have no 19 particular wish to go anywhere, Boston or no Boston. I am just in a 20 nice come-what-may mood. Something should turn up, bad or good.
21 I have enough now to pay my passage back and a little sight-seeing 22 to boot. As to my plans of work, I am fully convinced that at the rate 23 it is progressing I will have to come back four or five times to put it 24 in any shape.

25 As to informing others and doing good that way, I have failed 26 to persuade myself that I have really anything to convey to the 27 world. So I am very happy just now and quite at my ease. With 28 almost nobody in this vast house and a cigar between my lips, I am 29 dreaming just now and philosophising upon that work fever which 30 was upon me. It is all nonsense. I am nothing, the world is nothing, 31 the Lord alone is the only worker. We are simply tools in His hands 32 etc., etc., etc. Have you got the Alaska information? If so, kindly 33 send it to me c/o Mrs. Bagley.

34 Are you coming to the East this summer? With eternal 35 gratitude and love,

36 Your son,
37 Vivekananda.

6 duism at Bay City, Michigan; and on Wednesday, March 21, he spoke on "The

5 Dear Mother,

6 Herewith I send two cheques of $114 and $75 to be put in the 7 banks for me. I have endorsed them to your care.

8 I am going to Boston in a day or two. I have got $57 with me.
9 They will go a long way. Something will turn up, as it always does. I 10 do not know where I go from Boston. I have written to Mrs.
11 [Francis W.] Breed but as yet heard nothing from her.³⁰⁰ His will be 12 done. Not I but Thou—that is always the motto of my life.

13 With my eternal gratitude, love, and admiration for Mother

23 2 April 1894

24 Dear Mother,

25 I am in New York. The gentleman [Dr. Guernsey] whose guest 26 I am is a very nice and learned and well-to-do man. He had an only 27 son whom he lost last July. Has only a daughter now. The old couple 28 have received a great shock, but they are pure and God-loving 29 people and bear it manfully. The lady of the house is very, very kind 30 and good. They are trying to help me as much as they can and they 31 will do a good deal, I have no doubt.

32 Awaiting further developments. This Thursday [April 5] they 33 will invite a number of the brainy people of the Union League Club 34 and other places of which the Doctor is a member, and see what 35 comes out of it. Parlour lectures are a great feature in this city, and 36 more can be made by each such lecture than even platform talks in 37 other cities.

38 It is a very clean city. None of that black smoke tarring 39 everyone in five minutes; and the street in which the Doctor lives is 40 a nice, quiet one.

1 300 ?

2 Soon afterward the Swami received a telegram from Mrs. Breed inviting him to 3 Lynn to be her guest for a week; he accepted and spent a week at her home in 4 mid-April.

1 Hope the sisters are doing well and enjoying their music,
2 both in the opera and the parlour. I am sure I would have 3 appreciated the music at the opera about which Miss Mary wrote to 4 me. I am sure the opera musicians do not show the interior anatomy 5 of their throats and lungs.

6 Kindly give brother Sam³⁰¹ my deep love. I am sure he is 7 bewaring of the vidders.³⁰² Some of the Baby Bagleys³⁰³ are going to 8 Chicago. They will go to see you, and I am sure you would like them 9 very much.

10 Nothing more to write. With all respect, love and obedience,

11 Your son,

12 Vivekananda.

13 PS—I have not to ask now for addresses. Mrs. Sherman³⁰⁴ has 14 given me a little book with A., B., C., etc., marks and has written 15 under them all the addresses I need; and I hope to write all the 16 future addresses in the same manner. What an example of self-help 17 I am!!³⁰⁵

15 sible. We miss you, awfully. Hope you are well and happy and bewaring of the 16 vidders, as Swami says. Love to all. Affectionately your sister, Mary".

1 India. Lord bless them. But I would be very, very sorry of any trick
2 being played by them. I never have heard of any Lord in India, 3 much less in Ceylon.³⁰⁶ The people of Ceylon and northern India 4 differ more than Americans and Hindus. Nor is there any 5 connection between the Buddhist priest and the Hindu. Our dress, 6 manners, religion, food, language differ entirely from southern 7 India, much less to speak of Ceylon. You know already that I could 8 not speak a word of Narasimha's language!! Although that was only 9 Madras. Well, you have Hindu princesses; why not a Lord, which is 10 not a higher title.

11 There was a certain Mrs. Smith in Chicago.³⁰⁷ I met her at 12 Mrs. Stockham's. She has introduced me to the Guernseys. Dr.
13 Guernsey is one of the chief physicians of this city and is a very 14 good old gentleman. They are very fond of me and are very nice 15 people. Next Friday I am going to Boston. I have not been lecturing 16 in New York at all. I will come back and do some lecturing here.

17 For the last few days I was the guest of Miss Helen 18 Gould—daughter of the rich Gould³⁰⁸—at her palatial country 19 residence, an hour's ride from the city. She has one of the most 20 beautiful and large green-houses in the world, full of all sorts of 21 curious plants and flowers. They are Presbyterians, and she is a 22 very religious lady. I had a very nice time there.

23 I met my friend Mr. Flagg³⁰⁹ several times. He is flying 24 merrily. There is another Mrs. Smith here who is very rich and 25 pious. She has invited me to dine today.

26 As for lecturing, I have given up raising money. I cannot 27 degenerate myself any more. When a certain purpose was in view, I 28 could work; with that gone I cannot earn for myself. I have 29 sufficient for going back. I have not tried to earn a penny here, and 30 have refused some presents which friends here wanted to make to 31 me. Especially Flagg—I have refused his money. I had in Detroit 32 tried to refund the money back to the donors, and told them that, 33 there being almost no chance of my succeeding in my enterprise, I 34 had no right to keep their money; but they refused and told me to 35 throw that into the waters if I liked. But I cannot take any more 36 conscientiously. I am very well off, Mother. Everywhere the Lord 37 sends me kind persons and homes; so there is no use of my going 38 into beastly worldliness at all.

1 The New York people, though not so intellectual as the 2 Bostonians, are, I think, more sincere. The Bostonians know well
3 how to take advantage of everybody. And I am afraid even water 4 cannot slip through their closed fingers!!! Lord bless them!!! I have 5 promised to go and I must go; but, Lord, make me live with the 6 sincere, ignorant and the poor, and not cross the shadow of the 7 hypocrites and tall talkers who, as my Master used to say, are like 8 vultures who soar high and high in their talks, but the heart is 9 really on a piece of carrion on the ground.

10 I would be the guest of Mrs. Breed for a few days and, after 11 seeing a little of Boston, I would come back to New York.

12 Hope the sisters are all right and enjoying their concerts 13 immensely. There is not much of music in this city. That is a 14 blessing (?) Went to see Barnum's circus the other day. It is no 15 doubt a grand thing. I have not been as yet downtown. This street is 16 very nice and quiet.

17 I heard a beautiful piece of music the other day at Barnum's 18 –they call it a Spanish Serenada. Whatever it be, I liked it so 19 much. Unfortunately, Miss Guernsey is not given to much 20 thumping, although she has a good assortment of all the noisy stuffs 21 in the world–and so she could not play it, which I regret ever so 22 much.

23 Yours obediently,

24 Vivekananda.

25 PS–Most probably I will go to Annisquam as Mrs. Bagley's 26 guest. She has got a nice house there this summer. Before that, I

21 Dear Mother,

22 I have been since the 7th, lecturing here every afternoon or 23 evening. At Mrs. Fairchild's I met the niece of Mrs. Howe. She was 24 here today to invite me to dinner with her today. I have not seen 25 Mr. Volkinen as yet. Of course, the pay for lecture is here the 26 poorest, and everybody has an axe to grind. I got a long let-ter full 27 of the prattles of the babies.³¹⁰ Your city, i.e. New York, pays far 28 better than Boston, so I am trying to go back there. But here one 29 can get work almost every day.

30 I think I want some rest. I feel as if I am very much tired, and 31 these constant journeyings to and fro have shaken my nerves a 32 little, but hope to recoup soon. Last few days I have been suffering 33 from cold and slight fever and lecturing for all that; hope to get rid 34 of it in a day or two.

35 I have got a very nice gown at $30. The colour is not exactly 36 that of the old one, but cardinal, with more of yellow—

37 could not get the exact old colour even in New York.

38 I have not much to write, for it is the repetition of the old
39 story: talking, talking, talking. I long to fly to Chicago and shut up 40 my mouth and give a long rest to mouth and lungs and mind. If I am 41 not called for in New York, I am coming soon to Chicago.

10 Dear Mother,

11 Your letter was so, so pleasing instead of being long; I 12 enjoyed every bit of it.

13 I have received a letter from Mrs. Potter Palmer³¹¹ asking me 14 to write to some of my countrywomen about their society etc. I will 15 see her personally when I come to Chicago; in the mean-while I will 16 write her all I know. Perhaps you have received $125 sent over 17 from New York. Tomorrow I will send another $100 from here. The 18 Bostonians want to grind their own axes!!

19 Oh, they are so, so dry—even girls talk dry metaphysics. Here 20 is like our Benares where all is dry, dry metaphysics!! Nobody here 21 understands "my Beloved". Religion to these people is reason, and 22 horribly stony at that. I do not care for anybody who cannot love my 23 "Beloved". Do not tell it to Miss Howe—she may be offended.

24 The pamphlet I did not send over because I do not like the 25 quotations from the Indian newspapers—especially, they give a haul 26 over coal to somebody. Our people so much dislike the Brâhmo 27 Samâj that they only want an opportunity to show it to them. I 28 dislike it. Any amount of enmity to certain persons cannot efface the 29 good works of a life. And then they were only children in Religion.
30 They never were much of religious men—

31 i.e. they only wanted to talk and reason, and did not struggle 32 to see the Beloved; and until one does that I do not say that he has 33 any religion. He may have books, forms, doctrines, words, reasons, 34 etc., etc., but not religion; for that begins when the soul feels the 35 necessity, the want, the yearning after the "Beloved", and never 36 before. And therefore our society has no right to expect from them 37 anything more than from an ordinary "house-holder".

38 I hope to come to Chicago before the end of this month. Oh, I 39 am so tired.

40 Yours affectionately,

Dear Mother,

We are all doing very well here. Last night the sisters³¹² invited me and Mrs. Norton and Miss Howe and Mr. Frank Howe. We had a grand dinner and softshell crab and many other things, and a very nice time. Miss Howe left this morning.

The sisters and Mother Temple³¹³ are taking very good care of me. Just now I am going to see my "oh-my-dear" Gandhi.³¹⁴ Narasimha was here yesterday; he wanted to go to Cincinnati where he says he has more chances of success than anywhere else in the world. I gave him the passage, and so I hope I have got the white elephant out of my hands for the time being. How is Father Pope doing now? Hope he has been much benefited by the mudfish business.³¹⁵

I had a very beautiful letter from Miss Guernsey of New York, giving you her regards. I am going downtown to buy a new pair of shoes as well as to get some money, my purse having been made empty by Narasimha.

Nothing more to write. Yes, we went to see the "Charley's Aunt".³¹⁶ I nearly killed myself with laughing. Father Pope will enjoy it extremely. I had never seen anything so funny.

Yours affectionately,
Vivekananda.

28 Dear Mother,

29 Hope you are settled down in peace by this time. The babies 30 are doing well in Mudville³¹⁸—in their nunnery, I am sure. It is very 31 hot here, but now and then a breeze comes up which cools it down.
32 I am now with Miss [Mary A.] Phillips. Will move off from here on 33 Tuesday to another place.

34 Here I find a quotation from a speech by Sir Monier-Williams, 35 professor of Sanskrit in the Oxford University. It is very strange as 36 coming from one who every day expects to see the whole of India
37 converted to Christianity. "And yet it is a remarkable characteristic 38 of Hinduism that it neither requires nor attempts to make converts.

1 ³¹⁷ ?

2 Mr. Leon Landsberg, who was later initiated by Swami Vivekananda into 3 Sannyâsa at Thousand Island Park and became known as Swami Kripananda.

4 ³¹⁸ ?

1 Nor is it at present by any means decreasing in numbers, nor is it 2 being driven out of the field by two such proselytizing religions as 3 Mahomedanism [sic] and Christianity. On the contrary, it is at 4 present rapidly increasing. And far more remarkable than this is 5 that, it is all-receptive, all-embracing and all-comprehensive. It 6 claims to be the one religion of humanity, of human nature, of the 7 entire world. It cares not to oppose the progress of Christianity nor 8 of any other religion. For it has no difficulty in including all other 9 religions within its all-embracing arms and ever-widening fold. And 10 in real fact Hinduism has something to offer which is suited to all 11 minds. Its very strength lies in its infinite adaptability to the infinite 12 diversity of human characters and human tendencies. It has its 13 highly spiritual and abstract side suited to the philosoph-ical higher 14 classes. Its practical and concrete side suited to the man of affairs 15 and the man of the world. Its aesthetic and ceremonial side suited 16 to the man of poetic feeling and imagination. Its quiescent and 17 contemplative side suited to the man of peace and lover of 18 seclusion.

19 "Indeed, the Hindus were Spinozists 2,000 years before the 20 birth of Spinoza, Darwinians centuries before the birth of Darwin, 21 and evolutionists centuries before the doctrine of evolution had 22 been accepted by the Huxleys of our time, and before any word like 23 evolution existed in any language of the world."

24 This, as coming from one of the staunchest defenders of 25 Christianity, is wonderful indeed. But he seems to have got the idea 26 quite correct.

27 Now I am going to send up the orange coat today; as for the 28 books that came to me from Philadelphia, I do not think they are 29 worthy of being sent at all. I do not know what I am going to do 30 next. Patiently wait and resign myself unto His guidance—that is my 31 motto. My love to you all.

41 Dear Mother,

42 Your kind note reached me here yesterday evening. I am so 43 glad to hear the babies are enjoying. I got the Interior and am very 44 glad to see my friend Mazoomdar's³¹⁹ book spoken of so highly.
45 Mazoomdar is a great and a good man and has done much for his

1 fellow beings.

2 It is a lovely summer place, this Cedar Lawn of the 3 Guern-seys. Miss Guernsey has gone on a visit to Swampscott. I 4 had also an invitation there, but I thought [it] better to stay here in 5 the calm and silent place full of trees and with the beautiful Hudson 6 flowing by and mountain in the background.

7 I am very thankful for Miss Howe's suggestion, and I am also 8 thinking of it. Most probably I will go to England very soon. But 9 between you and me, I am a sort of mystic and cannot move without 10 orders, and that has not come yet. Mr. [Charles M.] Higgins, a rich 11 young lawyer and inventor of Brooklyn, is arranging some lectures 12 for me. I have not settled whether I will stop for them or not.

13 My eternal thanks to you for your kindness. My whole life 14 cannot repay my debt to you.³²⁰ You may see from the letter from 15 Madras that there is not a word about Narasimha. What can I do 16 more? I did not get the cheque cashed yet, for there was no ne-
17 cessity. Miss Phillips was very kind to me. She is an old lady, about 18 50 or more. You need not feel any worry about my being taken care 19 of. The Lord always takes care of His servants; and so long as I am 20 really His servant and not the world's, I am very confident of 21 getting everything that would be good for me. The Guernseys love 22 me very much, and there are many families in New York and 23 Brooklyn who would take the best care of me.

24 I had a beautiful letter from Mr. Snell,³²¹ saying that a sudden 25 change for the better has taken place in his fortunes and offering 26 me thrice the money I lent him as a contribution to my work. And he 27 also has beautiful letters from Dharmapala and others from India.
28 But, of course, I politely refused his repayment.

29 So far so good. I have seen Mr. [Walter Hines] Page, the 30 editor of the Forum here. He was so sorry not to get the article on 31 missionaries. But I have promised to write on other interesting 32 subjects. Hope I will have patience to do so.

33 I had a letter yesterday from Miss Harriet,³²² from which I 34 learn that they are enjoying Kenosha³²³ very much. Lord bless you 35 and yours, Mother Church, for ever and ever. I cannot even express 36 my gratitude to you.

37 As for me, you need not be troubled in the least. My whole 38 life is that of a vagabond—homeless, roving tramp; any fare, good or 39 bad, in any country, is good enough for me.

 9 Dear Mother,
 10 I think I have all your questions answered and you are in 11 good humour again.
 12 I am enjoying this place very much; going to Greenacre today 13 or tomorrow and on our way back I intend to go to Annisquam, to 14 Mrs. Bagley's—I have written to her. Mrs. Breed³²⁴ says, "You are 15 very sensitive".
 16 Now, I fortunately did not cash your check³²⁵ in New York. I 17 wanted to cash it here, when lo! you have not signed your name to 18 it. The Hindu is a dreamer no doubt, but when the Christian dreams 19 he dreams with a vengeance.
 20 Do not be distressed. Somebody gave me plenty of money to 21 move about. I would be taken care of right along. I send herewith 22 the cheque back to you. I had a very beautiful letter from Miss 23 Mary. My love to them. What is Father Pope doing? Is it very hot in 24 Chicago? I do not care for the heat of this country. It is nothing 25 compared to our India heat. I am doing splendidly. The other day I 26 had the summer cholera; and cramp, etc. came to pay their calls to 27 me. We had several hours nice talk and groans and then they 28 departed.
 29 I am on the whole doing very well. Has the meerscham pipe
 30 reached Chicago?³²⁶ I had nice yachting, nice sea bathing, and am 31 enjoying myself like a duck. Miss Guernsey went home just now. I 32 do not know what more to write.
 33 Lord bless you all.

6 Dear Mother,

7 I have received your letter and am very much ashamed at my 8 bad memory. I unfortunately forgot all about the cheque. Perhaps 9 you have come to know by this time of my being in Greenacre. I had 10 a very nice time here and am enjoying it immensely. In the fall I am 11 going to lecture in Brooklyn, New York. Yesterday I got news that 12 they have completed all the advertising there. I have an invitation 13 today from a friend in New York to go with him to some mountains 14 north of this state of Maine. I do not know whether I will go or not. I 15 am doing pretty well. Between lecturing, teaching, picnicking and 16 other excitements the time is flying rapidly. I hope you are doing 17 very well and that Father Pope is in good trim. It is a very beautiful 18 spot—this Greenacre—and [I] have very nice company from Boston: 19 Dr. Everett Hale,³²⁷ you know, of Boston, and Mrs. Ole Bull, of 20 Cambridge. I do not know whether I will accept the invitation of my 21 friend of New York or not.

22 So far only this is sure, that I will go to lecture in New York
23 this coming fall. And Boston, of course, is a good field. The people 24 here are mostly from Boston and they all like me very much. Are 25 you having a good time, and Father Pope? Has your house-painting 26 been finished? The Babies, I am sure, are enjoying their Mudville.

27 I am in no difficulty for money. I have plenty to eat and drink.

28 With my best love and gratitude to you and Father Pope and 29 the Babies.

5 Dear Mother,

6 I have received the letter you sent over to me coming from 7 India.

8 I am going to leave this place on Monday next for Plymouth 9 [Massachusetts], where the Free Religious Association³²⁸ is holding 10 its session. They will defray my expenses, of course.

11 I am all right, enjoying nice health, and the people here are 12 very kind and nice to me. Up to date I had no occasion to cash any 13 cheque as everything is going on smoothly. I have not heard 14 anything from the Babies. Hope they are doing well. You also had 15 nothing to write; however, I feel that you are doing well.

16 I would have gone over to another place, but Mr.
17 Hig-ginson's³²⁹ invitation ought to be attended to. And Plymouth is 18 the place where the fathers of your country first landed. I want, 19 therefore, to see it.

20 I am all right. It is useless reiterating my love and gratitude 21 to you and yours—you know it all. May the Lord shower His choicest 22 blessings on you and yours.

23 This meeting is composed of the best professors of your 24 country and other people, so I must attend it; and then they would 25 pay me. I have not yet determined all my plans, only I am going to 26 lecture in New York this coming fall; every arrangement is 27 complete for that. They have printed advertisements at their own 28 expense for that and made everything ready.

29 Give my best love to the Babies, to Father Pope, and believe 30 me ever in gratitude and love,

31 Your Son,
32 Vivekananda.

33 P.S. I am very much obliged to the sisters for asking me to 34 tell them if I want anything. I have no want anyway—I have 35 everything I require and more to spare.

10 Dear Mother,

11 Your letters just now reached me. I had some beautiful letters 12 from India. The letter from Ajit Singh³³⁰ shows that the phonograph 13 has not reached yet, and it was dated 8th June. So I do not think it 14 is time yet to get an answer. I am not astonished at my friends'
15 asking Cook & Sons to hunt for me; I have not written for a long 16 time.

17 I have a letter from Madras which says they will soon send 18 money to Narasimha³³¹—in fact, as soon as they get a reply to their 19 letter written to Narasimha. So kindly let Narasimha know it. The 20 photographs have not reached me—except two of Fishkill when I 21 was there last. Landsberg³³² has kindly sent over the letters. From 22 here I will probably go over to Fishkill. The meerschaum³³³ was not 23 sent over by me direct, but I left it to the Guernseys. And they are a 24 lazy family in that respect.

25 I have beautiful letters from the sisters.

26 By the by, your missionaries try to make me a malcontent
27 before the English government in India, and the Lieutenant 28 Governor of Bengal in a recent speech hinted that the recent 29 revival of Hinduism was against the government. Lord bless the 30 missionary. Everything is fair in love and (religion?).

35 India. I am so lazy, and I cannot send over the newspaper nonsense

4 I have not much to write, and I do not remember anything of 5 what I said or did all these places over. So I hope to be excused.

6 I will be here a few days more at least, and therefore I think it 7 would be better to send over my mail here.

8 I have now almost become dizzy through the perusal of a

18 Dear Mother,

19 The photographs reached safely yesterday. I cannot tell 20 exactly whether Harrison ought to give me more or not. They had 21 sent only two to me at Fishkill³³⁴—not the pose I ordered, though.

22 Narasimha has perhaps got his passage by this time. He will 23 get it soon, whether his family gives him the money or not. I have 24 written to my friends in Madras to look to it, and they write me they 25 will.

26 I would be very glad if he becomes a Christian or 27 Mohammedan or any religion that suits him; but I am afraid for 28 some time to come none will suit our friend. Only if he becomes a 29 Christian he will have a chance to marry again, even in India

30 —the Christians there permitting it. I am so sorry to learn that 31 it is the "bondage of heathen India" that, after all, was the cause of 32 all this mischief. We learn as we live. So we were all this time 33 ignorantly and blindly blaming our much suffering, persecuted, 34 saintly friend Narasimha, while all the fault was really owing to the 35 "bondage of heathen India"!!!!

36 But to give the devil his due, this heathen India has been 37 supplying him with money to go on a spree again and again. And 38 this time too "heathen India" will [take] or already has taken our 39 "enlightened" and persecuted friend from out of his present scrape, 40 and not "Christian America"!! Mrs. Smith's plan is not bad after 41 all—to turn Narasimha into a missionary of Christ. But unfortunately 42 for the world, many and many a time the flag of Christ has been entrusted to such hands. But I would beg to add that he will then be only a missionary of Smithian American Christianity, not Christ's. Arrant humbug! That thing to preach Lord Jesus!!! Is He in want of men to uphold His banner? Pooh! the very idea is revolting. Do good to India indeed! Thank your charity and call back your dog—as the tramp said. Keep such good workers for America. The Hindus will have a quarantine against all such [outcasting] to protect their society. I heartily advise Narasimha to become a Christian—I beg your pardon, a convert to Americanism—because I am sure such a jewel is unsaleable in poor India. He is welcome to anything that will fetch a price. I know the gentleman whom you name perfectly well, and you may give him any information about me you like. I do not care for sending scraps³³⁵ and getting a boom for me. And these friends from India bother me enough for newspaper nonsense. They are very devoted, faithful and holy friends. I have not much of these scraps now. After a long search I found a bit in a Boston Transcript. I send it over to you.³³⁶ This public life is such a botheration. I am nearly daft.

3 some days with his friends Dr. and Mrs. Guernsey of New York City.
4

Where to fly? In India I have become horribly public—crowds

³³⁵ ?

Apparently Swami Vivekananda meant newspaper clippings providing proof of Hindu India's approval and support of his work in America.

³³⁶ ? Two newspaper clippings—neither one from the Boston Transcript—were enclosed with this letter and are given below.

(From the Indian Mirror, July 14, 1894): "There has been some lively correspondence between Swami Vivekananda and a retired Christian Missionary on the work and prospects of Christianity in India. Among other things, the Swami is reported to have said that 'the way of converting is absolutely absurd'; 'Missionary doctors do no good, because they are not in touch with the people.' 'They accomplish nothing in the way of converting, although they may have nice sociable times among themselves, etc.' The reverend gentleman took exception to the words, maintaining that, speaking the vernaculars well, nobody of foreigners understands and sympathises with Indians better than Missionaries. The Missionaries are undoubtedly good and well-meaning people; but we think, the statement of the Swami that they are seldom in touch with the people is not without foundation. With the revival of Hinduism, manifested in every part of the country, it is doubtful whether Christianity will have any sway over the Hindus. The present is a critical time for Christian Missions in India. The Swami thanked the Missionary for calling him his fellow-countryman. 'This is the first time,' he wrote, 'any European foreigner, born in India though he be, has dared to call a detested Native by that name—Missionary or no Missionary. Would you dare to call me the same in India?' Would he, indeed?"

(From the Amrita Bazar Patrika, August 24, 1894): "The insinuation that Swami Vivekananda is not an 'orthodox' Hindu owes its origin to missionary influence. It is simply impossible for the missionaries to love Vivekananda, and it is therefore natural that they should try to bring him down. And why is Vivekananda not an orthodox Hindu? It is because, say they, he has crossed the ocean and eaten un-Hindu food. But the restriction which Hinduism imposes upon its members has no forces upon the liberated the Sannyasis, to which class the Swami belongs. The Hindu who has cut off his connection with the world has liberty to take anything and to go anywhere he pleases. Vivekananda deserves well of the world. The world is now governed by the West, and Vivekananda has opened out a new world to the people of that West. In the West, especially in America, every man is a monarch. To make any impression in such a country is beyond the means of the ablest of our species. Vivekananda's work in America is a miracle, and he is no doubt an instrument in the hands of God."

1 will follow me and take my life out. I got an Indian letter from 2 Landsberg. Every ounce of fame can only be bought at the cost of a 3 pound of peace and holiness. I never thought of that before. I have 4 become entirely disgusted with this blazoning. I am disgusted with 5 myself. Lord will show me the way to peace and purity. Why, 6 Mother, I confess to you: no man can live in an atmosphere of 7 public life, even in religion, without the devil of competition now 8 and then thrusting his head into the serenity of his heart. Those 9 who are trained to preach a doctrine never feel it, for they never 10 knew religion. But those that are after God, and not after the world, 11 feel at once that every bit of name and fame is at the cost of their 12 purity. It is so much gone from that ideal of perfect unselfishness, 13 perfect disregard of gain or name or fame. Lord help me. Pray for 14 me, Mother. I am very much disgusted with myself. Oh, why the 15 world be so that one cannot do anything without putting himself to 16 the front; why cannot one act hidden and unseen and unnoticed?
17 The world has not gone one step beyond idolatry yet. They cannot 18 act from ideas, they cannot be led by ideas. But they want the 19 person, the man. And any man that wants to do something must pay 20 the penalty—no hope. This nonsense of the world. Shiva, Shiva, 21 Shiva.

22 By the by, I have got such a beautiful edition of Thomas à 23 Kempis. How I love that old monk. He caught a wonderful glimpse 24 of the "behind the veil"—few ever got such. My, that is religion. No 25 humbug of the world. No shilly-shallying, tall talk, conjecture—I 26 presume, I believe, I think. How I would like to go out of this piece 27 of painted humbug they call the beautiful world with Thomas à 28 Kempis—beyond, beyond, which can only be felt, never expressed.

29 That is religion. Mother, there is God. There all the saints, 30 prophets and incarnations meet. Beyond the Babel of Bibles and 31 Vedas, creeds and crafts, dupes and doctrines—where is all light, all 32 love, where the miasma of this earth can never reach. Ah! who will 33 take me thither? Do you sympathize with me, Mother? My soul is 34 groaning now under the hundred sorts of bondage I am placing on 35 it. Whose India? Who cares? Everything is His. What are we? Is He 36 dead? Is He sleeping? He, without whose command a leaf does not 37 fall, a heart does not beat, who is nearer to me than my own self. It 38 is bosh and nonsense—to do good or do bad or do fuzz. We do
39 nothing. We are not. The world is not. He is, He is. Only He is. None 40 else is. He is.

41 Om, the one without a second. He in me, I in Him. I am like a 42 bit of glass in an ocean of light. I am not, I am not. He is, He is, He 43 is.

44 Om, the one without a second.

45 Yours ever affectionately,

46 Vivekananda.

1 Date do not know
2 [Postmarked: August 28, 1894]

3 Dear Mother,

4 I have been for three days at Magnolia. Magnolia is one of the 5 most fashionable and beautiful seaside resorts of this part. I think 6 the scenery is better than that of Annisquam. The rocks there are 7 very beautiful, and the forests run down to the very edge of the 8 water. There is a very beautiful pine forest. A lady of Chicago and 9 her daughter, Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Sawyer, were the friends that 10 invited me up there. They had also arranged a lecture for me, out of 11 which I got $43. I met a good many Boston people—Mrs. Smith 12 Junior, who said she knows Harriet, and Mrs. Smith the elder, 13 [who] knows you well.

14 In Boston the other day I met a Unitarian clergyman who said 15 he lives next to you in Chicago. I have unfortunately forgotten his 16 name. Mrs. Smith is a very nice lady and treated me with all 17 courtesy. Mrs. Bagley is kind as ever, and I will have to remain here 18 a few days more, I am afraid. Prof. Wright and I are having a good 19 time. Prof. Bradley of Evanston³³⁷ has gone home. If you ever meet 20 him at Evanston, give him my best love and regards. He is really a 21 spiritual man.

22 I do not find anything more to write.

23 Some unknown friend has sent me from New York a fountain
24 pen. So I am writing with it to test it. It is working very smoothly
25 and nicely as you can judge from the writing. Perhaps Narasimha's 26 difficulties have been settled by this time, and "heathen India" has 27 helped him out yet, I hope.

28 What is Father Pope doing? What the Babies are doing and 29 where are they? What news of our Sam?³³⁸ Hope he is prospering.
30 Kindly give him my best love. Where is Mother Temple now?

31 Well, after all, I could fill up two pages. Yes, there was a Miss 32 Barn (?) who said she met me at your house. She is a young lady of 33 Chicago.

34 Magnolia is a good bathing place and I had two baths in the 35 sea. A large concourse of men and women go to bathe there every 36 day—the most part men. And strange, women do not give up their 37 coat of mail even while bathing. That is how these mailclad 38 she-warriors of America have got the superiority over men.

39 Our Sanskrit poets lavish all the power of expression they 40 have upon the soft body of women—the Sanskrit word for women is 41 "Komala", the soft body; but the mailclad ones of this country are 42 "armadillas", I think. You cannot imagine how ludicrous it appears 43 to a foreigner who never saw it before. Shiva, Shiva.

1 Now Narasimha's Mrs. Smith does not torture you anymore

4 speak of a cott—and that I met there the woman that pulls by the 5 nose Mr. Pullman?³³⁹ And I also heard there the best American 6 singer,³⁴⁰ they said—she sang beautifully; she sang "Bye Baby Bye". I 7 am having a very, very good time all the time, Lord be praised.

8 I have written to India not to bother me with constant letters.
9 Why, when I am travelling in India nobody writes to me. Why should 10 they spend all their superfluous energy in scrawling letters to me in 11 America? My whole life is to be that of a wanderer—here or there or 12 anywhere. I am in no hurry. I had a foolish plan in my head 13 unworthy of a Sannyasin. I have given it up now and mean to take 14 life easy. No indecent hurry. Don't you see, Mother Church? You 15 must always remember, Mother Church, that I cannot settle down 16 even at the North Pole, that wander about I must—that is my vow, 17 my religion. So India or North Pole or South Pole—don't care where.
18 Last two years I have been travelling among races whose language 19 even I cannot speak. "I have neither father nor mother nor brothers

18 Dear Mother,

19 The news of the arrival of the phonograph from Khetri has not 20 come yet. But I am not anxious, because I just now got another 21 letter from India wherein there is no mention of the photographs I 22 sent, showing that parcels reach later than letters.

23 Herewith I send you an autograph letter of H.H. the 24 Maha-raja of Mysore, the chief Hindu king in India. You may see on 25 the map [that] his territory occupies a very large portion of 26 southern India.

27 I am very glad that he is slowly being gained over to my side.
28 If he wills, he can set all my plans to work in five days. He has an 29 income of $150 million dollars; think of that.

30 May Jagadambâ [the Mother of the Universe] turn his mind
31 towards the good work. He says he quite appreciates my good 32 words—they were about my plans for educating the poor. Hope he 33 will soon show it in material shape.

34 My love to all. Why the babies do not prattle?

16 Dear Mother,

17 Your very kind note came just now. I was suffering for the last 18 few days from cold and fever. I am all right now. I am glad all the 19 papers reached you safe. The newspaper clippings are with Mrs.
20 Bagley; only a copy has been sent over to you. By the by, Mrs.
21 Bagley becomes jealous if I send away everything to you. That is 22 between you and me. The Indian Mirror is with Prof. Wright,³⁴⁴ and 23 he will send it over to you. There is yet no news of the phonograph.
24 Wait one week more and then we will enquire. If you see a letter 25 with the Khetri stamp, then surely the news is coming. I do not 26 smoke one third as much as I used to when Father Pope's eternal 27 box was ready and open day and night. Haridasbhai is to be 28 addressed as Shri only. On the envelope, Dewan Bahadoor ought to 29 be written, as that is a title. Perhaps the note from the Maharaja of 30 Mysore has reached you by this time.

31 I will remain a few days yet in Boston and the vicinity. The 32 bank book is in the bank. We did not take it out, but the cheque 33 book is with me. I am going to write out my thoughts on religion; in 34 that, no missionaries have any place. I am going to lecture in New 35 York in autumn, but I like teaching small circles better, and there 36 will be enough of that in Boston.

37 The rugs I wanted to be sent from India; and they will come 38 from Punjab, where the best rugs are made.

39 I had a beautiful letter from Sister Mary.³⁴⁵

1 his people have taken care to send him Thomas Cook's passage
2 from place to place. I think he is gone now.

3 I do not think the Lord will allow his servant to be inflated
4 with vanity at the appreciation of his countrymen. I am glad that 5 they appreciate me—not for my sake, but that I am firmly persuaded 6 that a man is never improved by abuse but by praise, and so with 7 nations. Think how much of abuse has been quite unnecessarily 8 hurled at the head of my devoted, poor country, and for what? They 9 never injured the Christians or their religion or their preachers.
10 They have always been friendly to all. So you see, Mother, every 11 good word a foreign nation says to them has such an amount of 12 power for good in India. The American appreciation of my humble 13 work here has really done a good deal of benefit to them. Send a 14 good word, a good thought—at least to the down-trodden, vilified, 15 poor millions of India instead of abusing them day and night. That is 16 what I beg of every nation. Help them if you can; if you cannot, at 17 least cease from abusing them.

18 I did not see any impropriety in the bathing places at the 19 seashore, but only vanity in some: in those that went into water 20 with their corsets on, that was all.

21 I have not got any copy of the Inter-Ocean yet.³⁴⁶

35 phonograph. I think it is high time we make them inquire into it.

36 The two volumes of Todd's [Tod's] history of Rajasthan have 37 been presented to me by Mrs. Potter Palmer. I have asked her to 38 send it over to your care. The babies will like reading it very much, 39 and after they finish I will send it over with my Sanskrit books to 40 Calcutta.

41 I did not ask you to send me the typewritten news clippings at 33 The bundles all came safely. One was newspapers from India.

34 The other was the short sketch of my Master published by Mr.

31 Dear Mother,

32 Received two letters from you and a large number from India
33 but none from Khetri.

34 I am sorry the sisters have got bad colds and more sorry for 35 your getting worried over it. Nothing can make a Christian worry. I 36 hope Narasimha will be a good boy this time forth. Sister Mary is 37 coming to Boston—good. I am going off from here tomorrow to 38 Baltimore. I had enough to pay all my expenses here; and since I 39 am living with Mrs. Bull, there is no expense. She is a rich and 40 highly cultured lady. She has given me $500 for my work or 41 anything I like. As I am not going west very soon, I will have a bank 42 account here in Boston. From Philadelphia I go to Washington, and

1 then I will run between New York and Boston. So I do not think I 2 will be able to see you, except perhaps Sister Mary. I want so very 3 much that Mary will see Mrs. Bull and others of my friends here. I 4 have the fat of the land as usual, and my dinner is cooking very well 5 both here and in India. Do not make it public, Mother—that is 6 between you and me and the babies—and do not worry yourself 7 about anything. All things come to him that waits. I am going to 8 send the greater part of the money I have got to India and then 9 money will come faster. I have always found that the faster I spend, 10 the faster it comes. Nature abhors a vacuum. I am in very good 11 spirits, only you must not stop keeping me informed about yourself, 12 Babies and Father Pope from time to time.

13 Perhaps you remember the two letters that came from 14 Mysore—I want one of those envelopes with the Mysore King's seal 15 on the outside to be sent to Miss Phillips, 19 West 38th Street, New 16 York.

17 I cannot go to New York now nor to Chicago, although I had a 18 number of invitations and offers from both the places. I must see 19 now the capital and the other cities. I am in His Hands. If Miss 20 Mary be in Boston, sometime I may hope to see her.

21 I am glad that Narasimha was never fast—hope he will never 22 be.

23 From India they always write me to come, come, come. They 24 do not know the secret. I am acting more from here than I will ever 25 do from there.

26 Kindly send my letters to this address and they will reach me

5 I am going again to see her tomorrow at Mrs. Spalding's—I was 6 there last afternoon. I will be in N.Y. this month; then I go to Boston 7 and perhaps will be there all through December. When I was sick in 8 Boston last spring, I went over to Chicago, and not to Detroit as 9 Mrs. Bagley expected. So this time I am going to Detroit first and 10 then to Chicago, if possible. Else I altogether give up the plan of 11 going to the West soon.

12 There is more chance of working my plans out in the East 13 than in the West, as it now appears.

9 nearly the whole of it very soon. Only, I will keep enough for the 10 passage back. Saw Mother Temple several times in New York. She 11 was kind as usual. So was Mrs. Spalding.

12 Sister Mary wrote me a letter from Brookline

7 I have not seen Sister Mary yet, but hope to see her this week 8 as I am going away to New York next Tuesday. Cannot come by any 9 means to Chicago now, for I expect to go to Washington from New 10 York and hope to be pretty busy in New York.

11 If I can snatch up a few days between the lecture in Brooklyn 12 on the 30th and the next series in New York, I will fly to Chicago for 13 a few days. If I had time just now, it would have been better for me, 14 for the half-fare ticket will expire after this month.

15 I have been kept very busy here this month so could not go to 16 Boston even for a day. Now I have time and hope to see Sister 17 Mary.

18 How are the babies at home? Mrs. M. Adams of Chicago, who

20 all this time. She is a very great lady in every respect and so 21 intelligent. She knows all of you and likes the "Hale girls" very 22 much. Sister Isabel[le] knows her especially, I think.

23 Do not you see, Mother—I am determined to work my project 24 out. I must see the light. India can cheer alone—but no money. In 25 the East and South I am getting slowly friends who will help me in 26 my work, I am sure, as they have done already. They all like me 27 more and more.

28 I have made friends of Lady Somerset and Miss Willard, you 29 will be glad to know. So you see, Mother, you are the only

31 you live is my home. As soon as I have time I will run in to see you 32 and the sisters. But I have no other hopes in the West; nor will you 33 advise me to destroy the only hope I have of success in these parts 34 of the country by giving it up and going to Chicago to be idle as the 35 day is long.

36 Mrs. Bull and a few other ladies here who are helping me on

Dear Miss Thursby,

I am very sorry to learn about the passing on of Mr. Thorp.³⁵⁸ Mrs. Bull must have felt it deeply. Still he has passed on after a good and useful life. All is for the best.

I have been lecturing every day to a class in Mrs. Adams's³⁵⁹ rooms at the Auditorium. Today I also lecture there and in the Evening to a class of Miss Josephine Locke's³⁶⁰ at the Plaza Hotel.

Have you seen Mrs. Peake³⁶¹ in New York? She is lecturing to a class at Mrs. Guernsey's.

Miss Locke is as kind as usual. She is enamoured of Mrs. Peake as are many of Miss Locke's friends, you will be glad to learn.

Mrs. Peake has made a very favourable impression on Chicago. So she does wherever she goes.

Mrs. Adams invited me to an organ concert in the Auditorium. She is so good and kind to me. Lord bless her.

I have not seen Mr. Young, nor, I am afraid, [will] I have time to see [him,] as I start for New York on Friday next.

I will hear him once in New York.

I was so busy here these two weeks.

I have got a new scarlet coat but can get no orange here.

Ever with blessings,

Your brother,

38 I have there next Monday.

39 Bean soup and rice or barley is now my general diet. I am 40 faring well. Financially I am making the ends meet and nothing 41 more because I do not charge anything for the classes I have in my 42 rooms. And the public lectures have to go through so many hands.

43 I have a good many lectures planned ahead in New York, 44 which I hope to deliver by and by. Sister Isabel wrote to me a

1 beautiful letter and she does so much for me. My eternal gratitude 2 to her.

3 Baby³⁶² has stopped writing; I do not know why.

4 Kindly tell Baby to send me a little Sanskrit book which came 5 from India. I forgot to bring it over. I want to translate some 6 passages from it.

7 Mr. [Charles M.] Higgins is full of joy. It was he who planned 8 all this for me, and he is so glad that everything succeeded so well.

9 Mrs. Guernsey is going to give up this house and going to 10 some other house. Miss [Florence] Guernsey wants to marry but 11 her father and mother do not like it at all. I am very sorry for her, 12 poor "Sister Jenny"³⁶³—and so many men are after her. Here is a 13 very rich railway gentleman called Mr. [Austin] Corbin; his only 14 daughter, Miss [Anna] Corbin, is very much interested in me. And 15 though she is one of the leaders of the 400,³⁶⁴ she is very 16 intellectual and spiritual too, in a way. Their house is always chock 17 full of swells and foreign aristocracy. Princes and Barons and 18 whatnot from all over the world. Some of these foreigners are very 19 bright. I am sorry your home-manufactured aristocracy is not very 20 interesting. Behind her parlor she has a long arbour with all sorts of 21 palms and seats and electric light. There I will have a little class 22 next week of a score of long-pockets. The Fun is not bad. "This 23 world is a great humbug after all", Mother. "God alone is real; 24 everything else is a dream only." Mother Temple³⁶⁵ says she does 25 not like to be bossed by you and that is why she does not come to 26 Chicago. She is very happy nearby. Between swells and Delmonico 27 and Waldorf dinners, my health was going to be injured. So I 28 quickly turned a thorough vegetarian to avoid all invitations. The 29 rich are really the salt of this world—they are neither food nor drink.
30 Goodbye for the present.

3 Dear Mother,

4 Many thanks for your kind letter. I will be only too glad to 5 have an orange coat, provided it be light as summer is approaching.

6 I do not remember whether the Cook's letters of credit I have 7 are limited as to their time or not. It is high time we look into them.
8 If they are limited, don't you think it is better to put them in some 9 bank? I have about a thousand dollars in the Boston bank and a few 10 hundred in the New York—they all go to India by this week or next.
11 So it is better that I look into the Cook's letters, and it will be 12 foolish to get into trouble by having them past the date.

13 There are a few more Sanskrit books which have not been 14 sent—one pretty thick and broad, the other two very thin. Kindly 15 send them as soon as you can.

16 Mrs. [Milward] Adams, Mrs. [Ole] Bull, and Miss Emma 19 send them to me at 54 W. 33, and also the pamphlets about the 20 Calcutta meeting if you have any. Also the summer coat to the care 21 of Miss Phillips, 19 W. 38.

22 As I do not see any probability of my going soon to Chicago, I 23 am thinking of drawing all my money from the Chicago bank to 24 New York. Will you kindly ascertain the exact total amount I have in 25 Chicago so that I may draw it out at once and deposit it in some 26 New York bank?

27 Kindly do these and I will bother you no more. I have written 28 to India long ago about the rugs. I do not know whether Dewanji³⁶⁶ 29 is alive or dead. I have no information.

30 I am all right and will be more than a month yet in New York.
31 After that I am going to the Thousand Islands—wherever that place 32 may be—for a little summer quiet and rest. Mrs. Bagley has been 33 down here to see me and attended several of my classes.

34 The classes are going on with a boom; almost every day I 35 have one, and they are packed full. But no "money"—except they 36 maintain themselves. I charge no fees, except as the members 37 contribute to the rent etc. voluntarily.

38 It is mostly probable that I will go away this summer.

2 Dear Mother,

3 Your kind note duly reached. The books have arrived safe and 4 more are coming. The Sanskrit books pay no duty, being classics. I
5 expect a big package from Khetri. The big packet was from the Raja
6 of Khetri, sending me an address from a meeting held of Rajput
7 nobility at Mount Abu, for my work in this country.

8 I do not know whether I will be able to come over to Chicago
9 or not. I am trying to get a free pass; in case I succeed I will come, 10 else not. Financially this winter's work was no success at all—I could 11 barely keep myself up—but spiritually very great. I am going to the 12 Thousand Islands for the summer to visit a friend and some of my 13 pupils will be there.

14 I have got plenty of books now to read from India, and I will 15 be quite engaged this summer.

16 The Khetri package will not arrive soon, so kindly make 17 arrangements that it will be received during your absence if you go 18 away. [There] will have to be paid a heavy duty for [it,] I am afraid.

19 Mrs. [Florence] Adams brought me the love from the [Hale] 20 Sisters on her way to Europe. She started this morning. A large 21 package of books also I expect soon. The original Upanishads—there 22 is no duty on them.

23 I have had some trouble with my stomach; hope it will be over

30 Dear Mother—

31 You did not write to me a single line for a long time. Neither 32 did Sister Mary write about the duty paid on the rugs [from the 33 Dewan of Junagadh]. I am afraid the rugs are small.

34 Here is another consignment from Raja Ajit Singh [the 35 Maharaja of Khetri] consisting of carpets, shawls, etc., etc., for 36 which the bill of lading you sent me the other day. This con-37 signment has no duty to pay because it was all prepaid in India, and 38 the bill of lading says so expressly. I will send you the bill of lading 39 and the receipt for the duty. Kindly take one more trouble for me 40 and get it out of the express company. And keep it with you till I 41 come. The goods have arrived in New York and I had a notice of 42 that. They are on their way to Chicago.

43 In two or three days I will send the bill of lading and the 1 receipt for duty paid, to you. I foolishly asked Miss Phillips, as soon

2 as I got the Company's³⁷⁰ notice, to get them out before I got the bill 3 of lading. Now the bill of lading shows that it is bound for Chicago.
4 So I am bound to give you this trouble. I am so sorry. Again with my 5 usual business instincts—I forgot to note down the name of the 6 express company. So I have written to New York for the letters of 7 the Company. As soon as that comes I will send over to you.

28 Oh, Mother, my heart is so, so sad. The letters bring the news

19 We meet and part. This is the law 20 and ever ever be.

21 I sadly ask O gentle ones

22 Do you remember me?

23 I haven't had any news from Chicago, nor did I write as I did 24 not want to bother you—also I did not know where to.

25 Accompanying is a newspaper notice of a lecture I 26 delivered in London. It is not bad. The London audiences are very 27 learned and critical, and the English nature is far from being 28 effusive. I have some friends here—made some more—so I am going 29 on.

30 My bed is in the foaming deep

31 What care I, friend, the dew!

32 It is a queer life, mine—always travelling, no rest. Rest will be 33 my death—such is the force of habit. Little success here, little 34 there—and a good deal of bumping. Saw Paris a good [deal]. Miss 35 Josephine M'cleod [MacLeod], a New York friend, showed it all 36 over to me for a month. Even there, the kind American girl! Here in 37 England they know us more. Those that do not like the Hindus, they 38 hate them; those that like, they worship them.

39 It is slow work here, but sure. Not frothy, not superficial.
40 English women as a rule are not as highly educated as the 41 American women, nor are so beautiful. They are quite submissive 42 wives or hidden-away daughters or church-going mothers

1 —the embodiments of crystallized conventionality. I am going 2 to have some classes at the above address.

3 Sometimes—and generally when I score a success—I feel a 4 despondence; I feel as if everything is vain—as if this life has no
5 meaning, as if it is a waking dream. Love, friendship, religion, 6 virtue, kindness—everything, a momentary state of mind. I seem to 7 long to go; in spite of myself I say, how far—O how far! Yet the 8 body-and-mind will have to work its Karma out. I hope it will not be 9 bad.

10 How are you all going on? Where is Mother Church? Is she 11 interviewing the ghosts of the Thotmeses and Rameses³⁷⁶ in the 12 Pyramids—or calmly going her round of duties at home?

13 Yet the life seems to grow deep and at the same time lose its 14 hold on itself.

15 Not disgust, nor joy for life, but a sort of indifference—16 things will take their course; who can resist—only stand by 17 and look on. Well, I will not talk about myself so much. Egregious 18 egotist! I always was that, you know. How about you all? Great fun 19 this life, isn't it? Don't go to the extremes. A calm, restful, settled 20 married life is good for the majority of mankind. Mr. [Edward T.] 21 Sturdy, the friend with whom I am living now, was in India several 22 times. He mixed with our monks and is very ascetic in his habits, 23 but he is married at last and has settled down. And [he] has got a 24 beautiful little baby. Their life is very nice. The wife, of course, 25 doesn't much care about metaphysics or Sanskrit, but her whole life 26 is in her husband—and husband's soul is in Sanskrit metaphysics!
27 Yet it is a good combination of theory and practice, I think. Write 28 me all about yourselves if you have time and inclination, and give 29 Mother Church my eternal gratitude.

30 My movements are so, so uncertain. Yet I will be a month 31 more in London.

32 With never-ending gratitude and love,

33 Vivekananda

1 Christmas I intend to make a tour through Detroit and Chicago.

2 I do not care for public lecturings at all—and do not think I 3 shall have any more public lectures charging admission. If you will 4 see Mrs. Phelps and others of our friends and arrange some classes 5 (strictly on nonpayment basis), it will facilitate things a good deal.

18 Dear Christina,

19 Perhaps by this time you have received my first letter. I 20 received yours just now.

21 I had a splendid success in England and have left a nucleus
22 there to work till my arrival next summer. You will be aston-ished to 23 learn that some of my strongest friends are big "guns" of the 24 Church of England.

25 This Christmas I am going away a week, from 24th Decem., to 26 the country with Mr. and Mrs. Leggett—after that I resume my 27 work. In the meanwhile the classes have begun.

28 I have written to you my intention of taking a quick turn 29 through Detroit and Chicago in the meanwhile and [then] return 30 back.

31 Give Mrs. Phelps my love and kindly arrange the classes [in 32 Detroit] with her. The best thing is to arrange for a public lecture 33 where I give out my general plan of work. The Unitarian church is 34 available; and if the lecture is free, there will be a big crowd. The 35 collection most possibly will cover the expenses. Then out of this we 36 will get the materials of a big class and then hurry them through, 37 leaving Mrs. Phelps and you and Mrs. Funkey [Funke] to work on 38 with them.

39 This plan is entirely feasible and if Mrs. Phelps and Mrs.
40 Bagley desire it, they can work it out very quickly.

41 Ever yours with love and blessings,

39 To the Editor of Light of the East

40 1896.

1 Dear Sir,³⁷⁸

2 Many thanks for your kindly sending me several copies of the 3 Light of the East. I wish the paper all success.

4 As you have asked for my suggestion [that] I can make 5 towards improving the paper—I must frankly state that in my 6 life-long experience in the work, I have always found "Occult-ism" 7 injurious and weakening to humanity. What we want is strength.
8 We Indians, more than any other race, want strong and vigorous 9 thought. We have enough of the superfine in all concerns. For 10 centuries we have been stuffed with the mysterious; the result is 11 that our intellectual and spiritual digestion is almost hopelessly 12 impaired, and the race has been dragged down to the depths of 13 hopeless imbecility—never before or since experienced by any other 14 civilised community. There must be freshness and vigour of thought 15 behind to make a virile race. More than enough to strengthen the 16 whole world exists in the Upanishads. The Advaita is the eternal 17 mine of strength. But it requires to be applied. It must first be 18 cleared of the incrustation of scholasticism, and then in all its 19 simplicity, beauty and sublimity be taught over the length and 20 breadth of the land, as applied even to the minutest detail of daily 21 life. "This is a very large order"; but we must work towards it, 22 nevertheless, as if it would be accomplished to-morrow. Of one 23 thing I am sure—

24 that whoever wants to help his fellow beings through genuine 25 love and unselfishness will work wonders.

26 Yours truly,

1 ³⁷⁸ ? This letter was published in the December 1896 issue of Light of the East,

3 Of course it is impossible to come this month as the notices of 4 the four Sunday lectures are out. In the first week of February I 5 have again a lecture at Brooklyn at Dr. Janes's. My idea now is to 6 make a tour to Boston, Detroit, and Chicago in March and then 7 come back to New York a week or so and then start for England. In 8 March I will be able to stay a few weeks at each of these places. Of 9 course it is true that [as] yet I have no competent persons here to 10 carry on the work like Sturdy in England, nor any sincere friend to 11 stand by me except you.

3 Dear Mrs. Bull—

4 I received your last duly, but owing to many things I have 5 given up the idea of taking rest next month. I go to Detroit the first 6 week of March and then, towards the middle or last week, come to 7 Boston. I have not much faith in working such things as the 8 Procopeia [Club] etc.—because these mixed-up conglomerations of 9 all isms and ities—mostly fads—disturb the steadiness of the mind, 10 and life becomes a mass of frivolities. I am very glad, however, to 11 get an opportunity to talk to the graduates of Harvard. This does 12 not mean that I am not coming to Procopeia. I will come but it will 13 be only for your sake. There is one if, however—and that is if I am 14 physically able. My health has nearly broken down. I have not slept 15 even one night soundly in New York since I came; and this year 16 there is incessant work, both with the pen and the mouth. The 17 accumulated work and worry of years is on me now, I am afraid.
18 Then a big struggle awaits me in England. I wish to go to the 19 bottom of the sea and have a good, long sleep.

20 To Detroit I must go, dead or alive, as I have disappointed 21 them several times last year. There were big money offers from 22 near Chicago. I have rejected them as I do not any longer believe in 23 paid lectures and their utility in any country. If after Detroit I feel 24 the body able to drag itself on to Boston, I will come, else I will 25 remain in Detroit or some other quiet place and rest to recuperate 26 for the coming work in England. So far I have tried to work
27 conscientiously—let the fruits belong to the Lord. If they were good 28 they will sprout up sooner or later; if bad, the sooner they die the 29 better. I am quite satisfied with my task in life. I have been much 30 more active than a Sannyasin ought to be. Now I will disappear 31 from society altogether. The touch of the world is degenerating me, 32 I am sure, so it is time to be off. Work has no more value beyond 33 purifying the heart. My heart is pure enough; why shall I bother my 34 head about doing good to others? "If you have known the Atman as 35 the one, only existence and nothing else exists, desiring what?—for 36 whose desire you trouble yourself?"³⁸⁴ This universe is a dream, 37 pure and simple. Why bother myself about a dream? The very 38 atmosphere of the world is poison to the Yogi, but I am waking up.
39 My old iron heart is coming back—all attachments of relatives, 40 friends, disciples are vanishing fast. "Neither through wealth nor 41 through progeny, but by giving up everything as chaff is that 42 immortality attained"³⁸⁵—the Vedas. I am so tired of talking too; I 43 want to close my lips and sit in silence for years. All talk is 44 nonsense.

45 Yours faithfully,

4 What are we to do? Is the book going to be published or not?
5 Prof. [William] James's introduction³⁸⁷ is of no use in England. So

10 Dear Mrs. Bull—

11 I have sent to Mr. Leggett by last mail the power of attor-ney, 12 and, as you desired, this is to notify you of the fact and absolve you 13 from the responsibilities of the power of attorney which I gave you 14 in America last year.

17 Saradananda and Goodwin have arrived, I am sure, by this 18 time. I have a nice letter from Dr. Jain [Dr. Lewis G. Janes]. I am 19 going to Switzerland for a vacation in a few days. I mean to stay 20 there a month or more. I will return to London in the next fall. I do 21 not know when I go back to India.

22 Things are growing nicely here.

23 With love to all,

30 Dear Mother—

31 [On the] 18th of this month I start for Switzerland for a 32 holiday. I will come back to London again to work in the Autumn.
33 The work in England bids fair to be much better and deeper than in 34 the U.S. And here in London is the heart of India also. Where are 35 you now? I am passing through Geneva on my way to the Hills. I 36 will be there a day or two.

37 If you be somewhere near, I will make it a point to come to 38 see you. Did you hear Annie Besant? How did you like her? What 39 about your plans of going to India next winter? What about the 40 innocents³⁹⁰ at home? I haven't had any news of them. My love to 7 A letter to the editor, which appeared in the July 11, 1896

8 issue of the Light

9 63, St. George's-road, S.W.

10 Sir,

11 Allow me to put a few words in your estimable journal as 12 comments on an article in your paper dated July 4th. I must thank 13 you without reserve for the kind and friendly spirit manifested 14 throughout the article towards me and the philosophy I preach; but, 15 as there is a fear of misconstruction in one part of it—especially by 16 my Spiritualistic friends—I want to clear my position. The truth of 17 correspondence between the living and the dead is, I believe, in 18 every religion, and nowhere more than in the Vedantic sects of 19 India, where the fact of mutual help between the departed and the 20 living has been made the basis of the law of inheritance. I would be 21 very sorry if I be mistaken as antagonistic to any sect or form of 22 religion, so far as they are sincere. Nor do I hold that any system 23 can ever be judged by the frauds and failures that would naturally 24 gather round every method under the present circumstances. But, 25 all the same, I cannot but believe that every thoughtful person 26 would agree with me when I affirm that people should be warned of 27 their dangers, with love and sympathy. The lecture alluded to could 28 but accidentally touch the subject of Spiritualism; but I take this 29 opportunity of conveying my deep admiration for the Spiritualist 30 community for the positive good they have done already, and are 31 doing still: (1) the preaching of a universal sympathy; (2) the still 32 greater work of helping the human race out of doctrines which 33 inculcate fear and not love. Ever ready to co-operate with, and at 34 the service of, all who are striving to bring the light of the spirit,

35 I remain yours sincerely,
36 Vive Kananda

1 I received your last note duly—and you already know my 2 gratitude and love for you and that I perfectly agree with most of 3 your ideas and work.

4 I did not understand, however, one point. You speak of Sturdy 5 and myself being members. Members of what? I, as you well know, 6 can not become a member of any society.

7 I am very glad to learn that you have been favourably 8 impressed by Saradananda. There is one big mistake you are 9 labouring under. What do you mean of [my] writing to my workers 10 more confidentially and not to you? I seldom write to 11 anyone—I have no time to write. I have no workers. Everyone 12 is independent to work as one likes. I do not bother my head about 13 these little things at all. I can give ideas—that is all; let people work 14 them out any way they like, and Godspeed to all.

15 "He who works unattached to persons and giving up the fruits 16 of work is a genuine worker"—Gitâ.

25 Blessed and Beloved,

26 Surrounded on all sides by eternal snow peaks, sitting on the 29 I am in Switzerland—constantly on the move—getting a much

31 raising the mind up to the Self and driving away all earthly feelings 32 and ties. I am intensely enjoying it. I feel so, so uplifted. I cannot 33 write, but I wish you will have the same for ever—when your feet do 34 not want, as it were, to touch the material earth—when the soul 35 finds itself floating, as it were, in an ocean of spirituality.

19 Dear Christina,

20 Many, many thanks for the photograph and the poem. I never 21 saw anything half as beautiful. The work I had to do to reach 22 Calcutta from Ceylon was so immense that I could not earlier
23 acknowledge your precious gift. The work has broken me down 24 completely, and I have got "diabetes", an incurable disease, which 25 must carry me off—at least in a few years.

26 I am now writing to you from Darjeeling, the nearest hill
27 station to Calcutta, with a climate as cool as London. It has revived 28 me a bit. If I live, I will come to America next year or so.

29 How are things going on with you all? How are Mrs. Funkey 30 [Funke] and Mrs. Phelps?

31 Are you laying by a few dollars whenever you can? That is 32 very important.

33 I am in a hurry for the mail. You will be glad to know that the 34 Indian people have, as it were, risen in a mass to honour me. I am 35 the idol of the day. Mr. Goodwin is going to publish in book form all

5 Dear Mrs. Bull—

6 The demonstrations and national jubilations over me are 7 over—at least I had to cut them short, as my health broke com-8 pletely down. The result of this steady work in the West and the 9 tremendous work of a month in India upon the Bengalee consti-10 tution is "diabetes". It is a hereditary foe and is destined to carry 11 me off, at best, in a few years' time. Eating only meat and drinking 12 no water seems to be the only way to prolong life—and, above all, 13 perfect rest for the brain. I am giving my brain the needed rest in 14 Darjeeling, from where I am writing you now.

15 I am so glad to hear about Saradananda's success. Give him 16 my best love and do not allow him [to] do too much work. The 17 Bengalee body is not the same as the American.

18 Mr. Chatterjy (Mohini) came to see me in Calcutta, and he 19 was very friendly. I gave him your message. He is quite willing to 20 work with me. Nothing more to write, only I am bent upon seeing 21 my monastery started; and as soon as that is done, I come to 22 The 9th July 1897

23 Dear Shivananda,³⁹⁵

24 I haven't received any word of your arrival yet. I heard that 25 Alasinga has gone there with his relations by way of Jaipur. We 26 stayed at the Binsar Dak Bungalow [rest-house] for two or three 27 days, and then I left for Shyamdhura. At this, Miss [Henrietta] 28 Müller got infuriated and left for Almora. Terribly upset, Miss 29 Müller accused Shivananda of telling her first that I shall live with a 30 friend as his guest and of renting later such a big house for the 31 season at 80 rupees without consulting her. Very cross with 32 everybody, she has been reproving one and all but 33 has cooled down a little when I said I would pay half of the 34 rent. . . .

35 Shashi himself [Swami Ramakrishnananda] should handle the 36 entire amount of 100 rupees which the Raja of Ramnad is donating 37 (every month); he should send a detailed account of the monthly 38 income and expenditure to the Math—otherwise there won't be any 39 check. Advise him to spend as little as necessary on Thakur's³⁹⁶

1 ³⁹⁵ ? This address was written in English.

2
3 ³⁹⁶ ?

4 Thakur is a Bengali word, which means "lord" or "master" and, in this case, 5 refers to Shri Ramakrishna.

1 worship, for the money is [primarily] "for propagation of Truth".³⁹⁷

2 In case Gupta [Swami Sadananda] has lost his mental bal-
3 ance, ask him to come to Almora—but only when the boy selected
4 for Shashi reaches there. I received a letter from R. A. [Rajam
5 Aiyer?]. The money he sent has reached the Math. I have received 6 two volumes of Ramanuja's commentary. Advise him to send me the 7 third. Ask G. G. [Narasimhachari] to send me similar commentaries 8 by Madhva and others, if he can.

9 A public meeting will have to be organized at Madras to 10 present an address of welcome to the Raja [Ajit Singh] of Khetri 11 and to Pratap Singh of Jodhpur for their boldness in visiting 12 England as well as for representing their principalities in India in 13 the Jubilee celebration. This has to be done on their return to India, 14 but for that you have to endeavour from now on. Please go to 15 Colombo and arrange a similar public meeting there.

16 Give my love to Kidi [Singararelu Mudaliar] and Doctor 17 [Nanjunda Rao]; ask Kidi why he hasn't written to me. What is 18 wrong with him? Has he lost his devotion? Bear this in mind that 19 you should not assume a teacher's place in the beginning. Do all 20 your work with humility; otherwise everything will crumble to 21 pieces. Please see that there is no opposition, criticism or obstacles 22 to Shashi's work in Madras, for everybody should obey
23 him—whoever may be in charge of a particular centre. If Shashi
24 goes to Ceylon, he will have to obey your authority, etc. Make sure 25 that every centre sends a weekly report to the Math. I have not 26 seen a single one from Shashi yet. "O Rama! How hard it is to turn 27 a donkey into a horse, even by beating!"

28 Above all "obedience" and "esprit de corps".³⁹⁸ The work 29 cannot succeed unless there is perfect obedience to the authority of 30 the Order and sacrifice of individual views for the sake of the 31 Order. Trinair gunatvam âpannair badhyante mattadantinah—

13 My dear Christina,

14 I simply wonder what has become of you. It is an age [that] I 15 did not hear from you, and I expected so much after Sturdy's visit to 16 Detroit. How did you like the man? What about Baby and the 17 Devendorfs? How is Mrs. Funkey [Funke]? What are you going to 18 do this summer? Take rest, dear Christina; I am sure you require it 19 badly.

20 Mrs. Bull of Boston and Miss MacLeod of New York are now

22 house on the banks of the Ganges. This is much more healthy and 23 beautiful. We have also got a good piece of land very near on the 24 same side where Mrs. Bull and Miss MacLeod are putting up now.
25 It is wonderful how they accommodate themselves to our Indian life 26 of privation and hardship! My, these Yanks can do anything! After 27 the luxuries of Boston and New York, to be quite content and happy 28 in this wretched little house!! We intend to travel a bit together in 29 Kashmir, and then I come to America with them and am sure to get 30 a hearty welcome from my friends. What do you think? Is it 31 welcome news to you? Of course, I cannot undergo the same

33 My dear Dhira Mata—

34 I am afraid you are getting roasted down there in the heat of 35 Calcutta. Here it is nice and cool and rather chill when it rains,

1 which it does almost every day. Yesterday the view of the 2 snows was simply superb, and it is the most picturesque city in the 3 world; there is such a mass of colour everywhere, especially in the 4 dress of the Lepchas and Bhutias and the Paharees. Had it not been 5 for the awful, corrugated iron roofs everywhere, it would have been 6 twenty times more picturesque.

7 My health was not bad in Calcutta; here it is the same—

8 only, the sugar has entirely disappeared, the specific gravity 9 being only 13. I slept very well last night too; but the morning ride 10 up, or climb, of a few miles is proving too much for my adipose 11 tissues. The flannel clothes only made me worse, so I have given 12 them up and have gone to my summer dress and am all right.

13 I have sent you Sturdy's letter already—poor fellow—I do not 14 know what to do for him. He is really "living in a desert of his own 15 making"—you see, one thing is not good for every one. Marriage has 16 indeed proved a hell for Sturdy. And he can not come, although "he 17 is skirting the coast of India". Lord help the poor boy. May He cut 18 all his bonds and make him free soon. Aye, it is good that he is 19 feeling the bondage—and not "hug-ging and kissing its spokes of 20 agony".

21 I gave a little lecture to the Hindus here yesterday, and I told 22 them all their defects purposely and with their permission. I hope it 23 will make them howl.

24 Miss Müller has taken a bungalow here and she is coming on 25 Wednesday. I do not know whether Miss Noble is coming with her.
26 She [Miss Noble] had better be your guest in Kashmir as according 27 to our plan.

28 Have you got that place yet or changed [places]? I am going 29 to Kashmir anyway, as I have promised.

30 I will be here only a few days and then I come to Calcutta, to 31 be there only a week—and [then] I start for the N.W. Of course this 32 is not the time to see anything in the N.W.P.;⁴⁰¹ everything is 33 burning there. Yet that heat is much healthier than that of Bengal.

1 My health again failed badly. I had, therefore, to leave
2 Kashmir in haste and come to Calcutta. The doctors say I ought not 3 go tramping again this winter. That is such a disappointment, you 4 know. However, I am coming to the U. S. this sum-mer. Mrs. Bull

8 Do write a nice, long letter if you have time, and do not work
9 yourself to death. Duty is duty, no doubt; but we have our duties, 10 not only to our mother etc., but to others also. Sometimes one duty 11 asks for physical sacrifice, whilst the other insists on great care for 12 our health. Of course, we follow the stronger motive, and [I] do not 13 know which will prove stronger in your case. Anyhow, take great 14 care of your body, now that your sisters have come to your help.

15 How do you manage the family?—the expenses etc? Write me

17 I am getting better every day—and then the long months

28 Your Highness—

29 Many thanks for your kind note and the Nimbarka Bhashya

30 —reached through Jaga Mohan Lalji.

31 I approach your Highness today on a most important business 32 of mine, knowing well that I have not the least shame in opening my 33 mind to you, and that I consider you as my only friend in this life. If 34 the following appeals to you, good; if not, pardon my foolishness as 35 a friend should.

1 As you know already, I have been ailing since my return. In 2 Calcutta your Highness assured me of your friendship and help for 3 me personally and [advised me] not to be worried about this 4 incurable malady. This disease has been caused by nervous 5 excitement; and no amount of change can do me good, unless the 6 worry and anxiety and excitement are taken off me.

7 After trying these two years a different climate, I am getting 8 worse every day and now almost at death's door. I appeal to your 9 Highness's work, generosity and friendship. I have one great sin 10 rankling always in my breast, and that is [in order] to do a service 11 to the world, I have sadly neglected my mother. Again, since my 12 second brother has gone away, she has become awfully worn-out 13 with grief. Now my last desire is to make Sevâ [give service] and 14 serve my mother, for some years at least. I want to live with my 15 mother and get my younger brother married to prevent extinction 16 of the family. This will certainly smoothen my last days as well as 17 those of my mother. She lives now in a hovel. I want to build a little, 18 decent home for her and make some provision for the youngest, as 19 there is very little hope of his being a good earning man. Is it too 20 much for a royal descendent of Ramchandra to do for one he loves 21 and calls his friend? I do not know whom else to appeal to. The 22 money I got from Europe was for the "work", and every penny 23 almost has been given over to that work. Nor can I beg of others for 24 help for my own self. About my own family affairs—I have exposed 25 myself to your Highness, and none else shall know of it. I am tired, 26 heartsick and dying. Do, I pray, this last great work of kindness to 27 me, befitting your great and generous nature and [as] a crest to the 28 numerous kindnesses you have shown me. And as your Highness 29 will make my last days smooth and easy, may He whom I have tried 30 to serve all my life ever shower His choicest blessings on you and 31 yours.

32 Ever yours in the Lord,

33 Vivekananda

34 P.S. This is strictly private. Will you please drop a wire to me 35 whether you will do it or not?

5 1 December 1898

6 Your Highness—

7 Your telegram has pleased me beyond description, and it is 8 worthy of your noble self. I herewith give you the details of what I 9 want.

10 The lowest possible estimate of building a little home in 11 Calcutta is at least ten thousand rupees. With that it is barely 12 possible to buy or build a house in some out-of-the-way quarter of 13 the town—a little house fit for four or five persons to live in.

14 As for the expenses of living, the 100 Rs. a month your 15 generosity is supplying my mother is enough for her. If another 100 16 Rs. a month be added to it for my lifetime for my expenses

17 —which unfortunately this illness has increased, and which, I 18 hope, will not be for long a source of trouble to you, as I expect only 19 to live a few years at best—I will be perfectly happy. One thing more 20 will I beg of you—if possible, the 100 Rs. a month for my mother be 21 made permanent, so that even after my death it may regularly 22 reach her. Or even if your Highness ever gets reasons to stop your 23 love and kindness for me, my poor old mother may be provided 24 [for], remembering the love you once had for a poor Sâdhu.

25 This is all. Do this little work amongst the many other noble 26 deeds you have done, knowing well whatever else can be proved or 27 not, the power of Karma is self-evident to all. The blessings of this 28 good Karma shall always follow you and yours. As for me, what 29 shall I say—whatever I am in the world has been almost all through 30 your help. You made it possible for me to get rid of a terrible 31 anxiety and face the world and do some work. It may be that you 32 are destined by the Lord to be the instrument again of helping yet 33 grander work, by taking this load off my mind once more.

34 But whether you do this or not, "once loved is always loved".
35 Let all my love and blessings and prayers follow you and yours, day 36 and night, for what I owe you already; and may

1 the Mother, whose play is this universe and in whose hands
2 we are mere instruments, always protect you from all evil.

3 Ever yours in the Lord,

6 My dear Christina,

7 Excuse this long delay in replying to your very beautiful note.
8 The fact is, I was once more in the vale of death. The old diabetes
9 has now disappeared. In its place has come what some doctors call 10 asthma, others dyspepsia, owing to nervous prostration. However, 11 it is a most worrying disease, giving one the sensation of 12 suffocation—sometimes for days. I am best only in Calcutta; so I am 13 here for rest and quiet and low diet. If I get well by March, I am 14 going to start for Europe. Mrs. Bull and others are gone; sorry I 15 could not accompany them owing to this disease.

16 I have carefully weighed your plans for coming over. I will be 17 ever so glad to see you, you know it well; but, my dear, the Indian 18 summer will not suit you, and if you start now it will be midsummer
19 when you reach India. Then, you must not hope of making any living 20 here. It is impossible for me to make a living most times in my own 21 country. Then all the surroundings are so, so wretched and 22 different from what you see around you, e.g. you will find me going 23 about in loin-cloth—will that shock you? Three-fourths of the 24 population only wearing a strip of white cloth about their loins—can 25 you bear that?

26 I must stop here; I am so weak. If I do not get well by March, 27 I will write you to come, for I wish it ever so much to see you once 28 before I pass away.

29 Do not be the least anxious, dear. Things must be as "Mother" 30 wishes. Ours is only to obey and work.

9 I have been thinking of your friend Miss [Sarala] Ghosal's 10 coming to see the Math on Sunday. The difficulty is here. The ebb 11 tide will be on till 5 p.m. In that case our big boat can go down 12 easily to bring the party up; and going back, if the party starts long 13 before 5 p.m., say 4 p.m., will be all right. To come up will take at 14 least two hours from Baghbazar. If the party starts from 15 Baghbazar—say at 12 a.m.—and reaches the Math at 2 p.m. for lunch 16 and then starts back by 4 p.m., it will be nice.

17 If you cannot start as early as that, I will advise you to send

14 we arrive in London, Albert Dock.⁴¹¹ We are a party of four: myself, 15 another Sannyasin,⁴¹² a Calcutta boy⁴¹³ going to study in America, 16 and Miss [Margaret] Noble. Miss Noble is a young lady from 17 Wimbledon, near London, who has been working in India on the 19 Our stay in England will not be long, I am afraid, as this is 20 neither the season nor am I in fit condition to work much. Anyhow, 21 we will be in London a few weeks—at least myself—then go to the 22 U.S. We will talk over all this and infinite things besides when we 23 meet. I do not think even English summer days are long enough for 24 all the chatter I will assail you with.

25 We go to Wimbledon for a day or two, and then I come back 26 to London and find lodgings for myself and make plans.

1 ⁴¹⁰ ?

2 Perhaps at Marseilles Swami Vivekananda received information that their ship, 3 the S.S. Golconda, would reach London on Sunday (July 30, 1899); however, he

1 Come to the Dock if that is possible and discreet. Yes, it is 9 I am much, much better just now. I am really quite another

28 My dear Mother,

29 Your letter directed to Sturdy at hand. I am very thankful for 30 your kind words. As for me, I don't know what I am to do next or 31 anything to do at all. On board the steamer I was all right, but since 32 landing [I am] feeling quite bad again. As to mental worry, there 33 has been enough of late. The aunt whom ⁴¹⁴ ? Vide Swami Vivekananda's letter dated July 23, 1899.

1 you saw had a deep-laid plan to cheat me, and she and her
2 people contrived to sell me a house for 6,000 Rs., or £400, and I 3 bought [it] for my mother in good faith. Then they would not give 4 me possession, hoping that I would not go to court for the shame of 5 taking forcible possession as a Sannyasin.

6 I do not think I have spent even one rupee from what you and 7 others gave me for the work. Cap. Sevier gave me 8,000 Rs. with 8 the express desire of helping my mother. This money, it seems, has 9 [also] gone to the dogs. Beyond this, nothing has been spent on my 10 family or even on my own personal expenses

11 —my food etc. being paid for by the Khetri Raja, and more
12 than half of that went to the Math every month. Only, if Brah-13 mananda spends some in the lawsuit [against the aunt], as I must 14 not be robbed that way—if he does, I will make it good anyway, if I 15 live to do it.

16 The money which I got in Europe and America by lecturing 17 alone, I spent just as I like; but every cent I got for the work has 18 been accounted for and is in the Math, and the whole thing ought to 19 be clear as daylight if Brahmananda never cheated me. I don't 20 believe he will ever cheat me. I got a letter at Aden from 21 Saradananda that they were preparing an account. I have not 22 received any yet.

23 I have no plans yet, nor care to make any. Neither do I wish 24 to work. Let the Mother find other workers. I have my burden 25 enough already.

5 My dear Mother Church,

6 Many, many thanks for your kind words.

7 I am so glad you are working on as ever. I am glad because 8 the wave of optimism has not caught you yet. It is all very well to 9 say everything is right, but that is apt to degenerate into a sort of 10 laissez-faire. I believe with you that the world is evil –

11 made more hideous with a few dashes of good.

12 All our works have only this value, that they awaken some to 13 the reality of this horror—and [those] flee for refuge to some place 14 beyond, which is called God, or Christ, or Brahma, or Buddha, etc.
15 Names do not make much difference.

16 Again, we must always remember ours is only to work—

17 we never attain results. How can we? Good can never be 18 done without doing evil. We cannot breathe a breath without killing 19 thousands of poor little animals. National prosperity is another 20 name for death and degradation to millions of other races. So is 21 individual prosperity the beggaring of many. The world is evil

22 —and will ever remain so. It is its nature, and cannot be 23 changed—"Which one of you by taking thought . . ." etc.²

24 Such is truth. The wisdom is therefore in renunciation, that is, 25 to make the Lord our all in all. Be a true Christian, Mother-like 26 Christ, renounce everything and let the heart and soul and body 27 belong to Him and Him alone. All this nonsense which people have 28 built round Christ's name is not His teaching. He taught to 29 renounce. He never says the earth is an enjoyable place. And your 30 time has come to get rid of all vanities

31 —even the love of children and husband—and think of the Lord 32 and Him alone.

33 Ever your Son,

34 Vivekananda

4 23 October 1899

5 My dear Mother,

6 I was taking a few days' complete rest and so am late in 7 replying to your very kind note. Accept my congratulations on the 8 anniversary of your marriage. I pray many, many such returns may 9 come to you.

10 I am sure my previous letter was coloured by the state of my 11 body, as indeed is the whole of existence to us. Yet, Mother, there is 12 more pain than pleasure in life. If not, why do I remember you and 13 your children almost every day of my life, and not many others?
14 Happiness is liked so much because it is so rare, is it not? Fifty 15 percent of our life is mere lethargy, ennui; of the rest, forty percent 16 is pain, only ten happiness—

17 and this for the exceptionally fortunate. We are oft-times 18 mixing up this state of ennui with pleasure. It is rather a negative 19 state, whilst both pleasure and pain are nearer positive, though not 20 positive.

21 Pleasure and pain are both feeling, not willing. They are only 22 processes which convey to the mind excitements or motives of 23 action. The real positive action is the willing, or impulse to work, of 24 the mind—begun when the sensation has been taken in (pleasure 25 and pain); thus the real is neither pleasure nor pain. It has no 26 connection with either. Quite different from either. The barking of 27 the dog awakens his master to guard against a thief or receive his 28 dearest friend. It does not follow, therefore, that the dog and his 29 master are of the same nature or have any degree of kinship. The 30 feelings of pleasure or pain similarly awaken the soul to activity, 31 without any kinship at all.

32 The soul is beyond pain, beyond pleasure, sufficient in its own 33 nature. And no hell can punish it, nor any heaven can bless it. So far 34 philosophy.

35 I am coming soon to Chicago, and hope to say "Lord bless 36 you" to you and your children. All love as usual to my Christian 37 relatives, scientific or quacks.

32 My dear Christina,

33 I received your letter just now. I am now in New York. Dr.
34 [Egbert] Guernsey analysed my urine yesterday, and there was no 35 sugar or albumen in it. So my kidneys are all right, at least at 1 present. The heart is only nervous, requires calming!—some 2 cheerful company and good, loving friends and quiet. The only 3 difficulty is the dyspepsia, and that is the evil. For instance, I am all 4 right in the morning and can walk miles, but in the evening it is 5 impossible to walk after a meal—the gas—that depends entirely upon 6 food, does it not? I ought to try the Battle Creek food. If I come to 7 Detroit, there will be quiet and Battle Creek food for me.

8 But if you come to Cambridge with all the instructions of the 9 Battle Creek food, I will have it prepared there; or, between you
10 and me, we will cook it. I am a good hand at that. You don't know a 11 thing about cooking. Well, you may help in cleaning the plates etc. I 12 always get money when I need it badly. "Mother" always sees to 13 that. So, no danger on that head. I am not in the least danger of life, 14 the Doctors agree—only if this dyspepsia goes away. And that is 15 "food", "food", "food", and no worry. Oh, what a worry I have had!
16 Say we go somewhere else and make a little party and keep house
17 ourselves. In Cambridge, Mrs. Bull has a quiet separate place—her 18 studio house. You can have rooms there. I wish you to know Mrs.
19 Bull. She is a saint, a real saint, if ever there was one. Wait for my 8 should come here. Here at last in California! One of our poets says: 9 "Where is Benares, where is Kashmir, where Khorasan, where 10 Gujarat! O Tulsi! thus, man's past Karma drags him on". And I am 11 here. After all it is best, isn't it? Are you going to Boston? I am 12 afraid you are not. I have not unsettled any of your plans, have I?

13 –unnecessary expenses? Well, if any, I will make it up. Only the 14 trouble is yours. I am ashamed of my eccentricities. Well, how are 15 you? What are you doing? How are things going with you? Sleep if 16 you can; it is better to sleep than get awakened. I pray that all good 17 may come to thee—all peace, all strength to do and suffer. I have a 18 great deal of strength to do, but very little to suffer.

19 I am so selfish again, always thinking of my own sufferings
20 and paying no heed to others. Pray for me; send strong thoughts 21 that I may have strength to suffer. I know you will. Now, I mean to 22 remain a few weeks in this city. After that, "Mother" knows. I am 23 physically much better now than I have been for months. The 24 weakness of the heart is nearly gone. The dyspepsia is also much 25 better, and [there is] very little. I can walk miles now without 26 feeling it in the heart. If this continues, I expect to have a new lease 27 on life. I am so, so sorry of asking you to come to Boston and flying 28 away. If you are there, I hope you will enjoy the place and the 29 meetings. If you have given it up—well, did you take leave and not 30 go to Boston? My! what a bungle! Well, I ask a thousand pardons, if 31 such is the case. Things must look brighter anyway, sooner or later.
32 What of these little, few days of life!

33 How is Mrs. Funke? Loads of love for her. How long a leave

24 So you are awake and can't go to sleep any more. Good! Keep 25 awake, wide awake. It was good I came here. For, in the first place, 26 I am cured. What do you think of this—able to walk, and every day 27 walk three miles after a heavy dinner! Good! Isn't it?

28 I am making money fast—twenty-five dollars a day now. Soon I 29 will work more and get fifty dollars a day. In San Francisco I hope 30 to do still better—where I go in two or three weeks. Good 31 again—better, say I—as I am going to keep the money all to myself 32 and not squander it any more. And then I will buy a little place in 33 the Himalayas—a whole hill—about say, six thousand feet high with a 34 grand view of the eternal

1 snows. There must be springs and a tiny lake. Cedars—the 2 Himalayan cedar forests—and flowers, flowers everywhere. I will 3 have a little cottage; in the middle, my vegetable gardens, which I 4 will work myself—and—and—and—my books—and see the face of man
5 only once in a great while. And the world may go to ruin round 6 about my ears, I would not care. I will have done with all my 7 work—secular or spiritual—and retire. My! how restless I have been 8 all my life! Born nomad. I don't know; this is the present vision. The 9 future is to come yet. Curious—all my dreams about my own 10 happiness are, as it were, bound to come to nothing; but about 11 others' well-being—

12 they as a rule prove true.

13 I am so glad you are happy and peaceful under Mrs. Bull's 14 hospitable roof. She is a great, great woman—one whom to see is a 15 pilgrimage.

16 No snow here—exactly like northern India in winter. Some 17 days, even warmer—cool in the morning and evening, in the middle 18 of the day, warm, in the sun, hot. The roses are about us, gardens 19 everywhere, and the beautiful palms. But I like the snow: crisp, 20 crackling under the feet, white, white, white—all round white!

21 I don't think I have anything with the kidneys or the heart.
22 The whole thing was about indigestion and it is now nearly cured. A 23 month more, and I will be strong like a lion and hardy like a mule.
24 The poor English are getting it hot from the Boers. Mourning in 25 every home in England and still the war goes on. Such is human 26 folly. How long will it take for man to become civilized! Will wars 27 ever cease? Mother knows! The New Year is sure to bring about a 28 great change. Pray some good may come to India. I send you all joy, 29 all love, all success for the New Year and many, many more to 30 come.

31 So you did well, you think, by coming to Mrs. Bull. I am glad. I 32 wanted you to know Mrs. Bull thoroughly. Remain there as long as 33 you can. It will do you good, I am sure. Take heart and be of cheer,

1 San Francisco. I have spoken twice in Oakland to 1500 people 2 each time. Last time I got from collection $30. I am going to have 3 classes at 50 cents admission each.

4 San Francisco had one lecture the other night [February 23]
5 at 50¢ each. It paid its expenses. This Monday [Sunday?] I am going 6 to speak free—after that a class.

7 I went to see Mrs. Hurst [Hearst].⁴¹⁹ She was not at home. I
8 left a card—so with Prof. Le Conte.⁴²⁰

9 Mary [Hale] writes that you wrote her of my coming any day
10 to the East. I don't know. Here I have a large following—

11 ready-made by my books. Will get some money, not much. St.
12 Francis [Francis Leggett] may put the money in the bank for 13 me—but can that be done without my signature? And I am here? It is 14 good if it can be done. Did you see any possibility of my books being 15 sold for good to any publisher?

16 The French invitation⁴²¹ is all right. But it seems impossible to 17 write any decent paper on the subject we chose. Because if I have 18 to lecture and make money, very little time will be left for anything 19 else. Again, I can not find any books (Sanskrit) here. So let me try 20 to make a little money if I can and go to France all the same, but 21 send them no paper. No scholarly work can be done in this 22 haphazard and hurried fashion. It means time and study.

23 Shall I write to Mr. [Gerald] Nobel an acknowledgement and 24 thanks? Write to me fully on these subjects if you can before you 25 leave [for Europe]. My health is going on the same way. The gas is 26 there more or less and this city is all climbing up[hill]—that tires me 27 much.

28 With all love,

29 Yours affectionately,

30 Vivekananda

31 P.S. Did anybody else respond to Mrs. Leggett's call?

3 Randolph Hearst.

4 ⁴²⁰ ? Probably Joseph Le Conte, a well-known geologist, then in his seventies,

6 Dear Christina,

7 Just now received a letter from you through New York. I, the 8 other day, wrote you one c/o Mrs. Funke, as I was not sure which of 9 your addresses in my notebook was the correct one! Mental 10 telepathy or foolishness—what is it?

11 By this time you must have got mine. There is nothing par-
12 ticular about me, except things are going on at the same rate—

13 very little money-making, a good deal of work, and moving 14 about. I leave here in April and come to Chicago for a few days, 15 then to Detroit and then, through New York, go to England. I hope 16 you are all right. I am very calm and peaceful mentally, and hope to 17 remain so for the rest of my life.

18 How are Mrs. Funkey [Funke] and the rest of our friends?

28 had any news of you for a long time.

29 I am getting better every day, and one of these days—say in a

33 Beginning of May, I come [for] sure to Detroit. I will, of 12 I am sorry, I cannot come to Chicago yet for a few days. The 13 doctor (Dr. Logan) says I must not undertake a journey till 14 completely strong. He is bent on making me strong. My stomach is 15 very, very good and nerves fine. I am getting on. A few days more

17 If you leave for New York soon, take my mail with you. I am 18 coming to New York direct. If you leave New York before I leave, 19 put my mail in a cover and deposit with Turiyananda, and tell him to 20 keep it for me and not to open it on any account, nor any one of my

21 San Francisco

22 18 May 1900

23 My dear Mother,

24 Many thanks for Joe's [Miss Josephine MacLeod's] and your 25 letters. I have again a bad relapse—and [am] struggling out of it.
26 This time I am perfectly certain that with me all diseases are 27 nervous. I want rest for two, three years—and not the least bit of 28 work between. I will take rest with the Seviars in the Himalayas.

29 Mrs. [James Henry] Sevier gave me 6,000 Rs. for family—

30 this was distributed between my cousin, aunt, etc. The 5,000 31 Rs. for buying the house was borrowed from the Math funds. Do not 32 stop the remittance you send to my cousin, whatever Saradananda 33 may say to the contrary. Of course I do not know what he says.

1 I have long given up the idea of a little house on the Ganges,
2 as I have not the money.

3 But I have got some in Calcutta and some with the Leggetts, 4 and if you give a thousand more, that will be a fund for my own
5 personal expenses (as you know I never took Math money) as well
6 as for my mother. Kindly write to Saradananda to give up the little 7 house plan. I am not going to write any more for weeks yet—till I 8 completely recover. I hope to get over [it] in a few weeks from 9 now—it was a terrible relapse. I am with a Doctor friend [Dr.
10 Milburn H. Logan], and he is taking every care of me.

11 Tell Joe that going amongst different people with a message 12 also does not belong to the Sannyasin; for a Sannyasin, [there] is 13 quiet and retirement, scarcely seeing the face of man.

14 I am now ripe for that, physically at least. If I don't go into 15 retirement, nature will force me to it. Many thanks that temporal 16 things have been so well arranged by you.

11 weeks yet, I am afraid. Things are coming up so fast that I can not 12 but change my plans and stop a few more days.
13 I am trying my best to get one of you for a flying visit to this 14 Coast—it is a great country for Vedanta.
15 Get all my books and clothes etc., in your home. I am coming 16 soon. My love to Mrs. Crane. Is she still living on beef-steak and hot 17 water? Miss [Sarah Ellen] Waldo and Mrs. Coulston⁴²³ write about

7 Dear Christina,

8 I could not write more, as the last few weeks of my stay in 9 California was one more relapse and great suffering. However, I 10 got one great benefit out of it inasmuch as I came to know I have 11 really no disease, except worry and fear. My kidneys are as sound 12 as any other healthy man's. All the symptoms of Bright's disease 13 etc., are only brought on by nerves.

14 I wrote you one, however, from 770 Oak Street, San 15 Francisco, to which I did not get any reply. Of course, I was 16 bedridden then and my address book was not in the place I was in.
17 There was a mistake in number. I cannot believe you did not reply 18 willingly.

19 As you see, now I am in New York, and will be here a few 20 days. I have an invitation from Mrs. Walton of Cleveland, Ohio. I 21 have accepted it. She writes me you are also invited and have 22 accepted her invitation. Well, we will meet in Cleveland then. I am 23 sure to see you before I go to Europe—either there or anywhere you 24 wish. If you don't think it would be possible for you to come to Ohio, 25 I will come to any other place you want me to come to say goodbye.

26 When is your school going to close? Write me all about your 27 plans—do!

28 Miss Noble wants me very much to go to Cleveland. I would 29 be very, very glad to get a few weeks' seclusion and rest before I 30 start with friends who do not disturb me at all. I know I will find 31 rest and peace that way, and you can help me any amount in that.
32 In Cleveland, of course, there will be a few friends always and 33 much talkee-talkee as a matter of course. So if you think I will have 34 real peace and rest elsewhere, just write all about it.

35 My reply to the Cleveland lady depends on your letter.

1 How I wish I were in Detroit or elsewhere just now, among 2 friends who I know are good and true always. This is weakness; but 3 when the physical vitality is lowered and the nerves all unstrung, I 4 feel so, so much to depend upon somebody. You will be glad to 6 pay my expenses.

7 Write soon.

11 Now, you know, I will in a week or so finish this work and 12 then be ready for a real quiet of a week or two or more.

13 Detroit, alas! will be no better than New York. With so many 14 old friends! How can you avoid friends whom you really love?

15 I will have perfect freedom at yours—sure—but how can I avoid 16 seeing friends and the eternal visiting and paying visits and much 17 talkee-talkee? Do you know any other place within eight or ten 18 hours (I want to avoid night rides) of riding from New York where I

33 Dear Christina,

34 This is my plan just now. I will have to remain in New York a

1 publish another edition of Karma-Yoga and the London
2 lectures in a book form. Miss Waldo is editing them, and Mr.
3 Leggett will publish.

4 Then, I think, if I am to remain in this country a few weeks
5 more, it is better that you get a rest and change. Newport⁹ is a 6 celebrated seaside place—four hours from New York. I am invited
7 there. I will go there this week and, as promised, I [will] find quiet 8 and retirement and freedom. I will try to find a place for you and 9 wire you as soon as found.

10 I am sure in Detroit you cannot have rest. A little change of 11 place and quiet from time to time is a great factor in renewing one's 12 vigour.

13 Well, if you think that you would have better rest and quiet in 14 Detroit, drop a line and I come. It is only seventeen hours from New 15 York to Detroit, and I am quite strong to undertake it. I am free to 16 go already; only I really want you to take a good, long rest for some 17 weeks at least.

18 Don't be afraid of expenses. Mother has amply provided that 19 and will provide, so long I am unselfish.

20 Think [over] all the pros and cons, and write at your earliest

19 about that. It may be that Mother will now work up my original plan 20 of international work. In that case, you will find your work of the 21 Conference¹⁵ has not been in vain.

22 It seems that after this fall in my health, physical and mental, 23 it is going to open out that way—larger and more international work.
24 Mother knows best.

25 My whole life has been divided into successive depressions 26 and rises—and so, I believe, is the life of everyone. I am glad, rather 27 than not, these falls come. I understand it all; still, I suffer and 28 grumble and rage!! Perhaps that is a part of the cause of the next 29 upheaval.

1 I think you will be in America by the time we return; if not, I 2 will see you in London again. Anyhow, adieu for the present. We 3 start day after tomorrow for Egypt etc. And all blessings ever be on

2 stopped at one place for three months at a stretch. On the other 3 hand, if by some chance I can live for months in one place, I hope it 4 will do me good. I do not mind this, however; I feel that my work in 5 this life is done. Through good and evil, pain and pleasure, my 6 life-boat has been dragged on. The one great lesson I was taught is 7 that life is misery, nothing but misery. Mother knows what is best.
8 Each one of us is in the hands of Karma—it works out itself, and no 9 nay. There is only one element in life which is worth having at any 10 cost—and it is love. Love immense and infinite, broad as the sky and 11 deep as the ocean. This is the one great gain in life. Blessed is he

19 My dear Mother,

20 At last I am in Eastern Bengal. This is the first time I am here, 21 and never before knew Bengal was so beautiful. You ought to have 22 seen the rivers here—regular rolling oceans of fresh water, and 23 everything so green—continual production. The villages are the 24 cleanest and prettiest in all India.

25 Joe [Miss Josephine MacLeod] is perhaps by this time in 26 Japan. I received a long and beautiful letter from Margot. Tell 27 Margot that there has been of late a regular fall of fortune on the 28 Kashmir Raja; things are all changing to his benefit. Mr.
29 Mookherjey is now Governor of Kashmir. Saradananda had a bad 30 fever. He is well now, but weak. He possibly goes to Darjeeling for 31 a change. Mrs. [M. N.] Banerjey, who is at Calcutta, is very anxious 32 to take him to the hills. Mohin [Mahendranath Datta], my brother, 33 is in India, in Karachi near Bombay, and he corresponds with 34 Saradananda. He writes to say he is going to Burma, China, etc.
35 The traders who lure him have shops in all

1 those places. I am not at all anxious about him. He is a very 2 selfish man.

3 I have no news from Detroit. I received one letter from 4 Christina nine months ago, but I did not reply. Perhaps that may 5 have vexed her.

6 I am peaceful and calm—and am finding every day the old 7 begging and trudging life is the best for me after all.

8 Mrs. Sevier I left at Belur. She is the guest of Mrs. Banerjey, 9 who has rented Nilambar Mookherjey's house on the river (the old 10 Math). She goes very soon to Europe.

11 Things are going on, as is in the nature of things. To me has 12 come resignation.

19 A letter came just now from Mr. R. Dutt [Ramesh Dutta] 20 praising you and your work in England very much and asking me to 21 wish you to stop longer in England.

22 It requires no imagination to learn that I am overjoyed at all 23 the news about you Mr. Dutt so kindly sends.

24 Of course, you stay as long as you think you are working well.
25 Yum [Miss Josephine MacLeod] had some talk about you with 26 Mother [Holy Mother, Sarada Devi], and she desired you to come 27 over. Of course, it was only her love and anxiety to see you—that 28 was all; but poor Yum has been much too serious for once, and 29 hence all these letters. However, I am glad it should happen, as I 30 learnt so much about your work from Mr. Dutt, who can't be 31 accused of a relative's blind love.

32 I have written to Mrs. Bull already about this matter. I am

34 Chandranath tomorrow, near Chittagong, the farthest eastern 35 extremity of Bengal. My Mother, aunt, cousin, another cousin's 36 widow, and nine boys are with me. They all send you love.

1 I had just now a few lines from Mrs. Bull, also a letter from

26 Dear Christina,

27 Your very welcome letter just reached. A few days ago a 28 precious little bit of poem also reached. I wish it ever so much you 29 were the writer thereof. Anyhow, most of us feel, though unable to 30 express; and then, "There are thoughts that lie too deep for tears".
31 Regularity in anything is not in my line of life, but that need not 32 make you irregular. I pray you to drop a few lines every now and 33 then. Of course, when I am not in this body, I am sure the news will 34 reach you, and then you will have to stop writing.

1 Miss MacLeod wishes me to join her in Japan, but I am not 2 sure. Most probably I am not going, especially as I expect both her
3 and Mrs. Ole Bull in India, in November. Two whole months 4 consumed in coming and going; only one month's stay in Japan—that 5 does not pay, I am afraid.

6 Say, I am getting enormously fat about the middle—alas!

7 Mrs. [Charlotte] Sevier, who is now in England, returns in a 8 few months to India. She has invited Mrs. Bull etc. to be her guests 9 in the Himalayas. I wish they could be there during summer.

10 I have manfully borne the terrific heat of my country in the 11 plains, and now I am facing the deluging rains of my country. Do 12 you know how I am taking rest? I have got a few goats and sheep 13 and cows and dogs and cranes! And I am taking care of them the 14 whole day! It is not trying to be happy; what for? Why should one 15 not be unhappy as well—both being nonsense?—but just to kill time.

16 Do you correspond with Mrs. Bull or Nivedita?

17 Don't worry, don't be anxious; for me the "Mother" is my 18 protection and refuge; and everything must come round soon, 19 better than my fondest dreams can paint.

28 Letters are sometimes, dear Christina, like mercy—good to the 29 one that sends and the other that receives.

30 I am so happy that you are calm and resigned as ever. You 31 are ever that. "Mother knows", indeed; only I know that "Mother" 32 not only knows, but does—and is going to do something very fine for 33 me in the near future. What do you think will be very good for me 34 on earth? Silver? Gold? Pooh! I have got

1 something infinitely better; but a little gold will not be amiss
2 to keep my jewel in proper surroundings, and it is coming, don't you 3 think so?

4 I am a man who frets much, but waits all the same; and the 5 apple comes to my mouth by itself. So, it is coming, coming, 6 coming.

7 Now, how are you? Growing ever thinner, thinner, thinner, 8 eh? Do have a very good appetite and good sleep in anticipation of 9 the coming good time—to be in trim for welcoming its advent.

10 How did the heat feel this year? We read all sorts of horrible 11 stories about American heat waves. You have beaten the world's 12 records, even in heat—that's Yankee push, surely.

13 Well, you are right as about taste: I renounce the yellow of 14 gold and the white of silver, but stick to amber always—that is to my 15 taste.

16 Amber and corals I always hated; but of late I am awakening

16 To Sister Christine

17 The Math, Belur,

18 Dist. Howrah, Bengal,

19 2nd September 1901.

20 My dear Christine,

21 I have been looking at one of your old photos—the only one 22 you sent four or five years ago; and then I remember how changed 23 and reduced you looked last summer; and it came to me that you 24 must be awfully thin now, as it seems very hard for you to get rid of 25 anxieties. This is simply foolish. Things will, of course, take their 26 shape. We only make ourselves miserable by moping. It is very hard 27 to manipulate one's philosophy to contribute to one's daily need. So 28 it is with you, as with me. But it is easiest to take the teacher's 29 chair and read a lecture. And that has been my life's business!!
30 Indeed, that is the reason why there are more disciples up to the 31 mark than teachers. The upshot of all this is that you must create a 32 huge appetite, then gorge, then sleep and grow fat, fat, fat. Plump 33 is the English word, is it not?

1 As for me, I am very happy. Of course, Bengal brings the 2 asthma now and then, but it is getting tame, and the terrible
3 things—Bright's disease and diabetes—have disappeared altogether.
4 Life in any dry climate will stop the asthma completely, I am sure. I 5 get reduced, of course, during a fit, but then it takes me no time to 6 lay on a few layers of fat. I have a lot of cows, goats, a few sheep, 7 dogs, geese, ducks, one tame gazelle, and very soon I am going to 8 have some milk buffaloes. These are not your American bison, but 9 huge things—hairless, half-aquatic in habits, and [that] give an 10 enormous quantity of very rich milk.

11 Within the last few months, I got two fits [of asthma] by going 12 to two of the dampest hill stations in Bengal—Shillong and 13 Darjeeling. I am not going to try the Bengalee mountains any more.

14 Mrs. Bull and Nivedita are in Norway. I don't know when they 15 [will] come over to India. Miss MacLeod is in Japan. I have not 16 heard from her [for] a long while. They all are expected here in 17 November, and will have a "hot time in this old town"⁴²⁶ etc. I pray 18 you can come, and the Mother will open the door for it. I cannot but 19 say my prayers mostly have been heard, up to date.

20 Well now, Christina, send me one of your latest photos next 21 mail, will you? I want to see how much of fat you have accumulated 22 in one year.

23 Anyhow, I will have to go to America with Mrs. Bull, I am 24 sure. [Excision]⁴²⁷ By the by, excusez-moi,⁴²⁸ our Calcutta is never so

3
4 3rd September—

5 I left the letter unfinished last night. The foreign English mail 6 starts day after tomorrow. So begin again. The moon is not up yet, 7 but there is a sunless glow upon the river. Our mighty Ganges (She 8 is indeed mighty now, during the rains) is splashing against the 9 walls of the house. Numerous tiny boats are flitting up and down in 10 the dark; they have come to fish for our shads, which come up the 11 river this season.

12 How I wish you were here to taste our shads—one of the most 13 delicate fish in the world. It is raining outside—pouring. But the 14 moment this downpour ceases, I rain through every pore

15 —it is so hot yet. My whole body is covered by big patches of 16 prickly heat. Thank goodness there are no ladies about! If I had to 17 cover myself in this state of things, I surely would go crazy.

18 I have also my theme, but I am not despondent. I am sure 19 very soon to pan it out into a beautiful ecstasy [excision]. I am half 20 crazy by nature; then my overtaxed nerves make me outrageous 21 now and then. As a result I don't find anybody who would patiently 22 bear with me! I am trying my best to make myself gentle as a lamb.
23 I hope I shall succeed in some birth. You are so gentle. Sometimes I 24 did frighten you very much, did I not, Christina? I wish I were as 25 gentle as you are. Mother knows which is best.

26 I would not take any supper tonight, as I ate rather heartily of 27 the aforesaid shad! Then I have to think, think, think on my theme; 28 and some subjects I think best in bed because the whole is made 29 clear to me in dream. Therefore, I am going to bed, and gute Nacht, 30 bon soir,⁴²⁹ etc., etc. No, no, it is now about 10 a.m. in Detroit.
31 Therefore, a very happy day to you. May all good realities reach you 32 today while I am expecting dreams.

12 knows?

13 From Japan, of course, a peep into America seems inevitable.

14 Not much news of Mrs. [Ole] Bull or Margot [Sister Nivedita].
15 Margot is rested, well, and strong. She will come to India some day, 16 perhaps. I am soon expecting Mrs. [Charlotte] Sevier though. Her 17 work is needing her. Her beautiful home in the Himalayan forests is 18 a temptation, especially now when a huge tiger is roaming in her 19 compound and killed a horse, a buffalo, and her pair of mastiffs in 20 broad daylight; a number of bears [are] playing havoc with her 21 vegetable garden; and lots of porcupines [are] doing mischief 22 everywhere!!! She went out of the way to buy land in a forest—she 23 and her husband liked it so much.

24 There is not much to write this week. Words only tire one, 25 except one which is inexhaustible, infinite.

26 So, goodbye till next week.

27 Ever with love and blessings,

28 Vivekananda.

29 PS—Just now comes a telegram from Miss MacLeod and a 30 letter also. She is so insistent that I am thinking of going over to 31 Japan. In that case, we cross over to America this winter, and 32 thence to England.

6 Dear Christina,

7 Yours of September 9 came to hand yesterday. I congratulate you on your successful visit to the Huron 8 Lake; a few more of them (according to your letter) will force you to sympathize with our condition—oh, the 9 gasping and the melting and the puffing and all the rest of them!

10 However, nothing in the world like a plump, ripe fruit.

11 I had to give up my trip to Japan: firstly, because I am not in a working trim yet; secondly, [I] don't 12 much care to make such a long voyage (one month) alone; thirdly, what am I to talk to them, I wonder.

13 Our heat too has been fierce and is continuing unusually long this year. I am blacker than a Negro by 14 this time.

15 The California work is progressing famously. They want one or two men more. I would send, if I could, 16 but I have not any more spare men. Poor Turiyananda is suffering from malaria yet, and is awfully 17 overworked.

18 Do you know whether they published my Jnana-Yoga or not? I got a copy of a second edition of 19 Karma-Yoga only.

20 I am bobbing up and down in the current of life. Today it is rather down, so I finish the letter here.

21 Yours with all love and blessings,

1 My dear Christina,

2 Just now came a letter from Mrs. Bull, but none from you, as I expected one this mail.

1 Mrs. Bull writes, "I wrote Christina recently to ask her if she were to be free in case the opportunity 2 opened for her to go to the East. I send you her reply".

3 I went through several times your letter to Mrs. Bull. It surely was horrible; and you have been all this 4 time hiding the real state of affairs from me and posing great cheerfulness!!

5 You will be a precious fool to lose the opportunity if such comes and is offered by Mrs. Bull. You will 6 only have to take a year's leave. The rest will all be arranged by Mrs. Bull, including, I am sure, all your 7 anxiety for those you will have to leave behind in Detroit.

8 You have been good, too good to be human, and you are so, still. But it is no use making oneself
9 unnecessarily miserable. "Mother's will", surely, if the chance comes; and it has got to come, I know.

10 I would not write you about my health; for after all this hide and seek, even though it was for my good, 11 I think you have not much of a right to know the truth about my health.

12 But to some things you have eternal rights, and amongst others, to my eternal love and blessings,

13 Vivekananda.

16 The Math,

17 P.O. Belur, Howrah,

18 12th November 1901.

19 My dear Margo [Margot],

20 Since the Durgâ Pujâ I have been very ill, and so could not reply to your letter earlier.

21 We had a grand Puja here of Durga, lasting nearly four days; but, alas, I was down with fever all the 22 time.

23 We had a grand image, and a huge Puja it was. Then we had the Lakshmi Puja following close, and 24 then night before yesterday, we had the Kali Puja. It is always after midnight—

25 this Puja. I am better now, and we will find a house for you as soon as you come.

1 I am so glad you are accompanying Mrs. [Ole] Bull. She requires all care; and she always thinks of 2 herself the last. Joe [Miss Josephine MacLeod] is coming to India shortly—at Christmas time with some 3 Japanese friends. I am expected to meet her in Madras.

4 I am going off to the N.W.P. [North-Western Provinces] etc. soon, as Bengal is malarious—now that the 5 rains are over.

6 Mrs. Bull has been a mother to us all, and any time and service spent for her is as nothing to what she 7 has been doing for us all. Remain with her as long as she wants you—the work can wait well; "Mother" sees 8 to her work. We needn't be anxious.

9 By the by, Miss [Henrietta] Müller is here in Calcutta. She wrote a letter to Akhandananda, with whom 10 she has been in regular correspondence—care of the Math. So I sent some flowers and fruits and a letter of 11 welcome to her hotel. I have not had a reply yet.

12 Mrs. [Charlotte] Sevier, I expect, has already started. Swarupananda had his heart weakened by the 13 constant uphill and downhill. He is here and improving.

14 Things are going on well with us, slowly but surely. The boys of late have been very active, and it is 15 work only that tells and nothing else.

16 Yours with all love and blessings,

17 Vivekananda.

22 Dear Christina,

23 The morning's mail brought me a photograph from Detroit. I thank the sender very much for 24 promptness. Well, I liked it much. But the old one is the profile view; this, the front. Then again, the 25 phenomenal fat seems to be only imaginary on somebody's part. In a way, I am more used to the old one, 26 and, as such, I cannot slight an old friend. So let me say both are good. The one is an evolution of the 27 other—for the better. I expected

1 a line but it has not arrived yet; [it] may tomorrow. We have a proverb here: "One river is equal to forty 2 miles". There is only a river between Calcutta and our Math, and yet such a round-about way for the mail.
3 Sometimes it comes dribbling for days.

4 Mrs. [Ole] Bull and Nivedita must have started for the U.S. by this time. Nivedita is sure to see you in 5 Detroit. Mrs. Bull is anxious to induce you to join her Indian party via Japan. If you can take leave for some 6 months, do come. Mother will arrange anyhow; I need not trouble myself.

7 Mrs. Sevier has started already, it seems—alone.

8 We had grand Pujas (worships) here in our Math this year. The biggest of our Pujas is the Mother 9 worship, lasting nearly four days and nights. We brought a clay image of Mother with ten hands, standing 10 with one foot on a lion, the other on a demon. Her two daughters—the Goddess of Wealth and the Goddess of 11 Learning and Music—on either side on lotuses; beneath, her two sons—the God of War and that of Wisdom.

12 Thousands of people were entertained, but I could not see the Puja, alas! I was down with high fever
13 all the time. Day before yesterday, however, came the Puja of Kali. We had an image, too, and sacrificed a 14 goat and burned a lot of fireworks. This night every Hindu home is illuminated, and the boys go crazy over 15 fireworks. There are, of course, several cases of severe burns in the hospitals. We had less fireworks but 16 more Puja, recitation of Mantras, offering of flowers, food and songs. It lasted only one night.

17 I am expected to leave Calcutta and Bengal in a few days, as this country becomes very malarious this 18 month, after the rains. It is pleasant and cool now, and the north Himalayan wind is blowing.

19 We have fenced in a lot of our grounds to protect our vegetables from our cows and goats and sheep.
20 The other day one of my [a portion excised] . . . but the mother was either so wicked or [a portion 21 excised] . . . that she would not look at her young. I tried to keep them alive on cow's milk, but the poor 22 things died in the night! Two of my ducks are sitting on their eggs. As this is their first time, and the male 23 does not help them a bit, I am trying my best to keep up their strength by good

1 feeding. We cannot keep chickens here—they are forbidden to us.

2 With all love,

3 Vivekananda.

8 Dear Christine,

9 It seems your bottle of nerve tonic did not do you much good, your assurances to the contrary. It must 10 have been a curious error. I must have been down with fever or asthma or something else at that time. Still a 11 thousand, thousand pardons. This was my first, and it will be my last, offence. Your letter that went to Miss 12 [Josephine] MacLeod has not come back yet. Perhaps Miss MacLeod is bringing the letter with her, as she is 13 coming over to India from Japan herself, accompanied by her Japanese converts (male, of course, as she is a 14 lady missionary).

15 Well, well, I so wish things would so arrange themselves that I could see you once more. Mother 16 knows. By the by, my right eye is failing me badly. I see very little with that one. It will be hard for me for 17 some time either to read or write; and as it is getting worse every day, my people are urging me to go to 18 Calcutta and consult a doctor. I will go soon, as soon as I recover from a bad cold I have on.

19 I am so glad you were so taken by Abhedananda; only I thought one Hindu was good for a lifetime.

20 Poor Miss Joe [Miss Josephine MacLeod]—so she remains ignorant as to the real cause of my not going 21 over to Japan! You need not be the least anxious—there is no harm done; and if there were, Joe and especially 22 Mrs. [Ole] Bull make it their life's duty to befriend those I love.

23 I will try your tonic when it arrives; and the gift, I pray, will even be followed by the giver, for surely a

5 Dear Christine,

6 It is almost sure, I did not write any letter to you that week in which [I] made that infamous blunder. As 7 I wrote you two letters a few days previously, it is not at all probable that I wrote you another. Then Miss 8 [Josephine] MacLeod [would have] sent the letter back. I must have written only one letter that week to Miss 9 MacLeod, giving her my reasons for not going to Japan; and somehow it so happened that the hand wrote the 10 most familiar name on the envelope. So you need not expect any letter of yours back from Japan, as there 11 was none; and if there were, you shall have it.

12 I am just under another spell of catarrh and asthma. Yesterday a cyclone blew over the place, and 13 several trees and a bit of the roof are damaged. It is gloomy yet and cold. You know it is almost impossible to 14 write with the asthma on. So au revoir [good-bye].

18 The Math, P.O. Belur, Howrah

19 12th December 1901

20 Dear Christine,

21 Well, then, you wanted to know all about my state of health, and you insist. You shall have it.

22 You know, the last three years I have been getting albuminuria now and then. It is not constant, nor is 23 it yet of any organic character. The kidneys are structurally all right. Only they throw out albumen now and 24 then.

25 This is worse than throwing out sugar in diabetes. Albumen poisons the blood, attacks the heart and 26 does all sorts of mischief. Catching cold always increases it. This time it has caused

1 a small blood vessel in the right eye to burst, so that I scarcely see with that eye.

2 Then the circulation has become very rapid. The doctors have put me to bed; and I am forbidden to eat 3 meat, to walk or even stand up, to read and write.

4 Already there is some benefit in this lying-down process, as I sleep a lot and have a good appetite and 5 am digesting my meals. Curious, is it not, that inactivity should bring on sleep and appetite? There is no 6 cause to be anxious at all.

7 Mrs. [Charlotte] Sevier arrived in Calcutta three days ago; and by the last advice from Nivedita, Mrs.
8 Bull and she will start on the 13th December, if they can secure berths, or on the 30th December at least. I
9 pray Mrs. Bull has already invited you and that you have got your year's leave and are coming over, and that 10 you will get this letter in India redirected. If Mother does not fulfil this prayer, sure She will take me across 11 the wayter soon, and [line excised] The doctor says if I keep to my bed for three months, I will get 12 completely cured.

13 Now, don't worry. If good days are not coming, we will make them, that is all. Hang it! I must have 14 good days now and, that too, very soon. You know, I always keep my word. Mother must do it, or I throw Her 15 overboard. I am not so submissive as you are.

16 Our old-school physicians pour in tons of iron and other metals—including gold, silver, pearls, 17 etc.—down our throats. I should be a man of iron by this time; perhaps yours will be the last touch to make 18 my body one of steel.

19 This is our best season for eating turtles, but they are all black. The green [ones] can only be found in 20 America. Alas! I am prevented from the taste of meat.

21 Now, noble heart, take courage. Don't mope: you have buffeted [too] many a storm in life, old war 22 horse, to be like a silly boarding-school girl. Things must go all right. I am not going to die or to be ill just 23 now; I am determined to be healthy. You know my grit.

24 Miss [Josephine] MacLeod sent you your letter. What was it about? Was there anything queer? I am 25 glad she had it. She writes beautifully about you. She has already started, and we will have a jolly good 26 company this winter here in Calcutta.

1 Mrs. [Ole] Bull, Miss MacLeod, Mrs. Sevier and Nivedita and I will be overjoyed if somebody else will 2 be thrown into the bargain. I can't get any more value, eh? I must stop. Am going to look after my geese and 3 ducks just for five minutes, breaking the doctor's command to lie down all the time. One of the geese is a 4 silly, fearful bird, always despondent and anxious. She likes to be all alone by herself and is miserable—very 5 much like another goose I know in another place.

6
7 Here my story ends

8 And spinach top bends.

9 Why is spinach withering?

10 Because the goat is browsing.

11 Why is the goat browsing?

12 Because no grass is growing.

13 Why no grass is growing?

14 The gardener is not watering.

15 Why there is no watering?

16 The Master is not commanding.

17 Why is he not commanding?

18 An ant has bitten the Master!

19

2 Dear Christine,

3 I am much better, and the rest is doing me good. I have found out that lying in bed all the time gives 4 me as much sleep

1 as wanted and good digestion too. Albumen and sugar vanish immediately [when] I begin taking rest.

2 Mrs. Bull and Nivedita start for India from Marseilles today, and unless they change their plan, [they] 3 must be in India before this reaches you—two weeks before.

4 Herewith I send you four hundred and eighty dollars by cheque drawn on Thomas Cook & Son,
5 Broadway, New York. They have no branch office in Detroit. On receipt of this, you write to Thomas Cook & 6 Son, Broadway, New York, that you have got a cheque from India—mentioning the amount and 7 number—drawn by Thomas Cook & Son on the firm of Thomas Cook & Son, and want to be advised as to how 8 to cash it. Don't send the cheque ahead. (Excuse all these details. I feel you are a baby in business, though I 9 am worse.) This is to pay your "passage to India"⁴³⁰ if you think fit to accept Mrs. Sevier's invitation. If you 10 get leave and come, I am sure you will find somebody who is coming to England, at least. Then from there, 11 again, somebody who is coming to Egypt. You come with them as far as Italy, thence direct on a boat to 12 India.

13 Second-class passage across the Atlantic is all right, but the second class from Italy to Bombay is 14 rather bad. There are always a few rough men and fast women. There is money enough for travelling first 15 class all through, if you so like.

16 The Mother will see to it, even as [She did when] this money came. Drop me a line as soon as you 17 engage your passage—better a week ahead; otherwise I don't see how the letter can reach me. The vessel to 18 India you get from London; and possibly a letter may reach me with the name of the vessel, etc. In any case, 19 however, you wire me as soon as you land and get into a good hotel. You will find many persons to receive 20 you

21 —and me too, most probably.

22 In case, however, things take another turn and you cannot come, no matter. Do with the money just as 23 it pleases you.

24 It is very probable that after Miss [Josephine] MacLeod and Mrs. [Ole] Bull have been through India, 25 they are going home via Japan; and, of course, I am going with them. In that case I will be in California next 26 fall.

1 ⁴³⁰ ? Probably the Swami placed this phrase in quotation marks because it is the title of a poem in Walt Whitman's Leaves of 2 Grass.
3

1 It will be a nice trip, and would it not be a fine tour round the world if you get leave and come?
2 Do just as the Mother opens the way for you, and do not worry.

15 Now, I am going to try my hand in Japan and, if possible, in China. Oh, how I wish you were coming 16 with Nivedita to make one of the party to Japan! Yet, do not put yourself to unnecessary trouble for that.
17 There is Japan, and there is the U.S., after all, where we meet. You will only break yourself in trying to 16 A gloom came over the Math when news reached Calcutta of his severe illness. Now, I hope, he has 18 It seems the American climate does not suit him. In that case it will be better for him to come over to 20 In all probability I am going to Japan in a month or two. Ramakrishnananda accompanies me.

21 Turiyananda may come over to Japan and I go to America. "Mother" knows best, however, and we obey.

22 I am just now in Benaras for a few days. All letters should, however, be addressed to the Belur Math.

23 Kindly convey my best love to Turiyananda and to yourself, the holy family and the other friends.

4 Gopal Lal Villa,

6 4th March 1902.

7 My dear Margo [Margot],

8 It is night now, and I can hardly sit up or write, yet still feel duty bound to write to you this letter, 9 fearing lest it becomes my last, it may put others to trouble.

10 My condition is not at all serious, but it may become [so] any time; and I don't know what is meant by a 11 low fever that almost never leaves me and the difficulty of breathing.

12 Well, I sent Christina [Greenstidel] £100 from Mrs. [Charlotte] Sevier for a travel to India, as she lost 13 her mother at that time. Her last letter informs me that she sails on February 15th. In that case, her 14 reaching India is very near. I expect, of course, some information as to the port and steamer next week. In 15 case I pass away, which I would like very much to do in this city of Shiva, do you open her letters directed to 16 me, receive the girl, and send her back home. If she has no money to go back, give her a passage—even if you 17 have to beg.

18 I have spent the little money I brought from Europe in feeding my mother and paying her debts. What 19 little remains I cannot touch, as that is the expense for the pending lawsuit.

20 In case I rally, I will inform you of the time of her arrival, and, in that case, you will have to see that 21 she comes in safe to some station in Bareilly, where I [will] meet her. And she is to be the guest of Mrs.
22 [Charlotte] Sevier. I am also going to take another chance in Almora.

23 Ramakrishnananda came a few weeks before I came away, and the first thing he did was to lay down 24 at my feet 400 Rs. he had collected in so many years of hard work!!! It was the first time such a thing has 25 happened in my life. I can scarcely suppress my tears. Oh, Mother!! Mother! There is not all gratitude,

1 all love, all manliness dead!!! And, dear child, one is enough

2 –one seed is enough to reforest the world.

3 Well, that money is in deposit in the Math. I never mean to touch a penny of that. When I asked
4 Ramakrishnananda to give that money to his people, he replied he did not care a hang to give to anybody
5 except me and was only sorry he could scrape that little in four years! Well, if I pass away, see that 400 Rs. is 6 paid back—every rupee to him. Lord bless you and Ramakrish-nananda.

7 I am quite satisfied with my work. To have left two true souls is beyond the ambition of the greatest.

8 Ever your loving father,

15 My dear Christine,

16 You know how welcome you are—I need not express it. This is a land where expressions are studiously 17 subdued. Margot [Sister Nivedita] and Joe [Miss Josephine MacLeod] have already written and made 18 arrangements at Bombay. I expect and wait for you here in Calcutta. I wish I could be in Bombay to receive 19 you, but all our wishes are not to be fulfilled.

20 Come over straight; only take great, great care of the heat by protecting the back of the head.

21 The trains here are not so safe as in your country, so have a little care of your things during night 22 travel.

23 If you feel tired, take rest in Bombay. Mrs. [Ole] Bull, Joe and Margot are anxiously awaiting you, and

5 Dear Mother,⁴³³

6 I am glad Chinnu has arrived. Any hour you like will suit [me] for your coming tomorrow. But it is 7 ferocious heat here from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m.

8 I would, therefore, suggest that you start after breakfast and remain the day here and have some 9 Bengalee fish lunch, and go back in the evening.

10 I insist on your taking a cab here and back. A cab to come and go costs quite as much or less than a 11 boat, and there is no change [of transportation]. If the cabby does not understand Belur, tell him to go to a 12 place two miles south of Bally. He must know Bally, and then let him ask his way to the Math.

13 One such drenching and capsizing experience as Mr. Okakura [Kakuzo] had the other day will unsettle 14 your nerves for days; and we expect such rough weather every evening this month. The land route is nearer, 15 easier, and cheaper from where you are. I have also instructed your servant, the bearer of the letter.

12 These blows must come upon us all. They are in the nature of things, yet they are so hard to bear.

13 The force of association makes out of this unreal world a reality; and the longer the company, the more 14 real seems the shadow. But the day comes when the unreal goes to the unreal, and, ah, how sad to bear.

15 Yet that which is real, the Soul, is ever with us, omnipresent. Blessed is the person who has seen the

24 My dear Christine,

25 I am sorry I could not visit the mountains this time. My health, though not improved as much as I [had] 26 wished, is not

1 bad. The liver has been benefited—[that] is a great gain. The rains will commence very soon in the hills.
2 So it is useless for me to take all the trouble of that terrible route.

3 I am so happy to learn the mountains are doing you good. Eat a lot, sleep as much as you can, and get 4 plump. Stuff yourself till you get plump or you burst.

5 So the place did not suit Mr. Okakura [Kakuzo]—why? There must have been something to annoy him
6 very much that he left the place so abruptly. Did he not like the scenery? Was it not sublime enough for him?
7 Or the Japanese do not like sublimity at all? They only like beauty.

8 One of the boys writes that the little boy is getting disobedient etc. Mrs. Sevier wants me to take him 9 down. So I do. I have asked Sadananda and another monk (whom I want for work here) to go to Almora and 10 wait for the monsoon, and when it breaks, to come down.

11 If you feel you are becoming the least burdensome to Mrs. Sevier, write me immediately. It would be a 12 sin to put further pressure on her—she does so much for me. However, she likes you very much and writes 13 that you look be-au-ti-ful in saris.

14 I have just now two kids and three lambs added to the family. There was one more kid, but he got 15 himself drowned in the yellow fish tank. How is Margot? Is she still there, or gone away with Mr. Okakura?
16 How is she pulling on with the boys?

17 What do you do the whole day? How do you pass the day? Write me all details, and frequently; but do 18 not expect long letters from me often.

19 Give my love to Mrs. Sevier, to Margot and the rest, and you may take a few spoonfuls, if you like,

5 My dear Christine,

6 Your letters had to wait a few days, as I was out of town in a village.⁴³⁵ Well, many thanks for all the 7 information I got. Mr. Okakura [Kakuzo] has been to the Math, but I was away. He will be in Calcutta a few 8 weeks more and then goes to Bombay. He intends taking a house near the city to learn intimately the 9 customs of Bengalees. I am so glad to learn Margo's [Sister Nivedita's] intention to stop at Mayavati longer.
10 She really requires good rest, and she had none in Europe, I am sure of that. If she were amenable to my 11 advice as of old, I would take away every book and every scrap of paper from her, make her walk some, eat a 12 lot and sleep a lot more. As to talking, I would have the merriest conversation all the while.

13 I have a beautiful letter from Mrs. Sevier, and [am] so happy to learn that she loves you more and 15 So there was a great flutter in our dovecote owing to my letters, but things must have assumed their lectures and discourses

1
2 THE WOMEN OF INDIA⁴³⁸
3

4 The following lecture was delivered at Cambridge, December 17, 1894, and recorded by Miss Frances 5 Willard's stenographer.

6 Swami Vivekananda faced bigotry in America on several issues of Indian culture—one was the Indian 7 woman. Naturally he sought to correct Western misconceptions. When he lectured in his own country, 8 however, there was no greater advocate for improving the life of Indian women than the Swami.
9

10 In speaking about the women of India, ladies and gentlemen, I feel that I am going to talk about my 11 mothers and sisters in India to the women of another race, many of whom have been like mothers and sisters
12 to me. But though, unfortunately, within very recent times there have been mouths only to curse the women 13 of our country, I have found that there are some who bless them too. I have found such noble souls in this 14 nation as Mrs. [Ole] Bull and Miss [Sarah] Farmer and Miss [Frances] Willard, and that wonderful 15 representative of the highest aristocracy of the world, whose life reminds me of that man of India, six 16 hundred years before the birth of Christ, who gave up his throne to mix with the people. Lady Henry 17 Somerset has been a revelation to me. I become bold when I find such noble souls who will not curse, whose 18 mouths are full of blessing for me, my country, our men and women, and whose hands and hearts are ever 19 ready to do service to humanity.

20 I first intend to take a glimpse into times past of Indian history, and we will find something unique. All 21 of you are aware, perhaps, that you Americans and we Hindus and this lady from Iceland [Mrs. Sigrid 22 Magnusson] are the descendants of one common ancestry known as Aryans. Above all, we find

1 ⁴³⁸ ? New Discoveries, Vol. 2, pp. 411-26.
2

1 three ideas wherever the Aryans go: the village community, the rights of women and a joyful 2 religion.⁴³⁹

3 The first [idea] is the system of village communities—as we have just heard from Mrs. Bull concerning 4 the North. Each man was his own [lord?] and owned the land. All these political institutions of the world we 5 now see, are the developments of those village systems. As the Aryans went over to different countries and 6 settled, certain circumstances developed this institution, others that.

7 The next idea of the Aryans is the freedom of women. It is in the Aryan literature that we find women 8 in ancient times taking the same share as men, and in no other literature of the world.

9 Going back to our Vedas—they are the oldest literature the world possesses and are composed by your 10 and my common ancestors (they were not written in India—perhaps on the coast of the Baltic, perhaps in 11 Central Asia—we do not know).

12 Their oldest portion is composed of hymns, and these hymns are to the gods whom the Aryans 13 worshipped. I may be pardoned for using the word gods; the literal translation is "the bright ones". These 14 hymns are dedicated to Fire, to the Sun, to Varuna and other deities. The titles run: "such-and-such a sage 15 composed this verse, dedicated to such-and-such a deity".

16 In the tenth chapter comes a peculiar hymn—for the sage is a woman—and it is dedicated to the one 17 God who is at the background of all these gods. All the previous hymns are spoken in the third person, as if 18 someone were addressing the deities. But this hymn takes a departure: God [as the Devi] is speaking for 19 herself. The pronoun used is "I". "I am the Empress of the Universe, the Fulfiller of all prayers."⁴⁴⁰

20 This is the first glimpse of women's work in the Vedas. As we go on, we find them taking a greater 21 share—even officiating as priests. There is not one passage throughout the whole mass of literature of the 22 Vedas which can be construed even indirectly

1 ⁴³⁹ ? Since Swami Vivekananda's time there has been more research on the spread of the Aryan culture.
2

3 ⁴⁴⁰ ? Vide "Devi Sukta", Rig-Veda 10.125.
4

1 as signifying that woman could never be a priest. In fact, there are many examples of women 2 officiating as priests.

3 Then we come to the last portion of these Vedas—which is really the religion of India—the concentrated 4 wisdom of which has not been surpassed even in this century. There, too, we find women preeminent. A 5 large portion of these books are words which have proceeded from the mouths of women. It is there—

6 recorded with their names and teachings.

7 There is that beautiful story of the great sage Yâjñavalkya, the one who visited the kingdom of the 8 great king Janaka. And there in that assembly of the learned, people came to ask him questions. One man 9 asked him, "How am I to perform this sacrifice?" Another asked him, "How am I to perform the other 10 sacrifice?" And after he had answered them, there arose a woman who said, "These are childish questions.
11 Now, have a care: I take these two arrows, my two questions. Answer them if you can, and we will then call 12 you a sage. The first is: What is the soul? The second is: What is God?"⁴⁴¹

13 Thus arose in India the great questions about the soul and God, and these came from the mouth of a 14 woman. The sage had to pass an examination before her, and he passed well.

15 Coming to the next stratum of literature, our epics, we find that education has not degenerated.
16 Especially in the caste of princes this ideal was most wonderfully held.

17 In the Vedas we find this idea of marrying—the girls chose for themselves; so the boys. In the next 18 stratum they are married by their parents, except in one caste.

19 Even here I would ask you to look at another side. Whatever may be said of the Hindus, they are one of 20 the most learned races the world has ever produced. The Hindu is the metaphysician; he applies everything 21 to his intellect. Everything has to be settled by astrological calculation.

22 The idea was that the stars govern the fate of every man and woman. Even today when a child is born, 23 a horoscope is cast. That determines the character of the child. One child is born of a divine nature, another 24 of a human, others of lower character.

1 ⁴⁴¹ ? Brihadâraṇyaka Upanishad 3.8.1-12.
2

1 The difficulty was: If a child who was of a monster-character was united with a child of a 2 god-character, would they not have a tendency to degenerate each other?

3 The next difficulty was: Our laws did not allow marriage within the same clans. Not only may one not 4 marry within his own family—or even one of his cousins—but one must not marry into the clan of his father or 5 even of his mother.

6 A third difficulty was: If there had been leprosy or phthisis or any such incurable disease within six 7 generations of either bride or bridegroom, then there must not be a marriage.

8 Now taking [into account] these three difficulties, the Brahmin says: "If I leave it to the choice of the 9 boy or girl to marry, the boy or girl will be fascinated with a beautiful face. And then very likely all these 10 circumstances will bring ruin to the family". This is the primary idea that governs our marriage laws, as you 11 will find. Whether right or wrong, there is this philosophy at the background. Prevention is better than cure.

12 That misery exists in this world is because we give birth to misery. So the whole question is how to 13 prevent the birth of miserable children. How far the rights of a society should extend over the individual is 14 an open question. But the Hindus say that the choice of marriage should not be left in the hands of the boy or 15 girl.

16 I do not mean to say that this is the best thing to do. Nor do I see that leaving it in their hands is at all 17 a perfect solution. I have not found a solution yet in my own mind; nor do I see that any country has one.

18 We come next to another picture. I told you that there was another peculiar form of marriage 19 (generally among the royalty) where the father of the girl invited different princes and noblemen and they 20 had an assembly. The young lady, the daughter of the king, was borne on a sort of chair before each one of 21 the princes in turn. And the herald would repeat: "This is Prince So-and-so, and these are his qualifications".
22 The young girl would either wait or say, "Move on". And before the next prince, the crier would also give a 23 description, and the girl would say, "Move on". (All this would be arranged beforehand; she already had the 24 liking for somebody before this.) Then at last she would ask one of the servants to throw the garland over

1 the head of the man, and it would be thrown to show he was accepted. (The last of these marriages
2 was the cause of the Mohammedan invasion of India.)⁴⁴² These marriages were specially reserved for the 3 prince caste.

4 The oldest Sanskrit poem in existence, the Râmâyana, has embodied the loftiest Hindu ideal of a 5 woman in the character of Sitâ. We have not time to go through her life of infinite patience and goodness.
6 We worship her as God incarnate, and she is named before her husband, Râma. We say not "Mr. and Mrs.", 7 but "Mrs. and Mr." and so on, with all the gods and goddesses, naming the woman first.

8 There is another peculiar conception of the Hindu. Those who have been studying with me are aware 9 that the central conception of Hindu philosophy is of the Absolute; that is the background of the universe.
10 This Absolute Being, of whom we can predicate nothing, has Its powers spoken of as She—that is, the real 11 personal God in India is She. This Shakti of the Brahman is always in the feminine gender.

12 Rama is considered the type of the Absolute, and Sita that of Power. We have no time to go over all the 13 life of Sita, but I will quote a passage from her life that is very much suited to the ladies of this country.

14 The picture opens when she was in the forest with her husband, whither they were banished. There 15 was a female sage whom they both went to see. Her fasts and devotions had emaciated her body.

16 Sita approached this sage and bowed down before her. The sage placed her hand on the head of Sita
17 and said: "It is a great blessing to possess a beautiful body; you have that. It is a greater blessing to have a 18 noble husband; you have that. It is the greatest blessing to be perfectly obedient to such a husband; you are 19 that. You must be happy".

20 Sita replied, "Mother, I am glad that God has given me a beautiful body and that I have so devoted a 21 husband. But as to the third blessing, I do not know whether I obey him or he obeys me. One thing alone I 22 remember, that when he took me by the hand before the sacrificial fire—whether it was a reflec-

3

1 tion of the fire or whether God himself made it appear to me—I found that I was his and he was mine.
2 And since then, I have found that I am the complement of his life, and he of mine".

3 Portions of this poem have been translated into the English language. Sita is the ideal of a woman in 4 India and worshipped as God incarnate.

5 We come now to Manu the great lawgiver. Now, in this book there is an elaborate description of how a 6 child should be educated. We must remember that it was compulsory with the Aryans that a child be 7 educated, whatever his caste. After describing how a child should be educated, Manu adds: "Along the same 8 lines, the daughters are to be educated—exactly as the boys".⁴⁴³

9 I have often heard that there are other passages where women are condemned. I admit that in our 10 sacred books there are many passages which condemn women as offering temptation; you can see that for 11 yourselves. But there are also passages that glorify women as the power of God. And there are other 12 passages which state that in that house where one drop of a woman's tear falls, the gods are never pleased 13 and the house goes to ruin. Drinking wine, killing a woman and killing a Brahmin are the highest crimes in 14 the Hindu religion. I admit there are condemnatory sentences [in some of our books]; but here I claim the 15 superiority of these Hindu books, for in the books of other races there is only condemnation and no good 16 word for a woman.

17 Next, I will come to our old dramas. Whatever the books say, the dramas are the perfect 18 representation of society as it then existed. In these, which were written from four hundred years before 19 Christ onward, we find even universities full of both boys and girls. We would not [now] find Hindu women, 20 as they have since become cut off from higher education.⁴⁴⁴ But [at that time], they were everywhere pretty 21 much the same as they are in this country—going out to the gardens and parks to take promenades.

1 ⁴⁴³ ?

2 Note: The text of this sentence is not found in the extant Manu Samhitâ. Vide Mahânirvâna Tantra 8.47.

3
4 ⁴⁴⁴ ? Since Swami Vivekananda's time, higher education among women in India has spread rapidly.
5

1 There is another point which I bring before you and where the Hindu woman is still superior to all 2 other women in the world—her rights. The right to possess property is as absolute for women in India as for 3 men—and has been for thousands and thousands of years.

4 If you have any lawyer friend and can take up commentaries on the Hindu law, you will find it all for 5 yourselves. A girl may bring a million dollars to her husband, but every dollar of that is hers. Nobody has any 6 right to touch one dollar of that. If the husband dies without issue, the whole property of the husband goes to 7 her, even if his father or mother is living. And that has been the law from the past to the present time. That is 8 something which the Hindu woman has had beyond that of the women of other countries.

9 The older books—or even newer books—do not prohibit the Hindu widows from being married; it is a 10 mistake to think so. They give them their choice, and that is given to both men and women. The idea in our 11 religion is that marriage is for the weak, and I don't see any reason to give up that idea today. They who find 12 themselves complete—what is the use of their marrying? And those that marry—they are given one chance.
13 When that chance is over, both men and women are looked down upon if they marry again; but it is not that 14 they are prohibited. It is nowhere said that a widow is not to marry. The widow and widower who do not 15 marry are considered more spiritual.

16 Men, of course, break through this law and go and marry; whereas women—they being of a higher 17 spiritual nature—keep to the law. For instance, our books say that eating meat is bad and sinful, but you may 18 still eat such-and-such a meat—mutton, for instance. I have seen thousands of men who eat mutton, and 19 never in my life have I seen a woman of higher caste who eats meat of any kind. This shows that their nature 20 is to keep the law—keeping more towards religion. But do not judge too harshly of Hindu men. You must try 21 to look at the Hindu law from my position too, for I am a Hindu man.

22 This non-marriage of widows gradually grew into a custom. And whenever in India a custom becomes 23 rigid, it is almost impossible to break through it—just as in your country, you

1 will find how hard it is to break through a five-day custom of fashion. In the lower castes, except two, 2 the widows remarry.

3 There is a passage in our later law books [which states] that a woman shall not read the Vedas. But 4 they are prohibited to even a weak Brahmin. If a Brahmin boy is not strong-minded, the law is applied to him
5 also. But that does not show that education is prohibited to them, for the Vedas are not all that the Hindus 6 have. Every other book women can read. All the mass of Sanskrit literature, that whole ocean of 7 literature—science, drama, poetry—is all for them. They can go there and read everything, except the [Vedic]
8 scriptures.⁴⁴⁵

9 In later days the idea was that woman was not intended to be a priest; so what is the use of her 10 studying the Vedas? In that, the Hindus are not so far behind other nations. When women give up the world
11 and join our Order, they are no longer considered either men or women. They have no sex. The whole 12 question of high or low caste, man or woman, dies out entirely.

13 Whatever I know of religion I learned from my master, and he learned it of a woman.

14 Coming back to the Rajput woman, I will try to bring to you a story from some of our old books—how 15 during the Mohammedan conquest, one of these women was the cause of what led to the conquest of India.

16 A Rajput prince of Kanauj—a very ancient city—had a daughter [Samyukta]. She had heard of the 17 military fame of Prithvi Rai [King of Ajmere and Delhi] and all his glory, and she was in love with him.

18 Now her father wanted to hold a Râjasuya sacrifice, so he invited all the kings in the country. And in 19 that sacrifice, they all had to render menial service to him because he was superior over all; and with that 20 sacrifice he declared there would be a choice by his daughter.

21 But the daughter was already in love with Prithvi Rai. He was very mighty and was not going to 22 acknowledge loyalty to the king, her father, so he refused the invitation. Then the king made a golden statue 23 of Prithvi Rai and put it near the door. He

1 said that that was the duty he had given him to perform—that of a porter.

2 The upshot of the whole affair was that Prithvi Rai, like a true knight, came and took the lady behind 3 him on his horse, and they both fled.

4 When the news came to her father, he gave chase with his army, and there was a great battle in which 5 the majority of both armies was killed. And [thus the Rajputs were so weakened that] the Mohammedan 6 empire in India began.

7 When the Mohammedan empire was being established in northern India, the Queen of Chitore [Râni
8 Padmini] was famed for her beauty. And the report of her beauty reached the sultan, and he wrote a letter 9 for the queen to be sent to his harem. The result was a terrible war between the King of Chitore and the 10 sultan. The Mohammedans invaded Chitore. And when the Rajputs found they could not defend themselves 11 any more, the men all took sword in hand and killed and were killed, and the women perished in the flames.

12 After the men had all perished, the conqueror entered the city. There in the street was rising a horrible 13 flame. He saw circles of women going around it, led by the queen herself. When he approached near and 14 asked the queen to refrain from jumping into the flames, she said, "This is how the Rajput woman treats 15 you", and threw herself into the fire.

16 It is said that 74,500 women perished in the flames that day to save their honour from the hands of the 17 Mohammedans. Even today when we write a letter, after sealing it we write "74½" upon it, meaning that if 18 one dares to open this letter, that sin of killing 74,500 women will be upon his head.

19 I will tell you the story of another beautiful Rajput girl.⁴⁴⁶ There is a peculiar custom in our country 20 called "protection". Women can send small bracelets of silken thread to men. And if a girl sends one of these 21 to a man, that man becomes her brother.

22 During the reign of the last of the Mogul emperors—the cruel man who destroyed that most brilliant 23 empire of India—he

1 similarly heard of the beauty of a Rajput chieftain's daughter. Orders were sent that she should be 2 brought to the Mogul harem.

3 Then a messenger came from the emperor to her with his picture, and he showed it to her. In derision
4 she stamped upon it with her feet and said, "Thus the Rajput girl treats your Mogul emperor". As a result, 5 the imperial army was marched into Raj-putana.

6 In despair the chieftain's daughter thought of a device. She took a number of these bracelets and sent 7 them to the Rajput princes with a message: "Come and help us". All the Rajputs assembled, and so the 8 imperial forces had to go back again.

9 I will tell you a peculiar proverb in Rajputana. There is a caste in India called the shop class, the 10 traders. They are very intelligent—some of them—but the Hindus think they are rather sharp. But it is a 11 peculiar fact that the women of that caste are not as intelligent as the men. On the other hand, the Rajput 12 man is not half as intelligent as the Rajput woman.

13 The common proverb in Rajputana is: "The intelligent woman begets the dull son, and the dull woman 14 begets the sharp son". The fact is, whenever any state or kingdom in Rajputana has been managed by a 15 woman, it has been managed wonderfully well.

16 We come to another class of women. This mild Hindu race produces fighting women from time to time.
17 Some of you may have heard of the woman [Lakshmi Bâi, Queen of Jhansi] who, during the Mutiny of 1857, 18 fought against the English soldiers and held her own ground for two years—leading modern armies, 19 managing batteries and always charging at the head of her army. This queen was a Brahmin girl.

20 A man whom I know lost three of his sons in that war. When he talks of them he is calm, but when he 21 talks of this woman his voice becomes animated. He used to say that she was a goddess—she was not a 22 human being. This old veteran thinks he never saw better generalship.

23 The story of Chand Bibi, or Chand Sultana [1546-1599], is well known in India. She was the Queen of 24 Golconda, where the diamond mines were. For months she defended herself. At last, a breach was made in 25 the walls. When the imperial army tried to

1 rush in there, she was in full armour, and she forced the troops to go back.⁴⁴⁷

2 In still later times, perhaps you will be astonished to know that a great English general had once to 3 face a Hindu girl of sixteen.

4 Women in statesmanship, managing territories, governing countries, even making war, have proved 5 themselves equal to men—if not superior. In India I have no doubt of that. Whenever they have had the 6 opportunity, they have proved that they have as much ability as men, with this advantage—that they seldom 7 degenerate. They keep to the moral standard, which is innate in their nature. And thus as governors and 8 rulers of their state, they prove—at least in India—far superior to men. John Stuart Mill mentions this fact.

9 Even at the present day, we see women in India managing vast estates with great ability. There were 10 two ladies where I was born who were the proprietors of large estates and patronesses of learning and art 11 and who managed these estates with their own brains and looked to every detail of the business.

12 Each nation, beyond a general humanity, develops a certain peculiarity of character—so in religion, so 13 in politics, so in the physical body, so in mental habitude, so in men and women, so in character. One nation
14 develops one peculiarity of character, another takes another peculiarity. Within the last few years the world 15 has begun to recognize this.

16 The very peculiarity of Hindu women, which they have developed and which is the idea of their life, is 17 that of the mother. If you enter a Hindu's home, you will not find the wife to be the same equal companion of 18 the husband as you find her here. But when you find the mother, she is the very pillar of the Hindu home.
19 The wife must wait to become the mother, and then she will be everything.

20 If one becomes a monk, his father will have to salute him first because he has become a monk and is 21 therefore superior to him. But to his mother he—monk or no monk—will have to go

3 which means "Chand—the Empress".
4

1 down on his knees and prostrate himself before her. He will then put a little cup of water before her
2 feet, she will dip her toe in it, and he will have to drink of it. A Hindu son gladly does this a thousand times
3 over again!⁴⁴⁸

4 Where the Vedas teach morality, the first words are, "Let the mother be your God"⁴⁴⁹—and that she is.
5 When we talk of woman in India, our idea of woman is mother. The value of women consists in their being 6 mothers of the human race. That is the idea of the Hindu.

7 I have seen my old master taking little girls by the hands, placing them in a chair and actually 8 worshipping them—placing flowers at their feet and prostrating himself before these little children—because 9 they represented the mother God.

10 The mother is the God in our family. The idea is that the only real love that we see in the world, the 11 most unselfish love, is in the mother—always suffering, always loving. And what love can represent the love of 12 God more than the love which we see in the mother? Thus the mother is the incarnation of God on earth to 13 the Hindu.

14 "That boy alone can understand God who has been first taught by his mother." I have heard wild 15 stories about the illiteracy of our women. Till I was a boy of ten, I was taught by my mother. I saw my 16 grandmother living and my great-grandmother living, and I assure you that there never was in my line a 17 female ancestor who could not read or write, or who had to put "her mark" on a paper. If there was a woman 18 who could not read or write, my birth would have been impossible. Caste laws make it imperative.

19 So these are wild stories which I sometimes hear—such as the statement that in the Middle Ages 20 reading and writing were taken away from Hindu women. I refer you to Sir William Hunter's History of the 21 English People, where he cited Indian women who could calculate a solar eclipse.

22 I have been told that either too much worship of the mother makes the mother selfish or too much love 23 of the children from

1 ⁴⁴⁸ ? This custom is a gesture meant to acknowledge the mother not only as the first teacher and preceptor in one's life, but also 2 as the embodiment of the all-loving God.
3

4 ⁴⁴⁹ ? Taittiriya Upanishad 1.11.
5

1 the mother makes them selfish. But I do not believe that. The love which my mother gave to me has 2 made me what I am, and I owe a debt to her that I can never repay.

3 Why should the Hindu mother be worshipped? Our philosophers try to find a reason and they come to 4 this definition: We call ourselves the Aryan race. What is an Aryan? He is a man whose birth is through 5 religion. This is a peculiar subject, perhaps, in this country; but the idea is that a man must be born through 6 religion, through prayers. If you take up our law books you will find chapters devoted to this—the prenatal 7 influence of a mother on the child.

8 I know that before I was born, my mother would fast and pray and do hundreds of things which I could 9 not even do for five minutes. She did that for two years. I believe that whatever religious culture I have, I
10 owe to that. It was consciously that my mother brought me into the world to be what I am. Whatever good 11 impulse I have was given to me by my mother—and consciously, not unconsciously.

12 "A child materially born is not an Aryan; the child born in spirituality is an Aryan." For all this 13 trouble—because she has to make herself so pure and holy in order to have pure children

14 —she has a peculiar claim on the Hindu child. And the rest [of her traits] is the same with all other 15 nations: she is so unselfish. But the mother has to suffer most in our families.

16 The mother has to eat last. I have been asked many times in your country why the [Hindu] husband 17 does not sit with his wife to eat—if the idea is, perhaps, that the husband thinks she is too low a being. This 18 explanation is not at all right. You know, a hog's hair is thought to be very unclean. A Hindu cannot brush his 19 teeth with the brushes made of it, so he uses the fibre of plants. Some traveller saw one Hindu brushing his 20 teeth with that and then wrote that "a Hindu gets up early in the morning and gets a plant and chews it and 21 swallows it!" Similarly, some have seen the husband and wife not eating together and have made their own 22 explanation. There are so many explainers in this world, and so few observers—as if the world is dying for 23 their explanations! That is why I sometimes think the invention of printing was not an unmixed blessing. The 24 real fact is: just as in your country many things must not be done by ladies before

1 men, so in our country the fact is that it is very indecorous to munch and munch before men. If a lady
2 is eating, she may eat before her brothers. But if the husband comes in, she stops immediately and the 3 husband walks out quickly. We have no tables to sit at, and whenever a man is hungry he comes in and takes 4 his meal and goes out. Do not believe that a Hindu husband does not allow his wife to sit at the table with 5 him. He has no table at all.

6 The first part of the food—when it is ready—belongs to the guests and the poor, the second to the lower 7 animals, the third to the children, the fourth to the husband, and last comes the mother. How many times I 8 have seen my mother going to take her first meal when it was two o'clock. We took ours at ten and she at 9 two because she had so many things to attend to. [For example], someone knocks at the door and says, 10 "Guest", and there is no food except what was for my mother. She would give that to him willingly and then 11 wait for her own. That was her life and she liked it. And that is why we worship mothers as gods.

12 I wish you would like less to be merely petted and patronized and more to be worshipped! [You], a 13 member of the human race!—the poor Hindu does not understand that [inclination of yours]. But when you 14 say, "We are mothers and we command", he bows down. This is the side then that the Hindus have devel-15 oped.

16 Going back to our theories—people in the West came about one hundred years ago to the point that 17 they must tolerate other religions. But we know now that toleration is not sufficient toward another religion;
18 we must accept it. Thus it is not a question of subtraction, it is a question of addition. The truth is the result 19 of all these different sides added together. Each of all these religions represents one side, the fullness being 20 the addition of all these. And so in every science, it is addition that is the law. Now the Hindu has developed 21 this side. But will this side be enough? Let the Hindu woman who is the mother become the worthy wife also, 22 but do not try to destroy the mother. That is the best thing you can do. Thus you get a better view of the 23 universe instead of going about all over the world, rushing into

1 different nations and criticizing them and saying, "The horrid wretches—all fit to be barbecued for 2 eternity!"

3 If we take our stand on this position—that each nation under the Lord's will is developing one part of 4 human nature—no nation is a failure. So far they have done well, now they must do better! [Applause]

5 Instead of calling the Hindus "heathens", "wretches", "slaves", go to India and say, "So far your work is 6 wonderful, but that is not all. You have much more to do. God bless you that you have developed this side of 7 woman as a mother. Now help the other side—the wife of men".

8 And similarly, I think (I tell it with the best spirit) that you had better add to your national character a 9 little more of the mother side of the Hindu nature! This was the first verse that I was taught in my life, the 10 first day I went to school: "He indeed is a learned man who looks upon all women as his mother, who looks 11 upon every man's property as so much dust, and looks upon every being as his own soul".

12 There is the other idea of the woman working with the man. It is not that the Hindus had not those 13 ideals, but they could not develop them.

14 It is alone in the Sanskrit language that we find four words meaning husband and wife together. It is 15 only in our marriage that they [both] promise, "What has been my heart now may be thine". It is there that 16 we see that the husband is made to look at the Pole-star, touching the hand of his wife and saying, "As the 17 Pole-star is fixed in the heavens, so may I be fixed in my affection to thee". And the wife does the same.

18 Even a woman who is vile enough to go into the streets can sue her husband and have a maintenance.
19 We find the germs of these ideas in all our books throughout our nation, but we were not able to develop that 20 side of the character.

21 We must go far beyond sentiment when we want to judge. We know it is not emotion alone that 22 governs the world, but there is something behind emotion. Economic causes, surrounding circumstances and 23 other considerations enter into the development of nations. (It is not in my present plan to go into the causes 24 that develop woman as wife.)

1 So in this world, as each nation is placed under peculiar circumstances and is developing its own type,
2 the day is coming when all these different types will be mixed up—when that vile sort of patriotism which 3 means "rob everybody and give to me" will vanish. Then there will be no more one-sided development in the 4 whole world, and each one of these [nations] will see that they had done right.

5 Let us now go to work and mix the nations up together and let the new nation come.

6 Will you let me tell you my conviction? Much of the civilization that comprises the world today has 7 come from that one peculiar race of mankind—the Aryans.⁴⁵⁰

8 [Aryan] civilization has been of three types: the Roman, the Greek, the Hindu. The Roman type is the 9 type of organization, conquest, steadiness—but lacking in emotional nature, appreciation of beauty and the 10 higher emotions. Its defect is cruelty. The Greek is essentially enthusiastic for the beautiful, but frivolous and 11 has a tendency to become immoral. The Hindu type is essentially metaphysical and religious, but lacking in 12 all the elements of organization and work.

13 The Roman type is now represented by the Anglo-Saxon; the Greek type more by the French than by 14 any other nation; and the old Hindus do not die! Each type has its advantage in this new land of promise.
15 They have the Roman's organization, the power of the Greek's wonderful love for the beautiful, and the 16 Hindu's backbone of religion and love of God. Mix these up together and bring in the new civilization.

17 And let me tell you, this should be done by women. There are some of our books which say that the 18 next incarnation, and the last (we believe in ten), is to come in the form of a woman.

19 We see resources in the world yet remaining because all the forces that are in the world have not come 20 into use. The hand was acting all this time while other parts of the body were remaining silent. Let the other 21 parts of the body be awakened and perhaps in harmonious action all the misery will be cured. Perhaps, in 22 this new land, with this new blood in your veins,

⁴⁵⁰ ? Today many historians and anthropologists would describe the Aryans as a linguistic group rather than a race.—Publisher.

1 you may bring in that new civilization—and, perhaps, through American women.

2 As to that ever blessed land which gave me this body, I look back with great veneration and bless the 3 merciful being who permitted me to take birth in that holiest spot on earth. When the whole world is trying 4 to trace its ancestry from men distinguished in arms or wealth, the Hindus alone are proud to trace their 5 descent from saints.

6 That wonderful vessel which has been carrying for ages men and women across this ocean of life may 7 have sprung small leaks here and there. And of that, too, the Lord alone knows how much is owing to 8 themselves and how much to those who look down with contempt upon the Hindus.

9 But if such leaks there are, I, the meanest of her children, think it my duty to stop her from sinking 10 even if I have to do it with my life. And if I find that all my struggles are in vain, still, as the Lord is my 11 witness, I will tell them with my heartfelt benediction: "My brethren, you have done well—nay, better than 12 any other race could have done under the same circumstances. You have given me all that I have. Grant me 13 the privilege of being at your side to the last and let us all sink together".

1 the first step towards jnana⁴⁵¹

2 [A Jnâna-Yoga class delivered in New York, Wednesday, December 11, 1895, and recorded by Swami
3 Kripananda]

4 The word Jnâna means knowledge. It is derived from the root Jnâ—to know—the same word from which 5 your English word to know is derived. Jnana-Yoga is Yoga by means of knowledge. What is the object of the 6 Jnana-Yoga? Freedom. Freedom from what? Freedom from our imperfections, freedom from the misery of 7 life. Why are we miserable? We are miserable because we are bound. What is the bondage? The bondage is 8 of nature. Who is it that binds us? We, ourselves.

9 The whole universe is bound by the law of causation. There cannot be anything, any fact—either in the 10 internal or in the external world—that is uncaused; and every cause must produce an effect.

11 Now this bondage in which we are is a fact. It need not be proved that we are in bondage. For 12 instance: I would be very glad to get out of this room through this wall, but I cannot; I would be very glad if I
13 never became sick, but I cannot prevent it; I would be very glad not to die, but I have to; I would be very glad 14 to do millions of things that I cannot do. The will is there, but we do not succeed in accomplishing the desire.
15 When we have any desire and not the means of fulfilling it, we get that peculiar reaction called misery. Who 16 is the cause of desire? I, myself. Therefore, I myself am the cause of all the miseries I am in.

17 Misery begins with the birth of the child. Weak and helpless, he enters the world. The first sign of life 18 is weeping. Now, how could we be the cause of misery when we find it at the very beginning? We have 19 caused it in the past. [Here Swami Viveka-

1 nanda entered into a fairly long discussion of "the very interesting theory called Reincarnation". He 2 continued:]

3 To understand reincarnation, we have first to know that in this universe something can never be 4 produced out of nothing. If there is such a thing as a human soul, it cannot be produced out of nothing. If 5 something can be produced out of nothing, then something would disappear into nothing also. If we are pro-
6 duced out of nothing, then we will also go back into nothing. That which has a beginning must have an end.
7 Therefore, as souls we could not have had any beginning. We have been existing all the time.

8 Then again, if we did not exist previously, there is no explanation of our present existence. The child is 9 born with a bundle of causes. How many things we see in a child which can never be explained until we 10 grant that the child has had past experience—for instance, fear of death and a great number of innate 11 tendencies. Who taught the baby to drink milk and to do so in a peculiar fashion? Where did it acquire this 12 knowledge? We know that there cannot be any knowledge without experience, for to say that knowledge is 13 intuitive in the child, or instinctive, is what the logicians would call a "petitio principii".⁴⁵²

14 It would be the same [logic] as when a man asks me why light comes through a glass, and I answer 15 him, "Because it is transparent". That would be really no answer at all because I am simply translating his 16 word into a bigger one. The word "transparent" means "that through which light comes"—and that was the 17 question. The question was why light comes through the glass, and I answered him, "Because it comes 18 through the glass".

19 In the same way, the question was why these tendencies are in the child. Why should it have fear of 20 death if it never saw death? If this is the first time it was ever born, how did it know to suck the mother's 21 milk? If the answer is "Oh, it was instinct", that is simply returning the question. If a man stands up and says, 22 "I do not know", he is in a better position than the man who says, "It is instinct" and all such nonsense.

1 ⁴⁵² ? "Petitio principii" refers to a logical fallacy in which a conclusion is taken for granted in the premise.
2

1 There is no such thing as instinct; there is no such thing as nature separate from habit. Habit is one's 2 second nature, and habit is one's first nature too. All that is in your nature is the result of habit, and habit is 3 the result of experience. There cannot be any knowledge but from experience.

4 So this baby must have had some experience too. This fact is granted even by modern materialistic
5 science. It proves beyond doubt that the baby brings with it a fund of experience. It does not enter into this 6 world with a "tabula rasa"—a blank mind upon which nothing is written—as some of the old philosophers 7 believed, but ready equipped with a bundle of knowledge. So far so good.

8 But while modern science grants that this bundle of knowledge which the child brings with it was 9 acquired through experience, it asserts, at the same time, that it is not its own—but its father's and its 10 grandfather's and its great-grandfather's. Knowledge comes, they say, through hereditary transmission.

11 Now this is one step in advance of that old theory of "instinct", that is fit only for babies and idiots. This 12 "instinct" theory is a mere pun upon words and has no meaning whatsoever. A man with the least thinking 13 power and the least insight into the logical precision of words would never dare to explain innate tendencies 14 by "instinct", a term which is equivalent to saying that something came out of nothing.

15 But the modern theory of transmission through experience

16 —though, no doubt, a step in advance of the old one—is not sufficient at all. Why not? We can 17 understand a physical transmission, but a mental transmission is impossible to understand.

18 What causes me—who am a soul—to be born with a father who has transmitted certain qualities? What 19 makes me come back? The father, having certain qualities, may be one binding cause. Taking for granted 20 that I am a distinct soul that was existing before and wants to reincarnate—what makes my soul go into the 21 body of a particular man? For the explanation to be sufficient, we have to assume a hereditary transmission 22 of energies and such a thing as my own previous experience. This is what is called Karma, or, in English, the 23 Law of Causation, the law of fitness.

1 For instance, if my previous actions have all been towards drunkenness, I will naturally gravitate
2 towards persons who are transmitting a drunkard's character. I can only take advantage of the organism
3 produced by those parents who have been transmitting a certain peculiar influence for which I am fit by my 4 previous actions. Thus we see that it is true that a certain hereditary experience is transmitted from father to 5 son, and so on. At the same time, it is my past experience that joins me to the particular cause of hereditary 6 transmission.

7 A simply hereditary transmission theory will only touch the physical man and would be perfectly 8 insufficient for the internal soul of man. Even when looking upon the matter from the purest materialistic 9 standpoint—viz. that there is no such thing as a soul in man, and man is nothing but a bundle of atoms acted 10 upon by certain physical forces and works like an automaton

11 —even taking that for granted, the mere transmission theory would be quite insufficient.

12 The greatest difficulties regarding the simple hypothesis of mere physical transmission will be here: If 13 there be no such thing as a soul in man, if he be nothing more than a bundle of atoms acted upon by certain 14 forces, then, in the case of transmission, the soul of the father would decrease in ratio to the number of his 15 children; and the man who has five, six or eight children must, in the end, become an idiot. India and 16 China—where men breed like rats—would then be full of idiots. But, on the contrary, we find that the least 17 amount of lunacy is in India and China.

18 The question is, What do we mean by the word transmission? It is a big word, but, like so many other 19 impossible and nonsensical terms of the same kind, it has come into use without people understanding it. If I 20 were to ask you what transmission is, you would find that you have no real conception of its meaning 21 because there is no idea attached to it.

22 Let us look a little closer into the matter. Say, for instance, here is a father. A child is born to him. We 23 see that the same qualities [which the father possesses] have entered into his child. Very good. Now how did 24 the qualities of the father come to be in the child? Nobody knows. So this gap the modern physicists

1 want to fill with the big word transmission. And what does this transmission mean? Nobody knows.

2 How can mental qualities of experience be condensed and made to live in one single cell of 3 protoplasm? There is no difference between the protoplasm of a bird and that of a human brain. All we can 4 say with regard to physical transmission is that it consists of the two or three protoplasmic cells cut from the 5 father's body. That is all. But what nonsense to assume that ages and ages of past human experience got 6 compressed into a few protoplasmic cells! It is too tremendous a pill they ask you to swallow with this little 7 word transmission.

8 In olden times the churches had prestige, but today science has got it. And just as in olden times
9 people never inquired for themselves—never studied the Bible, and so the priests had a very good opportunity 10 to teach whatever they liked—so even now the majority of people do not study for themselves and, at the 11 same time, have a tremendous awe and fear before anything called scientific. You ought to remember that 12 there is a worse popery coming than ever existed in the church—the so-called scientific popery, which has 13 become so successful that it dictates to us with more authority than religious popery.

14 These popes of modern science are great popes indeed, but sometimes they ask us to believe more 15 wonderful things than any priest or any religion ever did. And one of those wonderful things is that 16 transmission theory, which I could never understand. If I ask, "What do you mean by transmission?" they 17 only make it a little easier by saying, "It is hereditary transmission". And if I tell them, "That is rather Greek 18 to me", they make it still easier by saying, "It is the adherence of paternal qualities in the protoplasmic cells".
19 In that way it becomes easier and easier, until my mind becomes muddled and disgusted with the whole 20 thing.

21 Now one thing we see: we produce thought. I am talking to you this evening and it is producing 22 thought in your brain. By this act of transmission we understand that my thoughts are being transmitted into 23 your brain and your mind, and producing other thoughts. This is an everyday fact.

24 It is always rational to take the side of things which you can understand—to take the side of fact.
25 Transmission of thought is

1 perfectly understandable. Therefore we are able to take up the [concept of] transmission of thought, 2 and not of hereditary impressions of protoplasmic cells alone. We need not brush aside the theory, but the 3 main stress must be laid upon the transmission of thought.

4 Now a father does not transmit thought. It is thought alone that transmits thought. The child that is 5 born existed previously as thought. We all existed eternally as thought and will go on existing as thought.

6 What we think, that our body becomes. Everything is manufactured by thought, and thus we are the 7 manufacturers of our own lives. We alone are responsible for whatever we do. It is foolish to cry out: "Why 8 am I unhappy?" I made my own unhappiness. It is not the fault of the Lord at all.

9 Someone takes advantage of the light of the sun to break into your house and rob you. And then when 10 he is caught by the policeman, he may cry: "Oh sun, why did you make me steal?" It was not the sun's fault at 11 all, because there are thousands of other people who did much good to their fellow beings under the light of 12 the same sun. The sun did not tell this man to go about stealing and robbing.

13 Each one of us reaps what we ourselves have sown. These miseries under which we suffer, these 14 bondages under which we struggle, have been caused by ourselves, and none else in the universe is to 15 blame. God is the least to blame for it.

16 "Why did God create this evil world?" He did not create this evil world at all. We have made it evil, and 17 we have to make it good. "Why did God create me so miserable?" He did not. He gave me the same powers 18 as [He did] to every being. I brought myself to this pass.

19 Is God to blame for what I myself have done? His mercy is always the same. His sun shines on the 20 wicked and the good alike. His air, His water, His earth give the same chances to the wicked and the good.
21 God is always the same eternal, merciful Father. The only thing for us to do is to bear the results of our own 22 acts.

23 We learn that, in the first place, we have been existing eternally; in the second place that we are the 24 makers of our own lives. There is no such thing as fate. Our lives are the result of 1 our previous actions, our Karma. And it naturally follows that having been ourselves the makers of our 2 Karma, we must also be able to unmake it.

3 The whole gist of Jnana-Yoga is to show humanity the method of undoing this Karma. A caterpillar
4 spins a little cocoon around itself out of the substance of its own body and at last finds itself imprisoned. It 5 may cry and weep and howl there; nobody will come to its rescue until it becomes wise and then comes out, 6 a beautiful butterfly. So with these our bondages. We are going around and around ourselves through 7 countless ages. And now we feel miserable and cry and lament over our bondage. But crying and weeping
8 will be of no avail. We must set ourselves to cutting these bondages.

9 The main cause of all bondage is ignorance. Man is not wicked by his own nature—not at all. His nature 10 is pure, perfectly holy. Each man is divine. Each man that you see is a God by his very nature. This nature is 11 covered by ignorance, and it is ignorance that binds us down. Ignorance is the cause of all misery. Ignorance 12 is the cause of all wickedness; and knowledge will make the world good.

13 Knowledge will remove all misery. Knowledge will make us free. This is the idea of Jnana-Yoga:
14 knowledge will make us free! What knowledge? Chemistry? Physics? Astronomy? Geology? They help us a 15 little, just a little. But the chief knowledge is that of your own nature. "Know thyself." You must know what 16 you are, what your real nature is. You must become conscious of that infinite nature within. Then your 17 bondages will burst.

18 Studying the external alone, man begins to feel himself to be nothing. These vast powers of nature, 19 these tremendous changes occurring—whole communities wiped off the face of the earth in a twinkling of 20 time, one volcanic eruption shattering to pieces whole continents—perceiving and studying these things, man 21 begins to feel himself weak. Therefore, it is not the study of external nature that makes [one] strong. But 22 there is the internal nature of man—a million times more powerful than any volcanic eruption or any law of 23 nature—which conquers nature, triumphs over all its laws. And that alone teaches man what he is.

1 "Knowledge is power", says the proverb, does it not? It is through knowledge that power comes. Man 2 has got to know. Here is a man of infinite power and strength. He himself is by his own nature potent and 3 omniscient. And this he must know. And the more he becomes conscious of his own Self, the more he 4 manifests this power, and his bonds break and at last he becomes free.

5 How to know ourselves? the question remains now. There are various ways to know this Self, but in 6 Jnana-Yoga it takes the help of nothing but sheer intellectual reasoning. Reason alone, intellect alone, rising 7 to spiritual perception, shows what we are.

8 There is no question of believing. Disbelieve everything—9 that is the idea of the Jnâni. Believe nothing and disbelieve everything—that is the first step. Dare to be 10 a rationalist. Dare to follow reason wherever it leads you.

11 We hear everyday people saying all around us: "I dare to reason". It is, however, a very difficult thing 12 to do. I would go two hundred miles to look at the face of the man who dares to reason and to follow reason.
13 Nothing is easier to say, and nothing is more difficult to do. We are bound to follow superstitions all the 14 time—old, hoary superstitions, either national or belonging to humanity in general—superstitions belonging to 15 family, to friends, to country, to fashion, to books, to sex and to what-not.

16 Talk of reason! Very few people reason, indeed. You hear a man say, "Oh, I don't like to believe in 17 anything; I don't like to grope through darkness. I must reason". And so he reasons. But when reason 18 smashes to pieces things that he hugs unto his breast, he says, "No more! This reasoning is all right until it 19 breaks my ideals. Stop there!" That man would never be a Jnani. That man will carry his bondage all his life 20 and his lives to come. Again and again he will come under the power of death. Such men are not made for 21 Jnana. There are other methods for them—such as Bhakti-Yoga, Karma-Yoga, or Râja-Yoga—but not 22 Jnana-Yoga.

23 I want to prepare you by saying that this method can be followed only by the boldest. Do not think that 24 the man who believes in no church or belongs to no sect, or the man who

1 boasts of his unbelief, is a rationalist. Not at all. In modern times it is rather bravado to do anything 2 like that.

3 To be a rationalist requires more than unbelief. You must be able not only to reason, but also to follow
4 the dictates of your reason. If reason tells you that this body is an illusion, are you ready to give it up?
5 Reason tells you that heat and cold are mere illusions of your senses; are you ready to brave these things? If 6 reason tells you that nothing that the senses convey to your mind is true, are you ready to deny your sense 7 perception? If you dare, you are a rationalist.

8 It is very hard to believe in reason and follow truth. This whole world is full either of the superstitious 9 or of half-hearted hypocrites. I would rather side with superstition and ignorance than stand with these 10 half-hearted hypocrites. They are no good. They stand on both sides of the river.

11 Take anything up, fix your ideal and follow it out boldly unto death. That is the way to salvation.
12 Half-heartedness never led to anything. Be superstitious, be a fanatic if you please, but be something. Be 13 something, show that you have something; but be not like these shilly-shallyers with truth—these 14 jacks-of-all-trades who just want to get a sort of nervous titillation, a dose of opium, until this desire after the 15 sensational becomes a habit.

16 The world is getting too full of such people. Contrary to the apostles who, according to Christ, were the 17 salt of the earth, these fellows are the ashes, the dirt of the earth. So let us first clear the ground and 18 understand what is meant by following reason, and then we will try to understand what the obstructions are 19 to our following reason.

20 The first obstruction to our following reason is our unwillingness to go to truth. We want truth to come 21 to us. In all my travels, most people told me: "Oh, that is not a comfortable religion you talk about. Give us a 22 comfortable religion!"

23 I do not understand what they mean by this "comfortable religion". I was never taught any comfortable 24 religion in my life. I want truth for my religion. Whether it be comfortable or not, I do not care. Why should 25 truth be comfortable always? Truth many times hits hard—as we all know by our experience. Gradually, after 26 a long intercourse with such persons, I came to find out what they meant by their stereotypical phrase.
27 These

1 people have got into a rut, and they do not dare to get out of it. Truth must apologize to them.

2 I once met a lady who was very fond of her children and her money and her everything. When I began
3 to preach to her that the only way to God is by giving up everything, she stopped coming the next day. One 4 day she came and told me that the reason for her staying away was because the religion I preached was very 5 uncomfortable. "What sort of religion would be comfortable to you?" I asked in order to test her. She said: "I 6 want to see God in my children, in my money, in my diamonds".

7 "Very good, madam", I replied. "You have now got all these things. And you will have to see these 8 things millions of years yet. Then you will be bumped somewhere and come to reason. Until that time comes, 9 you will never come to God. In the meantime, go on seeing God in your children and in your money and your 10 diamonds and your dances."

11 It is difficult, almost impossible, for such people to give up sense enjoyment. It has grown upon them 12 from birth to birth. If you ask a pig to give up his sty and to go into your most beautiful parlour, why it will be 13 death to the pig. "Let go, I must live there", says the pig.

14 [Here Swami Vivekananda explained the story of the fish-wife: "Once a fishwife was a guest in the 15 house of a gardener who raised flowers. She came there with her empty basket, after selling fish in the 16 market, and was asked to sleep in a room where flowers were kept. But, because of the fragrance of the 17 flowers, she couldn't get to sleep for a long time. Her hostess saw her condition and said, 'Hello! Why are 18 you tossing from side to side so restlessly?' The fishwife said: 'I don't know, friend. Perhaps the smell of the 19 flowers has been disturbing my sleep. Can you give me my fish-basket? Perhaps that will put me to 20 sleep'."]⁴⁵³

21 So with us. The majority of mankind delights in this fish smell—this world, this enjoyment of the senses, 22 this money and wealth and chattel and wife and children. All this nonsense of the world—this fishy smell—has 23 grown upon us. We can hear

⁴⁵³ ? M., The Gospel of Sri Ramakrishna, trans. Swami Nikhilananda (New York: Ramakrishna-Vivekananda Center, 1952), p. 433.

1 nothing beyond it, can see nothing beyond it; nothing goes beyond it. This is the whole universe.

2 All this talk about heaven and God and soul means nothing to an ordinary man. He has heaven already 3 here. He has no other idea beyond this world. When you tell him of something higher, he says, "That is not a 4 comfortable religion. Give us something comfortable". That is to say that religion is nothing but what he is 5 doing.

6 If he is a thief and you tell him that stealing is the highest thing we can do, he will say, "That is a 7 comfortable religion". If he is cheating, you have to tell him that what he is doing is all right; then he will 8 accept your teaching as a "comfortable religion". The whole trouble is that people never want to get out of 9 their ruts—never want to get rid of the old fish-basket and smell, in order to live. If they say, "I want the 10 truth", that simply means that they want the fish-basket.

11 When have you reached knowledge? When you are equipped with those four disciplines [i. e. the four 12 qualifications for attainment discussed in Vedantic literature: discrimination between the real and the 13 unreal, renunciation, the six treasures of virtue beginning with tranquillity, and longing for liberation]. You 14 must give up all desire of enjoyment, either in this life or the next. All enjoyments of this life are vain. Let 15 them come and go as they will.

16 What you have earned by your past actions none can take away from you. If you have deserved wealth, 17 you can bury yourself in the forest and it will come to you. If you have deserved good food and clothing, you 18 may go to the north pole and they will be brought to you. The polar bear will bring them. If you have not 19 deserved them, you may conquer the world and will die of starvation. So, why do you bother about these 20 things? And, after all, what is the use of them?

21 As children we all think that the world is made so very nice, and that masses of pleasures are simply 22 waiting for our going out to them. That is every schoolboy's dream. And when he goes out into the world, the 23 everyday world, very soon his dreams vanish. So with nations. When they see how every city is built upon 24 ruins—every forest stands upon a city—then they become convinced of the vanity of this world.

2

All the power of knowledge and wealth once made has passed away—all the sciences of the ancients, lost, lost forever. Nobody knows how. That teaches us a grand lesson. Vanity of vanities; all is vanity and vexation of the spirit. If we have seen all this, then we become disgusted with this world and all it offers us. This is called Vairâgya, non-attachment, and is the first step towards knowledge.

6

The natural desire of man is to go towards the senses. Turning away from the senses takes him back to God. So the first lesson we have to learn is to turn away from the vanities of the world.

8

9

10

11

12

14

How long will you go on sinking and diving down and going up for five minutes, to again sink down, again come up and sink, and so on—tossed up and down? How long will you be whirled on this wheel of Karma—up and down, up and down? How many thousands of times have you been kings and rulers? How many times have you been surrounded by wealth and plunged into poverty? How many thousands of times have you been possessed of the greatest powers? But again you had to become men, rolling down on this mad rush of Karma's waters. This tremendous wheel of Karma stops neither for the widow's tears nor the orphan's cry.

15

18

How long will you go on? How long? Will you be like that old man who had spent all his life in prison and, when let out, begged to be brought back into his dark and filthy dungeon cell? This is the case with us all! We cling with all our might to this low, dark, filthy cell called this world—to this hideous, chimerical existence where we are kicked about like a football by every wind that blows.

19

21

22

23

24

We are slaves in the hands of nature—slaves to a bit of bread, slaves to praise, slaves to blame, slaves to wife, to husband, to child, slaves to everything. Why, I go about all over the world—beg, steal, rob, do anything—to make happy a boy who is, perhaps, hump-backed or ugly-looking. I will do every wicked thing to make him happy. Why? Because I am his father. And, at the same time, there are millions and millions of boys in this world dying of starvation—boys beautiful in body and in mind. But they are nothing to me. Let them all die. I am apt to 1 kill them all to save this one rascal to whom I have given birth. This is what you call love. Not I. Not I.

2 This is brutality.

3 There are millions of women—beautiful in body and mind, good, gentle, virtuous—dying of starvation 4 this minute. I do not care for them at all. But that Jennie who is mine—who beats me three times a day, and 5 scolds me the whole day—for that Jennie I am going to beg, borrow, cheat and steal so that she will have a 6 nice gown.

7 Do you call that love? Not I. This is mere desire, animal desire—nothing more. Turn away from these 8 things. Is there no end to these hideous dreams? Put a stop to them.

9 When the mind comes to that state of disgust with all the vanities of life, it is called turning away from 10 nature. This is the first step. All desires must be given up—even the desire of getting heaven.

11 What are these heavens anyhow? Places where to sing psalms all the time. What for? To live there and 12 have a nice healthy body with phosphorescent light or something of this kind coming out of every part, with a 13 halo around the head, and with wings and the power to penetrate the wall?

14 If there be powers, they must pass away sooner or later. If there is a heaven—as there may be many 15 heavens with various grades of enjoyment—there cannot be a body that lives forever. Death will overtake us, 16 even there.

17 Every conjunction must have a disjunction. No body, finer or coarser, can be manufactured without 18 particles of matter coming together. Whenever two particles come together, they are held by a certain 19 attraction; and there will come a time when those particles will separate. This is the eternal law. So, wher-20 ever there is a body—either grosser or finer, either in heaven or on earth—death will overcome it.

21 Therefore, all desires of enjoyment in this life, or in a life to come, should be given up. People have a 22 natural desire to enjoy; and when they do not find their selfish enjoyments in this life, they think that after 23 death they will have a lot of enjoyment somewhere else. If these enjoyments do not take us towards 24 knowledge in this life, in this world, how can they bring us knowledge in another life?

1 Which is the goal of man? Enjoyment or knowledge? Certainly not enjoyment. Man is not born to have 2 pleasure or to suffer pain. Knowledge is the goal. Knowledge is the only pleasure we can have.

3 All the sense pleasures belong to the brute. And the more the pleasure in knowledge comes, these 4 sense pleasures fall down. The more animal a man is, the more he enjoys the pleasures of the senses. No
5 man can eat with the same gusto as a famished dog. No man was ever born who could feel the same
6 pleasure in eating as an ordinary bull. See how their whole soul is in that eating. Why, your millionaires 7 would give millions for that enjoyment in eating—but they cannot have it.

8 This universe is like a perfectly balanced ocean. You cannot raise a wave in one place without making a 9 hollow in another one. The sum total of energy in the universe is the same throughout. You spend it in some 10 place, you lose it in another. The brute has got it, but he spent it on his senses; and each of his senses is a 11 hundred times stronger than that of man.

12 How the dog smells at a distance! How he traces a footstep! We cannot do that. So, in the savage man.
13 His senses are less keen than the animal's, but keener than the civilized man's.

14 The lower classes in every country intensely enjoy everything physical. Their senses are stronger than 15 those of the cultured. But as you go higher and higher in the scale, you see the power of thought increasing 16 and the powers of the senses decreasing, in the same ratio.

17 Take a [brute], cut him [as it were] to pieces, and in five days he is all right. But if I scratch you, it is 18 ten to one you will suffer for weeks or months. That energy of life which he displays—you have it too. But with 19 you, it is used in making up your brain, in the manufacture of thought. So with all enjoyments and all 20 pleasures. Either enjoy the pleasure of the senses—live like the brute and become a brute—or renounce these 21 things and become free.

22 The great civilizations—what have they died of? They went for pleasure. And they went further down
23 and down until, under the mercy of God, savages came to exterminate them, lest we would see human brutes
24 growling about. Savages killed off

1 those nations that became brutalized through sense enjoyment, lest Darwin's missing link would be 2 found.

3 True civilization does not mean congregating in cities and living a foolish life, but going Godward, 4 controlling the senses, and thus becoming the ruler in this house of the Self.

5 Think of the slavery in which we are [bound]. Every beautiful form I see, every sound of praise I hear,
6 immediately attracts me; every word of blame I hear immediately repels me. Every fool has an influence over 7 my mind. Every little movement in the world makes an impression upon me. Is this a life worth living?

8 So when you have realized the misery of this physical existence—when you have become convinced that 9 such a life is not worth living—you have made the first step towards Jnana.

1 BHAKTI-YOGA⁴⁵⁴

2 [A Bhakti-Yoga class delivered in New York, Monday morning, January 20, 1896, and recorded by Mr.
3 Josiah J. Goodwin]

4 We finished in our last [class the subject] about Pratikas. One idea more of the preparatory Bhakti, and 5 then we will go on to the Parâ, the Supreme. This idea is what is called Nishthâ, devotion to one idea.

6 We know that all these ideas of worship are right and all good, and we have seen that the worship of 7 God, and God alone, is Bhakti. The worship of any other being will not be Bhakti, but God can be worshipped 8 in various forms and through various ideas. And we have seen that all these ideas are right and good, but the 9 difficulty is here: If we just stop with this last conclusion, we find that in the end we have frittered away our 10 energies and done nothing.

11 It is a great tendency among liberal people to become a jack-of-all-trades and master of none—to nibble
12 a little here and there and, in the long run, find they have nothing. In this country it many times grows into a 13 sort of disease—to hear various things and do nothing.

14 Here is the advice of one of our old Bhaktas: "Take the honey from all flowers, mix with all with 15 respect, say yea, yea to all, but give not up your seat". This giving not up your own seat is what is called 16 Nishtha. It is not that one should hate, or even criticize, the ideals of other people; he knows they are all 17 right. But, at the same time, he must stick to his own ideal very strictly.

18 There is a story of Hanumân, who was a great worshipper of Râma. Just as the Christians worship
19 Christ as the incarnation of God, so the Hindus worship many incarnations of God. According to them, God 20 came nine times in India and will come once more. When he came as Rama, this Hanuman was his great 21 worshipper. Hanuman lived very long and was a great Yogi.

1 ⁴⁵⁴ ? New Discoveries, Vol. 3, pp. 543-54.
2

1 During his lifetime, Rama came again as Krishna; and Hanuman, being a great Yogi, knew that the 2 same God had come back again as Krishna. He came and served Krishna, but he said to him, "I want to see 3 that Rama form of yours". Krishna said, "Is not this form enough? I am this Krishna; I am this Rama. All these 4 forms are mine". Hanuman said, "I know that, but the Rama form is for me. The Lord of Jânaki⁴⁵⁵ and the 5 Lord of Shri⁴⁵⁶ are the same. They are both the incarnations of the Supreme Self. Yet the lotus-eyed Rama is 6 my all in all". This is Nishtha—knowing that all these different forms of worship are right, yet sticking to one 7 and rejecting the others. We must not worship the others at all; we must not hate or criticize them, but 8 respect them.

9 The elephant has two teeth coming out from his mouth. These are only for show; he cannot eat with 10 them. But the teeth that are inside are those with which he chews his food. So mix with all, say yea, yea to 11 all, but join none. Stick to your own ideal of worship. When you worship, worship that ideal of God which is 12 your own Ishta, your own Chosen Ideal. If you do not, you will have nothing. Nothing will grow.

13 When a plant is growing, it is necessary that it should be hedged round lest any animal should eat it 14 up. But when it has become strong and a huge gigantic tree, do not care for any hedges—it is perfect in itself.
15 So when just the seed of spirituality is growing, to fritter away the energies on all sorts of religious ideas—a 16 little of this and a little of that: a little of Christianity, a little of Buddhism, and, in reality, of nothing—

17 destroys the soul.

18 This [acceptance] has its good side; and in the end we will come to it. Only do not put the cart before 19 the horse.

20 In the first place, we are bound to become sectarians. But this should be the ideal of sectarianism—not 21 to avoid anyone. Each of us must have a sect, and that sect is our own Ishta—our own chosen way. However, 22 that should not make us want to kill other people—only to hold onto our own way. It is sacred and it should 23 not be told to our own brothers, because my choice is 1 455 ?

2 Janaki is a name of Sitâ.

3 456 ?

5 Shri is a name of Lakshmi.

1 sacred, and his [also] is sacred. So keep that choice as your own. That should be the [attitude of] 2 worship of everyone. When you pray to your own Ideal, your own Ishta, that is the only God you shall have.
3 God exists in various phases, no doubt, but for the time being, your own Ishta is the only phase for you.

4 Then, after a long course of training in this Ishta—when this plant of spirituality has grown and the soul
5 has become strong and you begin to realize that your Ishta is every-where—[then] naturally all these 6 bondages will fall down. When the fruit becomes ripe, it falls of its own weight. If you pluck an unripe fruit it 7 is bitter, sour. So we will have to grow in this thought.

8 Simply hearing lectures and all this nonsense—making the Battle of Waterloo in the brain, simply 9 unadjusted [undigested?] ideas—is no good. Devotion to one idea—those that have this will become spiritual, 10 will see the light. You see everyone com-plaining: "I try this" and "I try that", and if you cross-question them 11 as to what they try, they will say that they have heard a few lectures in one place and another, a handful of 12 talks in one corner and another. And for three hours, or a few days, they worshipped and thought they had 13 done enough. That is the way of fools, not the way to perfection—not the way to attain spirituality.

14 Take up one idea, your Ishta, and let the whole soul be de-voted to it. Practise this from day to day
15 until you see the result, until the soul grows. And if it is sincere and good, that very idea will spread till it 16 covers the whole universe. Let it spread by itself; it will all come from the inside out. Then you will say that 17 your Ishta is everywhere and that He is in everything.

18 Of course, at the same time, we must always remember that we must recognize the Ishtas of others
19 and respect them—the other ideas of God—or else worship will degenerate into fanaticism. There is an old 20 story of a man who was a worshipper of Shiva. There are sects in our country who worship God as Shiva, and 21 others who worship Him as Vishnu. This man was a great worshipper of Shiva, and to that he added a 22 tremendous hatred for all worshippers of Vishnu and would not hear the name of Vishnu pronounced. There 23 are a great number of wor-

1 shippers of Vishnu in India, and he could not avoid hearing the name. So he bored two holes in his ears
2 and tied two little bells onto them. Whenever a man mentioned the name of Vishnu, he moved his head and 3 rang the bells, and that prevented his hearing the name.

4 But Shiva told him in a dream, "What a fool you are! I am Vishnu, and I am Shiva; they are not 5 different—only in name. There are not two Gods". But this man said, "I don't care. I will have nothing to do 6 with this Vishnu business".

7 He had a little statue of Shiva and made it very nice, built an altar for it. One day he bought some 8 beautiful incense and went home to light some of the incense for his God. While the fumes [smoke] of his 9 incense were rising in the air, he found that the image was divided into two: one half remained Shiva, and 10 the other half was Vishnu. Then the man jumped up and put his finger under the nostril of Vishnu so that not 11 a particle of the smell could get there.

12 Then Shiva became disgusted, and the man became [was turned into] a demon. He is [known as] the 13 father of all fanatics, the "bell-eared" demon. He is respected by the boys of India, and they worship him. It 14 is a very peculiar kind of worship. They make a clay image and worship him with all sorts of horrible smelling 15 flowers. There are some flowers in the forests of India which have a most pestilential smell. They worship 16 him with these and then take big sticks and beat the image. He [the "bell-eared" demon] is the father of all 17 fanatics who hate all other gods except their own.

18 This is the only danger in this Nishthâ Bhakti—becoming this fanatical demon. The world gets full of 19 them. It is very easy to hate. The generality of mankind gets so weak that in order to love one, they must 20 hate another; they must take the energy out of one point in order to put it into another. A man loves one 21 woman and then loves another; and to love the other, he has to hate the first. So with women. This 22 characteristic is in every part of our nature, and so in our religion. The ordinary, undeveloped weak brain of 23 mankind cannot love one without hating another. This very [characteristic] becomes fanaticism in religion.
24 Loving their own ideal is synonymous with hating every other idea.

3

4

5

7

This should be avoided and, at the same time, the other danger should be avoided. We must not fritter away all our energies, [otherwise] religion becomes a nothing with us—just hearing lectures. These are the two dangers. The danger with the liberals is that they are too expansive and have no intensity. You see that in these days religion has become very expansive, very broad. But the ideas are so broad that there is no depth in them. Religion has become to many merely a means of doing a little charity work, just to amuse them after a hard day's labour—they get five minutes religion to amuse them. This is the danger with the liberal thought. On the other hand, the sectarians have the depth, the intensity, but that intensity is so narrow. They are very deep, but with no breadth to it. Not only that, but it draws out hatred to everyone else.

8

10

11

13

14

16

Now, if we can avoid both these dangers and become as broad as the uttermost liberals and as deep as the bluest fanatic, then we will solve the problem. Our idea is how that can be done. It is by this theory of Nishtha—knowing that all these ideals that we see are [good] and true, that all these are so many parts of the same God and, at the same time, thinking that we are not strong enough to worship Him in all these forms, and therefore must stick to one ideal and make that ideal our life. When you have succeeded in doing that, all the rest will come. Here ends the first part of Bhakti: the formal, the ceremonial and the preparatory.

17

19

You must remember that the first lesson in this Bhakti was on the disciple. Who is the disciple? What are the necessary qualifications for a disciple? You read in the scriptures: "Where the speaker is wonderful, so is the listener. When the teacher is wonderful, so is the taught. Then alone will this spirituality come".

20

22

Mankind generally thinks that everything is to be expected from the teacher. Very few people understand that they are not fit to be taught. In the disciple first this is necessary: that he must want—he must really want spirituality.

23

25

We want everything but spirituality. What is meant by want? Just as we want food. Luxuries are not wants, but necessities are wants. Religion is a necessary thing to very few; and to the vast mass of mankind it is a luxury. There are a hundred

1 things in life without which they can live, until they come to the shop and see a new and artistic 2 something and they want to buy it. Ninety-nine and nine-tenths per cent of mankind comes to religion in this 3 way. It is one of the many luxuries they have in life. There is no harm in this. Let them have all they want; but 4 they are entirely mistaken if they think they can fool God. He cannot be fooled. They will only fool themselves
5 and sink down lower and lower until they become like brutes. Those therefore will become spiritual who 6 want [spirituality]—who feel the necessity of religion, just as they feel the necessity of clothes, the necessity 7 of work, the necessity of air to breathe.

8 A necessary thing is that without which we cannot live; and a luxury is that which is simply the 9 gratification of a momentary desire.

10 The second qualification in the disciple is that he must be pure; and the other is that he must be 11 persevering—he must work. Hearing is only one part; and the other part is doing.

12 The second necessity in Bhakti was the teacher. The teacher must be properly qualified. The main idea 13 in that lecture was that the teacher must have the seed of spirituality. The teacher is not a talker, but the 14 transmitter of spiritual force which he has received from his teacher, and he from others, and so on, in an 15 unbroken current. He must be able to transmit that spiritual current.

16 When the teacher and the taught are both ready, then the first step in Bhakti-Yoga comes. The first 17 part of Bhakti-Yoga is what is called the preparatory [stage], wherein you work through forms.

18 The next lecture was on the Name—how in all scriptures and in all religions Name has been exalted and 19 how that Name does us good. The Bhakti-Yogi must always think that the Name itself is God—nothing 20 different from God. The Name and God are one.

21 Next, it was taught how, for the Bhakti-Yogi, humility and reverence are necessary. The Bhakti-Yogi 22 must hold himself as a dead man. A dead man never takes an insult, never retaliates; he is dead to everyone.
23 The Bhakti-Yogi must reverence all good people, all saintly people, for the glory of the Lord shines always 24 through His children.

1 The next lesson was on the Pratikas. In that it was taught that Bhakti is only when you worship God.
2 Worshipping anyone else is not Bhakti. But we can worship anything we like if we think it is God. If we do not 3 think it is God, that worship is not Bhakti. If you think it is God, it is all right.

4 There was a certain Yogi who used to practise meditation in a lonely part of the forest, on the banks of 5 a river. There was a poor cowherd, a very ignorant man, who used to tend his herd in that forest. Every day
6 he used to see this same Yogi meditating by the hour, practising austerities, living alone and studying.
7 Somehow the cowherd got curious as to what he did. So he came to the Yogi and said, "Sir, can you teach me
8 the way to God?" This Yogi was a very learned, great man, and he replied, "How will you understand 9 God—you common cowherd? Blockhead, go home and tend your cows and don't bother your head with such 10 things".

11 The poor fellow went away, but somehow a real want had come to him. So he could not rest, and he 12 came again to the Yogi and said, "Sir, won't you teach me something about God?"

13 Again he was repulsed: "Oh, you blockhead, what can you understand of God? Go home". But the 14 cowherd could not sleep; he could not eat. He must know something about God.

15 So he came again; and the Yogi, in order to quiet the man, as he was so insisting, said, "I'll teach you 16 about God".

17 The man asked, "Sir, what sort of being is God? What is His form? How does He look?"

18 The Yogi said, "God is just like the big bull in your herd. That is just God. God has become that big 19 bull".

20 The man believed him and went back to his herd. Day and night he took that bull for God and began to 21 worship it. He brought the greenest grass for that bull, rested close to it and gave it light, sat near it and 22 followed it. Thus days and months and years passed. His whole soul was there [in the bull].

23 One day he heard a voice, as it were, coming out of the bull. "The bull speaks!" [the cowherd thought.]

24 "My son, my son."

25 "Why, the bull is speaking! No, the bull cannot speak."

1 Again he went away, and sat near meditating in great misery of his heart. He did not know anything.
2 Again he heard the voice coming out of the bull: "My child, my child".

3 He went near. "No, the bull cannot speak." Then he went back again and sat despondent.

4 Again the voice came, and that time he found it out. It was from his own heart. He found that God was 5 in him. Then he learned the wonderful truth of the Teacher of all teachers: "I am with thee always". And the 6 poor cowherd learned the whole mystery.

7 Then he goes back to the Yogi, and when he is at some distance the Yogi sees him. The Yogi has been 8 the most learned man in the country, practising austerity for years—meditating, studying. And this cowherd, 9 an ignorant blockhead, never studied a book nor learned his letters. But he comes—his whole body, as it 10 were, transfigured, his face changed, the light of heaven shining round his face. The Yogi got up. "What is 11 this change? Where did you get this?"

12 "Sir, you gave me that."

13 "How? I told you that in joke."

14 "But I took it seriously. And I got everything I wanted out of that bull, for is He not everywhere?"

15 So that bull was the Pratika. And that man worshipped the bull as his Pratika—as God—and he got 16 everything out of it. So that intense love—that desire—brings out everything. Everything is in ourselves, and 17 the external world and the external worship are the forms, the suggestions that call it out. When they 18 become strong, the Lord within awakens.

19 The external teacher is but the suggestion. When faith in the external teacher is strong, then the 20 Teacher of all teachers within speaks; eternal wisdom speaks in the heart of that man. He need not go any 21 more to any books or any men or any higher beings; he need not run after supernatural or preternatural 22 beings for instruction. The Lord Himself becomes his instructor. He gets all he wants from himself. [There is] 23 no more need to go to any temple or church. His own body has become the greatest temple in the world, and 24 in that temple lives the Lord of Creation. In every country great saints have been born, wonderful lives have 25 been [lived]—coming out of the sheer power of love.

1 So all these external forms of Bhakti—this repetition of the Name, worship of Pratika, this Nishtha, this 2 Ishta—are but the preparations until that eternal power wakes up. Then alone comes spirituality—when one
3 goes beyond these laws and bounds. Then all laws fall down, all forms vanish, temples and churches crumble
4 into dust and die away. It is good to be born in a church, but it is the worst possible fate to die in a church. It 5 is good to be born in a sect, and the worst possible thing to die in a sect with sectarian ideas.

6 What sect can hold a child of the Lord? What laws bind him? What forms shall he follow? What man 7 shall he worship? He worships the Lord Himself. He Himself teaches him. He lives in the temple of all 8 temples, the Soul of man.

9 So this is the goal towards which we are going—the supreme Bhakti—and all that leads up to this is but 10 preparation. But it is necessary. It prepares the infinite Soul to come out of this bondage of books and sects 11 and forms; these [ultimately] fly away and leave but the Soul of man. These are superstitions of an infinite 12 amount of time. This "my father's religion", "my country's religion", or "my book", or my this and that, are but 13 the superstition of ages; they vanish. Just as when one is pricked with a thorn he takes another thorn to get 14 the first out and then throws both of them away, so this superstition is in us.

15 In many countries—even into the soft brains of little babies

16 —are put the most horrible and diabolical nonsense, as sect ideas. Parents think they are doing good to 17 the child, but they are merely murdering it to satisfy Mrs. Grundy. What selfishness! There is nothing that 18 men out of fear of themselves or out of fear of society will not do. Men will kill their own children, mothers 19 will starve their own families, brothers will hate brothers to satisfy forms—because Mrs. So-and-so will be 20 pleased and satisfied.

21 We see that the vast mass of mankind is born in some church or temple of [some religious] form and 22 never comes out of it. Why? Have these forms helped the growth of spirituality? If through these forms we 23 step onto the highest platform of love, where forms vanish and all these sectarian ideas go away, how is it 24 that the vast majority of men are always grovelling in some

1 form or another? They are all atheists; they do not want any religion.

2 If a man comes to this country without any friend or without knowing anyone—supposing he is a 3 blackguard in his own country—the first thing he will do in this country will be to join a church. Will that 4 fellow ever have religion?

5 Do you mean to say that those women who go to churches to show their dresses will ever have religion
6 or will come out of forms? They will go back and back. And when they die, they will become like animals.

7 Do you mean to say that those men who go to church to look at the beautiful faces of women will ever 8 have religion? Those who have certain social religions—because society requires that they shall belong to Mr.
9 So-and-so's church or because that was their father's church—will they ever have religion? They understand 10 certain broad views, but they must keep a certain social position—and will keep it through eternity.

11 What you want, you get. The Lord fulfils all desires. If you want to keep a certain position in society
12 you will do so; if you want the church, you will get that and not Him. If you want to play the fool all your life 13 with all these churches and foolish organizations, you will have them and have to live in them all your lives.
14 "Those that want the departed, go to the departed and get ghosts; but those that love Him, all come to Him."
15 So those that love Him alone will come to Him, and those that love others will go to wherever they love.

16 That drill business in the temples and churches—kneeling down at a certain time, standing at ease, and 17 all that drill nonsense, all mechanical, with the mind thinking of something else

18 —all this has nothing to do with real religion.

19 There was a great prophet in India, Guru Nânak, born [some] four hundred years ago. Some of you 20 have heard of the Sikhs—the fighting people. Guru Nanak was [the founder and also] a follower of the Sikh 21 religion.

22 One day he went to the Mohammedans' mosque. These Mohammedans are feared in their own
23 country, just as in a Christian country no one dare say anything against their reli-gion. . . . So Guru Nanak 24 went in and there was a big mosque, and the Mohammedans were standing in prayer. They stand in

1 lines: they kneel down, stand up, and repeat certain words at the same times, and one fellow leads. So 2 Guru Nanak went there. And when the mullah was saying "In the name of the most merciful and kind God, 3 Teacher of all teachers", Guru Nanak began to smile. He says, "Look at that hypocrite". The mullah got into a 4 passion. "Why do you smile?"

5 "Because you are not praying, my friend. That is why I am smiling."

6 "Not praying?"

7 "Certainly not. There is no prayer in you."

8 The mullah was very angry, and he went and laid a complaint before a magistrate and said, "This 9 heathen rascal dares to come to our mosque and smiles at us when we are praying. The only punishment is 10 instant death. Kill him".

11 Guru Nanak was brought before the magistrate and asked why he smiled.

12 "Because he was not praying."

13 "What was he doing?" the magistrate asked.

14 "I will tell you what he was doing if you will bring him before me."

15 The magistrate ordered the mullah to be brought. And when he came, the magistrate said, "Here is the 16 mullah. [Now] explain why you laughed when he was praying".

17 Guru Nanak said, "Give the mullah a piece of the Koran [to swear on]. [In the mosque] when he was 18 saying 'Allah, Allah', he was thinking of some chicken he had left at home".

19 The poor mullah was confounded. He was a little more sincere than the others, and he confessed he 20 was thinking of the chicken, and so they let the Sikh go. "And", said the magistrate [to the mullah], "don't go 21 to the mosque again. It is better not to go at all than to commit blasphemy there and hypocrisy. Do not go 22 when you do not feel like praying. Do not be like a hypocrite, and do not think of the chicken and say the 23 name of the Most Merciful and Blissful God".

24 A certain Mohammedan was praying in a garden. They are very regular in their prayers. When the 25 time comes, wherever they are, they just begin, fall down on the ground and get up and fall down, and so on.
26 One of them was in a garden when the call for prayer came, so he knelt there prostrate on the ground to

1 pray. A girl was waiting in the garden for her lover, and she saw him on the other side. And in her
2 hurry to reach him, she did not see the man prostrate and walked over him. He was a fanatical
3 Mohammedan—just what you call here a Presbyterian, the same breed. Both believe in barbecuing eternally.
4 So you can just imagine the anger of this Mohammedan when his body was walked over—he wanted to kill 5 the girl. The girl was a smart one, and she said, "Stop that nonsense. You are a fool and a hypocrite".

6 "What! I am a hypocrite?"

7 "Yes, I am going to meet my earthly lover, and I did not see you there. But you are going to meet your 8 heavenly lover and should not know that a girl was passing over your body."

1 the mundaka upanishad⁴⁵⁷

2 [A Jnâna-Yoga class delivered in New York, January 29, 1896,

3 and recorded by Mr. Josiah J. Goodwin]

4 In the last Jnana-Yoga⁴⁵⁸ lecture, we read one of the Upanishads; we will read another [the Mundaka
5 Upanishad]. Brahmâ was the first of the Devas, the Lord of this cycle and its protector. He gave this 6 knowledge of Brahman, which is the essence of all knowledge, to his son Atharvan. The latter handed it over 7 to his son Angiras, he to his son, Bharadvâja, and so on.

8 There was a man called Shaunaka, a very rich man, who went to this Angiras as a learner. He 9 approached the teacher and asked him a question. "Tell me, sir, what is that which, being known, everything 10 else is known?"

11 One [knowledge] is supreme and the other is inferior. The Rig-Veda is the name of one of the different 12 parts of the Vedas. Shikshâ is the name of another part. All different sciences are inferior. What is the 13 supreme science? That is the only science, the supreme science, by which we reach the Unchangeable One.
14 But that cannot be seen, cannot be sensed, cannot be specified. Without colour, without eyes, without ears, 15 without nose, without feet—the Eternal, the Omnipresent, the "Omnipenetrating", the Absolute—He from 16 whom everything comes. The sages see Him, and that is the supreme knowledge.

17 Just as the Urnanâbhi, a species of spider, creates a thread out of his own body and takes it back, just 18 as the plants grow by their own nature, and all these things are yet separate and apparently different (the 19 heart is, as it were, different from the other parts of a man's body; the plants are different from the earth; 20 the thread is different from the spider—yet they [the earth, the spider and so on] were the causes, and in 21 them these things act), so from this Unchangeable One has come this universe.

1 First, out of Brahman comes the knowledge of desire and from that comes the manifestation of 2 Creator, or the Golden Womb. From that comes intelligence, from that, matter and all these different worlds.

3 This is the truth—that for those who want to come to salvation or attain to other enjoyments, various 4 ways are told in the Vedas.

5 Then it [the Mundaka Upanishad] goes on to say how they will reach these blessings. When they die 6 they will go through the sun's rays to places which are very beautiful, where after death they will go to 7 heaven and live for some time, but from there they will again fall.

8 Here are two words—Ishtam and Purtam. Sacrificial and other rituals are called Ishtam, and Purtam is 9 making roads, building hospitals and so on. "Fools are they who think that rituals and doing good work are 10 high and that there is nothing higher." They get what they desire and go to heaven, but every enjoyment and 11 every sorrow must have an end. And so that ends, and they fall back and back and become men again, or still 12 lower. Those that give up the world and learn to control the senses live in a forest. Through the rays of the 13 sun they reach that immortality where lives He who is the Absolute.

14 Thus the sage, examining all desires of good or evil works, throws away all duties and wants to know 15 that, getting which there is no more return, no more change. And to know that, he goes to the Guru, the 16 teacher, with fuel in his hand.

17 There is a myth in our country about going to the Guru with fuel in one's hands as a sign of helping him 18 in making sacrifices, as he will not take presents.

19 Who is a teacher? He who knows the secrets of the scriptures, he whose soul has gone unto Brahman, 20 who does not care for works or going to heaven or all these things.

21 Unto such a disciple, who has controlled his mind, has become peaceful and calm, has given up all this 22 tremendous wave that rises in the mind by desire ("I will do this and that" and all those desires which are at 23 best only disturbing, such as name and fame, which impel mankind to do all sorts of things)—to that disciple 24 in whom all these vexatious desires have been calmed down, the teacher teaches the way which is

1 the science of Brahman, by which he can know that One who never changes and who is the Truth.

2 Then comes what he [Angiras] taught:

3
4 This is the truth, O gentle one, as from a mass of burning flame myriads of sparks come out of the 5 same nature as the fire, even so from this Unchangeable One all these forms, all these ideas, all this 6 creation, come out; and unto Him it [the creation] goes back.

7 But the Eternal One is everlasting, formless, without beginning, inside and outside of every 8 being—beyond all life, beyond all mind, the Pure One, beyond even the unchangeable, beyond everything.

9 From Him is born the vital principle. From Him comes the mind. From Him come all organs of the 10 senses. From Him are air, light, water and this earth which holds all beings. These heavens are, as it were, 11 His head; His eyes, the sun and moon. The cardinal points are, as it were, His ears. The eternal knowledge of 12 the Vedas is, as it were, His manifested speech. His life is the air. His heart is this universe; His feet, this 13 world. He is the Eternal Self of every being.

14 From Him have come the different Vedas. From Him have come the gods of the Sâdhyas. The latter are 15 superior men, much higher than ordinary men and very much like the gods.

16 From Him are all men. From Him are all animals. From Him is all life; from Him, all the forces in the 17 mind; from Him all truth, all chastity.

18 The seven organs are all from Him. The seven objects of perception are from him; the seven actions of 19 perception are from Him.

20 From Him are the seven worlds in which the life currents flow. From Him are all these seas and 21 oceans. From Him are all rivers that roll into the sea; from Him are all plants and all liquids.

22 He is the inside. He is the inner Soul of every being. This great Purusha, this great One—He is this 23 universe, He is the work, He is the sacrifice. He is Brahman, and He is the 1 trinity. He who knows Him frees his own soul from the bond of ignorance and becomes free.

2 He is the bright one. He is inside every human soul. From Him are all name and form; all the animals
3 and men are from Him. He is the one Supreme. He who knows Him becomes free.

4 How to know Him? Take this bow, which is the Upanishad, the knowledge of the Vedanta; place upon 5 that bow the sharpened rod [arrow] of worship; stretch that bow by what?—by making the mind of the same 6 form as He, by knowing that you are He. Thus strike at it; strike at that Brahman with this rod.

7 This One is the bow. This human mind is the rod [arrow]. Brahman is the object which we want to hit.
8 This object is to be hit by concentrating the mind. And just when the rod has hit [its mark], the rod
9 penetrates into the object and becomes one with it—a unity. Even so, this soul, the rod, is to be thrown upon 10 the object so that it will become one with It—in Whom are the heavens, this earth and the skies, in Whom are 11 the mind and all that lives.

12 13 In the Upanishads there are certain passages which are called the great words,⁴⁵⁹ which are always 14 quoted and referred to.

15
16 In Him, that One—in Him alone, the Atman—exist all other worlds. What is the use of all other talk?
17 Know Him alone. This is the bridge over this life to reach universality.

18
19 He [Angiras] goes on to show a practical way. So far it is very figurative.

20
21 Just as all the spokes of a wheel meet at the axle, even so in this body is that place from which all the 22 arteries flow and

1 ⁴⁵⁹ ? In each of the four Vedas there is one such "great word", or great utterance, called Mahâvâkya: "Prajnânam Brahma"
2 ("Consciousness is Brahman"); "Aham Brahmâsmi" ("I am Brahman"); "Tat Twam Asi" ("That thou art"); and "Ayam Atmâ Brahma " 3 ("This Self is Brahman").
4

1 at which they all meet. There, meditate upon the Om that is in the heart. May thou succeed.

2 May the gentle one with success attain the goal. May you go beyond all darkness to Him who is 3 omniscient, the All-Knowing. His glory is in heaven, on earth and everywhere.

4 He who has become the mind, the Prânâ, He who is the leader in the body, He who is established in 5 the food, the energy of life. By supreme knowledge the sages see Him whose nature is bliss, who shines as 6 immortality.⁴⁶⁰ (This is another of the sentences very much quoted.)

7
8 There are two words: one is Jnâna, the other Vijnâna. Jnana may be translated as science—this means 9 intellectual [knowledge] only—and Vijnana as realization. God cannot be perceived by intellectual knowledge.
10 He who has realized [the Self] by that supreme knowledge—what will become of that man?

12 All the knots of the heart will be cut asunder. All darkness will vanish forever when you have seen the 13 Truth.

15 How can you doubt? How foolish and childish you will think these fights and quarrels of different 16 sciences and different philosophies and all this. You will smile at them. All doubts will vanish, and all work 17 will go away. All work will vanish.

18
19 Beyond, the golden sheath is there—without any impurity, without parts [indivisible]—He, the Brahman.
20 His is the brightness, the Light of all light—the knowers of the Atman realize Him as such.

21 And when you have done that, the sun cannot illumine, nor the moon, nor the stars. A flash of lightning 22 cannot illumine the place; it is mental—away, deep in the mind. He shining, everything else shines; when He 23 shines within, the whole man shines. This universe shines through His light.

1 ⁴⁶⁰ ? Mundaka Upanishad 2.2.8.
2

1 Take such passages [for memorizing] later on, when studying the Upanishads.

2 The difference between the Hindu mind and the European mind is that whereas in the West truths are 3 arrived at by examining the particular, the Hindu takes the opposite course. There is no [such] metaphysical 4 sublimity as in the Upanishads.

5 It [the Mundaka Upanishad] leads you on, beyond the senses—ininitely more sublime than the suns and 6 stars. First Angiras tried to describe God by sense sublimities—that His feet are the earth, His head the 7 heavens. But that did not express what he wanted to say. It was in a sense sublime. He first gave that idea to 8 the student and then slowly took him beyond, until he gave him the highest idea—the negative—too high to de-9 scribe.

10
11 He is immortal, He is before us, He is behind us, He is on the right side, He is on the left, He is above, 12 He is beneath.

14 Upon the same tree there are two birds with most beautiful wings, and the two birds always go 15 together—always live together. Of these, one is eating the fruits of the tree; the other, without eating, is 16 looking on.

17 So in this body are the two birds always going together. Both have the same form and beautiful wings.
18 One is the human soul, eating the fruits; the other is God Himself, of the same nature. He is also in this body, 19 the Soul of our soul. He eats neither good nor evil fruits, but stands and looks on.

20
21 But the lower bird knows that he is weak and small and humble, and tells all sorts of lies. He says he is 22 a woman, or he is a man or a boy. He says he will do good or do bad; he will go to heaven and will do a 23 hundred sorts of things. In delirium he talks and works, and the central idea of his delirium is that he is 24 weak.

25 Thus he gets all the misery because he thinks he is nobody. He is a created little being. He is a slave to 26 somebody; he is governed by some god or gods, and so is unhappy.

1 But when he becomes joined with God, when he becomes a Yogi, he sees that the other bird, the Lord,
2 is his own glory. "Why, it was my own glory whom I called God, and this little "I", this misery, was all 3 hallucination; it never existed. I was never a woman, never a man, never any one of these things." Then he 4 gives up all his sorrow.

5
6 When this Golden One, who is to be seen, is seen—the Creator, the Lord, the Purusha, the God of this 7 universe

8 —then the sage has washed off all stains of good and bad deeds. (Good deeds are as much stains as bad 9 deeds.) Then he attains to total sameness with the Pure One.

10 The sage knows that He who is the Soul of all souls—this Atman—shines through all.

11
12 He is the man, the woman, the cow, the dog—in all animals, in the sin and in the sinner. He is the 13 Sannyâsin, He is in the ruler, He is everywhere.

15 Knowing this the sage speaks not. (He gives up criticizing anyone, scolding anyone, thinking evil of 16 anyone.) His desires have gone into the Atman. This is the sign of the greatest knowers of Brahman—that 17 they see nothing else but Him.

18
19 He is playing through all these things. Various forms—

20 from the highest gods to the lowest worms—are all He. The ideas want to be illustrated.

21 First of all the writer showed us the idea that if we want to get to heaven and all these places, we will 22 get there. That is to say, in the language of the Vedas, whatever one desires that he sees.

23 As I have told you in previous lectures, the Atman neither comes nor goes. It has neither birth nor 24 death. You are all omnipresent, you are the Atman. You are at this moment in heaven and in the darkest 25 places too. You are everywhere. Where are you not? Therefore how can you go anywhere? These comings 26 and goings are all fictions—the Atman can never come nor go.

1 These visions change. When the mind is in a particular condition it sees a certain vision, dreams a 2 certain dream. So in this condition, we are all seeing this world and man and animals and all these things.
3 But in this very place, this condition will change. And the very thing we are seeing as earth, we shall see as 4 heaven, or we may see it as the opposite place or as any place we like.

5 All this depends on our desires. But this dream cannot be permanent, just as we know that any dream
6 in the night must break. Not one of these dreams will be permanent. We dream that which we think we will 7 do. So these people who are always thinking in this life of going to heaven and meeting their friends, will 8 have that as soon as their dream of this life is ended. And they will be compelled by their desires of this life 9 to see these other dreams. And those who are superstitious and are frightened into all such ideas as hell will 10 dream that they are in the hot place. Those whose ideas in this life are brutal—when they die, will become 11 pigs and hogs and all these things. With each one, what he desires he finds.

12 This book starts by telling us that those who know nothing better than a little road-making or 13 hospital-building and such good works will have a good dream when they die. They will dream that they are 14 in a place where they will have god-bodies and can eat anything they like, jump about, go through walls and 15 so on, and sometimes come down and startle someone.

16 In our mythology there are the Devas, who live in heaven, and the Devakas, who are very much the 17 same but a little more wicked. The Devas are like your angels, only some of them from time to time become 18 wicked and find that the daughters of men are good. Our deities are celebrated for this sort of thing. What 19 can you expect of them? They are here—simply hospital-makers—and have no more knowledge than other 20 men. They do some good work with the result that they become Devas. They do their good work for fame or 21 name or some reward and get this reward, dreaming that they are in heaven and doing all these things.

22 Then there are demons who have done evil in this life. But our books say that these dreams will not 23 last very long, and then they will either come back and take the old dream again as hu-

1 man beings, or still worse. Therefore, according to these books, it behooves every sensible, 2 right-thinking man, once and for all, to brush aside all such foolish ideas as heavens and hells.

3 Two things exist in the world—dream and reality. What we call life is a succession of dreams—dream
4 within dream. One dream is called heaven, another earth, another hell, and so on. One dream is called the 5 human body, another the animal body, and so on—all are dreams. The reality is what is called Brahman, that 6 Being who is Existence, Knowledge, Bliss.

7 He is the Guru—the sage who wants to get rid of all these dreams, to stand aside and know his own 8 nature—who wants to go beyond this self-hypnotism.

9 When we desire, we are hypnotizing ourselves. Just as I desire "I will go to heaven", that hypnotizes
10 me, and I begin to find I am in heaven directly I die, and will see angels and all sorts of things. I have seen 11 about fifty people who have come from death's door, and they all have told me stories about being in heaven.
12 These are the mythologies of our country, and it shows that it is all hypnotism.

13 Where Western people make a great mistake is here. So far as you have these ideas of heaven and 14 hell, we agree with you. But you say this earth is real. That cannot be. If this is real, heavens and hells are 15 real, because the proof of each of these is the same. If one is a hypnotic condition, the whole of it must be so.

16 Vedantists say that not only are heavens hypnotic, but so is this life and everything here. Some people 17 want to go from one hypnotic condition to another, and these are what we call the fools of the world—the 18 Samsârin, the travellers who go from dream to dream, from one hypnotic trance to another. For fifty years 19 they are under the idea that they are men and women.

20 What nonsense is [this—] a man or a woman in the soul? It is terrible hypnotism. How can the soul have 21 any sex? It is self-hypnotism. You have hypnotized yourself and think you are men and women. If we are 22 fools, we will again hypnotize ourselves and want to go to heaven, and hear all this trash of gods and 23 goddesses and all sorts of humbug, and will kneel down and pray, and have god-bodies by the millions to 24 worship on thrones. At the end, we have to hypnotize ourselves again.

1 We are all in the same boat here, and all who are in the same boat see each other. Stand aside—free, 2 beyond dream and hypnotism. Some fools have hypnotized themselves that they have bodies and wives and 3 all these things. I also am a fool and have hypnotized myself that I have senses and all these things. So we 4 are all in the same boat and see each other. Millions of people may be here whom we do not see, touch or 5 feel. Just as in hypnotism there may be three books before you, but you are hypnotized and are told that one 6 of them does not exist. And you may live for a year in that condition and never see it. Suppose thirty men are 7 under the same hypnotic influence and are told that this book does not exist. Those who are in this condition 8 will all fail to see the book. Men, women, animals are all hypnotized, and all see this dream because they are 9 all in the same boat.

10 The Vedanta philosophy says that this whole universe—
11 mental, physical, moral—is hypnotic. Who is the cause of this hypnotism? You yourself are to blame.
12 This weeping and wailing and knocking your heads into corners [against brick walls, as it were] will not do 13 you the least good.

14 However, knocking everything [that is hypnotic] on the head [leads to] what is called non-attachment;
15 and clinging to more and more hypnotism is attachment. That is why in all religions you will find they wanted 16 to give up the world, although many of them do not understand it. These fellows used to starve themselves in 17 a forest and see the devil coming to them.

18 You have heard those wonderful stories of India—of how those magicians can make a man see a rope
19 rise from the ground to the skies. I have not seen any of them. One of the Mogul emperors, Jahangir, 20 mentions it. He says, "Allah, what do these devils do? They take a rope or a chain, and the chain is thrown up 21 and up until it becomes firm—as if it were stuck to something. Then they let a cat go up the chain—then a dog, 22 then a wolf, then a tiger, then a lion. All walk up the chain and vanish. Sometimes they will send men up the 23 chain. Two men will go up and begin to fight, and then both of them vanish. And after a while you hear a 24 noise of fighting—and [then] a head, a hand, and a foot fall. And, mind you, there are two or three thousand

1 people present. The fellow showing it has only a loincloth on". They say this is hypnotism—throwing a 2 net over the audience.

3 That is what they call their science. It exists within a certain limit. But if you go beyond this limit or 4 come within it, you do not see it. The man who is playing does not see anything. So if you stand near him, you 5 do not see anything. Such is the hypnotism here.

6 So we have first to get beyond the circle (Jnana) or stand within the circle of the hypnotism (Bhakti)
7 with God, the great Player who is playing all these things—the whole universe He projects.

8 Chapter after chapter comes and goes. This is called Mâyâ, the power which creates all these 9 tremendous things. He who is the ruler of this Maya, is God; and he who is ruled by Maya [is the soul]. Just 10 as in the case of that chain—so the man who was standing in the centre had the power and was not deluded, 11 but all that audience was governed by Maya. So that portion of Atman which rules Maya is called God, and 12 the little bits of the Atman deluded by it are called souls—you and I.

13 The Bhakta says, Crawl nearer and nearer to the hypnotist, and when you get to the centre you do not 14 see anything. You get clear of it.

15 The Jnâni does not care to undergo all this trouble—it is a dangerous way. Unless a man becomes a 16 lunatic, when he finds himself covered with mud, will he take more mud to wash himself? So why increase 17 the hypnotism? Get out of the circle; cut it off and be free. When you are free you will be able to play, even 18 without being caught yourself. Now you are caught, then you will catch—that will be all the difference.

19 Therefore in the first part of this book, we are told that we must give up all this idea of heaven and of 20 birth and death and so on. It is all nonsense; no man was ever born or ever died. They are all in hypnotism.
21 So is eternal life and all this nonsense. Heaven is hypnotism and so is earth.

22 It is not as materialists say: that heaven is a superstition and God is a superstition, but he himself is 23 not a superstition. If one

1 is superstition—if one link is nonexistent—the whole chain is nonexistent. The existence of the whole 2 chain depends on the existence of one link—and that of one link, on the whole.

3 If there is no heaven, there is no earth; and if there is no God, there is no man. You are under this 4 hypnotism; and as long as you are under it, you will have to see God and nature and the soul. And when you 5 are beyond this hypnotism, God will vanish⁴⁶¹—so will nature, and so will the soul.

6 Therefore, first of all, we will have to give up all these ideas of God and heaven and enjoying the fruits 7 of these; and all that going to heaven will be one more dream.

8 Next, after showing these things, the book goes on to tell us how to get out of this hypnotism. And the 9 one idea that is brought out through all these ideas is to be one with that Universal Being. The thing
10 manifested—the Universal Being—is not anything of these; these are all nonsense—Maya.⁴⁶² But that upon 11 which all these things are being played—the background upon which all this picture is written—[is we 12 ourselves]; we are one with Him [that Universal Being]. You know you are one with Him, only you must 13 realize it.

14 He gave us two words: one is intellectual knowledge, and the other is realization. That is to say, 15 intellectual assent is within this realization, and realization is beyond it. Therefore intellectual assent is not 16 sufficient.

17 Every man can say this theory is right, but that is not realization; he must realize it. We can all say we 18 understand that this is hypnotism, but that is not realization. That will be when the hypnotism will 19 break—even for a moment. It will come in a flash; it must come. If you struggle it will come.

20 When it does vanish, all idea of body will go along with it—that you have sex or body—just as a lamp
21 blows out. Then what will become of you? If some part of your Karma remains, this world will come back 22 again—but not with the same force. You have known that it is what it is; you will know no more

1 bondage. So long as you have eyes you will have to see; or ears [you will have to] hear—but not with the 2 same force.

3 I had read all sorts of things about the mirage, but had never seen it before until about four years ago
4 when I was travelling in western India. Of course, as a Sannyasin I was travelling on foot, making my slow
5 marches. So it took me about a month to travel through that country. Every day I saw such beautiful lakes 6 and the shadows of trees on the shores of those lakes, and the whole thing was quivering in the breeze—and 7 birds flying, and animals. Every day I saw this and thought what a beautiful country it was. But when I 8 reached some village, I found it was all sand. I said, How is it?

9 One day I was very thirsty and thought I would drink a little water at the lake. But when I approached, 10 it disappeared, and with a flash [the thought] came into my mind: "This is the mirage about which I read all 11 my life". But the strange thing is that I was travelling for a month and could never recognize that it was a 12 mirage—and in one moment it vanished. I was very glad to know this was the mirage about which I had read 13 all my life.

14 Next morning I saw the lake again, and along with it came the idea: "That is the mirage". All that 15 month I had been seeing the mirage and could not distinguish between reality and mirage. But in that one 16 moment I caught the idea.

17 From that time, when I see a mirage, I will say, "That is a mirage", and never feel it. Such will it be 18 with this world when the whole thing will vanish once; and after that, if you have to live out your past work, 19 you will not be deceived.

20 Take a carriage with two wheels. Suppose I cut one of the wheels from the axle. The other wheel will 21 run for some time by its past momentum and will then fall. The body is one wheel, and the soul another; and 22 they are joined by the axle of delusion. Knowledge is the axe which will cut the axle, and the soul will stop 23 immediately—will give up all these vain dreams.

24 But upon the body is that past momentum, and it will run a little, doing this and that, and then it will 25 fall down. But only good momentum will be left, and that body can only do good. This is to warn you not to 26 mistake a rascal for a free man. It

1 will be impossible for that [free] man to do evil. So you must not be cheated.

2 When you become free the whole hypnotism has vanished and you know the distinction between the 3 reality and the mirage. [The mirage] will no more be a bondage. The most terrible things will not be able to 4 daunt you. A mountain [could] fall upon you, but you will not care. You will know it for a mirage.

1 history of the aryan race⁴⁶³

3 [A Jnâna-Yoga class delivered in London, England, on Thursday morning, May 7, 1896, and recorded
4 by Mr. Josiah J. Goodwin]

5 I have told you how I would divide the subject into four Yogas, but, as the bearing of all these various 6 Yogas is the same—the goal they want to arrive at is the same—I had better begin with the philosophical 7 portion: the Jnana-Yoga. Jnâna means knowledge, and, before going into the principles of the Vedanta 8 philosophy, I think it is necessary to sketch in a few words the origin and the beginning and the 9 development—the historical portion of that system. Most of you are now familiar with the words Arya and 10 Aryan, and many things have been written on these words.

11 About a century ago there was an English judge in Bengal, Sir William Jones. In India, you know, there 12 are Mohammedans and Hindus. The Hindus were the original people, and the Mohammedans came and 13 conquered them and ruled over them for seven hundred years. There have been many other conquests in 14 India; and whenever there is a new conquest, the criminal laws of the country are changed. The criminal law 15 is always the law of the conquering nation, but the civil law remains the same. So when the English 16 conquered India, they changed the criminal law; but the civil law remained. The judges, however, were 17 Englishmen and did not know the language of the country in which the civil laws were written, and so they 18 had to take the help of interpreters, lawyers of India, and so on. And when any question about Indian law 19 arose, these scholars would be referred to.

20 One of these judges, Sir William Jones, was a very ripe scholar, and he wanted to go to the 21 fountain-head himself, to take up the language himself and study it, instead of relying

1 ⁴⁶³ ? Vedanta Society of Northern California archives. Vide New Discoveries, Vol. 4, pp. 154-56 for extracts of this class.
2

1 upon these interpreters who, for instance, might be bribed to give any verdict. So he began to study
2 the law of the Gentoos, as the Hindus were called. Gentoo is probably a form of the word gentile, used by the 3 Portuguese and Spaniards—or "heathen", as you call it now. When the judge began to translate some of the 4 books into English, he found that it was very hard to translate them correctly into English at first hand. What 5 was his surprise when he found that if he translated them first into Latin, and next into English, it was much 6 easier. Then he found in translating that a large number of Sanskrit words were almost the same as in Latin.
7 It was he who introduced the study of Sanskrit to the Europeans. Then as the Germans were rising in 8 scholarship—as well as the French—they took up the language and began to study it.

9 With their tremendous power of analysis, the Germans found that there was a similarity between 10 Sanskrit and all the European languages. Among the ancient languages, Greek was the nearest to it in 11 resemblance. Later, it was found that there was a language called Lithuanian, spoken somewhere on the 12 shores of the Baltic—an independent kingdom at that time and unconnected with Russia. The language of the 13 Lithuanians is strikingly similar to Sanskrit. Some of the Lithuanian sentences are less changed from 14 Sanskrit forms than the northern Indian languages. Thus it was found that there is an intimate connection 15 between all the various languages spoken in Europe and the two Asiatic languages—Persian and Sanskrit.
16 Many theories are built upon it as to how this connection came. Theories were built up every day, and every 17 day smashed. There is no knowing where it is going to stop.

18 Then came the theory that there was one race in ancient times who called themselves Aryans. They 19 found in Sanskrit literature that there was a people who spoke Sanskrit and called themselves Aryans, and 20 this is mentioned also in Persian literature. Thus they founded the theory that there was in ancient times a 21 nation [of people] who called themselves Aryans and who spoke Sanskrit and lived in Central Asia. This 22 nation, they said, broke into several branches and migrated to Europe and Persia; and wherever they went, 23 they took their own languages.

1 German, Greek and French are but remnants of an old tongue, and Sanskrit is the most highly 2 developed of these languages.

3 These are theories and have not been proved yet; they are mere conjectures and guesses. Many 4 difficulties come in the way

5 –for instance, how the Indians are dark and the Europeans are fair. Even within the same nations 6 speaking these languages—in England itself—there are many with yellow hair and many with black. Thus 7 there are many questions which have not yet been settled.

8 But this is certain, that all the nations of Europe except the Basques, the Hungarians, the Tartars and 9 the [Finns?]⁴⁶⁴—ex-

10 cepting these, all the Europeans, all the northern Indians and the Persians speak branches of the same 11 language. Vast masses of literature are existing in all these Aryan tongues: in Greek, in Latin, in modern 12 European languages—German, English, French—in ancient Persian, in modern Persian and in Sanskrit.

13 But in the first place, Sanskrit literature alone is a very big mass. Although, perhaps, three-fourths of it 14 has been destroyed and lost through successive invasions, yet, I think, the sum total of the amount of 15 literature in Sanskrit would outbalance any three or four European languages taken together, in number of 16 books. No one knows how many books are there yet and where they are, because it is the most ancient of all 17 these Aryan languages. And that branch of the Aryan race which spoke the Sanskrit language was the first to 18 become civilized and the first to begin to write books and literature. So they went on for thousands of years.
19 How many thousands of years they wrote no one knows. There are various guesses—from 3000 B.C. to 8000
20 B.C.—but all of these dates are more or less uncertain.

21 Each man in writing about these ancient books and dates is first of all prejudiced by his earlier
22 education, then by his religion, then by his nationality. If a Mohammedan writes about the Hindus, anything 23 that does not glorify his own religion he very scrupulously pushes to one side. So with the Christians—

24 you can see that with your own writers. In the last ten years your literature has become more 25 respectable. So long as they [the Christians] had full play, they wrote in English and were

1 ⁴⁶⁴ ? Vide Complete Works, VIII: 241.
2

1 safe from Hindu criticism. But, within the last twenty years, the Hindus have begun writing in English, 2 so they are more careful. And you will find that the tone has quite changed within the last ten or twenty 3 years.

4 Another curiosity about the Sanskrit literature is that it, like any other language, has undergone many 5 changes. Taking all the literature in these various Aryan languages—the Greek or the Latin or all these 6 others—we find that all the European branches were of very recent date. The Greek came much later

7 –a mere child in comparison with the Egyptian or the Babylonian.

8 The Egyptians and the Babylonians, of course, are not Aryans. They are separate races, and their 9 civilizations antedate all the European civilization. But with the exception of the ancient Egyptians, they were 10 almost coeval [with the Aryans]; in some accounts, they were even earlier. Yet in Egyptian literature, there 11 are certain things to be accounted for—the introduction of the Indian lotus on old temples, the lotus Gangetic.
12 It is well known that this only grows in India. Then there are the references to the land of Punt. Although 13 very great attempts have been made to fix that land of Punt on the Arabs, it is very uncertain. And then there 14 are the references to the monkeys and sandalwood of southern India—only to be found there.

15 The Jews were of a much later date than the Greek Aryans. Only one branch of the Semitic race of 16 Babylon and this nondescript, unknowable race—the Egyptians—were much older than the Aryans, except the 17 Hindus.

18 So this Sanskrit has undergone very much change as a matter of course, having been spoken and 19 written through thousands of years. It necessarily follows that in other Aryan languages, as in Greek and 20 Roman, the literature must be of much later date than Sanskrit. Not only so, but there is this peculiarity, that 21 of all regular books that we have in the world, the oldest are in Sanskrit—and that is the mass of literature 22 called the Vedas. There are very ancient pieces in the Babylonian or Egyptian literature, but they cannot be 23 called literature or books, but just a few notes, a short letter, a few words, and so on. But as finished, 24 cultured literature, the Vedas are the oldest.

1 These Vedas were written in the peculiar archaic Sanskrit, and for a long time—even today—it is 2 thought by many European antiquarians that these Vedas were not written, but were handed down by father
3 to son, learned by rote, and thus preserved. Within the last few years, opinion is veering round, and they are 4 beginning to think that they must have been written in most ancient times.

5 Of course they have to make theories in this way. Theory after theory will have to be built up and 6 destroyed until we reach truth. This is quite natural. But when the subject is Indian or Egyptian, the 7 Christian philosophers rush in to make theories; while if the subject is nearer home, they think twice first.
8 That is why they fail so much and have to keep on making fresh theories every five years. But this much is 9 true, that this mass of literature, whether written or not, was conveyed and, not only that, but is at the 10 present day conveyed by word of mouth. This is thought to be holy.

11 You find in every nation when a new idea, a new form, a new discovery or invention comes in, the old
12 things are not brushed aside all at once, but are relegated to the religion of holiness. The ancient Hindus 13 used to write on palm leaves and birch bark; and when paper was invented they did not throw aside all the 14 palm leaves, but used to consider writing on palm leaves and birch bark holy. So with the Jews—they used to 15 write only on parchment, and parchment is now used for writing in their temples. So you find when new 16 customs come in, the old ones become holy. So this form of transmitting the literature of the Vedas from 17 teacher to disciple by word of mouth, although antiquated and almost useless now, has become holy. The 18 student may refresh his memory by books, but has to learn by word of mouth of a teacher. A great many 19 modifications will always gather round such a fact to make its holiness more rational, but this is the law.

20 These Vedas are a vast mass of literature by themselves. That is to say, in those ancient times, in every 21 country, religion was the first ideal to spring out of the heart of man, and all the secular knowledge that men 22 got was made over to religion.

23 Secondly, people who deal with religion and in later times came to be called priests—being the first 24 thinkers of every

1 nation—not only thought about religious subjects, but secular matters also; and, as such, all knowledge
2 was confined to them. These masses of knowledge—both secular and religious—will always be gathered 3 together and made into a vast mass of literature.

4 In much later times, this is the case. For instance, in studying the Bible of the Jews, we find the same 5 thing. The Talmud contained a vast mass of information on all subjects and so did the Pentateuch. In the 6 same way, the Vedas give information on various subjects. They have come together and form one book. And 7 in later times, when other subjects were separated from religion—when astronomy and astrology were taken 8 out of religion—these subjects, being connected with the Vedas and being ancient, were considered very holy.

9 Almost the largest portion of the Vedas has been lost. The priests who carried it down to posterity
10 were divided into so many families; and, accordingly, the Vedas were divided into so many parts. Each part 11 was allotted to a family. The rituals, the ceremonies, the customs, the worship of that family were to be 12 obtained from that [respective] portion of the Vedas. They preserved it and performed all the ceremonies 13 according to that. In course of time, [some of] these families became extinct; and with them, their portion of 14 the Vedas was lost, if these old accounts be true.

15 Some of you know that the Vedas are divided into four parts. One is called the Rig-Veda, another 16 Yajur-Veda, another Sâma-Veda, and the fourth Atharva-Veda. Each one of these, again, was divided into 17 many branches. For instance, the Sama-Veda had one thousand branches, of which only about five or six 18 remain; the rest are all lost. So with the others. The Rig-Veda had 108, of which only one remains; and the 19 rest are all lost.

20 Then [there were] these various invasions. India has been the one country to which every nation that 21 has become strong wants to go and conquer—it being reputed to be very rich. The wealth of the people had 22 become a fable, even in the most ancient history. [Many foreign invaders] rushed to become wealthy in India
23 and conquered the country. Every one of these invasions destroyed one or more of these families, burned 24 many

1 libraries and houses. And when that was so, much literature was lost. It is only within the last few 2 years that ideas have begun to spring up about the retention of these various religions and books. Before
3 that, mankind had to suffer all this pillaging and breaking down. Most stupendous creations of art were lost 4 forever. Wonderful buildings—where, from a few bits of remnants now in India, it can be imagined how 5 wonderful they were—are completely gone.

6 . . . [The fanatical belief of many of these invaders into India is] that those who do not belong to their 7 sect have no right to live. They will go to a place where the fire will never be quenched when they die; in this 8 life they are only fit to be made into slaves or murdered; and that they have only the right to live as slaves to 9 "the true believers", but never as free men. So in this way, when these waves burst upon India, everything 10 was submerged. Books and literature and civilization went down.

11 But there is a vitality in that race which is unique in the history of humanity, and perhaps that vitality 12 comes from non-resistance. Non-resistance is the greatest strength. In meekness and mildness lies the 13 greatest strength. In suffering is greater strength than in doing. In resisting one's own passions is far higher 14 strength than in hurting others. And that has been the watchword of the race through all its difficulties, its 15 misfortunes and its prosperity. It is the only nation that never went beyond its frontiers to cut the throats of 16 its neighbours. It is a glorious thing. It makes me rather patriotic to think I am born a Hindu, a descendant of 17 the only race that never went out to hurt anyone, and whose only action upon humanity has been giving and 18 enlightening and purifying and teaching, but never robbing.

19 Three-quarters of the wealth of the world has come out of India, and does even now. The commerce of 20 India has been the turning point, the pivot, of the history of the world. Whatever nation got it became 21 powerful and civilized. The Greeks got it and became the mighty Greeks; the Romans got it and became the 22 mighty Romans. Even in the days of the Phoenicians it was so. After the fall of Rome, the Genoese and the 23 Venetians got it. And then the Arabs rose and created a wall between Venice and India; and in the struggle 24 to find a new way there, America was discovered. That is how America was discovered; and the origi-

1 nal people of America were called Indians, or "Injuns", for that reason. Even the Dutch got it—and the 2 barbarians—and the English and they became the most powerful nation on earth. And the next nation that 3 gets it will immediately be the most powerful.

4 Think of all this mass of energy that our nation displays—

5 where does it get it? In India, they are the producers and you are the enjoyers, no doubt. They 6 produced this—the patient, toiling millions of Hindus under the whip and slavery of everyone. Even the 7 missionaries, who stand up to curse the millions of India, have been fattened upon the work of these millions,
8 and they do not know how it has been done. Upon their blood the history of the world has been turning since 9 we know history, and will have to turn for thousands of years more. What is the benefit? It gives that nation
10 strength. They are, as it were, an example. They must suffer and stand up through all, fighting for the truths 11 of religion—as a signpost, a beacon—to tell unto mankind that it is much higher not to resist, much higher to 12 suffer, that if life be the goal, as even their conquerors will admit, we are the only race that can be called 13 immortal, that can never be killed.⁴⁶⁵

14 Where are the Greeks today—they whose armies marched over the whole world? Gone, thousands of 15 years—nobody knows where. Vanished, as soon as the barbarians of the north came and attacked them.
16 Where are the mighty Romans, whose cohorts came and trampled the face of the earth? Where are they 17 today? Gone—vanished like the morning dew, and left behind in the march.

18 But here are the Hindus—three hundred million strong. And think of the fertility of the race! They can 19 increase more than the whole world can kill them. This is the vitality of the race. Although not belonging very 20 much to our subject, I wanted to bring these things before you.

21 Generally the uneducated minds, the vulgar minds of every nation, like the vulgar mobs in every big 22 city, cannot grasp, cannot see, cannot understand, any fine movement. The causes, the real movements in 23 this world of ours, are very fine; it is ⁴⁶⁵ ? Vide Complete Works, IV: 160.

1 only the effects that are gross and muscular. The mind is the real cause of this body, the fine
2 movements behind. The body is the gross, the external. But everyone sees the body; very few see the mind.
3 So with everything; the masses, the brutal, ignorant masses of every race, see a triumphant procession, 4 stampeding horses, arms and cannonades, and these they understand. But those fine, gentle workings that 5 are going on behind—it is only the philosopher, the highly cultivated man or woman, that can understand.

6 To return to our Vedanta, I have said that the Sanskrit in which the Vedas were written is not the same 7 Sanskrit in which books were written about a thousand years later than the Vedas

8 —the books that you read in your translations of poets and other classical writers of India. The Sanskrit 9 of the Vedas was very simple, archaic in its composition, and possibly it was a spoken language. But the 10 Sanskrit that we have now was never a spoken language, at least for the last three thousand years. Curiously 11 enough, the vast mass of literature was written in a language which was dead, covering a period of three 12 thousand years. Dramas and novels were written in this dead language. And all the time it was not spoken in 13 the homes; it was only the language of the learned.

14 Even in the time of Buddha, which was about 560 years before the Christian era, we find that Sanskrit
15 had ceased to be a spoken language. Some of his disciples wanted to teach in Sanskrit, but the master 16 studiously refused. He wanted to teach in the language [of the people], because he said he was the prophet 17 of the people. And that is how it has come about that the Buddhistic literature is in Pali, which was the 18 vernacular of that time.

19 This vast mass of literature—the Vedas—we find in three groups. The first group is the Samhitâs, a 20 collection of hymns. The second group is called the Brâhmanas, or the [group dealing with different kinds of] 21 sacrifice. The word Brahmana [by usage] means [what is achieved by means of] the sacrifice. And the other 22 group is called the Upanishads (sittings, lectures, philosophic books). Again, the first two parts together—the 23 hymns and the rituals—are called the Karmakânda, the work portion; and the second, or philosophic portion 24 (the Upanishads), is

1 called the Jnânakânda, the knowledge portion. This is the same word as your English word knowledge
2 and the Greek word gnos—just as you have the word in agnostic, and so on.

3 The first portion is a collection of hymns in praise of certain gods, as Agni, fire; Mitra, the sun; and so 4 forth. They are praised and oblations are offered to them. I have said these hymns are to the gods. I have 5 used the word gods until I make you familiar with the Sanskrit word Deva, because the word gods is very 6 misleading. These Devas mean the "bright ones", and gods in India are less persons than positions. For 7 instance, Indra and Agni are not names of particular persons, but particular posts in this universe. There is 8 the post of President, the presiding post over certain elements, the presiding post over certain worlds, and 9 so forth. According to these theologians, you and I—most of us—probably have been some of these gods 10 several times. It is only temporarily that a soul can fill one of these positions. And after his time is over, he 11 gives way; another soul is raised from this world by good works and takes that position

12 —he becomes [for example] Agni. In reading Sanskrit philosophy or theology, people always get 13 bothered by the changing of these gods. But this is the theory—that they are names of positions, that all souls 14 will have to fill them again and again; and these gods, when the soul has attained to that position, can help 15 mankind. So gifts and praise are offered to them. How this idea came to the Aryans we do not know, but in 16 the earliest portion of the Rig-Veda we find this idea perfected and completed.

17 Behind and beyond all these Devas and men and animals and worlds is the Ruler of this universe, 18 Ishvara—somewhat similar to what in the New Testament is called God the Creator, Preserver, the Ruler of 19 this universe. These Devas are not to be confused with Ishvara at all, but in the English language you have 20 the same word for both. You use the word God in the singular and the plural. But the gods are the bright 21 ones—the Devas—and God is Ishvara. This we find even in the oldest portions of the Vedas.

22 Another peculiarity is that this Ishvara, this God, is manifesting Himself in all these various forms of 23 bright ones. This idea—that the same God manifests Himself in various forms—

24 is a very rudimentary idea of the Vedas, even in the oldest por-

1 tions. There was a time when a sort of monotheistic idea entered the Vedas, but it was very quickly
2 rejected. As we go on, perhaps you will agree with me that it was very good that it was rejected.

3 So we find in these oldest portions of the Samhitas that there were these various Devas—[being praised 4 as] the manifestations of someone very much higher than they [had left] behind, so that sometimes each one
5 of them was taken up and adjectives piled on it and at last it was said, "You are the God of the universe".
6 Then such passages as this occurred: "I am God, worshipped as the fire", and so forth. "It is the One; sages 7 call Him variously." "He is that one existence; the sages call Him by various names." This I ask you to 8 remember, because this is the turning point, the key-note of all thought that India has produced—"He is that 9 One Being; sages call Him variously." All Hindu philosophy—either theistic or atheistic or monotheistic, 10 dualistic or nondualistic—has that as the core, the centre. And by thousands of years of culture in the race, it 11 is impossible for the Hindu race to go [away from] that idea.

12 That germ became a big tree; and that is why there was never a religious persecution in India, at least 13 by the Hindus. That explains their liberality and welcome to any religion from any part of the world which 14 came to settle there. That is how, even at the present day, Indian Râjâs go and perform Mohammedan 15 ceremonies and enter Mohammedan mosques, although [some] Mohammedans took the first opportunity to 16 kill a number of "the heathens".

17 "He is the One Being; sages call Him variously."

18 There have been two theories advanced in modern times with regard to the growth of religions. The 19 one is the tribal theory; the other is the spirit theory. The tribal theory is that humanity in its savage state 20 remains divided into many small tribes. Each tribe has a god of its own—or sometimes the same god divided 21 into many forms, as the god of this city came to that city, and so on; Jehovah of this city and of such-and-such 22 mountain [came to such-and-such city or mountain]. When the tribes came together, one of them became 23 strong.

24 Take the case of the Jews. They were divided into so many tribes, and each tribe had a god called 25 either Baal or Moloch,

1 which in your Old Testament is translated as "the Lord". There was the Moloch of this state and that 2 state, of this mountain and that mountain, and there was the Moloch of the chest, who used to live in a chest.
3 This latter tribe became strong and conquered the surrounding tribes and became triumphant. So that 4 Moloch was proclaimed the greatest of all Molochs. "Thou art the Java [?] of the Molochs. Thou art the ruler
5 of all the Baals and Molochs." Yet the chest remained. So this idea was obtained from tribal gods.

6 There is the other theory of Spiritualism—that religion begins with the worship of ancestors. Ancestor 7 worship was among the Egyptians, among the Babylonians, among many other races—the Hindus, the 8 Christians. There is not one form of religion among which there has not been this ancestor worship in some 9 form or other.

10 Before that they thought that this body had a double inside it and that when this body dies the double 11 gets out and lives so long as this body exists. The double becomes very hungry or thirsty, wants food or 12 drink, and wants to enjoy the good things of this world. So he [the double] comes to get food; and if he does 13 not get it, he will injure even his own children. So long as the body is preserved the double will live.
14 Naturally the first attempt, as we see, was to preserve the body, mummify the body, so that the body will live 15 forever.

16 So with the Babylonians was this sort of spirit worship. Later on as the nations advanced, the cruel 17 forms died out and better forms remained. Some place was given to that which is called heaven, and they 18 placed food here so that it might reach the double there. Even now the pious Hindus must, one day a year at 19 least, place food for their ancestors. And the day they leave off [this habit] will be a sorry day for the 20 ancestors. So you also find this ancestor worship to be one cause of religion. There are in modern times 21 philosophers who advance the theory that this has been the root of all religions. There are others who 22 advance the theory that the root of all religions was the tribal assimilation of gods into one.

23 Among the Jews of the Old Testament you do not find any mention of soul. It is only in the Talmud that 24 it is found. They got it from the Alexandrians, and the Alexandrians from the 1 Hindus—just as the Talmud had [developed] later on the idea of transmigration of the soul. But the old

2 Jews had grand ideas of God. The God of the Jews developed into the Great God—the Omnipotent, 3 Omniscient, All-Merciful—and all this came to them from the Hindus, but not through the idea of the soul. So 4 Spiritualism could not have played any part in that, because how could the man who did not believe in any 5 soul after death have anything to do with Spiritualism?

6 On the other hand, in the oldest portion of the Vedas, there is very little of Spiritualism, if anything at 7 all. These Devas [of the Vedas] were not [related to Spiritualism]—although later on they became so; and this 8 idea of Someone behind them, of whom they were manifestations, is in the oldest parts.

9 Another idea is that when the body dies, the soul [which] is immortal remains beatified. The very oldest 10 Aryan literature—

11 whether German or Greek—has this idea of soul. The idea of soul has come from the Hindus.

12 Two people have given all the religion to the world—the Hindus and the Jews. But it is only with the 13 Hindus that the idea of soul comes at first, and that was shared by the Aryan races.

14 The peculiarity you find is that the Semitic races and the Egyptians try to preserve the dead bodies, 15 while the Aryans try to destroy them. The Greeks, the Germans, the Romans—your ancestors before they 16 became Christians—used to burn the dead. It was only when Charlemagne made you Christians with the 17 sword—and when you refused, [he] cut off a few hundred heads, and the rest jumped into the water—that 18 burying came here. You see at once the metaphysical significance of burning the dead. The burying of the 19 dead⁴⁶⁶ can only remain when there is no idea of the soul, and the body is all. At best there came the idea 20 later on that this very body will have another lease of life, after so many years—mummies will come out and 21 begin to walk the streets again.

22 But with the Aryans the idea was from the first that the soul is not the body, but would live on. There 23 are some old hymns in the Rig-Veda: when the bodies are burnt they say, "Take him gently, purify him, give 24 him a bright body, take him to the land

1 ⁴⁶⁶ ?

2 Preserving the dead by the burying of the body.
3

1 where the fathers live—where there is no more sorrow and where there is joy forever".⁴⁶⁷

2 It is curious that though in modern times many hideous and cruel forms of religion crept into India, 3 there is one peculiar idea that divides the Aryan from all other races of the world: that their religion, in the 4 Hindu form, accepted this Indra as one [with the Ultimate Reality]. Three-quarters of the mythology of the 5 Vedas is the same as that of the Greeks; only the old gods became saints in the new religion. But they were 6 originally the gods of the Samhitas.

7 One other peculiarity we remark—that it is a cheerful, joyful, at times almost hilarious religion; there is 8 not a bit of pessimism in it. The earth is beautiful, the heavens are beautiful, life is immortal. Even after 9 death they get a still more beautiful body, which has none of the imperfections of this body, and they go to 10 live with the gods and enjoy heaven forever.

11 On the other hand, with the Semitic races, the very first inception of religion was one of horror. A man
12 crouched in his little house for fear. All round his house were those doubles. The family ancestors of the Jews 13 were there, ready to pounce upon anybody and tear him to pieces if bloody sacrifices were not given to them.
14 Even when you find that this [double] idea coagulated into one—"Thou art the Elohim of the Jews, Thou art 15 the Elo[him] of the [Babylonians?]"⁴⁶⁸—even then the idea of sacrifice remained.

16 The idea of sacrifice in India was not with this first portion. But in the next portion we find the same 17 idea in India too, in the Brahmanas. The idea of sacrifice was originally simply giving food [to the gods], but 18 gradually it was raised and raised until it became a sacrifice to God. Philosophy came in to mystify it still 19 more and to spin webs of logic round it. Bloody sacrifices came into vogue. Somewhere we read that three 20 hundred bullocks have been roasted, or the gods are smelling the sacrifices and becoming very glad. Then all 21 sorts of mystical notions got about—how the sacrifice was to be made in the form of a tri-

1 ⁴⁶⁷ ? Rig-Veda 10.16.4.

2
3 ⁴⁶⁸ ? The square brackets in this paragraph mark illegible portions of Mr. Goodwin's original typescript.
4

1 angle or a square, a triangle within a square, a pentagon, and all sorts of figures. But the great benefit
2 was the evolution of geometry. When they had to make all these figures—and it was laid down strictly how 3 many bricks should be used, and how they should be laid, and how big they should be—naturally geometry
4 came [into being]. The Egyptians evolved geometry [by] their [irrigation]—[they] made canals to take the Nile
5 water inside their fields—and the Hindus, by their altars.

6 Now there is another particular difference between the idea of sacrifice in India and [that] of the Jews.
7 The real meaning of sacrifice is worship, a form of worship by oblations. At first it was simply giving food to 8 the bright ones, or the higher beings. They had gross food just as we have. Later on philosophy stepped in 9 and the idea came that they, being higher beings, could not eat the same food as we do. Their bodies are 10 made of finer particles. Our bodies cannot pass through a wall; theirs find no resistance in gross material. As 11 such, they cannot be expected to eat in the same gross way as we do.

12
13
14 [Some parts of the transcription of the remaining portion of this lecture, recorded by Mr. J. J. Goodwin, 15 were found in a severely damaged condition. Hence we have reproduced below only the legible fragments as 16 they appeared in the original.]

17
18 . . . "O Indra, I offer you this oblation. O Agni, I offer you this oblation." The answer is that these 19 words have a mystical power in Sanskrit. And when a man, in a certain state of mind, pronounces these 20 words, he sets in motion a set of psychological causes, and these causes produce a certain effect. That is the 21 evolution of thought.

22 To make it clearer, suppose a man was childless and wanted a son. He worshipped Indra, and if he got 23 a son he said Indra gave him the son. Later on they said Indra did not exist. Who, then, gave him the son?
24 The whole thing is a matter of cause and effect. . . .

25 . . . They said it was not giving the gods food, but simply laying my sins upon the head of another 26 victim. "My sins go upon the goat's head, and, if the goat be killed, my sins are for-

1 given." That idea of sacrifice of the Jews never entered India, and perhaps that has saved us many a 2 pang, many a trouble.

3 Human nature is selfish, and the vast majority of men and women weak; and to teach vicarious
4 sacrifice makes us more and more weak. Every child is taught that he is nothing until the poor fellow
5 becomes hypnotized into nothing. He goes in search of somebody to cling onto, and never thinks of clinging 6 to himself. . . .⁴⁶⁹

10 The name of Swami's master was Ramakrishna Paramahansa. The signification of Vivekananda is 11 conscious bliss.

12 Meditation is a sort of prayer and prayer is meditation. The highest meditation is to think of nothing. If 13 you can remain one moment without thought, great power will come. The whole secret of knowledge is 14 concentration. Soul best develops itself by loving God with all the heart. Soul is the thinking principle in man, 15 of which mind is a function. Soul is only the conduit from Spirit to mind.

16 All souls are playing, some consciously, some unconsciously. Religion is learning to play consciously.

17 The Guru is your own higher Self.

18 Seek the highest, always the highest, for in the highest is eternal bliss. If I am to hunt, I will hunt the 19 rhinoceros. If I am to rob, I will rob the treasury of the king. Seek the highest.

1 the essence of Knowledge, of Existence and of Bliss. Why weepest thou, Brother? Neither death nor 2 disease for thee. Why weepest thou, Brother? Neither misery nor misfortune for thee. Why weepest thou, 3 Brother? Neither change nor death was predicated of thee. Thou Art Existence Absolute.

4 I know what God is; I cannot speak [of] Him to you. I know not [what] God is; how can I speak [of] Him
5 to you? But seest not thou, my brother, that thou wert He, thou wert He? Why go seeking God here and 6 there? Seek not, and that is God. Be your own Self–One that cannot be confessed or described, One that can 7 be perceived in our heart of hearts. One beyond all compare, beyond limit, unchangeable like the blue sky.
8 Oh! learn the All Holy One. Seek for nothing else.

9 Where changes of nature cannot reach, thought beyond all thought, unchangeable, immovable, whom 10 all books declare, all sages worship, O Holy One! Seek for nothing else.

11 Beyond compare, Infinite Oneness–no comparison is possible. Water above, water beneath, water on 12 the right, water on the left. No wave on that water, no ripple. All silence, all eternal bliss. Such will come to 13 thy heart. Seek for nothing else. Thou art our father, our mother, our dear friend. Thou bearest the burden of 14 this world. Help us to bear the burden of our lives. Thou art our friend, our lover, our husband. Thou art 15 ourselves.

16 Four sorts of people worship Me. Some want the delights of the physical world. Some want money, 17 some want religion. Some worship Me because they love Me.

19 Real love is love for love's sake. I do not ask health or money or life or salvation. Send me to a 20 thousand hells, but let me love Thee for love's sake. Mirâ Bâi, the great queen, taught the doctrine of love for 21 love's sake.

22 Our present consciousness is only a little bit of an infinite sea of mind. Do not be limited to this 23 consciousness.

24 Three great things [are] to be desired to develop the soul: First, human birth; second, thirst for the 25 highest; third, to find one who has reached the highest—a Mahâtmâ, one whose mind, word and deed are full 26 of the nectar of virtue, whose only plea-

1 sure is in doing good to the universe, who looks upon others' virtues, be they only as a mustard seed, 2 even as though they were a mountain, thus expanding his own self and helping others to expand. Thus is the 3 Mahatma.

4 The word Yoga is the root of which our word yoke is a derivation—meaning "to join"—and Yoga means 5 "joining ourselves with God"—joining me with my real Self.

6 All actions now involuntary or automatic were once voluntary, and our first step is to gain a knowledge 7 of the automatic actions—the real idea being to revivify and make voluntary all automatic actions, to bring 8 them into consciousness. Many Yogis can control the actions of their hearts.

9 To go back into consciousness and bring out things we have forgotten is ordinary power, but this can 10 be heightened. All knowledge—all that—can be brought out of the inner consciousness, and to do this is Yoga.
11 The majority of actions and thoughts is automatic, or acting behind consciousness. The seat of automatic 12 action is in the medulla oblongata and down the spinal cord.

13 The question is, how to find our way back to our inner consciousness. We have come out through spirit, 14 soul, mind, and body, and now we must go back from body to spirit. First, get hold of the air [breath], then 15 the nervous system, then the mind, then the Atman, or spirit. But in this effort we must be perfectly sincere 16 in desiring the highest.

17 The law of laws is concentration. First, concentrate all the nerve energies and all power lodged in the 18 cells of the body into one force and direct it at will. Then bring the mind, which is thinner matter, into one 19 center. The mind has layer after layer. When the nerve force concentrated is made to pass through the spinal 20 column, one layer of the mind is open. When it is concentrated in one bone [plexus, or "lotus"], another part 21 of the world is open. So from world to world it goes until it touches the pineal gland in the center of the 22 brain. This is the seat of conservation of potential energy, the source of both activity and passivity.

23 Start with the idea that we can finish all experience in this world, in this incarnation. We must aim to 24 become perfect in this life, this very moment. Success only comes to that life

1 amongst men who wants to do this, this very moment. It is acquired by him who says, "Faith, I wait
2 upon faith come what may". Therefore, go on knowing you are to finish this very moment. Struggle hard and 3 then if you do not succeed, you are not to blame. Let the world praise or blame you. Let all the wealth of the 4 earth come to your feet, or let you be made the poorest on earth. Let death come this moment or hundreds of 5 years hence. Swerve not from the path you have taken. All good thoughts are immortal and go to make 6 Buddhas and Christs.

7 Law is simply a means of [your] expression [of] various phenomena brought into your mind. Law is 8 your method of grasping material phenomena and bringing them into unity. All law is finding unity in variety.
9 The only method of knowledge is concentration on the physical, mental, and spiritual planes; and 10 concentrating the powers of the mind to discover one in many, is what is called knowledge.

11 Everything that makes for unity is moral, everything that makes for diversity is immoral. Know the One 12 without a second, that is perfection. The One who manifests in all is the basis of the universe; and all 13 religion, all knowledge, must come to this point.

17 Everything progresses in waves. The march of civilization, the progression of worlds, is in waves. All 18 human activities likewise progress in waves—art, literature, science, religion.

19 Great waves succeed each other, and between these great waves is a quiet, a calm, a period of rest, a

21 All manifest life seems to require a period of sleep, of calm, in which to gain added strength, renewed

1 life—in waves, successive waves, [of] activity and repose. Waves succeed each other in an endless chain of 2 progression.

3 Religion, like everything else, progresses in waves; and at the summit of each great wave stands an 4 illumined soul, a mighty spiritual leader and teacher of men. Such a one was Jesus of Nazareth.

1 mohammed's message to the world⁴⁷³

3 San Francisco lecture delivered Sunday, March 25, 1900]

4 Mohammed

5 [After stating that he would "take Mohammed and bring out the particular work of the great Arabian 6 prophet", Swami Viveka-nanda continued his lecture.]

7
8 Each great messenger not only creates a new order of things, but is himself the creation of a certain 9 order of things. There is no such thing as an independent, active cause. All causes are cause and effect in 10 turn. Father is father and son in turn. Mother is mother and daughter in turn. It is necessary to understand 11 the surroundings and circumstances into which they [the great messengers] come. . . .

12 This is the peculiarity of civilization. One wave of a race will go from its birthplace to a distant land and 13 make a wonderful civilization. The rest will be left in barbarism. The Hindus came into India and the tribes of 14 Central Asia were left in bar-barism. Others came to Asia Minor and Europe. Then, you remember the 15 coming out of Egypt of the Israelites. Their home was the Arabian desert. Out of that springs a new work.

16 . . . All civilizations grow that way. A certain race becomes civilized. Then comes a nomad race.
17 Nomads are always ready to fight. They come and conquer a race. They bring better blood, stronger 18 physiques. They take up the mind of the conquered race and add that to their body and push civilization still 19 further. One race becomes cultured and civilized until the body is worn out. Then like a whirlwind comes a 20 race strong in the physical, and they take up the arts and the sciences and the mind, and push civilization 21 further. This must be. Otherwise the world would not be.

23 The moment a great man rises, they build a beautiful [mythology] around him. Science and truth is all 24 the religion

1 ⁴⁷³ ?

1 that exists. Truth is more beautiful than any mythology in the world. . . .

2 The old Greeks had disappeared already, the whole nation [lay] under the feet of the Romans who 3 were learning their science and art. The Roman was a barbarian, a conquering man. He had no eye for 4 poetry or art. He knew how to rule and how to get everything centralized into that system of Rome and to 5 enjoy that. That was sweet. And that Roman Empire is gone, destroyed by all sorts of difficulties, luxury, a 6 new foreign religion, and all that. Christianity had been already six hundred years in the Roman Empire. . . .

7 Whenever a new religion tries to force itself upon another race, it succeeds if the race is uncultured. If 8 it [the race] is cultured, it will destroy the [religion]. . . . The Roman Empire was a case in point, and the 9 Persian people saw that. Christianity was another thing with the barbarians in the north. [But] the 10 Christianity of the Roman Empire was a mixture of everything, something from Persia, from the Jews, from 11 India, from Greece, everything.

12 * * * *

13 The race is always killed by [war]. War takes away the best men, gets them killed, and the cowards are 14 left at home. Thus comes the degeneration of the race. . . . Men became small. Why? All the great men 15 became [warriors]. That is how war kills races, takes their best into the battlefields.

16 Then the monasteries. They all went to the desert, to the caves for meditation. The monasteries 17 gradually became the centres of wealth and luxury. . . .

18 The Anglo-Saxon race would not be Anglo-Saxon but for these monasteries. Every weak man was 19 worse than a slave.

20 . . . In that state of chaos these monasteries were centres of light and protection.

21 Where [cultures] differ very much they do not quarrel. All these warring, jarring elements [were 22 originally] all one.

23 In the midst of all this chaos was born the prophet. . . .

class lessons in Meditation
by Swami Vivekananda⁴⁷⁴

[Mr. Frank Rhodehamel's notes of a class delivered in San Francisco, California, on Monday, March 26, 1900]

The first point is the position. Sit with the spine perfectly free, with the weight resting on the hips. The next step is breathing. Breathe in the left nostril and out the right. Fill the lungs full and eject all the breath. Clear the lungs of all impure air. Breathe full and deep. The next thing is to think of the body as luminous, filled with light. The next thing is to concentrate on the base of the spine, not from the outside, but look down the spinal column inside to the base of the spine.

the gita⁴⁷⁵

[Mr. Frank Rhodehamel's notes of a Bhagavad-Gitâ class delivered Thursday, May 24, 1900, in San Francisco, California]

The Gitâ is the gist of the Vedas. It is not our Bible; the Upanishads are our Bible. It [the Gita] is the gist of the Upanishads and harmonizes the many contradictory parts of the Upanishads.

The Vedas are divided into two portions—the work portion and the knowledge portion. The work portion contains ceremonials, rules as to eating, living, doing charitable work, etc. The knowledge came afterwards and was enunciated by kings.

The work portion was exclusively in the hands of the priests and pertained entirely to the sense life. It taught to do good works that one might go to heaven and enjoy eternal happiness. Anything, in fact, that one might want could be provided for him by the work or ceremonials. It provided for all classes of ⁴⁷⁴ ?

New Discoveries, Vol. 6, p. 10.

⁴⁷⁵ ? Ibid., pp. 175-76.

1 people good and bad. Nothing could be obtained through the ceremonials except by the intercession of 2 the priests. So if one wanted anything, even if it was to have an enemy killed, all he had to do was to pay the 3 priest; and the priest through these ceremonials would procure the desired results. It was therefore in the 4 interests of the priests that the ceremonial portion of the Vedas should be preserved. By it they had their 5 living. They consequently did all in their power to preserve that portion intact. Many of these ceremonials 6 were very complicated, and it took years to perform some of them.

7 The knowledge portion came afterwards and was promulgated exclusively by kings. It was called the 8 Knowledge of Kings. The great kings had no use for the work portion with all its frauds and superstitions and 9 did all in their power to destroy it. This knowledge consisted of a knowledge of God, the soul, the universe, 10 etc. These kings had no use for the ceremonials of the priests, their magical works, etc. They pronounced it 11 all humbug; and when the priests came to them for gifts, they questioned the priests about God, the soul, 12 etc., and as the priests could not answer such questions they were sent away. The priests went back to their 13 fathers to enquire about the things the kings asked them, but could learn nothing from them, so they came 14 back again to the kings and became their disciples. Very little of the ceremonials are followed today. They 15 have been mostly done away with, and only a few of the more simple ones are followed today.

16 Then in the Upanishads there is the doctrine of Karma. Karma is the law of causation applied to 17 conduct. According to this doctrine we must work forever, and the only way to get rid of pain is to do good 18 works and thus to enjoy the good effects; and after living a life of good works, die and go to heaven and live 19 forever in happiness. Even in heaven we could not be free from Karma, only it would be good Karma, not 20 bad.

21 The philosophical portion denounces all work however good, and all pleasure, as loving and kissing
22 wife, husband or children, as useless. According to this doctrine all good works and pleasures are nothing 23 but foolishness and in their very nature impermanent. "All this must come to an end sometime, so end it now; 24 it is vain." So says the philosophical portion of the 1 Upanishads. It claims all the pain in the world is caused by ignorance, therefore the cure is knowledge.

2 This idea of one being held down fast by past Karma, or work, is all nonsense. No matter how dense 3 one may be, or how bad, one ray of light will dissipate it all. A bale of cotton, however large, will be utterly 4 destroyed by a spark. If a room has been dark for untold ages, a lamp will end it all. So with each soul, 5 however benighted he may be, he is not absolutely bound down by his past Karma to work for ages to come.
6 "One ray of Divine Light will free him, reveal to him his true nature."

7 Well, the Gita harmonizes all these conflicting doctrines. As to Krishna, whether or not he ever lived, I 8 do not know. "A great many stories are told of him, but I do not believe them."

9 "I doubt very much that he ever lived and think it would be a good thing if he never did. There would 10 have been one less god in the world."

11 The Gitâ—I⁴⁷⁶

12
13 [Mr. Frank Rhodehamel's notes of a Bhagavad-Gitâ lecture de-14 livered Saturday, May 26, 1900, in San Francisco, California]

15
16 The Gitâ is to the Hindus what the New Testament is to the Christians. It is about five thousand years
17 old, and the day of religious celebrations with the Hindus is the anniversary of the Battle of Kurukshetra 18 about five thousand years ago. As I said, the Vedas are divided into two great divisions, the philosophical and 19 the Karmakânda, or work portion.

20 Between the kings, who promulgated the philosophic portion, and the priests a great conflict arose.
21 The priests had the people on their side because they had all the utility which appealed to the popular mind.
22 The kings had all the spirituality and none of the economic element; but as they were powerful and the rulers 23 of the nation, the struggle was a hard and bitter

1 ⁴⁷⁶ ? New Discoveries, Vol. 6, pp. 205-7.

2 Cf. Ida Ansell's notes of "The Gita I", Complete Works, I: 446-58.

1 one. The kings gradually gained a little ground, but their ideas were too elevated for the masses, so the 2 ceremonial, or work portion, always had the mass of the people.

3 Always remember this, that whenever a religious system gains ground with the people at large, it has a 4 strong economic side to it. It is the economic side of a religion that finds lodgement with the people at large,
5 and never its spiritual, or philosophic, side. If you should preach the grandest philosophy in the streets for a 6 year, you would not have a handful of followers. But you could preach the most arrant nonsense, and if it had 7 an economic element, you would have the whole people with you.

8 None knows by whom the Vedas were written; they are so ancient. According to the orthodox Hindus, 9 the Vedas are not the written words at all, but they consist of the words themselves orally spoken with the 10 exact enunciation and intonation. This vast mass of religion has been written and consists of thousands upon 11 thousands of volumes. Anyone who knows the precise pronunciation and intonation knows the Vedas, and no
12 one else. In ancient times certain royal families were the custodians of certain parts of the Vedas. The head 13 of the family could repeat every word of every volume he had, without missing a word or an intonation.
14 These men had giant intellects, wonderful memories.

15 The strictly orthodox believers in the Vedas, the Karmakanda, did not believe in God, the soul or 16 anything of the sort, but that we as we are were the only beings in the universe, material or spiritual. When 17 they were asked what the many allusions to God in the Vedas mean, they say that they mean nothing at all; 18 that the words properly articulated have a magical power, a power to create certain results. Aside from that 19 they have no meaning.

20 Whenever you suppress a thought, you simply press it down out of sight in a coil, like a spring, only to 21 spring out again at a moment's notice with all the pent up force as the result of the suppression, and do in a 22 few moments what it would have done in a much longer period.

23 Every ounce of pleasure brings its pound of pain. It is the same energy that at one time manifests itself 24 as pleasure and at another time as pain. As soon as one set of sensations stops,

1 another begins. But in some cases, in more advanced persons, one may have two, yes, or even a
2 hundred different thoughts enter into active operation at the same time. When one thought is suppressed, it 3 is merely coiled up ready to spring forth with pent up fury at any time.

4 "Mind is of its own nature. Mind activity means creation. The thought is followed by the word, and the 5 word by the form. All of this creating will have to stop, both mental and physical, before the mind can reflect 6 the soul."

7 "My old master⁴⁷⁷ could not write his own name without making a mistake. He made three mistakes in 8 spelling, in writing his own name."

9 "Yet that is the kind of man at whose feet I sat."

10 "You will break the law of nature but once, and it will be the last time. Nature will then be nothing to 11 you."

14

15 [The following numbered paragraphs are correlated with the preceding numbered sentences.] 16

17 4. The Christian believes that Jesus Christ died to save him. With you it is belief in a doctrine, and this 18 belief constitutes your salvation. With us, doctrine has nothing whatever to do with salvation. Each one may 19 believe in whatever doctrine he likes or in no doctrine. With us realization is religion, not doctrine. What 20 difference does it make to you whether Jesus Christ lived at a certain time? What has it to do with you that 21 Moses saw God in a burning bush? The fact that Moses saw God in the burning bush does not constitute your 22 seeing Him, does it? If it does, then the fact that Moses ate is enough for you; you ought to stop eating. One 23 is just as sensible as the other. Records of great spiritual men of the past do us no good whatever except that 24 they urge us onward to do the same, to experience religion ourselves. Whatever Christ or Moses or anybody 25 else did does not help us in the least except to urge us on.

26 5. Each one has a special nature peculiar to himself which he must follow and through which he will 27 find his way to free-

1 dom. Your teacher should be able to tell you what your particular path in nature is and to put you in it.
2 He should know by your face where you belong and should be able to indicate it to you. We should never try 3 to follow another's path for that is his way, not yours. When that path is found, you have nothing to do but 4 fold your arms and the tide will carry you to freedom. Therefore when you find it, never swerve from it. Your 5 way is the best for you, but that is no sign it is the best for another.

6 6. The truly spiritual see spirit as spirit, not as matter. Spirit as such can never become matter, though 7 matter is spirit at a low rate of vibration. It is spirit that makes nature move; it is the Reality in nature, so 8 action is in nature but not in the spirit. Spirit is always the same, changeless, eternal. Spirit and matter are 9 in reality the same, but spirit, as such, never becomes matter, and matter, as such, never becomes spirit.
10 Matter, as such, never becomes spirit as such, for it is simply a mode of spirit, or spirit at a low rate of 11 vibration. You take food and it becomes mind, and mind in turn becomes the body. Thus mind and body, 12 spirit and matter are distinct though either may give place to the other; but they are not to be identified.

13 8. "What is real in nature is the Spirit." The spirit is the life in all action in nature. It is the spirit that 14 gives nature its reality and power of action.

15 9. "Action is in nature." "The spirit never acts. Why should it?" It merely is, and that is sufficient. It is 16 pure existence absolute and has no need of action.

17 12. All nature is bound by law, the law of its own action; and this law can never be broken. If you could 18 break a law of nature, all nature would come to an end in an instant. There would be no more nature. He 19 who attains freedom breaks the law of nature and for him nature fades away and has no more power over 20 him. Each one will break the law but once and forever and that will end his trouble with nature. "You are not 21 bound by law. That is in your nature. The mind is in nature and is bound by law."

22 14. The moment you form yourselves into an organization, you begin to hate everybody outside of that 23 organization. When you join an organization you are putting bonds upon yourself, you are limiting your own 24 freedom. Why should you form your-

1 selves into an order having rules and regulations, thus limiting every one as to his independent action?
2 If one breaks a law of an order or society he is hated by the rest. What right has anyone to lay down rules
3 and laws governing others? Such laws are not laws at all. If it were a law it could not be broken. The fact 4 that these so-called laws are broken shows clearly they are not laws.

5 gita class⁴⁷⁹

6 [Sister Nivedita's notes of a New York Bhagavad-Gitâ class, recorded in a June 16, 1900 letter to Miss
7 Josephine MacLeod]

8 This morning the lesson on the Gitâ was grand. It began with a long talk on the fact that the highest 9 ideals are not for all. Non-resistance is not for the man who thinks the replacing of the maggot in the wound 10 by the leprous saint with "Eat, Brother!" disgusting and horrible. Non-resistance is practised by a mother's 11 love towards an angry child. It is a travesty in the mouth of a coward, or in the face of a lion.

12 Let us be true. Nine-tenths of our life's energy is spent in trying to make people think us that which we 13 are not. That energy would be more rightly spent in becoming that which we would like to be. And so it 14 went—beginning with the salutation to an incarnation:

15 Salutation to thee—the Guru of the universe,

16 Whose footstool is worshipped by the gods.

17 Thou one unbroken Soul,

18 Physician of the world's diseases.

19 Guru of even the gods,

20 To thee our salutation.

21 Thee we salute. Thee we salute. Thee we salute.

22 In the Indian tones—by Swami himself.

23 There was an implication throughout the talk that Christ and Buddha were inferior to Krishna—in the 24 grasp of problems—

25 inasmuch as they preached the highest ethics as a world path,

1 ⁴⁷⁹ ? New Discoveries, Vol. 6, pp. 275-76.
2

1 whereas Krishna saw the right of the whole, in all its parts—to its own differing ideals.
2 remarks from various lectures⁴⁸⁰

3 [Mr. Frank Rhodehamel's random lecture notes, most of which seem to pertain to chapter two of the 4 Bhagavad-Gitâ]

5 "Spirituality can never be attained until materiality is gone."

6 The first discourse in the Gitâ can be taken allegorically.

7 "The Vedas only teach of things in nature, only teach of nature."

8 We are always letting sentiment usurp the place of duty, and flattering ourselves that we are acting in 9 response to true love.

10 We must get beyond emotionalism if we would be able to renounce. Emotion belongs to the animals.
11 They are creatures of emotion entirely.

12 It is not sacrifice of a high order to die for one's young. The animals do that, and just as readily as any 13 human mother ever did. It is no sign of real love to do that; merely blind emotion.

14 We are forever trying to make our weakness look like strength, our sentiment like love, our cowardice 15 like courage, etc.

16 Say to your soul in regard to vanities, weaknesses, etc., "This does not befit thee. This does not befit 17 thee".

2 THE ETHER⁴⁸¹
3

4 This article first appeared anonymously in the February 1895 issue of the New York Medical Times, a 5 prestigious monthly medical journal founded and edited by Dr. Egbert Guernsey.
6

7 Classification or grouping of phenomena by their similarities is the first step in scientific 8 knowledge—perhaps it is all. An organized grouping, revealing to us a similarity running through the whole 9 group, and a conviction that under similar circumstances the group will arrange itself in the same form—

10 stretched over all time, past, present and future—is what we call law.

11 This finding of unity in variety is really what we call knowledge. These different groups of similars are 12 stowed away in the pigeon-holes of the mind, and when a new fact comes before us we begin to search for a 13 similar group already existing in one of the pigeon-holes of the mind. If we succeed in finding one 14 ready-made, we take the newcomer in immediately. If not, we either reject the new fact, or wait till we find 15 more of his kind, and form a new place for the group.

16 Facts which are extraordinary thus disturb us; but and when we find many like them, they cease to 17 disturb, even when our knowledge about their cause remains the same as before.

18 The ordinary experiences of our lives are no less wonderful than any miracles recorded in any sacred 19 book of the world; nor are we any more enlightened as to the cause of these ordinary experiences than of the 20 so-called miracles. But the miraculous is "extraordinary", and the everyday experience is "ordinary". The 21 "extraordinary" startles the mind, the "ordinary" satisfies.

22 The field of knowledge is so varied, and the more the difference is from the centre, the more widely the 23 radii diverge.

1 ⁴⁸¹ ? Reprinted in New Discoveries, Vol. 3, pp. 55-59.

2 Because the Swami's original handwritten article is unavailable, we have made the spelling, punctuation and grammar of his 3 published version conform to the style of the Complete Works.—Publisher.
4

1 At the start the different sciences were thought to have no connection whatever with each other; but 2 as more and more knowledge comes in—that is, the more and more we come nearer the centre—the radii are 3 converging more and more, and it seems that they are on the eve of finding a common centre. Will they ever 4 find it?

5 The study of the mind was, above all, the science to which the sages of India and Greece had directed 6 their attention. All religions are the outcome of the study of the inner man. Here we find the attempt at 7 finding the unity, and in the science of religion, as taking its stand upon general and massive propositions, 8 we find the boldest and the most vigorous manifestation of this tendency at finding the unity.

9 Some religions could not solve the problem beyond the finding of a duality of causes, one good, the 10 other evil. Others went as far as finding an intelligent personal cause, a few went still further beyond 11 intellect, beyond personality, and found an infinite being.

12 In those, and only those systems which dared to transcend beyond the personality of a limited human 13 consciousness, we find also an attempt to resolve all physical phenomena into unity.

14 The result was the "Akâsha" of the Hindus and the "Ether" of the Greeks.

15 This "Akasha" was, after the mind, the first material manifestation, said the Hindu sages, and out of 16 this "Akasha" all this has been evolved.

17 History repeats itself; and again during the latter part of the nineteenth century, the same theory is 18 coming with more vigour and fuller light.

19 It is being proved more clearly than ever that as there is a co-relation of physical forces there is also a 20 co-relation of different [branches of] knowledge, and that behind all these general groups there is a unity of 21 knowledge.

22 It was shown by Newton⁴⁸² that if light consisted of material particles projected from luminous bodies, 23 they must move faster

1 482 ?

2 Isaac Newton, 1642-1727.
3

1 in solids and liquids than in air, in order that the laws of refraction might be satisfied.

2 Huyghens,⁴⁸³ on the other hand, showed that to account for the same laws on the supposition that light 3 consisted in the undulating motion of an elastic medium, it must move more slowly in solids and fluids than in 4 gases. Fizeau⁴⁸⁴ and Foucault⁴⁸⁵ found Huyghens's predictions correct.

5 Light, then, consists in the vibrating motion of a medium, which must, of course, fill all space. This is 6 called the ether.

7 In the fact that the theory of a cosmic ether explains fully all the phenomena of radiation, refraction, 8 diffraction and polarization of light is the strongest argument in favour of the theory.

9 Of late, gravitation, molecular action, magnetic, electric, and electro-dynamic attractions and 10 repulsions have thus been explained.

11 Sensible and latent heat, electricity and magnetism themselves have been of late almost satisfactorily 12 explained by the theory of the all-pervading ether.

13 Zöllner,⁴⁸⁶ however, basing his calculations upon the data supplied by the researches of Wilhelm 14 Weber,⁴⁸⁷ thinks that the transmission of life force between the heavenly bodies is effected both ways, by the 15 undulation of a medium and by the actual evidence of particles.

16
17 Weber found that the molecules, the smallest particles of bodies, were composed of yet smaller 18 particles, which he called the electric particles, and which in the molecules are in a constant circular motion.
19 These electric particles are partly positive, partly negative.

1 Those of the same electricity repulse those of different electricity; attracting each other, each molecule 2 contains the

1 same amount of electric particles, with a small surplus of either positive or negative quickly changing 2 the balance.

3 Upon this Zöllner builds these propositions:

4 (1) The molecules are composed of a very great number of particles—the so-called electric particles, 5 which are in constant circular motion around each other within the molecule.

6 (2) If the inner motion of a molecule increases over a certain limit, then electric particles are emitted.
7 They then travel from one heavenly body through space until they reach another heavenly body, where they 8 are either reflected or absorbed by other molecules.

9 (3) The electric particles thus traversing space are the ether of the physicist.

10 (4) These ether particles have a twofold motion: first, their proper motion; second, an undulatory 11 motion, for which they receive the impulse from the ether particles rotating in the molecules.

12 (5) The motion of the smallest particles corresponds to that of the heavenly bodies.

13 The corollary is:

14 The law of attraction which holds good for the heavenly bodies also holds good for the smallest 15 particles.

16 Under these suppositions, that which we call space is really filled with electric particles, or ether.

17 Zöllner also found the following interesting calculation for the electric atoms:

18 Velocity: 50,143 geographical miles per second.

19 Amount of ether particles in a water molecule: 42,000 million.

20 Distance from each other: 0.0032 millimeter.

22 So far as it goes, then, the theory of a universal cosmic ether is the best at hand to explain the various 23 phenomena of nature.

24 As far as it goes, the theory that this ether consists of particles, electric or otherwise, is also very 25 valuable. But on all suppositions, there must be space between two particles of ether, however small; and 26 what fills this inter-ethereal space? If par-

1 ticles still finer, we require still more fine ethereal particles to fill up the vacuum between every two of 2 them, and so on.

3 Thus the theory of ether, or material particles in space, though accounting for the phenomena in 4 space, cannot account for space itself.

5 And thus we are forced to find that the ether which comprehends the molecules explains the molecular 6 phenomena, but itself cannot explain space because we cannot but think of ether as in space. And, therefore,
7 if there is anything which will explain this space, it must be something that comprehends in its infinite being 8 the infinite space itself. And what is there that can comprehend even the infinite space but the Infinite Mind?

9 notes⁴⁸⁸

10 [An undated and untitled, one-page manuscript in Swami Vivekananda's own handwriting]

11 My nerves act on my brain—the brain sends back a reaction which, on the mental side, is this world.

12 Something—x—acts on the brain through the nerves, the reaction is this world.

13 Why not the x be also in the body—why outside?

14 Because we find the already created outside world (as the result of a previous reaction of the brain) 15 acts on us calling on a further reaction.

16 Thus inside becomes outside and creates another action, which interior action created another 17 reaction, which again becomes outside and again acts inside.

18 The only way of reconciling idealism and realism is to hold that one brain can be affected by the world
19 created as reaction by another brain from inside, i.e., the mixture x + mind which one brain throws out can 20 affect another, to which it's similarly external.

21 Therefore as soon as we come within the influence of this hypnotic circle, or influence, created by 22 hundreds of preceding brains we begin to feel this world as they see it.

1 Mind is only a phase of matter, i.e., of the ever-changing phenomena of which matter and mind are 2 different states or views. There must be something in whose presence this eternal, phenomenal net is 3 spread—that is the Substance, the Brahman.

16 Yet there is a vast field covered by religion where physical science[s] are mute.

17 The [vain?] attempt to keep man strictly within the limits of the senses—

13 Macrocosm and Microcosm⁴⁹⁰
14

15 After his experience of the macrocosm within the microcosm while absorbed in meditation under the 16 peepul tree at Kakrighat, in 1890, Swami Vivekananda jotted down in Bengali fragments of his realization in 17 his notebook.

18
19 In the beginning was the Word etc.

20 The microcosm and the macrocosm are built on the same plan. Just as the individual soul is encased in 21 the living body, so is the universal Soul in the Living Prakriti [Nature]—the objective universe. Shivâ [i.e. Kâli]
22 is embracing Shiva: this is not a fancy. This covering of the one [Soul] by the other [Nature] is analogous to 23 the relation between an idea and the word expressing it: they are one and the same; and it is only by a 24 mental abstraction that one can distinguish them. Thought is impossible without words. Therefore, in the 25 beginning was the Word etc.

1 This dual aspect of the Universal Soul is eternal. So what we perceive or feel is this combination of the 8 In 1889, Swami Vivekananda translated into Bengali selections from Book I, chapters 1-6 of Thomas à 9 Kempis's The Imitation of Christ. They were published along with a preface in a now-defunct Bengali 10 monthly magazine, Sâhitya Kalpadruma. The Swami's preface and Bengali translation, entitled 11 "Ishânu-sharana",⁴⁹² were later published in the Bengali Complete Works (first edition), VI, pp. 16-28.

12 However, only the preface to The Imitation of Christ was published in the English edition of the Complete 13 Works, VIII.

14 Swami Vivekananda's partial Bengali translation of The Imitation of Christ includes as footnotes 15 quotations from Hindu scriptures that parallel à Kempis's ideas, comments or commentary. For the sake of 16 clarity, these footnotes (numbered 1 through 17) have been appended to their respective verses in The 17 Imitation of Christ (indicated in parentheses), arranged under their appropriate chapter headings in the 18 book, and reproduced here in bold.

19 Many of the Sanskrit footnotes to the Bengali translation were later rendered into English during the 20 course of Swami Vivekananda's lecturing or writing. For the sake of interest, these English translations have 21 also been added to the Swami's restored footnote text. Otherwise, Sanskrit verses have been translated by 22 the Publisher for the convenience of the reader.

2 Om Salutations to Bhagavan Shri Ramakrishna

3 Brothers of Calcutta!

4
5 1. We feel happy when you are happy, and we suffer when you suffer. Therefore, during these days 6 of extreme adversity, we are striving and ceaselessly praying for your welfare and an easy way to save you 7 from disease and the fear of an epidemic.

8
9 2. If that grave disease-fearing which both the high and the low, the rich and the poor are all 10 fleeing the city-ever really comes in our midst, then even if we perish while serving and nursing you, we will 11 consider ourselves fortunate because you are all embodiments of God. He who thinks otherwise-out of 12 vanity, superstition or ignorance-offends God and incurs great sin. There is not the slightest doubt about it.

13
14 3. We humbly pray to you-please do not panic due to unfounded fear. Depend upon God and calmly 15 try to find the best means to solve the problem. Otherwise, join hands with those who are doing that very 16 thing.

18 4. What is there to fear? The terror that has entered people's hearts due to the occurrence of the 19 plague has no real ground. Through God's will, nothing of the terrible form that plague takes, as seen in 20 other places, has occurred in Calcutta. The government authorities have also been particularly helpful to us.
21 So what is there to fear?

23 5. Come, let us give up this false fear and, having faith in the infinite compassion of God, gird our 24 loins and enter the field

1 of action. Let us live pure and clean lives. Disease, fear of an epidemic, etc., will vanish into thin air by 2 His grace.

3
4 6. (a) Always keep the house and its premises, the rooms, clothes, bed, drain, etc., clean.

5 (b) Do not eat stale, spoiled food; take fresh and nutritious food instead. A weak body is more 6 susceptible to disease.

7 (c) Always keep the mind cheerful. Everyone will die once. Cowards suffer the pangs of death 8 again and again, solely due to the fear in their own minds.

9 (d) Fear never leaves those who earn their livelihoods by unethical means or who cause harm
10 to others. Therefore, at this time when we face the great fear of death, desist from all such behaviour.

11 (e) During the period of epidemic, abstain from anger and from lust—even if you are 12 householders.

13 (f) Do not pay any heed to rumours.

14 (g) The British government will not vaccinate anyone by force. Only those who are willing will 15 be vaccinated.

16 (h) There will be no lack of effort in treating the afflicted patients in our hospital under our 17 special care and supervision, paying full respect to religion, caste and the modesty (Purdah) of women. Let 18 the wealthy run away! But we are poor; we understand the heartache of the poor. The Mother of the 19 Universe is Herself the support of the helpless. The Mother is assuring us: "Fear not! Fear not!"

20
21 7. Brother, if there is no one to help you, then send infor-mation immediately to the servants of 22 Shri Bhagavan Ramakrishna at Belur Math. There will be no dearth of help that is physically possible. By the 23 grace of the Mother, monetary help will also be possible.

24
25 N. B. In order to remove the fear of the epidemic, you should sing Nâma Sankirtanam [the name of the 26 Lord] every evening and in every locality.

BHARTRIHARI'S VERSES ON RENUNCIATION⁵⁰⁶

This is Swami Vivekananda's free translation of verses from Bhartrihari's Sanskrit poem Vairâgya Shatakam.

The Swami's translation is from Sister Nivedita's Unpublished Notes of Some Wanderings with the Swami Vivekananda—selected verses recorded almost verbatim, but not necessarily in Bhartrihari's order, by Sister Nivedita as Swami Vivekananda translated them orally for some of his Western disciples during a Himalayan pilgrimage in 1898.

For the researcher's benefit, verses 14-15, 18, 24-26, 31, and 33 have been footnoted as corresponding verses taken from Swami Vivekananda's original handwritten translation, which was given to the Vedanta Society of Southern California by Miss Josephine MacLeod, shortly before her passing away in 1948. This footnoted handwritten version was first published in the collection of poetry entitled In Search of God and Other Poems (Mayavati: Advaita Ashrama, 1968).

Stylistic differences in Swami Vivekananda's overall translation of Bhartrihari's poem are due to those variations inherent in the two aforementioned sources. Obvious typographical and punctuation errors have been corrected.

The verse numbers, as available, correspond to Bhartrihari's numbering.

4 [A translation of verses from Bhartrihari's Sanskrit poem
5 Vairagya Shatakam]
6 I have travelled in many countries, hard to travel in,
7 And got no result;
8 Giving up pride of birth and position,
9 I have served all.
10 Like a crow stealing into a kitchen,
11 With fear I have eaten the bread of others in their homes, 12 Yet thou, Desire, who leadest to evil deeds, 13 Leavest me not!
14 (Verse 2)
15
16 I have crossed oceans to find wealth.
17 I have blasted mountains to get jewels.
18 I have spent whole nights in graveyards
19 repeating Mantras
20 And have obtained—not the broken cowrie
21 of blessedness
22 Ah, Desire, give me up now.
23 (Verse 3)
24
25 I have borne the wicked words of the wicked;

1 To please fools, when my heart is weeping,
2 my lips ever laughed.
3 Stopping my judgment, I have with folded hands
4 Stood before unworthy persons.
5 Even now, my Desire, why do you make me dance 6 like a fool?

7 (Verse 4)

8

1 For this life, which is like a drop of water
2 on a lotus leaf,
3 We have not enjoyed, but enjoyments have enjoyed us.
4 We did not penance, but penances burnt us up.
5 Time did not fly, yet we are gone.
6 We become decrepit with age, but not so Desire.
7 Infirmary assails us, the skin wrinkles,
8 The hair whitens, the body becomes crooked,
9 Old age comes on.
10 Desire alone grows younger every day.

(Verses 5-8)

13 Hope is the name of this river, whose water is Desire, 14 And Thirst the waves thereof.
15 Passion is the crocodile living in that water,
16 Vain resolves are the birds that reside
17 In the tree of virtue on the shores and kill it.
18 But there are the whirlpools of Delusion
19 And Despondence, the high banks.
20 The great Yogis are blissful because they,
21 With their pure minds, never crossed this river.

(Verse 10)

24 Blessed are they that, living even in the 25 caves of mountains,

1 Meditate on the supreme Light.
2 Even the birds will fearlessly drink of the 3 tears of pleasure
4 That flow from their eyes.
5 Alas,⁵⁰⁷ our minds grow familiar, even in imagination, With palaces and pleasure-gardens, 6 And thus our lives fleet by.
7 (Verse 14)

1 ⁵⁰⁷ ? Here Swami Vivekananda's handwritten translation begins.
2

1 Even when the only food is gained by begging, 2 and that is tasteless;
3 One's bed, the dry earth;
4 One's whole family, his own body;
5 His only clothing, a ragged bit of cloth—
6 Alas, alas, the desire for enjoyment does not leave a man.

7 (Verse 15)

8
9 Not knowing the power of flame, the insect falls into it.
10 The fish swallows the bait, not knowing the hook inside.
11 That, well aware of the vanity and dangers of the world,
12 We cannot give it up—
13 Such is the power of Delusion.

14 (Verse 18)

15
16 Have such places in the Himalayas become extinct
17 That a man should go begging at others' doors?
18 Have the roots in the mountain forests all disappeared?
19 Are the springs all dry?
20 Are the trees all withered that bear sweet fruits
21 And bark for garments
22 That a man should look with fear on the face of a fool, Whose head is turned by a little wealth?
23 (Lit., "Whose eyebrows are dancing with the wind of the pride of a little wealth".)

24 (Verses 24-25)

25

1 Arise! Let us go into the forest
2 Where pure roots and fruits will be our food, 3 Pure water our only drink,
4 Pure leaves our bed,
5 And where the little-minded, the thoughtless,
6 And those whose hearts are cramped with wealth
7 Do not exist.
8 (Verse 26)

1
2 In enjoyment is the fear of disease;
3 In high birth, the fear of losing caste;
4 In wealth, the fear of tyrants;
5 In honour, the fear of losing her;
6 In strength, the fear of enemies;
7 In beauty, the fear of the other sex;⁵⁰⁸
8 In knowledge, the fear of defeat;
9 In virtue, the fear of scandal;
10 In the body, the fear of death.
11
12 In this life, all is fraught with fear.
13 Renunciation alone is fearless.
14 (Verse 31)
15
16 The root of health has always round about it 17 A thousand worms in the form of dangers and disease. Where fortune falls, open a hundred gates of 18 danger.
19 Whosoever is born, him death will surely swallow.
20 Say, where is that Providence who ever created 21 Anything that died not?

2 Life is like a wave upon the waters,
3 Youth only remains a few days.
4 Wealth is like a fancy of the mind,
5 It immediately vanishes.

1 Poems follows in this footnote:

2 Alas our minds [dally but] in imagination with palaces and pleasure gardens, and thus our lives are spent. [One's] only food 3 is by begging—and that too is tasteless; one's bed, the dry earth; all of one's family, one's own body; and the only clothing a tattered 4 piece of cloth around the waist—alas, still the desire for enjoyment does not leave a man.

5 (Verses 14-15)

6 Not knowing the power of flame,

7 The insect falls into it.

8 The fish swallows the bait,

9 Not knowing the hook inside.

10 And knowing full well the vanities

11 and dangers of the world,

12 We cannot give it up—

13 Such is the power of delusion.

14 [With rocks cooled by] the spray of the Ganga's waters,

15 Where the Vidyâdharas love to sport—

16 Have such places in the Himalayas become extinct

17 That a man should beg (in disgrace) at others' doors?

(Verses 18, 24)

19 Have the roots in the mountain forests all disappeared?

20 Are the springs all dry? Are the trees all withered

21 That bear sweet fruits and bark for garments

22 That a man should look with fear on the face

23 Of the fool, whose eyebrows are dancing

24 [In] the wind of the pride of a little wealth?

(Verse 25)

26 Arise, let us go into the forest, where pure roots and fruits will be our food, pure water our only drink, and pure leaves our 27 bed—And where the little-minded, the thoughtless, and those whose hearts are cankered with wealth do not exist.

(Verse 26)

29 In enjoyment is the fear of disease,

30 In high birth, the fear of losing caste,

31 In wealth, the fear of tyrants,

32 In honour the fear of losing [it],

33 In strength, the fear of enemies,

1 Enjoyment is like a flash of lightning
2 amongst dark clouds.
3 Our most beloved one is only for a moment.
4 Knowing this, O man, give your heart unto Brahman
5 To cross this ocean of life.
6 (Verse 36)

1 In beauty, the fear of [old age],
2 In knowledge, the fear of defeat,
3 In virtue, the fear of scandal,
4 In the body, the fear of death.
5 In this life all is fraught with fear:
6 Renunciation alone is fearless.

7 (Verse 31)

8 [A person's] health [is uprooted by] thousands of [worries] and disease. Where fortune falls open a hundred gates of danger.
9 Whosoever is born, him death will surely swallow. Say, [has] Providence ever created anything that died not?

10 (Verse 33)

1 . . . Living in whom gods like Indra, Brahmâ
2 and others appear like a blade of grass,
3 Whose anger can destroy the worlds in a moment.
4 O sage, know Him, that One Supreme 5 Who dies not,
6 And give not your mind to false enjoyment.
7 (Verse 40)
8
9 Ah, where is happiness in this life?
10 11 (At best it lasts but a hundred years, of which half is spent in sleep; of the other half, half in 12 decrepitude; of what remains—13 one half goes in childhood and, of the rest, still half in serving others!)

14
15 O man, in this futile, wave-like life
16 Where is happiness?
17 (Verse 49)
18
19 Now you appear as child
20 And now as a youth, whose whole occupation is love.
21 This moment poor, another wealthy,
22 Now a babe, and again a decrepit old man.
23 O actor man, at last you vanish from the stage
24 When death beckons you behind the scenes!
25 (Verse 50)

1
2 You are a king, but we have served Gurus,
3 Who are great in knowledge.
4 You are known by your wealth as a king,
5 We for our knowledge.
6 There is infinite difference between us and you,
7 Therefore we are not the persons to wait upon you,
8 O Kings!
9 (Verse 51)
10

1 Oh, when will that day come,
2 When in a forest, saying "Shiva", "Shiva",
3 My days shall pass?
4 A serpent and a garland the same,
5 The strong foe and the friend the same,
6 The flower-bed and the stone-bed the same,
7 A beautiful woman and a blade of grass the same!
8 (Verses 85, 90)

9
10 O Shiva, when shall I be able to cut
11 To the very roots of my Karma,
12 By becoming solitary, desireless, quiet–
13 My hands my only plate, and the cardinal points 14 my clothing?
15 (Verse 99)

16
17 The fruits are sufficient food,
18 The waters of the mountain sufficient dinner,
19 The earth a sufficient bed,
20 And bark a sufficient garment–
21 These are all welcome.
22 Only I cannot bear the proud words of fools,
23 Whose organs are all disordered by the drink
24 Of the wine of new wealth!
25 (Verse 54)

1
2 What if you have got the wealth that fulfils every desire?
3 If your foot is on the heads of your foes,
4 What of that?
5 If you have made all your love wealthy,
6 If your body remains a Kalpa⁵¹⁰—what of that?
7 The only thing to be desired is Renunciation
8 Which gives all love to Shiva.
9 (Verse 67)
10

1 ⁵¹⁰ ? A periodic cycle of creation and dissolution.
2

1 Fear only life, that brings Birth and Death,
2 Have no love of friends, no lust, no attachment.
3 Alone, living alone in a forest,
4 What is more to be longed for than this Renunciation.
5 (Verse 68)

6
7 Going searching in the lower regions,
8 Going into the skies,
9 Travelling through all the worlds,
10 This is but the fickleness of the mind.
11 Ah, friend, you never remember the Lord
12 Who resides within you!
13 How can you get happiness?
14 (Verse 70)

15
16 What is there in the reading of Vedas,
17 The Shrutis, the Purânas and doing sacrifices?
18 Freedom alone takes off the weight
19 of this dreadful world,
20 And manifests Self-blessedness.
21 Here is the truth: the rest is all shop-keeping.
22 (Verse 71)

23
24 When the body is still healthy and diseaseless, 25 When old age has not yet attacked it,

1 When the organs have not yet lost their power,
2 And life is still full and undiminished,
3 Now, now, struggle on, rendering great help to yourself!
4 My friend, it is useless to try to dig a well
5 In a house that is already on fire!

6 (Verse 75)

7
8 In Shiva, who is the Lord of this Universe,
9 Or Vishnu, its soul, I see no difference,
10 But still, my love is for Him
11 Who has the young moon on His forehead.

12 (Verse 84)

1 Oh when will that time come,
2 When in a beautiful full-moon night,
3 Sitting on the banks of some river,
4 And in a calm, yet high notes repeating
5 "Shiva! Shiva! Shiva!"
6 All my feelings will come out through the eyes
7 In the form of tears?
8 (Verse 85)
9
10 When, wearing only the Kaupina,⁵¹¹
11 Lying on the sands of the holy Ganges in Benares, 12 When shall I weep aloud, "O Lord of ghouls", 13 Saying this, and whole days shall pass like moments?
14 (Verse 87)
15
16 When, bathing in the pure Ganges water, 17 Worshipping Thee, Omnipresent, with holy fruits
18 and flowers,
19 Stretching myself on stones in a stony cave, 20 My whole soul shall go into meditation,
21 And according to the voice of my Guru,
22 I shall avoid all misery, and purify
23 The mind defiled with serving the rich.

⁵¹¹ ? Loincloth.

(Verse 88)

This whole wide earth my bed,
My beautiful pillows my own two arms,
My wonderful canopy the blue sky,
And the cool evening air to fan me,
The moon and the stars my lamps,
And my beautiful wife, Renunciation, by my side,
What king is there who can sleep like me in pleasure?

(Verse 94)

1 This Universe is only a little circle.
2 What is there to desire in it?
3 Will the ocean go into waves
4 By the jumping of a little [fish?]?
5 (Verse 92)
6
7 There was a time when I could see nothing but Women 8 in this world:
9 And now that my eyes are opened,
10 I can see nothing but Brahman.
11
12
13 Beautiful are the rays of the moon,
14 Beautiful are the lawns in the forest,
15 Beautiful is the meeting of the good,
16 Beautiful is poetry, and 17 Beautiful is the face of the beloved.
18 But to me none of these are beautiful,
19 Knowing that they are evanescent.
20 (Verse 79)
21
22 Oh mother earth, father wind,
23 Friend light, sweetheart water,
24 Brother sky,
25 Here take my last salutation

1 With folded hands!
2 For today I am melting away into Brahman,
3 Because my heart became pure,
4 And all delusion vanished
5 Thro' the power of your good company.
6 (Verse 100)
7
8 Old age watches us, roaring like a tigress.
9 Disease, like enemies, is striking us often.
10 Life is flowing out like water from a broken jar.
11 Curious still how men do evil deeds in this world!
12 (Verse 38)

1 Those beautiful cities.
2 Those mighty monarchs.
3 Those powerful nobles.
4 Those learned assemblies.
5 Those moon-faced women.
6 Those proud princes.
7 And those that sang their praises—
8 They have all been swept away from the memory 9 of man.
10 My salutation, therefore, is to Time who works 11 all these!
12 (Verse 41)
13
14 The sun by his coming and going every hour
15 is lessening the life of man.
16 Time flies without our knowledge,
17 Crushed as we are by the load of many works.
18 Seeing the evils of Birth, Old Age, Danger, and Death
19 We are not afraid.
20 Ah me, drinking the wine of delusion,
21 The world has become mad.
22 (Verse 43)
23
24 I have not learnt that knowledge which defeats all 25 opponents!

1 Nor have been able, at the point of the sword,
2 Which can cut thro' an elephant's back,
3 To send our glory even unto the skies;
4 Nor, under the light of the full moon,
5 Drunk the nectar of the budding lips of the Beloved.
6 My youth is gone fruitless
7 Like a lamp in an empty house.

conversations and interviews

1
2 first meeting with madame emma calvé⁵¹²

3 [The story of the first meeting of Swami Vivekananda
4 and Madame Emma Calvé, as told in Calvé's
5 autobiography, My Life]

6 . . . [Swami Vivekananda] was lecturing in Chicago one year when I was there; and as I was at that 7 time greatly depressed in mind and body, I decided to go to him.

8 . . . Before going I had been told not to speak until he addressed me. When I entered the room, I 9 stood before him in silence for a moment. He was seated in a noble attitude of meditation, his robe of 10 saffron yellow falling in straight lines to the floor, his head swathed in a turban bent forward, his eyes on 11 the ground. After a pause he spoke without looking up.

12 "My child", he said, "what a troubled atmosphere you have about you. Be calm. It is essential".

13 Then in a quiet voice, untroubled and aloof, this man who did not even know my name talked to me 14 of my secret problems and anxieties. He spoke of things that I thought were unknown even to my nearest 15 friends. It seemed miraculous, supernatural.

16 "How do you know all this?" I asked at last. "Who has talked of me to you?"

17 He looked at me with his quiet smile as though I were a child who had asked a foolish question.

18 "No one has talked to me", he answered gently. "Do you think that it is necessary? I read in you as in 19 an open book."

20 Finally it was time for me to leave.

21 "You must forget", he said as I rose. "Become gay and happy again. Build up your health. Do not 22 dwell in silence upon your sorrows. Transmute your emotions into some form of external expression. Your 23 spiritual health requires it. Your art demands it."

1 I left him deeply impressed by his words and his personality. He seemed to have emptied my brain
2 of all its feverish complexities and placed there instead his clear and calming thoughts. I became once
3 again vivacious and cheerful, thanks to the effect of his powerful will. He did not use any of the hypnotic
4 or mesmeric influences. It was the strength of his character, the purity and intensity of his purpose that 5 carried conviction. It seemed to me, when I came to know him better, that he lulled one's chaotic thoughts 6 into a state of peaceful acquiescence, so that one could give complete and undivided attention to his 7 words.

8 first meeting with john d. rockefeller⁵¹³

9 [As told by Madame Emma Calvé to Madame Drinette Verdier]

10 Mr. X, in whose home Swamiji was staying in Chicago, was a partner or an associate in some 11 business with John D. Rockefeller. Many times John D. heard his friends talking about this extraordinary 12 and wonderful Hindu monk who was staying with them, and many times he had been invited to meet 13 Swamiji but, for one reason or another, always refused. At that time Rockefeller was not yet at the peak of 14 his fortune, but was already powerful and strong-willed, very difficult to handle and a hard man to advise.

15 But one day, although he did not want to meet Swamiji, he was pushed to it by an impulse and went 16 directly to the house of his friends, brushing aside the butler who opened the door and saying that he 17 wanted to see the Hindu monk.

18 The butler ushered him into the living room, and, not waiting to be announced, Rockefeller entered 19 into Swamiji's adjoining study and was much surprised, I presume, to see Swamiji behind his writing table 20 not even lifting his eyes to see who had entered.

21 After a while, as with Calvé, Swamiji told Rockefeller much of his past that was not known to any but 22 himself, and

1 made him understand that the money he had already accumulated was not his, that he was only a 2 channel and that his duty was to do good to the world—that God had given him all his wealth in order that 3 he might have an opportunity to help and do good to people.

4 Rockefeller was annoyed that anyone dared to talk to him that way and tell him what to do. He left 5 the room in irritation, not even saying goodbye. But about a week after, again without being announced, 6 he entered Swamiji's study and, finding him the same as before, threw on his desk a paper which told of 7 his plans to donate an enormous sum of money toward the financing of a public institution.

8 "Well, there you are", he said. "You must be satisfied now, and you can thank me for it."

9 Swamiji didn't even lift his eyes, did not move. Then taking the paper, he quietly read it, saying: "It 10 is for you to thank me". That was all. This was Rockefeller's first large donation to the public welfare.

11 A DUSKY PHILOSOPHER FROM INDIA⁵¹⁴

12 [An interview by Blanche Partington, San Francisco Chronicle, March 18, 1900]

13

14 . . . Bowing very low in Eastern fashion on his entrance to the room, then holding out his hand in 15 good American style, the dusky philosopher from the banks of the Ganges gave friendly greeting to the 16 representative of that thoroughly Occidental institution, the daily press.

17 . . . I asked for a picture to illustrate this article, and when someone handed me a certain "cut" 18 which has been extensively

1 used in lecture advertisements here, he uttered a mild protest against its use.

2 "But that does not look like you", said I.

3 "No, it is as if I wished to kill someone", he said smiling, "like—like—"

4 "Othello", I inserted rashly. But the little audience of friends only smiled as the Swami made 5 laughing recognition of the absurd resemblance of the picture to the jealous Moor. But I do not use that 6 picture.

7 "Is it true, Swami", I asked, "that when you went home after lecturing in the Congress of Religions
8 after the World's Fair, princes knelt at your feet, a half dozen of the ruling sovereigns of India dragged 9 your carriage through the streets, as the papers told us? We do not treat our priests so".

10 "That is not good to talk of", said the Swami. "But it is true that religion rules there, not dollars."

11 "What about caste?"

12 "What of your Four Hundred?" he replied, smiling. "Caste in India is an institution hardly explicable 13 or intelligible to the Occidental mind. It is acknowledged to be an imperfect institution, but we do not 14 recognize a superior social result from your attempts at class distinction. India is the only country which 15 has so far succeeded in imposing a permanent caste upon her people, and we doubt if an exchange for 16 Western superstitions and evils would be for her advantage."

17 "But under such regime—where a man may not eat this nor drink that, nor marry the other—the 18 freedom you teach would be impossible", I ventured.

19 "It is impossible", assented the Swami; "but until India has outgrown the necessity for caste laws, 20 caste laws will remain".

21 "Is it true that you may not eat food cooked by a foreigner 22 —unbeliever?" I asked.

23 "In India the cook—who is not called a servant—must be of the same or higher caste than those for 24 whom the food is cooked, as it is considered that whatever a man touches is impressed by his personality, 25 and food, with which a man builds up the body through which he expresses himself, is regarded as being 26 liable to such impression. As to the foods we eat, it is assumed that certain kinds of food nourish certain 27 properties

1 worthy of cultivation, and that others retard our spiritual growth. For instance, we do not kill to eat.
2 Such food would be held to nourish the animal body, at the expense of the spiritual body, in which the soul
3 is said to be clothed on its departure from this physical envelope, besides laying the sin of bloodguiltiness 4 upon the butcher."

5 "Ugh!" I exclaimed involuntarily, an awful vision of reproachful little lambs, little chicken ghosts, 6 hovering cow spirits

7 —I was always afraid of cows anyway—rising up before me.

8 "You see", explained the Brahmin [Kshatriya], "the universe is all one, from the lowest insect to the 9 highest Yogi. It is all one, we are all one, you and I are one—". Here the Occidental audience smiled, the 10 unconscious monk chanting the oneness of things in Sanskrit and the consequent sin of taking any life.

11 . . . He was pacing up and down the room most of the time during our talk, occasionally standing 12 over the register—it was a chill morning for this child of the sun—and doing with grace and freedom 13 whatever occurred to him, even, at length, smoking a little.

14 "You, yourself, have not yet attained supreme control over all desires", I ventured. The Swami's 15 frankness is infectious.

16 "No, madam", and he smiled the broad and brilliant smile of a child; "Do I look it?" But the Swami, 17 from the land of hasheesh and dreams, doubtless did not connect my query with its smoky origin.

18 "Is it usual among the Hindoo priesthood to marry?" I ventured again.

19 "It is a matter of individual choice", replied this member of the Hindoo priesthood. "One does not 20 marry that he may not be in slavery to a woman and children, or permit the slavery of a woman to him."

21 "But what is to become of the population?" urged the anti-Malthusian.

22 "Are you so glad to have been born?" retorted the Eastern thinker, his large eyes flashing scorn.
23 "Can you conceive of nothing higher than this warring, hungry, ignorant world? Do not fear that the you 24 may be lost, though the sordid, miserable

1 consciousness of the now may go. What worth having [would be] gone?

2 "The child comes crying into the world. Well may he cry! Why should we weep to leave it? Have you 3 thought"—here the sunny smile came back—"of the different modes of East and West of expressing the 4 passing away? We say of the dead man, 'He gave up his body'; you put it, 'he gave up the ghost'. How can 5 that be? Is it the dead body that permits the ghost to depart? What curious inversion of thought!"

6 "But, on the whole, Swami, you think it better to be comfortably dead than a living lion?" persisted 7 the defender of populations.

8 "Swâhâ, Swaha, so be it!" shouted the monk.

9 "But how is it that under such philosophy men consent to live at all?"

10 "Because a man's own life is sacred as any other life, and one may not leave chapters unlearned", 11 returned the philosopher. "Add power and diminish time, and the school days are shorter; as the learned 12 professor can make the marble in twelve years which nature took centuries to form. It is all a question of 13 time."

14 "India, which has had this teaching so long, has not yet learned her lesson?"

15 "No, though she is perhaps nearer than any other country, in that she has learned to love mercy."

16 "What of England in India?" I asked.

17 "But for English rule I could not be here now", said the monk, "though your lowest free-born 18 American Negro holds higher position in India politically than is mine. Brahmin and coolie, we are all 19 'natives'. But it is all right, in spite of the misunderstanding and oppression. England is the Tharma 20 [Karma?] of India, attracted inevitably by some inherent weakness, past mistakes, but from her blood and 21 fibre will come the new national hope for my countrymen. I am a loyal subject of the Empress of India!"
22 and here the Swami salaamed before an imaginary potentate, bowing very low, perhaps too low for rev-23 erence.

24 "But such an apostle of freedom—", I murmured.

1 "She is the widow for many years, and such we hold in high worth in India", said the philosopher
2 seriously. "As to freedom, yes, I believe the goal of all development is freedom, law and order. There is 3 more law and order in the grave than anywhere else—try it."

4 "I must go", I said. "I have to catch a train".

5 "That is like all Americans", smiled the Swami, and I had a glimpse of all eternity in his utter 6 restfulness. "You must catch this car or that train always. Is there not another, later?"

7 But I did not attempt to explain the Occidental conception of the value of time to this child of the 8 Orient, realizing its utter hopelessness and my own renegade sympathy. It must be delightful beyond 9 measure to live in the land of "time enough". In the Orient there seems time to breathe, time to think, time
10 to live; as the Swami says, what have we in exchange? We live in time; they in eternity.

17 One American friend he may be assured of—the Swami is a charming person to interview.

18 Pacing about the little room where he is staying, he kept the small audience of interviewer and 19 friend entertained for a couple of hours.

20 "Tell you about the English in India? But I do not wish to talk of politics. But from the higher 21 standpoint, it is true that

⁵¹⁵ ? New Discoveries, Vol. 5, pp. 396-98.

1 but for the English rule I could not be here. We natives know that it is through the intermixture of 2 English blood and ideas that the salvation of India will come. Fifty years ago, all the literature and religion of 3 the race were locked up in the Sanskrit language; today the drama and the novel are written in the ver-
4 nacular, and the literature of religion is being translated. That is the work of the English, and it is 5 unnecessary, in America, to descant upon the value of the education of the masses."

6 "What do you think of the Boers War?" was asked.

7 "Oh! Have you seen the morning paper? But I do not wish to discuss politics. English and Boers are 8 both in the wrong. It is terrible—terrible—the bloodshed! English will conquer, but at what fearful cost! She 9 seems the nation of Fate."

10 And the Swami with a smile, began chanting the Sanskrit for an unwillingness to discuss politics.

11 Then he talked long of ancient Russian history, and of the wandering tribes of Tartary, and of the 12 Moorish rule in Spain, and displaying an astonishing memory and research. To this childlike interest in all 13 things that touch him is doubtless due much of the curious and universal knowledge that he seems to 14 possess.

18 Vivekananda's response to Alberta Sturges's question:

20 ALBERTA STURGES: Is there no happiness in marriage?

21 SWAMI VIVEKANANDA: Yes, Alberta, if marriage is entered into as a great austerity—and everything is 22 given up—even principle!

SWAMI VIVEKANANDA: I am the disciple of a man who could not write his own name, and I am not worthy to undo his shoes. How often have I wished I could take my intellect and throw it into the Ganges!

3 While on board a ship to England, Swami Vivekananda was touched by the childlike devotion of the 4 ship's servants:

5
6 SWAMI VIVEKANANDA: You see, I love our Mohammedans!

7 SISTER NIVEDITA: Yes, but what I want to understand is this habit of seeing every people from their 8 strongest aspect. Where did it come from? Do you recognize it in any historical character? Or is it in some 9 way derived from Shri Ramakrishna?

10 SWAMI VIVEKANANDA: It must have been the training under Ramakrishna Paramahansa. We all went 11 by his path to some extent. Of course it was not so difficult for us as he made it for himself. He would eat 12 and dress like the people he wanted to understand, take their initiation, and use their language. "One 13 must learn", he said, "to put oneself into another man's very soul". And this method was his own! No one 14 ever before in India became Christian and Mohammedan and Vaishnava, by turn!

1
2 FOREWORD

3
4 PERSONS: The Swami Vivekananda, Gurubhais,⁵²⁸ and a party of European guests and disciples, 5 amongst whom were Dhira Mata, the "Steady Mother" [Mrs. Ole Bull]; one whose name was Jaya [Miss 6 Josephine MacLeod]; and Sister Nivedita.⁵²⁹

7 PLACE: Different parts of India.

8 TIME: The year 1898.

9
10 Beautiful have been the days of this year. In them the Ideal has become the Real. First in our 11 riverside cottage at Belur; then in the Himalayas, at Naini Tal and Almora; afterwards wandering here and 12 there through Kashmir—everywhere have come hours never to be forgotten, words that will echo through 13 our lives forever, and once, at least, a glimpse of the Beatific Vision.

14 It has been all play.

15 We have seen a love that would be one with the humblest and most ignorant, seeing the world for 16 the moment through his eyes, as if criticism were not; we have laughed over the colossal caprice of 17 genius; we have warmed ourselves at heroic fires; and we have been present, as it were, at the awakening 18 of the Holy Child.

19 But there has been nothing grim or serious about any of these things. Pain has come close to all of 20 us. Solemn anniversaries have been and gone. But sorrow was lifted into a golden light, where it was 21 made radiant and did not destroy.

1 Fain, if I could, would I describe our journeys. Even as I write I see the irises in bloom at Baramulla;
2 the young rice beneath the poplars at Islamabad; starlight scenes in Himalayan forests; and the royal 3 beauties of Delhi and the Taj. One longs to attempt some memorial of these. It would be worse than use-4 less. Not, then, in words, but in the light of memory they are enshrined forever, together with the kindly 5 and gentle folk who

1 dwell among them and whom we trust always to have left the gladder for our coming.

2 We have learnt something of the mood in which new faiths are born and of the persons who inspire
3 such faiths. For we have been with one who drew all men to him—listening to all, feeling with all and 4 refusing none. We have known a humility that wiped out all littleness, a renunciation that would die for 5 scorn of oppression and pity of the oppressed, a love that would bless even the oncoming feet of torture
6 and of death. We have joined hands with that woman who washed the feet of the Lord with her tears and 7 wiped them with the hairs of her head. We have lacked not the occasion, but her passionate consciousness 8 of self.

9 Seated under a tree in the garden of dead emperors there came to us a vision of all the rich and 10 splendid things of Earth, offering themselves as a shrine for the great of soul. The storied windows of 11 cathedrals and the jewelled thrones of kings, the banners of great captains and the vestments of the 12 priests, the pageants of cities and the retreats of the proud—all came and all were rejected.

13 In the garments of the beggar, despised by the alien, worshipped by the people, we have seen him; 14 and only the bread of toil, the shelter of cottage roofs, and the common road across the cornfields seem 15 real enough for the background to this life.

16 . . . Amongst his own the ignorant loved him as much as schol-ars and statesmen. The boatmen 17 watched the river, in his ab-sence, for his return, and servants disputed with guests to do him service. And 18 through it all the veil of playfulness was never dropped. "They played with the Lord" and instinctively they 19 knew it.

20 To those who have known such hours, life is richer and sweeter, and in the long nights even the 21 wind in the palm trees seems to cry: "Mahâdeva! Mahadeva! Mahadeva!"

2 CHAPTER I

3
4 The House on the Ganges

5
6 PLACE: A cottage at Belur, beside the Ganges.

7 TIME: March to May, 1898.

8
9 Of the home by the Ganges the Master had said to one, "You will find that little house of Dhira Mata 10 like heaven, for it is all love, from beginning to end".

11 It was so indeed. Within, an unbroken harmony, and without, everything alike beautiful—the green 12 stretch of grass, the tall cocoanut palms, the little brown villages in the jungle, and the Nilkantha that 13 built her nest in a tree-top beside us, on purpose to bring us the blessings of Shiva. In the morning the 14 shadows lay behind the house, but in the afternoons we could sit in front worshipping the Ganges 15 herself—great leonine mother!—

16 and in sight of Dakshineswar.

17 There came one and another with traditions of the past, and we learnt of the Master's eight years'
18 wanderings; of the name changed from village to village; of the Nirvikalpa Samâdhi; and of that sacred 19 sorrow, too deep for words or for common sight, that one who loved had alone seen. And there too came 20 the Master himself, with his stories of Umâ and Shiva, of Râdhâ and Krishna, and his fragments of song 21 and poetry.

22 It seemed as if he knew that the first material of a new consciousness must be a succession of vivid 23 but isolated experi-ences, poured out without proper sequence so as to provoke the mind of the learner to 24 work for its own conception of order and relation. . . . For the most part it was the Indian religions that he 25 portrayed for us—today dealing with one and tomorrow with another—his choice guided, seemingly, by the 26 whim of the moment. But it was not religion only that he poured out upon us. Sometimes it would be

1 history. Again, it would be folk-lore. On still another occasion it would be the manifold anomalies and 2 inconsistencies of race, caste and custom. In fact India herself became, as heard in him, as the last and 3 noblest of the Purânas, uttering itself through his lips.

1 Another point in which he had caught a great psychological secret was that of never trying to soften
2 for us that which would at first sight be difficult or repellent. In matters Indian he would rather put 3 forward, in its extreme form at the beginning of our experience, all that might seem impossible for 4 European minds to enjoy. Thus he would quote, for instance, some verses about Gauri and Shankar in a 5 single form:

6
7 On one side grows the hair in long black curls,
8 And on the other, corded like rope.
9 On one side are seen the beautiful garlands,
10 On the other, bone earrings and snake-like coils.
11 One side is white with ashes, like the snow mountains,
12 The other, golden as the light of dawn.
13 For He, the Lord, took a form,
14 And that was a divided form,
15 Half-woman and half-man.

16

18 Whatever might be the subject of the conversation, it ended always on the note of the infinite. . . .
19 He might appear to take up any subject—literary, ethnological or scientific—but he always made us feel it
20 as an illustration of the Ultimate Vision. There was for him nothing secular. He had a loathing for bondage 21 and a horror of those who "cover chains with flowers", but he never failed to make the true critic's 22 distinction between this and the highest forms of art.

23 One day we were receiving European guests and he entered into a long talk about Persian poetry.
24 Then suddenly, finding himself quoting the poem that says, "For one mole on the face of my Beloved, I
25 would give all the wealth of Samarkand!" he turned and said energetically, "I would not give a straw, you

1 know, for the man who was incapable of appreciating a love song!" His talk too teemed with epigrams.

2 It was that same afternoon, in the course of a long political argument, that he said, "In order to 3 become a nation, it appears that we need a common hate as well as a common love".

4 Several months later he remarked that before one who had a mission he never talked of any of the 5 gods save Uma and Shiva.

1 For Shiva and the Mother made the great workers. Yet I have sometimes wondered if he knew at 2 this time how the end of every theme was Bhakti. Much as he dreaded the luxury of spiritual emotion for 3 those who might be enervated by it, he could not help giving glimpses of what it meant to be consumed 4 with the intoxication of God. And so he would chant for us such poems as:

5

6 They have made Radha queen, in the beautiful
 7 groves of Vrindaban.

8 At her gate stands Krishna, on guard.

9 His flute is singing all the time:

10 "Radha is about to distribute infinite wealth of love.

11 Though I am guard, all the world may enter.

12 Come all ye who thirst! Say only 'Glory unto Radha!'

13 Enter the region of love!"

14

15 Or he would give us the great antiphonal Chorus of the Cowherds, written by his friend:⁵³⁰

16

17 Men: Thou art the Soul of souls,

18 Thou yellow-garbed,

19 With thy blue eyes.

20 Women: Thou dark One! Thou

21 Shepherd of Vrindaban!

8 Women: Who lovest Radha and thy body floats on its 10

1 MARCH 25.

2 . . . At this time the Swami kept the custom of coming to the cottage early and spending the morning
3 hours there, and again returning in the late afternoon. On the second morning of this visit, 4 however—Friday, the Christian feast of the Annunciation—he took us all three back to the Math, and there
5 in the worship-room was held a little service of initiation where one was made a Brahmachârini. That was 6 the happiest of mornings.

7 After the service we were taken upstairs. The Swami put on the ashes and bone-earrings and matted
8 locks of a Shiva-Yogi and sang and played to us—Indian music on Indian instruments 9 —for an hour.

10 And in the evening in our boat on the Ganges, he opened his heart to us and told us much of his 11 questions and anxieties regarding the trust that he held from his own Master.

12 Another week and he was gone to Darjeeling; and till the day that the plague declaration brought 13 him back, we saw him again no more.

14 MAY 3.

15 Then two of us met him in the house of our Holy Mother. The political sky was black. It seemed as if 16 a storm were about to burst. . . . Plague, panic and riot were doing their fell work. And the Master turned 17 to the two and said, "There are some who scoff at the existence of Kâli. Yet today She is out there amongst 18 the people. They are frantic with fear, and the soldiery have been called to deal out death. Who can say 19 that God does not manifest Himself as evil as well as good? But only the Hindu dares to worship Him in 20 the evil".

21 He had come back and the old life was resumed once more, as far as could be, seeing that an 22 epidemic was in prospect and that measures were on hand to give the people confidence. As long as this 23 possibility darkened the horizon, he would not leave Calcutta. But it passed away, and those happy days 24 with it, and the time came that we should go.

1
2 CHAPTER II

3
4 AT NAINI TAL AND ALMORA

5
6 PERSONS: The Swami Vivekananda, Gurubhâis, and a party of Europeans and disciples, amongst 7 whom were Dhira Mata, the "Steady Mother"; one whose name was Jaya; and Nivedita.

8 PLACE: The Himalayas.

9 TIME: May 11 to May 25, 1898.

11 We were a large party, or, indeed, two parties, that left Howrah station on Wednesday evening and 12 on Friday morning came in sight of the Himalayas. . . .

13 Naini Tal was made beautiful by three things—the Master's pleasure in introducing to us his disciple
14 the Raja of Khetri; the dancing girls who met us and asked us where to find him, and were received by him 15 in spite of the remonstrances of others; and by the Mohammedan gentleman who said, "Swamiji, if in 16 after-times any claim you as an Avatâra, an especial incarnation of the Deity—remember that I, a 17 Mohammedan, am the first!"

18 It was here too that we heard a long talk on Ram Mohan Roy in which he pointed out three things as 19 the dominant notes of this teacher's message—his acceptance of the Vedanta, his preaching of patriotism, 20 and the love that embraced the Mussulman equally with the Hindu. In all these things he claimed himself 21 to have taken up the task that the breadth and foresight of Ram Mohan Roy had mapped out.

22 The incident of the dancing girls occurred in consequence of our visit to the two temples at the head
23 of the tarn. . . . Here, offering worship, we found two nautch-women. When they had finished, they came 24 up to us, and we, in broken language, entered into conversation with them. We took them for respectable 25 ladies of the town and were much astonished later at the storm which had evidently passed over the 26 Swami's audience at his refusal to have them turned away. Am I mistaken in thinking that it was in

1 conversations and interviews 369
2

1 connection with these dancing-women of Naini Tal that he first told us the story, many times repeated, of 2 the nautch-girl

1 of Khetri? He had been angry at the invitation to see her, but being prevailed upon to come, she 2 sang:

3
4 O Lord, look not upon my evil qualities!
5 Thy name, O Lord, is Same-Sightedness.
6 Make us both the same Brahman!

7
8 One piece of iron is the knife in the hand of the butcher, 9 And another piece of iron is the image in the temple.
10 But when they touch the philosopher's stone, 11 Both alike turn to gold!

12
13 One drop of water is in the sacred Jamuna,
14 And one is foul in a ditch by the roadside.
15 But when they fall into the Ganges, 16 Both alike become holy!

17
18 So, Lord, look not upon my evil qualities!
19 Thy name, O Lord, is Same-Sightedness.
20 Make us both the same Brahman!

21
22 And then, said the Master of himself, the scales fell from his eyes, and seeing that all are indeed 23 one, he condemned no more. . . .

1 It was late in the afternoon when we left Naini Tal for Almora, and night overtook us while still 2 travelling through the forest. . . . till we reached a quaintly placed Dak bungalow, on the mountain side in 3 the midst of trees. There after some time Swamiji arrived with his party, full of fun and keen in his ap-4 preciation of everything that concerned the comfort of his guests. . . .

5 From the day that we arrived at Almora the Swami renewed his habit of coming over to us at our 6 early breakfast and spending some hours in talk. Then and always he was an exceedingly light sleeper, 7 and I imagine that his visit to us, early as the hour might be, was often paid during the course of his 8 return with his monks from a still earlier walk. Sometimes, but rarely, we saw him again in the evening, 9 either meeting him when out for a walk or going ourselves to Captain Sevier's, where he and his

1 party were staying, and seeing him there. And once he came at that time to call on us.

2 Into these morning talks at Almora a strange new element, painful but salutary to remember, had 3 crept. There appeared to be on the one side a curious bitterness and distrust, and on the other, irritation
4 and defiance. The youngest of the Swami's disciples at this time, it must be remembered, was an English 5 woman, and of how much this fact meant intellectually—what a strong bias it implied, and always does 6 imply, in the reading of India, what an idealism of the English race and all their deeds and history—the 7 Swami himself had had no conception till the day after her initiation at the monastery. Then he had asked 8 her some exultant question, as to which nation she now belonged, and had been startled to find with what 9 a passion of loyalty and worship she regarded the English flag, giving to it much of the feeling that an 10 Indian woman would give to her Thakur. His surprise and disappointment at the moment were scarcely 11 perceptible. A startled look, no more. Nor did his discovery of the superficial way in which this disciple 12 had joined herself with his people in any degree affect his confidence and courtesy during the remaining 13 weeks spent in the plains.

14 But with Almora it seemed as if a going-to-school had commenced. . . . It was never more than this; 15 never the dictating of opinion or creed; never more than emancipation from partiality. Even at the end of 16 the terrible experience when this method, as regarded race and country, was renounced, never to be 17 taken up systematically again, the Swami did not call for any confession of faith, any declaration of new 18 opinion. He dropped the whole question. His listener went free. But he had revealed a different standpoint 19 in thought and feeling, so completely and so strongly as to make it impossible for her to rest, until later, 20 by her own labours, she had arrived at a view in which both these partial presentments stood rationalized 21 and accounted for.

22 "Really, patriotism like yours is sin!" he exclaimed once, many weeks later, when the process of 23 obtaining an uncoloured judgement on some incident had been more than commonly exasperating. "All 24 that I want you to see is that most people's actions are the expression of self-interest, and you constantly

1 oppose to this the idea that a certain race are all angels. Ignorance so determined is wickedness!" . .

3 These morning talks at Almora, then, took the form of assaults upon deep-rooted

4 preconceptions—social, literary and artistic—or of long comparisons of Indian and European history and

5 sentiments, often containing extended observations of very great value. One characteristic of the Swami

6 was the habit of attacking the abuses of a country or society openly and vigorously when he was in its

7 midst, whereas after he had left it, it would often seem as if nothing but its virtues were remembered by

8 him. He was always testing his disciples, and the manner of these particular discourses was probably 9 adopted in order to put to the proof the courage and sincerity of one who was both woman and European.

1

3
4 MORNING TALKS AT ALMORA

5
6 PLACE: Almora.

7 TIME: May and June, 1898.

8
9 The first morning the talk was that of the central ideals of civilization—in the West, truth; in the East, 10 chastity. He justified Hindu marriage customs as springing from the pursuit of this ideal and from the 11 woman's need of protection, in combination. And he traced out the relation of the whole subject to the 12 philosophy of the Absolute.

13 Another morning he began by observing that as there were four main castes—Brahmin, Kshatriya, 14 Bâniyâ [Vaishya], Shudra—so there were four great national functions: the religious or priestly, fulfilled by 15 the Hindus; the military, by the Roman Empire; the mercantile, by England today; and the democratic, by 16 America in the future. And here he launched off into a glowing prophetic forecast of how America would 17 yet solve the problems of the Shudra—the problems of freedom and co-operation—and turned to relate to a 18 non-American listener the generosity of the arrangements which that people had attempted to make for 19 their aborigines.

20 Again it would be an eager résumé of the history of India or of the Moguls, whose greatness never 21 wearied him. Every now and then throughout the summer he would break out into descriptions of Delhi 22 and Agra. Once he described the Taj as "a dimness, and again a dimness, and there—a grave!"

23 Another time he spoke of Shah Jehan, and then, with a burst of enthusiasm: "Ah! He was the glory of 24 his line! A feeling for and discrimination of beauty that are unparalleled in history. And an artist himself! I 25 have seen a manuscript illuminated by him which is one of the art treasures of India. What a genius!"

26 Oftener still, it was Akbar of whom he would tell, almost with tears in his voice and a passion easier

1 conversations and interviews 375
2

1 to understand, beside

1 that undomed tomb, open to sun and wind—the grave of Secundra at Agra.

2 But all the more universal forms of human feeling were open to the Master. In one mood he talked of 3 China as if she were the treasure-house of the world, and told us of the thrill with which he saw 4 inscriptions in old Bengali (Kutil?) characters over the doors of Chinese temples.

5 Few things could be more eloquent of the vagueness of Western ideas regarding Oriental peoples 6 than the fact that one of his listeners alleged untruthfulness as a notorious quality of that race. . . . The 7 Swami would have none of it. Untruthfulness! Social rigidity! What were these, except very, very relative 8 terms? And as to untruthfulness in particular, could commercial life or social life or any other form of 9 co-operation go on for a day if men did not trust men? Untruthfulness as a necessity of etiquette? And how 10 was that different from the Western idea? Is the Englishman always glad and always sorry at the proper 11 place? But there is still a difference of degree? Perhaps—but only of degree!

12 Or he might wander as far afield as Italy, that "greatest of the countries of Europe—land of religion 13 and of art; alike of imperial organization and of Mazzini; mother of ideas, of culture and of freedom!"

14 One day it was Shivaji and the Mahrattas and the year's wandering as a Sannyâsin that won him 15 home to Raigarh. "And to this day", said the Swami, "authority in India dreads the Sannyasin, lest he 16 conceals beneath his yellow garb another Shivaji".

17 Often the enquiry "Who and what are the Aryans?" ab-sorbed his attention; and holding that their 18 origin was complex, he would tell us how in Switzerland he had felt himself to be in China, so like were 19 the types. He believed too that the same was true of some parts of Norway. Then there were scraps of 20 information about countries and physiognomies, an impassioned tale of the Hungarian scholar who traced 21 the Huns to Tibet, and lies buried in Darjeeling and so on. . . .

22 Sometimes the Swami would deal with the rift between Brahmins and Kshatriyas, painting the whole 23 history of India as a struggle between the two and showing that the latter had

1 always embodied the rising, fetter-destroying impulses of the nation. He could give excellent reason
 2 too for the faith that was in him that the Kâyasthas of modern Bengal represented the pre-Mauryan
 3 Kshatriyas. He would portray the two opposing types of culture: the one, classical, intensive and saturated 4 with an ever-deepening sense of tradition and custom; the other, defiant, impulsive and liberal in its 5 outlook. It was part of a deep-lying law of the historic development that Râma, Krishna and Buddha had all 6 arisen in the kingly, and not in the priestly caste. And in this paradoxical moment Buddhism was reduced 7 to a caste-smashing formula—"a religion invented by the Kshatriyas" as a crushing rejoinder to 8 Brahminism!

9 That was a great hour indeed when he spoke of Buddha; for, catching a word that seemed to identify 10 him with its anti-Brahminical spirit, an uncomprehending listener said, "Why, Swami, I did not know that 11 you were a Buddhist!"

12 "Madam", he said, rounding on her, his whole face aglow with the inspiration of that name, "I am the 13 servant of the servants of the servants of Buddha. Who was there ever like him?—the Lord—who never 14 performed one action for himself—with a heart that embraced the whole world! So full of pity that 15 he—prince and monk—would give his life to save a little goat! So loving that he sacrificed himself to the 16 hunger of a tigress!—to the hospitality of a pariah and blessed him! And he came into my room when I was 17 a boy and I fell at his feet! For I knew it was the Lord Himself!"

18 Many times he spoke of Buddha in this fashion, sometimes at Belur and sometimes afterwards. And 19 once he told us the story of Ambâpâli, the beautiful courtesan who feasted him. . . .

20 National feeling did not have it all its own way. For one morning when the chasm seemed to be 21 widest, there was a long talk on Bhakti—that perfect identity with the Beloved that the devotion of Ray 22 Ramananda, the Bengali nobleman, before Chaitanya so beautifully illustrates:

23

24 Four eyes met. There were changes in two souls.

25 And now I cannot remember whether he is a man

26 And I a woman, or he a woman and I a man!

1 All I know is, there were two, Love came, and 2 there is one!

3
4 It was that same morning that he talked of the Babists of Persia, in their era of martyrdom—of the 5 woman who inspired and the man who worshipped and worked. And doubtless then he expatiated on that 6 theory of his—somewhat quaint and surprising to unaccustomed minds, not so much for the matter of the 7 statement as for the explicitness of the expression—of the greatness and goodness of the young, who can 8 love without seeking personal expression for their love, and their high potentiality.

9 Another day coming at sunrise when the snows could be seen, dawn-lighted, from the garden, it was 10 Shiva and Umâ on whom he dwelt—and that was Shiva up there, the white snow-peaks, and the light that 11 fell upon Him was the Mother of the World! For a thought on which at this time he was dwelling much was 12 that God is the Universe—not within it or outside it and not the universe God or the image of God, but He 13 it, and the All.

14 Sometimes all through the summer he would sit for hours telling us stories, those cradle-tales of 15 Hinduism whose function is not at all that of our nursery fictions, but much more like the man-making 16 myths of the old Hellenic world. Best of all these I thought was the story of Shuka, and we looked on the 17 Shiva-mountains and the bleak scenery of Almora the evening we heard it for the first time. . . .

18 Shuka was indeed the Swami's saint. He was the type, to him, of that highest realization to which 19 life and the world are merely play. Long after, we learned how Shri Ramakrishna had spoken of him in his 20 boyhood as "my Shuka". And never can I forget the look, as of one gazing far into depths of joy, with which 21 he once stood and quoted the words of Shiva in praise of the deep spiritual significance of the 22 Bhagavad-Gitâ and of the greatness of Shuka: "I know the real meaning of the teachings of the 23 Bhagavad-Gita, and Shuka knows, and perhaps Vyâsa knows

24 —a little!"

25 Another day in Almora the Swami talked of the great humanizing lives that had arisen in Bengal, at 26 the long inrolling

1 wash of the first wave of modern consciousness on the ancient shores of Hindu culture. Of Ram
2 Mohan Roy we had already heard from him at Naini Tal. And now of the Pundit Vidyâsâgar he exclaimed, 3 "There is not a man of my age in northern India on whom his shadow has not fallen!" It was a great joy to 4 him to remember that these men and Shri Ramakrishna had all been born within a few miles of each 5 other.

6 The Swami introduced Vidyasagar to us now as "the hero of widow remarriage and of the abolition 7 of polygamy". But his favourite story about him was of that day when he went home from the Legislative 8 Council, pondering over the question of whether or not to adopt English dress on such occasions. Sud-
9 denly someone came up to a fat Mogul who was proceeding homewards in leisurely and pompous fashion 10 in front of him, with the news "Sir, your house is on fire!" The Mogul went neither faster nor slower for 11 this information, and presently the messenger contrived to express a discreet astonishment, whereupon 12 his master turned on him angrily. "Wretch!" he said. "Am I to abandon the gait of my ancestors because a 13 few sticks happen to be burning?" And Vidyasagar, walking behind, determined to stick to the Châdar, 14 Dhoti and sandals, not even adopting coat and slippers.

15 The picture of Vidyasagar going into retreat for a month for the study of the Shâstras, when his 16 mother had suggested to him the remarriage of child-widows, was very forcible. "He came out of his 17 retirement of opinion that they were not against such remarriage, and he obtained the signatures of the 18 pundits that they agreed in this opinion. Then the action of certain native princes led the pundits to 19 abandon their own signatures so that, had the government not determined to assist the movement, it 20 could not have been carried—and now", added the Swami, "the difficulty has an economic rather than a 21 social basis".

22 We could believe that a man who was able to discredit polygamy by moral force alone, was 23 "intensely spiritual". And it was wonderful indeed to realize the Indian indifference to a formal creed when 24 we heard how this giant was driven by the famine of 1864—when 140,000 people died of hunger and 25 disease—to have nothing more to do with God and become entirely agnostic in thought.

With this man, as one of the educators of Bengal, the Swami coupled the name of David Hare, the old Scotsman and atheist to whom the clergy of Calcutta refused Christian burial. He had died of nursing an old pupil through cholera. So his own boys carried his dead body and buried it in a swamp and made the grave a place of pilgrimage. That place has now become College Square, the educational centre, and his school is now within the university. And to this day Calcutta students make pilgrimage to the tomb.

On this day we took advantage of the natural turn of the conversation to cross-question the Swami as to the possible influence that Christianity might have exerted over himself. He was much amused to hear that such a statement had been hazarded, and told us with much pride of his only contact with missionary influences, in the person of his old Scotch master, Mr. Hastie. This hot-headed old man lived on nothing and regarded his room as his boys' home as much as his own. It was he who had first sent the Swami to Shri Ramakrishna, and towards the end of his stay in India he used to say, "Yes, my boy, you were right, you were right!—It is true that all is God!" "I am proud of him!" cried the Swami. "But I don't think you could say that he had Christianized me much!" . . .

We heard charming stories too on less serious subjects. There was the lodging-house in an American city, for instance, where he had had to cook his own food, and where he would meet in the course of operations "an actress who ate roast turkey every day, and a husband and wife who lived by making ghosts". And when the Swami remonstrated with the husband and tried to persuade him to give up deceiving people, saying, "You ought not to do this!" the wife would come up behind and say eagerly, "Yes, sir! That's just what I tell him; for he makes all the ghosts, and Mrs. Williams takes all the money!"

He told us also of a young engineer, an educated man, who, at a spiritualistic gathering, "when the fat Mrs. Williams appeared from behind the screen as his thin mother, exclaimed, 'Mother dear, how you have grown in the spirit-world!' "

"At this", said the Swami, "my heart broke, for I thought there could be no hope for the man". But never at a loss, he told the story of a Russian painter who was ordered to paint the pic-

1 ture of a peasant's dead father, the only description given being, "Man! Don't I tell you he had a 2 wart on his nose?" When at last, therefore, the painter had made a portrait of some stray peasant and 3 affixed a large wart to the nose, the picture was declared to be ready, and the son was told to come and 4 see it. He stood in front of it, greatly overcome, and said, "Father! Father! How changed you are since I 5 saw you last!" After this, the young engineer would never speak to the Swami again, which showed at 6 least that he could see the point of a story. But at this the Hindu monk was genuinely astonished.

7 In spite of such general interests, however, the inner strife grew high, and the thought pressed on 8 the mind of one of the older members of our party that the Master himself needed service and peace.
9 Many times he spoke with wonder of the torture of life, and who can say how many signs there were of 10 bitter need? A word or two was spoken—little, but enough—and he, after many hours, came back and told 11 us that he longed for quiet and would go alone to the forests and find soothing.

12 And then, looking up, he saw the young moon shining above us, and he said, "The Mohammedans 13 think much of the new moon. Let us also, with the new moon, begin a new life!" And he blessed his 14 daughter with a great blessing so that she, thinking that her old relationship was broken, nor dreaming 15 that a new and deeper life was being given to it, knew only that the hour was strange and passing sweet. .
16 . .

17 MAY 25

18 He went. It was Wednesday. And on Saturday he came back. He had been in the silence of the 19 forests ten hours each day, but on returning to his tent in the evenings he had been surrounded with so 20 much eager attendance as to break the mood, and he had fled. Yet he was radiant. He had discovered in 21 himself the old-time Sannyasin, able to go barefoot and endure heat, cold and scanty fare, unspoilt by the 22 West. . . .

1 JUNE 2.

2

3 And then, as we sat working on Friday morning the telegram came, a day late, that said: "Goodwin 4 died last night at Ootacamund". Our poor friend had, it appeared, been one of the first victims of what was 5 to prove an epidemic of typhoid fever. And it seemed that with his last breath he had spoken of the Swami 6 and longed for his presence by his side.

7 JUNE 5.

8 On Sunday evening the Swami came home. Through our gate and over the terrace his way brought 9 him, and there we sat and talked with him a moment. He did not know our news, but a great darkness 10 hung over him already, and presently he broke the silence to remind us of that saint who had called the 11 cobra's bite "messenger from the Beloved", one whom he had loved second only to Shri Ramakrishna
12 himself. "I have just", he said, "received a letter that says: 'Pavhari Baba has completed all his sacrifices 13 with the sacrifice of his own body. He has burnt himself in his sacrificial fire'". "Swami!" exclaimed 14 someone from amongst his listeners. "Wasn't that very wrong?"

15 "How can I tell?" said the Swami, speaking in great agitation. "He was too great a man for me to 16 judge. He knew himself what he was doing."

17 Very little was said after this, and the party of monks passed on. Not yet had the other news been 18 broken.

19 JUNE 6.

20 Next morning he came early in a great mood. He had been up, he said afterwards, since four. And 21 one went out to meet him and told him of Mr. Goodwin's death. The blow fell quietly. Some days later he 22 refused to stay in the place where he had received it, and complained of the weakness that brought the 23 image of his most faithful disciple constantly into his mind. It was no more manly, he protested, to be thus 24 ridden by one's

1 memory than to retain the characteristics of the fish or the dog. Man must conquer this illusion and 2 know that the dead are here beside us and with us as much as ever. It is their absence and separation that 3 are a myth. And then he would break out again with some bitter utterance against the folly of imagining
4 Personal Will to guide the universe. "As if", he exclaimed, "it would not be one's right and duty to fight
5 such a God and slay Him for killing Goodwin! And Goodwin, if he had lived, could have done so much!"
6 And in India one was free to recognize this as the most religious, because the most unflinchingly truthful, 7 mood of all!

8 And while I speak of this utterance, I may perhaps put beside it another that I heard a year later, 9 spoken out of the same fierce wonder at the dreams with which we comfort ourselves. "Why!" he said 10 then. "Every petty magistrate and officer is allowed his period of retirement and rest. Only God, the 11 Eternal Magistrate, must sit judging forever and never go free!"

12 But in these first hours the Swami was calm about his loss, and sat down and chatted quietly with 13 us. He was full that morning of Bhakti passing into asceticism, the divine passion that carries the soul on 14 its high tides far out of reach of persons, yet leaves it again struggling to avoid those sweet snares of per-15 sonality.

16 What he said that morning of renunciation proved a hard gospel to one of those who listened, and 17 when he came again she put it to him as her conviction that to love without attachment involved no pain, 18 and was in itself ideal.

19 He turned on her with a sudden solemnity. "What is this idea of Bhakti without renunciation?" he 20 said. "It is most pernicious!" And standing there for an hour or more, he talked of the awful self-discipline 21 that one must impose on oneself if one would indeed be unattached, of the requisite nakedness of selfish 22 motives, and of the danger that at any moment the most flower-like soul might have its petals soiled with 23 the grosser stains of life. He told the story of an Indian nun who was asked when a man could be certain 24 of safety on this road, and who sent back for answer a little plate of ashes. For the fight against passion 25 was long and fierce, and at any moment the conqueror might become the conquered. . . .

. . . Weeks afterwards in Kashmir, when he was again talking in some kindred fashion, one of us ventured to ask him if the feeling he thus roused were not that worship of pain that Europe abhors as morbid.

"Is the worship of pleasure, then, so noble?" was his immediate answer. "But indeed", he added after a pause, "we worship neither pain nor pleasure. We seek through either to come at that which transcends them both".

JUNE 9.

This Thursday morning there was a talk on Krishna. It was characteristic of the Swami's mind, and characteristic also of the Hindu culture from which he had sprung, that he could lend himself to the enjoyment and portrayal of an idea one day that the next would see submitted to a pitiless analysis and left slain upon the field. He was a sharer to the full in the belief of his people that, provided an idea was spiritually true and consistent, it mattered very little about its objective actuality. And this mode of thought had first been suggested to him in his boyhood by his own master. He had mentioned some doubt as to the authenticity of a certain religious history. "What!" said Shri Ramakrishna. "Do you not then think that those who could conceive such ideas must have been the thing itself?"

The existence of Krishna, then, like that of Christ, he often told us "in the general way" he doubted. Buddha and Mohammed alone amongst religious teachers had been fortunate enough to have "enemies as well as friends", so that their historical careers were beyond dispute. As for Krishna, he was the most shadowy of all. A poet, a cowherd, a great ruler, a warrior and a sage had all perhaps been merged in one beautiful figure holding the Gitâ in his hand.

But today Krishna was "the most perfect of the Avatâras". And a wonderful picture followed of the charioteer who reined in his horses while he surveyed the field of battle and in one brief glance noted the disposition of the forces, at the same moment that he commenced to utter to his royal pupil the deep spiritual truths of the Gita.

And indeed as we went through the countrysides of northern India this summer, we had many chances of noting how deep this Krishna myth had set its mark upon the people. The songs that dancers chanted as they danced in the roadside hamlets were all of Râdhâ and Krishna. And the Swami was fond of a statement, as to which we, of course, could have no opinion, that the Krishna-worshippers of India had exhausted the possibilities of the romantic motive in lyric poetry. . . .

But throughout these days the Swami was fretting to be away and alone. The place where he had heard of Mr. Goodwin's loss was intolerable to him, and letters to be written and received constantly renewed the wound. He said one day that Shri Ramakrishna, while seeming to be all Bhakti, was really within all Jnâna; but he himself, apparently all Jnana, was full of Bhakti, and that thereby he was apt to be as weak as any woman.

One day he carried off a few faulty lines of someone's writing and brought back a little poem, which was sent to the widowed mother as his memorial of her son. . . . [Vide "Requi-escat in Pace", Complete Works, IV: 389.]

And then, because there was nothing left of the original and he feared that she who was corrected (because her lines had been "in three metres") might be hurt, he expatiated, long and earnestly upon the theme, that it was so much greater to feel poetically than merely to string syllables together in rhyme and metre.⁵³¹ He might be very severe on a sympathy or an opinion

⁵³¹ ? In the original manuscript of the book Sister Nivedita added the following note:

"In obedience to the beloved wish of S. Sara, I give here the original lines:

Speed forth, lonely Soul, upon thy star-strewn path,

Spread, lonely soul, upon thy meditative way,

Freed from the mists of time and sense—

Ascend;

Service complete and service accepted, from

Thy home in the deep heart of Love Transcendent find

Incense and flowers and music fill thy place behind thee,

Rest, weary soul!

Severed all bonds that held thee, ended thy quest—

Then lost in the ocean—one with the Life Immortal.

Peace, happy soul!

1 that seemed in his eyes sentimental or false. But an effort that failed found always in the Master its 2 warmest advocate and tenderest defence.

3 And how happy was that acknowledgment of the bereaved mother to him when in the midst of her 4 sorrow she wrote and thanked him for the character of his influence over the son who had died so far 5 away!

6 JUNE 10.

7 It was our last afternoon at Almora that we heard the story of the fatal illness of Shri Ramakrishna.
8 Dr. Mahendra Lal Sarkar had been called in and had pronounced the disease to be cancer of the throat, 9 leaving the young disciples with many warnings as to its infectious nature. Half an hour later "Naren", as 10 he then was, came in and found them huddled together discussing the dangers of the case. He listened to 11 what they had been told and then, looking down, saw at his feet the cup of gruel that had been partly 12 taken by Shri Ramakrishna and which must have contained in it the germs of the fatal discharges of 13 mucus and pus, as it came out in his baffled attempts to swallow the thing on account of the stricture of 14 the food-passage in the throat. He picked it up and drank from it before them all. Never was the infection 15 of cancer mentioned amongst the disciples again.

3 "It has three metres"—said the Master. Again, he said, "The line that really strikes the poetic note is that—"Thy home in the deep 4 heart of Love Transcendent find"."

1 CHAPTER IV

3 ON THE WAY TO KATHGODAM

5 JUNE 11.

6 On Saturday morning we left Almora. It took us two days and a half to reach Kathgodam. . . .

7 Somewhere en route near a curious old water-mill and deserted forge, the Swami told Dhira Mata of 8 a legend that spoke of this hill-side as haunted by a race of centaur-like phantoms, and of an experience 9 known to him by which one had first seen forms there and only afterwards heard the folk tale.

10 The roses were gone by this time, but a flower was in bloom that crumbled at a touch, and he 11 pointed this out because of its wealth of associations in Indian poetry.

12 JUNE 12.

13 On Sunday afternoon we rested near the plains in what we took to be an out-of-the-way hotel above 14 a lake and fall, and there he translated for us the Rudra prayer:

16 From the unreal lead us to the Real.

17 From darkness lead us unto light.

18 From death lead us to immortality.

19 Reach us through and through our self.

20 And evermore protect us—O Thou Terrible!—

21 From ignorance, by Thy sweet, compassionate face.

23 He hesitated a long time over the fourth line, thinking of rendering it, "Embrace us in the heart of

1 our heart". But at last he put his perplexity to us, saying shyly, "The real meaning is, Reach us through 2 and through our self". He had evidently feared that this sentence, with its extraordinary intensity, might 3 not make good sense in English. . . . I have understood that a more literal rendering would be, "O Thou 4 who art manifest only unto

1 Thysself, manifest Thysself also unto us!" I now regard his translation as a rapid and direct transcript
2 of the experience of Samâdhi itself. It tears the living heart out of the Sanskrit, as it were, and renders it 3 again in an English form.

4 It was indeed an afternoon of translations, and he gave us fragments of the great benediction after 5 mourning, which is one of the most beautiful of the Hindu sacraments:

6
7 The blissful winds are sweet to us.

8 The seas are showering bliss on us.

9 May the corn in our fields bring bliss to us.

10 May the plants and herbs bring bliss to us.

11 May the cattle give us bliss.

12 O Father in Heaven, be Thou blissful unto us!

13 Thy very dust of the earth is full of bliss.

14
15 And then, the voice dying down into meditation:

16
17 It is all bliss—all bliss—all bliss.

18
19 And again we had Suradâsa's song, which the Swami heard from the nautch-girl at Khetri:

20
21 O Lord, look not upon my evil qualities!

22 Thy name, O Lord, is Same-Sightedness.

23 Make of us both the same Brahman! . . .

1
2 Was it that same day or some other that he told us of the old Sannyâsin in Benares who saw him
3 annoyed by troops of monkeys and, afraid that he might turn and run, shouted, "Always face the brute!"?

4 Those journeys were delightful. We were always sorry to reach a destination. At this time it took us
5 a whole afternoon to cross the Terai by rail—that strip of malarial country on which, as he reminded us, 6 Buddha had been born.

7 As we had come down the mountain roads, we had met parties of country-folk fleeing to the upper 8 hills with their families and all their goods, to escape the fever which would be upon them with the rains.
9 And now in the train there was the

1 conversations and interviews 391
2

1 gradual change of vegetation to watch and the Master's pleasure, greater than that of any 2 proprietor, in showing us the wild peacocks, or here and there an elephant or a train of camels. . . .

1 CHAPTER V

3 ON THE WAY TO BARAMULLA

5 PERSONS: The Swami Vivekananda, Gurubhais, and a party of Europeans and disciples, amongst 6 whom were Dhira Mata, the "Steady Mother"; one whose name was Jaya; and Nivedita.

7 PLACE: From Bareilly to Baramulla, Kashmir.

8 TIME: June 14 to 20, 1898.

9 JUNE 14.

10 We entered the Punjab next day, and great was the Swami's excitement at the fact. It almost seemed 11 as if he had been born there, so close and special was his love for this province. He talked of the girls at 12 their spinning wheels listening to the "So'ham! So'ham!"—I am He! I am He! Then, by a swift transition he 13 turned to the far past and unrolled for us the great historic panorama of the advance of the Greeks on the 14 Indus, the rise of Chandragupta and the development of the Buddhistic empire. He was determined this 15 summer to find his way to Attock and see with his own eyes the spot at which Alexander was turned back.
16 He described to us the Gandhara sculptures, which he must have seen in the Lahore Museum the year
17 before, and lost himself in indignant repudiation of the absurd European claim that India had ever sat at 18 the feet of Greece in things artistic.

19 Then there were flying glimpses of long-expected cities—

20 Ludhiana, where certain trusty English disciples had lived as children; Lahore, where his Indian 21 lectures had ended; and so on. We came too upon the dry gravel beds of many rivers and learnt that the 22 space between one pair was called the Doab and the area containing them all, the Punjab.

23 It was at twilight, crossing one of these stony tracts, that he told us of that great vision which came 24 to him years ago, while he was still new to the ways of the life of a monk, giving back to him, as he always afterwards believed, the ancient mode of Sanskrit chanting.

"It was evening", he said, "in that age when the Aryans had only reached the Indus. I saw an old man seated on the bank of the great river. Wave upon wave of darkness was rolling in upon him, and he was chanting from the Rig-Veda. Then I awoke and went on chanting. They were the tones that we used long ago".

. . . Those who were constantly preoccupied with imagination regarding their own past always aroused his contempt. But on this occasion of telling the story, he gave a glimpse of it from a very different point of view.

"Shankarâchârya", he was saying, "had caught the rhythm of the Vedas, the national cadence. Indeed I always imagine", he went on suddenly with dreamy voice and far-away look, "I always imagine that he had some vision such as mine when he was young, and recovered the ancient music that way. Anyway, his whole life's work is nothing but that, the throbbing of the beauty of the Vedas and Upanishads". . . .

From Rawalpindi to Murree we went by tonga, and there we spent some days before setting out for Kashmir. Here the Swami came to the conclusion that any effort which he might make to induce the orthodox to accept a European as a fellow-disciple, or in the direction of woman's education, had better be made in Bengal. The distrust of the foreigner was too strong in Punjab to admit of work succeeding there. He was much occupied by this question from time to time, and would sometimes remark on the paradox presented by the Bengali combination of political antagonism to the English, and readiness to love and trust. . . .

Most of the afternoon we were compelled by a storm to spend indoors, and a new chapter was opened at Dulai in our knowledge of Hinduism, for the Swami told us gravely and frankly of its modern abuses and spoke of his own uncompro-

1 mising hostility to those evil practices which pass under the name of Vâmâchâra.

2 When we asked how Shri Ramakrishna—who never could bear to condemn the hope of any man—had 3 looked at these things, he told us that "the old man" had said, "Well, well! But every house may have a 4 scavengers' entrance!" And he pointed out that all sects of diabolism in any country belonged to this class.
5 . . .

6 JUNE 19.

7 We took it in turns to drive with the Swami in his tonga, and this next day seemed full of 8 reminiscence.

9 He talked of Brahnavidyâ, the vision of the One, the Alone-Real, and told how love was the only cure 10 for evil. He had had a schoolfellow who grew up and became rich, but lost his health. It was an obscure 11 disease, sapping his energy and vitality daily, yet altogether baffling the skill of the doctors. At last, 12 because he knew that the Swami had always been religious, and men turn to religion when all else fails, 13 he sent to beg him to come to him. When the Master reached him a curious thing happened. There came 14 to his mind a text: "Him the Brahmin conquers who thinks that he is separate from the Brahmin. Him the 15 Kshatriya conquers who thinks that he is separate from the Kshatriya. And him the universe conquers who 16 thinks that he is separate from the universe". And the sick man grasped this and recovered. "And so", said 17 the Swami, "though I often say strange things and angry things, yet remember that in my heart I never 18 seriously mean to preach anything but love! All these things will come right only when we realize that we 19 love each other".

20 Was it then, or the day before, that talking of the great God, he told us how when he was a child his 21 mother would sigh over his naughtiness and say, "So many prayers and austerities, and instead of a good 22 soul, Shiva has sent me you!" till he was hypnotized into a belief that he was really one of Shiva's demons.
23 He thought that for a punishment he had been banished

1 for a while from Shiva's heaven, and that his one effort in life must be to go back there.

2 His first act of sacrilege, he told us once, had been committed at the age of five when he embarked 3 on a stormy argument with his mother, to the effect that when his right hand was soiled with eating, it
4 would be cleaner to lift his tumbler of water with the left. For this or similar perversities her most drastic 5 remedy was to put him under the water tap and, while cold water was pouring over his head, to say 6 "Shiva! Shiva!" This, he said, never failed of its effect. The prayer would remind him of his exile, and he 7 would say to himself, "No, no, not this time again!" and so return to quiet and obedience.

8 He had a surpassing love for Mahâdeva, and once he said of the Indian women of the future that if,
9 amidst their new tasks, they would only remember now and then to say "Shiva! Shiva!" it would be 10 worship enough. The very air of the Himalayas was charged for him with the image of that "eternal 11 meditation" that no thought of pleasure could break. And he understood, he said, for the first time this 12 summer, the meaning of the nature-story that made the Ganges fall on the head of the great God, and 13 wander in and out amongst His matted locks before She found an outlet on the plains below. He had 14 searched long, he said, for the words that the rivers and waterfalls uttered, amongst the mountains, 15 before he had realized that it was the eternal cry "Bom! Bom! Hara! Hara!"

16 "Yes!" he said of Shiva one day, "He is the great God—17 calm, beautiful, and silent! And I am His great worshipper".

18 Again his subject was marriage, as the type of the soul's relation to God. "This is why", he exclaimed, 19 "though the love of a mother is in some ways greater, yet the whole world takes the love of man and 20 woman as the type. No other has such tremendous idealizing power. The beloved actually becomes what 21 he is imagined to be. This love transforms its object".

22 Then the talk strayed to national types, and he spoke of the joy with which the returning traveller
23 greets once more the sight of the men and women of his own country. The whole of life has been a 24 subconscious education to enable one to understand in these every faintest ripple of expression in face 25 and form.

And again we passed a group of Sannyâsins going on foot, and he broke out into fierce invective against asceticism as "savagery" But the sight of wayfarers doing slow miles on foot in the name of their ideals seemed to rouse in his mind a train of painful associations, and he grew impatient on behalf of humanity at "the torture of religion". Then again the mood passed as suddenly as it had arisen and gave place to the equally strong statement of the conviction that were it not for this "savagery", luxury would have robbed man of all his manliness.

We stopped that evening at Uri Dak bungalow, and in the twilight we all walked in the meadows and the bazaar. How beautiful the place was! A little mud fortress—exactly of the European feudal pattern—overhung the footway as it swept into a great open theatre of field and hill. Along the road above the river lay the bazaar, and we returned to the bungalow by a path across the fields, past cottages in whose gardens the roses were in bloom. As we came, too, it would happen that here and there some child more venturesome than others would play with us.

JUNE 20.

The next day, driving through the most beautiful part of the pass and seeing cathedral rocks and an old ruined temple of the sun, we reached Baramulla. The legend is that the Vale of Kashmir was once a lake and that at this point the Divine Boar pierced the mountains with his tusks and let the Jhelum go free. Another piece of geography in the form of myth. Or is it also prehistoric history?

1 CHAPTER VI

3 THE VALE OF KASHMIR

5 PERSONS: The Swami Vivekananda and a party of Europeans and disciples, amongst whom were 6 Dhira Mata, the "Steady Mother"; one whose name was Jaya; and Nivedita.

7 PLACE: The River Jhelum—Baramulla to Srinagar.

8 TIME: June 20 to June 22.

10 "It is said that the Lord Himself is the weight on the side of the fortunate!" cried the Swami in high 11 glee, returning to our room at the Dak bungalow and sitting down with his umbrella on his knees. As he 12 had brought no companion, he had himself to perform all the ordinary little masculine offices, and he had 13 gone out to hire Dungas [houseboats] and do what was necessary. But he had immediately fallen in with a 14 man who, on hearing his name, had undertaken the whole business and sent him back free of 15 responsibility.

16 So we enjoyed the day. We drank Kashmiri tea out of a Samovar and ate the jam of the country, and 17 at about four o'clock we entered into possession of a flotilla of Dungas, three in number, on which 18 presently we set forth for Srinagar. The first evening, however, we were moored by the garden of the 19 Swami's friend. . . .

20 We found ourselves next day in the midst of a beautiful valley ringed round with snow mountains.
21 This is known as the Vale of Kashmir, but it might be more accurately described, perhaps, as the Vale of 22 Srinagar. . . .

23 That first morning, taking a long walk across the fields, we came upon an immense chennaar tree 24 standing in the midst of a wide pasture. It really looked as if the passage through it might shelter the 25 proverbial twenty cows! The Swami fell to architectural visions of how it might be fitted up as a 26 dwelling-place for a hermit. A small cottage might in fact have been built in the hollow of this living tree.

1 conversations and interviews 398
2

1 And then he talked of meditation, in a way to consecrate every chennaar we should ever see.

1 We turned with him into the neighbouring farmyard. There we found, seated under a tree, a 2 singularly handsome elderly woman. She wore the crimson coronet and white veil of the Kashmiri wife 3 and sat spinning wool, while round her, helping her, were her two daughters-in-law and their children.
4 The Swami had called at this farm once before in the previous autumn and had often spoken since of the 5 faith and pride of this very woman. He had begged for water, which she had at once given him. Then,
6 before going, he had asked her quietly, "And what, Mother, is your religion?" "I thank God, sir!" had rung
7 out the old voice in pride and triumph. "By the mercy of the Lord, I am a Mussulman!" The whole family 8 received him now as an old friend and were ready to show every courtesy to the friends he had brought.

9 The journey to Srinagar took two to three days, and one evening, as we walked in the fields before 10 supper, one who had seen the Kalighat complained to the Master of the abandonment of feeling there, 11 which had jarred on her. "Why do they kiss the ground before the image?" she exclaimed. The Swami had 12 been pointing to the crop of Til—which he thought to have been the original of the English dill—and calling 13 it "the oldest oil-bearing seed of the Aryans". But at this question he dropped the little blue flower from his 14 hands, and a great hush came over his voice as he stood still and said, "Is it not the same thing to kiss the 15 ground before that image as to kiss the ground before these mountains?"

16 Our master had promised that before the end of the summer he would take us into retreat and teach 17 us to meditate. . . . It was decided that we should first see the country and afterwards make the retreat.

18 The first evening in Srinagar we dined out with some Bengali officials, and in the course of 19 conversation one of the Western guests maintained that the history of every nation illustrated and evolved 20 certain ideals to which the people of that nation should hold themselves true. It was very curious to see 21 how the Hindus present objected to this. To them it was clearly a bondage to which the mind of man could 22 not permanently submit itself. Indeed, in their revolt against the fetters of the doctrine, they appeared to 23 be unable to do justice to the idea itself.

1 At last the Swami intervened. "I think you must admit", he said, "that the ultimate unit is 2 psychological. This is much more permanent than the geographical". And then he spoke of cases known to 3 us all, of one of whom he always thought as the most typical "Christian" he had ever seen, yet she was a 4 Bengali woman, and of another, born in the West, who was "a better Hindu than himself". And was not 5 this, after all, the ideal state of things, that each should be born in the other's country to spread the given 6 ideal as far as it could be carried?

2 CHAPTER VII

3
4 LIFE AT SRINAGAR

5
6 PLACE: Srinagar.

7 TIME: June 22 to July 15, 1898.

8
9 In the mornings we still had long talks as before—some-times it would be the different religious 10 periods through which Kashmir had passed, or the morality of Buddhism, or the history of Shiva-worship, 11 or perhaps the position of Srinagar under Kanishka.

12 Once he was talking with one of us about Buddhism, and he suddenly said, "The fact is, Buddhism 13 tried to do, in the time of Ashoka, what the world never was ready for till now!" He referred to the 14 federalization of religions. It was a wonderful picture, this, of the religious imperialism of Ashoka, broken 15 down time and again by successive waves of Christianity and Mohammedanism, each claiming exclusive 16 rights over the conscience of mankind and finally to seem to have a possibility, within measurable distance 17 of time, today!

18 Another time the talk was of Genghis, or Chenghis, Khan, the conqueror from Central Asia. "You 19 hear people talk of him as a vulgar aggressor", he cried passionately, "but that is not true! They are never 20 greedy or vulgar, these great souls! He was inspired with the thought of unity, and he wanted to unify his 21 world. Yes, Napoleon was cast in the same mould. And another, Alexander. Only those three, or perhaps 22 one soul manifesting itself in three different conquests!" And then he passed on to speak of that one soul 23 whom he believed to have come again and again in religion, charged with the divine impulse to bring 24 about the unity of man in God.

25 At this time the transfer of the Prabuddha Bharata from Madras to the newly established Ashrama at 26 Mayavati was much in all our thoughts. The Swami had always had a special love for this paper, as the

1 beautiful name he had given it indicated. He had always been eager too for the establishment of organs of 2 his own. The value of the journal in the education of modern India was perfectly evident to him, and he felt 3 that his master's message and mode of thought required to be spread by this means as well as by 4 preaching and by work. Day after day, therefore, he would dream about the future of his papers, as about 5 the work in its various centres. Day after day he would talk of the forthcoming first number under the new 6 editorship of Swami Swarupananda. And one afternoon he brought to us, as we sat together, a paper on which he said he had "tried to write a letter, but it would come this way!" . . . [Vide "To the Awak-ened India", Complete Works, IV: 387-89.]

JUNE 26.

The Master was longing to leave us all and go away into some place of quiet, alone. But we, not knowing this, insisted on accompanying him to the Coloured Springs, called "Kshir Bhavâni", or "Milk of the Mother". It was said to be the first time that Christian or Mohammedan had ever landed there, and we can never be thankful enough for the glimpse we had of it since afterwards it was to become the most sacred of all names to us. . . .

JUNE 29.

Another day we went off quietly by ourselves and visited the Takt-i-Suleiman, a little temple very massively built on the summit of a small mountain two or three thousand feet high. It was peaceful and beautiful, and the famous Floating Gardens could be seen below us for miles around. The Takt-i-Suleiman was one of the great illustrations of the Swami's argument when he would take up the subject of the Hindu love of nature as shown in the choice of sites for temples and architectural monuments. As he had declared, in London, that the saints lived on the hill-tops in order to enjoy the scenery, so now he pointed out—citing one example after another—that our Indian people always consecrated places of peculiar beauty and importance by making there their altars of worship. And there was no denying that the little Takt, crowning the hill that dominated the whole valley, was a case in point.

Many lovely fragments of those days come into mind, as:

Therefore, Tulasi, take thou care to live with all, for who can tell where, or in what garb, the Lord Himself may next come to thee?

One God is hidden in all these, the Torturer of all, the Awakener of all, the Reservoir

2

1 of all being, the One who is bereft of all
2 qualities.

3

4 There the sun does not shine, nor the moon,
5 nor the stars.

1 There was the story of how Râvana was advised to take the form of Râma in order to cheat Sitâ. He 2 answered, "Have I not thought of it? But in order to take a man's form you must meditate on him; and 3 Rama is the Lord Himself; so when I meditate on him, even the position of Brahmâ becomes a mere straw.
4 How, then, could I think of a woman?"

5 "And so", commented the Swami, "even in the commonest or most criminal life, there are these 6 glimpses". It was ever thus. He was constantly interpreting human life as the expression of God, never 7 insisting on the heinousness or wickedness of the act or a character.

8 "In that which is dark night to the rest of the world, there the man of self-control is awake. That 9 which is life to the rest of the world is sleep to him."

10 Speaking of Thomas à Kempis one day, and of how he himself used to wander as a Sannyâsin with 11 the Gitâ and the Imitation as his whole library, one word, he said, came back to him, inseparably 12 associated with the name of the Western monk:

13
14 Silence! ye teachers of the world, and silence!
15 ye prophets! Speak Thou alone, O Lord, unto my soul!

17 Again:

18
19 The soft Shirisha flower can bear the weight of 20 humming bees, but not of birds—
21 So Umâ, don't you go and make Tapasyâ!
22 Come, Uma, come! delight and idol of my soul!
23 Be seated, Mother, on the lotus of my heart, 24 And let me take a long, long look at you.

1 conversations and interviews 406
2

1 From my birth up, I am gazing,
2 Mother, at your face—
3 Know you suffering what trouble,
4 and pain?
5 Be seated, therefore, Blessed One,
6 on the lotus of my heart,
7 And dwell there for evermore.

8
9 Every now and then there would be long talks about the Gita—"that wonderful poem, without one 10 note in it of weakness or unmanliness." He said one day that it was absurd to complain that knowledge 11 was not given to women or to Shudras. For the whole gist of the Upanishads was contained in the Gita.
12 Without it, indeed, they could hardly be understood; and women and all castes could read the 13 Mahâbhârata.

1 JULY 4.

2 With great fun and secrecy the Swami and his one non-American disciple prepared to celebrate 3 the Fourth of July. A regret had been expressed in his hearing that we had no American flag with which to 4 welcome the other members of the party to breakfast on their national festival; and late on the afternoon
5 of the third, he brought a Pundit Durzey [Brahmin tailor] in great excitement, explaining that this man
6 would be glad to imitate it if he were told how. The stars and stripes were very crudely represented, I 7 fear, on the piece of cotton that was nailed with branches of evergreens to the head of the 8 dining-room-boat when the Americans stepped on board for early tea on Independence Day! But the 9 Swami had postponed a journey in order to be present at the little festival, and he himself contributed a 10 poem to the addresses that were now read aloud by way of greeting. . . . [Vide "To the Fourth of July", 11 Complete Works, V: 439-40.]

12 JULY 5.

13 That evening someone pained him by counting the cherry-stones left on her plate, to see when she 14 would be married. He somehow took the play in earnest and came the following morning surcharged with 15 passion for the ideal renunciation.

16 JULY 6.

17 "These shadows of home and marriage cross even my mind now and then!" he cried, with that 18 tender desire to make himself one with the sinner that he so often showed. But it was across oceans of 19 scorn for those who would glorify the householder that he sought on this occasion to preach the religious 20 life. "Is it so easy", he exclaimed, "to be Janaka? To sit on a throne absolutely unattached? Caring nothing 21 for wealth or fame, for wife or child? One after another in the West has told me that he had reached this.
22 But I could only say, 'Such great men are not born in India!'"

23 And then he turned to the other side.

24 "Never forget", he said to one of his hearers, "to say to yourself, and to teach to your children: as is 25 the difference between a firefly and the blazing sun, between the infinite ocean and a little pond, between 26 a mustard-seed and the mountain of 1 Meru, such is the difference between the householder and the Sannyasin!"

2 "Everything is fraught with fear: Renunciation alone is fearless."

3 "Blessed be even the fraudulent Sâdhus, and those who have failed to carry out their vows, 4 inasmuch as they also have witnessed to the ideal and so are in some degree the cause of the success of 5 others!"

6 "Let us never, never, forget our ideal!"

7 At such moments he would identify himself entirely with the thought he sought to demonstrate, and 8 in the same sense in which a law of nature might be deemed cruel or arrogant, his exposition might have 9 those qualities. Sitting and listening, we felt ourselves brought face to face with the invisible and absolute.

10 All this was on our return to Srinagar from the real Fourth of July celebration, which had been a visit 11 to Dahl Lake. . . .

12 At nine o'clock on the evening of the following Sunday, July the 10th, the first two [Dhira Mata and 13 Jaya] came back unexpectedly, and presently, from many different sources, we gathered the news that the 14 Master had gone to Amarnath by the Sonamarg route and would return another way. He had started out 15 penniless, but that could give no concern to his friends, in a Hindu native state. . . .

16 JULY 15.

17 What were we setting out for? We were just moving to go down the river on Friday, and it was close 18 on five in the afternoon when the servants recognized some of their friends in the distance, and word was 19 brought that the Swami's boat was coming towards us.

20 An hour later he was with us, saying how pleasant it was to be back. The summer had been 21 unusually hot and certain gla-ciers had given way, rendering the Sonamarg route to Amarnath 22 impracticable. This fact had caused his return.

23 But from this moment dated the first of three great increments of joy and realization that we saw in 24 him during our months in Kashmir. It was almost as if we could verify for ourselves the truth of that saying 25 of his Guru: "There is indeed a certain ignorance. It has been placed there by my Holy Mother that her 26 work may be done. But it is only like a film of tissue paper. It might be rent at any moment".

3 THE TEMPLE OF PANDRENTHAN

5 PERSONS: The Swami Vivekananda and a party of Europeans and disciples, amongst whom were 6 Dhira Mata, the "Steady Mother"; one whose name was Jaya; and Nivedita.

7 PLACE: Kashmir.

8 TIME: July 16 to 19, 1898.

9 JULY 16.

10 It fell to the lot of one of the Swami's disciples next day to go down the river with him in a small 11 boat. As it went, he chanted one song after another of Râmprasâd, and now and again he would translate 12 a verse:

14 I call upon thee, Mother.

15 For though his mother strikes him,

16 The child cries, "Mother! Oh, Mother!"

18 Though I cannot see Thee,

19 I am not a lost child!

20 I still cry, "Mother! Mother!"

22 And then with the haughty dignity of an offended child, some-thing that ended, "I am not the son to 23 call any other woman 'Mother'!"

2 JULY 17.

3 It must have been next day that he came into Dhira Mata's Dunga and talked of Bhakti. First it was 4 that curious Hindu thought of Shiva and Umâ in one. It is easy to give the words, but without the voice 5 how comparatively dead they seem! And

1 then there were the wonderful surroundings—picturesque Srinagar, tall Lombardy poplars and 2 distant snows. There in that river-valley, some space from the foot of the great mountains, he chanted to 3 us how "the Lord took a form and that was a divided form, half woman and half man. On one side, 4 beautiful garlands; on the other, bone earrings and coils of snakes. On one side, the hair black, beautiful 5 and in curls; on the other, twisted like rope". And then passing immediately into the other form of the 6 same thought, he quoted:

7
8 God became Krishna and Râdhâ—
9 Love flows in thousands of coils.
10 Whoso wants, takes it.
11 Love flows in thousands of coils—
12 The tide of love and loving past,
13 And fills the soul with bliss and joy!

15 So absorbed was he that his breakfast stood unheeded long after it was ready, and when at last he 16 went reluctantly—saying, "When one has all this Bhakti what does one want with food?"

17 —it was only to come back again quickly and resume the subject.

18 But either now or at some other time he said that he did not talk of Radha and Krishna where he 19 looked for deeds. It was Shiva who made stern and earnest workers, and to Him the labourer must be 20 dedicated.

21 The next day he gave us a quaint saying of Shri Ramakrishna, comparing the critics of others to bees 22 or flies, according as they chose honey or wounds.

23 And then we were off to Islamabad, and really, as it proved, to Amarnath.

24
25 JULY 19.

1 conversations and interviews 413
2

1 The first afternoon, in a wood by the side of the Jhelum, we discovered the long-sought temple of 2 Pandrenthan (Pandresthan, place of the Pândavas?).

1 It was sunk in a pond, and this was thickly covered with scum out of which it rose, a tiny cathedral
2 of the long ago, built of heavy grey limestone. The temple consisted of a small cell with four doorways 3 opening to the cardinal points. Externally it was a tapering pyramid—with its top truncated, to give 4 foot-hold to a bush—supported on a four-pierced pedestal. In its architecture, trefoil and triangular arches
5 were combined in an unusual fashion with each other and with the straight-lined lintel. It was built with 6 marvellous solidity, and the necessary lines were somewhat obscured by heavy ornament. . . .

7 For all but the Swami himself, this was our first peep at Indian archaeology. So when he had been 8 through it, he taught us how to observe the interior.

9 In the centre of the ceiling was a large sun-medallion, set in a square whose points were the points
10 of the compass. This left four equal triangles at the corners of the ceiling, which were filled with sculpture 11 in low relief, male and female figures intertwined with serpents, beautifully done. On the wall were empty 12 spaces, where seemed to have been a band of topes.

13 Outside, carvings were similarly distributed. In one of the trefoil arches—over, I think, the eastern 14 door—was a fine image of the Teaching Buddha, standing, with his hand uplifted. Running round the 15 buttresses was a much-defaced frieze of a seated woman with a tree—evidently Mâyâ Devi, the mother of 16 Buddha. The three other door-niches were empty, but a slab by the pond-side seemed to have fallen from 17 one, and this contained a bad figure of a king, said by the country-people to represent the sun.

18 The masonry of this little temple was superb and probably accounted for its long preservation. A 19 single block of stone would be so cut as to correspond not to one brick in a wall, but to a section of the 20 architect's plan. It would turn a corner and form part of two distinct walls, or sometimes even of three.
21 This fact made one take the building as very, very old, possibly even earlier than Marttanda. The theory of 22 the workmen seemed so much more that of carpentering than of building! The water about it was 23 probably an overflow into the temple-court from the sacred spring that the chapel itself may have been 24 placed, as the Swami thought, to enshrine.

To him, the place was delightfully suggestive. It was a direct memorial of Buddhism, representing one of the four religious periods into which he had already divided the history of Kashmir: (1) tree and snake worship, from which dated all the names of the springs ending in Nag, as Verinag, and so on; (2) Buddhism; (3) Hinduism, in the form of sun worship; and (4) Mohammedanism.

Sculpture, he told us, was the characteristic art of Buddhism, and the sun-medallion, or lotus, one of its commonest ornaments. The figures with the serpents referred to pre-Buddhism. But sculpture had greatly deteriorated under sun worship, hence the crudity of the Surya figure. . . .

It was the time of sunset—such a sunset! The mountains in the west were all a shimmering purple. Further north they were blue with snow and cloud. The sky was green and yellow and touched with red—bright flame and daffodil colours, against a blue and opal background. We stood and looked, and then the Master, catching sight of the throne of Solomon—that little Takt which we already loved—exclaimed, "What genius the Hindu shows in placing his temples! He always chooses a grand scenic effect! See! The Takt commands the whole of Kashmir. The rock of Hari Parbat rises red out of blue water, like a lion couchant, crowned. And the temple of Marttanda has the valley at its feet!"

Our boats were moored near the edge of the wood, and we could see that the presence of the silent chapel, of the Buddha, which we had just explored, moved the Swami deeply. That evening we all foregathered in Dhira Mata's houseboat, and a little of the conversation has been noted down.

Our master had been talking of Christian ritual as derived from Buddhist, but one of the party would have none of the theory.

"Where did Buddhist ritual itself come from?" she asked.

"From Vedic", answered the Swami briefly.

"Or as it was present also in southern Europe, is it not better to suppose a common origin for it and the Christian and the Vedic rituals?"

"No! No!" he replied. "You forget that Buddhism was entirely within Hinduism! Even caste was not attacked—it was not yet crystallized, of course!—and Buddha merely tried to restore the ideal. He who attains to God in this life, says Manu, is the Brahmin. Buddha would have had it so, if he could."

"But how are Vedic and Christian rituals connected?" persisted his opponent. "How could they be the same? You have nothing even corresponding to the central rite of our worship!"

"Why, yes!" said the Swami. "Vedic ritual has its Mass, the offering of food to God; your Blessed Sacrament, our Prasâdam. Only it is offered sitting, not kneeling, as is common in hot countries. They kneel in Tibet. Then too Vedic ritual has its lights, incense, music."

"But", was the somewhat ungracious argument, "has it any common prayer?" Objections urged in this way always elicited some bold paradox which contained a new and unthought-of generalization.

He flashed down on the question. "No! And neither has Christianity! That is pure Protestantism and Protestantism took it from the Mohammedans, perhaps through Moorish influence!

"Mohammedanism is the only religion that has completely broken down the idea of the priest. The leader of prayer stands with his back to the people, and only the reading of the Koran may take place from the pulpit. Protestantism is an approach to this.

"Even the tonsure existed in India, in the shaven head. I have seen a picture of Justinian receiving the Law from two monks, in which the monks' heads are entirely shaven. The monk and nun both existed in pre-Buddhistic Hinduism. Europe gets her orders from the Thebaid."

"At that rate, then, you accept Catholic ritual as Aryan!"

"Yes, almost all Christianity is Aryan, I believe. I am inclined to think Christ never existed. I have doubted that ever since I had my dream—that dream off Crete!⁵³² Indian and Egyp-

⁵³² ? In travelling from Naples to Port Said, on his way back to India, in January 1897, the Swami had a dream of an old and bearded man who appeared before him, saying, "This is the island of Crete", and showing him a place in the island that he might afterwards identify. The vision went on to say that the religion of Christianity had originated in the island of Crete and in connection with this gave him two European words—one of which was Therapeutae—which it declared were derived from Sanskrit. Therapeutae meant "sons" (from the Sanskrit Putra) of the Theras, or Buddhist monks. From this the Swami was to understand that Christianity had originated in a Buddhist mission. The old man added, "The proofs are all here", pointing to the ground. "Dig and you will see!"

As he awoke, feeling that this was no common dream, the Swami rose and tumbled out on deck. Here he met an officer turning in tian ideas met at Alexandria and went forth to the world, tintured with Judaism and Hellenism, as Christianity.

"The Acts and Epistles, you know, are older than the Gospels, and S. John is spurious. The only figure we can be sure of is S. Paul, and he was not an eye-witness, and according to his own showing was capable of Jesuitry—'by all means save souls'—isn't it?

"No! Buddha and Mohammed, alone amongst religious teachers, stand out with historic distinctness—having been fortunate enough to have, while they were living, enemies as well as friends. Krishna—I doubt; a Yogi, a shepherd, and a great king have all been amalgamated in one beautiful figure, holding the Gitâ in his hand.

"Renan's life of Jesus is mere froth. It does not touch Strauss, the real antiquarian. Two things stand out as personal living touches in the life of Christ—the woman taken in adultery, the most beautiful story in literature, and the woman at the well. How strangely true is this last to Indian life! A woman coming to draw water finds, seated at the well-side, a yellow-clad monk. He asks her for water. Then he teaches her and does a little mind-reading and so on. Only in an Indian story, when she went to call the villagers to look and listen, the monk would have taken his chance and fled to the forest!

"On the whole, I think old Rabbi Hillel is responsible for the teachings of Jesus, and an obscure Jewish sect of Nazarenes from his watch. "What o'clock is it?" said the Swami. "Midnight!" was the answer. "Where are we?" he then asked, when to his astonishment the answer came back: "Fifty miles off Crete!"

Our master used to laugh at himself for the strength of the impression that this dream had made on him. But he could never shake it off. The fact that the second of the two etymologies has been lost is deeply to be regretted. The Swami had to say that before he had this dream, it had never occurred to him to doubt that the personality of Christ was strictly historic. We must remember, however, that according to Hindu philosophy, it is the completeness of an idea that is important, and not the question of its historical authenticity. The Swami once asked Shri Ramakrishna, when he was a boy, about this very matter. "Don't you think", answered his Guru, "that those who could invent such things were themselves that?"

2
1 –a sect of great antiquity—suddenly galvanized by S. Paul, furnished the mythic personality as a 2 centre of worship.

3 "The resurrection, of course, is simply spring-cremation. Only the rich Greeks and Romans had had 4 cremation anyway, and the new sun-myth would only stop it amongst the few.

5 "But Buddha! Buddha! Surely he was the greatest man who ever lived. He never drew a breath for 6 himself. Above all, he never claimed worship. He said, 'Buddha is not a man, but a state. I have found the 7 door. Enter, all of you!'

8 "He went to the feast of Ambâpâli, 'the sinner'. He dined with the pariah, though he knew it would 9 kill him, and sent a message to his host on his death-bed, thanking him for the great deliverance. Full of 10 love and pity for a little goat, even before he had attained the truth! You remember how he offered his 11 own head, that of prince and monk, if only the king would spare the kid that he was about to sacrifice, and 12 how the king was so struck by his compassion that he saved its life? Such a mixture of rationalism and 13 feeling was never seen! Surely, surely, there was none like him!"

5 WALKS AND TALKS BESIDE THE JHELUM

6
7 PERSONS: The Swami Vivekananda and a party of Europeans and disciples, amongst whom were 8 Dhira Mata, the "Steady Mother"; one whose name was Jaya; and Nivedita.

9 PLACE: Kashmir.

10 TIME: July 20 to July 29, 1898.

11 JULY 20.

13 That morning the river was broad and shallow and clear, and two of us walked with the Swami
14 across the fields and along the banks about three miles. He began by talking of the sense of sin, how it
15 was Egyptian, Semitic and Aryan. It appears in the Vedas, but quickly passes out. The devil is recognized 16 there as the Lord of Anger. Then, with the Buddhists he became Mâra, the Lord of Lust, and one of the 17 most loved of the Lord Buddha's titles was "Conqueror of Mara". (Vide the Sanskrit lexicon Amarkosha 18 that Swami learnt to patter as a child of four!) But while Satan is the Hamlet of the Bible, in the Hindu 19 scriptures the Lord of Anger never divides creation. He always represents defilement, never duality.

20 Zoroaster was a reformer of some old religion. Even Ormuzd and Ahriman with him were not 21 supreme; they were only manifestations of the Supreme. That older religion must have been Vedantic. So 22 the Egyptians and Semites cling to the theory of sin while the Aryans, as Indians and Greeks, quickly lose 23 it. In India righteousness and sin become Vidyâ and Avidyâ—

24 both to be transcended. Amongst the Aryans, Persians and Europeans become Semitized by religious

1 ideas; hence the sense of sin.⁵³³

3 533 ?
4 One of those who listened to this talk had a wonderful opportunity later of appreciating the accuracy as well as the breadth of the 5 Swami's knowledge, when she saw two Parsis glad to sit at his feet and learn from him the history of their own religious ideas.–N.
6

And then the talk drifted, as it was always so apt to do, to questions of the country and the future. What idea must be urged on a people to give them strength? The line of their own development runs in one way, A. Must the new accession of force be a compensating one, B? This would produce a development midway between the two, C—a geometrical alteration merely. But it was not so.

National life was a question of organic forces. We must reinforce the current of that life itself, and leave it to do the rest. Buddha preached renunciation, and India heard. Yet within a thousand years she had reached her highest point of national prosperity. The national life in India has renunciation as its source. Its highest ideals are service and Mukti. The Hindu mother eats last. Marriage is not for individual happiness, but for the welfare of the nation and the caste. Certain individuals of the modern reform, having embarked on an experiment which could not solve the problem, "are the sacrifices over which the race has to walk".

And then the trend of conversation changed again and became all fun and merriment, jokes and stories. And as we laughed and listened, the boats came up and talk was over for the day.

The whole of that afternoon and night the Swami lay in his boat, ill. But next day, when we landed at the temple of Bijbehara—already thronged with Amarnath pilgrims—he was able to join us for a little while. "Quickly up and quickly down", as he said of himself, was always his characteristic. After that he was with us most of the day, and in the afternoon we reached Islamabad. . . .

In the dusk that evening one came into the little group amongst the apple trees and found the Master engaged in the rarest of rare happenings, a personal talk with Dhira Mata and her whose name was Jaya. He had taken two pebbles into his hand and was saying how, when he was well, his mind might direct itself to this and that, or his will might seem less firm; but let the least touch of pain or illness come, let him look death in the face for a while, and "I am as hard as that (knocking the stones together), for I have touched the feet of God".

And one remembered, apropos of this coolness, the story of a walk across the fields in England, where he and an Englishman and woman had been pursued by an angry bull. The Englishman frankly ran and reached the other side of the hill in safety. The woman ran as far as she could and then sank to the ground, incapable of further effort. Seeing this, and unable to aid her, the Swami—thinking "So this is the end, after all"— took up his stand in front of her, with folded arms. He told afterwards how his mind was occupied with a mathematical calculation as to how far the bull would be able to throw. But the animal suddenly stopped a few paces off and then, raising his head, retreated sullenly.

A like courage—though he himself was far from thinking of these incidents—had shown itself in his early youth when he quietly stepped up to a runaway horse and caught it in the streets of Calcutta, thus saving the life of the woman who occupied the carriage behind.

The talk drifted on, as we sat on the grass beneath the trees, and became, for an hour or two, half grave, half gay. We heard much of the tricks the monkeys could play in Vrindaban. And we elicited stories of two separate occasions in his wandering life when he had had clear previsions of help which had been fulfilled. One of these I remember. It may possibly have occurred at the time when he was under the vow to ask for nothing, and he had been several days (perhaps five) without food. Suddenly, as he lay almost dying of exhaustion in a railwaystation, it flashed into his mind that he must rise up and go out along a certain road and that there he would meet a man bringing him help. He obeyed and met one carrying a tray of food. "Are you he to whom I was sent?" said this man, coming up to him and looking at him closely.

Then a child was brought to us, with its hand badly cut, and the Swami applied an old wives' cure. He bathed the wound with water and then laid on it, to stop the bleeding, the ashes of a piece of calico. The villagers were soothed and consoled, and our gossip was over for the evening.

JULY 23.

The next morning a motley gathering of coolies assembled beneath the apple-trees and waited some hours to take us to the ruins of Marttanda. It had been a wonderful old building—evidently more abbey than temple—in a wonderful position; and its great interest lay in the obvious agglomeration of styles and periods in which it had grown up. . . . Its presence is a perpetual reminder that the East was the original home of monasticism. The Swami was hard at work in an instant on observations and theories, pointing out the cornice that ran along the nave from the entrance to the sanctuary, to the west, surmounted by the high trefoils of the two arches and also by a frieze; or showing us the panels containing cherubs; and before we had done, had picked up a couple of coins. The ride back through the sunset light was charming. From all these hours, the day before and the day after, fragments of talk come back to me.

"No nation, not Greek or another, has ever carried patriotism so far as the Japanese. They don't talk, they act—give up all for country. There are noblemen now living in Japan as peasants, having given up their princedoms without a word to create the unity of the empire.⁵³⁴ And not one traitor could be found in the Japanese war. Think of that!"

Again, talking of the inability of some to express feeling, "Shy and reserved people, I have noticed, are always the most brutal when roused".

Again, evidently talking of the ascetic life and giving the rules of Brahmacharya—"The Sannyâsin who thinks of gold, to desire it, commits suicide", and so on.

JULY 24.

The darkness of night and the forest, a great pine-fire under the trees, two or three tents standing out white in the blackness, the forms and voices of many servants at their fires in the distance, and the Master with three disciples, such is the next pic-

⁵³⁴ ? This is, perhaps, a mistake. It was their political privileges, not their estates, that the Japanese samurais renounced.

1 ture. . . . Suddenly the Master turned to one member of the party and said, "You never mention your 2 school now. Do you sometimes forget it? You see", he went on, "I have much to think of. One day I turn to 3 Madras and think of the work there. Another day I give all my attention to America or England or Ceylon
4 or Calcutta. Now I am thinking about yours".

5 At that moment the Master was called away to dine, and not till he came back could the confidence 6 he had invited be given.

7 He listened to it all, the deliberate wish for a tentative plan, for smallness of beginnings, and the 8 final inclination to turn away from the idea of inclusiveness and breadth and to base the whole of an 9 educational effort on the religious life and on the worship of Shri Ramakrishna.

10 "Because you must be sectarian to get that enthusiasm, must you not?" he said. "You will make a 11 sect in order to rise above all sects. Yes I understand".

12 There would be obvious difficulties. The thing sounded on this scale almost impossible for many 13 reasons. But for the moment the only care need be to will rightly; and if the plan was sound, ways and 14 means would be found to hand, that was sure.

15 He waited a little when he had heard it all, and then he said, "You ask me to criticize, but that I 16 cannot do. For I regard you as inspired, quite as much inspired as I am. You know that's the difference
17 between other religions and us. Other people believe their founder was inspired, and so do we. But so am 18 I also, just as much so as he, and you as I; and after you, your girls and their disciples will be. So I shall 19 help you to do what you think best".

20 Then he turned to Dhira Mata and to Jaya and spoke of the greatness of the trust that he would 21 leave in the hands of that disciple who should represent the interests of women when he should go West, 22 of how it would exceed the responsibility of work for men. And he added, turning to the worker of the 23 party, "Yes, you have faith, but you have not that burning enthusiasm that you need. You want to be 24 consumed [with] energy. Shiva! Shiva!" And so, invoking the blessing of Mahâdeva, he said goodnight and 25 left us, and we presently went to bed.

1 JULY 25.

2 The next morning we breakfasted early in one of the tents and went on to Achhabal. One of us had 3 had a dream of old jewels lost and restored, all bright and new. But the Swami, smiling, stopped the tale, 4 saying, "Never talk of a dream as good as that!"

5 At Achhabal we found more gardens of Jehangir. Was it here or at Verinag that had been his 6 favourite resting-place?

7 We roamed about the gardens and bathed in a still pool opposite the Pathan Khan's Zenana, and 8 then we lunched in the first garden and rode down in the afternoon to Islamabad.

9 As we sat at lunch, the Swami invited his daughter to go to the cave of Amarnath with him and be 10 dedicated to Shiva. Dhira Mata smiled permission, and the next half-hour was given to pleasure and 11 congratulations. It had already been arranged that we were all to go to Pahalgam and wait there for the 12 Swami's return from the pilgrimage. So we reached the boats that evening, packed and wrote letters, and 13 next day in the afternoon started for Bawan.

1
2 CHAPTER X

3
4 THE SHRINE OF AMARNATH

5
6 PLACE: Kashmir.

7 TIME: July 29 to August 8, 1898.

8 JULY 29.

9 From this time we saw very little of the Swami. He was full of enthusiasm about the pilgrimage and 10 lived mostly on one meal a day, seeking no company much, save that of Sâdhus. Sometimes he would come 11 to a camping-ground, beads in hand. Tonight two of the party went roaming about Bawan, which was like 12 a village fair, all modified by a religious tendency centering in the sacred springs. Afterwards with Dhira 13 Mata it was possible to go and listen at the tent door to the crowd of Hindi-speaking Sadhus who were 14 plying the Swami with questions.

15 On Thursday we reached Pahalgam and camped down at the lower end of the valley. We found that 16 the Swami had to encounter high opposition over the question of our admission at all. He was supported 17 by the Naked Swamis, one of whom said, "It is true you have this strength, Swamiji, but you ought not to 18 manifest it!" He yielded at the word. That afternoon, however, he took his daughter round the camp to be 19 blessed, which really meant to distribute alms—and whether because he was looked upon as rich or 20 because he was recognized as strong, the next day our tents were moved up to a lovely knoll at the head 21 of the camp. . . .

22 JULY 30.

24 How beautiful was the route to the next halt, Chandanwari! There we camped on the edge of a 25 ravine. It rained all afternoon, and I was visited by the Swami only for a five-minutes'

1 chat. But I received endless touching little kindnesses from the servants and other pilgrims. . . .

2 . . . Close to Chandanwari the Swami insisted on my doing my first glacier on foot and took care to 3 point out every detail of interest. A tremendous climb of some thousands of feet was the next experience.
4 Then a long walk along a narrow path that twisted round mountain after mountain, and finally another 5 steep climb. At the top of the first mountain, the ground was simply carpeted with edelweiss. Then the 6 road passed five hundred feet above Sheshnag with its sulky water, and at last we camped in a cold damp
7 place amongst the snow-peaks, 18,000 feet high. The firs were far below, and all afternoon and evening
8 the coolies had to forage for juniper in all directions. The Tahsildar's, Swami's and my own tents were all 9 close together, and in the evening a large fire was lighted in front. But it did not burn well, and many feet 10 below lay the glacier. I did not see the Swami after we camped.

11 Panchatarani—the place of the five streams—was not nearly such a long march. Moreover, it was 12 lower than Sheshnag, and the cold was dry and exhilarating. In front of the camp was a dry riverbed, all 13 gravel, and through this ran five streams, in all of which it was the duty of the pilgrim to bathe, walking 14 from one to the other in wet garments. Contriving to elude observation completely, Swamiji nevertheless 15 fulfilled the law to the last letter in this respect. . . .

16 At these heights we often found ourselves in great circles of snow-peaks, those mute giants that 17 have suggested to the Hindu mind the idea of the ash-encovered God.

18 AUGUST 2.

19 On Tuesday, August the 2nd, the great day of Amarnath, the first batch of pilgrims must have left 20 the camp at two! We left by the light of the full moon. The sun rose as we went down the narrow valley. It 21 was not too safe at this part of the journey. But when we left our Dandies and began to climb, the real 22 danger began. . . . Then, having at last reached the bottom of the farther slope, we had to toil along the glacier mile after mile to the cave. . . .

The Swami, exhausted, had by this time fallen behind. . . . He came at last and with a word sent me on; he was going to bathe. Half an hour later he entered the cave. With a smile he knelt first at one end of the semi-circle, then at the other. The place was vast, large enough to hold a cathedral; and the great ice-Shiva, in a niche of deepest shadow, seemed as if throned on its own base. A few minutes passed, and then he turned to leave the cave.

To him, the heavens had opened. He had touched the feet of Shiva. He had had to hold himself tight, he said afterwards, lest he "should swoon away". But so great was his physical exhaustion that a doctor said afterwards that his heart ought to have stopped beating, but had undergone a permanent enlargement instead. How strangely near fulfilment had been those words of his Master, "When he realizes who and what he is, he will give up this body!"

"I have enjoyed it so much!" he said half an hour afterwards, as he sat on a rock above the stream-side, eating lunch with the kind Naked Swami and me. "I thought the ice Linga was Shiva Himself. And there were no thievish Brahmins, no trade, nothing wrong. It was all worship. I never enjoyed any religious place so much!"

Afterwards he would often tell of the overwhelming vision that had seemed to draw him almost into its vertex. He would talk of the poetry of the white ice-pillar; and it was he who suggested that the first discovery of the place had been by a party of shepherds, who had wandered far in search of their flocks one summer day and had entered the cave to find themselves before the unmelting ice, in the presence of the Lord Himself. He always said too that the grace of Amarnath had been granted to him there, not to die till he himself should give consent. And to me he said, "You do not now understand. But you have made the pilgrimage, and it will go on working. Causes must bring their effects. You will understand better afterwards. The effects will come".

How beautiful was the road by which we returned next morning to Pahalgam! We struck tents that night immediately on

1 our return to them and camped later for the night in a snowy pass a whole stage further on. We paid 2 a coolie a few annas here to push on with a letter; but when we actually arrived next afternoon we found 3 that this had been quite unnecessary, for all morning long relays of pilgrims had been passing the tents
4 and dropping in, in the most friendly manner, to give the others news of us and our impending arrival. In 5 the morning we were up and on the way long before dawn. As the sun rose before us, while the moon
6 went down behind, we passed above the Lake of Death, into which about forty pilgrims had been buried
7 one year by an avalanche which their hymns had started. After this we came to the tiny goat-path down
8 the face of a steep cliff by which we were able to shorten the return journey so much. This was little 9 better than a scramble, and everyone had perforce to do it on foot. At the bottom the villagers had 10 something like breakfast ready. Fires were burning, Chapatties baking, and tea was ready to be served 11 out. From this time on parties of pilgrims would leave the main body at each parting of the ways, and the 12 feeling of solidarity that had grown up amongst us all throughout the journey became gradually less and 13 less.

14 That evening on the knoll above Pahalgam, where a great fire of pine-logs was lighted and Dhurries 15 spread, we all sat and talked. Our friend the Naked Swami joined us and we had plenty of fun and 16 nonsense, but presently, when all had gone save our own little party, we sat on with the great moon 17 overhead and the towering snows and rushing rivers and the mountain-pines. And the Swami talked of 18 Shiva and the cave and the great verge of vision.

19

20 AUGUST 8.

21 We started for Islamabad next day, and on Monday morning as we sat at breakfast, we were towed 22 safely into Srinagar.

1 CHAPTER XI

3 AT SRINAGAR ON THE RETURN JOURNEY

5 PERSONS: The Swami Vivekananda and a party of Europeans and disciples, amongst whom were 6 Dhira Mata, the "Steady Mother"; one whose name was Jaya; and Nivedita.

7 PLACE: Kashmir–Srinagar.

8 TIME: August 9 to August 13, 1898.

10 AUGUST 9.

11 At this time the Master was always talking of leaving us. And when I find the entry "The river is pure 12 that flows, the monk is pure that goes", I know exactly what it means—the passionate outcry "I am always 13 so much better when I have to undergo hardships and beg my bread", the longing for freedom and the 14 touch of the common people, the picture of himself making a long circuit of the country on foot and 15 meeting us again at Baramulla for the journey home.

16 His family of boat-people, whom he had staunchly befriended through two seasons, left us today.
17 Afterwards he would refer to the whole incident of their connection with him as proof that even charity 18 and patience could go too far.

19 AUGUST 10.

20 It was evening, and we all went out to pay some visit. On the return he called his disciple Nivedita to 21 walk with him across the fields. His talk was all about the work and his intentions in it. He spoke of the 22 inclusiveness of his conception of the country and its religions; of his own distinction as being solely in his 23 desire to make Hinduism active, aggressive, a missionary faith; of "don't-touch-ism" as the only thing he 24 repudiated. Then he talked with depth of feeling of the gigantic

1 spirituality of many of those who were most orthodox. India wanted practicality, but she must never 2 let go her hold on the old meditative life for that. "To be as deep as the ocean and as broad as the sky",
3 Shri Ramakrishna has said, was the ideal. But this profound inner life in the soul encased within orthodoxy
4 is the result of an accidental, not an essential, association. "And if we set ourselves right here, the world
5 will be right, for are we not all one? Ramakrishna Paramahansa was alive to the depths of his being, yet 6 on the outer plane he was perfectly active and capable."

7 And then of that critical question of the worship of his own master, "My own life is guided by the 8 enthusiasm of that great personality, but others will decide for themselves how far this is true for them.
9 Inspiration is not filtered out to the world through one man".

10 AUGUST 11.

11 There was occasion this day for the Swami to rebuke a member of this party for practising 12 palmistry. It was a thing he said that everyone desired, yet all India despised and hated. Yes, he said, in 13 reply to a little special pleading, even of character-reading he disapproved. "To tell you the truth, I should 14 have thought even your incarnation more honest if he and his disciples had not performed miracles.
15 Buddha unfrocked a monk for doing it." Later, talking on the subject to which he had now transferred his 16 attention, he spoke with horror of the display of the least of it as sure to bring a terrible reflex.

17 AUGUST 12 AND 13.

18 The Swami had now taken a Brahmin cook. Very touching had been the arguments of the Amarnath 19 Sâdhus against his willingness to let even a Mussulman cook for him. "Not in the land of Sikhs at least, 20 Swamiji", they had said, and he had at last consented. But for the present he was worshipping his little 21 Mohammedan boat-child as Umâ. Her whole idea of love was service, and the day he left Kashmir she, tiny 22 one, was fain to

1 carry a tray of apples for him all the way to the tonga herself. He never forgot her, though he 2 seemed quite indifferent at the time. In Kashmir itself he was fond of recalling the time when she saw a 3 blue flower on the towing path and sitting down before it, and striking it this way and that, "was alone 4 with that flower for twenty minutes".

5 There was a piece of land by the riverside on which grew three chennaars, towards which our 6 thoughts turned with peculiar love at this time. For the Mahârâjâ was anxious to give it to Swamiji, and we 7 all pictured it as a centre of work in the future

8 –work which should realize the great idea of "by the people, for the people, as a joy to worker and to 9 served".

10 In view of Indian feeling about a homestead blessed by women, it had been suggested that we 11 should go and annex the site by camping there for a while. One of our party, moreover, had a personal 12 wish for special quiet at this time. So it was decided that we should establish "a women's Math", as it 13 were, before the Maharaja should require the land to confer it on the Swami. And this was possible 14 because the spot was one of the minor camping grounds used by Europeans.

1 CHAPTER XII

3 THE CAMP UNDER THE CHENNAARS

5 PERSONS: The Swami Vivekananda and a party of Europeans and disciples, amongst whom were 6 Dhira Mata, the "Steady Mother"; one whose name was Jaya; and Nivedita.

7 PLACE: Kashmir—Srinagar.

8 TIME: August 14 to August 20, 1898.

9 AUGUST 14.

10 It was Sunday morning and next afternoon the Swami was prevailed on to come up to tea with us in 11 order to meet a European guest who seemed to be interested in the subject of Vedanta. He had been little 12 inclined to concern himself with the matter, and I think his real motive in accepting was probably to afford 13 his too-eager disciples an opportunity of convincing themselves of the utter futility of all such attempts as 14 this. Certainly he took infinite pains with the enquirer and, as certainly, his trouble was wasted.

15 I remember his saying, amongst other things, "How I wish a law could be broken. If we were really 16 able to break a law we should be free. What you call breaking the law is really only another way of 17 keeping it". Then he tried to explain a little of the superconscious life. But his words fell on ears that could 18 not hear.

19 AUGUST 16.

20 On Tuesday he came once more to our little camp to the midday meal. Towards the end it began to 21 rain heavily enough to prevent his return, and he took up Tod's History of Rajasthan, which was lying 22 near, and drifted into talk of Mirâ Bâi. "Two-thirds of the national ideas now in Bengal", he said, "have 23 been gathered from this book".

But the episode of Mira Bai, the queen who would not be queen, but would wander the world with the lovers of Krishna, was always his favourite, even in Tod. He talked of how she preached submission, prayerfulness, and service to all in contrast to Chaitanya, who preached love to the name of God, and mercy to all.

Mira Bai was always one of his great patronesses. He would put into her story many threads with which one is now familiar in other connections, such as the conversation of two great robbers, and the end by an image of Krishna opening and swallowing her up. I heard him on one occasion recite and translate one of her songs to a woman. I wish I could remember the whole, but it began in his rendering with the words "Cling to it, cling to it, cling to it, Brother", and ended with "If Ankâ and Bankâ, the robber brothers; Sujan, the fell butcher; and the courtesan who playfully taught her parrot to repeat the name of the Lord Krishna were saved, there is hope for all".

Again, I have heard him tell that marvellous tale of Mira Bai in which on reaching Vrindaban, she sent for a certain famous Sâdhu.⁵³⁵ He refused to go on the ground that women might not see men in Vrindaban. When this had happened three times, Mira Bai went to him herself saying that she had not known that there were such beings as men there; she had supposed that Krishna alone existed. And when she saw the astonished Sadhu, she unveiled herself completely, with the words "Fool, do you call yourself a man?" And as he fell prostrate before her with a cry of awe, she blessed him as a mother blesses her child.

Today the Swami passed on to the talk of Akbar and sang us a song of Tânsen, the poet-laureate of the emperor:

Seated on the throne, a god amongst men,
Thou, the Emperor of Delhi.
Blessed was the hour, the minute, the second,
When thou ascendest the throne,

⁵³⁵ ? Sanâtana, the famous Sannyâsin disciple of Shri Chaitanya of Bengal who gave up his office of minister to the Nawab of Bengal to become a religious devotee.

2

1 O God amongst men,
2 Thou, the Lord of Delhi.

1 Long live thy crown, thy sceptre, thy throne,
2 O God amongst men,
3 Thou, Emperor of Delhi.
4 Live long, and remain awakened always,
5 O son of Humayoon,
6 Joy of the sun, God amongst men,
7 Thou, the Emperor of Delhi!

8

9 Then the talk passed to "our national hero" Pratâp Singh, who never could be brought to submission.
10 Once indeed he was tempted to give in, at that moment when having fled from Chitore and the queen 11 herself having cooked the scanty evening meal, a hungry cat swooped down on that cake of bread which 12 was the children's portion, and the King of Mewar heard his babies cry for food. Then, indeed, the strong 13 heart of the man failed him. The prospect of ease and relief tempted him. And for a moment he thought of 14 ceasing from the unequal conflict and sending his alliance to Akbar, only for an instant. The Eternal Will 15 protects its own. Even as the picture passed before his mind, there appeared a messenger with those 16 despatches from a famous Rajput chief that said, "There is but one left amongst us who has kept his blood 17 free from admixture with the alien. Let it never be said that his head has touched the dust". And the soul 18 of Pratap drew in the long breath of courage and renewed faith; and he arose and swept the country of its 19 foes and made his own way back to Udaipur.

20 Then there was the wonderful tale of the virgin princess Krishna Kumâri, whose hand was sought by 21 various royal suitors at once. And when three armies were at the gate, her father could think of nothing 22 better than to give her poison. The task was entrusted to her uncle, and he entered her room, as she lay 23 asleep, to do it. But at the sight of her beauty and youth, remembering her too as a baby, the soldier's 24 heart failed him, and he could not perform his task. But she was awakened by some sound, and being told 25 what was proposed, stretched out her hand for the cup and drank the poison with a smile. And so on, and 26 so on. For the stories of Rajput heroes in this kind are endless.

1 AUGUST 20.

2 On Saturday the Swami and he whose name was Soong went to the Dahl Lake to be the guests of the 3 American consul and his wife for a couple of days. They returned on Monday, and on Tuesday the Swami 4 came up to the new Math, as we called it, and had his boat moved close by ours so that he could be with 5 us for a few days before leaving for Ganderbal.

6
7 CONCLUDING WORDS OF THE EDITOR

8
9 From Ganderbal the Swami returned by the first week of October and announced his intention of 10 leaving for the plains in a few days for urgent reasons. The European party had already made plans to 11 visit the principal cities of northern India, e.g., Lahore, Delhi, Agra, etc., as soon as the winter set in. So 12 both parties decided to return together and came to Lahore. From here the Swami and his party returned 13 to Calcutta, leaving the rest to carry out their plans for sight-seeing in northern India.

3 1. From Mrs. Prince Woods's description of Swami Viveka-nanda's departure from the Woods's 4 residence in Salem, Massachusetts, in August 1893. Swami Vivekananda gave his staff, his most precious 5 possession, to Dr. Woods, who was at that time a young medical student, and his trunk and his blanket to 6 Mrs. Kate T. Woods, saying:

7 "Only my most precious possessions should I give to my friends who have made me at home in this 8 great country." (ND 1: 42)

9 2. On the back of Swami Vivekananda's transcription from Louis Rousselet's book India and Its 10 Native Princes—Travels in Central India and in the Presidencies of Bombay and Bengal, dated February 11 11, 1894:

12 "I say there is but one remedy for one too anxious for the future—to go down on his knees." (ND 1: 13 225)

14 3. An extract from a prayer Swami Vivekananda delivered at the Chicago World's Parliament of 15 Religions:

16
17 "Thou art He that beareth the burdens of the universe; help me to bear the little burden of this life."
18 (ND 2: 32)

19 4. An extract from another prayer offered by Swami Viveka-nanda at the Chicago World's 20 Parliament of Religions:

22 "At the head of all these laws, in and through every particle of matter and force, stands One through 23 whose command the wind blows, the fire burns, the clouds rain, and death stalks upon the earth. And 24 what is His nature? He is everywhere the pure and formless One, the Almighty and the All Merciful. Thou 25 art our Father. Thou art our beloved Friend." (ND 2: 33)

1 5. From Mary T. Wright's journal entry dated Saturday, May 12, 1894:

2
3 The widows of high caste in India do not marry, he said; only the widows of low caste may marry, 4 may eat, drink, dance, have as many husbands as they choose, divorce them all, in short enjoy all the 5 benefits of the highest society in this country. . . .

6 "When we are fanatical", he said, "we torture ourselves, we throw ourselves under huge cars, we cut 7 our throats, we lie on spiked beds; but when you are fanatical you cut other people's throats, you torture
8 them by fire and put them on spiked beds! You take very good care of your own skins!" (ND 2: 58-59)

9 6. An 1894 extract from the Greenacre Voice, quoting one of the Swami's teachings delivered at 10 Greenacre, Maine:

11
12 "You and I and everything in the universe are that Absolute, not parts, but the whole. You are the 13 whole of that Absolute." (ND 2: 150)

14 7. In a March 5, 1899 letter from Sister Nivedita to Miss Josephine MacLeod:

15
16 "I am at heart a mystic, Margot, all this reasoning is only apparent—I am really always on the lookout
17 for signs and things—and so I never bother about the fate of my initiations. If they want to be Sannyâsins 18 badly enough I feel that the rest is not my business. Of course it has its bad side. I have to pay dearly for 19 my blunder sometimes—but it has one advantage. It has kept me still a Sannyasin through all this—and that 20 is my ambition, to die a real Sannyasin as Ramakrishna Paramahansa actually was—free from lust—

21 and desire of wealth, and thirst for fame. That thirst for fame is the worst of all filth." (ND 3: 128-29)

1 8. From John Henry Wright's March 27, 1896 letter to Mary Tappan Wright, in which Swami
2 Vivekananda stated that England is just like India with its castes:

3
4 "I had to have separate classes for the two castes. For the high caste people—Lady This and Lady 5 That, Honourable This and Honourable That—I had classes in the morning; for the low caste people, who 6 came pell-mell, I had classes in the evening." (ND 4: 73)

7 9. While Swami Vivekananda was offering flowers at the feet of the Virgin Mary in a small chapel 8 in Switzerland in the summer of 1896, he said:

9
10 "For she also is the Mother." (ND 4: 276)

11 10. From Mr. J. J. Goodwin's October 23, 1896 letter to Mrs. Ole Bull, quoting Swami Vivekananda's 12 conversation at Greycoat Gardens in London:

14 "It is very good to have a high ideal, but don't make it too high. A high ideal raises mankind, but an 15 impossible ideal lowers them from the very impossibility of the case." (ND 4: 385)

16 11. A November 20, 1896 entry from Swami Abhedananda's diary, quoting Swami Vivekananda's 17 observation of the English people:

18
19 "You can't make friends here without knowing their cus-toms, behaviour, politics. You have to know 20 the manners of the rich, the cultured and the poor." (ND 4: 478)

21 12. In Mr. J. J. Goodwin's November 11, 1896 letter to Mrs. Ole Bull, quoting Swami Vivekananda's 22 unpublished statement toward the end of "Practical Vedanta—IV":

1 "A Jiva can never attain absolutely to Brahman until the whole of Mâyâ disappears. While there is 2 still a Jiva left in Maya, there can be no soul absolutely free. . . . Vedantists are divided on this point." (ND
3 4: 481)

4 13. From Swami Saradananda's letter to a brother-disciple, concerning Swami Vivekananda's last 5 days:

6
7 Sometimes he would say, "Death has come to my bedside; I have been through enough of work and 8 play; let the world realize what contribution I have made; it will take quite a long time to understand that".
9 (ND 4: 521)

10 14. In an October 13, 1898 letter to Mrs. Ashton Jonson, written from Kashmir, Sister Nivedita 11 described Swami Viveka-nanda's spiritual mood:

12
13 To him at this moment "doing good" seems horrible. "Only the Mother does anything. Patriotism is a 14 mistake. Everything is a mistake. It is all Mother. . . . All men are good. Only we cannot reach all. . . . I am 15 never going to teach any more. Who am I that I should teach anyone? . . . Swamiji is dead and gone." (ND 16 5: 3-4)

17 15. From Mr. Sachindranath Basu's letter recounting Swami Vivekananda's closing remarks in his 18 talk to swamis and novices assembled at Belur Math, June 19, 1899:

19
20 "My sons, all of you be men. This is what I want! If you are even a little successful, I shall feel my 21 life has been meaningful." (ND 5: 17)

22 16. During an evening talk with Swami Saradananda in the spring of 1899:

23
24 "Men should be taught to be practical, physically strong. A dozen such lions will conquer the world, 25 not millions of

1 sheep. Men should not be taught to imitate a personal ideal, however great." (ND 5: 17)

2 17. From Mrs. Mary C. Funke's reminiscences of her August 1899 voyage to America with Swamis 3 Vivekananda and Turiya-nanda:

4
5 "And if all this Maya is so beautiful, think of the wondrous beauty of the Reality behind it!" (ND 5: 6 76)

7
8 "Why recite poetry when there [pointing to sea and sky] is the very essence of poetry?" (Ibid.)

9 18. In Miss Josephine MacLeod's September 3, 1899 letter to Mrs. Ole Bull:

10
11 "In one's greatest hour of need one stands alone." (ND 5: 122)

12 19. From Sister Nivedita's October 27, 1899 diary entry at Ridgely Manor, in which Swami 13 Vivekananda expressed his concern for Olea Bull Vaughn:

14
15 "Nightmares always begin pleasantly—only at the worst point [the] dream is broken—so death breaks 16 [the] dream of life. Love death." (ND 5: 138)

17 20. In a December 1899 letter from Miss Josephine MacLeod to Sister Nivedita:

18
19 "All the ideas the Californians have of me emanated from Chicago." (ND 5: 179)

20 21. From Mrs. Alice Hansbrough's reminiscences which quoted Swami Vivekananda as telling Mr.
21 Baumgardt:

1 "I can talk on the same subject, but it will not be the same lecture." (ND 5: 230)

2 22. Mrs. Alice Hansbrough's reminiscences relating Swami Vivekananda's response to her 3 sight-seeing attempts:
4

5 "Do not show me sights. I have seen the Himalayas! I would not go ten steps to see sights; but I
6 would go a thousand miles to see a [great] human being!" (ND 5: 244)

7 23. From Mrs. Alice Hansbrough's reminiscences relating Swami Vivekananda's interest in the 8 problem of child training:
9

10 He did not believe in punishment. It had never helped him, he said, and added, "I would never do 11 anything to make a child afraid". (ND 5: 253)

12 24. Mrs. Alice Hansbrough's record of Swami Vivekananda's explanation of God to 13 seventeen-year-old Ralph Wyckoff:
14

15 "Can you see your own eyes? God is like that. He is as close as your own eyes. He is your own, even 16 though you can't see Him." (ND 5: 254)

17 25. Mrs. Alice Hansbrough's reminiscences regarding Swami Vivekananda's opinion of the low-caste 18 English soldiers who occupied India:
19

20 "If anyone should despoil the Englishman's home, the Englishman would kill him, and rightly so. But 21 the Hindu just sits and whines!

22 "Do you think that a handful of Englishmen could rule India if we had a militant spirit? I teach 23 meat-eating throughout the length and breadth of India in the hope that we can build a militant spirit!"
24 (ND 5: 256)

26. Mrs. Alice Hansbrough's reminiscences of a picnic in Pasa-dena, California when a Christian Science woman suggested to Swami Vivekananda that one should teach people to be good:

"Why should I desire to be 'good'? All this is His handiwork [waving his hand to indicate the trees and the countryside]. Shall I apologize for His handiwork? If you want to reform John Doe, go and live with him; don't try to reform him. If you have any of the Divine Fire, he will catch it." (ND 5: 257)

27. From Mrs. Alice Hansbrough's reminiscences:

"When once you consider an action, do not let anything dissuade you. Consult your heart, not others, and then follow its dictates." (ND 5: 311)

28. From Mr. Frank Rhodehamel's notes taken during a March 1900 lecture in Oakland, California:

"Never loved a husband the wife for the wife's sake, or the wife the husband for the husband's sake. It is God in the wife the husband loves, and God in the husband the wife loves.⁵³⁶ It is God in everyone that draws us to that one in love. [It is] God in everything, in everybody that makes us love. God is the only love. . . . In everyone is God, the Atman; all else is but dream, an illusion." (ND 5: 362)

29. From Mr. Frank Rhodehamel's notes taken during a March 1900 lecture in Oakland, California:

"Oh, if you only knew yourselves! You are souls; you are gods. If ever I feel [that I am] blaspheming, it is when I call you man." (ND 5: 362)

⁵³⁶ ? Cf. Brihadâraṇyaka Upanishad II.4.5.

1
2 30. An excerpt from Mr. Thomas J. Allan's reminiscences of Swami Vivekananda's March 1900 San 3 Francisco lecture series on India:

4
5 "Send us mechanics to teach us how to use our hands, and we will send you missionaries to teach 6 you spirituality." (ND 5: 365)

7 31. Mrs. Edith Allan's reminiscences of Swami Vivekananda's philosophical observations while 8 cooking at the Turk Street flat:

9
10 "'The Lord dwells in the hearts of all beings, O Arjuna, by His illusive power causing all beings to 11 revolve as though mounted on a potter's wheel.' [Bhagavad-Gitâ XVIII.61] This has all happened before, 12 like the throw of a dice, so it is in life; the wheel goes on and the same combination comes up; that pitcher 13 and glass have stood there before, so, too, that onion and potato. What can we do, Madam, He has us on 14 the wheel of life." (ND 6: 17)

15 32. From Mrs. Edith Allan's reminiscences of an after-lunch conversation:

16
17 "The Master said he would come again in about two hundred years—and I will come with him. When 18 a Master comes, he brings his own people." (ND 6: 17)

19 33. Mrs. Edith Allan's reminiscences of Swami Vivekananda's "kitchen" counsel while he was staying 20 in San Francisco, California, in 1900:

21
22 "If I consider myself greater than the ant that crawls on the ground I am ignorant." (ND 6: 19)

23
24 "Madam, be broad-minded; always see two ways. When I am on the heights I say, 'Shivoham, 25 Shivoham: I am He, I am He!' and when I have the stomachache I say, 'Mother have mercy on me!'" (Ibid.)

1 "Learn to be the witness. If two dogs are fighting on the street and I go out there, I get mixed up in 2 the fight; but if I stay quietly in my room, I witness the fight from the window. So learn to be the witness."
3 (Ibid.)

4 34. From Mr. Thomas J. Allan's reminiscences of a private talk with Swami Vivekananda in San 5 Francisco, California, 1900:

6
7 "We do not progress from error to truth, but from truth to truth. Thus we must see that none can be 8 blamed for what they are doing, because they are, at this time, doing the best they can. If a child has an 9 open razor, don't try to take it from him, but give him a red apple or a brilliant toy, and he will drop the 10 razor. But he who puts his hand in the fire will be burned; we learn only from experience." (ND 6: 42)

11 35. From Mrs. Alice Hansbrough's reminiscences of a walk home with Swami Vivekananda after one 12 of his lectures in San Francisco in 1900:

14 "You have heard that Christ said, 'My words are spirit and they are life'. So are my words spirit and 15 life; they will burn their way into your brain and you will never get away from them!" (ND 6: 57-58)

16 36. From Mrs. Alice Hansbrough's reminiscences in San Francisco, 1900—referring to Swami 17 Vivekananda's great heart:

18
19 "I may have to be born again because I have fallen in love with man." (ND 6: 79)

20 37. From Mrs. George Roorbach's reminiscences of Swami Vivekananda at Camp Taylor, California, 21 in May 1900:

1 "In my first speech in this country, in Chicago, I addressed that audience as 'Sisters and Brothers of 2 America', and you know that they all rose to their feet. You may wonder what made them do this, you may 3 wonder if I had some strange power. Let me tell you that I did have a power and this is it

4 –never once in my life did I allow myself to have even one sexual thought. I trained my mind, my 5 thinking, and the powers that man usually uses along that line I put into a higher channel, and it
6 developed a force so strong that nothing could resist it." (ND 6: 155)

7 38. In a conversation with Swami Turiyananda, which probably took place in New York:

8
9 "The call has come from Above: 'Come away, just come away—no need of troubling your head to 10 teach others'. It is now the will of the Grand Old Lady⁵³⁷ that the play should be over." (ND 6: 373)

11 39. In a July 1902 Prabuddha Bharata eulogy, "a Western disciple" wrote:

12
13 The Swami had but scant sympathy with iconoclasts, for as he wisely remarked, "The true 14 philosopher strives to destroy nothing, but to help all". (VIN: 638)

15 40. Sister Nivedita's reminiscences of Swami Vivekananda in an October 9, 1899 letter to Miss 16 Josephine MacLeod:

17
18 He has turned back on so much—"Let your life in the world be nothing but a thinking to yourself".
19 (LSNI: 213)

20 41. Swami Vivekananda's luncheon remarks to Mrs. Ole Bull, recorded by Sister Nivedita in an 21 October 18, 1899 letter to Miss Josephine MacLeod:

3 ⁵³⁷ ? The "Grand Old Lady" was a figure in a children's game, whose touch put one outside the game.
4

1 "You see, there is one thing called love, and there is another thing called union. And union is greater 2 than love.

3 "I do not love religion. I have become identified with it. It is my life. So no man loves that thing in 4 which his life has been spent, in which he really has accomplished something. That which we love is not 5 yet ourself. Your husband did not love music for which he had always stood. He loved engineering in 6 which as yet he knew comparatively little. This is the difference between Bhakti and Jnâna; and this is why
7 Jnana is greater than Bhakti." (LSN I: 216)

8 42. Swami Vivekananda's remarks on his spiritual ministry, recorded in Sister Nivedita's October 9 15, 1904 letter to Miss Josephine MacLeod:

10
11 "Only when they go away will they know how much they have received." (LSN II: 686)

12 43. Sister Nivedita's reminiscences in a November 5, 1904 letter to Alberta Sturges (Lady 13 Sandwich) of Swami Vivekananda's talk on renunciation while he was staying at Ridgely Manor:

14
15 "In India we never say that you should renounce a higher thing for a lower. It is better to be 16 absorbed in music or in literature than in comfort or pleasure, and we never say otherwise." (LSN II: 690)

17 44. In Sister Nivedita's November 19, 1909 letter to Miss Jose-phine MacLeod:

18
19 "The fire burns if we plunge our hand in—whether we feel it or not—so it is with him who speaks the 20 name of God." (LSN II: 1030)

1
2 45. Swami Vivekananda's reminiscences of Shri Ramakrishna, recorded in Sister Nivedita's July 6, 3 1910 letter to Dr. T. K. Cheyne:

4
5 "He could not imagine himself the teacher of anyone. He was like a man playing with balls of many 6 colours, and leaving it to others to select which they would for themselves." (LSN II: 1110)

7 46. Sister Nivedita's reminiscences of a conversation with Swami Vivekananda at Ridgely Manor, 8 recorded in an 1899 letter written from Ridgely Manor to Miss Josephine MacLeod:

9
10 I have never heard the Prophet talk so much of Shri Rama-krishna. He told us what I had heard 11 before of [his master's] infallible judgement of men. . . .

12 "And so", Swami said, "you see my devotion is the dog's devotion. I have been wrong so often and he 13 has always been right, and now I trust his judgement blindly". And then he told us how he would hypnotize 14 anyone who came to him and in two minutes know all about him, and Swami said that from this he had 15 learnt to count our consciousness as a very small thing. (LSN II: 1263)

16 47. From Sister Nivedita's January 27, 1900 letter to Sister Christine:

18 Swami said today that he is beginning to see the needs of humanity in quite a different light—that he 19 is already sure of the principle that is to help, but is spending hours every day in trying to solve the 20 methods. That what he had known hitherto is for men living in a cave—alone, undisturbed—

21 but now he will give "humanity something that will make for strength in the stress of daily life".
22 (LSN II: 1264)

23 48. In a July 7, 1902 letter to Sister Christine, Sister Nivedita recorded one of Swami Vivekananda's 24 remarks made while giving a class to the monks at Belur Math on July 4, 1902:

1 "Do not copy me. Kick out the man who imitates." (LSN II: 1270)

2 49. The Swami's comment after he made a statement concerning the ideal of the freedom of the 3 soul, which brought it into apparent conflict with the Western conception of the service of humanity as the 4 goal of the individual:

5
6 "You will say that this does not benefit society. But before this objection can be admitted you will 7 first have to prove that the maintenance of society is an object in itself." (CWSN 1: 19)

8 50. Sister Nivedita wrote:

9
10 He touched on the question of his own position as a wandering teacher and expressed the Indian 11 diffidence with regard to religious organization or, as someone expresses it, "with regard to a faith that 12 ends in a church". "We believe", he said, "that organization always breeds new evils".

13 He prophesied that certain religious developments then much in vogue in the West would speedily 14 die, owing to love of money. And he declared that "Man proceeds from truth to truth, and not from error to 15 truth". (CWSN 1: 19-20)

16 51. "The universe is like a cobweb and minds are the spiders; for mind is one as well as many."
17 (CWSN 1: 21)

18 52. "Let none regret that they were difficult to convince! I fought my Master for six years with the 19 result that I know every inch of the way! Every inch of the way!" (CWSN 1: 22)

20 53. Swami Vivekananda was elucidating to what heights of selflessness the path of love leads and 21 how it draws out the very best faculties of the soul:

1 "Suppose there were a baby in the path of the tiger! Where would your place be then? At his 2 mouth—any one of you

3 –I am sure of it." (CWSN 1: 24)

4 54. "That by which all this is pervaded, know That to be the Lord Himself!" (CWSN 1: 27)

5 55. Concerning Swami Vivekananda's attitude toward religion:

6
7 Religion was a matter of the growth of the individual, "a question always of being and becoming".
8 (CWSN 1: 28)

9 56. "Forgive when you also can bring legions of angels to an easy victory." While victory was still 10 doubtful, however, only a coward to his thinking would turn the other cheek. (CWSN 1: 28-29)

11 57. "Of course I would commit a crime and go to hell forever if by that I could really help a human 12 being!" (CWSN 1: 34)

13 58. To a small group, including Sister Nivedita, after a lecture:

15 "I have a superstition—it is nothing, you know, but a personal superstition!—that the same soul who 16 came once as Buddha came afterwards as Christ." (CWSN 1: 35)

17 59. After Swami Vivekananda was told of Sister Nivedita's willingness to serve India:

18
19 "For my own part I will be incarnated two hundred times, if that is necessary, to do this work 20 amongst my people that I have undertaken." (CWSN 1: 36)

21 60. Sister Nivedita's memory of an incident:

He was riding on one occasion with the Raja of Khetri, when he saw that his arm was bleeding profusely and found that the wound had been caused by a thorny branch which he had held aside for himself to pass. When the Swami expostulated, the Rajput laughed the matter aside. "Are we not always the defenders of the faith, Swamiji?" he said.

"And then", said the Swami, telling the story, "I was just going to tell him that they ought not to show such honour to the Sannyasin, when suddenly I thought that perhaps they were right after all. Who knows? Maybe I too am caught in the glare of this flashlight of your modern civilization, which is only for a moment".

"—I have become entangled", he said simply to one who protested that to his mind the wandering Sâdhu of earlier years, who had scattered his knowledge and changed his name as he went, had been greater than the abbot of Belur, burdened with much work and many cares. "I have become entangled." (CWSN 1: 43)

61. Sister Nivedita wrote:

One day he was talking in the West of Mirâ Bâi—that saint who once upon a time was Queen of Chitore—and of the freedom her husband had offered her if only she would remain within the royal seclusion. But she could not be bound. "But why should she not?" someone asked in astonishment. "Why should she?" he retorted. "Was she living down here in this mire?" (CWSN 1: 44)

62. As years went by, the Swami dared less and less to make determinate plans or dogmatize about the unknown:

"After all, what do we know? Mother uses it all. But we are only fumbling about." (CWSN 1: 44)

63. Quoting Swami Vivekananda, Sister Nivedita remembered:

1 Love was not love, it was insisted, unless it was "without a reason" or without a "motive"
2 (CWSN 1: 52)

3 64. About Swami Vivekananda, Sister Nivedita wrote:

4
5 When asked by some of his own people what he considered, after seeing them in their own country, 6 to be the greatest achievement of the English, he answered "that they had known how to combine 7 obedience with self-respect". (CWSN 1: 54)

8 65. Swami Sadananda reported that early in the morning, while it was still dark, Swami 9 Vivekananda would rise and call the others, singing:

10
11 "Awake! Awake! all ye who would drink of the divine nectar!" (CWSN 1: 56)

12 66. Sister Nivedita remembered:

13
14 At this time [during the Swami's itinerant days, near Almora] he passed some months in a cave 15 overhanging a mountain village. Only twice have I known him to allude to this experience. Once he said, 16 "Nothing in my whole life ever so filled me with the sense of work to be done. It was as if I were thrown 17 out from that life in caves to wander to and fro in the plains below". And again he said to someone, "It is 18 not the form of his life that makes a Sadhu. For it is possible to sit in a cave and have one's whole mind 19 filled with the question of how many pieces of bread will be brought to one for supper!" (CWSN 1: 61)

20 67. About his own poem "Kâli the Mother":

21
22 "Scattering plagues and sorrows", he quoted from his own verses,

1 Dancing mad with joy,
2 Come, Mother, come!
3 For terror is Thy name!
4 Death—is in Thy breath.
5 And every shaking step
6 Destroys a world for e'er.

7
8 "It all came true, every word of it", he interrupted himself to say.

9
10 Who dares misery love.
11 Dance in Destruction's dance,
12 And hug the form of death, . . .

13
14 "To him the Mother does indeed come. I have proved it. For I have hugged the form of Death!"
15 (CWSN 1: 98-99)

16 68. Sister Nivedita, referring to her plans for a girls' school:

17
18 Only in one respect was he [Swami Vivekananda] inflexible. The work for the education of Indian 19 women, to which he would give his name, might be as sectarian as I chose to make it. "You wish through a 20 sect to rise beyond all sects." (CWSN 1: 102)

21 69. Commenting on Sister Nivedita's visit to Gopaler-Ma's dwelling—a small cell:

22
23 "Ah! this is the old India that you have seen, the India of prayers and tears, of vigils and fasts, that is

1 conversations and interviews 416
2

1 passing away, never to return!" (CWSN 1: 109)

2 70. About the aims of the Ramakrishna Order:

3

4 The same purpose spoke again in his definition of the aims of the Order of Ramakrishna—"to effect
5 an exchange of the highest ideals of the East and the West and to realize these in practice" (CWSN 1: 6 113)

2
3 71. After teaching Sister Nivedita the worship of Shiva, Swami Vivekananda then culminated it in an 4 offering of flowers at the feet of the Buddha. He said, as if addressing each soul that would ever come to 5 him for guidance:

6 "Go thou and follow Him, who was born and gave His life for others five hundred times before He 7 attained the vision of the Buddha!" (CWSN 1: 114)

8 72. Upon returning from a pilgrimage in Kashmir:

9 "These gods are not merely symbols! They are the forms that the Bhaktas have seen!" (CWSN 1: 10 120)

11 73. Sister Nivedita's reminiscences of Swami Vivekananda's words heard long before:

12
13 "The Impersonal God seen through the mists of sense is personal." (CWSN 1: 120)

14 74. Swami Vivekananda's comment when he was reminded of the rareness of criminality in India:

15
16 "Would God it were otherwise in my land, for this is verily the virtuousness of death!" (CWSN 1: 17 123)

18 75. Swami Vivekananda said:

19 20 "The whole of life is only a swan song! Never forget those lines:

21
22 The lion, when stricken to the heart,
23 gives out his mightiest roar.

1 conversations and interviews 418
2

1 When smitten on the head, the cobra lifts its hood.
2 And the majesty of the soul comes forth,
3 only when a man is wounded to his depths."
4 (CWSN 1: 124)

1 76. After hearing of the death of Shri Durga Charan Nag (Nag Mahashay):

2
3 "[He] was one of the greatest of the works of Ramakrishna Paramahansa." (CWSN 1: 129)

4 77. About Shri Ramakrishna's transformative power, Swami Vivekananda said:

5
6 "Was it a joke that Ramakrishna Paramahansa should touch a life? Of course he made new men and 7 new women of those who came to him, even in these fleeting contacts!" (CWSN 1: 130)

8 78. While speaking on the true spirit of a Sannyasin, Swami Vivekananda said:

9
10 "I saw many great men in Hrishikesh. One case that I remember was that of a man who seemed to 11 be mad. He was coming nude down the street, with boys pursuing and throwing stones at him. The whole 12 man was bubbling over with laughter while blood was streaming down his face and neck. I took him and 13 bathed the wound, putting ashes on it to stop the bleeding. And all the time with peals of laughter he told 14 me of the fun the boys and he had been having, throwing the stones. 'So the Father plays', he said.

15 "Many of these men hide, in order to guard themselves against intrusion. People are a trouble to 16 them. One had human bones strewn about his cave and gave it out that he lived on corpses. Another threw 17 stones. And so on. . . .

18 "Sometimes the thing comes upon them in a flash. There was a boy, for instance, who used to come 19 to read the Upanishads with Abhedananda. One day he turned and said, 'Sir, is all this really true?'

20 "'Oh yes!' said Abhedananda, 'It may be difficult to realize, but it is certainly true'.

21 "And next day, that boy was a silent Sannyasin, nude, on his way to Kedarnath!

1 "What happened to him? you ask. He became silent!

2 "But the Sannyasin needs no longer to worship or to go on pilgrimage or perform austerities. What 3 then is the motive of all this going from pilgrimage to pilgrimage, shrine to shrine, and austerity to 4 austerity? He is acquiring merit and giving it to the world!" (CWSN 1: 133)

5 79. Referring to the story of Shibi Rana:

6
7 "Ah yes! These are the stories that are deep in our nation's heart! Never forget that the Sannyasin 8 takes two vows: one to realize the truth and one to help the world—and that the most stringent of stringent 9 requirements is that he should renounce any thought of heaven!" (CWSN 1: 134)

10 80. To Sister Nivedita:

11
12 "The Gitâ says that there are three kinds of charity: the Tâmasic, the Râjasic and the Sâttvic.
13 Tamasic charity is performed on an impulse. It is always making mistakes. The doer thinks of nothing but 14 his own impulse to be kind. Rajasic charity is what a man does for his own glory. And Sattvic charity is 15 that which is given to the right person, in the right way, and at the proper time. . . .

16 "When it comes to the Sattvic, I think more and more of a certain great Western woman in whom I 17 have seen that quiet giving, always to the right person in the right way, at the right time, and never 18 making a mistake.

19 "For my own part, I have been learning that even charity can go too far. . . .

20 "As I grow older I find that I look more and more for greatness in little things. I want to know what a 21 great man eats and wears, and how he speaks to his servants. I want to find a Sir Philip Sidney⁵³⁸
22 greatness! Few men would remember the thirst of others, even in the moment of death.

3 ⁵³⁸ ? Sir Philip Sidney (1554-1586): English poet, soldier and politician.

1 "But anyone will be great in a great position! Even the coward will grow brave in the glare of the 2 footlights. The world looks on. Whose heart will not throb? Whose pulse will not quicken till he can do his 3 best?

4 "More and more the true greatness seems to me that of the worm doing its duty silently, steadily, 5 from moment to moment and from hour to hour." (CWSN 1: 137)

6 81. Referring to the great individual—the divine incarnation, the Guru, and the Rishi:

7
8 "You do not yet understand India! We Indians are MAN-worshippers, after all! Our God is man!"
9 (CWSN 1: 144)

10 82. On another occasion, Swami Vivekananda used the word "man-worshippers" in an entirely 11 different sense:

12
13 "This idea of man-worship exists in nucleus in India, but it has never been expanded. You must 14 develop it. Make poetry, make art, of it. Establish the worship of the feet of beggars as you had it in 15 Mediaeval Europe. Make man-worshippers." (CWSN 1: 144-45)

16 83. To Sister Nivedita:

18 "There is a peculiar sect of Mohammedans who are reported to be so fanatical that they take each 19 newborn babe and expose it, saying, 'If God made thee, perish! If Ali made thee, live!' Now this, which 20 they say to the child, I say, but in the opposite sense, to you tonight: 'Go forth into the world and there, if I 21 made you, be destroyed! If Mother made you, live!'" (CWSN 1: 151)

2
3 84. Long after Southern magnates in America had apologized to Vivekananda when they learned
4 that he had been mistaken for a Negro and was thus refused admission into hotels, the Swami remarked 5 to himself:

6 "What! rise at the expense of another! I didn't come to earth for that! . . . If I am grateful to my 7 white-skinned Aryan ancestor, I am far more so to my yellow-skinned Mongolian ancestor and, most so of 8 all, to the black-skinned Negritoid!" (CWSN 1: 153)

9 85. Commenting on the dungeon-cages of mediaeval prisoners on Mont-Saint-Michel:

10 "What a wonderful place for meditation!" (CWSN 1: 154)

11
12 "Oh, I know I have wandered over the whole earth, but in India I have looked for nothing save the 13 cave in which to meditate!" (Ibid.)

14 86. Though he considered offspring of the Roman Empire to be brutal and the Japanese notion of 15 marriage a horror, Swami Vivekananda nevertheless summed up the constructive ideals, never the 16 defects, of a community:

17
18 "For patriotism, the Japanese! For purity, the Hindu! And for manliness, the European! There is no 19 other in the world who understands, as does the Englishman, what should be the glory of a man!" (CWSN 20 1: 160)

21 87. Swami Vivekananda said of himself before he left for America in 1893:

22
23 "I go forth to preach a religion of which Buddhism is nothing but a rebel child and Christianity, with 24 all her pretensions, only a distant echo!" (CWSN 1: 161)

1 88. Describing the night Buddha left his wife to renounce the world, Swami Vivekananda said:

2
3 "What was the problem that vexed him? Why! It was she whom he was about to sacrifice for the 4 world! That was the struggle! He cared nothing for himself!" (CWSN 1: 172)

5 89. After describing Buddha's touching farewell to his wife, the Swami said:

6
7 "Have you never thought of the hearts of the heroes? How they were great, great, great—and soft as 8 butter?" (CWSN 1: 172)

9 90. Swami Vivekananda's description of Buddha's death and its similarity with that of Shri 10 Ramakrishna's:

11
12 He told how the blanket had been spread for him beneath the tree and how the Blessed One had lain 13 down, "resting on his right side like a lion" to die, when suddenly there came to him one who ran for 14 instruction. The disciples would have treated the man as an intruder, maintaining peace at any cost about 15 their Master's death-bed, but the Blessed One overheard, and saying, "No, no! He who was sent⁵³⁹ is ever 16 ready", he raised himself on his elbow and taught. This happened four times and then, and then only, 17 Buddha held himself free to die. "But first he spoke to reprove Ananda for weeping. The Buddha was not a 18 person but a realization, and to that any one of them might attain. And with his last breath he forbade 19 them to worship any."

20 The immortal story went on to its end. But to one who listened, the most significant moment had 21 been that in which the teller paused—at his own words "raised himself on his elbow and taught"—and said, 22 in brief parenthesis, "I saw this, you know, in the case of Ramakrishna Paramahansa". And there rose 23 before the mind the story of one,

3 ⁵³⁹ ? Lit., "the Tathâgata". "A word", explained Swami Vivekananda, "which is very like your 'Messiah'".
4

2
3 destined to learn from that teacher, who had travelled a hundred miles, and arrived at Cossipore
4 only when he lay dying. Here also the disciples would have refused admission, but Shri Ramakrishna
5 intervened, insisting on receiving the new-comer, and teaching him. (CWSN 1: 175-176)

6 91. Commenting on the historic and philosophic significance of Buddhistic doctrine:

7 "Form, feeling, sensation, motion and knowledge are the five categories in perpetual flux and fusion.
8 And in these lies Maya. Of any one wave nothing can be predicated, for it is not. It but was and is gone.
9 Know, O Man, thou art the sea! Ah, this was Kapila's philosophy, but his great disciple [Buddha] brought 10 the heart to make it live!" (CWSN 1: 176)

11 92. Concerning the Buddhist First Council and the dispute as to its President:

12 "Can you imagine what their strength was? One said it should be Ananda, because he had loved Him 13 most. But someone else stepped forward and said no! for Ananda had been guilty of weeping at the 14 death-bed. And so he was passed over!" (CWSN 1: 177)

15 93. Considering reincarnation a "scientific speculation" rather than an article of faith:

17 "Why, one life in the body is like a million years of confinement, and they want to wake up the 18 memory of many lives! Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof! . . . Yes! Buddhism must be right!
19 Reincarnation is only a mirage! But this vision is to be reached by the path of Advaita alone!" (CWSN 1: 20 180-81)

1 94. "Had I lived in Palestine, in the days of Jesus of Nazareth, I would have washed his feet, not with 2 my tears, but with my heart's blood!" (CWSN 1: 189)

3 95. "For the Advaitin, therefore, the only motive is love. . . . It is the Saviour who should go on his 4 way rejoicing, not the saved!" (CWSN 1: 197-98)

5 96. On the necessity of restraint in a disciple's life:

6
7 "Struggle to realize yourself without a trace of emotion! . . . Watch the fall of the leaves, but gather 8 the sentiment of the sight from within at some later time!" (CWSN 1: 207)

9
10 "Mind! No loaves and fishes! No glamour of the world! All this must be cut short. It must be rooted 11 out. It is sentimentality—the overflow of the senses. It comes to you in colour, sight, sound, and 12 associations. Cut it off. Learn to hate it. It is utter poison!" (Ibid., 207-208)

13 97. On the value of types:

14
15 "A strong and distinct type is always the physical basis of the horizon. It is all very well to talk of 16 universalism, but the world will not be ready for that for millions of years!

17 "Remember! if you want to know what a ship is like, the ship has to be specified as it is—its length, 18 breadth, shape, and material. And to understand a nation, we must do the same. India is idolatrous. You 19 must help her as she is. Those who have left her can do nothing for her!" (CWSN 1: 209)

20 98. Describing the Indian ideal of Brahmacharya in the student's life, Swami Vivekananda said:

21
22 "Brahmacharya should be like a burning fire within the veins!" (CWSN 1: 216)

1 99. Concerning marriage by arrangement instead of choice, Swami Vivekananda said:
2

3 "There is such pain in this country! Such pain! Some, of course, there must always have been. But 4 now the sight of Europeans with their different customs has increased it. Society knows that there is 5 another way!

6 [To a European] "We have exalted motherhood and you, wifeness; and I think both might gain by 7 some interchange.

8 "In India the wife must not dream of loving even a son as she loves her husband. She must be Sati.
9 But the husband ought not to love his wife as he does his mother. Hence a reciprocated affection is not 10 thought so high as one unreturned. It is 'shopkeeping'. The joy of the contact of husband and wife is not 11 admitted in India. This we have to borrow from the West. Our ideal needs to be refreshed by yours. And 12 you, in turn, need something of our devotion to motherhood." (CWSN 1: 221-22)

13 100. Speaking to a disciple with great compassion:
14

15 "You need not mind if these shadows of home and marriage cross your mind sometimes. Even to me, 16 they come now and again!" (CWSN 1: 222)

17 101. On hearing of the intense loneliness of a friend:
18

19 "Every worker feels like that at times!" (CWSN 1: 222)

1 102. Concerning the Hindu and Buddhist monastic and non-monastic ideals:

2
3 "The glory of Hinduism lies in the fact that while it has defined ideals, it has never dared to say that 4 any one of these alone was the one true way. In this it differs from Buddhism, which exalts monasticism
5 above all others as the path that must be taken by all souls to reach perfection. The story given in the 6 Mahâbhârata of the young saint who was made to seek enlightenment, first from a married woman and 7 then from a butcher, is sufficient to show this. 'By doing my duty', said each one of these when asked, 'by 8 doing my duty in my own station, have I attained this knowledge'. There is no career then which might not 9 be the path to God. The question of attainment depends only, in the last resort, on the thirst of the soul."
10 (CWSN 1: 223)

11 103. With reference to the idea that the lover always sees the ideal in the beloved, Swami 12 Vivekananda responded to a girl's newly avowed love:

13
14 "Cling to this vision! As long as you can both see the ideal in one another, your worship and 15 happiness will grow more instead of less." (CWSN 1: 224)

16 104. "The highest truth is always the simplest." (CWSN 1: 226)

17 105. Swami Vivekananda's remarks on American séances:

18
19 "Always the greatest fraud by the simplest means." (CWSN 1: 233)

20 106. On Western and Eastern views of a person as a body or a soul:

21
22 "Western languages declare that man is a body and has a soul; Eastern languages declare that he is 23 a soul and has a body." (CWSN 1: 236-37)

1 107. Concerning Swami Vivekananda's reverence for his Guru:

2
3 "I can criticize even an Avatâra [divine incarnation] without the slightest diminution of my love for 4 him! But I know quite well that most people are not so; and for them it is safest to protect their own
5 Bhakti!" (CWSN 1: 252)

6
7 "Mine is the devotion of the dog! I don't want to know why! I am contented simply to follow!" (Ibid., 8 252-53)

9 108. "Ramakrishna Paramahansa used to begin every day by walking about in his room for a couple 10 of hours, saying 'Sat-chidânanda!' or 'Shivoham!' or some other holy word." (CWSN 1: 255)

11 109. A few months before his passing away, Swami Vivekananda said:

12
13 "How often does a man ruin his disciples by remaining always with them! When men are once 14 trained, it is essential that their leader leaves them; for without his absence they cannot develop 15 themselves!" (CWSN 1: 260)

16 110. A few days before his passing away, the Swami said:

17
18 "I am making ready for death. A great Tapasyâ and meditation has come upon me, and I am making 19 ready for death." (CWSN 1: 261-62)

20 111. In Kashmir after an illness, Swami Vivekananda said as he lifted a couple of pebbles:

21
22 "Whenever death approaches me, all weakness vanishes. I have neither fear, nor doubt, nor thought 23 of the external. I simply busy myself making ready to die. I am as hard as that [the pebbles struck one 24 another in his hand]—for I have touched the feet of God!" (CWSN 1: 262)

5 Response to Welcome*⁵⁴⁰

6 [Editorial synthesis of four Chicago newspaper reports from: Herald, Inter Ocean, Tribune, and 7 Record,

8 ca. September 11, 1893] ⁵⁴¹

9 [Sisters and Brothers of America,]

10 It fills my heart with joy unspeakable to rise in response to the grand words of welcome given to us 11 by you. I thank you in the name of the most ancient order of monks the world has ever seen, of which 12 Gautama was only a member. I thank you in the name of the Mother of religions, of which Buddhism and 13 Jainism are but branches; and I thank you, finally, in the name of the millions and millions of Hindoo
14 people of all castes and sects. My thanks also to some of the speakers on the platform who have told you 15 that these different men from far-off nations will bear to the different lands the idea of toleration which 16 they may see here. My thanks to them for this idea.

17 I am proud to belong to a religion which has taught the world both tolerance and universal 18 acceptance. We believe not only in universal tolerance but we accept all religions to be true. I am proud to 19 tell you that I belong to a religion in whose sacred language, the Sanskrit, the word exclusion is 20 untranslatable. (Applause) I am proud to belong to a nation which has sheltered the persecuted and the 21 refugees of all religions and all nations of the earth. I am proud to tell you that we have gathered in our 22 bosom the purest remnant of the Israelites, a remnant of which came to southern India and took refuge 23 with us in the very years in which their holy temple was shattered to pieces by Roman tyranny. I am proud to belong to the religion which has sheltered and is still fostering the remnant of the grand Zoroastrian nation.

I will quote to you, brothers, a few lines from a hymn which every Hindoo child repeats every day. I feel that the very spirit of this hymn, which I remember to have repeated from my earliest boyhood, which is every day repeated by millions and millions of men in India, has at last come to be realized. "As the different streams, having their sources in different places, all mingle their water in the sea; O Lord, so the different paths which men take through different tendencies, various though they appear, crooked or straight, all lead to Thee."

The present convention, which is one of the most august assemblies ever held, is in itself an indication, a declaration to the world of the wonderful doctrine preached in the Gita: "Whosoever comes to Me, through whatsoever form I reach him, all are struggling through paths that in the end always lead to me." Sectarianism, bigotry and its horrible descendant fanaticism, have possessed long this beautiful earth. It has filled the earth with violence, drenched it often and often with human gore, destroyed civilization and sent whole nations into despair. But its time has come, and I fervently believe that the bell that tolled this morning in honor of the representatives of the different religions of the earth, in this parliament assembled, is the death-knell to all fanaticism (applause), that it is the death-knell to all persecution with the sword or the pen, and to all uncharitable feelings between brethren wending their way to the same goal, but through different ways.

parlor talk*⁵⁴²

[Chicago Record, September 11, 1893]

Four leaders of religious thought were sitting in Dr. Barrow's [Barrows's] parlor—the Jain, George Condin [Candlin], the missionary who has passed sixteen years in China, Swami Vivekananda, the learned Brahman⁵⁴³ Hindoo, and Dr. John H. Barrows, the Chicago Presbyterian. These four talked as if they were brothers of one faith.⁵⁴⁴

The Hindoo is of smooth countenance. His rather fleshy face is bright and intelligent. He wears an orange turban and a robe of the same color. His English is very good. "I have no home," said he.

I travel about from one college to another in India, lecturing to the students. Before starting for America I had been for some time in Madras. Since arriving in this country I have been treated with utmost courtesy and kindness. It is very gratifying to us to be recognized in this Parliament, which may have such an important bearing on the religious history of the world. We expect to learn much and take back some great truths to our 15,000,000 faithful Brahmins.

religion not the crying need of india*⁵⁴⁵

[A verbatim transcript of the address, delivered at the Parliament of Religions, September 20, 1893]

[Chicago Inter Ocean, September 21, 1893]

Suami Vivekananda

At the close of the reading of Mr. Headland's paper on "Religion in Peking" Dr. Momerie announced that the other speakers bulletined for the evening had failed to appear. It was but 9 o'clock, and the main auditorium and galleries were well filled. There was an outburst of applause as they caught sight of 1 the Hindoo monk, Vivekananda, sitting in his orange robe and scarlet turban upon the platform.

2 This popular Hindoo responded to the generous applause by saying that he did not come to speak to-3 night. He took occasion, however, to criticise many of the statements made in the paper by Mr. Headland.
4 Referring to the poverty which prevails in China, he said that the missionaries would do better to work in 5 appeasing hunger than in endeavoring to persuade the Chinese to renounce their faith of centuries and 6 embrace Christianity at [as] the price of food. And then the Hindu stepped back on the platform and 7 whispered to Bishop Keane, of the Catholic church, a moment.

8 He then resumed his address by saying that Bishop Keane had told him that Americans would not be 9 offended at honest criticism. He said he had heard of all the terrible things and horrible conditions which 10 prevail in China but he had not heard that any asylums had been erected by Christians for remedying all 11 these difficulties. He said:

12
13 Christian brethren of America, you are so fond of sending out missionaries to save the souls of 14 heathens. I ask you what have you done and are doing to save their bodies from starvation? (Applause). In 15 India, there are 300,000,000 men and women living on an average of a little more than 50 cents a month.
16 I have seen them living for years upon wild flowers. Whenever there was a little famine hundreds of 17 thousands died of starvation. Christian missionaries come and offer life but only on condition that the 18 Hindoos become Christians, abandoning the faith of their fathers and forefathers. Is it right? There are 19 hundreds of asylums, but if the Mohammedans or the Hindoos go there they would be kicked out. There 20 are thousands of asylums erected by Hindoos where anybody would be received. There are hundreds of 21 churches that have been erected with the assistance of the Hindoos, but no Hindoo temples for which a 22 Christian has given a penny.

1 What the East Needs

2 Brethren of America, the crying evil of the East is not religion. We have more than religion enough;
3 what they want is bread, but they are given a stone. (Applause). It is an insult to a suffering man dying of 4 hunger to preach to him metaphysics. Therefore, if you wish to illustrate the meaning of "brotherhood"
5 treat the Hindoo more kindly, even though he be a Hindoo and is faithful to his religion. Send missionaries 6 to them to teach them how better to earn a better piece of bread and not to teach them metaphysical 7 nonsense. (Great applause).

8
9 And then the monk said he was in ill health today and wished to be excused. But there were 10 thunders of applause and cries of "Go on" and Mr. Vivekananda continued.

11
12 The paper just read says something about the miserable and ignorant priest. The same may be said 13 of India. I am one of those monks who have been described as beggarly. That is the pride of my life.
14 (Applause). I am proud in that sense to be Christ-like. I eat what I have today and think not of tomorrow.
15 "Behold the lilies of the field; they toil not, neither do they spin." The Hindoo carries that out literally.
16 Many gentlemen present in Chicago sitting on this platform can testify that for the last twelve years I 17 never knew whence my next meal was coming. I am proud to be a beggar for the sake of the Lord. The 18 idea in the east is [that] to preach or teach anything for the sake of money is low and vulgar, but to teach 19 the name of the Lord for pay is such a degradation as would cause the priest to lose caste and be spat
20 upon. There is one suggestion in the paper that is true: If the priests of China and India were organized 21 there is an enormous amount of potential energy which could be used for regeneration of society and 22 humanity. I endeavored to organize it in India, but failed for lack of money. It may be I shall get the help I 23 want in America.

24 But we know it is very hard for a heathen to get any help from "Christian people". (Great applause).
25 I have heard so

1 much of this land of freedom, of liberty and freedom of thought that I am not discouraged. I thank 2 you, ladies and gentlemen.

3
4 And then the popular visitor bowed gracefully and sought to retire with a graceful smile, but the 5 audience cried to him to proceed. Mr. Vivekananda, fairly bubbling with an expression of good nature, 6 then explained the Hindoo theory of [re]incarna-tion. At the close of the address Dr. Momerie [a delegate 7 from England] said that he now understood why the newspapers had well called this parliament an 8 approach to the millennium. . . .

9 THE CHICAGO LETTER⁵⁴⁷

10 [New York Critic, November 11, 1893]

11 . . . It was an outgrowth of the Parliament of Religions, which opened our eyes to the fact that the 12 philosophy of the ancient creeds contains much beauty for the moderns. When we had once clearly 13 perceived this, our interest in their exponents quickened, and with characteristic eagerness we set out in 14 pursuit of knowledge. The most available means of obtaining it, after the close of the Parliament, was 15 through the addresses and lectures of Suami Vivekananda, who is still in this city. His original purpose in 16 coming to this country was to interest Americans in the starting of new industries among the Hindoos, but 17 he has abandoned this for the present, because he finds that, as "the Americans are the most charitable 18 people in the world," every man with a purpose comes here for assistance in carrying it out. When asked 19 about the relative condition of the poor here and in India, he replied that our poor would be princes there, 20 and that he had been taken through the worst quarter of the city only to find it, from the standpoint of his 21 knowledge, comfortable and even pleasant.

1 A Brahmin of the Brahmins, Vivekananda gave up his rank to join the brotherhood of monks, where 2 all pride of caste is voluntarily relinquished. And yet he bears the mark of race upon his person. His 3 culture, his eloquence, and his fascinating personality have given us a new idea of Hindoo civilization. He 4 is an interesting figure, his fine, intelligent, mobile face in its setting of yellows, and his deep, musical 5 voice prepossessing one at once in his favor.⁵⁴⁸ So it is not strange that he has been taken up by the 6 literary clubs, has preached and lectured in churches, until the life of Buddha and the doctrines of his 7 faith have grown familiar to us. He speaks without notes, presenting his facts and his conclusions with the 8 greatest art, the most convincing sincerity; and rising at times to a rich, inspiring eloquence. As learned 9 and cultivated, apparently, as the most accomplished Jesuit, he has also something Jesuitical in the 10 character of his mind; but though the little sarcasms thrown into his discourses are as keen as a rapier, 11 they are so delicate as to be lost on many of his hearers. Nevertheless his courtesy is unflinching, for these 12 thrusts are never pointed so directly at our customs as to be rude. At present he contents himself with 13 enlightening us in regard to his religion and the words of its philosophers. He looks forward to the time 14 when we shall pass beyond idolatry—now necessary in his opinion to the ignorant classes,—beyond worship, 15 even, to a knowledge of the presence of God in nature, of the divinity and responsibility of man. "Work out 16 your own salvation," he says with the dying Buddha; "I cannot help you. No man can help you. Help 17 yourself."

RELIGIONS OF INDIA⁵⁴⁹

Viva Kananda, the Hindoo Orator Delivers an Interesting Lecture⁵⁵⁰

[Daily Cardinal, University of Wisconsin at Madison, November 21, 1893]

A crowded house greeted Viva Kananda at the Congregational Church last evening. The speaker was attired in native costume, which consisted of a cream turban, with yellow gown and cardinal sash.

The first part of the lecture was devoted to illustrating the many resemblances of Sanscrit [sic], the language of the Hindoos, to that of English. They have no word in their language which means salvation; to them it is freedom from bondage. They believe that man's real nature is perfect, and that cause and effect controls all except God. Religion was aptly illustrated by the story of the blind men who each felt of a portion of a huge elephant, and each thought the animal like the particular part he felt of it; so with religion each of the various sects have a part of the whole truth, while truth itself is infinite and no man can say "I have seen it all."

The Hindoo belief was shown to be one of the most charitable of beliefs. Persecution is something unknown in India; there is no such word in their language. The lecturer challenged the world to show an instance in Hindoo progress, of a Christian missionary being persecuted. A Greek historian, writing of them said: "No Hindoo man is dishonest, no Hindoo woman unchaste."

Viva Kananda came to this country from India in the interest of the world's congress of religions, and his lecture last evening on the "Religions of India," was an inspiration to all who heard him. He has a pleasant, clear-cut, dusky face, and a decidedly impressive manner and bearing. His voice is low and

2 ALL RELIGIONS ARE TRUE

3 SUCH IS THE MESSAGE BROUGHT FROM INDIA

4 By a Hindu Monk⁵⁵¹

5 [Daily Iowa Capitol, November 28, 1893]

6 Swami Vivekananda Tells of Ancient Faith

7 Speaks again Tonight⁵⁵²

8
9 It was a rare as well as an odd treat which the people of Des Moines enjoyed last evening at the 10 Central Church of Christ. A monk, of the ancient faith of Brahma, made a happy presentation of that faith, 11 not so much of its peculiarities as of its underlying principles. The audience was a good sized one, perhaps 12 500 or 600 persons being present. The main floor being well filled and there were perhaps a couple of 13 hundred in the gallery.

14 The speaker opened by saying that all religious systems were an attempt to answer the question
15 What am I? This and the kindred ones, Whence Come I? and Whither Am I Going? are constantly 16 recurring. Without following the speaker throughout the entire lecture, suffice it to say, that underlying 17 the Hindu religion according to the speaker is the belief that "We are all divine". In each is a conscious 18 spirit that survives the body and the mind and is a part of the absolute. The speaker very ably defended 19 religion against the attacks of science. The latter can use only the five senses, and unless a thing can be 20 proven to be by these senses [it] is disposed to doubt its existence. But does science know that there are 21 only five senses? The speaker contended for the existence of a supersensuous sense; through which man 22 obtains revelations of spiritual truths. The Hindu

4 552 ? The lecture was "The Hindu Religion", delivered November 27, 1893, of which 6 highlights of the same lecture.

word for revelation is "Veda". Hence the "Vedas" are the revelations. These writings are not confined to those of the Hindus, but include those of all peoples; because said the speaker, all religions are true.

When "revelations" undertake to tell of material things they enter upon a domain which belongs to science and are not to be accepted. There was an ancient superstition that because Moses gave a revelation of the will of God, therefore everything Moses wrote must be true. There is a modern superstition that, because there are mistakes in the writings of Moses, therefore nothing Moses wrote is true. When Moses wrote the tables of the law he was inspired. When he told of the creation what he said was merely the speculations of Moses the Jew.

The speaker was not favorably impressed with the efforts to make Hindu converts—perverts he calls them—to Christianity, nor the converse. All religions being true, such perversions serve no good end. The Hindu religion the speaker claimed is not disposed to antagonize any belief; it absorbs them. As for tolerating different beliefs, the language of the Hindu has no word corresponding with the English word "intolerance". That language had a word for religion and one for sect. The former embraced all beliefs. The conception of the latter the speaker illustrated by telling the story of the frog, who had no idea there was any world outside the well in which he had always lived.

The speaker urged his hearers to cultivate the divine within them and to discard the "nonsense" of sects.

The lecturer is an able, dignified and forcible speaker. His mastery of English is perfect, there being only the faintest indications of a foreign accent. The lecturer was followed with closest attention by the audience. After the lecture, the speaker consented to answer questions to a portion of the audience that remained for that purpose. In the course of the answers he said that the Hindus were altogether opposed to the destruction of the life of any animal. He admitted the worship of the sacred cow. He said further that the Hindus had nothing answering to our church organizations. He was his own priest, bishop and pope. . . .

1 A MESSAGE FROM INDIA⁵⁵³

2 Vive Kananda, the Famous Hindoo Monk and Scholar, Appears in Des Moines

3 [Iowa State Register, November 28, 1893]

4 A Young Man of Thirty Years

5 and a Big, Active Brain and True Heart

6
7 The people of Des Moines had a glimpse of Oriental life and thought at its best yesterday, from the 8 lips of the famous Hindoo monk, Swami Vive Kananda. A central figure in the great Parliament of 9 Religions at Chicago this summer, where he coped with some of the greatest minds of the country with 10 honor to himself and his people, he gave those who heard him, and especially those who met him at Dr.
11 Breeden's, something new to think about. It was a message from over the sea, from another people of 12 wholly different surroundings, training, customs and traditions, but as the monk says, the basic principles 13 are the same in all religions. It is his doctrine that there is good in all religions and he preaches it with 14 great power. . . .

15 Yesterday afternoon he met a large number of the brightest women in Des Moines, members of the 16 various literary clubs, at the invitation of Mrs. H. O. Breeden, at her home, 1318 Woodland avenue,⁵⁵⁴ and 17 he talked to them for two or three hours about his religion, his view of Christianity, in which he heartily 18 concurs, and of the manners and customs of his people. The thing which Vive Kananda most strongly 19 insists upon is that the Hindoo religion is not to be blamed for all that is bad in India any more than 20 Christianity is to be blamed for all that is bad in America. And he insists that it is absurd to give 21 Christianity credit for all the marvelous undertakings and achievements of the people who cherish it. He 22 joins in the praise of the sublime things in the bible [sic], but says that when Moses undertook to speak of 23 the creation of the world, he was merely Moses, the Jew and nothing more.

4 554 ? An informal talk of which there is no verbatim transcript available.

1 This view from the other side, and a sympathetic side at that, is a most helpful and instructive and 2 intensely interesting one. Vive Kananda uses the purest English, for he was well educated in the English
 3 university, Calcutta.

4 He praises the American women most enthusiastically.

5
 6 I do not know what would have become of me if it had not been for your women,

7
 8 he said to a reporter for The Register last night.

9
 10 They took me up and took care of me and made all necessary arrangements for me. They are the 11 best women in the world. They have been so kind to me,

12
 13 [the Swami said] with a grateful smile.

15 Reincarnation*⁵⁵⁵

16 [Daily Iowa Capitol, November 29, 1893]

17 Swami Vivekananda last night talked of reincarnation.⁵⁵⁶ It is based, he contended, on the fact that 18 there never has been a new creation; that creation has existed coevally with God from all eternity.
 19 Departed souls find bodies to inhabit either better or worse than their former tenement, according as they 20 made them fit for one or the other. The lecturer will speak again on Thanksgiving evening at the same 21 place on the manners and customs of India.

1 An Intellectual Feast⁵⁵⁷

2 [Iowa State Register, November 30, 1893]

3 The remarkable discussions started by the famous Hindu monk, Vive Kananda, were the topic of 4 interest in intellectual circles yesterday.⁵⁵⁸ Especially so was his comment on the work of American 5 missionaries in India, and his strong defense of his own people and morals and religion. His position is 6 that the people of India do not need any more religion, but training in the practical things of life that will 7 enable them to cope with the English who have occupied India. Vive Kananda was the guest of Mr. F. W.
8 Lehman and Mr. O. H. Perkins yesterday and in their company visited the state house, which he very 9 much admired. He took a special interest in the portraits of the American Indians that he saw there. . . .

10 A Prayer meeting*⁵⁵⁹

11 [Des Moines Daily News, November 30, 1893]

12 Vivekananda attended a prayer meeting Wednesday evening and witnessed the baptism of two 13 young women. The service impressed him very much. He said:

15 I see. The sentiment is ennobling and the ceremony beautiful. It is the more impressive that the 16 minister is honest, earnest and believes what he says.

1 on american women*⁵⁶⁰

2 [Daily Iowa Capitol, November 30, 1893]

3 The now celebrated Hindu monk, Swami Vivekananda will lecture for the last time in Des Moines 4 tonight. He will speak on "Life in India" ["Manners and Customs of India"] a most interesting theme. The 5 renowned Hindu is a brilliant man about 30 years old. He says American women are lovely, but American 6 men are entirely too practical.

7 on the Brahmo Samaj*⁵⁶¹

8 [Iowa State Register, December 1, 1893]

9 Before he left the city [Des Moines, Iowa], Vive Kananda took occasion to say a warm word of praise
10 for the Bramo-Somaj [sic], the work it is doing in India, especially for the women, and of its representative 11 in this country. The visit of Vive Kananda, stirring as it did the intellectual centers of the city to their 12 depths and starting a lively religious discussion, prepared the way for the present visitor [Nagarkar] from 13 the Orient and heightened public interest in whatever he might have to say.

of India. The customs and manners of the people of that country were described,⁵⁶³ and during his lecture the Brahmin took occasion to show up some of the rough points of America. He is of the humorist order and his quick replies and witty sallies rarely failed to evoke applause. He would not admit that his people were wrong in everything, but there were a great many things peculiar to India which the Americans did not approve of and yet which might be all right. He had never seen husband and wife go before a magistrate to tell their troubles. They grew up with the idea that they were to be married and they loved each other as brothers and sisters.

He described the customs of his country, the temples, the art of the juggler and all of the other peculiarities of oriental countries in a manner that was charming. Following the address a number of questions were asked by persons in the audience.

The Manners and Customs of India*⁵⁶⁴

[Minneapolis Tribune, December 15, 1893]

Swami Vive Kananda, the Brahmin priest, was greeted by a packed house last evening at the First Unitarian Church, when he appeared before his second Minneapolis audience. Vive Kananda is a bright, quick witted talker, ready at all points to attack or defend, and inserts a humor into his speeches that is not lost upon his auditors. He spoke last evening under the auspices of the Kappa Kappa Gammas of the University, and the audience embraced a large number of earnest thinking men and women, pleased to be enlightened upon the "Manners and Customs of India," which was his chosen subject.⁵⁶⁵

⁵⁶³ ? The lecture was "The Manners and Customs of India", of which there is no verbatim transcript available. Cf. the following American newspaper report, "The Manners and Customs of India", for other highlights of the lecture.

⁵⁶⁴ ? New Discoveries, Vol. 1, pp. 217-19.

⁵⁶⁵ ? Of which there is no verbatim transcript available. Cf. the preceding American newspaper report, "A Witty Hindu", for other highlights of the lecture.

1 Robed in his native garb, with his hands for the most part clasped behind his back, Kananda paces 2 back and forth the narrow platform, talking as he paces, with long pauses between his sentences, as if 3 willing that his words should sink into the deepest soil. His talk is not so weighty that the frivolous mind 4 may not appreciate some of his sayings, but he also speaks a philosophy that carries gravest truth. He 5 tells of the manners and customs of India, of the divided life between the male and female, of the 6 reverence for and holiness of women, and again of their degeneracy; of the calm and peaceful life, that yet
7 is not true life because it is not liberty; he speaks of the Mohammedans, who form one-fifth of the Indian 8 population, and that 65,000,000, equal to the entire population of the United States. He describes the 9 magnificence of the temples, the art of the jugglers, who are the gypsies of the Indian race, and he 10 touches upon the superstitions of the people, of how they fill the water jars and stand them in the doorway 11 before starting on a journey; he speaks of the metaphysical knowledge of the plowman, who yet only 12 knows that he "pays taxes to the government"; he admits the reverence of the Hindu for the river Ganges, 13 and his ever lingering wish that he shall die on its banks; he tells all these things in a quiet, half 14 supercilious voice that presently leads to some remark on the American way of doing things, and then his 15 audience is in a ripple of laughter, and a tremor of clapping expresses amused acknowledgement of his 16 sarcasm. . . .

17 When some one at the close of his lecture asked him "What class of people are reached and 18 converted by the missionaries?" he quickly replied, "You know as much about that, the American sees the 19 reports, we never do", he has turned the query into a cause for smiling, and while the house regains its 20 composure he paces quietly to and fro. The address was followed with the closest attention and was 21 supplemented by several questions and answers among the audience, from whom he invited interrogation.

12
13 There has seldom been such a sensation in cultured circles in Detroit, as that created by the advent 14 of Swami Vive Kananda, the learned Hindu monk, whose exceptional command of our own language has 15 enabled us to receive impressions concerning ourselves from an oriental standpoint and to acquire 16 knowledge of a people of whose peculiar civilization and philosophy we have heard so much.

17 Both in public and private the Hindu brother has talked freely and frankly. He acknowledges that 18 the masses in India are very poor, very ignorant and are divided into a diversity of sects, with forms of 19 worship varying from downright idolatry to the broadest and most liberal form of divine conception based 20 on the brotherhood of man and the oneness of God. His mission, he says, is not to proselyte us—to try and 21 make us think as he does—but to get means to start a college in India for the education of teachers who 22 are to go among the common people and work a reform of existing evils, of which there are many. He 23 states that India is priest-ridden to a harrowing degree. It is priest-craft that distorts truth and 24 perpetuates ignorance. It is priest-craft that substitutes its own crude and narrow interpretations for 25 truth, which perverts the people and prevents their moral progression. The Swami regards all sects and

1 creeds from a broad basis. He even sees good in idolatry. It is an ideal, he thinks, for the ignorant whose mental capacity is insufficient to grasp abstract ideas, and who require a direct personification in some material form. He frankly states that we of the occident are also retarded in our progression by too much priest-craft, and that we are not free from idolatrous practices, in that some of our sects worship shrines, figures and pictures and even the sanctity with which the rostrum and pulpit of a modern church is regarded is an ideal idolatry.

Two Remarkable Things in This Country

The Swami notes two most remarkable things in this country, when asked his frank opinion of us: First, the superiority of our women, as regards influence in position and intellect. Second, in our charities and treatment of the poor, he says, we have almost solved the problem as to what shall be done with them. Not only in this, in the direction of hospitals and charitable institutions, but in our tremendous development of labor-saving machinery. He has no admiration for our material progress, as it does not make man better, nor for our boasted civilization, as we only ape and imitate the customs and manners of the English

—sometimes to a very ridiculous extent. We are yet too young, to have a distinctive civilization; we have yet to assimilate the human sewerage of Europe we have allowed to be poured upon us, before we produce a distinct American type.

[The writer goes on to say that the Swami's Indian background makes it difficult for him to understand that Western competitiveness is not undesirable but a primal law of nature itself—the survival of the fittest—and that inasmuch as "the dreamy and sentimental philosophy of the Hindoos" accounts for their poverty, degradation, and domination by a "mere handful of Englishmen," the Swami would do well neither to ignore nor to despise the materialism of the West. Having thus editorialized, he continues:]

His Criticism of Missionaries

If what he states is true about the results accomplished by foreign missions in India, the various boards of these various organizations would do well to consult him and follow his advice. It is for the betterment of his people he is here. But he says missionary work does no good; only adds additional sects and creeds to an already sect-ridden country; that the teachings of the Vedas, with which every Hindoo is familiar, is identical with the teachings of Christ. He makes the reasonable plea that foreign creeds and dogmas are not consonant with their inherited proclivities or civilization, and are consequently difficult to pro-pagate.

The mission of Kananda is, however, one that should commend it[self] to every lover of humanity. He hopes to see the best of our material philosophy and progress infused into Hindoo civilization, and that, also, we may take lessons from them, until we shall all become, as we once were in ages past, brother Aryans, possessing a common civilization—the exalted philosophy of non-self, being alike without sect or creed in oneness with God.

7 Swami Vive Kananda repaid the admiration of his lady acquaintances by writing verses, at the same 8 time religious and semi-sentimental, yesterday afternoon.⁵⁷¹ He departed this morning for Ada, O. [Ohio].

9 In a conversation concerning the material condition of the Hindu workingmen, the learned monk 10 said that the poor lived on porridge alone. The laborer ate a breakfast of porridge, went off to his daily toil
11 and returned in the evening to another breakfast of porridge and called it dinner. In most of the provinces
12 the farmers were so poor that they could not afford to eat any of the wheat raised. A day laborer on a farm 13 received only 12 pence a day, but a dollar in India brought 10 times as much as it would in this country.
14 Cotton was raised, but its fiber was so short it had to be woven by hand, and even then it was necessary to 15 import American and Egyptian cotton to mix with it.

1 amusing to him, al-

1 though a little humiliating to the American self-love. One lady said:

2 "I really was ashamed at the contrast between the knowledge possessed by him and by some of our 3 Detroit men who consider themselves gentlemen of culture. At one dinner party a gentleman asked 4 Kananda what books he would advise him to read on chemistry, whereupon the Hindu monk responded
5 with a long list of English works on this science, which one would naturally expect an American to know 6 more about than a Hindu. Another gentleman followed by a request as to books on astronomy, to which 7 Kananda obligingly answered with another equally good list of English astronomical works. But his grow-
8 ing astonishment reached its climax when a lady spoke of 'The Christ,' and said, 'What do those words
9 mean?' He again furnished the desired information, but in a tone growing slightly sarcastic."

10 Probably the choicest example of nineteenth century civilization and culture was given by a lady, 11 who asked Kananda if he liked the English. He very naturally responded that he did not. Then she 12 continued, with fine tact, to pursue the subject still further by touching references to that pleasant event, 13 the Sepoy rebellion. As the Hindu grew excited she smiled at him ironically and said:

14 "I thought I could disturb your philosophical Eastern calm."

11 Swami Vive Kananda lectured to a very large audience at the Detroit Opera House last night on 12 "Christian Missions in India."⁵⁷⁴ One could believe that the lecture was intended as an answer to the many 13 statements of missionaries which have been aimed at Kananda during the past two weeks in this city.

14 Kananda was introduced by Honorable Thomas W. Palmer last night, who recited a fable by way of 15 preface. "Two knights of honor once met on the field," he said, "and seeing a shield hanging on a tree they 16 halted. One said: 'What a very fine silver shield.' The other replied that it was not silver but copper. Each 17 disputed the other's statement until at last they got off their horses, tied them to the tree, and drawing 18 their swords fought for several hours. After they were both well spent by the loss of blood they staggered 19 against each other and fell on the opposite sides from where they had been fighting. Then one glanced up 20 at the pendant shield and said: 'You were right, my friend. The shield is copper.' The other looked up and 21 said: 'It is I who was mistaken. The shield is silver.' If they had looked at both sides of the shield in the 22 first place it would have saved the loss of much blood. I think that if we looked at both sides of every 23 question there would be less argument and fighting.

5 comprehensive report of the same lecture.

1 "We have with us tonight a gentleman who, from the christian standpoint is, I suppose, a pagan. But 2 he belongs to a religion which was old long before ours was thought of by men. I am sure that it will be 3 pleasant to hear from the copper side of the shield. We have looked at it only from the silver side. Ladies 4 and Gentlemen, Swami Vive Kananda."

5 Kananda, who had remained seated on the stage during Mr. Palmer's remarks, stepped to the front, 6 clad in the orange robe and unique turban of the Brahman [sic] priest, bowed in acknowledgement of the 7 welcoming applause, and launched at once into his subject.

8
9 What India Is

10 [The Swami said:]
11

12 I do not know about the efforts of christian missionaries in China and Japan except through reading 13 the books and literature on the subject, but I can speak about the efforts of christianizing India. But before 14 I go into this I want to place before you an idea of what India is.

15
16 Then he explained in detail how the 300,000,000 inhabitants of India are divided into castes, 17 between which there can be no affiliation, how the natives of the south cannot understand the language of 18 the ones of the north, and vice versa. He told how the lower caste lived on the flesh of dead animals, and 19 never bathed their bodies, and how impossible it would be for the higher class to mingle with them, 20 although they were granted the protection of the same laws.

21 He referred to the first appearance of the christians in an attempt to evangelize the followers of 22 Buddah [Buddha]. They were Spaniards, he said, and they discovered a temple near Ceylon, in which was 23 presented a tooth of Buddah as a sacred relic. "The Spaniard christians thought that their God com-24 manded them to go and fight and kill and murder," he said,

25
26 and so they seized the tooth of Buddah and destroyed it. By the way, it was not a tooth of Buddah at

1 conversations and interviews 457
2

1 all, but a relic manufactured by the priests—it was a foot long. (Laughter)

1 Every religion has its miracles; you needn't laugh because the tooth was a foot long. Well, after the 2 Spaniards took away the tooth they converted a few hundred and killed a few thousands; and there Spain
3 stops in the history of missionary efforts among the Buddhists.

4
5 The Portugese [sic] christians, he said, discovered the great temple at Bombay, built in the form of a 6 body with three heads, in representation of the trinity as the Hindoo believes in a trinity.

7 "The Portugese saw it and couldn't explain it," said Kanan-da, with a sarcastic ring in his voice, 8

9 and so they concluded that it was of the devil, and gathered their forces and knocked off the three 10 heads of the temple. The devil is such a handy man. I am sorry to see him so fast disappearing.

11
12 Then Kananda outlined the various stages of christian evangelization in India, and paid very high 13 tribute to two or three missionaries, who, he said, had been great exceptions to the rule, and lived among 14 the people to uplift and minister to their needs.

15
16 Antagonize Native Interests

17 The Hindoo priest told how as soon as the land came into possession of the English people every 18 village had its white colony, which huddled itself together and withdrew from all association with the 19 natives. Then when the missionaries reached the country, he said, they would naturally go at once among 20 the English people, who sympathized with them and with whom they could converse. The missionaries 21 know nothing of the native language, he says, and so they cannot dwell with the people. Most of them are 22 married and for the sake of getting their wives into the English society they identify themselves with all 23 their interests, and in doing so directly antagonize the interests of the natives, and make it impossible to 24 get in touch with them.

25 "We sometimes have famines in India," he said.

And so the young missionaries will hang about the fag end of a famine and give a starving native 5 shillings, and there you have him, a ready-made christian; take him. That was probably a baptist missionary, and so when a methodist missionary comes along he gives the same native 5 shillings, and his name is again registered as a convert. The only band of converts around each missionary is composed of those dependent upon him for a living. They have to be christians or starve. And they are dwindling as the money supply decreases. I am glad if you want to make christians in India by giving work and bread to the poor. God speed you to do that. There is one benefit that must be credited to the missionary movement. It makes education cheap. The missionaries bring some money with them from the people who send them, and the Indian government appropriates some, so that there are some very good colleges and schools available to the natives through missionaries. But I will be frank with you. There are no conversions from the schools to the christian religion. The Hindoo boy is very clever. He takes the bait, but never gets the hook.

The speaker said that the lady missionary goes into certain houses, gets four shillings a month, reads the Bible, while the native girls give indifferent attention, and teaches them to knit while they pay very keen attention. The girls, like the boys, he said are always alert to learn practical things, but they will give little heed to the christian religion, although they will espouse it if necessary to get the other advantages.

Most Missionaries Incompetent

"The most of the men whom you send us as missionaries are incompetent," he said.

I have never known of a single man who has studied Sanscrit [sic] before going to India as a missionary and yet all our books and literature are printed in it.

He suggested as an explanation of the visits of the missionaries that "perhaps the atheism and scepticism at home is push-

2
3 ing the missionaries out all over the world." When in India he said he had thought the sole business
4 of christianity [was] to send all people to the fires of hell, but since coming to America he has found that 5 there are a great many liberal men. He referred to the parliament of religions, and told how a certain 6 editor of a presbyterian paper had written an article at the close of the parliament entitled "The Lying 7 Hindoo," in which he had scored him very severely.

8 In the article the editor said that "while in the parliament he was here as our guest, but now that it 9 is over we ought to make an enthusiastic attack against him and his false doctrines."

10 In referring to the medical missionaries in India Kananda said:

11 India requires health, but it must be health for people. And how can you help our people if you do 12 not get in touch with them? When you come to us as missionaries you ought to throw over all idea of 13 nationality. Jesus didn't go about among the English officials attending champagne suppers. He didn't care 14 to have his wife get into high European society. If your missionary does not follow Christ what right has he 15 to call himself a christian? We want missionaries of Christ. Let such come to India by the hundreds and 16 thousands. Bring Christ's life to us and let it permeate the very core of society. Let Him be preached in 17 every village and corner of India. But don't have your missionaries choose their profession as a means of 18 livelihood. Let them have the call of Christ. Let them feel within that they were born for that work.

19 As far as converting India to christianity is concerned, there is no hope. If it were possible it ought 20 not to be done. It would be dangerous; it would mark the destruction of all religions. If the whole universe 21 should come to have the same temperament, physical or mental, destruction would immediately result.
22 Why couldn't you convert the Jew? Why couldn't you make the Persians christians? Why is it that to every 23 African who becomes a christian 100 become followers of Mohammed? Why can't you make an impression on India and China, and Japan? Because oneness of 1 mental temperament all over the world would be death. Nature is too wise to allow such things.

2
3 Filled the World with Bloodshed

4 [The Swami said:]

5
6 The christian nations have filled the world with bloodshed and tyranny. It is their day now. You kill 7 and murder and bring drunkenness and disease in our country, and then add insult to injury by preaching
8 Christ and Him crucified. What christian voice goes through the land protesting against such horrors? I 9 have never heard any. You drink the idea in your mothers' milk that you are angels and we are devils. It is 10 not enough that there be sunlight; you must have the eyes to see it. It is not only necessary that there be 11 goodness in people; you must have the appreciation of goodness within yourselves in order to distinguish 12 it. This is in every heart until it has been murdered by superstition and hideous blasphemy.

13
14 Then Kananda drew a very beautiful simile to illustrate that the essential truths of all religions are 15 [the] same, and all else is but incidental and unimportant environment. He told how the savage man might 16 find a few jewels, and prizing them, tie them with a rude thong and string them about his neck. As he 17 became slightly civilized he would perhaps exchange the thong for a string. Becoming still more 18 enlightened he would fasten his jewels with a silken cord; and when possessed of a high civilization he 19 would make an elaborate gold setting for his treasures. But throughout all the changes in settings the 20 jewels—the essentials—would remain the same.

22 If the Hindoo wishes to criticize the christian religion he talks of the fables and miracles, and all the 23 nonsense of the Bible, but he does not say one word in disparagement of the sermon on the mount, or of 24 the beautiful life of Jesus. And so when the christian criticizes the Hindoo religion he talks about the 25 dogmas and the temples, but he says nothing [should say nothing] against the morality and philosophy of the Hindoo. Help the Jew and let him help you. Help the Hindoo and let him help you. I deny that any human being has the faculty of seeing good at all who cannot see it in all places. There is the same beauty in the character of Christ and the character of Buddah. It is not an assimilation that we want, but adjustment and harmony. I ask the preachers to give up, first, the idea of nationality; and second, the idea of sects. God's children have no sects.

Much has been said about the ladies of India, and of their faults and condition. There are faults; God help us to make them right. We are thankful for your criticism of our women. But while you are speaking of them I will say that I should be glad to see a dozen spiritual women in America. Nice dress, wealth, brilliant society, operas, novels—. Even intellectuality is not all that there is for a man or woman. There should be also spirituality, but that side is entirely absent from christian countries. They live in India.

Vive Kananda's large audience listened very respectfully to his remarks last night, and once or twice applauded heartily.

So Soul Follows Soul, According to Kananda.

Vive Kananda lectured to an audience of about 150 [according to the Journal, 500] at the Auditorium last night upon "Buddhism, the Religion of the Light of Asia."⁵⁷⁶ Honorable Don M. Dickinson introduced him to the audience.

"Who shall say that this system of religion is divine and that doomed?" asked Mr. Dickinson in his introductory remarks. "Who shall draw the mystic line?"

3 He also said that at one time the followers of Buddha were the unwilling allies of the christian
4 religion. Kananda appeared in a robe of orange yellow with a sash-like cord about the waist, and a turban 5 draped out of some eastern cloth of silken texture, the flowing end of which was brought in front over one 6 shoulder.

7 Vive Kananda reviewed at length the early religions of India. He told of the great slaughter of 8 animals on the altar of sacrifice; of Buddha's birth and life; of his puzzling questions to himself over the 9 causes of creation and the reasons for existence; of the earnest struggle of Buddha to find the solution of 10 creation and life; of the final result.

11 Buddha, he said, stood head and shoulders above all other men. He was one, he said, [of] whom his 12 friends or enemies could never say that he drew a breath or ate a crumb of bread but for the good of all.

13 "He never preached transmigration of the soul," said Kananda,

14 except he believed one soul was to its successor like the wave of the ocean that grew and died away, 15 leaving naught to the succeeding wave but its force. He never preached that there was a God, nor did he 16 deny there was a God.

17 "Why should we be good?" his disciples asked of him.

18 "Because," he said, "you inherited good. Let you in your turn leave some heritage of good to your 19 successors. Let us all help the onward march of accumulated goodness, for goodness' sake."

20 He was the first prophet. He never abused any one or arrogated anything to himself. He believed in 21 our working out our own salvation in religion.

22 "I can't tell you," he said, on his death bed, "nor any one. Depend not on any one. Work out your own 23 religion [salvation]."

24 He protested against the inequality of man and man, or of man and beast. All life was equal, he 25 preached. He was the first man to uphold the doctrine of prohibition in liquors. "Be good and do good," he said. "If there is a God you have him by being good. If there is no God, being good is

1 good. He is to be blamed for all he suffers. He is to be praised for all his good."

2 He was the first who brought the missionaries into existence. He came as a savior to the 3 downtrodden millions of India. They could not understand his philosophy, but they saw the man and his 4 teachings and they followed him.

5
6 In conclusion Kananda said that Buddhism was the foundation of the christian religion; that the 7 catholic church came from Buddhism.

11 Curiosity, says our Hindoo visitor, is the most conspicuous trait of the American people, but he 12 added that it is the way to knowledge. This has long been the European estimate of the American, or more ing been born at Calcutta about 30 years ago. The lower floor of the Opera house was about half filled when the speaker was introduced by Dr. C. T. Newkirk. During his discourse, he scored the people of this country for their worship of the almighty dollar. It is true that there is caste in India. There, a murderer can never reach the top. Here, if he gets a million dollars he is as good as any one. In India, if a man is a criminal once, he is degraded forever. One of the great factors in the Hindoo religion is its tolerance of other religions and beliefs. Missionaries are much more severe on the religions of India than upon that of other Oriental countries, because the Hindoos allow them to be, thus carrying out one of their cardinal beliefs, that of toleration. Kananda is a highly educated and polished gentleman. It is said that he was asked in Detroit if the Hindoos throw their children into the river. Whereupon, he replied that they do not, neither do they burn witches at the stake. The speaker lectures in Saginaw tonight.

14 Englishmen in India say of the "Yankee."

KANANDA ARRIVES⁵⁷⁹

[Saginaw Evening News, March 21, 1894]

Swami Vive Kananda, the Hindu Monk, arrived this afternoon from Bay City and is registered at the Vincent. He dresses like a well-to-do American and speaks excellent English. He is slightly above the medium height, is stoutly built and his complexion resembles that of an Indian. In answer to a question by a NEWS representative, he said he learned English from private tutors, and by contact with Europeans, who visited Hindustan. He further stated that his talk tonight would be explanatory of the religion of the Hindoo and to show that they are not heathen but believe in a future state.

6 India—Description of the Manners and Customs of His Country⁵⁸¹

7 At the meeting of the North Shore Club, Tuesday afternoon, the audience was a large and brilliant 8 one, representing the highest culture, and including many distinguished guests. Suami Vive Kananda, 9 from India, a learned monk, who speaks English with ease and fluency, gave an intensely interesting
10 description of the manners and customs of his country. Suami Vive Kananda, who wore the yellow robe 11 and turban of his order, began by saying that India is divided into two parts, the northern and the 12 southern. In each the language and customs are so different that the speaker who was from the northern 13 portion on meeting a fellow countryman at the Parliament of Religions from the southern, was obliged to 14 converse with him in English, neither being able to understand the other's native language. Throughout 15 the entire country there are nine languages and 100 dialects spoken.

16 There is some uniformity of religion, yet each sect is a religion and a law unto itself. Many erroneous 17 descriptions have been written about India, based on imperfect knowledge from which inferences have 18 been drawn that have been most prejudicial. With the Hindoo everything is subservient to religion and he 19 gives up all that is antagonistic to it, his creed being that he is not to enjoy life but to conquer it and gain a 20 supreme mastery over self, which is the highest type of civilization. Caste distinctions which are being 21 obliterated are simply the Aryans and the un-Aryans—the Brahmins and the Sudras. The Brahmin, who is 22 the child of a thousand years' culture, must lead a life of rigid discipline; but the Sudra, who is ignorant, is allowed great latitude.

Woman in the position of mother is accorded universal reverence in India. When a son who has become a monk returns to his home, his father, when greeting him, must kneel and touch his forehead to the earth; but the monk must kneel before his mother. Women in India do not throw their children into the rivers to be devoured by crocodiles. Widows are not burned on the funeral pyre of their husband unless it is a voluntary act of self-immolation.

There is no divorce allowed for the high class; a woman who leaves her husband, even if she be most degraded, holds still an interest in his property. Suami Vive Kananda recited a beautiful passage from the Legend of the Ramayana, one of the grandest poems of India, which showed what the love of a wife for her husband should be. The love of Sita for Rama. He added, "Much is said in these days of the 'survival of the fittest,'" and western nations use it as an argument against India, reasoning that their own wealth, prosperity and power show them to be greater and their religion higher and purer.

But India has seen mighty nations rise and fall whose aim has been only the power of conquest and the glory of this life. India has been repeatedly despoiled, has worn the yoke of the conqueror and borne the burden of oppression with indomitable patience and has shown tolerance to all, because she has possessed the knowledge that her people hold fast to a religion that stands securely on a high spirituality and not on the shifting sand of present enjoyment.

The lecturer wore an orange-colored coat and the accompanying yellow turban, which is called a beggar's suit. This is worn when a Buddhist has given up "everything for God and humanity." The theory of reincarnation was discussed. The speaker said that many clergymen who were more aggressive than learned asked: "Why one is unconscious of a former life if such a thing had been?" The reply was that "It would be childish to lay a foundation for consciousness, as man is unconscious of his birth in this life, and also of much that has transpired."

The speaker said that "no such thing" as "a Judgment Day" existed in his religion, and that his god neither punished nor rewarded. If wrong was done in any way, the natural punishment was immediate. The soul, he added, passed from one body to another, until it had become a perfect spirit, able to do without the limitations of a body. . . .

[New York Daily Tribune, May 3, 1894]

Swami Virekanmda [sic] lectured on "India and Reincarnation" last evening at the home of Miss Mary Phillips, No. 19 West Thirty-eighth-st.⁵⁸⁷ He mentioned among other salient points regarding Hindooism, or Brahminism, that their religion bore no distinctive name; that it was considered that a belief in the truth of all creeds was religion, and that the belief that one certain dogma was the real and only religion was sect. The Karmic law of cause and effect was explained, also the external and internal natures in their close relations to each other. The actions in this world, as governed by a previous life and the change to still another life, were dwelt upon in detail.

Swami Vivekananda Tells About the Religion of High Caste Indians⁵⁸⁹

1 ment of religions at Chicago last summer, and who is spending some time in this country, studying 2 its manners and customs. The lecture was under the auspices of the woman's club, and was a novel and 3 interesting occasion. The noted Hindu was pleasantly introduced by the president of the club, Miss 4 Wetherbee, who alluded to the great antiquity of India, its wonderful history and the high intellectual 5 qualities of the Hindu race.

6 The speaker of the evening was attired in native costume, namely, a bright scarlet robe, confined at 7 the waist by a long scarf of the same color, and wore a picturesque white silk turban wound round his 8 head. At the first glance one saw the swarthy complexion, the dark and dreamy eyes and introspective
9 manner of a high caste Brahmin, whose life is devoted to religion and who is also a celibate. That he is a 10 finely educated person, appeared in his wonderful command of English and his power of argument, while 11 an occasional quotation from Milton and Dickens, showed that he was appreciative of the great English 12 classics.

13 He first spoke of that striking peculiarity of the social condition of the Hindu's caste, affirming that it 14 is not now as strict an institution as in the past, although even now everything goes by heredity. Mixture 15 of castes, though not absolutely forbidden, entails disadvantage on the children. The Brahmin or high 16 caste person devotes the first part of his life to the study of the Vedas or sacred books and the latter part 17 to meditating on the divinity, being supposed to have overcome the human in himself, and to be only a 18 soul.

19 The speaker did not hesitate to criticise adversely some western customs, especially some 20 connected with the position of woman. He affirmed that we worship women in the wife, while all women to 21 the Hindu represent the mother element. In America when a woman ceases to be young and beautiful, she 22 has a hard time of it, but in India kings must step aside for an aged woman to pass, so great is the respect 23 in which they are held. He affirmed that some of the most beautiful portions of the Vedas, the Hindu bible, 24 were written by women, but that there was no other bible in this world in which they had any part.

25 Considerable time was given to refuting the statement, which he characterized as untrue, in regard 26 to the cruelty practised to widows in India, the speaker referring in the course of his remarks to the zenana widows, who have been for some time the objective point of Christian missionaries from other countries. Marriage is an institution very safely guarded and, in addition to the law that a Brahmin must not marry a relative, none are allowed to marry who are known to have such a disease as consumption or any incurable physical ill. The strict rules of caste which prevent a person from drinking from the same glass as another, and other kindred regulations, although [not] part of the religion, were excellent in their result on the physical condition of a country, numbering 285 millions, in the prevention of the spread of contagious diseases. The speaker was horrified, as he might well be, at the promiscuous water drinking seen in railroad trains and stations in this country. The children are, first of all, taught kindness to all living beings and so thoroughly is this training that the smallest child instinctively turns aside from stepping on a worm. A strange thought that among these so called heathen there is no need of the society with the long name which often fails in its mission in Christian lands.⁵⁹⁰ The guest of a house, that is, a man who comes to the door and says, "I am hungry," is God's own image to the Hindu and is treated with the utmost kindness and consideration, being fed before the master and mistress of the establishment.

The speaker alluded sadly to the poverty of his country, for, while the upper caste live in comfort, there are millions whose only food is dried flowers, and who are so low in the scale of existence that they have hardly an identity, and are pitiful objects in the plane of existence. He hinted quite forcibly that food and education would be better than the sermons which Christians and Mohammedans had been throwing at them for the last hundred years. Many of the simple and primitive customs of this peculiar people were told with naivete and innocence that was refreshing in this age when words are used to conceal thoughts. He said there was no flirting or coquetting between their young men and maids, and that the latter did not strut forth into public places with all their bravery [finery?] on for the purpose of securing a husband, all of which made the inhabitants of this great and glorious republic wonder if something were not slightly rotten in the state of Denmark. It is well to see both sides of the shield in order to be able to decide with an unprejudiced eye, and many of the listeners went away quite puzzled in mind at hearing some of their pet American customs arraigned by a Hindu and a heathen.

The address was a most interesting one and was listened to with deep attention by all present. At the close many [questions] were presented to the thoughtful monk, who wasted very few words in social flourishes or unmeaning talk. He seemed much interested in Dr. Bowker, the only one in the audience who had ever visited the strange land which was centuries old before this republic was born.

And Delivers a Pointed Message to Christians.

Swami Vivekananda, the Brahman monk addressed a most interested audience Tuesday night in Library Hall under the auspices of the Lawrence Woman's Club.

Miss Wetherbee introduced the speaker and prepared the way for a cordial reception which American courtesy rarely fails to give a distinguished visitor from another nation.

Miss Wetherbee wisely referred to him as a prominent personality at the World's Parliament of Religions, also to the strong impression made by him at the World's fair. . . .

His Iterations

. . . In his own country, in his own class, he addresses all women as mother. The Brahmin is educated thus to think of women as mother and a man may not marry his mother. In that country the mother instinct is developed in woman; in this he thought the wife instinct was cultivated, and the most beautiful thing in his lecture was his tribute to the mother, and not unnoticed was the reference to the kindness of heart of the little Hindoo child which would instinctively cause him to turn aside from his path rather than crush a worm.

The Subject of Marriage

formed a large part of his lecture. Among the high classes, called Aryans, women think of marriage as indecent [?]. A widow is not expected to ever marry again. A man who never marries, is highly praised, and indeed worshipped, but should he marry then in the minutes all would be changed. He who does not marry is looked upon as high-minded, as holy and spiritual.

Among the Aryans no money is paid in marriage [?], and as female children are largely in the majority it is one of most difficult things for a father to marry his daughter, and from the time of her birth he racks his brains to find her a husband.

With the two lower classes the rules in regard to marriage are all different. Widows marry again and wives and husbands if desirous become divorced. When a child is born an astrologer comes and casts a horoscope of the child, he delineates the future character of the boy or girl—it is decided whether he is manly or a devilish child; if devilish—he is married to one next in caste, and thus is obtained a minute chance of bettering the condition of the devilish child.

The matter of marriage is not left to the decision of the child as in that case he might marry because [he was] in love with a good nose or good eyes and so in having his own way would spoil the whole thing. The fact was emphasised that only the higher classes think of a

True Spiritual Life

and of worshiping God instead of thinking of marriage. He spoke of the pitiful condition of the lower classes, their poverty

1 and their ignorance. Millions and millions are [un]able to write their name and yet he said:

2
3 We are all preaching sermons into them, when their hands are reaching out for bread. Poverty is so 4 extreme in the lower classes that fifty cents a month is the average income of a Hindoo. Millions live on 5 one poor meal a day and millions subsist on wild flowers for food.

6
7 He spoke of the idea being prevalent that there were no scholars among the women of India and 8 stated that this was an error as many women of the Brahmins were married but became scholars, and 9 with evident pride he referred to the fact that in no nation could one line be found

10
11 In Any Bible

12 that had been written by a woman excepting his own country alone where many beautiful things in 13 their Bible had been written by women.

14 Swami Vivekananda did not fail to inform the audience in English words which could not be 15 misunderstood, that the effort to raise his people by teaching them the Christian religion was a thankless 16 task. He said:

17
18 We have seen the Greek and the Persian come to us—we have seen the Spaniard with guns come to 19 make us Christians, still we are Hindoos and thus we shall remain.

20
21 Had Vivekananda used all the power of his flashing eyes and his expressive voice it would have been 22 a most dramatic speech when he said:

23
24 I dare here in America to say that we of India shall stand by our religion.

1 conversations and interviews 475
2

1 He said our customs were good for us and we were welcome to them. He stood before us as he has 2 before many a cultured American audience—he, the learned exponent of the Brahman religion, the only 3 Hindoo who has ever come to this country to

1 tell us—as forcibly as he dared and as politely as he could and yet be forcible,—to say no more to the 2 poor Hindoo but to be so very kind as to mind our own business.

3 After the lecture many of the audience gladly availed themselves of the opportunity offered by Mr.
4 and Mrs. Young to meet Vivekananda at their residence where he has been entertained and has proven 5 himself to be a most delightful guest.

13 A defense of Mahomet [sic] by a Hindu to a Christian audience; the lesson that all prophets are to be 14 revered and their teachings studied reverently; that the followers of these teachers should not confound 15 for us by their behavior the revelation made from God to man by prophecy—was the theme at Greenacre 16 yesterday.

17 Clear thought and statement patiently corrected the crude and superficial adverse criticism and 18 comment that had been made concerning the Eastern belief—reincarnation. The statement was masterful, 19 because simple, and was brought home by illustrations familiar and commonplace. This was followed by a 20 nobly eloquent plea for the judicial spirit in judging the history of the time and the faith of Mahomet 21 himself and the service done the human race by the essentials of this faith as a prophet of God. Men and then, were moved as they tell us Wendell Phillips⁵⁹⁴ was wont to move the hard hearts to consider the sin of slavery.

Scorn, wit and intellect did noble service in all gentleness and dignity in this appeal that the defects, the horrors, of each and all religions should be put one side that the essentials common to all—the immortality of the soul, one God, the Father and his prophets sacred, each, to some division of the human family, and each having truth to give needful to all—should be recognized and revered to salvation.

The speaker, Swami Vivekananda, gave what only a great soul is capable of giving. It was an hour never to be forgotten. This man brought those present into the light of truth, whatever their prejudice and training, as Phillips Brooks united Unitarian and Episcopalianism, and all who love the good and true came to hold him for their bishop. So this Hindu, in his constructive thought, when he will give it, can make the power of the prophets known to us by his own presence.

4 A HIGH PRIEST OF INDIA⁶⁰⁰

5 [Baltimore American, October 13, 1894]

6 SWAMI VIVEKANANDA ARRIVES IN BALTIMORE

7 HIS VIEWS ON RELIGION

8
9 Swami Vivekananda, a Brahmin high priest of India, arrived in Baltimore last night, and is the guest 10 of Rev. Walter Vrooman. . . .

11 To an American reporter last night Swami Vivekananda said:

12
13 I have been very favorably impressed with American institutions during my stay in this country. My 14 time has been divided between four cities—Chicago, New York, Boston and Detroit. I never heard of 15 Chicago when in India, but I had frequently heard of Baltimore. The main criticism I have to pass on 16 America is that you have too little religion here. In India they have too much. I think the world would be 17 better if some of India's surplus of religion could be sent over here, while it would be to India's profit if its 18 people could have some of America's industrial advancement and civilization. I am a believer in all 19 religions. I think there is truth in my religion; I think there is truth in your religion. It is the same truth in 20 all religions applying itself through various channels to the same end. I think the great need of the world 21 is less law, and more godly men and women. . . .

7 LYCEUM TOMORROW NIGHT.

8
9 Swami Vivekananda, High Priest of the Hindoos, walked into the lobby of the Hotel Rennert this 10 forenoon attired in a flaming red cloak and a gaudy yellow turban that made him the centre of all eyes. . . .

11
12 His Idea of Humor

13 Swami Vivekananda has the sense of humor about him. He was talking this morning about the Food 14 Show, which he intends to visit. He says he doesn't know much about food except to swallow it, and that is 15 a very representative specimen of the wit of Ormus⁶⁰² and of Ind.

16 Another time he spoke of women's rights and said laughingly that women had more rights the world
17 over than they were credited with having. When he changed his black coat, before going to the Rennert, 18 and put on the cardinal red garment with the yellow turban he came out of his room smiling, and said:

19 "A transformation!"

20 The High Priest can whistle and has enough music in his soul to start the tunes in class-meeting if 21 he were Methodist instead of Hindoo. He whistled a couple of strains in his room this morning for a

1 Views on Topics of the Day

2 Swami is traveling around the country, as he says, lecturing and studying American institutions, but 3 he seems not to have got much into the pith of American sociology, for he knows nothing of such questions
4 as European immigration, divorce, the race problem, etc., which are worrying the economists of the land.

5 He is, however, posted on Oriental immigration, and says the United States has no right to bar out
6 the Chinese. He says the law of love must prevail and force must yield. He predicts the downfall of any 7 nation that uses force. He says also that the United States should open her doors to the world. He believes 8 the Southern part of the continent should be filled with Hindoos and Chinese.

9 "There is no such thing as divorce in India," he said;

10
11 our law does not allow it. Our women are more limited in their sphere than the women of America.
12 Some of them are as highly educated. They are entering the medical profession to some extent now. I see 13 no reason why American women should not vote.

14
15 He evaded a question as to the position of Hindoo women in their homes and their treatment by 16 their husbands. It may be that he does not know much about it. He is not a married man. Priests of his 17 caste do not marry.

18 He mentioned two things which he said had impressed him in America. One was the absence of 19 poverty in the country at large, and the other was the unusual prevalence of ignorance in the South.

20
21 Likes the Elevator

22 When he went to the elevator at the Rennert he said:

23
24 There is an American institution which we do not have to any extent in India. I like it very much.

1 A lady was just coming off the elevator. She was somewhat startled by the red and yellow costume 2 of the priest, but his

1 imperturbable countenance gave no sign of consciousness of the attention he attracted.

2 His address tomorrow night at the Lyceum will be mainly introductory of himself and explanatory of 3 the Hindoo nation. He will speak briefly, but will remain in Baltimore and speak more at length a week 4 from tomorrow night.

14 . . . Mr. Vivecananda conversed with a Sunday Herald reporter, speaking English with ease and with

1 of Religions, which was such an interesting feature of the World's Fair. This university is one of Mr. Vivecananda's pet ideas, and has the full sympathy of myself and my brothers, and also a number of gentlemen of wealth and position, including several religions. Among its promoters are members of the Roman Catholic and Hebrew religions. The idea of the university is education in general religion. . . .

"One of Mr. Vivecananda's ideas in the establishing of the university is that it may serve to educate a superior kind of missionary for work in India. While he is steadfast to his own religious belief, he wishes that the present system of sending ignorant men as missionaries to India may be discontinued and men sent there who can teach the Christian religion from an elevated standpoint. In this wish he is animated only by a desire for the good of general religion. . . .

"Mr. Vivecananda told me that his father was a great believer in the Lord Jesus, as he called Him, and that when a boy he had read in the Gospel of St. John the thrilling description of the crucifixion of the Savior and wept over it. He will remain in this city for several weeks. To-morrow evening he will deliver a brief address at our meeting at the Lyceum, and on Sunday week will speak at length at our second meeting on the university plan."

[Washington Times, Monday, October 29, 1894]

⁶⁰⁵ ? On Sunday, October 28, 1894, Swami Vivekananda delivered two talks at the People's Church, of which there are no verbatim transcripts available. Cf. Complete Works, II: 497-99 for an interview with the Swami given after his morning sermon.

2
1 Vive Kananda, coming forward, said as a boy at the university he studied comparative religion. In 2 India are many religions. One-fifth are Mahomedans. A million are Christians. He studied all. He listened 3 to a great Hindoo preacher, and when he had finished, said:

4
5 "My brother, have you seen God?"

6 The preacher looked up in surprise.

7 "No."

8 "How, then, do you know these things are true?"

9 "My father told me."

10 "Who told your father?"

11 "His father," and so on through his ancestors to the clouds.

12
13 He heard a Christian preacher of great eloquence. This man told the seeker for truth that if he was 14 not immersed in water at once he was in great danger to be roasted alive. Upon further questions this 15 Christian also, through the records of his books, went back to his ancestors, and so back to the clouds.

16
17 The Student Not Satisfied

18 This did not satisfy the student. He set about praying. He prayed sometimes three days and nights 19 with much weeping and without food. He finally found a man who knew no books, not even to write his 20 own name. This sage was preaching his religion. When asked the old question, he replied:

21
22 "Yes, I see God now and I will teach you to see Him."

23
24 This man bore the stamp of God in his features. It was the same certificate that came to the man of 1 Nazareth when the dove descended upon Him at Jordan. He made his hearer to believe that God lives and 2 religion is not a mockery.

3 For twelve years Kananda sat at this man's feet. He was the master. He said one day, "Take up this 4 book." Kananda took up the book and read. It was a calendar. He read in it where the rainfall was 5 foretold. It said that within a certain time so many tons of rain would fall in a certain district. "Now," said 6 the teacher, "close the book and press it." He did so. "Squeeze it

2
1 very hard." He obeyed. "Did any water come from the book?" "None." So are all books. The true 2 religion is here, at the heart.

3 The truth is people do not want God. Far from it. Religion is largely fashionable. My lady has a fine 4 parlor, elegant furniture, a piano, beautiful jewelry, well-fitting, costly dresses, a hat that is the latest
5 thing out. She cannot get along without a dash of religion to keep up with her set. There is much of this 6 religion, but it is hypocrisy, and hypocrisy is the root of all evil. This sort of religion is not of God. It is only 7 the shadow. People with such religion sometimes grow to be in earnest and talk about religious things as 8 if they had some reality. So talking about religion without having it these people fall to quarreling and 9 fighting. "Mine, mine," is the cry, never "thine, thine." "My religion is best." "No, mine," and so they fight 10 as did the savage tribes about their rival gods, Mambo and Jumbo. Competition in religion, as in business, 11 is the bane of all.

12
13 Love Abideth

14 Your own Paul says "all else shall perish, but love abideth." That is the great truth. That false 15 doctrine that my nation shall be aggrandized at the cost of every other nation is not of God.

16 A youth went to his master and said, "I want to know God." The master paid little attention, but the 17 youth persisted and would not be put off. Finally one day the master said: "Let us go down to the river and 18 have a bath." So they went down and the youth plunged in. The master followed and falling upon him held 19 him under. The youth struggled, but the master would not let him up. Finally, when he seemed to be 20 almost dead he desisted, drew him from the water and revived him. "What did you most want when in the 21 water?" the master asked. "Breath," was the answer. "Then you don't want God."

22 So it is with men, what do you want? You want breath, without it you cannot live; you want bread, 23 without it you cannot live; you want a house, without it you cannot live. When you want God as you want 24 these things, He manifests himself to you. It is a great thing to want God.

25 A majority of men and women in this world want the enjoyments of sense. They have been told that 26 there is a God afar off and if they will send him a cartload of words he will help them get these good things of this world. But in every land there are a few persons who want God. They would be one with the essence of good and truth. Religion is not shopkeeping. Love asks no return; love begs not; love gives.

Religion is not an outgrowth of fear; religion is joyous. It is the spontaneous outburst of the songs of birds and the beautiful sight of the morning. It is an expression of the spirit. It is from within an expression of the free and noble spirit.

If misery is religion, what is hell? No man has a right to make himself miserable. To do so is a mistake; it is a sin. Every peal of laughter is a prayer sent to God.

To go back, what I have learned is this: Religion is not in books, not in forms, not in sects, not in nations; religion is in the human heart. It is engraved there. The proof of it is in ourselves.

I make two points. There are sects. Let them go on increasing in number till each is a sect by himself. None can see God exactly as another; each must believe in Him and serve Him as he sees Him. Then I want a harmonizing of the sects. Individuality is not in a fight with universality.

Let each for himself and all together fight evils. If you have a power of eight and I a power of four, and you come and destroy me, you have lost at least four. You have only four left to conquer evil. It is love alone that can conquer hatred. If there is power in hate there is infinitely more power in love.

⁶⁰⁷ ? The untranscribed lecture advertised as "Karma and Reincarnation", delivered at the People's Church, Sunday, October 28, 1894.

Brahman monk, Vive Kananda, who spoke to a fair-sized audience at Metzerott Hall last night. His subject was reincarnation. Much of his lecture was devoted to comparison of Hindoo with Christian doctrine.

To illustrate the tenet of reincarnation he compared the human body to a river. Each drop of water passes on and is replaced by another. The entire body of water, he observed, changes wholly in a few moments, but we call it the same river. In the same way the particles of the body are constantly replaced by others and no two days do we have the same body, yet we preserve our identity.

The spirit remains so, the Hindoos believe, that the person may have a different and more sudden and violent change in death and yet pass on in its existence to some other place in the universe, to some other planet or star, and then take on a body of flesh again or of some other kind.

He said there ought to be no talk of sin. The mistakes of the past ought to be used only for guidance in the future, never to be moaned over. When the lesson is learned from them they should be forgotten.

"Strike a light," he said, "sit not in darkness and sorrow. Do always better and be happy." . . .

The proceeds of the lecture will be applied to the work of founding an international college.

LET INDIA ALONE⁶¹⁰

[Daily Eagle, April 8, 1895]

Then It will Come Out All Right,

Says Swami Vivekananda

The English people were given a raking over last night by Swami Vivekananda of India, who lectured to a throng at the Pouch mansion.⁶¹¹ He said that the English used three B's—

Bible, brandy and bayonets—in civilizing India. The preacher went ahead with the Bible to get the lay of the fortifications. The English, he said, had exaggerated the social conditions of India in their writings. They got their ideas from the Pariahs, who were a sort of human scavenger. No self-respecting Hindoo, he declared, would associate with an Englishman. The story about widows throwing themselves under the chariot of Juggernaut he declared to be a myth. Child marriage and caste he agreed were bad. Caste, he said, originated with the mechanics' guilds. What India needed was to be let alone, and it would come out all right.

1 ABOU BEN ADHEM'S IDEAL⁶¹²

2 [New York World, December 8, 1895]

3 SWAMI VIVEKANANDA THE YOGI, COMES FROM BOMBAY, PREACHING LOVE FOR HIS FELLOW-MAN.

4 To find an ascetic of the Highest Eastern type clad in a red and flowing Hindoo cloak over 5 unmistakable American trousers is necessarily a surprise. But in other things besides dress is Swami 6 Vivekananda astonishing. In the first place he declares that your religion or any one else's religion is just 7 as good as his own, and if you should happen to be a Christian or Mussulman, Baptist or Brahmin, atheist,
8 agnostic or Catholic, it will make no difference to him. All that he asks is that you act righteously 9 according to your lights.

10 The Yogi, with his peculiar notions of dress and worship, arrived Friday on the Brittanic. He went to 11 No. 228 West Thirty-ninth street. While in New York he will lecture upon metaphysics and psychology, and 12 will also disseminate in a general way his ideas on the universal religion which asks no man to take 13 another by the throat because his creed happens to be different. "Let me help my fellowman; that is all I 14 seek," he says.

15 "There are four general types of men," he says, the rational, the emotional, the mystical and the 16 worker. For them we must have their proper worship. There comes the rational man, who says, "I care not 17 for this form of worship. Give me the philosophical, the rational—that I can appreciate." So for the rational 18 man is the rational, philosophic worship.

19 There comes the worker. He says: "I care not for the worship of the philosopher. Give me work to do 20 for my fellow-men." So for him is made a worship, as for the mystical the emotional. In the religion for all 21 these men are the elements of their faith.

4 Abou Ben Adhem, the hero of Leigh Hunt's famous poem, asked a recording angel to list him as loving his fellowmen.

1 "No," said the Swami, very softly, in answer to a question,

2
3 I do not believe in the occult. If a thing be unreal it is not. What is unreal does not exist. Strange
4 things are natural phenomena. I know them to be matters of science. Then they are not occult to me. I do 5 not believe in occult societies. They do no good, and can never do good.

6
7 In fact, the Swami belongs to no society, cult or creed. His is a religion which compasses all 8 worship, all classes, all beliefs.

9 Swami, who is a very dark-featured and good-looking young fellow, explained his creed yesterday in 10 remarkably pure English. One forgot when he spoke that an orthodox choker peered over the Bombay 11 robe which in turn scantily concealed the American trousers. One saw instead a winning smile and a pair 12 of deep, lustrous black eyes.

13 Swami believes in reincarnation. He believes that with the purification of the body the soul rises to a 14 higher condition, and as the purification through matter continues the spirit rises, until released from 15 further migration and is joined with the universal spirit.

16 Such a man as the Jew-baiter [Hermann?] Ahlwardt, who has just arrived in this country, the Swami 17 cannot understand. "You say," he said,

18
19 that he comes here to preach hate against his fellow-men. Is he not of wrong mind? Is he allowed to 20 spread this hate? The doctors should examine his brain to find out the wrong.

21
22 The peculiar name of the Yogi signifies, literally, "The bliss of discrimination." He is the first Indian 23 Yogi who ever came to this country. He comes from Bombay.

2 [New York Herald, January 19, 1896]

3 The following is a brief sketch of the Swami's fundamental teachings:⁶¹⁴

4
5 Every man must develop according to his own nature. As every science has its methods so has every 6 religion. Methods of attaining the end of our religion are called Yoga, and the different forms of Yoga that 7 we teach are adapted to the different natures and temperaments of men. We classify them in the following 8 way, under four heads:

9 (1) Karma Yoga—The manner in which a man realizes his own divinity through works and duty.

10 (2) Bhakti Yoga—The realization of a divinity through devotion to and love of a personal God.

11 (3) Rajah Yoga—The realization of divinity through control of mind.

12 (4) Gnana Yoga—The realization of man's own divinity through knowledge.

13 These are all different roads leading to the same center—

14 God. Indeed, the varieties of religious belief are an advantage, since all faiths are good, so far as 15 they encourage man to religious life. The more sects there are the more opportunities there are for 16 making successful appeals to the divine instinct in all men.

1 Vivekananda's Lecture on the Creeds of the World
2 [Hartford Daily Times, February 1, 1896]

3 A fair house greeted the Hindu monk, Vivekananda, last night. . . . He was introduced by Mr. C. B.
4 Patterson, in some fitting remarks. . . . His subject last night was "The Ideal, or Universal Religion".⁶¹⁶

Throughout the universe there are two forces constantly at work, the centrifugal and centripetal, positive and negative, action and reaction, attraction and repulsion. We find love and hatred, good and evil. What plane is stronger than the spiritual plane, the plane of religion? The world furnishes no hate stronger than that engendered by religion, and no love stronger. No teachings have brought more unhappiness into the world, nor more happiness. The beautiful teachings of Buddha have been carried across the Himalayas, at a height of 20,000 feet, by his disciples. Five hundred years later came the teachings of your beautiful Christ, and these have been carried on the wings of the wind. On the other hand, look at your beautiful earth deluged in blood in the interest of propagandism and religion. As soon as a man comes into the company of those who do not believe as he does, his very nature changes. It is his own opinions he fights for, not religion. He becomes the very embodiment of cruelty and fanaticism. His religion is all right, but when he starts out to fight for his own selfish opinions he is all wrong. People are up in arms about the Armenian and the Turkish butcheries, but their consciences don't say a word when the butcheries are committed in the interest of their own religion. In human beings we find a curious mixture of God, man, and devil, and religion stirs up the latter more than anything else. When we all think alike, the God side of our nature comes out; but let there be a clash of opinions, and presto, change! the devil has the floor. This has been so from time immemorial, and will be so always. In India we know what fanaticism means, for that country for the last thousand years has been the especial field of missionaries. But above the clash of opinions, and the fight for religions, there comes the voice of peace. For 3,000 years efforts have been made to bring the different religions into harmony. But we know how this effort has failed. And it always will fail, and it ought to fail. We have a network of words about love, peace, and universal brotherhood, which were meant all right originally, but we repeat them like parrots, and to us they ⁶¹⁶ ?

1 mean nothing. Is there a universal philosophy for the world? Not yet. Each religion has its own
2 creeds and dogmas and insists upon propagating them. You can't make one religion for the whole world.
3 That must not be. The Armenians say it will be all right if you will all become Armenians. And the Pope of 4 Rome says: "O yea, it is a very easy thing. If you will all become Roman Catholics, it will be all right." And 5 so with the Greek church, and the Protestant church, and all the rest. There can never be one religion 6 only, it would be death to all other religions. If every one thought alike there would be no more thought to 7 think. If everybody looked alike, what monotony! Look alike and think alike—what could we do but sit down
8 and die in despair? We can't live like a row of chipmunks; variation belongs to human life. One God, one 9 religion is an old sing-song, but there's danger in it. But, thank God, it can never be. Start out with your 10 long purse, and your guns and cannon, to push your propagandism. And suppose you succeed for a while?
11 In ten years your so-called unity would be split into fragments. That is why there are so many sects. Take 12 the largest religion, the Buddhist. They try to help the world to be better. Next come the Christians, with 13 [a] good many things to teach. They have three Gods in one, and one in three, and one of the three took on 14 the sins of the world and was killed. Whoever doesn't believe in him, goes to a very hot place. And 15 Mohammed, whoever doesn't believe in him will have his skin burnt off, and then a fresh one will be 16 furnished to be burnt, that he may know that Allah is the all-powerful. All religions came originally from 17 the Orient. These great teachers or incarnations come in different forms. The Hindus have ten 18 incarnations; the first was a fish, and so on, down to the fifth, and from there, they were all men. The 19 Buddhists say: "We don't care to have so many incarnations; we want only one." The Christians say: "We 20 will have only one, and this is Christ." And they say he is the only one. But the Buddhist says they have the 21 start in time; their great teacher came five hundred years earlier. And the Mohammedans say theirs came 22 last, and therefore is the best. Each one loves his own, just as a mother loves her own child. The Buddhist 23 never sees any fault in Buddha; the Christian never sees any fault in Christ, and the Mohammedan never 24 sees any fault in Mohammed. The Christian says their God took the form of a dove and came down, and that they say is not mythology, but history. The Hindu says his god is manifested in a cow and that he says is not superstition, but history. The Jew thinks his Holy of Holies can be contained in a box or chest, with an angel on guard on either side. But the Christian's God in the form of a beautiful man or woman, is a horrible idol. "Break it down!" they say. One man's prophet did such and such wonderful things, while others call it only superstition. So where's your unity? Then there are your rituals. The Roman Catholic puts on his robe, as I have mine. He has his bells and candles and holy water, and says these are good and necessary, but what you do, he says is only superstition. We can never upset all this and have but one religion for the very life of thought is the differentiation of thought. We must learn to love those who think exactly opposite to us. We have humanity for the background, but each must have his own individuality and his own thought. Push the sects forward and forward till each man and woman are sects unto themselves. We must learn to love the man who differs from us in opinion. We must learn that differentiation is the life of thought. We have one common goal, and that is the perfection of the human soul, the god within us. Religion is the great force to help unfold the god within man. But we have to unfold in our own way. We can't all assimilate the same kind of food. Let your aspirations be of the highest, and your inspirations will be in harmony with reason and all known laws, and the Lord will always be with you.

4 Vivekananda in his talk said that there were various religions and each believer thought his religion

6 "If all were of the same religious opinion," said he,

2 The Swami Vivekananda, who will be remembered as the Hindu delegate to the World's Parliament 3 of Religions, is in the

1 city as the March class lecturer at the Procopeia, 45 St. Botolph street.⁶²² The Swami has been doing
2 some most valuable and successful work in systematic class lecturing in New York, with constantly 3 increasing audiences, during the past two winters, and comes to Boston at a most opportune time.

4 The Swami gives the following description of his work. In explanation of the term sannyasin, he said, 5 [Vide "The Sannyasin", Complete Works, V: 260].

6 In giving some idea of his work and its methods, the Swami says he left the world because he had a 7 deep interest in religion and philosophy from his childhood, and Indian books teach renunciation as the 8 highest ideal to which a man can aspire.

9 The Swami['s] teaching, as he expresses it,

11 is my own interpretation of our ancient books in the light which my master (a celebrated Hindu 12 sage) shed upon them. I claim no supernatural authority. Whatever in my teachings may appeal to the 13 highest intelligence and be accepted by thinking men, the adoption of that will be my reward. All religions 14 have for their object the teaching of devotion, or knowledge, or activity, in a concrete form. Now, the phi-15 losophy of Vedanta is the abstract science which embraces all these methods, and this is what I teach, 16 leaving each one to apply it to his own concrete form. I refer each individual to his own experience, and 17 where reference is made to books, the latter are procurable, and may be studied for each one by himself.

18
19 The Swami teaches no authority from hidden beings, through visible objects, any more than he 20 claims learning from hidden books or MSS. He believes no good can come from secret societies.

21
22 Truth stands on its own authority, and truth can bear the light of day.

3 ⁶²² ?

4 There are no verbatim transcripts available of these classes.

He teaches only the Self, hidden in the heart of every individual, and common to all. A handful of strong men, knowing that Self, and living in its light, would revolutionize the world, even today, as has been the case of single strong men before, each in his day.

His attitude towards Western religions is briefly this. He propounds a philosophy which can serve as a basis to every possible religious system in the world, and his attitude towards all of them is one of extreme sympathy. His teaching is antagonistic to none. He directs his attention to the individual, to make him strong, to teach him that he himself is divine, and he calls upon men to make themselves conscious of divinity within. His hope is to imbue individuals with the teachings to which he has referred, and to encourage them to express these to others in their own way; let them modify them as they will; he does not teach them as dogmas; truth, at length, must inevitably prevail. . . .

Message Brought by the Swami Vivekananda—

in His Country the Gods Are "Bright Ones" That Help

The Swami Vivekananda is enjoying as great a degree of popularity on his present visit to Boston as he did when society, fashionable, intellectual and faddist, went wild over him on his former visit. . . .

. . . A New York paper published an interview with the Swami, in which he is reported to have expressed the opinion that in Boston "the women are all faddists, all fickle, merely bent on following something new and strange."⁶²⁴ But Swami Vivekananda says that this is an exaggerated and distorted presentation of a criticism which he made upon all American

1 women, that they were too superficial and too prone to follow the sensational and to change from 2 one thing to another. This he says his observation has forced upon him. The American women are 3 intellectual, but they are not steady, serious and sincere.

4 The first of the Swami's lectures was delivered before an audience of 400 people in the Allen 5 gymnasium, Saturday evening on "The Science of Work," and the second one of the course on 6 "Devotion"⁶²⁵ was given in the same place, the hall being filled and a number turned away unable to gain 7 admittance.

8 The lecture was exceedingly interesting and the speaker's manner was very magnetic. In his 9 country, said the Swami, the gods were the "bright ones" who gave help to men and received help from 10 them. The gods are only human beings who are somewhat elevated after death, but God, the highest, is 11 never prayed to or asked for help. He is given only love and worship without anything being asked in 12 return. There are two phases of this God, the one, the abstract God behind the substance of the universe, 13 and the other the personal God who is seen through human intellect and given attributes by it.

14 The love which is given to God never takes, but always gives, and it does not depend on anything.
15 The worshiper does not pray for health, money or any other thing, but is content with the lot apportioned 16 to him.

17 People who ask about religion from mere motives of curiosity become faddists, they are always 18 looking for some-thing new and their brains degenerate until they become old rags. It is a religious 19 dissipation with them.

20 It is not the place that makes heaven or hell, but the mind. Love knows no fear, there can be no love 21 where it is. In love of any sort external objects are only suggested by something within 22 –it is one's own ideal projected, and God is the highest ideal that can be conceived of.

23 Hatred of the world does not drive good men from it, but the world slips away from the great and 24 saintly. The world, the family and social life, are all training grounds, that is all.

⁶²⁵ ? Delivered March 21 and March 23, 1896 respectively, of which there are no verbatim transcripts available.

When one realizes that God is love, it does not matter what his other attributes are, that is the only essential.

The more a man throws himself away, the more God comes in, hence self-abnegation, which is the secret of all religion and morality.

Too many people bring down their ideals. They want a comfortable religion, but there is none such. It is all self-surrender and upward striving.

Said a Universal Religion is Impossible⁶²⁶

[Boston Evening Transcript, March 27, 1896]

Swami Vivekananda told the large audience that crowded the Allen Gymnasium to hear him speak on the "Ideal of a Universal Religion," last night,⁶²⁷ that the recent Parliament of Religions at Chicago proved, to that date, that universal religion was impossible. "Nature," he said, is wiser than we have thought her to be. It is competition of ideas, the clash of thought, that keeps thought alive. Sects have always been antithetical, and always will be splitting into little varieties of themselves. And the way to get out of this fight of religions is to let the sects go on subdividing.

There is no unity in the three elements of religion—philosophy [theology?], mythology and ceremony. Each theologian wants unity, but his idea of unity is the adjustment of all other creeds to his own. I agree with the old prophets as long as they agree with me. But there is an element of religion that towers above all; that is, philosophy. The philosopher seeks truth, which is one and the same always. And it is acceptable to the four sides of every religious nature—the emotional, mystical, active and philosophical. And he who dares to seek the truth for truth's sake is greatest among men.

for Universal Religion⁶²⁸

[Boston Evening Transcript, March 30, 1896]

The Hindu Swami Lectures Before Several Societies.

The Swami Vivekananda has, during the past few days, conducted a most successful work in connection with the Procopeia. During this time he has given four class lectures for the club itself, with constant audiences of between four and five hundred people, at the Allen Gymnasium, 44, St. Botolph street, two at the house of Mrs. Ole Bull in Cambridge, and one before the professors and graduate students of the philosophical department of Harvard University.

The idea, which brought the Swami to America three years ago as Hindu delegate to the Parliament of Religions, and has been the guiding motive of all his subsequent work, both in America and England, is one which appeals strongly to the people whose creation the parliament was, but the methods which he proposes are peculiarly his own. One of his lectures during the week has been "The Ideal of a Universal Religion,"⁶²⁹ but a "harmonious religion" would, perhaps, equally meet the case, if, indeed, it would not more adequately express that for which he is striving. The Swami is not a preacher of theory. If there is any one feature of the Vedanta philosophy, which he propounds, which appears especially refreshing, it is its intense capability of practical demonstration. We have become almost wedded to the idea that religion is a sublime theory which can be brought into practice and made tangible for us only in another life, but the Swami shows us the folly of this. In preaching the Divinity of Man he inculcates a spirit of strength into us which will have none of those barriers between this life and actual realization of the sublime that, to the ordinary man, appear as insurmountable.

New Discoveries, Vol. 4, pp. 81-86.

⁶²⁹ ?

Though this was one of Swami Vivekananda's recurring subjects, there is no available verbatim transcript of this March 26, 1896 lecture. Cf. Complete Works, II: 375-96.

In discussing the general lines on which it appears to him universal religion can alone be established, he claims for his plan no super-authority. As he says:

I have also my little plan. I do not know whether it will work or not, and I want to present it to you for discussion. In the first place, I would ask mankind to recognize this maxim: "Do not destroy." Iconoclastic reformers do no good to the world. Help, if you can; if you cannot, fold your hands, stand by, and see things go on. Therefore say not a word against any man's convictions, so far as they are sincere. Secondly, take man where he stands, and from thence give him a lift.⁶³⁰

Unity in variety is the plan of the universe. Just as we are all men, yet we are all separate. As humanity, I am one with you; as Mr. So-and-so, I am different from you. As a man you are separate from woman, but as human beings you are all one; as a living being you are one with animals and all that lives, but as man you are separate. That existence is God, the ultimate unity in this universe. In Him we are all one. We find, then, that if by the idea of a universal religion is meant that one set of doctrines should be believed by all mankind, it is impossible, it can never be, any more than all faces will be the same. Again, if we expect that there will be one universal mythology, that is also impossible; it cannot be. Neither can there be a universal ritual. When this time comes the world will be destroyed, because variety is the first principle of life. What makes us formed beings? Differentiation. Perfect balance will be destruction.⁶³¹

What then do I mean by the ideal of a universal religion? I do not mean a universal philosophy, or a universal mythology, or a universal ritual, but I mean that this world must go on, wheel within wheel. What can we do? We can make it run smoothly, we can lessen friction, we can grease the wheels, as it were. By what? By recognizing variation.

⁶³⁰ ?

Cf. Complete Works, II: 384.

⁶³¹ ?

Cf. Complete Works, II: 381-82.

Just as we have recognized unity, by our very nature so we must also recognize variation. We must learn that truth may be expressed in a thousand ways, and each one yet be true. We must learn that the same thing can be viewed from a hundred different standpoints, and yet be the same thing.⁶³²

In society we see so many various natures of mankind. A practical generalization will be impossible, but for my purpose I have simply characterized them into four. First, the active man; then the emotional man; then the mystical man, and lastly the philosopher.

To be universal, religion must provide possibility of realizing truth through means suitable to any one of these minds, and a religion which says that through one alone all men must struggle, whether these minds are capable of the struggle or not, must end in agnosticism.

In his lecture on Karma Yoga,⁶³³ the Swami dealt with the science of work. The lecture for the most part analyzed the motives men have in work, and particularly the motive of heaven as a reward for good work on earth. This, said the Swami, is shopkeeping religion. Work alone reaches its highest when it is done absolutely without hope of reward, work for work's sake, and without regard to the consequences.

In discussing Bhakti Yoga,⁶³⁴ Devotion, the Swami explained the rationale of a Personal God. This idea of devotion and worship of some being who has to be loved, and who can reflect back the love to man, is universal. The lowest stage of the manifestation of this love and devotion is ritualism, when man wants things that are concrete, and abstract ideas are almost impossible. Throughout the history of the world we find man is trying to grasp the abstract through thought forms, or symbols, and the external manifestations of religion. Bells, music, rituals, books, images come under that head. Man can only think with form and word. Immediately thought comes, form and name flash into the mind with them, so that when we think of God, whether as the Personal God with human shape, or as the Divine Principle, or in any other aspect, we are always thinking of our own highest ideal with some or other form, generally human, because the form of man is the highest of which man can conceive. But, while recognizing this as a necessity of human weakness, and while making proportionate use of rituals, symbols, books and churches, we must always remember that it is very good to be born in a church, but it is very bad to die in a church. If a man dies within the bounds of these forms, it shows that he has not grown, that there has been no uncovering of the real, the Divinity, within him.

True love can be regarded as a triangle. The first angle is, love knows no bargain. So when a man is praying to God, "give me this, and give me that," it is not love. How can it be? "I give you my little prayer, and you give me something in return"; that is mere shopkeeping. The second angle is, love knows no fear. So long as God is regarded as a rewarder or a punisher there can be no love for him. The third angle, the apex, is, love is always the highest ideal. When we have reached the point where we can worship the ideal as the ideal, all arguments and doubts have vanished forever. The ideal can never escape, because it is part of our own nature.

In his lecture at Harvard University,⁶³⁵ the Swami traced the history, so far as is known, of the Vedanta philosophy, and showed to what extent the Vedas (the Hindu scriptures) are accepted as authoritative; merely as the foundation for the philosophy in so far as they appeal to the reason. He compared the three schools, the Dualists, who acknowledge a supreme being, and a lesser being manifesting in men, but eternally separate from men. Next he described the philosophy of the Qualified nondualists, whose particular idea is that there is a God and there is nature, but that the soul and nature is simply the expansion, or the body of God, just as the body of man is to man's soul. They claim, in support of this theory, that the effect is never different from the cause, but that it is the cause reproduced in another form, and as God, therefore, is the cause of this universe, he is also the effect. The Monists . . . declare that if there is a God, that God must be both the material and the efficient cause of the universe. Not only is he the Creator; but he is also the created. He himself is this universe, apparently; but, in reality, this universe does not exist—it is mere hypnotisation. Differentiation is in name and form only. There is but one soul in the universe, not two, because that which is immaterial cannot be bounded, must be infinite; and there cannot be two infinities, because one would limit the other. The soul is pure, and the appearance of evil is just as a piece of crystal, which is pure in itself, but appears to be variously colored when flowers are placed before it.

In discussing Raja Yoga,⁶³⁶ the psychological way to union with God, the Swami expanded upon the power to which the mind can attain through concentration, both in reference to the physical and the spiritual world. It is the one method that we have in all knowledge. From the lowest to the highest, from the smallest worm to the highest sage, they have to use this one method. The astronomer uses it in order to discover the mysteries of the skies, the chemist in his laboratory, the professor in his chair. This is the one call, the one knock, which opens the gates of nature and lets out the floods of light. This is the one key, the only power—concentration. In the present state of our bodies we are so much distracted, the mind is frittering away its energies upon a hundred sorts of things. By scientific control of the forces which work the body this can be done, and its ultimate effect is realization. Religion cannot consist of talk. It only becomes religion when it becomes tangible, and until we strive to feel that of which we talk so much, we are no better than agnostics, for the latter are sincere and we are not.

The Twentieth Century Club had the Swami as their guest Saturday [March 28], and heard an address from him on the "Practical Side of the Vedanta Philosophy."⁶³⁷ He leaves Boston

3 Lectures on Hindoo Religion and Philosophy

4 [Los Angeles Times, December 9, 1899]

5

6 . . . The well-known expositor of the Hindoo philosophy, dressed in the yellow robe of the Brahmin
7 caste, spoke in part as follows:⁶³⁹

8
9 I come before you, ladies and gentlemen, to bring no new religion. I desire simply to tell you a few 10 points that bind together all religions. I shall touch upon some things in the thought of eastern civilization 11 that will appear strange to you and on others that I hope will appeal to you. All the religions of the world 12 have a backbone of unity. This is the principle of philosophy and of toleration.

13 Very few people in this country understand what India is. It is a country half as large as the United 14 States and containing 300,000,000 people, speaking a number of different tongues, but all bound together 15 by the ideas of a common religion. By these ideas the Hindoos have made their influence felt through the 16 ages, working gently, silently, patiently, while western civilization has been conquering by force of arms.
17 The future will show which is the more powerful—physical force or the power of ideas. The arts and 18 sciences of the Hindoos have found their way over all the earth—their numerals, their mathematical 19 thought, their ethics. Was it not in India, there and there alone, that the doctrine of love was first 20 preached, and not alone the doctrine of love of one's fellow-men, but of love of every living thing, yea, 21 even of the meanest worm that crawls under our feet. When you begin to study the arts and institutions of India, you become magnetized, fascinated. You cannot get away.

In India, as elsewhere, we find the earliest condition one of division into little tribes. These different tribes had each its different god, its different ceremonial. But in coming in contact with one another, the tribes did not follow the course that western civilization has taken—they did not persecute each other because of these differences, but endeavored to find the germs of common ideas in all the religions. And from this endeavor arose the habit of toleration which is the keynote of the Indian religion. Truth is one, can be but one, though it may be expressed in different language.

Another great difference between eastern and western religion lies in the reception of a philosophical and scientific view of the universe. In the West, agnosticism has been growing in late years, and with the loss of a hope in individual immortality, which the westerner is always desiring and seeking, a note of despair has crept into western thought. Ages ago, the Hindoo realized that the universe was one of law, and that, under law, all change. Therefore, an imperishable individuality is an impossibility. But this thought is not one of despair to the Hindoo. On the contrary —and this is what the westerner can least understand of eastern thought—he longs for freedom, for release from the thralldom of the senses, from the thralldom of pain and the thralldom of pleasure.

Western civilization has sought a personal God and despaired at the loss of belief in such. The Hindoo, too, has sought. But God cannot be known to the external senses. The Infinite, the Absolute, cannot be grasped. Yet although it eludes us, we may not infer its non-existence. It exists. What is it that cannot be seen by the outward eye? The eye itself. It may behold all other things, but itself it cannot mirror. This, then, is the solution. If God may not be found by the outer senses, turn your eye inward and find, in yourself, the soul of all souls. Man himself is the All. I cannot know the fundamental reality, because I am that fundamental reality. There is no duality. This is the solution of all questions of metaphysics and ethics. Western civilization has in vain endeavored to find a reason for altruism. Here it is. I am my brother, and his pain is mine. I cannot injure him without injuring myself, or do ill to other beings without bringing that ill upon my own soul. When I have realized that I myself am the Absolute, for me there is no more death nor life nor pain nor pleasure, nor caste nor sex. How can that which is absolute die or be born? The pages of nature are turned before us like the pages of a book, and we think that we ourselves are turning, while in reality we remain ever the same.

HINDU PHILOSOPHY⁶⁴⁰

CONCEPTION OF THE UNIVERSE IN DISTANT INDIA

[Los Angeles Times, December 13, 1899]

Swami Vivekananda, the Hindu philosopher, addressed the regular monthly meeting of the Southern California Academy of Sciences at Unity Church last evening.⁶⁴¹ The audience was large and appreciative, and at the end of the lecture a number of questions were asked by members of the audience and answered by the lecturer. . . .

The speaker began with a reference to the mythological tales of the Hindus in which they attempted to explain the origin of the universe, and he told also of the endeavors of the ancients to explain the mysteries which surrounded them.

According to their belief, he said, man's first idea is of himself. His will moves all his members. A child's idea of power is in its will. All movement of the universe has a will behind it. The Hindus believe, said the speaker, that there is but one God, and he a person like the rest of them, but infinitely greater. Their mind is philosophical enough not to admit the existence of two gods, one bad and one good. With them nature is a unit, unity in all existence is the universe, and God is the same as nature.

"There is not a system of philosophy," said the speaker, from that of the ancient Egyptians down to that of the Roman Catholic Church, which does not show traces of the same thought. All forces that exist in the mental and physical world have been resolved, in India, into the one word "Father" ["Prâna"?]. Whatever is, has been projected by Him.

In closing, the philosopher said that the ancient voice of India had found an echo in the 19th century in the writings of Herbert Spencer.

Swami Vivekananda's lecture before the Academy of Sciences

Unity church was filled last evening with a large audience to hear the Swami Vivekananda, a native of India, lecture on the kosmos, or the Veda conception of the universe⁶⁴³ under the auspices of the Southern California Academy of Sciences. . . .

⁶⁴² ?

New Discoveries, Vol. 5, pp. 192-94.

⁶⁴³ ? This was Swami Vivekananda's second lecture in California, entitled "The Cosmos, or the Veda Conception of the Universe", of which there is no verbatim transcript available. Cf. the Swami's two New York lectures on the Cosmos, delivered in 1896, in Complete Works, II ("The Cosmos: The Macrocosm" and "The Cosmos: The Microcosm").

In introducing his subject the speaker reviewed the mythology of the flood, which among the Babylonians, Egyptians, Assyrians and other races is similar to the story of the Hebrew scriptures, showing that all held a similar belief concerning the creation of the universe.

In the worship of the sun and the forces of nature, we see the attempts of ancient peoples to explain the mysteries surrounding them. Man's first idea of force was himself. When a stone fell he saw no force in it but the will behind it, and he conceived the idea that the whole universe was moved by force of wills. Gradually these wills became one, and science begins to rise. Gods begin to vanish, and in their place comes oneness, and now God is in danger of being dethroned by modern science. Science wants to explain things by their own nature and make the universe self-sufficient.

Wills gradually began to disappear, and in their place comes will. This was the process of development in all the nations of the world, and so it was in India. Their ideas and gods were pretty much the same as those of other lands, only in India they did not stop there. They learned that life alone can produce life, and that death can never produce life. In our speculations about God we have got to monotheism. Everywhere else speculation stops there; we make it the be all and end all of everything, but in India it does not stop there. A gigantic will can not explain all this phenomena we see around us. Even in man there is something back of the will. In so common sense a thing as the circulation of the blood, we find will is not the motive power.

We have conceived God as a person like ourselves, only infinitely greater, and because there is goodness and mercy and happiness in the world there must be a being possessing these attributes, but there is also evil. The Hindu mind is too philosophical to admit the existence of two gods, one good and one bad. India remained true to the idea of unity. What is evil to me may be good to someone else; what is good to me may be evil to others. We are all links in a chain. Hence comes the speculation of the Upanishads, the

2 religion of 300,000,000 of the human race. Nature is a unit; unity is in all existence, and God is the 3 same as nature. This is one of the Indian speculations known to all the world outside of India.

4 There is not a system of religion or philosophy in the world that does not show the influence of 5 India's speculation, even to the Catholic church. The conservation of energy, considered a new discovery, 6 has been known there by the name of father [Prâna?]. Whatever is comes from the father. Brahma
7 [Prana?] must energize on something, and that they say is an invisible ether. Brahma [Prana?] vibrating
8 on ether, the solid, the liquid, the luminous, it is all the same ether. The potentiality of everything is there.
9 In the beginning of the next period Brahma [Prana?] will begin to vibrate more and more.

10 Thus this speculation of India's scriptures is very similar to modern science. The same idea is taken 11 up by modern evolution. Even our bodies, different only in dignity, are links in the same chain. In one 12 individual the possibilities of every other individual are there. The living entity contains the possibility of 13 all life, but can only express that which environment demands. The most wonderful speculations are 14 formed in modern science. The one that interests me as a preacher of religion is the oneness of all 15 religions [life?]. When Herbert Spencer's voice says that the same life welling up in the plant is the life welling up in the individual, the Indian religion has found a voice in the nineteenth century.

3 Lecture last night at Blanchard Hall by

4 Swami Vivekananda

5 Swami Vivekananda, member of an ancient order of Hindu monks, who is giving a series of lessons
6 and lectures in this city, addressed an audience last night at Blanchard hall upon the "History of India"
7 ["The People of India"].⁶⁴⁵ The Swami appeared before his audience in American dress, losing to a great 8 degree the peculiar and characteristic personality given him by the aesthetic silken robes and the turban 9 worn by his order.

10 The speaker said India was not a country, but a continent containing a huge mass of races united by 11 religion. India was of ancient date. It was inhabited, when through a desire to reach it by a shorter 12 passage, Columbus discovered America, and its production of cotton, sugar, indigo and spices have 13 enriched the world. This country inhabited by 200,000,000 of people, is full of little villages that extend 14 through all the valleys and up the mountains thousands of feet above the sea level. The immense fertility 15 of the soil owes much to the tremendous rainfall, which is often 1,800 inches [sic] in a season, averaging 16 perhaps 600 inches. Many of the people, however, in spite of the abundant productions, live wholly on 17 millet, a kind of cereal; no animal food is eaten; no meat, eggs or fish.

18 The country from most ancient times has kept its own customs, its own languages and its castes. It 19 has by its religion saved itself while it has seen other sections [nations] rise and decay. The Babylonian 20 civilization was not new, but India dates long before its rise and fall. The most ancient language, Sanskrit, 21 is spoken by the priests, and was spoken once by all the different races. The speaker gave examples of 22 many of our common English words coming from Sanskrit roots, and traced the old religious ideas and even mythology to the ancient Aryan races.

Many of the customs of the country were sketched, and further it was shown how this country was the seat of civilization, the center of arts, the sciences, the philosophical thought of the world.

The people of India have saved themselves by making a wall around themselves by making the castes absolute. An emperor in India is glad to trace his descent from a priest, who is the highest caste. The castes do not exist as they did once, but they are divided into many divisions and sub-divisions. There are hundreds of them. No people of different castes eat together, or cook together. Marriage is not legal if made outside of one's caste. The intricacy of the laws of caste is very great and branch out into the minutest detail. The poorest beggar or the viceroy of India may belong to the same caste.

Shoes are not allowed to be worn, as they are made from the skin of an animal. The women pay even more attention to these details than the men. All these customs have their philosophy. This is the true democracy, it is the socialistic idea, the development of the masses, not the individual.

The speaker closed with comparing the position of women in India with that of this country. In India the whole idea of womanhood is the mother. The mother is revered. She is the giver of life, the founder of the race.

6 There is combined in the Swami Vivekananda the learning of a university president, the dignity of an 7 archbishop, with the grace and winsomeness of a free natural child. Getting on the platform without a 8 moment's preparation he would soon be in the midst of his subject, sometimes becoming almost tragic as 9 his mind would wander from deep metaphysics to the prevailing condition in Christian countries today
10 who go and seek to reform Filipinos with the swords in one hand and the Bible in the other, or in South 11 Africa allow children of the same father to cut each other to pieces. To contrast this condition of things he 12 described what took place during the last famine in India where men would die of starvation beside their 13 cattle rather than stretch forth a hand to kill. (Will Unity readers remember the fifty million Hindoos who 14 are starving today and send them a blessing?)

15 Instead of trying to give much of what we heard from the Swami direct, I will append a few of the 16 sayings of his master, Ramakrishna, that will better indicate the nature of his teaching. His chief aim 17 seems to be to encourage people in living simple, quiet wholesome lives—that the life shall be the religion, 18 not something separate and apart.

19 To the true mother he gives the highest place, counting her as more to be esteemed than those who 20 simply run around teaching. "Anyone can talk," he said,

21
22 but if I had to look after a baby, I could not endure existence for more than three days.

23
24 Frequently he would speak of the "mother" as we speak of the "father," and would say "the mother 25 will take care of us," or "the mother will look after things."

We had a lecture on Christmas day from the Swami entitled, "Christ's Mission to the World," and a better one on this subject I never heard. No Christian minister could have presented Jesus as a character worthy (of) the greatest reverence more eloquently or more powerfully than did this learned Hindoo, who told us that in this country on account of his dark skin he has been refused admission to hotels, and even barbers have sometimes objected to shave him. Is it any wonder that our "heathen" brethren never fail to make mention of this fact that even "our" Master was an Oriental?

HINDOO MONK LECTURES⁶⁵²

[San Francisco Chronicle, February 24, 1900]

Swami Vivekananda's Topic Is "The Idea of Universal Religion"

At Golden Gate Hall last evening Swami Vivekananda, a Hindoo monk, entertained an audience for an hour and a half with his lecture on "The Idea of Universal Religion."⁶⁵³ . . .

Tracing religion from the commencement of history he spoke of the existence of creeds. Sects were known from the earliest time, he said. As time rolled on there began various contests for a supremacy between the various sects. History, he declared, was a mere repetition of slaughter under the guise of religion. Superstition, he thought, was fast becoming a thing of the past through the expansion of the minds of men. They had more liberality of thought now. They were deeper students of philosophy and through the principles of true philosophy only could religion in its deepest form be found. Until men could accord to others the right of free belief on all subjects, and be willing to believe truth under whatever form it might appear, no universal religion would be manifest to the world, he declared. It would never be promulgated by any society, but would grow instinctively as the intellect of man developed.

1 VEDANTISM, AND WHAT IT IS AND WHAT IT IS NOT⁶⁵⁴

2 Lecture of Swami Vivekananda on the Religion of the Hindoos

3 [Oakland Tribune, February 26, 1900]

4 It is the Only Creed, He Says, that Can Be Taught Without Lies and Without Compromise

5 The claims of the Brahmin religion, or Vedantism, on the modern world were presented to-night at 6 the Congress of Religions in the First Unitarian Church by Swami Vivekananda,⁶⁵⁵ a remarkably eloquent 7 expounder of that faith. . . .

8 To his auditors to-night he explained Vedantism as the religion of the Vedas, or ancient Hindoo 9 books, which, he asserted, is "the mother of religion."

10 "It may seem ridiculous how a book can be without beginning or end," he said,

11
12 but by the Vedas no books are meant. They signify the accumulated treasury of spiritual laws 13 discovered by different persons in different times. The Hindoo believes he is a spirit. Him the sword 14 cannot pierce, him the fire cannot burn, him the water cannot melt, him the air cannot dry. He believes 15 every soul is a circle whose circumference is nowhere, but whose center is located in a body. Death means 16 the change of this center from body to body. We are the children of God. Matter is our servant.

17 Vedantism is a sort of rebellion against the mockery of the past. Some men are so practical that if 18 they know that by chopping off their heads they could get salvation, there are many who would do so. That 19 is all outward; you must turn your eyes inward to learn what is in your soul. Soul is spirit omnipresent.
20 Where does the soul go after death? Where could the earth fall to? Where can the soul go? Where is it not already? The great cornerstone of Vedantism is the recognition of Self. Man, have faith in yourself. The soul is the same in every one. It is all purity and perfection and the more pure and perfect we [you] are the more purity and perfection you will see.

A man or preaching jack who cries, "Oh Lord, I'm only a crawling worm!" should be still and crawl into his hole. His cries only add more misery to the world. I was amused to read in one of your papers, "How would Christ edit a paper!" How foolish. How would Christ cook a meal? Yet you are the advanced people of the West. If Christ came here, you would shut up shop and go into the street with him to help the poor and downtrodden. Vedantism is the only religion that can be taught without lies, without stretching the texts, without compromise.

TRUE RELIGION⁶⁵⁶

[The Alameda Encinal, April 5, 1900]

Hindu Philosopher Gives His Ideas

Last evening the Swami Vivekananda gave the first of a series of three public lectures at Tucker Hall on "The Development of Religious Ideas."⁶⁵⁷

The speaker dwelt briefly on the similarity of ideas in the minds of orthodox Christians, Mohammedans and Hindus with regard to the origin of their religions. Each believed his particular prophet or teacher to have been inspired in some mysterious way by a God or Gods, who as it were, regulated or influenced the affairs of this world from a distance. The modern scientific mind, on the contrary, instead of seeking for outside or supernatural causes for phenomena endeavored to find cause in the thing or condition itself.

1 While at first glance this method of investigation might seem to take from religion some of its vital 2 elements, yet in reality it resulted in man finding that the spiritual attributes of deity and the states of 3 mind producing heaven and hell were all within himself, and although the result of this rational modern 4 inquiry might appear to contradict much that had been handed down in the old religious writings such as 5 Bible, Koran and Vedas, yet the contradiction was more apparent than real, for the prophets and teachers 6 of old had true perceptions, but were mistaken only in attributing their experiences to outside agencies, 7 instead of realizing them to be the development and expression of elements in their own souls before 8 unknown and unrecognized.

9 The lecturer traced some of the common beliefs regarding location of heavens and hells, of various 10 burial rites and customs, and he spoke of the impressions made on the primitive mind that resulted in a 11 personification of the active natural forces in the phenomena with which we are surrounded. . . .

SWAMI VIVEKANANDA ON LOVE⁶⁵⁸

[Maidenhead Adviser, October 23, 1895]

On Thursday the Swami Vivekananda delivered a lecture at the Town Hall, Maidenhead, taking as his subject "The Eastern Doctrine of Love."⁶⁵⁹ Owing to other attractions in the town the attendance was not large. Many of the public also associated the lecturer with the Theosophical Society, with which, however, he has, we are informed, nothing whatever to do, nor with any other society, neither does he propose forming any society himself. He believes in expounding his views to whoever will listen to them and leaving those individuals to advocate them as a whole, or with whatever modifications they may deem fitting, or to reject them altogether, believing that out of the strife of all opinions truth at length prevails.

The chair was taken at 8 p.m. by Mr. E. Gardner, J.P., C.C., and he very briefly introduced the lecturer, who was clad in his native costume. The Swami then proceeded to express his view upon devotion to deity, or, as more commonly expressed in the East—love (Bhakti), to the following effect:—Religion may be divided into two forms, the first almost entirely superstitious and the second merely metaphysical, but if either of these is to have any force it must be accompanied by love. Work alone without this element did not satisfy. The land might be covered with hospitals, penetrated by good roads; there might be great social institutions well conducted, and good sanitation, but these were all external physical processes and by themselves brought man no nearer to Divinity. Both the realist and the idealist were necessary and complementary one of the other. The 1 idealist brought the bold aspiration down to earth, the realist caused it to take form through work.

2 Love cannot be defined in positive terms, only negatively. Its nature is of the form of renunciation. In its 3 more general sense it might be divided threefold: (1) That love which is for one's own pleasure,
4 irrespective of pleasure or pain to others—the purely selfish, the lowest. (2) That love which exchanges—"I 5 will love you if you love me. We will make each other mutually happy"—the partially selfish, the middle 6 path trodden by the great majority of mankind. (3) That love which gives all and asks for nothing, without 7 premeditation and which never regrets, unconquerable by any evil thing done to him from whom it
8 emanates. It is the highest, the divine. Only with this last kind are we concerned here. The first is the path 9 of the sensualist and the animal, the second the path of struggling humanity on its way to better things, 10 the third the real path of love, trodden by those who renounce the world and set out upon that road which 11 leads to Eternal Peace. In that love there is no fear. Love kills fear. A lion might stand over a babe and 12 threaten its life; the mother knows no fear, she does not fly, but she opposes. At that moment love 13 destroys terror; at other times the same woman would run from a small dog. A fierce Mahomedan [sic]
14 warrior went to a garden to pray. In the same garden a girl had appointed to meet her lover. The warrior
15 lay prostrate on his face according to the prescribed form of his religion. At that moment the girl espied
16 her lover, and with joy rushing to meet him, trod upon the prostrate form. He jumped up and laying hand 17 upon his sword would have slain the girl. "How dare you?" cried he, "vile wench, disturb my worship, my 18 devotion to God, with your base feet." "Worship! devotion!" cried the girl, "you do not know what they are.
19 You had no devotion, lying there, no spirit of worship. If I, a timid girl, could so forget the presence of an 20 object of dread like you, in my worship and devotion to my earthly lover as to tread upon you and not even 21 know it, how much more should you, if your heart had been absorbed in love and devotion to God, have 22 been ignorant that I touched you?" The warrior was humbled and appeased and went away. Our highest 23 ideal of love is the image

which we form for ourselves of deity. A barbarous people have a tyrannical and cruel god. A wise and noble people see God in ever and ever widening potencies. God is always God, but the views which men and nations may take of Him vary. No higher view is known than that of love. The man who bears in his heart an unrelaxing love to every creature, whether he recognise that that creature is a manifestation of God, in which he is actually present, or whether he look upon it merely as fashioned by Deity, that man is on the path to Deity, on the great path of devotion and renunciation. He cannot injure the creature of God, however repulsive to his narrower view of what should or should not be. He gives in love, not in pride; in loving Deity he loves its manifestations, works with them and abides by them.

The lecture was impressively delivered, and at the close a vote of thanks was accorded the Chairman (on the proposition of Mr. E. T. Sturdy, of Caversham).

The proceedings occupied only a little over half an hour.

[Standard, October 23, 1895]

Since the days of Ramahoun [Ram Mohan] Roy, says the Standard, with the single exception of Keshub Chunder [Keshab Chandra] Sen, there has not appeared on an English platform a more interesting Indian figure than the Brahman who lectured in Princes' [Prince's] Hall last night. . . .

The lecture⁶⁶¹ was a most fearless and eloquent exposition of the pantheistic philosophy of the Vedanta school, and the Swami seems to have incorporated into his system a good deal also of the moral element of the Yoga school, as the closing passage of his lecture presented in a modified form not the advocacy of mortification, which is the leading feature of the latter school,

3 but the renunciation of all so-called material comforts and blessings, as the only means of entering 4 into perfect union with the supreme and absolute Self. The opening passages of the lecture were a review
5 of the rise of the grosser form of Materialism in the beginning of the present century, and the later 6 development of the various forms of metaphysical thought, which for a time swept materialism away.
7 From this he passed on to discuss the origin and nature of knowledge. In some respects his views on this 8 point were almost a statement of pure Fichteism, but they were expressed in language, and they 9 embodied illustrations, and made admissions which no German transcendentalist would have used. He 10 admitted there was a gross material world outside, but he confessed he did not know what matter was. He 11 asserted that mind was a finer matter, and that behind was the soul of man, which was immovable, fixed, 12 before which outward objects passed, as it were, in a procession, which was without beginning or end—in 13 other words, which was eternal, and finally which was God. He worked out this pantheistic conception of 14 the personal identity of man and God with great comprehensiveness and an ample wealth of illustration, and in passage after passage of great beauty, solemnity, and earnestness. "There is only one Soul in the Universe", he said:

15
16 There is no "you" or "me"; all variety is merged into the absolute unity, the one infinite 17 existence—God.

18
19 From this, of course, followed the immortality of the soul, and something like the transmigration of 20 souls towards higher manifestations of perfection. As already stated, his peroration of twenty minutes was 21 a statement of the doctrine of renunciation. In the course of it he made some remorselessly disparaging 22 criticism on the work that factories, engines and other inventions, and books were doing for man, 23 compared with half a dozen words spoken by Buddha or Jesus. The lecture was evidently quite 24 extemporaneous, and was delivered in a pleasing voice, free from any kind of hesitation.

NATIVE INDIAN LECTURER AT PRINCES' HALL⁶⁶²

[London Morning Post, October 23, 1895]

—Last night at Princes' [Prince's] Hall, Piccadilly, Swami Vivekananda, an Indian Yogi, who is at present on a visit to this country, delivered what was described as an "oration" on the subject of "Self Knowledge."⁶⁶³ A Yogi, it was explained, is one who formally renounces the world and gives himself up to study and devotion. Swami Vivekananda originally left his native land for the purpose of giving his interpretation of the Vedanta philosophy at the Parliament of Religions which was held two years ago at Chicago, and since that time he has been engaged in delivering lectures on the same subject in America. In the course of his address last night he declared that there were indications in these closing days of the 19th century that the pendulum of scientific thought was swinging back, for men all over the world were rummaging in the pages of ancient records, and ancient religious forms were again coming to the fore. To many this seemed to be a case of degeneration, while others regarded it as one of those outbursts of superstition which periodically visited society, but to the scientific student there was in the present state of things a prognostication of grand future benefit. The lecturer then proceeded at considerable length to describe the peculiar system of philosophy which he teaches, and traced the three different stages of the religion which has grown out of it. He spoke with a good deal of fluency, and his remarks were listened to with attention by the somewhat small audience.

3 South Place Chapel Lecture

4 "The Swami Vivekananda" enlightened the congregation at South-place Chapel last Sunday morning
5 on "The Basis of Vedanta Morality."⁶⁶⁵ . . .

6 The Swami explained that in the system of morality which he was expounding actions were not 7 inspired by any hope of reward, here or hereafter, nor by any fear of punishment in this world or in the 8 beyond: "We must work simply from the impetus within, work for work's sake, duty for duty's sake." This 9 idea of morality is claimed to be superior to the religion of Jesus, and so has beguiled some so-called 10 Christians into Buddhism or other Eastern philosophies. But the essence of true Christianity is that, if your 11 actions are inspired by the heavenly kingdom within you, Paradise will be the result, whereas, if you act in 12 harmony with the devil's kingdom without you will land in Perdition. The genuine Christian does not, as 13 the Swami seemed to suggest, act for the purpose of evading punishments, but at the same time he sees 14 the ultimate consequences of all actions. . . .

religion.⁶⁶⁷ He showed that the underlying principles of all the great religions of the world resembled one another, and amongst the great prophets he placed the Christian Redeemer very high, implying, however, that His teaching was little borne out sometimes by His professed followers. There was no radical impossibility of reconciliation between sects, now biting and devouring each other from the best motives, if charity and sympathy were carried into the kiosk, the temple, and the church. The Sesame Club.—At a meeting of the Sesame Club on Tuesday night [May 12], the chairman, Mr. Ashton Jonson, said he regretted to announce that Mrs. Norman was too unwell to be present to open, as announced, a debate on "Should we return to the land." An address was accordingly given by Swami Vivekananda on the subject of education,⁶⁶⁹ in which he urged that no one could obtain intellectual greatness until he was physically pure. Morality gave strength; the immoral were always weak, and could never raise themselves intellectually, much less spiritually. Directly [as] immorality began to enter the national life its foundations commenced to rot. As the life blood of every nation was to be found in the schools, where boys and girls were receiving their education, it was absolutely essential that the young students should be pure, and this purity must be taught them.

SPIRITUALISM AND THE VEDANTA PHILOSOPHY⁶⁷⁰

[Light, July 4, 1896]

When first we heard that the Swami Vivekananda was coming to London to expound the Vedanta Philosophy, we were hopeful that his teaching would not only confirm the faith of Spiritualists, but might also add to their number. We hoped this, because the very essence of the Hindu Philosophy is that man is a spirit, and has a body, and not that man is a body, and may have a spirit also; which is as far as many a Western mind can reach. . . .

It has been the glorious privilege of our modern Spiritualism to prove by actual demonstration the existence of spirit apart from flesh, and it would, therefore, seem reasonable to look for co-operation on the part of the exponents of the Vedanta Philosophy and the supporters of Spiritualism. We are not quite certain, however, that this desirable consummation can be attained, for observations made very recently by the Swami are calculated only to divide the two sects.⁶⁷¹ The Vedanta Philosophy sets before the student an ideal aim! Nothing less, in fact, than the unfolding of the God within him, and nothing could well be more impressive and inspiring than the presentation of this idea by a speaker of the force and eloquence of the Swami. We could only respect and admire, until modern Spiritualism was alluded to, and that in a manner which left upon us the impression that the Swami condemned without reservation all sitting for phenomena. He admitted having sat for observation with professional mediums, and held that one and all had practised fraud. "Spirit voices," according to the Swami, are never heard to clash! As the "sepulchral dies away the small child's voice rises up," intimating thus that ventriloquism was invariably respon-sible for the sounds. "Spirit messages," he remarked, were quite worthless, for they never rose above the level of "I am well and happy," or "Give John a piece of cake."

This assertion could, of course, only be made in ignorance of the contents of "Spirit Teachings," a book which, we think, can well stand comparison even with the exalted teaching of the Swami Vivekananda. The process of making up sham materialisations and working the figure on the end of a wire was also described in detail.

We were present again the following evening,⁶⁷² when a paper of questions bearing upon the adverse criticism of the Swami was read out to the meeting. Some thirty minutes were then passed in qualifying and explaining his remarks of the night before, and, to our deep satisfaction, the Swami not only confessed his belief in the possibility of spirits communicating with mortals, but even expressed his conviction that at times spirits of a high grade visited earth in order to assist mankind. It is, however, we conceive, no part of the Vedanta Philosophy to recommend the seeking of such intercourse, on account of its possible "dangers." It is commonly held that the undeveloped spirit can most easily communicate with man, consequently the Swami uttered his word of warning and withheld any word of encouragement. . . .

gion and Philosophy.⁶⁷⁴ . . . For an hour and a half he spoke, without a note. It is true that the discourse was rather a flow of remarks than a connected study, but it was all keenly interesting.

The subject, in the main, was the Vedas, but we got excursions upon Evolution, Modern Science, Idealism and Realism, the Supremacy of Spirit, &c. On the whole, we gathered that the speaker was a preacher of the universal religion of spiritual ascendancy and spiritual harmony. Certain passages from the Vedas—beautifully translated and read, by the way—were charming in their bearing upon the humanness and sharp reality of a life beyond the veil. One longed for more of this.

We were much impressed with the admission that in the Vedas there were many contradictions, and that devout Hindoos never thought of denying them nor reconciling them. Everyone was free to take what he liked. At different stages and on different planes, all were true. Hence the Hindoos never excommunicated and never persecuted. The contradictions in the Vedas are like the contradictions in life—they are very real, but they are all true. This seems impossible, but there is sound sense in it. At all events, as regards excommunication and persecution, we only wish the Christians could make the Hindoo's claim.

1 are not so. These have been changing and been changed by the Rishis to suit the times. The Brahmins at 2 one time ate beef and married Sudras. [A] calf was killed to please a guest. Sudras cooked for Brahmins.
3 The food cooked by a male Brahmin was regarded as polluted food. But we have changed our habits to suit the present yug[a]. Although our caste rules have so far changed from the time of Manu, still if he should come to us now, he would still call us Hindus. Caste is a social organization and not a religious one. It was the outcome of the natural evolution of our society. It was found necessary and convenient at one time. It has served its purpose. But for it, we would long ago have become Mahomedans [sic]. It is useless now. It may be dispensed with. Hindu religion no longer requires the prop of the caste system. A Brahmin may interdine with anybody, even a Pariah. He won't thereby lose his spirituality. A degree of spirituality that is destroyed by the touch of a Pariah, is a very poor quantity. It is almost at the zero point. Spirituality of a Brahmin must overflow, blaze and burn [so] as to warm into spiritual life not one Pariah but thousands of Pariahs who may touch him. The old Rishis observed no distinctions or restrictions as regards food. A man who feels that his own spirituality is so flimsy that the sight of a low caste man annihilates it need not approach a Pariah and must keep his precious little to himself.

The Hindu Ideal of Life

The Hindu Ideal of life is "Nivarti" [Nivritti].⁶⁷⁷ Nivarti means subjugation and conquest of evil passions, of Tamasa nature of lust, revenge and avarice. It does not mean conquest of all desire. It means only the annihilation of gross desires. Every man is bound to love and sympathize with his fellow-creatures. [A] Sanyasi is one who has vanquished all his selfish passions and vowed to devote his life for the good of others. He loves all. "Pravirti" [Pravritti] means love of God and all his creatures. Sanyasis ought to be fed. They are not like the Christian bishops and Archbishops who must be paid to do their work with thousands of pounds per annum; all whose earnings are spent upon their own luxury—their wife and children. [The] Sanyasi wants only a morsel of food, and then he places all his knowledge and services at the disposal of the public. He is a wandering missionary. Individuals and society have to work themselves up from "brute through man, into divine". Even the lowest of the Hindus, the Pariah, has less of the brute in him than a Briton in a similar social status. This is the result of an old and excellent religious civilization. This evolution to a higher spiritual state is possible only through discipline and education.

⁶⁷⁷ ? Nivritti and Pravritti are key concepts in Hindu philosophy, and Swami Vivekananda has frequently interpreted and elaborated on them (e.g., see Karma-Yoga, Ch. VI) in their traditional connotations. But the interpretation of the terms here ascribed to him by the Indian Social Reformer's reporter is not in accord with what the Swami has said elsewhere.

The Shradh [Shrâddha] Ceremony⁶⁷⁸

Every institution, caste, early marriage etc., that stands in the way of education, ought at once to be knocked on the head. Even "Shradh" may be given up, if the performance of it involves waste of time which might be better used for self-education. But "Shradh" should not be given up. The meaning of the Mantras is very edifying. The Mantras depict the suffering and care undergone by our parents on our behalf. The performance of it is an honour paid to the memory of the sum total of the spirit of our forefathers, whose virtues we inherit. Shradh has nothing to do with one's salvation. Yet no Hindu who loves his religion, his country and his past great men should give up Shradh. The outward formalities and the feeding of the Brahmins are not essential. We have no Brahmins in these days worthy of being fed on Shradh days. The Brahmins fed ought not to be professional eaters, but Brahmins who feed disciples gratis, and teach them true Vedic doctrines. In these days, Shradh may be performed mentally.

Education of Women

The jealous guardianship of our women shows that we Hindus have declined in our national virtues, that we reverted to the "brutal state". Every man must so discipline his mind as to bring himself to regard all women as his sisters or mothers. Women must have freedom to read, to receive as good an education as men. Individual development is impossible with ignorance and slavery.

⁶⁷⁸ ? A religious ceremony in which food and drink are offered to deceased relatives or ancestors.

Emancipation of the Hindus

Through the slavery of a thousand years, Hindus have at present degenerated. They have forgotten their own self-respect. Every English boy is taught to feel his importance, he thinks that he is a member of a great race, the conquerors of the Earth. The Hindu feels from his boyhood just the reverse that he is born to slave. We can't become a great nation unless we love our religion and try to respect ourselves, and respect our country men and society. The Hindus of modern times are generally hypocrites. They must rise, and combine the faith in the true Vedic religion, with a knowledge of the political and scientific truths of the Europeans. The evils of caste seem to be more prevalent in the South than in Bengal. In Bengal a Brahmin uses the water touched by the Sudras, but here the Sudra is kept at a great distance by the Brahmin. There are no Brahmins in [the] Kali Yug[a]. The Pariahs, our fellow beings, ought to be educated by the higher castes, must [. . .] truths of Hindu religion and be [. . .] Brahmins. The first duty of a Brahmin is to love all. There must first be an amalgamation of the Brahmins, then of all the Dwijas,⁶⁷⁹ and then of the Dwijas and Sudras.

presented Swami Vivekananda, the Hindu monk, who was applauded loudly as he stepped forward to the centre of the platform. He wore an orange robe, bound with a scarlet sash, and a pale yellow turban. The customary smile was on his handsome face and his eyes shown with animation. Said he:

We who come from the East have sat here on the platform day after day, and have been told in a patronizing way that we ought to accept Christianity because Christian nations are the most prosperous. We look about us, and we see England, the most prosperous Christian nation in the world, with her foot on the neck of 250,000,000 of Asiatics. We look back into history, and see that the prosperity of Christian Europe began with Spain. Spain's prosperity began with the invasion of Mexico. Christianity wins its prosperity by cutting the throats of its fellowmen. At such a price the Hindu will not have prosperity.⁶⁸²

I have sat here to-day, and I have heard the height of intolerance. I have heard the creed of the Moslem applauded, when to-day the Moslem sword is carrying destruction into India. Blood and the sword are not for the Hindu, whose religion is based on the law of love.⁶⁸³

10 manifested in every part of the country, it is doubtful whether Christianity will have any sway over the acme of intellectual development. I believe, it is only a kind of anthropomorphism which the human mind stumbles upon in its first efforts to understand the unknown. The ultimate satisfaction of human reason and custom lies in the realisation of that universal essence which is the All. And I hold an irrefragable evidence that this idea is present in the Vedas, the numerous gods and their invocations notwithstanding. This idea of formless All, the Sat, i.e., esse or being, called Atman and Brahman in the Upanishads, and further explained in the Darsans, is the central idea of the Vedas, nay, the root-idea of the Hindu religion in general.⁶⁸⁶

SWAMI VIVEKANANDA ON THE SEA-VOYAGE MOVEMENT⁶⁸⁷

[The Bengalee, May 18, 1895]

There is not a Hindoo who is not proud of Vivekananda Swami—who would not honor him and his teachings. He has done honor to himself, to his race and his religion. If we are right in this view, it follows that the opinions of Vivekananda are entitled to the highest consideration. This is what he says with regard to the sea-voyage movement:—

Expansion is life; contraction is death. Love is life, hatred is death. We began to die the day we began to contract—to hate other races—and nothing can prevent our death, until we come back to life, to expansion. We must mix, therefore, with all the races of the earth and every Hindoo that goes out to travel in foreign parts, does more benefit to his country than hundreds of those bundles of superstition and selfishness whose one aim in life is to be the dog in the manger. Those wonderful structures of national life which the Western nations have raised are supported by pillars of character—and until we can produce such by the hundred, ⁶⁸⁷ ? Vivekananda in Indian Newspapers, pp. 260-62.

⁶⁸⁶ ?

it is useless to fret and fume against this power or that power. Does anyone deserve liberty who is not ready to give it to others? Let us calmly and in manly fashion go to work—instead of dissipating our energies in unnecessary frettings and fumings and I, for one, thoroughly believe that no power in the universe can withhold from anyone anything he really deserves. The past was great no doubt, but I sincerely believe that the future in store is glorious still.⁶⁸⁸

We must mix with other nations and take from them whatever good they have to give us. It is our exclusiveness, our unwillingness to learn from foreign nations which is mainly responsible for our present degradation. We considered ourselves to be the elect of heaven, and superior to the nations of the earth in all respects. We regarded them as barbarians, their touch as pollution, their knowledge as worse than ignorance. We lived in a world of our own creation. We would teach the foreigner nothing—we would learn nothing from the foreigner. At last the disillusion came. The foreigner became our master—the arbiter of our destinies. We eagerly took to his learning. We found that there was much in it that was novel, much that was highly useful. We found that so far as the material comforts of life were concerned the foreigner vastly out-distanced us—that his control over the powers of nature was far greater than any we had dreamt of. He had annihilated time and space, and had subordinated the powers of nature to the convenience of man. He had many wonderful things to teach us. We learnt them eagerly. But still we don't visit his country. If we do, we lose caste. We are under a foreign Government. We eagerly study a foreign language and literature and admire all that is good and beautiful in it. We use foreign articles for dress and consumption. But still we dare not visit the country of our rulers, for fear of excommunication. Against this unmeaning prejudice, the great Swami, who is a Hindoo of Hindoos, indignantly raises his voice of protest. The objectors, in his expressive language, are like the dog in the manger. They will not travel to foreign countries,—they will not allow others to travel. Yet the fact remains, says the Swami, that these travelled Hindoos do more benefit to their country than hundreds of those bundles of superstition and selfishness, whose one aim in life is to be like the dog in the manger.⁶⁸⁹

⁶⁸⁸ ?

If we had our Rishis in this age, as we had them in the ages that are gone by, we are sure they would have withdrawn the interdiction to sea-voyage, if indeed any such interdiction has been laid in the past. Society is an organism which obeys the immutable law of progress; and change, judicious and cautious change, is necessary for the well-being, and indeed the preservation of the social system. However that may be, it is something to know that so high an authority and so good a Hindoo as Swami Vivekananda supports travel to foreign countries. . . .

Indian philosophy and western society*⁶⁹²

[The Indian Mirror, December 1, 1895]

At the weekly meeting of the Balloon Society, an address on "Man and Society in the Light of Vedanta"⁶⁹³ was given by Swami Vivekananda. The Swami who wore the red robe of his sect, spoke with great fluency and in perfect English for more than an hour without the help of a single note. He said that religion was the most wonderful factor in the social organism. If knowledge was the highest gain that science could give, what could be greater than the knowledge of God, of the soul, of man's own nature which was given by the study of religion? It was not only impossible that there should be one religion for the whole world, but it would be dangerous. If the whole of religious thought was at the same level, it would be the death of religious thought; variety was its life. There were four types of religion—(1) the worker, (2) the emotional, (3) the mystical, and (4) the philosophical. Each man unfortunately became so wedded to his own type that he had no eyes to see what existed in the world. He struggled to make others of the same type. That religion would be perfect which gave scope to all the different characters. The Vedantic religion took in all, and each could choose in what his nature required. A discussion followed.

7 A Lecture by the Swami

8 Swami Vivekananda sat in the centre, clad in an ochre coloured robe. The Hindu had his audience 9 divided on either side of him and there was between fifty and a hundred persons present. The class was in 10 Karma-Yoga, which has been described as the realisation of one's self as God through works and duty.

11 Its theme was:—

12 "That which ye sow ye reap", whether of good or evil.

13 Following the lecture or instruction the Swami held an informal reception, and the magnetism of 14 the man was shown by the eager manner in which those who had been listening to him hastened to shake 15 hands or begged for the favour of an introduction. But concerning himself the Swami will not say more 16 than is absolutely necessary. Contrary to the claim made by some of his pupils he declares that he has 17 come to this country alone and not so officially representing any order of Hindu monks. He belongs to the 18 Sanyasis he will say; and is hence free to travel without losing his caste. When it is pointed out to him that 19 Hinduism is not a proselytising religion, he says he has a message to the West as Buddha had a message
20 to the East.⁶⁹⁵ When questioned concerning the Hindu religion, and asked whether he intends to introduce 21 its practices and ritual into [t]his country, he declares that he is preaching simply philosophy.

1 On Education*⁶⁹⁶

2 [The Indian Mirror, June 19, 1896]

3 Swami Saradananda in a letter from London written to the Editor of the Brahmavadin says:—

4 Swami Vivekananda has made a very good beginning here. A large number of the people attend his 5 classes regularly, and the lectures are most interesting. Canon Haweis, one of the leaders of the Anglican 6 Church, came the other day, and was much interested. He saw the Swami before, in the Chicago fairs, and 7 loved him from that time. On Tuesday last, the Swami lectured on "Education" at the Sesame Club. It is a 8 respectable club got up by women for diffusing female education. In this he dealt with the old educational 9 system of India, pointed out clearly and impressively that, the sole aim of the system was "man-making" 10 and not cramming and compared it with the present system. He held that, the mind of the man is an 11 infinite reservoir of knowledge, and all knowledge, present, past or future, is within man, manifested or 12 non-manifested, and the object of every system of education should be to help the mind to manifest it. For 13 instance, the law of gravitation was within man, and the fall of the apple helped Newton to think upon it, 14 and bring it out from within his mind. His class days have been arranged as follows:—

15 Tuesdays, morning and evening; Thursdays, morning and evening; Friday, evening question classes.
16 So the Swami has to do four lectures, and one class on questions every week. In the class lecture, he has 17 begun with Gnan [Jnâna-]Yoga. A short-hand report of these lectures is being taken down by Mr. Goodwin, 18 who is a great admirer of the Swami, and these lectures will be published later on.

THE SWAMI VIVEKANANDA IN ENGLAND⁶⁹⁷

[The Brahmavadin, July 18, 1896]

Sir,

I feel sure you will be glad to have an idea of the progress of the Swami's work in England, as a supplement to the letter which the Swami Saradananda sent you a few weeks ago. At that time a series of Sunday lectures was being arranged, and three of these have now been given. They are held in one of the galleries of the Royal Institute of Painters in water colours, 191 Piccadilly, and have been so far remarkably successful in attaining their object, that of reaching people who, from one reason or another, cannot attend the class talks. The first of the series was "The Necessity of Religion".⁶⁹⁸ The Swami claimed that religion is and has been the greatest force in moulding the destinies of the human race. Concerning its origin he said that either of the two theories, (1) Spirit origin, (2) Search after the infinite, will meet the case, and, to his mind, neither contradicts the other, because the search after the departed of the Egyptians and Babylonians, and the attempt to peep behind the veil of the dawn, the evening, the thunderstorm, or other natural phenomena, of the Aryans, can both be included as a search after the super-sensuous, and therefore the unlimited. This unlimited, in the course of time became abstracted, first as a person, then as a presence, and lastly as the essence of all existence. To his mind the dream state is the first suggestion of religious inquiry, and inasmuch as the awakened state has always been, and always will be accompanied by the dream state, a suggestion of existence finer than that of the awakened state yet vanishing during it, the human mind will always be predisposed in favour of spiritual existence and a future life. It is in our dream-state that we really find, in a sense, our immortality. Later on, as dreams are found to be only milder manifestations of the awakened state, the search for still deeper planes of the mind begin[s], the super-conscious state of the mind. All religions claim to be founded on facts discovered in this state. The two important points to consider in this connection are, that all facts discovered in this way are, in the highest sense, abstractions, and secondly, that there is a constant struggle in the race to come up to this ideal, and everything which thwarts our progress towards that we feel as a limitation. This struggle soon ends in the discovery that to find infinite happiness, or power, or knowledge, or any other infinity, through the senses, is impossible, and then the struggle for other channels of expansion begins, and we find the necessity of religion. The second lecture was upon the subject "A Universal Religion",⁶⁹⁹ when the Swami gave, in substance, the lecture which most of your readers have seen in print as it was delivered in New York. As this lecture may be termed the Swami's "plan of campaign" we always await its delivery with very great interest, and it is most encouraging to note that the impression made here in London was equally as good as was the case when the lecture was delivered in the Hardman Hall, New York. The third of the series brought us up to Sunday last, June 21st, when "The Real and the Apparent Man"⁷⁰⁰ was the subject under discussion. In this the Swami, link by link, glanced over the thread of thought which has gradually advanced from the consideration of men as separate entities from God and the rest of the universe, up to the point at which we concede the impossibility of more than one Infinity, and the necessary consequence that which we now regard as men, as animals, as the universe of matter, cannot be the real unity; that the real must be something which is indivisible, and unchangeable; and when reason forces us to the conclusion that this phenomenal world can only be an illusion, through which we, as entities in the illusion, have to pass to discover our real nature, "That which exists is one; sages call it variously". But the Swami did not stop with the theory; he showed what would be the practical effect of such a theory, the gradual elimination from society of class distinctions, and distinctions between man and man, by greater unselfishness in the matters of money and power. Answering the objection that such a religion means loss of individuality, he argued that that which is changeful cannot be the real individuality, and that the gradual discovery of the reality behind us would mean the assumption of individuality and not its destruction.

The three lectures thus given have been so favorably received, and there have been so many wishes expressed for their continuation that three further lectures are to be given. . . .

[The Indian Mirror, September 22, 1896]

Swami Vivekananda writes from Lake Luzern [Lucerne] Switzerland, under date the 23rd of August last.⁷⁰³ He has been walking over several parts of the Cis-Alpine country, enjoying the pleasing views of nature there. He says that the scenery is in no respect less grand than that of the Himalayas. Still, he makes out two points of difference between the two mountainous regions. In the former the rapid and thick colonization has been marring the beauty of the place. In the latter, there has not yet been any such marked tendency. The former has become a resort mainly for the sanatorists and summer-residents; and the latter mainly for the pilgrims and devotees. The Swami is shortly going to visit Germany, where an interview will take place with Prof. Deussen, after which, by the 24th of September, he will go back to England. To India, most likely, as he says, he is returning by the next winter. He intends to reside in the Himalayas.

"THE IDEAL OF UNIVERSAL RELIGION"⁷⁰⁴

[The Journal of the Maha-Bodhi Society, November 1896]

We have been presented with a copy of a booklet entitled the "Ideal of Universal Religion", published by the Brahmavadin Publishing Company, Madras. It is a lecture by Swami Vivekananda, delivered in America. The lecture is highly interesting and instructive. It is an attempt at a reconciliation between the diversity of religions. We hail the booklet as the symptom of the times, for it is evident for obvious reasons that men are beginning to awaken to the importance of this problem of religious harmony. Recently, in these countries leaders of different religious sects have attempted in their own way to reconcile this religious diversity, and have failed; they have aspired to defend their dogmas on the ground of distorted views of sectarianism. Swami Vivekananda has propounded a philosophical and at the same time a most practical solution of this problem of religious harmony. According to him, Vedanta is the bond between the ever conflicting religious differences. In the internal world, like the external world, there is also the centripetal and centrifugal action. We repel something, we attract something. Today we are attracted by some, to-morrow we are repelled by some. The same law cannot be applied at all times and in all cases. "Religion is the highest place of human thought and life, and herein the workings of these two forces have been most marked." At the outset, it apparently appears that there cannot reign unbroken harmony in this plane of mighty struggle. In every religion there are three parts, namely, philosophy, mythology and rituals. Every recognised religion [has] all these three things. But there can be no universal philosophy, mythology and rituals for the whole world. Where then the universality? How is it possible then to have a universal form of religion? "We all hear," says Swami Vivekananda, about universal brotherhood, and how societies stand up practically to preach this, Universal brotherhood, that is, we shout like drunken men we are all equal, therefore, let us make a sect. As soon as you make a sect you protest against equality, and thus it is no more.⁷⁰⁵

Mahomedans talk of universal brotherhood, but what comes out of them in reality? Nobody who is not a Mahomedan will be admitted into the brotherhood, he will have his throat cut. We think we cannot do better than quote his own words, wherein he with his wonderful lucidity and depth of views and in a remarkably catholic mind propounds forcibly the philosophy of the uni-versal religion [Vide Complete Works, II: 375-96]. . . .

In society there are various natures of men. Some are active working men, there is the emotional man, then there is the mystic man and lastly there is the philosopher. Vivekananda strikes the key note of

[The Indian Mirror, December 16, 1896]

On the 21st of this month [November], the Cambridge "Indian Majlis" gave a complimentary dinner at the University Arms Hotel [in Cambridge] to Prince Ranjit-sinhji and Mr. Atul Chandra Chatterjee. Mr. Hafiz G. Sarwir of St. John's College, took the chair. There were about fifty Indians present and a few Englishmen. . . .

Swami Vivekananda rose next to respond [to the toast of India] amidst loud and deafening cheers.⁷⁰⁷ The Swami began by saying that he did not know exactly why he should be chosen to respond to the toast unless it be for the reason that he in physical bulk bore a striking resemblance to the national animal of India (laughter). He desired to congratulate the guest of the evening and he took the statement which the Chairman had made that Mr. Chatterjee was going to correct the mistake of past historians of India, to be literally true. For out of the past the future must come and he knew no greater and more permanent foundation for the future than a true knowledge of what had preceded before. The present is the effect of the infinity of causes which represent the past. They had many things to learn from the Europeans but their past, the glory of India which had passed away, should constitute even a still greater source of inspiration and instruction. Things rise and things decay, there is rise and fall everywhere in the world. . . . [Vide the block quotation on the following page for the remaining text of this report.]

THE MAJLIS IN CAMBRIDGE⁷⁰⁸

[The Amrita Bazar Patrika, January 8, 1897]

. . . The gathering was a unique one, for the Indians met together to talk (in the Majlis they all talk), about the successes of Ranjit Sing[h] and Atul Chandra Chatterjee. It is a pity the name of Professor Bose was not associated with the above two; and we think, Swami Vivekananda, who was present on the occasion, also deserved a recognition. We shall, however, not commit the mistake of omitting the last two in noticing to show what the Indians have been able to achieve in the West.

What the Swamiji did was to remove the impression from the minds of the Americans that the Indians were barbarians, superstitious in their beliefs, and addicted to monstrous cruelties. The advent of the Swamiji in the West has done this service, that it has created an impression in many quarters that the Indians are not an inferior race as Sir Charles Elliot called them, and that they can, in such subjects as religion and philosophy say things which are not known even to the West. The advent of the Swamiji in the West has undoubtedly enhanced the character of the Indians in the West. . . .

Said Swami Vivekananda:—

And though India is fallen to-day she will assuredly rise again. There was a time when India produced great philosophers and still greater prophets and preachers. The memory of those days ought to fill them with hope and confidence. This was not the first time in the history of India that they were so low. Periods of depression and degradation had occurred before this but India had always triumphed in the long run and so would she once again in the future.⁷⁰⁹

1 vivekananda in the west⁷¹⁰

2 [The Amrita Bazar Patrika, January 20, 1897]

3 Swami Vivekananda has received the ovation of a conquering hero, returning home. The last we 4 heard of him in England was when he got a farewell address from his English disciples, who expressed 5 their undying love for India. . . .

6 No one has any accurate knowledge of what Swami Vivekananda was doing in the West. We hear 7 that he has made some impression in America and also in England. . . .

8 The Swami is, however, well aware of the nature of the mission before him. He says that Vedantism 9 teaches the truth, which is that man is a divine being and that the highest and the lowest are the 10 manifestations of the same Lord. He does not, however, admit that knowledge alone is sufficient for the 11 salvation of man. Says he:—

12
13 But his knowledge ought not to be a theory, but life. Religion is a realization, not talk, not doctrines, 14 nor theories, however beautiful all these may be. Religion is being and becoming, not hearing or 15 acknowledging. It is not an intellectual assent; but one's whole nature becoming changed into it. Such is 16 religion. By an intellectual assent we can come to a hundred sort of foolish things, and change the next 17 day, but this being and becoming is what is religion.

18
19 In the above noble sentiments, the Swami shews [shows] that he understands the situation pretty 20 well. That which produces the rebirth of a man is religion. Under the influence of religion a man becomes 21 a quite different being from what he was before. Unless that is the result of his religion, his religion is a 22 myth.

Bhakti*⁷¹¹

[The Indian Mirror, February 24, 1898]

Swami Vivekananda has been urging on the people of Lahore and Sialkote the need of practical work.⁷¹² The starving millions, he urged, cannot live on metaphysical speculation; they require bread; and in a lecture he gave at Lahore on Bhakti, he suggested as the best religion for to-day that everyman should, according to his means, go out into the street and search for hungry Narayans, take them into their houses, feed them and clothe them. The giver should give to man, remembering that he is the highest temple of God. He had seen charity in many countries, and the reason of its failure was the spirit, in which it was carried out. "Here take this and go away". Charity belied its name so long as it was given to gain reputation or applause of the world.

OUR MISSION IN AMERICA⁷¹³

[The Indian Mirror, April 24, 1898]

Swami Vivekananda, in introducing the lecturer Swami Saradananda, said:

Ladies and Gentlemen,—The speaker of tonight just comes from America. As you all know here that America is for your country, although our countrymen, specially Swami Dayananda Saraswati, used to call this country as Patal, inhabited by Laplands, Rakshas and Asurs, &c. (Laughter and loud cheers). Well, Gentlemen, whether it is Patal or not you ought to decide that by seeing those few ladies present here, who have come from the country of your so-called Patal, whether they are Naga Kanyas or not. (Cheers). Now, America is perfectly a new country. It was discovered by Columbus, the Italian, and before that a prior claim is put forward by the Norwegians who say, that they have discovered the northern part of it, and then before that there is another prior claim of the Chinese, who at one time preached the noble doctrine of Buddhism in all parts of the world, and it is said that Buddhist Missionaries were also sent from India to America, and specially in Washington, where some sort[s] of records are still to be traced by any traveller going there. Well, the table has now been turned at last for a century or more and instead of America being discovered, she discovers persons that go over to her. (Loud applause). It is a phenomenon that we observe every day there, multitudes of persons coming over from every part of the country [world?] and getting themselves discovered in the United States. It is a fact, well-known to you here all that several of our own countrymen have been discovered in that way. (Cheers). To-day, here I present before you one of your Calcutta boys, that has been similarly discovered by the Americans. (Cheers).

SWAMI VIVEKANANDA [on education] AT BELUR⁷¹⁴

[The Indian Mirror, February 15, 1901]

A correspondent writes:—"The following is an epitome of Swami Vivekananda's speech made in Belur M.E. School on the prize-distribution day held on the 22nd instant, Sunday, when the Swami was invited to preside. The audience was composed chiefly of the boys of the school and some elderly gentlemen of Belur."

⁷¹⁴ ? Vivekananda in Indian Newspapers, p. 215.

1 The modern student is not practical. He is quite helpless. What our students want is not so much 2 muscularity of body as hardihood. They are wanting in self-help. They are not accustomed to use their 3 eyes and hands. No handicraft is taught. The present system of English education is entirely literary. The 4 student must be made to think for himself and work for himself. Suppose there is a fire. He is the first to 5 come forward and put on [out] the fire who is accustomed to use his eyes and hands. There is much truth
6 in the criticism of Europeans touching the laziness of the Bengali, the slipshod way of his doing things.
7 This can be soon remedied if the students be made to learn some handicraft apart from its utilitarian 8 aspect, it is an education in itself.

9 Secondly, how many thousands of students I know who live upon the worst food possible, and live 10 amidst the most horrible surroundings, what wonder that there are so many idiots, imbeciles and cowards
11 among them. They die like flies. The education that is given is onesided, weakening, it is killing by inches.
12 The children are made to cram too much of useless matter, and are incarcerated in school rooms fifty or 13 seventy in each, five hours together. They are given bad food. It is forgotten that the future health of the 14 man is in the child. It is forgotten that nature can never be cheated and things cannot be pushed too early.
15 In giving education to a child the law of growth has to be obeyed. And we must learn to wait. Nothing is 16 more important than that the child must have a strong and healthy body. The body is the first thing to 17 attain to virtue. I know we are the poorest nation in the world, and we cannot afford to do much. We can 18 only work on the lines of least resistance. We should see at least that our children are well fed. The 19 machine of the child's body should never be exhausted. In Europe and America a man with crores of 20 rupees sends his son if sickly, to the farmers, to till the ground. After three years he returns to the father 21 healthy, rosy and strong. Then he is fit to be sent to school. We ought not for these reasons push the 22 present system of education any further.

23 Thirdly, our character has disappeared. Our English education has destroyed everything and left 24 nothing in its place.

Our children have lost their politeness. To talk nicely is degrading. To be reverential to one's elders is degrading. Irreverence has been the sign of liberty. It is high time that we go back to our old politeness. The reformers have nothing to give in place of what they have taken away. Yet in spite of the most adverse surrounding of climate, etc., we have been able to do much, we have to do much more. I am proud of my race, I do not despair, I am seeing daily a glorious and wonderful future in my menial [mental] visions. Take greatest care of these young ones on whom our future depends.

hindu widows*⁷¹⁵

[The Indian Social Reformer, June 16, 1901]

A question having arisen in America as to the Swami Vivekananda's attitude towards social questions, a lady writes to an American paper as follows: "In one of his lectures at the Pouch Mansion,⁷¹⁶ he spoke of the Hindu widows, declaring it unjust to state that they were generally subjected to cruelty or oppression in the Indians [sic] homes. He admitted that the prejudice against remarriage, and the custom which makes the widow a member of the husband's family instead of that of her own parents inflicted some hardships upon widows in India, and favoured wise efforts for their education which would render them self-supporting and in this way alleviate their condition. He emphasised his desire for the education and elevation of the women of his country, including the widows, by volunteering to give the entire proceeds of one of his lectures in support of the school of Babu Sasipada Banerjee, at Baranagar, near Calcutta, the institution of which preceded that of the Pandita Ramabai, at Poona, and where, if I am not mistaken, the Pandita herself ob-
